Secondly, if Adam had knowne this tree to be able to giue immortalitie, he would ſooner haue eaten thereof, being not prohibited, than to haue touched the forbidden fruit, ſeeing that the eating thereof alſo would haue brought him to greater happines, than the other tree: that giuing immortalitie; the other but the knowledge of good and euill. Wherefore the tree of life could not giue immortalitie to thoſe that eate thereof, but onely was a ſigne of true immortalitie in Chriſt.

THE SECOND CONTROVERSIE, OF THE FALL OF MAN.

THis Controuerſie is diuided into theſe queſtions: Firſt, of the difference of veniall and mortall ſinnes. Secondly, whether ſinne any way ſtandeth with the will of God. Thirdly, of the ſinne of Adam, whether it were pride or infidelitie, whether a veniall, or mortall ſinne. Fourthly, of originall ſinne: of the nature thereof, what it is, the beginning thereof, from whence it ſpringeth, the effects thereof, the puniſhment thereof, with other parts of this queſtion.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION and difference of veniall and mortall ſinnes.

The Papiſts.

6.Error. MOrtall ſinnes are thoſe which doe caſt men out of Gods fauour, and are worthie of eternall damnation: veniall ſinnes doe ſomewhat diſpleaſe God, yet deſerue not eternall death, but are pardonable of their owne nature, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de amiſſ.gratiæ, cap.*2. *& cap.*9. *in princip. Rhemiſt.annotat.Roman.*1.11. They define alſo in particular which are veniall ſinnes. Firſt, all inuoluntarie and ſudden paſſions of the minde, as of anger, concupiſcence, and ſuch like, *Bellar.cap.*3. ad finem: for all ſinne, they ſay, is voluntarie, and therefore theſe paſſions hauing not conſent of will, are farre from ſinne, neither are imputed to any man, neither for them need he ſay vnto God, forgiue vs our ſinnes, *Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.*7.*ſect.*8.9.

Secondly, thoſe are veniall ſinnes, which though they be done with conſent of the minde, yet are but ſeene in ſmall and light matters: as if a man ſteale a halfepennie, ſpeake an idle word, laugh immoderatly, or ſuch like. But the contrarie to theſe are mortall and deadly ſinnes, as periurie, adulterie, murder, &c.

Now to proue that theſe veniall ſinnes, as they call them, are in their owne nature pardonable, and deſerue not eternall damnation; theſe arguments they bring out of Scripture.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, that they which build hay or ſtubble, &c. though their work burne, yet they themſelues ſhall be ſafe, yet through the fire: By hay and ſtubble the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth veniall ſinnes, which doe bring detriment or loſſe, but not deſtruction: for hee ſhall be ſafe, Bellarm.cap.9.

Anſw. Not to ſtand at this time to ſift out the right meaning of this place, where the Apoſtle intreateth not in generall of the good or euill workes of Chriſtians, but onely of the preaching of the Goſpell, which when it is ſincerely preached, both for the matter and manner, then doe they build vpon the foundation, which is Ieſus Chriſt, gold and ſiluer, &c. but when Chriſt is taught for vaine glorie, or contentiouſly, or with any other ſiniſter affection, ſuch doe build vp hay and ſtubble. Now we anſwere: firſt, to preach Chriſt but impurely, and not ſincerely, which is compared here to a ſtraw-building, is no veniall or light offence, but a ſin worthie of death: for Chriſt ſhall ſay vnto them in the day of iudgement, that preached and propheſied in his name, but not ſincerely: Verily I know you not, depart from me ye workers of iniquitie, Matth.7.22,23.

Againe, veniall ſinnes, ſaith the Ieſuite, facili negotio expiantur, are eaſily purged and done away, *cap.*2. but ſo is not this ſinne of impure preaching: he ſhall be ſafe, yet as through the fire, that is, with ſome hardnes and difficultie: and ſo the phraſe is vſed, Epiſt.Iud.23. Others ſaue with feare, as pulling them out of the fire: but haue compaſſion of others in putting difference: Theſe are ſuch as ſinne of infirmitie: the other are more notorious offenders, which are as it were in the fire, that is, in great daunger.

2 But admit theſe are veniall ſinnes, ſuch as are forgiuen at Gods hands: yet is it not hence prooued, that they are veniall of their owne nature, but are pardoned in Chriſt: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch which keepe the foundation, that is, Chriſt Ieſus, though their building be not perfect and ſound.

*Argum.*2. Matth.5.22. Only he that ſaith to his brother, foole, is worthie of hell fire: he that ſaith raca, or is but angrie, is but culpable of iudgement, or of a Councell, &c. Ergo, euery ſinne is not worthie of hell fire, Bellarm.cap.9.

Anſw. Firſt, this place doth ſhew a difference and degree of euerlaſting puniſhment, according to the qualitie and diuerſitie of ſinnes: but another kinde of puniſhment beſide, it ſheweth not: ſo then, iudgement, a councell, hell fire, doe but ſignifie three degrees of the ſame puniſhment: hell fire is due to the reſt, but it is added onely for diſtinction, to ſhew both a difference of the ſinne and puniſhment.

Secondly, this is euident by theſe reaſons: firſt, becauſe iudgement, κρίσις, κρίμα, is taken in Scripture for euerlaſting puniſhment or condemnation, Rom.2.3. how ſhalt thou eſcape the iudgement of God? Secondly, euery ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law, 1.Ioh.3.4. And euery tranſgreſſion is vnder the curſe, Galath.3.10. But theſe are tranſgreſſions of the law, Thou ſhalt not kill: as here our Sauiour expoundeth: Ergo, they are vnder the curſe of the law, and ſo ſubiect to death. Thirdly, Saint Paul ſaith, no rayler can inherite the kingdome of God, 1.Corinth.6.10. but he that ſaith, raca, is a rayler: for the worde ſignifieth a lighthead, or cockbraine, being deriued of ריק raiak, which ſignifieth to euacuate or emptie: wherefore hee that ſaith raca, ſhall not inherite the kingdome of heauen.

*Argum.*3. Luk.12.59. Thou ſhalt not depart thence, till thou haſt paid the vtmoſt farthing. Theſe are veniall ſinnes, which ſhall be purged in Purgatorie, and not bee puniſhed in hell, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, our Sauiour in this place ſpeaketh of offences among men, and giueth a rule in this place onely how to eſcape the iudgement of man and the troubles of this life. Secondly, if it be ſpiritually applied, by priſon, hell is vnderſtood: and ſo is it taken, 1.Pet.3.19. for the place of the wicked and diſobedient. Thirdly, they ſhall not come out, till they haue paid the vtmoſt farthing, that is neuer, becauſe it is impoſſible to pay or anſwere the debt vnto God, Mat.18.34. Fourthly, our Sauiour ſpeaketh of vncharitable perſons, ſuch as deferre and refuſe to be reconciled and to agree with their brethren, Matth.5.25. But want of charitie deſerueth hell.

*Argum.*4. Saint Iames ſaith, chap.1.verſ.15. When luſt hath conceiued, it bringeth forth ſinne, and ſinne when it is finiſhed bringeth forth death: Ergo, ſinne is not mortall, but when it is conſummate and finiſhed: Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.Bellarm.cap.9.

Anſw. Out of this place it is gathered, that there are degrees of ſinne, and that the more heynous ſinne is, it is worthie greater death, and is more hardly forgiuen: and therefore ſinne conſummate or finiſhed is ſaid to bring forth death, rather then ſinne but conceiued onely, namely, in compariſon and reſpect of ſmaller ſinnes, the greater are neereſt to death. Otherwiſe to ſpeake ſimply, death is the wages of all ſinne, Rom. 6.23.

2 If by ſinne conſummate we vnderſtand continuance in ſinne without repentance, which is the right conſummation of ſinne: then the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of ſinne as it is in it ſelfe, but as it is accounted of before God, who in his mercie forgiueth ſins not conſummate or finiſhed, but broken off by repentance, and in his iuſtice iudgeth and condemneth ſinnes conſummate by hardnes of heart and impenitencie.

3 Otherwiſe luſt and concupiſcence it ſelfe is worthie of death: 1.Ioh. 2.17. The world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: (which verſ. 16. is ſaid to be the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes) but he that fulfilleth the will of God, abideth for euer: he that hath the luſt of the fleſh, which is the luſt of the world, fulfilleth not the will of God: Ergo, hee abideth not for euer, and conſequently is ſubiect to death.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe that there is a great difference of ſinnes, both in their nature and in the puniſhment due vnto them: that as ſinnes are greater or leſſe in themſelues, ſo they are worthie of greater or leſſe puniſhment. And therefore we deteſt their error, that thinke all ſinnes to be equall and alike: but yet wee cannot admit this popiſh diſtinction of veniall and mortall ſinnes, as though ſome ſinnes were veniall in their owne nature: for euen the leaſt ſinne deſerueth death, if God ſhould deale with vs according to the exact rule of his iuſtice: yet all ſinnes, not onely the leaſt but the greateſt are veniall by grace and faith in Chriſt, vnto the faithfull and beleeuers, and not otherwiſe: We proue it thus.

Argum. 1. That all ſinnes in themſelues are worthie of death, the Scripture ſpeaketh plainly: Deuter. 27.26. Curſed is euery one that continueth not in all things written in this law: Ezech. 20. The ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye: Iam. 2.10. He that faileth in one point of the law is guiltie of all: Euerie tranſgreſſion of the law therefore deſerueth death: but all ſinne is a tranſgreſſion of the law, 1.Ioh. 3.4. Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that all thoſe are vnderſtood of mortall and great offences, not of the ſmaller ſinnes which he calleth veniall: for in the firſt place, the words are (written in this law) and in that law are only forbidden the greater ſinnes, as adulterie, idolatrie, murther, and ſo likewiſe Ezech. 18. the more hainous ſinnes are reckoned vp.

Contra. This poore clauſe (this law) cannot helpe the Ieſuite: for Saint Paul alleaging this place, ſaith, Curſed is &c. that continueth not in all things written in the law, not this law: ſhewing hereby that all tranſgreſſions generally of the whole law, or any part thereof, are ſubiect to the curſe of the law: ſo alſo is the Prophet to be vnderſtood.

To the place in Saint Iames hee anſwereth thus: He that offendeth in one point, that is, not in any one point, but ſuch an one, as whereby charitie or loue is broken; and then it is no veniall but a mortall ſinne.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point: hee ſpeaketh not of any great and apparant tranſgreſſion, for how ſhould the man that doth it, ſeeme to keepe the whole law: but of ſome ſecret and ſmaller offence rather, which notwithſtanding he is taken for a good keeper of the law. Secondly, the Apoſtle himſelfe putteth an example, If thou committeſt not adulterie, and yet killeſt, thou art a tranſgreſſor: but hee onely killeth not that ſlayeth; but he alſo that is angrie vnaduiſedly, or calleth Racha, as our Sauiour Chriſt expoundeth this commaundement, Mat. 5.22. therefore he that faileth in theſe points killeth, and ſo is a tranſgreſſor of the law. Thirdly, all veniall ſinnes doe faile alſo in charitie: for charitie is the fulfilling of the law. Roman. 13. verſ. 10. hee therefore that breaketh not charitie doth keepe the lawe, and tranſgreſſeth it not: But he that committeth any veniall ſinne, tranſgreſſeth the law, otherwiſe it were no ſinne, and therefore faileth alſo in charitie: Saint Iames therefore by this one point vnderſtandeth veniall ſinnes, as well as other.

Argum. 2. Beſide, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith to Peter, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part in mee, Ioh. 13.8. If all ſinnes exclude vs from hauing part in Chriſt, and conſequently from the kingdome of God; then conſequently all ſinnes are mortall, and in their owne nature worthie of death.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that veniall ſinnes doe not ſimplie exclude from the kingdome of God, but onely for a time, till they be purged and waſhed, reſp. ad obiect. 3.

Contra. Firſt, if then veniall ſinnes be neuer waſhed, they ſhall ſimplie exclude from the kingdome of heauen. Secondly, the force of the argument remaineth vnanſwered: for if all ſins muſt be waſhed away in Chriſt, or elſe we haue no part in him, and Chriſt died only to take away thoſe ſinnes which deſerued death, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr. 2.14. That he might deſtroy through death him, that had power ouer death: verſ. 15. And, that he might deliuer them, which for feare of death were all their life time ſubiect to bondage. They then that were ſubiect to death by reaſon of their ſinnes, were deliuered by Chriſts death : Ergo, all ſinnes for the which Chriſt died, were worthie of death.

*Argum.*3. If all ſinnes are not mortall,then Chriſt died not for all ſinnes : for he by his death did ſatisfie onely for ſinnes that deſerued death : but Chriſt died for all ſinnes,Ioh.1.19.

Againe,originall ſinne,which is leſſe then any actuall ſinne, ſuch as their veniall ſinnes are, is worthie of death,and there by death raigneth euen ouer children,which ſinne not actually as Adam did,Rom.5.14.*Ergo,*veniall ſinnes which proceede from originall ſinne, doe much more deſerue death. Saint Paul alſo further thus ſaith : If I doe that I would not,then is it not I any longer that doe it,but ſinne that raigneth in me,Rom.7.20.He calleth it ſinne,though he conſent not to it, which is againſt the Rhemiſts, that will haue no motion or paſſion in the minde ſinne, vnleſſe it be voluntarie : and ſay further,that we neede not aske forgiuenes for ſuch ſinnes.

In Pſal.105. Let Auguſtine ſpeake in the laſt place : Peccata ignorantiæ vel negligentiæ melius accuſantur vt pereant,quam excuſantur vt maneant,meliuſq; purgantur inuocato Deo,quàm firmantur irritato Deo: The ſinnes of ignorance and negligence are better accuſed,then excuſed ; better by praying to God to purge them, then by prouoking God to confirme them : *Ergo,*forgiuenes muſt be asked at Gods hand for voluntarie ſinnes, ſinnes of ignorance.

Alſo he ſaith, Propter omnia peccata baptiſmus inuentus eſt, propter leuiora oratio dominica: For all ſins Baptiſme is a remedie,and the Lords prayer for the leſſe,*de ſymbol.lib.*1.6.*Ergo,*theſe leſſer ſins are in their owne nature guiltie of death,and not of themſelues pardonable:for otherwiſe we need not ſay the Lords prayer for them, nor aske God forgiuenes,as the Rhemiſts themſelues confeſſe, *annotat.Rom.*7.*ſect.*8.9.

We haue alſo the conſent of antiquitie : Gelaſius,tom.anathemat.Eſt peccatum ad mortem in eodem peccato manentibus;eſt peccatum non ad mortem ab eodem peccato recedentibus: There is a ſinne vnto death,to them that continue in it : there is a ſinne not vnto death,to them that depart from it.

*Nicen.*2.*can.*5. Peccatum ad mortem eſt,quoties aliqui peccantes ſe non emendant: A ſin vnto death is,when they that ſinne doe not amend themſelues. Repentance we ſee,maketh all ſinnes veniall: want of repentance maketh all ſinnes mortall. None therefore are veniall of their owne nature, but by repentance.

*Decret.diſtinct.*25.*c.*3.gloſſ.ex Auguſtin. Nullum peccatum eſt veniale, quod non fiat criminale dum placeat: No ſin is ſo veniall,which is not made criminall,if it doe pleaſe : that is, if the ſinner continue in it. *Cauſ.*33.*diſtinct.*1.*c.*47.Venialis culpa, quam ſequitur confeſſio delictorum : That fault is veniall,which the confeſſion of ſinnes followeth. This ſentence is rehearſed and approued by the Maſter of Sentences,*lib.*4.*diſtinct.*17.a.

The Maſter hath many ſentences to the like effect : Lib.2.diſtinct.24.I. Totus homo damnabitur, &c. Whole man ſhall be condemned, vnleſſe thoſe ſinnes, which without any will or purpoſe of working,but with a delight onely of the minde,are committed in thought,are remitted by the fauour of the Mediatour: But theſe, by their owne definition, are onely veniall ſinnes, which haue not the conſent of the will. Lib.3.diſtinct.38.a. A lye made to ſaue another, is a veniall ſinne to the weake,but to the perfect it is damnable. If the ſame ſin be veniall to one, and damnable to another, then is it not in it owne nature venial. Lib.4.diſt.20.b. Quædam peccata mortalia in pœnitentia fiunt venialia: Some mortall ſinnes,are by repentance made veniall. Therefore they are not veniall or worthie of forgiuenes in themſelues, but by repentance and mercie in Chriſt.

Some learned writers of the Papiſts doe differ from them in this erronious diſtinction of venial and mortall ſinnes : Ioann.Gerſon.3.part.theolog.tract.de vita animæ.lect.1.Ioann.Epiſcop.Roffenſ.in refutat.artic.32.Luther.Iacobus Alman.tract.3.c.20.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER SINNE any way may ſtand with the will of God.

The Papiſts.

7.Error. NO ſinne ſtandeth with the will or intention of God,but is directly againſt it, *Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.*3.*ſect.*4. And therefore Chriſts death was Gods act no otherwiſe, then by permiſſion, *Act.*3.*ſect.*2. Neither is God the author of ſinne, otherwiſe then by permiſſion and withholding of his grace : annot.Iam.1.13. *Sic etiam Bellarm.de ſtatu.peccat.cap.*3.

But our faith is this,grounded vpon Scripture, that whatſoeuer is done in the world, is not done by Gods permiſſion onely,but ſtandeth alſo with his knowledge: Hell and deſtruction are before him,how much more the harts of men? Prou.15.11. With his will and pleaſure:whatſoeuer pleaſed the Lord, that did be in heauen and in earth,Pſal.35.6. With his eternall ordinance and decree:So the Apoſtle ſaith,that Chriſt was deliuered vp according to ẏͤ determinate counſell of God,Act.2.23. And not onely ſo,but all things in the world are done by the power of God: Shall there be euill in a citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos. 3.6. yea, at the bidding and commaundement of God: the Lord hath bidden him to curſe Dauid, 2. Sam. 16.10. Therefore euill actions are not done onely by the permiſſion of God. And yet for all this God ſhall not be the author of ſinne.

For firſt, God is not the author of any euill action, as it is euill, either by willing, decreeing, bidding it, or mouing thereunto, but onely as hee giueth power, as our creator, to his creatures, to moue or worke this or that: Therefore a ſinfull worke: Quatenus Dei eſt authoris, opus eſt, crimen non eſt, quantum autem hominis eſt, crimen eſt, ſcelus eſt: As it commeth of God the author, it is a worke onely, and no ſinne: as it is of man, it is ſinne and wickednes. Againe, God is no otherwiſe to be reſpected in a ſinfull worke and action, but as a iuſt iudge, which puniſheth ſin by ſin: for it is a iuſt thing before God to recompence one ſinne by another: and ſo it is to be conſidered, not ſo much, tanquam peccatum, quam pœna peccati, as it is a ſinne, as a puniſhment of ſinne. Thirdly, in the ſame action, God propoundeth one end, as the exerciſing of his children, and manifeſtation of his mercie, as in the tentation of Iob: the inſtrument whereby hee worketh, reſpecteth ſome euill end, as Satan laboured the ſubuerſion of Iob, and the euill affection and purpoſe of the inſtrument maketh the action euill; but God is free, and vnſpotted: God therefore is not any wayes the author of ſinne. Let vs now ſee what arguments our aduerſaries bring: firſt, againſt our opinion, and then for the confirmation of their owne.

Zuinglius ſerm. de prouid. cap. 5.

Beza Aphoriſ. 31.

Caluin. aduerſ. Libertin. cap. 14.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine ſetteth downe foure great abſurdities, that (he ſaith) muſt needes follow of our opinion. Firſt, if God be the author of euery action good or bad, and if wicked men are his inſtruments to accompliſh his will: God muſt of neceſſitie be the author of ſinne, ſeeing he willeth and commaundeth it, cap. 4. Secondly, God is not in thus doing the author only of ſinne, but he himſelfe alſo ſhould properly and truly commit ſinne, being conſenting, and letting his helping hand to ſinfull actions, cap. 5. Thirdly, God by this meanes ſhould not onely be guiltie of ſinne, but the onely perſon in the world that properly ſinneth: for if that neither Adam, nor any of his poſteritie could chuſe but ſinne, ſeeing it was ſo ordained of God: and no man is ſaid to ſin, in that which he cannot ſhunne and auoyde: therefore no man properly is guiltie of ſinne; and ſo it would light wholy vpon God, cap. 6. Laſtly, ſeeing then that man ſinneth not, becauſe what he doth, is by the power, will, and commaundement of God: and yet God himſelfe is no wayes the author of ſinne, as the Proteſtants affirme: then it would follow, that ſinne is nothing at all, as the Libertines hold, but onely an imagined and deuiſed thing, being no where to be found: And if ſinne be nothing, then hell is nothing, and Chriſts death in vaine, Bellarm. cap. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe obiections are eaſily remoued by that which we anſwered before: that God is no otherwiſe the author of euill actions, or the willer and commaunder of them, then as the power of working is of God: but the euill qualitie and condition of the action, is to be imputed onely to the inſtrument: ſo that men committing euill, as they receiue a generall and abſolute power of God, to moue, to liue, &c. are onely, paſſiua inſtrumenta, paſſiue inſtruments: as they are workers of euill, they are onely, actiua inſtrumenta, actiue and working inſtruments. We will make this plaine by ſome example: as when the Sunne beames beate vpon ſome carrion, by the heate thereof there is raiſed a ſtinch, yet the Sunne beames ſtinke not, but the euill ſauour ariſeth only of the corrupt matter: And as when we ſee a lame man walking, and halting as hee goeth; the ſoule and life that is in man giueth motion to the lame part, yet the lameneſſe therof commeth of the infirmitie of the member it ſelfe: Euen ſo the Lorde may be the cauſe of euill actions, and yet not guiltie of the euill.

Bellarmine obiecteth that theſe examples are vnlike: for the Sunne, and the ſoule of man are onely generall cauſes, not particular of theſe actions: but God (as you ſay) is not onely an vniuerſall, but a ſpeciall cauſe of euery action, Bellarm. cap 5.

Anſw. The ſoule in the bodie is both an vniuerſall and particular cauſe of the power of mouing in euery part: for as the ſaying in Philoſophie is, anima eſt tota in toto, & tota in qualibet parte: The ſoule is both vniuerſally whole in the whole bodie, and ſpecially whole in euery part. But of the lamenes and defect in mouing it is no cauſe at all, vnleſſe it be the generall and furtheſt remoued cauſe: ſo we doe ſay alſo of the working of God in euill actions.

2 In one and the ſame action God doth reſpect a good and profitable end, whereas the inſtrument may haue a miſchieuous purpoſe and intent, which maketh the action euill: and ſo the ſinne is proper onely to the inſtrument.

Anſw. This is againſt Saint Pauls rule, who ſaith, wee muſt not doe euill, that good may come thereof: therefore the good intent, which God propoundeth to himſelfe, cannot iuſtifie the euill action, wherein he is a partie, Bellarm. cap. 4.

Contra. God is not a partie in the euilnes of the action at all, as wee haue ſhewed: wherefore it is falſe that he doth euill to a good end. Nay, both the action it ſelfe is good as it commeth of God, and the end alſo good: which the Lord reſpecteth.

3 The iudgements of God are alwaies iuſt: and therefore ſinnes, as they are puniſhments of former ſins are iuſt: and ſo may be of God. Anſw. Yea, but Adams ſinne was not a puniſhment of a former, for he was created without ſinne, therefore his ſin muſt be imputed to God, *Bellar.c.*4.

Contra. Yea, but Adam had free will by creation, to chuſe good or euill, and therefore ſeeing it was his voluntarie choiſe to ſinne, he onely is to be blamed for it.

Obiect. Adams fall is foreſeene of God, and he could not otherwiſe chuſe: how then can he be guiltie of that ſinne, which was not in his power to auoyde?

Anſw. Indeede Adam in reſpect of Gods appointment and foreknowledge, did ſinne neceſſariò, neceſſarily, but not coactè, he was not conſtrained: but in reſpect of his owne free will, he did neither, neceſſariò vel coactè, ſed voluntariè peccare: he did neither ſinne of neceſſitie or by conſtraint, but voluntarily.

Saint Auguſtine doth anſwere this obiection to the full: It will be ſaid that Pharaoh could doe no other, becauſe it was ſo foreſeene of him: It is anſwered, ſaith he, Dei præſcientiam non cogere hominem vt talis ſit, qualem præſciuit Deus, ſed præſcire talem futurum, qualis futurus erat, quamuis ſic eũ non fecerit Deus: qui ſi hoc præſcierat eſſe, quod non eſt, præſcientia iam non eſt: The preſcience of God doth not make a man to be that, which he is foreſeene to be, but doth onely foreknow him to be ſuch, as he ſhould haue been, though God had not made him ſuch: for if God ſhould haue foreſeene that which is not, it were no foreknowledge at all, *De prædeſtinat.lib.*1.15.

Thus we ſee how ſinfull actions may ſtand with the will, decree and power of God: and yet God ſhall neither be the anthor of ſinne, nor himſelfe thereby be made either properly, or onely to ſinne, not yet ſinne to become nothing. Now let vs examine the reaſons which our aduerſaries bring of their part.

*Argum.*2. The Scripture ſaith, that God loueth not, or willeth not iniquitie, Pſal.5.4. He will not the death of a ſinner, Ezech.18.32. And many ſuch places there are to the like purpoſe: Ergo, God giueth no conſent vnto ſinne, much leſſe commendeth it, *Bellarm.cap.*8.

Anſw. 1. Firſt, theſe places alſo make as ſtrong againſt popiſh permiſſion: for if God hate iniquitie, he will not permit it: for he that permitteth any thing which he hateth, either ſheweth his impotencie, in that he is not able to hinder it, but is conſtrained to permit it: or elſe declareth his mutabilitie in louing that which before he hated.

2 We alſo graunt, that God neither willeth nor worketh iniquitie: hee willeth the worke, but the iniquitie of the worke is of man: And he willeth not the death of a ſinner; that is, hee procureth not, nor worketh the death of any, which is wrought by ſinne, with the which the Lord hath no fellowſhip: As Auguſtine ſaith: Cupiditates peccantium Dei prædeſtinatio non excitauit, ſuaſit, aut impulit, ſed prædeſtinauit iudicium ſuum, quo vnicuiq; prout geſſit, retributurus eſt: Gods predeſtination doth not ſtirre vp, perſwade, or inforce the deſires of ſinners: but God hath only predeſtinate his iuſt iudgements, whereby he will render to euery man, as he hath done, and as the ſinnes, which he hath committed, doe deſerue.

Articul.falſ. impoſit.16.

3 Laſtly, theſe places in Scripture, God will not the death of a ſinner, and he will all men to be ſaued, 1.Timoth.2. and ſuch like, are to be vnderſtood of the reuealed will of God: who notwithſtanding in his ſecret will hath caſt his lots ouer euery man, either to life or death: yet the externall meanes of ſaluation are offered to all.

Obiect. 1. You confeſſe then that there is a reuealed will of God in the Scripture, from whence then doe ye know his ſecret will? ſurely, ſaith the Ieſuite, ſatis oſtendunt ſe eam non ex ſcripturis, ſed ex proprio capite deduxiſſe: By this you declare, that this ſecret will you learne not out of Scripture, but gather it out of your owne head, *Bellarm.cap.*8.

Anſw. 1. We graunt the Ieſuites conſequent, you learne it not out of Scripture: Ergo, it is an inuention of your own head: for hereby he condemneth all inuentions and traditions, beſide ſcripture, which elſewhere he moſt ſtifly maintaineth. 2. We denie the antecedent: for this diſtinction of the ſecret and reuealed will of God, we learne euen out of Scripture: for where wee reade, Ego Deus creans malum, Iſai.45.7. I am the God that create euill: And againe, Non Deus volens iniquitatem tu es: Thou art not a God which loueſt iniquitie: how ſhall theſe places be reconciled, to ſpeake one truth, vnleſſe we make a difference betweene the ſecret and reuealed will of God?

Obiect. 2. If God haue a ſecret will, whereby he willeth one thing, and a reuealed will, whereby he nilleth the ſame: then hath God two contrarie wils, which cannot be both true, and thus you make God a lyer, Bellar.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, we doe not ſay that God hath two wils, but one and the ſelfeſame will, that hath diuers reſpects: and if in reſpect of vs God ſeeme to will one thing which in reſpect of his ſecret counſell hee nilleth, hee is no more contrarie to himſelfe, than our Sauiour Chriſt was, who made ſhew to his two Diſciples as though he would go further, and yet had a purpoſe to ſtay with them. But concerning this diſtinction, S. Auguſt. putteth vs out of doubt: Remota hac diſcretione, quam diuina ſcientia intra ſecretũ iuſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſynceriſſime credendũ eſt deum omnes ſaluari velle: Setting apart that difference of men, which the diuine knowledge hath locked vp in the cloſet of iuſtice, it is ſincerely to be beleeued, that God would haue all men ſaued. There is then another difference of men in the ſecret counſell of God, then is outwardly and apparantly knowne. This diſtinction of Gods ſecret and reuealed will, the Maſter of ſentences very well approueth out of *Auguſtine lib.*1.*diſt.*47.b. Multa non fieri præter voluntatem Dei, quæ fiunt contra voluntatem: That many things are done contrary to the will of God, which are not done beſide his will: that is, many things may be committed againſt Gods precepts, which are his will, and yet not againſt his omnipotent and euerlaſting will: Contra eam quippe nihil fit, for nothing is done againſt that will: the one is called voluntas ſigni, the ſigned will of God, which is teſtified by outward ſignes, as precepts and prohibitions in Scripture: the other is voluntas beneplaciti, the will of Gods Counſell, or purpoſe. And ſo Auguſtine concludeth, Quantum ad ipſos attinet, quod Deus noluit, fecerunt, quantum ad omnipotentiam Dei, nullo modo facere voluerunt: In reſpect of themſelues, ſinners do that which God would not; but in regard of Gods omnipotent will, they could not.

*Argum.*3. S. Iames ſaith, Let no man ſay, when he is tempted; I am tempted of the Lord, Iam.1.13. and S. Paul; God will not ſuffer you to be tempted aboue that you are able: Ergo, much more doth not God tempt any man, or compell him to ſinne, ſeeing he doth not ſuffer his children to be tempted, &c. *Bellarm.c.*8.*loc.*4.

Anſw. Firſt, this profeſſed diſputer forgetteth the point in queſtion, and fighteth with his own ſhadow, forcing a concluſion, which no man denieth, and ſo traueileth with wind: For we confeſſe, that God neyther tempteth, prouoketh or compelleth any man to ſinne. Secondly, there is a temptation, which is of God, which is nothing but the triall of a mans faith: as the Lord is ſaid to haue tempted Abraham, Geneſ.22.2. that is, to haue made triall and proofe of his faith: any other way God tempteth not. Thirdly, theſe three wayes we acknowledge Gods power in the ſinfull actions of men. 1. In forſaking them, and giuing men ouer to themſelues to follow their owne luſts: as he tooke his good ſpirite from Saul; by the abſence of which ſpirite he fell into moſt grieuous ſinnes. 2. God as a Creator giueth life and power to euery thing to moue, to liue, to worke, Act.17. In him we liue, we moue and haue our being. 3. He as a iuſt iudge doth puniſh ſinners by their owne ſinne, Rom.1.26. For this cauſe God gaue them ouer to vile affections: So that ſin, as it is a conſequent of deſertion, a worke of the creature, a iudgement and puniſhment; is not without the will of God: yet the Lord is no way acceſſarie to the euilneſſe of ſinne, nor the author thereof. In this ſenſe we miſlike not that diſtinction of Origen: Multa ſine voluntate Dei geruntur, nihil ſine prouidentia; prouidentia eſt, qua diſpenſat, & prouidet; voluntas, qua vult, aut non vult aliquid: Many things are done without the will of God, nothing without his prouidence; that is his prouidence, wherewith he doth diſpenſe, diſpoſe, and prouide or foreſee; that is his will, whereby he willeth or nilleth any thing: wherefore though ſinne be not agreeable to the will of God, yet it ſtandeth with his prouidence.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme, that ſinne neither ſtandeth abſolutely with the will of God, for he made not ſinne, nor yet created man to ſinne, neither properly or directly doth God ſuffer or permit ſinne, as it is ſinne, to be done in the world: but he ſuffereth the creature, without coaction or conſtraint to vſe their natural faculties, which are of themſelues prone to ſinne: ſo that in ſinfull actions God worketh otherwiſe then by permiſſion onely, or withholding of his grace: for he is to be conſidered both as a Creator, that giueth power to euery thing, to moue, to liue, to do this or that, and as a iuſt iudge, puniſhing and iudging men in and by their owne ſinnes.

*Argum.*1. S. Peter ſaith, that Chriſt was deliuered vp according to the determinate counſell of God, Act.2.23. Gods determinate counſell is more then his ſufferance or permiſſion.

Anſw. The meaning of the Apoſtle is this: that God had decreed and determined, that Chriſt ſhould die to redeeme the world: but that Iudas ſhould betray him, or Pilate condemne him, or the ſouldiers crucifie him, God decreed not it ſhould be done, but to ſuffer it to be done, *Bellarm. cap.*11. ſic etiam Rhemiſt.

Contra. 1. God did not onely permit the Iewes to work their malice vpon Chriſt, but moſt iuſtly and moſt holily he vſed their malice to bring his purpoſe to paſſe. 2. For if God ſuffered and permitted that to be done, which he might haue hindered, hee thereby ſhould be made acceſſary with the Iewes of his ſonnes death. And 3. again, where the Apoſtle ſaith, definito conſilio, he was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God: it ſheweth an actiue, not a permiſſiue power of God, and a reſolute decree of God for the deliuering vp of his Sonne, not a foreknowledge onely. 4. Neither is it the Lords manner to decree to ſuffer, but to do: for Whatſoeuer the Lord will, is done in heauen and in earth. Pſal.35.6. 5. But if he ſhould ſuffer that to be done which he willeth not, then not whatſoeuer the Lord willeth, is done; but he ſhould be conſtrayned to yeeld to the will of others.

*Argum.*2. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, that God bid Semei curſe, 2.Sam.16. And the Lord ſaith to the euill ſpirite, that offered himſelfe to go and deceiue Abab: Vade & fac, & prævalebis: Goe and do ſo, and thou ſhalt preuaile: But bidding and commanding is more then ſuffering: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, God may be ſaid to bid or command to doe euill, in ſuffering the inſtruments which he vſeth to doe euill. Secondly, becauſe he not onely ſuffereth the wicked ſo to doe, but leaueth and forſaketh them, and withholdeth his grace. Thirdly, and beſide theſe two wayes, Præſidet etiam Deus ipſis voluntatibus malis, eaſque regit & gubernat, ac flectit in eis inuiſibiliter operando, vt licet vitio proprio malæ ſint, tamen à diuina prouidentia ad vnum potius malum, quàm ad aliud, non poſitiuè, ſed permiſſiuè ordinentur: God ſitteth euen in the wicked purpoſes of men, gouerning and ruling them, and ſo by his inuiſible power working in them, doth turne them, that although they be euill of themſelues, yet they are by the diuine prouidence of God ordained to doe one euill rather then another, not poſitiuely, that is abſolutely, appointing them thereto, but by way of permiſſion: As God is ſaid to haue commanded Shemei to curſe, becauſe he inclined his will, being euill, to curſe Dauid: And he inclined him, not by compelling, but by opening him a way to this ſinne, and ſtopping the way to other ſinnes, ſic Bellarm. de amiſſ. grat. lib. 2. cap. 13.

Contra. Concerning the two firſt wayes of permitting and withholding of grace, they haue not any place here: for to bid and command, is more then either of theſe. Concerning the third, firſt, the Ieſuite is contrarie to himſelfe, he ſaith that God doth gouerne, turne, and rule, and incline the minds of wicked men, and yet concludeth, that all this is done by permiſſion: inclinauit, id eſt, permiſit, he inclined, that is, ſuffered: which are cleane contrarie: for to incline is an action, to permit is a thing paſſiue. Secondly, what differeth now this third way from the firſt? for here he runneth to permiſſion. Thirdly, in ſaying that God inclineth to euill by opening a way to euill, and ſtopping the paſſage to other ſinnes; he runneth into that inconuenience, which he moſt of all ſhunneth, to make God the author of ſinne: for how can it be auoyded, ſeeing God openeth a way to ſinne, poynteth to it, and ſheweth the meane: and might as well hinder the way to this ſinne, as he doth to others? Therefore how much better and more ſafe is our aſſertion, that God in bidding Shemei to curſe, was himſelfe an agent in this action, ſo farre as it tended to good: namely, vſing this wicked inſtrument in reſpect of himſelfe after a moſt holy and iuſt maner, for the triall of Dauid, and the manifeſtation of his iuſt iudgement vpon this wicked man. And thus ſpeaketh Auguſtine, Deus voluntatem eius proprio ſuo vitio malam in hoc peccatum iudicio ſuo iuſto & occulto inclinauit: God by his iuſt and ſecret iudgement, did incline his will, being corrupt of it ſelfe, vnto this miſchiefe. Loe, he ſaith, inclinauit, he did incline his will, which is more, then permiſit, he did ſuffer him.

De liber. arbit. cap. 20.

Argum. 3. God is ſaid in Scripture to harden mens hearts, and to blind their eyes: as Exod. 7. verſ. 3: I will harden Pharaohs heart. Ioſua 11. 20. It came of the Lord to harden their heartes, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael, 1. Sam. 2. 25. They obeyed not the voyce of their father, becauſe the Lord would kill them. Iſay 63. 17. Why haſt thou made vs to erre from thy wayes? Iohn 12. 39. They could not beleeue, becauſe Eſaias ſaith, he hath blinded their eies and hardened their heart: Rom. 1. 28. God gaue them vp to a reprobate minde.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Firſt, God is not the author of induration or excæcation poſitiuely, but onely negatiuely: that is, permittendo, deſerendo, by ſuffering them to be hardened, and by forſaking them. Secondly, in Scripture thoſe things are ſaid to harden, or to blind, which are but the occaſions onely, as gifts are ſaid to blind the eyes of the wiſe: ſo God is ſaid to harden, occaſionaliter, by miniſtring the occaſion, by abuſing whereof men are hardened: as Pſal. 105. God turned the hearts of the Ægyptians, ſo that they did hate his people: God did not peruert the hearts of the Egyptians, but by ſhewing mercie to his people, they tooke occaſion thereby to hate them. Bellarm. c. 13. & 14. obſeruat. 5.

Contra. Firſt, Thomas Aquinas, whom Bellarmine alleageth, graunteth, that God doth inclinare malas voluntates, non ſolum permittendo, ſed poſitiuè, incline the euil willes of men, not onely by permiſſion, but poſitiuely: in comment. c. 9. ad Roman. that is, not by ſuffering onely, but by doing and working.

Secondly, neither can it ſafely be affirmed, that God miniſtreth occaſion to men to be hardened or to ſinne: ſeeing 1. that Balaam is reproued for teaching Balaak to put a ſtumbling blocke before the children of Iſrael, Reuel. 2. 14. Shall we thinke then, that God putteth ſtumbling blocks before men to fall at? 2. And this were to make God the worker of tentation, as Sathan is, who tempteth occaſionaliter, by ſetting the occaſion or motiue before mens eyes; as hee ſhewed Chriſt the whole world. 3. But if they ſay, that the occaſion which God miniſtreth, is good, but men abuſe it, and are thereby hardened: as when through Gods patience men are made worſe. Here God doth miniſter no occaſion at all, but they take occaſion to be hardened, where there is none offered: and thus God cannot any way be ſaid to harden mens hearts.

Thirdly, Auguſtine hath foure opinions of this matter. 1. God is ſaid to harden Pharaos heart, qui cauſas miniſtrat, becauſe he miniſtred the cauſe, whereby Pharao his heart was hardened, qu. 30. in Exod. but this as I ſhewed is not ſufficient. 2. Indurare Deus dicitur, quem mollire noluerit rit: God is ſaid to harden, whom he will not mollifie, de prædeſtinat.lib.1.c.4. Thus God ſhould be ſaid to harden the hearts of all wicked men. 3. That God is ſaid to harden Pharaos heart, Non ad operationem Dei, ſed præſcientiæ pertinere monſtratur: It muſt be vnderſtood of Gods preſcience onely and foreknowledge, not of his woorking, de prædeſtination.lib.1.c.6. this were to confound Gods knowledge and workes. 4. Wherefore in the fourth place he ſaith, Deus indurauit per iuſtum iudicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God did indurate Pharaos heart, by his iuſt iudgement; Pharao by the freeneſſe of his corrupt will: de liber.arbit.c.23. To this ſentence of Auguſtine wee conſent, that God doth not harden mens heartes onely, by permiſſion, deſertion, occaſion, preſcience; but, as a iuſt iudge, he puniſheth ſinne by ſinne, and giueth them ouer to the hardneſſe of their heart: and Bellarmine vnawares confeſſeth as much, that when God in Scripture is ſaid to indurate, id facit vt iuſtus iudex, he doth it as a iuſt Iudge, c.14.obſeru.5. This is more then to do it by permiſſion onely or deſertion. Laſtly, Origen doth very well expreſſe this matter, by this ſimilitude: Sol duplicis videtur eſſe virtutis, &c. The Sunne ſeemeth to be of a double vertue, one to illuminate, another to burne or harden, but according to the matter and ſubiect: ſo God hardened Pharaos heart, becauſe it was by his corrupt thoughts of an earthly nature, as the Sunne hardeneth the clay: hom.2 in Cantic. So then as the Sunne, not by withdrawing his light, or by ſuffring, but effectiuely hardneth the clay; ſo God likewiſe: but the cauſe of all is in the corruption of mans heart. So then to conclude this whole matter, I ſay with Auguſtine; firſt, Non cuiuſquam peccati author eſt Deus, ſed naturæ Creator, quæ cùm poteſtatem habuit non delinquendi, ſponte deliquit: God is not the author of ſinne, but the Creator of nature, which when it had power not to ſinne, ſinned willingly, articul.6.falſ.impoſ.Auguſtin. Secondly, aliud fecit Deus & ordinauit; aliud non fecit, ſed ordinauit, ſome things God both made and ordered or diſpoſed: ſome things he made not, but diſpoſed or ordered, as the darkeneſſe in the creation, in Pſal.7. So God in the worke of ſinne is to be conſidered as a Creator, from whom the creature hath power to do this or that; and as a iuſt Iudg, that ordereth and diſpoſeth of ſinne, directing it to the iuſt puniſhment of the wicked.

Cauſ.23.qu.4.c.23. Cùm aliquos à Deo traditos deſiderys, aut obduratos legimus, &c. When wee reade of any giuen vp to their luſts, and obdurate, &c. We confeſſe that they had ſo deſerued by their great ſins: Where then there is an euil deſert preceding, and hardnes of heart followeth as a puniſhment, there God is not to be conſidered only as a beholder, or ſufferer, but as a iuſt Iudge.

Cauſ.24.qu.3.c.39. The Colluthians are numbred among heretikes, Qui dicunt Deum non facere mala: Who ſay that God doth not euill, contrary to the Scripture, I the Lord create euill: the papiſts excluding the power of God from euill, but onely by the way of permiſſion; are not farre from this hereſie.

The Maſter of the Sentences is a plentifull witneſſe with vs; ſhewing diuers wayes out of Auguſtine how ſinne ſtandeth with the will of God. 1. Becauſe mala fieri bonum eſt, it is a good thing, that euill ſhould be done: for by this meanes Gods power and goodneſſe is ſeene, in turning euill to good, lib.1.diſt.46 g. 2. Voluntas Dei de nobis impletur, ſed tamen non implemus eam cum peccamus: The will of God is fulfilled of vs, though we fulfill not the will of God, when we ſinne. lib.1.diſt.47.i. that is, Gods will euen in ſinners is fulfilled to their puniſhment 3. Actus mali, inquantum actus ſunt, bona ſunt & à Deo authore: Euill actions, as they are actions, are good, and ſo of God: lib.2.diſt.35.d. 4. Ea quæ peccata ſunt & pœna peccati, &c. That which is both a ſinne and a puniſhment of ſinne, is of God as it a puniſhment, for all puniſhments of ſinne are iuſt, lib.2.diſt.36.b. So likewiſe lib.2.d.32. Concupiſcentia in quantum pœna peccati deum habet authorem: Concupiſcence, as it is a puniſhment hath God the author, but as it is a ſinne or fault, it hath the diuell for the author. 5. Lib.2.diſtinct.44.b. Poteſtas mali eſt a Deo: The power of euill, or whereby euill is done, is of God: Potentiam Deus tribuit, elationem potentiæ malitia noſtræ mentis inuenit: God giueth power to worke, but the abuſe of the power is of the malice of our owne mind. Thus farre the Maſter of the ſentences agreeth with vs: whereby it is euident, in what ſenſe God in ſinfull actes is to be conſidered, not as a ſufferer onely, but as a worker and diſpoſer.

THE THIRD QVESTION, CONCERNING the ſinne of Adam.

THis queſtion hath three parts. Firſt, whether Adams fall were any other way, then by Gods permiſſion onely. Secondly, what Adams ſinne was, whether pride or infidelitie. Thirdly, what kinde of ſinne, whether veniall or mortall.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER ADAMS FALL was any other way, then by Gods permiſſion.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine affirmeth, that God onely ſuffered Adam to be tempted and ſo to fall, and that God no way willed or decreed it: De ſtat.peccat.lib.3.c.2. 9.Error.

Argum. 2.Pet.3.9. God would haue none periſh, but to come to repentance: Therefore God no way willed, or decreed the fall of man. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, we muſt not doe euill, that good may come of it, Rom.3.8. Ergo, God would not Adams fall, that he might afterward be ſaued by Chriſt.

Anſw. Firſt, the fall of man tended not to his deſtruction, but to his further ſtrengthning and raiſing vp in Chriſt: as Ambroſe well ſaith, Iuſta eſſet hæc accuſatio, ſi vulnera noſtra immedicabilia eſſent: This accuſation were iuſt, if our wounds were remedileſſe, de paradiſ. cap. 8. Neither was Adams fall euill, as it was foreſeene and foreordained of God, the cauſe thereof was euill, namely Adams rebellion and diſobedience: but God in his moſt holy counſell, knew how to turne Adams ruine and fall to his benefite.

The Proteſtants.

NEither doe we affirme that Adams ſinne was appointed in the will and decree of God, but it proceeded from the libertie of Adams will: but the fall of Adam was both forſeene of God, and decreed to be, not permitted onely.

*Argum.*1. As Chriſts death was decreed and determined, Act.2.23. So was the fall of Adam, for the end of Chriſts death, was to reſtore Adams fall: and if the end be decreed, then thoſe things alſo, which are neceſſarilie referred to that end. Againe, Epheſ.1.4. The Saints were choſen in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, who hath predeſtinate vs to be adopted thorough Ieſus Chriſt: From whence I reaſon thus, the adoption of Gods children in Chriſt was predeſtinate & foreordained before the world: there could be no adoption, if Adam had not fallen: for what needed a reſtitution, if there had been no tranſgreſſion or preuarication? Ergo, Adams fall was decreed.

Auguſtine ſaith, Tenenda eſt inconcuſſè hæc regula, This rule muſt ſurely be held, that ſinners, in peccatis præſcitos non prædeſtinatos, pœnam autem ijs prædeſtinatam, were foreſeene in their ſinnes, not predeſtinate; but their puniſhment was predeſtinate. Wherefore Adams fall being a puniſhment of his ſinne, was predeſtinate, and before ordained. Concerning Adams ſinne, how it may ſtand with the will of God, I haue ſhewed at large before, queſt.2.part.2.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER PRIDE, OR infidelitie were the firſt ſinne of Adam.

The Papiſts.

10. Error. THe Ieſuites opinion is, that neither intemperancie, luſt of the fleſh, infidelity, or any other, but pride onely was the firſt offence into the which Adam fell: who being tickled with ſelfe-loue, and an ambitious deſire to better their eſtate, when the diuell had ſaid vnto them (eritis, ſicut Dij) ye ſhall be as Gods: afterwards alſo fell into infidelitie, in giuing eare to Sathan, and not beleeuing the words of God, *Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib.*3.*cap.*4.

*Argum.*1. We reade in Eccleſiaſticus, chap.10. verſ.14. that pride is the originall of ſinne: Ergo, it was the firſt offence, from the which other flowed, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the authoritie of this booke doth not binde vs, becauſe we doe not acknowledge nor receiue it for Scripture. Secondly, it is apparant by the text it ſelfe, that pride hath alſo his beginning, and therefore is not the originall of all tranſgreſſion: as verſe 13. The beginning of mans pride is to fall away from God: therefore by this ſentence, diſobedience is ſet before pride, as the beginning and begetter thereof. Thirdly, the Canonicall Scripture ſpeaketh contrarie: for S. Paul ſaith, that not pride, but couetouſnes or the loue of money, is the roote, that is, the beginning and cauſe of all euill, 1.Tim.6.20.

*Argum.*2. S.Paul ſaith, Rom.5.19. By one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: but diſobedience, that is, not to be ſubiect to the commandement of another, is the firſt act of pride: Ergo, the firſt ſinne of Adam was pride.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that the diſobedience of our firſt parents was tertius actus, the third act of their tranſgreſſion, infidelitie the ſecond, pride the firſt, *cap.*9. but now he turneth his ſpeech, and ſaith, that diſobedience was the firſt act, which he maketh a part of pride. Secondly, by diſobedience in this place, the Apoſtle meaneth not any one particular offence committed by our firſt parents, but the whole lump or maſſe of ſinne rather, which did concur in their tranſgreſſion: And this appeareth, by ſetting againſt Adams diſobedience, the obedience of Chriſt: whereby is vnderſtoode, not any one vertue but the whole righteouſnes, and perfection of Chriſts obedience: whereby many (ſaith the Apoſtle) are made righteous: but we are made righteous, not by the partiall, but whole and entire obedience of Chriſt. As Chriſts obedience then is taken for his whole and perfect obedience; ſo is Adams diſobedience likewiſe.

The Proteſtants.

THough it be not a point greatly materiall, whether pride or infidelitie in Adams tranſgreſſion was the firſt, ſeeing it is on each ſide confeſſed, that both of them were preſent; yet becauſe it is good, ſo far as is poſſible, to ſearch out euery truth: we will alſo declare, which of theſe opinions commeth neereſt the truth: firſt,it is to be conſidered, that many ſinnes conſpired as it were,and were heaped together in the tranſgreſſion of Adam: Auguſtine reckeneth vp theſe fiue: 1. Sacrilegium, there was Sacrilege, that is, they robbed God of his honor, in that they beleeued not his word. 2.Homicidium,Homicide,in being guiltie of their owne death. 3.Fornicatio ſpiritualis;Spirituall fornication,in giuing credit to the diuell. 4.Furtum, Theft,in eating fruite which was prohibited,and ſo none of theirs. 5.Auaritia,Couetouſnes,plus quam ſufficit expetendo,in deſiring more then was ſufficient: Auguſt.Enchirid.cap.45. And in another place he ſetteth downe three more: Gulam,cupiditatem, ſuperbiam: Gluttonie,for they ſaw that the fruite was pleaſant to the eye,and therefore deſired to eate of it; Concupiſcence,or carnall deſire,they perceiued themſelues to be naked,&c. Pride, in ambitiouſly ſeeking to be like vnto God: Ad fratres in Eremo. ſerm.68. Vnto theſe we may adde the excuſing of their ſinne, and in Adam, his credulitie, in giuing too light eare to Eua her ſuggeſtion: The firſt of all theſe,which are ten in number,was their infidelitie,which Auguſtine calleth ſacrilege,not their pride: and we ſhew it thus.

Argum.1. Infidelitie,and forgetting of God is the beginning of all ſinne,as the Pſalme ſaith: The foole hath ſaid in his heart,there is no God: and then it followeth: They haue corrupted,and done an Pſal.14.1. abominable worke: The forgetfulnes of God therefore,which commeth of infidelitie, begetteth and bringeth forth other vngodly workes. And our Sauiour ſaith, that from within, out of the heart, (which is the ſeate of infidelitie) proceede fornications,murders,&c.Mark.7.21.Therefore pride followeth infidelitie,for the foole will neuer lift vp himſelfe againſt God,if he had not firſt forgotten the Maieſtie,eternitie,and power of God.

Argum.2. We doe thus alſo demonſtrate it: Eua ſinned before Adam: Eua her ſinne was by ſeduction: ſhe could not be ſeduced,but by giuing eare to the ſeducer: the ſeducer lyed vnto her, and made the word of God falſe: promiſing they ſhould become as Gods, by eating the forbidden fruite, whereas the Lord had ſayd,they ſhould dye the death if they did eate: Sathan therefore could neuer haue ſeduced them, vnleſſe they had giuen credite to him, which was their infidelity.Our argument then is this: That,wherby they were ſeduced,was before that whereto they were ſeduced; for the cauſe is alway before the effect, the meane and inſtrument before the end: but infidelitie is that whereby they were ſeduced,in giuing credite to Sathan: pride and diſobedience,that,whereunto,namely,to eate the forbidden fruit,and ſo to be like vnto God: the firſt was the obiect of their diſobeience,the other of their pride: Ergo,their infidelitie was firſt.

Argum.3. Faith is the beginning of righteouſnes, Ergo, infidelitie is the roote of ſinne: argum.Caluin.

Bellarmine. It followeth not,for the foundation of the houſe is firſt laid,but it is laſt deſtroyed: the heart is the firſt that liueth,and the laſt that dieth,cap.5.obiect.2.

Contra.1. The firſt decay in a building is at the foundation,and where an houſe is at once deſtroyed,and brought to vtter ruine, it is firſt vndermined at the foundation: ſuch was that vniuerſall ouerthrow of mankinde,which began at the very foundation, namely the decay of faith, in not beleeuing Gods word: ſo likewiſe for the other ſimilitude, in the naturall end of man, the heart is the laſt that dieth,but where the death is violent,and haſtened, the wound is firſt made in the heart, to procure a more ſpeedie diſpatch: and ſo Sathan gaue firſt our parents a deadly wound in the heart and life of their ſoules,namely their faith: thus his owne examples are turned againſt him.

2. He is very bolde thus to contradict their owne Canons: Clementin.lib.3.tit. 16. Clemen.5. Thus decreeth in the generall Councell of Vienna: Vnde vulnus eſt ortum, prodijt & medela; vnde mors ſubijt,inde vita euenit: Where the wound began,the cure was made,where death entred, there life proceeded: But our life and cure beginneth from faith in Chriſt: Ergo, in his faith man was firſt maymed and wounded.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake: Ego cum Apoſtolo dico mentem mulieris fuiſſe à ſerpente corruptam, & ex iſta corruptione peruenit libido in mentem mulieris & viri: I ſay with the Apoſtle, that the minde of the woman was corrupted by the ſerpent, and ſo by this corruption luſt came into the minde both of the man and woman: Cont.Iulian.lib.6.cap.12. The corruption of their mindes then bred luſt: which was two-fold, luſt to eate the fruite, which was a ſpice of gluttonie; luſt and deſire thereby to be made like God,which was their pride: theſe two did ariſe of the corruption of their minde. Their minde then was corrupted firſt: and that was by infidelitie.

Hereof alſo we haue further euidence: Tertullian.lib.2.in Marcion. He doubteth not, Ada delictum hæreſin,&c. To cal Adams ſinne hereſie,which he committed by preferring his owne ſentence before Gods: What was this elſe but a kinde of infidelitie,not to giue credence vnto the ſentence of God?

Likewiſe in their owne lawe: Clementin.lib.3.tit.16. Guſtus ſauciauit,guſtus ſanauit: The taſte woundeth,the taſte healeth, that is, the taſte of Chriſts fleſh giueth health, as the taſte of the forbidden fruite gaue the firſt wound: diſobedience then, which was the fruite of infidelitie,was the firſt tranſgreſſion, for they would neuer haue eaten of the tree, if they had beleeued the word of God, that they ſhould haue died.

The Maſter of the Sentences, ſaith: In quo verbo locum dedit tentandi, cùm dixit, ne fortè moriemini: In which word the woman gaue way to the tempter, when ſhe ſaid, Leaſt perhaps ye die: Attende ordinem & progreſſum humanæ perditionis: Conſider the order and progreſſe of mans perdition: Firſt, God ſaith, In what day ye eate thereof ye ſhall die: then the woman ſaid, Leaſt yee die, laſt of all the Serpent, Yee ſhall not die: God affirmed, the woman doubted, the diuell denied; Ergo, the womans doubting, which proceeded of infidelitie, was the beginning of the tranſgreſſion.

Certaine alſo of the Schoolemen, as Bonauenture, Scotus. in 2. ſenten. diſtinct. 21. 22. Denie that pride was the firſt ſinne or offence of our firſt Parents.

Laſtly, S. Ambroſe thus teſtifieth, Peccatum Adæ non longè eſt ab idololatria, præuaricauit ſe hominem putans futurum Deum, ſecutus magis quod diabolus ſuaſit, quam quod Deus iuſſit: The ſinne of Adam is not far from idolatrie: he ſinned thinking that man might be God, following rather that which the diuell perſwaded, then that which God commaunded: in Luk. 13. If Adams ſinne were idolatrie, it proceeded from infidelitie.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ADAMS ſinne were veniall or mortall.

The Papiſts.

11.Error. THe Ieſuite denieth that the ſinne of Adam was veniall: his reaſon is this, becauſe, Culpa venialis non tollit gratiam aut amicitiam Dei: Veniall faultes doe not depriue men of the fauour or friendſhip of God. But God was angrie with Adam, and thruſt him out of Paradiſe: and by his tranſgreſſion he loſt his innocencie: Ergo, it was no veniall ſinne: cap. 8.

The Proteſtants.

IF the Ieſuite take veniall ſinnes for thoſe, which in their owne nature are pardonable, and deſerue not death, as he doth elſe where; in this ſenſe neither was this ſinne of Adam, nor any oother, no not the leaſt ſinne, which is committed in the world, veniall: for by nature euery ſin deſerueth death, Rom. 6. 23. But if by veniall ſinnes we vnderſtand thoſe, which, howſoeuer they are in their owne nature, yet through Gods mercie are pardoned: ſo we affirme, that both this ſinne of our firſt parentes, and all other, which the children of God fall into, are veniall: And though for this ſinne God was offended with Adam, and temporally puniſhed him; yet was he againe, through Gods mercie, reſtored to fauour or grace. Thirdly, if by veniall ſinnes, we vnderſtand the ſmaller and lighter offences, ſo we denie alſo, that Adams ſinne was veniall: for it was an huge and grieuous treſpaſſe; yet he was by grace thereof acquited. Theſe two points then are briefly to be declared: firſt of the greatneſſe of Adams ſinne: ſecondly, of his recouerie by repentance, and his vndoubted ſaluation.

Firſt it appeareth, that the ſinne of our firſt parents was a grieuous and great offence, euen in the higheſt degree. 1. In reſpect of the partie offending: Adam receiued power if he would, not to ſinne, therefore his ſinne was the greater. 2. His ingratitude doth augment the ſinne, in that ſo ſoone he had forgotten the vnſpeakable benefites, beſtowed vpon him in his creation. 3. In reſpect of the commandement it ſelfe, which was verie eaſie: for in ſuch abundance of all kind of moſt pleaſant fruites, hee was onely forbidden to eate of one: and therefore, as Auguſtine ſaith: Tam leue præceptum ad obſeruandum, tam breue ad memoria retinendum, tanto maiore iniuſtitia violatum eſt, quanto faciliori poſſet obſeruantia cuſtodiri: A commandement ſo eaſie to keepe, ſo ſhort to be remembred, was with ſo much the greater vnrighteouſneſſe violated, as it might more eaſily haue bene obſerued. 4. The fourth circumſtance, is the iſſue of this ſinne, whereby Adam did not onely hurt himſelfe, but brought a miſerable ſtate vpon his poſteritie, both in the propagation of ſinne, and the puniſhment thereof. 5. Laſtly, the great puniſhment laid vpon this tranſgreſſion, ſheweth the greatneſſe thereof: for beſide the ſpirituall wretchedneſſe of the ſoule, being not onely depriued of thoſe excellent graces of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, wherein it was created, but alſo made ſubiect to euerlaſting damnation; there was a threefold puniſhment laid vpon them in their bodies: vpon the woman, in bringing foorth with paine and trauell: vpon the man, in getting his liuing in the ſweate of his browes, that is, with paine and ſorrow: vpon them both, in returning to the duſt, and yeelding to mortality and corruption. Theſe circumſtances then, being weighed together, do plainely ſet forth the ſtate and qualitie of Adams tranſgreſſion: that it was an high offence before God.

Now concerning the ſecond point: we do, notwithſtanding the greatneſſe of their ſinnes, vndoubtedly hold, againſt the hereſie of the Tatianes, who blaſphemouſly affirmed that Adam was cōdemned, that our firſt parents were the children of Gods election. The Ieſuit alſo affirmeth the ſame: but vpon verie weeke ground: as that Adam & Eue did make them couerings of fig leaues, in ſtead of ſackcloth,in ſigne of repentance:alſo becauſe that Adam by certaine ancient writers is affirmed to haue bene buried in the ſame place, where Chriſt was crucified, and ſhed his bloud: which is an vncertaine tradition beſide ſcripture.But our arguments for the ſaluation of our firſt parents are theſe.

Argum. 1. The firſt promiſe of the Meſſiah was made to our parents immediatly after their tranſgreſſion: The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the ſerpents head, Gen. 3.15. Ergo they had their intereſt and part of this promiſe: for which of all the Prophets or Patriarkes was there, to whom Chriſt was promiſed, to whom the promiſe of grace appertained not?

*Argum.*2. The firſt Adam was a figure of the ſecond: Rom.5.14.But it cannot be ſhewed that euer any reprobate was ordained, or appointed of God, to be a figure of his ſonne Chriſt, the Meſſiah to come: Ergo, Adam was no reprobate.

Argum. 3. Saint Luke in ſetting downe the genealogie of our Sauiour Chriſt, ſaith, he was the ſonne of Adam, who was the ſonne of God, Luk.3.28. Thus then we reaſon: Adam was the ſonne of God: Ergo, he was no reprobate, not a child of perdition, but an heire of ſaluation. Other arguments we haue for Adams election, but theſe at this time, and in this place may ſuffice.

That Adams ſinne was veniall, Hilarie teſtifieth: Adam confeſſum, venia reſeruatum: that Adam confeſſed, and was reſerued to pardon, *in Pſalm.*119.*cap.*8. and S. *Ambroſe lib. de Paradiſ. cap.*14. Veniabilis Eua culpa, quam ſecuta ſit delicti confeſſio: Eua her fault was veniall, which the confeſſion of her ſinne followed.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, OF THE greatnes of Adams ſinne.

BEllarmine hath foure poſitions of this matter. Firſt, that Adam was not properly ſeduced but *Eue, lib.*3.*de ſtat peccat.c.*7. Secondly, that Adams ſinne was greater than the womans, *cap.*9. Thirdly, that in their tranſgreſſion they loſt their faith, *cap.*6. Fourthly, that Adams ſinne, was 12.Error. aliquo modo, in ſome reſpect the greateſt of all ſinnes: firſt, both becauſe he might eaſilie haue kept himſelfe from tranſgreſſion, there being but one precept giuen him: ſecondly, in reſpect of his great ingratitude, hauing receiued ſo many benefites from God: thirdly, for that Adams ſinne 13. Error. redounded to the hurt of all his poſteritie, as no other ſinne doth: *cap.*10.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, that Adam was not properlie ſeduced, but Eue, we acknowledge, the Scripture ſo affirming, 1.Timoth.2.14. Adam was not deceiued, but the woman was deceiued.

Secondly, that Adams ſinne in ſome reſpect was greater, as in regard of his perſon, then Eua her ſinne was, we alſo graunt; but ſimplie it was not: ſo this poynt we partly affirme, and partly deny it: ſee the appendix to the ſecond part of the fourth queſtion following.

Thirdly, that our firſt parents loſt their faith in their tranſgreſſion, we hold it an error: for beſide that, the faith of the Saints cannot be vtterly extinct by their ſinne, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance: Rom.11.29. That Adam had not loſt all faith, appeareth: firſt, by the conſcience and ſhame of ſinne, in that they hid themſelues, being afraide of Gods preſence: ſecondly, becauſe the promiſe of Chriſt was preſently vpon their fall exhibited to them, which without faith, they were not capable of.

Fourthly, firſt, the three reaſons alleaged, ſhew Adams ſinne to haue been a very great and grieuous tranſgreſſion, but not the greateſt that euer was: ſecondly, the Maſter of the Sentences Lib.2.diſt.33. well anſwereth, that becauſe all mankinde is hurt by Adams ſinne, it was not for that his ſinne was greater, then all other, but in reſpect of Adams perſon, in whom the whole humane nature then conſiſted. Thirdly, the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is greater, which ſhall neuer be forgiuen: the ſins of the reprobate and damned are greater, being puniſhed with euerlaſting damnation.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, CONCERNING originall ſinne.

THere are diuers points of this queſtion, which are on each ſide confeſſed: we wil firſt ſet them downe briefly, and then come to the points of difference and diſagreement betweene vs.

Firſt we are agreed, that originall ſinne is verily propagated by generation from our parents, and is a corruption ingraffed in vs by nature: not as the Pelagians did hold, that Adams tranſgreſſion was onely hurtfull to his poſteritie by imitation: for S. Paul ſaith directly: In quo omnes peccauerunt: That in Adam all haue ſinned, Rom.5.12. Secondly, we confeſſe, that originall ſinne hath not onely made the body ſubiect to death and mortalitie, which is the opinion of Iacobus Faber, and ſome others; but hath alſo polluted and defiled the ſoule of man: So the Apoſtle ſaith, that not onely death hath reigned ouer all, Rom.5.14. but all men by Adams diſobedience are made ſinners, verſ. 19. and ſinne is the death of the ſoule. Thirdly, for the originall of the ſoule, we thinke it a more probable opinion, and agreeable to ſcripture, that the ſoules of men ſhould bee created as they are infuſed into the bodies, conceiued, and prepared in the wombe, then that the ſoules ſhould be produced by generation from the parents, as the bodies are: for the ſcripture ſeemeth to make a diuers beginning of the ſoule and the body: as the Preacher ſaith, that duſt, that is, the bodie returneth to the earth, and the ſpirit to God, that gaue it: Eccle. 12. 7. So by the Prophet Zacharie the Lord ſaith, that he formeth the ſpirit in the midſt of man: Zachar. 12. 1. And the Author to the Hebrewes, ſeemeth to make a flat oppoſition betweene the fathers of the bodies, and the father of the ſpirits, Hebr. 12. 9. Yet becauſe this queſtion is not plainely determined in the ſcripture, we thinke it more ſafe, being not a point of faith, to wonder at it as a great myſterie, and not raſhly to pronounce anie thing, as of a common & knowne matter: And the rather, becauſe the Preacher ſaith, that no man knoweth the way of the ſpirit, Eccleſ. 11. 5. And thus Auguſtine contented himſelfe; writing in theſe words of the woman in the Machabees, that ſaid to her children, I know not how you came into my wombe: Ego, inquit neſcio, ille ſcit, qui formauit, vtrum ſimul animam formarit, an iam formatis dederit: ſic ego dico de anima mea, me neſcire, quomodo venerit in corpus meum: I know not, ſaith ſhe, as if ſhe ſhould ſay, I know not, but he knoweth that formed the ſpirit, whether he framed it together with the body, or gaue it to the body framed before: So I ſay of my ſoule, I cannot tell how it came into my body.

2. Machab. 7. 22.
Auguſt. de anim. origin. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Fourthly, this being concluded and determined, that the ſoule hath the beginning of God, and not of the parents: yet we are able to anſwere that obiection which is made concerning originall ſinne: for thus they reaſon: Sinne is an adiunct of the ſoule, not of the body: it cannot then be in the bodie before the ſoule come; and in the ſoule it is not, becauſe it is created of God pure and vnſpotted: vnleſſe therefore the ſoule ſhould be deriued from the parents, we cannot know where to place originall ſinne.

Anſ. Originall ſinne is neither proper to the body, nor to the ſoule, but it is hominis peccatum, a ſinne of the whole man: who conſiſteth of body and ſoule: & it commeth not of the bodie alone, or of the ſoule alone, but of the coniunction of them both together: ſo that now neither the bodie muſt be reſpected alone, nor the ſoule alone, but as they do ioyntly make one man: and ſo enter into one condition, and are partakers each of others woe or welfare.

If it be further obiected, that it ſtandeth not with Gods iuſtice, to thruſt a pure ſoule into an vncleane bodie: We further anſwer: Firſt, that the ſoule and body are not of God reſpected as ſingle ſubſtances, but as they are ioyned together, to make one man: and therefore there is but one condition of both. Secondly, the ſoule in reſpect of Gods creation, is a pure creature, yet it continueth not in that ſtate one moment: for it is created in the midſt of the bodie, in an vncleane and polluted place: and forthwith being coupled to the bodie, beginneth to be vncleane. S. Auguſtine alſo doth anſwere very well: Quomodo iuſtum eſt vt anima recens creata, ab omni delicto immunis, paſſiones carnis, diuerſoſque cruciatus, etiam dæmonum incurſus in paruulis ſuſtineat, ſic oſtendi poteſt, qua iuſtitia, in carne quoque peccati ſubeat originale peccatum: Looke how it may be iuſt, that the ſoule newly created, and void of all offence, yet ſhould indure in infants the paſſions and vexations of the fleſh, yea the inuaſion of diuels (which were ſuffered to torment children) ſo it may be ſhewed how it ſtandeth with the rule of iuſtice, that the ſoule in ſinfull fleſh ſhould be touched alſo with originall ſinne.

Lib. 2. cont. Pelagian. cap. 10.

Fiftly, it is of each ſide concluded, that original ſin doth appertaine as wel by nature to the ſeed of the faithfull, as of Infidels: for Dauid confeſſeth, who no doubt was borne of faithfull parents, that in ſinne his mother conceiued him, Pſal. 51. 5.

Sixtly, that not all the ſinnes of our parents and forefathers, but the offence onely of Adam is deriued and propagated to poſteritie: ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, the fault came of one offence, namely Adams, to condemnation, but the gift is of manie offences to iuſtification, Rom. 5. 16.

Seuenthly, that originall ſinne is no ſubſtance, nor hath anie naturall being of it ſelfe, but is onely a deprauation, defect and corruption of nature: for euery creature of God is good. 1. Timoth. 4. 4. Ergo, originall ſinne is no ſubſtance created of God, being euill: Saint Paul alſo ſaith, I know that in me dwelleth no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. Originall ſin then hath the ſeate & dwelling in man, it hath no being of it ſelfe.

Laſtly, we do diſtinguiſh between originall and actuall ſinne: for infants and young children cannot commit anie actuall ſinne, but yet they are guiltie of originall: the firſt is euident, Rom. 9. 11. the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Eſau and Iacob, ſaith, that they yet had done neither euill nor good: the ſecond is alſo proued, Rom. 5. 14. that children do ſinne, though not after the tranſgreſſion of Adam, that is, actually.

Theſe then are the ſeuerall poynts, wherein we and our aduerſaries are agreed: the difference betweene vs in this queſtion of originall ſinne, is in theſe particulars following: firſt, of the nature and qualitie of originall ſinne. Secondly, of the beginning of originall ſinne. Thirdly, whether it remaine after Baptiſme. Fourthly, whether it be hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptiſme. Fiftly, of the ſeate of concupiſcence. Sixtly, of the puniſhment of originall ſinne.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NATVRE AND definition of originall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite defineth originall ſin, to be nothing elſe, but, Priuatio ſeu carentia doni iuſtitiæ originalis, vel habitualis auerſio à Deo: A priuation or wanting of the gift of original iuſtice; or, an habituall auerſion or turning away of the mind from God: but he denieth, that reatus culpæ, or, pœnæ, that the guilt of the offence of our firſt parents, or of the puniſhment, is anie part of original ſinne. His reaſon is, becauſe, to be guiltie of the offence, or of the puniſhment, are the effect or ſequell of ſinne, rather then anie ſinne it ſelfe: and therefore it is no part of originall ſinne, which hath, Veram & propriam peccati rationem, the true and proper nature & condition of ſinne: Bellarm. de amiſſion. grat. lib. 5. cap. 19. 14. Error.

Anſwer. In the affirmatiue part of Bellarmines definition, there is a double fault: for he ſaith that originall ſinne is onely the defect or wanting of iuſtice, whereas there is in it beſide a ſupply of naturall corruption and prauitie: there is not only a grace wanting, but an euill preſent. Secondly, he calleth it an habituall or potentiall turning aſide of the mind from God, whereas there is an actuall rebellion of nature, and deprauation of the mind, as euen now ſhall be ſhewed.

Neither is the Ieſuites reaſon good, why reatus culpæ, the guiltineſſe of the offence, that is, the ſtaine or blot of Adams ſinne remaining in his poſteritie, ſhould be no part of originall ſinne, becauſe it is the effect of ſinne, not properly ſinne it ſelfe: for hee might ſo reaſon againſt originall ſinne: It is the effect of ſinne: Ergo, no ſinne: which were no good conſequent: For it is, peccatum, & pœna peccati, both ſinne, and the puniſhment of ſinne; as Auguſtine ſaith: Primo homini, quod erat pœna, natura nobis eſt: That which was a puniſhment to our firſt parents, is a naturall euill in vs: in Pſal. 37. So this naturall ſtaine or blot of ſinne, in reſpect of Adam, it is a puniſhment of his tranſgreſſion laid vpon his poſteritie, in reſpect of vs it is ſinne.

The Proteſtants.

WE define originall ſinne generally to be that euil, which is ingraft in our nature, wherein we are conceiued and borne: which S. Paul calleth, peccatum inhabitans, the ſinne that dwelleth in vs. This originall euill or ſinne, hath two parts: for firſt thereby we are made guiltie of the ſinne and diſobedience of our firſt parents, which is made ours by propagation: as the Apoſtle ſaith, By one mans diſobedience many are made ſinners, Rom. 5. 19. And together with the fault or offence, the puniſhment is propagated: that is, death is gone ouer all, in as much as all haue ſinned, verſ. 12. This is the firſt part of this naturall euill, which is denied by our aduerſaries, but confirmed as we ſee, by euident teſtimonies of ſcripture. By this then, two popiſh aſſertions of our aduerſaries are ouerthrowne: one of Albertus Pighius, and Catharinus, that Adams ſinne is ours onely by imputation: which opinion Bellarmine taketh paines to confute, cap. 16. the other is maintained by the Ieſuite himſelfe, that Adams ſin is ſaid to be ours, becauſe we were then in Adams loynes when he ſinned, cap. 18. But we affirme that we are guiltie of the ſin of Adam, not by bare imputation, nor yet potentially only in Adams loynes, but really, verily, & in ſome ſort actually: As by this reaſon may appeare: Looke how death, the puniſhment of Adams ſin, is deriued to his poſteritie, ſo is his ſinne: but death reigneth ouer vs verily and indeed, not by imputation, or potentially onely: The firſt part is proued by the Apoſtles wordes: By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne: Rom. 5. 12. they entred therefore both after the ſame maner. The ſecond part experience maketh good: for we ſee that children are ſubiect to die, and are taken away by death: Ergo, Adams ſinne really and indeed is transfuſed to his poſteritie. This then is the firſt part of originall ſinne, reatus culpæ, & obligatio ad pœnam: whereby we are made guiltie of the ſinne of Adam, and the puniſhment.

The other part is, beſide this reall communicating vnto vs, the ſinne of our parents, a general deprauation and corruption of the whole nature of man, both in his ſoule, and in his bodie: in the ſoule there is the blindneſſe of the minde, the loſſe of freewill, the vnrulineſſe of the affection, the proneneſſe to vice: in the bodie, the concupiſcence and rebellion of the fleſh. 12. Error.

And here concerning this part of originall ſinne, we affirme and maintaine two points againſt the Ieſuite: firſt he ſaith that originall ſinne is no poſitiue qualitie, or any inherent euill diſpoſition of nature: but whatſoeuer is euill in vs, it doth ſpring onely, Ex carentia iuſtitiæ originalis, non ex inſita aliqua qualitate, from the loſſe or want of originall iuſtice, not from anie inherent qualitie. Contra. But the contrarie may be ſhewed out of S. Paul, who calleth this naturall euill, peccatum inhabitans, Rom. 7. 20. & corpus mortis, a bodie of death, or ſin, verſ. 24. but how could it Bellarm. cap. 15.

haue a being or dwelling, and be as a bodie, a maſſe or lumpe of ſinne, if it were not an inherent qualitie,but a priuation or defect onely? So Auguſtine ſaith : Quod in membris corporis huius inobedienter mouetur,totumq; animum in ſe deiectum conatur attrahere,&c.hoc eſt malum peccati;in quo naſcitur omnis homo: That which is in the members of our bodie diſorderly moued or ſtirred, and laboureth to captiuate the minde vnto it,this is that euill of ſinne,in the which euery man is borne: *contr.Pelag.*2.4. This ſinne which hee ſpeaketh of, moueth, and is moued : wherefore it is ſomewhat that hath a being, and is capable of motion; and for this cauſe not a priuation onely, or a defect.

Secondly,the Ieſuite defineth originall ſinne : Habitualem auerſionem à Deo: An habituall forſaking,or turning aſide from God,*cap.*19. as though it were onely in habite, nothing in act, and did but giue a promptnes or inclination to euill onely.

Contra. Although we doe admit the diſtinction of originall and actuall ſinnes : for theſe are by vs done and committed, the other come into the world with vs : yet this originall and natiue ſinne is neuer idle in vs but alwaies working,and ſheweth it ſelfe euen in infants : This Saint Paul calleth,the law of his members rebelling againſt the law of his minde,Rom.7.23. Rebellion of nature is an actuall thing,but this is the fruite of originall ſinne. Auguſtine alſo ſaith,Concupiſcentia lex peccati cum paruulis naſcitur: This concupiſcence, which is the law of ſinne,is euen borne with children : *cont.Pelag.*2.4. And this rebellion of nature doth bewray it ſelfe in children, by thoſe vnreaſonable motions,and ſtirrings which are ſeene in them : Qui non ratione, ſed dolore interdum cohibentur: Which are not ſtayed by reaſon,but ſometime with paine and griefe,as Auguſtine ſaith: and therefore he thinketh that Chriſt in his infancie,was voyd of them:*cont.Pelag.lib.*2.*cap.*29.

*Concil.Arauſican.*2.*can.*1. Si quis per offenſam praeuaricationis Adami, non totum ſecundum corpus & animam dicit hominem in deterius commutatum,&c.anathema ſit : If any man ſay,that by the offence of the tranſgreſſion of Adam,man is not both in bodie and ſoule chaunged to the worſe, let him be accurſed. The nature of man therefore by ſinne is actually corrupted, it is not potentially, or in habite onely : for there is, actus primus,& ſecundus,the firſt act, and the ſecond : the firſt is inward : and ſo we ſay that man is inwardly by originall ſinne actually corrupted, ſinne being yet as in the roote,or ſeede. The ſecond act is externall, when this bitter roote of ſinne within bringeth forth euill fruite in the life.

*Decret.par.*2.*cauſ.*33.*diſt.*3.*c.*25.This Canon ſheweth,that originall ſinne is not onely habitual but actuall: firſt it ſaith, Iniquitas eſt habitudo mentis iniuſtæ: Iniquitie is the habite of an vnrighteous minde. Againe,Peccatum eſt opus iniquitatis;iniquitas autem operatrix culpæ, aut delicti: Sinne is the worke of iniquitie; iniquitie is the worker of the guilt or of the ſinne. Thus then originall ſinne,which is here called iniquitie,is not onely in habite but in act.

And that originall ſinne is not onely a priuation of originall iuſtice, but a reall deprauation of our nature, not priuatiue onely but poſitiue, many of the learned popiſh writers doe affirme: as Henricus *quodlib.*2.*qu.*11. Gregor.Arimin.in 2.*diſt.*3.*qu.*1. *Ioann.Driedo.*1.lib.de.grat. & liber.arbitrio.

Likewiſe,*Hyeronim.Hangeſt.c.*3.& 13.Ex Adæ delicto,&c.ſecuta eſt plaga atque iuſtitiæ originalis ablatio,& originalis culpæ incurſus: The plague or wound that followed of Adams ſinne, is the ablation of originall iuſtice,and the inuaſion of originall ſinne. Originall ſinne then is ſomewhat elſe beſide the priuation of originall iuſtice.

But among the reſt the Maſter of the Sentences is moſt reſolute in this point : *lib.*2.*diſt.*30.f. Originale peccatum culpa eſt: Originall ſinne is a fault. *g. Fomes peccati, lex membrorum,languor naturæ, ſiue tyrannus,&c.*The nouriſhment of ſinne,the law of the members, the diſeaſe of nature, a very tyrant. All this ſheweth more then a priuation onely. *Diſtinct.*35. l. Aliquid ponit,&c. He ſheweth that originall ſinne is poſitiue,and not a priuation onely. Thus the truth wanteth not the teſtimonie of the aduerſaries thereof.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE BEGINNING of originall ſinne, whether it be deriued from Adam or Eue.

The Papiſts.

15.Error. THe Ieſuite thinketh that originall ſinne is onely deriued from Adam: his beſt and onely reaſon is grounded vpon S.Pauls words : By one man ſinne entred into the world, Rom.5.12. And, As in Adam all dye, ſo in Chriſt are all made aliue,1.Cor.15.22.Ergo,the propagation of ſinne is onely from Adam: Bellar.cap.13.*lib.*4.de ſtat.peccat.

Anſw. Firſt,the word,that the Apoſtle vſeth,ἄνθρωπος, homo, both in the Latine and Greeke indifferently ſignifieth a man,or a woman. Secondly, ſinne is ſaid to haue entred by one man,that is,by Adam,becauſe the man is the chiefeſt inſtrument of generation : as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Corinth.

rinth.11.14.The man is not of the woman,but the woman of the man. And therefore in the lawe the males only were circumciſed, becauſe the beginning of the carnall generation,was from them. Thirdly,in reſpect of Adams perſon,who was the more worthie and excellent : and although in diuers reſpects the womans ſinne was not inferiour to his, yet becauſe the tranſgreſſion was not perfected nor conſummate but by the conſent of Adam, it is chiefly imputed to him. Fourthly, if Adam alone brought in ſin,the Scripture ſhould be contrary,that ſaith, *the woman was in the tranſgreſſion,*1.Timoth.2.14. Fiftly,Auguſtine alſo giueth another anſwere : The ſinne came by two, and the Apoſtle ſaith,it entred by one : becauſe they two now made but one : *They two ſhall be one fleſh,*Geneſ.2.24. Laſtly,the Maſter of Sentences giueth theſe reaſons why ſinne is ſaid to enter by one,and yet both ſinned : Quia per mulierem intrauerit de viro factam: Becauſe it entred by the woman made of man : Or, becauſe if man had not ſinned,humane kinde had bin corrupted,*lib.*2. *diſtinct.*22.g.

Articcul.2. cont.Pelag.

The Proteſtants.

THough wee graunt that Adam was the chiefeſt in ſome reſpects, though not the firſt in the tranſgreſſion,yet was he not alone: his ſinne indeede was greater than the womans,for theſe cauſes : Firſt,he was ſtronger than the woman, and more able to reſiſt the tentation. Secondly, the woman encountred with a ſtronger enemie, for ſhe was ſeduced by the Serpent, in whom the diuell ſpake,Gen.3.13.but Adam obeyed only the voyce of his wife,verſ.17. Thirdly, becauſe the commandement was giuen by the Lord to the man,Gen.2.16.and by the man to his wife: wherefore the mans offence ſeemeth the greater in tranſgreſſing the commaundement : yet although the man were the chiefe tranſgreſſor, as by theſe and other circumſtances may appeare : yet they were both authors and beginners of originall ſinne.

*Argum.*1. As ſinne entred into Paradiſe,ſo is it entred into the world : for it is the ſame ſinne which was in our firſt parents,and is in vs,in them actually,in vs originally : and the ſame ſinne muſt haue the ſame beginning : but ſinne entred into Paradiſe both by the man and woman: nay the woman was deceiued,and was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, 1.Timot.2.14. *Ergo,*by them both ſin came vpon vs.

*Argum.*2. By whom death entred into the world,by them alſo ſinne entred : but death entred both by the man and woman : for being guiltie of one ſinne,they receiued one common puniſhment,Duſt thou art,and to duſt ſhalt thou returne. Eccleſiaſticus alſo ſaith (which is good ſcripture againſt our aduerſaries) Through the woman we all dye, chap.25.verſ.26. Yea,ſaith the Ieſuite,*per illam,*through her, becauſe ſhe gaue occaſion of the tranſgreſſion,but not *in illa,*in her,as wee are ſaid to dye in Adam. Anſ. Saint Paul vſeth both theſe phraſes,to dye in *Adam,*or death came in by or through *Adam,*Rom.5.verſ.12.16.Therefore there is no ſuch difference in the wordes : ſo whether we ſay,we dye in or by the woman,all is one matter.

Auguſtine laſtly,anſwering an obiection of the Pelagians,whether ſinne entred by one or two, doubteth not to ſay, Ecce factum eſt tibi ſatis,per duos homines pertranſyſſe peccatum: Behold, this may ſatisfie you,that ſinne entred by two,the man and the woman.

*Synod. Moguntin.cap.*5.Primorum hominum peccatum propagatione in omnes homines tranſire, ac ſecum pœnam ſuam trahere,&c. That the ſinne of the firſt men (not of the firſt man, as of one)is deriued by propagation vnto al men,and draweth the puniſhment with it,&c.*Ergo,*the ſinne ſpringeth from both our firſt parents.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Adam & Eua primi illi vt generis,ita erroris parentes: Adam and *Eue,*the firſt parents as of our generatiō,ſo of our error.This is agreeable to the law of nature: *Cod.lib.*3.*tit.*32. *leg.*7.*Philipp.Partus ſequitur matrem,&c.*The birth followeth the mother : as if a free man haue a childe by a bondwoman,the childe alſo ſhall be bound and not free. *Sext.decret.lib.*5.*tit.*2.*c.*15. Bonifac. Hæreticorum filij puniuntur ſecundum tam matris quam patris lineam: The ſonnes of heretikes are puniſhed as well after the line of generation by the mother,as by the father.

Laſtly,the Maſter of Sentences thinketh,that Eua her ſinne was the greater, *lib.*2.*diſt.*22. and that Adam was not ſeduced : then it will follow,that the womans ſinne being the greater cannot be excluded,and the mans ſinne,which was the leſſe,to be taken onely to giue beginning to originall ſinne.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE SINNE OF Adam or Eue were the greater in the tranſgreſſion.

That Adams ſinne was greater.

THis queſtion is not ſo much controuerted betweene the Papiſts and Proteſtants, as between the ancient fathers of the Church, who haue written diuerſly of this matter. Saint Ambroſe doth amplifie Adams ſinne ; Saint Chryſoſtome and Saint Auguſtine doe ſeeme to exaggerate the tranſgreſſion of the woman : I will propound the arguments on both ſides, and then briefly determine of the truth. Firſt, Saint Ambroſe thus reaſoneth againſt Adams ſin: Inſtitut.virgin.c.4.

1 Illam decepit ſuperior creatura,&c. A ſuperiour creature deceiued the woman, that is, an euill Angell: but a woman deceiued Adam: he had a weaker tempter.

2 If Adam could not keepe the commaundement, which hee heard of God, how ſhould the woman that heard it not?

3 The man is rebuked, the woman but asked the queſtion.

4 The woman firſt confeſſed her fault, Geneſ.3.verſ.13.The Serpent beguiled me.

5 The woman accuſeth the Serpent, the man more vnkindly accuſeth the woman.

6 The woman in her puniſhment findeth mercie: Ex remuneratione pœnam inuenit: She findeth a reward in her puniſhment: though ſhe was to bring forth in ſorrow, yet by her fruite ſhe ſhall be deliuered.

But theſe reaſons may thus eaſily be anſwered: Firſt, Ambroſe himſelfe confeſſeth, that homo ſerpentis perſuaſione deceptus: That man was deceiued by the perſwaſion of the Serpent, *ſerm.7.in Pſal.*119. So then the diuell tempted the woman, and the diuell by the woman tempted Adam: Adams then was the ſtronger tentation.

2 The woman knew as well as the man, that they were not to eate of the forbidden tree, ver.3. God hath ſaid, Ye ſhall not eate of it,&c.

3 The woman is both rebuked and firſt puniſhed.

4 The woman confeſſeth her fault, no otherwiſe than Adam did, by poſting it off to another.

5 The man ſpake but the truth, that the woman gaue him to eate, as the woman ſaith ſhe was beguiled of the Serpent.

6 The benefit of the promiſe concerning the womans ſeede redoundeth to the man, as well as to the woman: and the promiſe is first pronounced before her puniſhment is inflicted.

THAT THE SINNE OF THE WOMAN WAS IN it ſelfe not inferiour to Adams tranſgreſſion, but rather greater.

First, the Maſter of the Sentences thus reaſoneth: Plus videtur peccaſſe mulier,&c. The woman ſeemeth to haue ſinned more, becauſe ſhe preſumptuouſly deſired the diuine equalitie, and beleeued it would come to paſſe: but Adam did not ſo beleeue, being onely entiſed by his wife, &c. diſtinct.22.lib.2.

2 Mulier plus peccauit, quia grauius punita: The woman offended more, becauſe ſhe was puniſhed more: vpon the man is inflicted labour and ſorrow; vpon the woman trauaile and paine in labour: Thom.Aquin.22.qu.163.artic.4.

3 Mulier in ſe, proximum & Deum peccauit; vir in ſe tantum & Deum: The woman ſinned againſt her ſelfe, againſt God, againſt her husband: the man onely againſt God and himſelfe: de Geneſ.lib.11.c.42. Auguſtin.

4 Saint Ambroſe alſo vſeth this reaſon: Mulier ſciens prudenſq; peccauit, &c. The woman ſinned willingly, and wittingly, in that after ſhe knew ſhe had ſinned, ſhe drew alſo her husband into error, de Paradiſ.cap.6.

5 As their ſinnes were in degree and order, ſo was the puniſhment: firſt the Serpent is curſed, as being the firſt ſeducer: next the woman is chaſtiſed, as being in the ſecond degree of offence: the man is reſerued to the laſt and leaſt puniſhment.

6 But the beſt reaſon of all is grounded vpon S.Pauls words: Adam was not deceiued, but the woman was deceiued, and was found in the tranſgreſſion, 1.Timoth.2.14. Whereupon Chryſoſtome giueth this note: Heua amplius deliquerat, &c. Eue ſinned the more, in ſo much that Adams ſinne compared with it is not counted tranſgreſſion, Hom.31.ad Rom. And S. Ambroſe thus enforceth it: Viro mulier, non mulieri vir author erroris: The woman to the man, not the man to the woman is author of error. The concluſion of the queſtion is this, that Adams ſinne in reſpect of the dignitie and excellencie of his perſon was the greater: as Auguſtine ſaith, Adam plus peccauit, quia omni bono abundauit: Adam ſinned more, becauſe he had more excellent graces and better ſtrength to reſiſt: But in regard of the qualitie of the ſinne in it ſelfe it is euident, that the ſinne of the woman was tempered with a greater meaſure both of infidelitie and ambition, than Adams was. I end this matter with that concluſion of Auguſtine, in the like caſe: that as one being fallen into a pit, thus anſwered him, that asked, how hee fell in: Cogita quæſo quomodo hinc me liberes, non quomodo huc ceciderim quæras: Bethinke your ſelfe how you may deliuer me hence, aske not how I came hither. So it is needleſſe for vs to be inquiſitiue of the beginning, entrance, qualitie and degree of the ſinne of our parents: but let vs rather ſeeke and labour by what meanes to be deliuered from it.

De ver.& falſ. pœnit.c.14.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ORIGINALL ſinne remaine after Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

B*ellarmine* in flat words denieth, that the corruption of nature, or concupiſcence, which remaineth in the regenerate after Baptiſme, is originall ſinne, nor yet any ſinne of it ſelfe, nor yet doth make them guiltie, in whom it is found: Bellarm.lib.5.de ſtat.peccat.cap.7. The like alſo the Rhemiſts affirme, that concupiſcence remaining after Baptiſme, is not properly a ſinne, nor forbidden by commaundement: it is called ſinne, becauſe it is the matter, effect, and occaſion of ſin, Rhemiſt.Rom.6.ſect.6. 16.Error.

*Argum.*1. Saint Iames ſaith, That luſt when it hath conceiued, bringeth forth ſinne, and ſinne when it is finiſhed, bringeth forth death. The Apoſtle here calleth not luſt or concupiſcence ſinne, but ſaith it bringeth forth ſinne: Sic Bellarm.cap.7.Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

*Anſw.*1. The argument followeth not, concupiſcence bringeth forth ſinne: Ergo, it is no ſinne: nay, it ſhall the rather be ſinne, as one Serpent bringeth forth another: ſo both the mother and daughter are ſinne.

2 We may better conclude out of this place, that concupiſcence is ſinne: A good tree (ſaith our Sauiour) bringeth forth good fruit, and an euill tree, euill fruite, Matth.7.17. but concupiſcence bringeth forth euill fruit. Euery man is tempted (ſaith the Apoſtle) when he is drawne away of his concupiſcence, &c. Ergo concupiſcence is an euill tree.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul ſaith, Now it is no more I that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me: for I know that in me, that is my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing, Rom.7.17.18. Hence it is proued, firſt that this ſin, which Saint Paul ſaith, is not his, is not imputed to the Apoſtle: And againe, it is in his fleſh, therefore no ſinne, for the fleſh properly is not capable of ſinne, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. By the fleſh and the minde, Saint Paul doth not here vnderſtand the two parts, whereof man naturally conſiſteth, namely, the bodie and the ſoule: but he ſpeaketh of a man new regenerate: by the fleſh vnderſtanding whatſoeuer is carnall, either in the ſoule or bodie: by the minde or ſpirit whatſoeuer is ſpirituall and regenerate. And therefore as he is regenerate, he ſaith, the ſin in him is not imputed: but yet it is ſinne ſtill.

Bellarm. obiecteth: 1. Though ſometime the fleſh be taken for the whole man, yet is it not ſo here: for that which he nameth fleſh, he calleth the bodie of death, verſ.24. but by the mortall bodie, both the parts of man cannot be vnderſtood: for the ſoule is not mortall.

Contra. By death here the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth not the mortalitie of the bodie, but that death which commeth by ſinne both to the bodie and ſoule: as the Prophet ſaith, That ſoule that ſinneth, ſhall die, Ezech.18.16. There is then a death of the ſoule, as there is of the bodie: the bodie then of death, is nothing elſe but the bodie, that is, the whole lumpe and maſſe of ſin, Rom.6.6. which bringeth death both to bodie and ſoule.

*Bellarm.*2. Saint Paul here ſpeaketh of the inner man, verſ.22. but that is the ſoule of man; as it is taken, 2.Cor.4.16. Though our outward man periſh, yet our inward man is renewed daily: the outward man then is the bodie.

Contra. By the inward man in this place, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the regenerate part through the whole man, both in bodie and ſoule: which in other places he calleth the new man, and the outward man is the old man. And as here he ſaith, our outward man periſheth: ſo elſewhere, our old man is crucified with him, Rom.6.6. And by the old man, he vnderſtandeth the workes of the fleſh, not only outward, as, Lye not one to another, ſeeing you haue put off the old man, Coloſſ.3.9. but inward: Caſt off the old man, and be renewed in the ſpirit of your minde. Epheſ.4.23.

*Bellarm.*3. Againe, S.Paul doth in very direct words diſtinguiſh betweene the minde and the fleſh: In my minde I ſerue the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſinne, verſ.25. By the minde, vnderſtanding the ſoule of man: by the fleſh, the bodie, Bellarm.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh indeede of a minde regenerate, not ſetting it againſt an vnregenerate bodie: for if Saint Pauls minde were regenerate, ſo alſo his bodie in ſome ſort muſt be partaker of the ſame regeneration: for he himſelfe ſaith, Glorifie God in your bodies, and in your ſpirits, for they are the Lords, 1.Cor.6.20. The regenerate are renewed both in bodie and ſoule, and in them both doe glorifie God: therefore the fleſh cannot be here taken for the bodie, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of himſelfe, who no doubt was mortified in his bodie, and did beate it downe, 1.Corin.9. Neither can the minde ſimplie ſignifie the whole, or all the regenerate part: for as there is a regenerate mind; Be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind. Epheſ.4.24. ſo there is a fleſhly mind, Coloſſ.2.18. Wherfore the Apoſtle by the mind muſt either vnderſtand the whole regenerate part, which is to the vnregenerate, as the ſoule to the bodie, and therefore the regenerate man is called the ſpirituall man, 1.Corinth.2.15. Or elſe by the minde regenerate which is the principall part of regeneration, incluſiuely the whole regeneration is inſinuated, a part figuratiuely being taken for the whole.

Hauing now anſwered the Ieſuites obiections, we will ſet downe ſome of our reaſons, why this place is to be vnderſtood, as we ſayd, not of the two natural parts of man, the bodie, and the ſoule: but that by the fleſh the Apoſtle meaneth the whole vnregenerate part: by the minde or ſpirit, the part regenerate.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, The euill I would not, that doe I, verſ.21. I ſerue in my fleſh the law of ſin, verſ.25. And againe, I ſee a law in my members leading me captiue to ſinne, verſ.23. Theſe ſpeeches are not vttered of the regenerate part: if of the vnregenerate, which muſt needes be graunted, yet not of the bodie or fleſh by it ſelfe conſidered without the ſoule: for the fleſh of it ſelfe is a dead thing; how can the Apoſtle ſerue in his fleſh, or doe any thing in his fleſh, without the operation of the ſoule? And therefore by the fleſh muſt wee vnderſtand the part vnregenerate both in bodie and ſoule.

*Argum.*2. The fleſh of it ſelfe without the ſoule is no fit place for ſinne: but in the fleſh ſinne dwelleth, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Ergo, fleſh is not here to be conſidered without the ſoule.

*Argum.*3. A perfect man conſiſteth of bodie and ſoule, but that which is regenerate is called the inner man: Ergo, regeneration is both in bodie and ſoule.

*Argum.*4. The fleſh is the ſame, which Saint Paul calleth the bodie of death, verſ.24. The bodie of death is all one with the bodie of ſinne, Rom.6.6. The bodie of ſinne, or ſinfull bodie of the fleſh, is the whole corruption of man both in bodie and ſoule, ſo much as is put off by the ſpirituall circumciſion of Chriſt, Coloſſ.2.11. Ergo, the fleſh in this place is the corrupt and vnregenerate part of the whole man.

*Argum.*5. The Apoſtle calleth concupiſcence the law of his members, verſ.23. what members he meaneth, he ſheweth elſewhere: Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleannes, inordinate affection, Coloſſ.3.5. but theſe are not members of the bodie, but of the whole corrupt maſſe of bodie and ſoule in man: Ergo. Thus much for our anſwere to Bellarmines ſecond argument.

*Argum.*3. The Apoſtle ſaith, There is no condemnation to them, that are in Chriſt: But if concupiſcence remaining in thoſe that are iuſtified were ſinne, then there ſhould be ſome matter of condemnation ſtill in them, contrarie to the Apoſtle, *Bellarm.lib.*5.*cap.*7.

Anſw. There is no condemnation either for concupiſcence, or any other ſinne, becauſe though in it ſelfe it be worthie of damnation, yet the guilt thereof is taken away in Chriſt.

Bellarm. The guilt of ſinne cannot be ſeparated from the thing, that in it ſelfe deſerueth condemnation: neither can ſin be forgiuen, as long as the foundation thereof remaineth: Ezech.18. verſ.21. Forgiuenes is remitted, if the wicked will turne away from his iniquitie. If iniquitie ſtill remaine, there is then no forgiuenes, ibid.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle himſelfe had ſaid in the next wordes before, Rom.7.25. In my minde I ſerue the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſinne: He is not aſhamed to confeſſe, that ſinne remained in his members, yet was he one of thoſe, that are in Chriſt.

2. Saint Iohn ſaith, 1.Epiſt.1.9. If we ſay wee haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues: if wee acknowledge our ſinnes, he is faithfull to forgiue them, &c. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that to haue ſinne, and to haue forgiuenes of ſinne, may both ſtand together: wherefore it is falſe which hee ſo boldly affirmeth, that the guilt of ſinne cannot be ſeparated from the ſinne it ſelfe: the guilt is taken away by forgiuenes in Chriſt, and yet after forgiuenes obtained, hee is a lyar, that ſaith he hath no ſinne.

3. The turning from iniquitie, which Ezechiel ſpeaketh of, is by repentance, and by ceaſing to commit the act of ſinne: the ſtaine or blot of ſinne is one thing, the act and worke of ſin another: though ſin raigne not in vs, that we obey the luſts thereof, Rom.6.12. yet there is ſinne ſtill dwelling in vs, Rom.7.20. ſo long as we haue our habitation in theſe houſes of clay.

4. If there remaine then in the regenerate no ſinne at all; how farre are they from the opinion of the Pelagian heretikes, Anabaptiſts, Libertines, which hold that a man may attaine in this life to a ſtate of perfection? And if the regenerate haue no ſinne, what neede they ſay that petition in the Lords prayer; Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes? But I thinke they will be aſhamed of ſo great impudencie: as Auguſtine ſaith, Neſcio vtrum quiſpiam vel hæretica prauitate reperiri poſſit, &c. I thinke no man can be found, though of a moſt hereticall proud ſpirit, which will (I ſay) not openly profeſſe, but thinke ſecretly within himſelfe, that he neede not ſay this petition, *Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes, &c. cont. Creſcon. lib.*2.*c.*28.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence, and the corrupt inclination of nature, euen in the children of God, is verily and properly ſinne, and in it ſelfe worthie of damnation, but that both it, and all other ſinnes, are remitted in Chriſt to the faithfull, and ſo not imputed: thus it is prooued by the word of God.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul calleth it ſinne dwelling in him, Rom.7.verſ.17.20. Ergo, it is ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, it is a ſinne improperly ſo called, not becauſe it is a ſinne indeede, but either the cauſe or effect of ſinne: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that this ſinne dwelleth in his fleſh: but the fleſh is not the ſeate or place of ſinne: *Bellarm.lib.*5.*cap.*10.*reſponſ.ad obiect.*1.

*Contra.*1. Let it be noted, that the Apoſtle giuing concupiſcence, at the leaſt ten ſeuerall times the name of ſinne in this one chapter, yet ſpeaketh improperly, and muſt now learne of Bellarmine to ſpeake. 2. By the fleſh Saint Paul, as before we ſhewed at large, vnderſtandeth not the bodie, but the whole part of man not renewed as well of the ſoule, as the bodie: therefore his reaſon for the place of ſinne is nothing. 3. But that concupiſcence hath the very proper nature of ſinne, it may appeare further by Saint Pauls deſcription: Firſt, he denieth it to be good, verſ.18. Secondly, he ſaith it is euill, verſ.19. Thirdly, hee ſaith he hateth it, verſ.15. Fourthly, it maketh him to crie out, O wretched man that I am,&c. verſ.24. It bringeth wretchednes, which is the fruite of ſinne: Ergo, it is ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that it is an euill, but no ſinne.

Contra. Well then, it is an euill by the Ieſuites confeſſion, and Saint Paul ſaith it is ſinne: Ergo, it is an euill that is ſinne. 2. What will he anſwere to this place: I knew not ſinne but by the law: for I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt, verſ.7. Luſt and concupiſcence is forbidden by the law: Ergo, it is verily and properly a ſinne.

Bellarmine before diſtinguiſhed of ſinne, but that not ſeruing his turne here, for he dare not denie but that the tranſgreſſion of the law is ſinne: he hunteth about for another diſtinction: Concupiſcence forbidden by the law (thou ſhalt not couet) is not originall, but actuall concupiſcence: and therefore it is not pertinent to the matter: for the one wee confeſſe to be ſinne, but not the other.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Paul ſaith, that ſinne tooke occaſion by the law to work all manner of concupiſcence, verſ.8. Ergo, all concupiſcence, originall or actuall, is forbidden by the law. Secondly, Sinne wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence: By ſinne, ſaith the Ieſuite, he vnderſtandeth original concupiſcence: the Apoſtle then calleth the working concupiſcence ſinne, the concupiſcence wrought he ſetteth downe by the name of concupiſcence ſtill: ſo then we reaſon thus: That is ſin properly, which is rather ſinne, than that which no man doubteth to be ſinne: but concupiſcence wrought in vs by our aduerſaries owne confeſſion is ſinne: yet the working concupiſcence is rather ſinne, becauſe the Apoſtle calleth it ſinne, and not the other: Ergo, it is properly ſinne. Thirdly, Bellarmine ſaith, that Voluntarius actus concupiſcendi prohibitus eſt lege: That is, the voluntarie act of concupiſcence which is forbidden by the lawe: ſo that inuoluntarie motions, in his iudgement, are not againſt the law. But Saint Paul ſheweth the contrarie: If I doe that which I would not, I conſent to the law, that it is good, verſ.16. His inuoluntarie motions were againſt the law: for in obeying them againſt his will, he did in iudgement and conſent approue the law, though in practiſe he went againſt it. Fourthly, if originall concupiſcence be euill, as the Ieſuite confeſſeth, then muſt it needes be contrarie to the law, which is good, and ſo forbidden by the law: or elſe the law ſhall not be a perfect rule of righteouſnes, and goodnes.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle calleth the law of his members a law rebelling againſt the law of his minde: but whatſoeuer rebelleth, or is contrarie to the law, is ſinne.

Bellarm. 1. Euery thing that rebelleth, or is contrarie to the law, is not ſinne: for man, when hee ſinneth, reſiſteth the lawe; and yet man is not ſinne. And againe, in that the Apoſtle calleth it a law, he ſheweth that it is not properly ſinne, but a law or rule rather of ſinning: *reſponſ. ad obiect.*6.

Contra. 1. The Ieſuites inſtance is very ridiculous, and bewrayeth the nakednes of his cauſe, which he is faine to bolſter out with ſuch ſillie anſweres: Man reſiſting the law is not ſinne it ſelfe, yet is he a ſinner: the queſtion is of that, which formally is contrarie to the law. 2. That euery tranſgreſſion of the law is ſinne wee ſhew it vs: Sinne onely deſerueth the eternall curſe of God: for the proper wages & ſtipend of ſin is death, Rom.6.23. and nothing is found worthie of death but ſinne: but euery tranſgreſſion of the lawe, falleth vnder Gods curſe, Galath.3.10. Ergo, it is ſinne. 3. Concupiſcence is the law of ſinne, therefore it is not ſinne. Anſ. Yea, but by this reaſon it is worſe than ſinne: As the law of God commaunding things holie, iuſt, and good, is it ſelfe much more holie, righteous, and good, Rom.7.11. ſo the law of ſinne preſcribing that which is euill, vniuſt, wicked, is it ſelfe more vniuſt, euill, and wicked. If then concupiſcence be not ſinne, and yet by your argument is worſe than ſinne, what haue you gained?

*Argum.*3. Verſe 18. To will is preſent with me, but I finde no meanes to performe that which is good: but he that performeth not that which is good, ſinneth. Againe, verſe 24. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer me, from this bodie of death? that which maketh a man wretched, and bringeth death, is ſinne: Ergo, concupiſcence working theſe things, is ſinne.

*Bellarm.*1. Wretchednes in Scripture is attributed to puniſhment rather then to the fault.

2. If a man performe not that good, which he cannot do, he is leſſe good, but not euill: as not to couet in the fleſh, is not in mans power.

3. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of euerlaſting death, but of the miſerie and mortalitie of the bodie: *Bellarm.c.*10.reſp.ad 7.& 8.obiect.

*Contra.*1. Wretchedneſſe and miſerie is the puniſhment it ſelfe, but iſſuing out from ſinne: for 1. as the forgiueneſſe of ſinne maketh happie, Pſal.32.1. ſo ſinne maketh wretched. 2. And that which the Apoſtle would be deliuered from, made him wretched: but from Concupiſcence, which he calleth the bodie of death, he deſireth to be deliuered: Ergo his concupiſcence made him wretched, and ſo conſequently is properly ſinne.

2. It 1. is not in a mans power to do any good thing, but all our power is of God, it would follow then vpon this anſwere, that it is no ſinne to leaue any good thing vndone: and further it is euident, that it is ſinne to leaue that vndone, which is not in our power: as Iohn 16.9. The ſpirit ſhall reproue the world of ſinne, becauſe they beleeue not in me: now to beleeue is not in mans power, but it is the worke of God, Iohn 6.29.

3. S. Paul 1. ſpeaketh directly of condemnation, which is the ſecond death, Rom.8.1. There is no condemnation to thoſe, which are in Chriſt. 2. Though he ſhould ſpeake onely of outward miſerie and mortalitie, they are the fruites of ſinne, Rom.5.12. Death came in by ſinne, therefore concupiſcence bringing death is ſinne.

*Argum.*4. Rom.8.7. The wiſedome of the fleſh is enmitie againſt God: Geneſ.6.5. The imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are euill continually: Ergo, concupiſcence is ſinne.

Bellarm. 1. Theſe places are vnderſtood of actuall, not originall ſinne. 2. And the Scripture thus deſcribeth the wicked, in whom concupiſcence remaineth and raigneth, *reſp.ad obiect.*9.

Contra. Firſt, theſe places cannot be otherwiſe vnderſtood, then of originall ſinne. 1. The Apoſtle oppoſeth the wiſedome of the fleſh to the wiſedome of the ſpirite, which he ſaith is life and peace. verſ.6. but the wiſedome of the ſpirite is the inward ſanctifying of the ſoule, and the renewing of the ſpirite, Epheſ.4.23. Ergo, the wiſedome of the fleſh, is the inward ſecret corruption of the heart. 2. It is the ſame, which verſ.2. he calleth the law of ſinne and death: as the wiſedome of the ſpirite is there called the law of the ſpirite; but the law of ſinne is concupiſcence, Rom.7. verſ.23. 3. Moſes alſo ſpeaketh of originall corruption, ſaying 1. the imagination of the thoughts of the heart: but there is no actuall ſinne before the thoughts. 2. And Geneſ.8.21. the thoughts of mans heart are euill from his youth: but the infancie is no fitte age for actuall ſinne. 3. Our Sauiour alſo expoundeth this place, Matth.15.19. Out of the heart come euil thoughts: the fountaine of euill thoughts is originall ſinne.

Secondly, 1. Moſes as he ſpeaketh in this place eſpecially of the inhabitants of the old world: ſo Geneſ.8.21. he deſcribeth the naturall ſtate of all men in generall; that their thoughts are euill. 2. S. Paul alſo ſheweth this to be the condition euen of the children of God, that they are not ſufficient to thinke any thing of themſelues which is good. 2.Cor.3.5. So that the ſame corrupt inclination remaineth euen in the regenerate, yet bridled and gouerned by grace. 3. That euen in the righteous and regenerate the ſinne of concupiſcence remayneth: theſe places following do manifeſtly ſhew.

*Argum.*5. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, 1. Create in me a new heart, Pſal.51. S. Paul ſaith, Epheſ.4. verſ.23. 2. Be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind, Coloſſ.3. 3. Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleanneſſe, &c. Ergo, the regenerate had neede ſtill to be renewed, and cleanſed from the old man: Ergo, the ſinne of concupiſcence ſtill remaineth in the regenerate. 4. 1.Iohn.1.9. If we ſay that we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues: the Apoſtle ſaith, If we ſay that we haue, &c. ſhewing, that ſinne that continually remaineth, which is originall ſinne: for other ſinnes are not alwaies in the regenerate, argum.Luther.Caluin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, Firſt, to the 1. and 4. places, that they muſt be vnderſtood of actuall ſinnes, which the regenerate are dayly ſubiect vnto. 2. Secondly, there are ſome reliques of originall ſin in the regenerate, in reſpect whereof, they had neede dayly to be renewed. 3. Thirdly, the regenerate muſt mortifie their earthly members, that they giue not conſent thereunto, and fall into fornication, vncleanneſſe: which is all one with that, which the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, that ſinne ſhould not raigne in their mortall bodie, Rom.6.12. *Bellarm.c.*11.*lib.*5.*reſponſ.ad loc.*2. 8.9.12.

Contr. Firſt, it is euident, that the Prophet Dauid ſpeaketh of originall ſinne. 1. He ſaid before, verſe 5. In ſinne hath my mother conceaued me: from the which he deſireth to be purged, verſ.7. 2. The creation of the heart anew is expounded by S. Paul to be the putting off of the old man, and putting on the new, which after God is created in righteouſneſſe, Epheſ.4.24. Now the Image of God, which the Prophet prayeth to be created in him, is defaced and deformed by originall concupiſcence: therefore againſt that he directeth his prayer. 2. Thoſe reliques of ſinne in the regenerate, are eyther belonging to actuall or originall ſinne; but in the ſpirit of the minde, there can be no actuall ſinne: Ergo, it is originall: and the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, what it is to be renewed, &c. To caſt off the old man which is corrupted through deceiueable luſtes, verſ.22. What is the old man, but the originall deprauation and corruption of nature?

3. If the regenerate muſt mortifie their earthly members, that is their carnall concupiſcence, then is not concupiſcence dead or extinct in them, for then it need not be mortified: and whatſoeuer is to be mortified in vs is euill and ſinfull: that whereto we muſt be dead, is ſinne, Rom.6.11. neither is there feare that the ſinne of concupiſcence ſhould raigne in our mortall bodie, if it be not at all there.

4. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of actuall but of originall ſinnes. 1. He ſaith, If we ſay we haue no ſinne: and afterward verſ.10. If we ſay we haue not ſinned: there he pointeth at that ſinne, which we alwayes haue in vs, which is none other but originall ſinne, in the other place he ſpeaketh of that ſinne which hath been committed, noting actuall ſinnes, wherein the regenerate continue not. 2. He meaneth ſuch ſinnes, wherein a man may be deceiued, and thinke hee hath none: but none of the regenerate are ſo groſſe to thinke they haue no actuall ſinne. 3. He ſpeaketh of all ſinnes, for the which Chriſt is our reconciliation cap.2.1.2. If any man ſinne, &c. but Chriſt dyed, and ſo is our reconciliation by his death; not onely for actuall, but originall ſinne: Ergo. Thus we ſee how friuolous and inſufficient this Diſputers anſwers are.

Cont. Iulian. lib.6. cap.5.

Laſtly, let Auguſtine ſpeake: Omnium malorum reatu caret, qui baptizatur; non omnibus malis: nunquid caret ignorantia malo? He that is baptized is cleared from the guilt of all euils or ſinnes, but not from the euilles themſelues: for ſhall we thinke that he is void of ignorance? Againe hee ſaith: Dimittuntur in baptiſmo omnia peccata, & originalitèr tracta, & ignorantèr vel ſcientèr adiecta: All ſinnes are forgiuen in Baptiſme, both originall, and ſinnes committed ignorantly or wittingly. Originall ſinne then is no otherwiſe taken away in Baptiſme, then other Sinnes are: but the guilt onely of other ſinnes is remitted in Baptiſme, the blot or ſtaine remaineth ſtill: Ergo, originall ſin ceaſeth in reſpect of the guilt onely: for neither it, nor any other ſins ſhall be imputed to thoſe, which are iuſtified in Chriſt: but yet it is a ſin ſtill, as the reſt are. Auguſtine alſo dare call it a ſin: Concupiſcentia peior eſt ignorantia: Concupiſcence is worſe then ignorance: contr. Iulian. lib.6. cap.5. And in another place, Ignorantia in iys, qui intelligere noluerunt, peccatum eſt, in iys qui non potuerunt pœna peccati: Ignorance in them that are able to learne and will not, is ſinne; in thoſe that cannot, a puniſhment of ſinne: Epiſtol.105. If ignorance then be ſin, concupiſcence, which is worſe then ignorance, is much more.

I will adde one other notable ſentence out of this father: Hoc malum quod in nobis remanet, non ſubſtantia, ſed ſubſtantiæ vitium; Dei gratia nos regenerante non eſt imputandum, Dei gratia iuuante frænandum, Dei gratia commorante ſanandum: This euill, which remaineth in vs, being not a ſubſtance, but a vice of or in our ſubſtance or nature, by the grace of God regenerating vs ſhall not be imputed, by the grace of God helping vs is bridled, by the grace of God in the ende crowning or rewarding vs ſhall be healed. Firſt Auguſtine calleth here concupiſcence euen in the regenerate, malum & vitium, a vice and an euill. And what difference, I pray you, betweene vice and ſinne? Vitium, ſaith Bellarmine, eſt nomen habitus mali, peccatum operationis malæ: Vice is the name of an euill habite, ſin the name of the euill action. Vice and ſin then are coſin germanes: and if concupiſcence be a vice or a vicious habite, it is in the next doore to ſin. Againe, Auguſtine ſetteth downe a threefold change of concupiſcence: it is not imputed, it is brideled, in the end it is healed: In the two firſt changes, though it be brideled, though it be not imputed; yet it ceaſeth not to be ſinne: but onely when it is healed, that is cleane taken away, which is not in this life, but when the time of our reward commeth: Ergo, it is ſinne ſtill in the regenerate, yet brideled in them, and not imputed.

Propter hoc paruuli, qui nihil in ſeipſis peccatorum committere potuerunt, adeo in peccatorum remiſſionem veraciter baptizantur, vt in eis regeneratione mundetur, quod generatione traxerunt: For this cauſe children, which haue as yet done no ſinne in themſelues, are truely Baptized for the remiſſion of ſinnes, that it may be purged by regeneration, which they tooke in their birth. THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER ORIGINALL ſinne be hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

17.Error. THe Rhemiſts do not onely deny concupiſcence in the regenerate to be ſinne, but they affirme alſo that the motions of the fleſh in a iuſt man, whereunto the minde conſenteth not, cannot any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit, but make them often more meritorious, for the continuall combate that he hath with them: for it is plaine that the operations of the fleſh and the ſpirit doe not concurre to make one act: Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.7.ſect.10.

*Anſw.*1. The combat betweene the fleſh, cannot make the operations of the ſpirit meritorious: firſt, we cannot merite at all by any good action wrought in vs, becauſe it is not of our ſelues, but wholy of God: Thus I liue, (ſaith the Apoſtle) not I now, but Chriſt liueth in me: Galath. 2.20. Secondly, the reſiſtance of the fleſh, is ſo farre from encreaſing our reward, that it maketh our debt greater: for whoſe is the fleſh? is it not ours? Who ſhall anſwere for that which is euill done in the fleſh? ſhall not we? It is therefore our owne fault, that our fleſh is rebellious, and that we doe not wholy yeeld to the working of the ſpirit.

2. Though the operations of the fleſh concurre not with the ſpirit to make one act: yet the fleſh concurreth, or rather occurreth, and reſiſteth the ſpirit in euery good act: and doth hinder the workes of the ſpirit from perfection, and ſo defile them.

The Proteſtants.

THe luſt or concupiſcence remaining, but not raigning in the regenerate, doth greatly hinder the good proceeding of the ſpirit in them.

*Argum.*1. Concupiſcence kept the Apoſtle from doing that good, which he deſired: That good that I would, doe I not, Rom.7.19. Ergo, it was an hinderance to the working of the ſpirit.

*Argum.*2. If concupiſcence were any way profitable to goodneſſe, it were a thing to be loued, not hated; to be deſired, not wiſhed to be taken away. But S.Paul hateth it: What I hate, that do I, verſ.15. and longeth till he be ridde from it: O wretched man, that I am, who ſhall deliuer me from the bodie of this death? verſ. 24. Ergo, concupiſcence is not good, nor any way helping vnto goodnes.

De Sanct. ſerm.41. Auguſtine thus writeth of theſe ſmaller and leſſe ſinnes: Quibus peccatis licèt occidi animam non credamus, ita tamen eam veluti quibuſdam puſtulis deformem faciunt, vt eam ad amplexum ſponſi ſine grandi confuſione venire non permittant: By the which ſinnes, though the ſoule be not ſlaine, yet the face is deformed, as with pimples, that ſhe dare not without great bluſhing draw neere to embrace her ſpouſe. Let them tell me now, what great glorie is obtained, by this corruption in our members.

Arauſican.Concil.2.cap.2. Si quis ſoli Adæ præuaricationem ſuam non & eius propagini aſſerit nocuiſſe, &c. anathema: If any man ſay that Adams tranſgreſſion onely hurt himſelfe, and not his poſteritie and offſpring, accurſed be he. Originall ſinne then is hurtful to all men that come of Adam: Ergo, it is no helpe or furtherance.

Eſpencæus a graue writer among the Papiſts, alleageth out of S. Cyprian de tentationibus Chriſti, to this effect: Neminem libidinum morſus illæſum euadere: That no man doth eſcape the biting of luſt without hurt: According to that ſaying of Propertius lib. 2. Nec quiſquam ex illo vulnere ſanus abit: No man goeth away whole of that wound: in 2. epiſt. Timoth.cap.2. And out of Auguſtine 4. Hypognoſticorum: In omni homine libido mala eſt, &c. Luſt or concupiſcence is euil in euery man: *in 2. Tim.c.*3. Wherefore original ſin is hurtful to the regenerate. Cauſ.24.qu.3.c.39. There are certaine heretikes rehearſed among the reſt, called Ophitæ, of the ſerpent, whom they did reuerence: ſaying, Ipſum in paradiſum induxiſſe virtutis cognitionem: That the ſerpent brought into Paradiſe the knowledge of vertue: not much vnlike doe the Papiſts commend concupiſcence, which is the ſerpents ſting; ſaying, that it maketh the operations of iuſt men more meritorious.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE PLACE OR ſeate of concupiſcence in the regenerate.

The Papiſts.

18.Error. BEllarmine graunteth, that ſometime fleſh is taken in the Scripture for the whole man corrupted, both in bodie and ſoule: but then it is vnderſtood onely of the wicked, and not of the godly: Bellarm. de ſtat.peccat.lib.5.cap.7. reſponſ. ad argum.2. caution.6. And therefore he expoundeth that place of S.Paul, There dwelleth not in me, that is, in my fleſh, any good thing, Rom.7. of the bodie:

die: and hence would proue that concupiſcence in the regenerate is no ſinne, becauſe it is in the bodie: cap. 10. reſponſ. ad argum. 1. His opinion then is, that concupiſcence in them remaineth onely in their bodie. And where S. Paul ſaith, I am carnall, he thus expoundeth it: Quia nondum ſpirituale corpus habeo: Becauſe he had no ſpirituall bodie, ſuch as he ſhould haue in the reſurrection: cap. 10. reſponſ. ad obiect. 6. So then in his opinion, the minde onely of the regenerate is renewed, not their bodie: he reaſoneth thus.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, In my minde I ſerue the law of God; in my fleſh the law of ſinne: Here the minde regenerate or renewed, is oppoſed or ſet againſt that part which is not renewed, namely the fleſh, which ſhall be renewed in the reſurrection: Bellarm. cap. 7. reſponſ. ad Bezam.

Anſw. Firſt, that this place is to be vnderſtood of the mind regenerate, we grant: but thereby, as a principall part, the whole regenerate man is expreſſed both in bodie and ſoule: ſo where S. Paul ſaith, Be renewed in the ſpirit of your minds, Epheſ. 4.24. he vnderſtandeth a renouation of the whole new man: and put on the new man, ſaith he: And S. Peter ſpeaking to the women, that the hid man of the heart ſhould be vncorrupt: In the ſame place exhorteth them to ſoberneſſe and modeſtie of apparell, which is outward in the bodie, 1. Pet. 3.4. So in this place, by the minde, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the whole new or regenerate man. Secondly, how could S. Paul, ſpeaking of himſelfe, by fleſh, vnderſtande a body not regenerate: ſeeing the Apoſtle was a mortified man, and was much exerciſed in the taming and beating downe of his bodie, 1. Cor. 9.27? Thirdly, the bodies of the Saints ſhall be renewed, we grant, in the reſurrection: which is called the regeneration, Mat. 19.28. but it followeth not, they ſhall be regenerate then from all mortalitie & corruption: Ergo, they cannot now be renewed, and ſubdued from ſinne: the ſoule alſo then ſhall bee cleanſed and made pure, like the Angels, yet for all this, the ſoule while it is in the bodie, is dayly renewed. As it is called the regeneration, ſo is it alſo the redemption of our bodies, Rom. 8.23. becauſe then our redemption in body and ſoule, ſhall be perfectly accompliſhed: notwithſtanding it is begun in this life.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence dwelling in the regenerat, remaineth both in their bodies & their ſoules, and that as their regeneration is of the whole man, both in bodie and ſoule; ſo there is ſome fleſhly part in both, reſiſting againſt the ſpirit, which in the ſcripture is called fleſh: thus we are perſwaded.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, I am carnall, ſold vnder ſin, Rom. 7. verſ. 14. if this ſhould be meant of Saint Pauls body: what could be ſaid more of the body of an adulterer, murtherer, glutton, or whoſe body elſe is giuen ouer to all wickedneſſe, then that it is ſolde vnder ſin? If S. Paul then, where he ſaith, I am carnall, or, in my fleſh I ſerue the law of ſinne, ver. 25. doth vnderſtand his bodie: is it not all one, as if he had ſaid, he had giuen his members ſeruants to ſin? to ſerue ſin in the body, and to giue the members ſeruants to ſinne, is all one: But neither S. Paul nor any other regenerate man is a ſeruant of ſinne in his body: for, ſaith he, When ye were ſeruants of ſinne, yee were freed from righteouſneſſe, Rom. 6.20. And as ye haue giuen your members ſeruants to vncleanneſſe: hee ſpeaketh of the time before their calling: therefore S. Paul ſpeaketh not of his body.

Auguſtine writing of thoſe words of the Apoſtle, It is no more I that do it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me, ſaith thus: Quod ille dicere non poteſt, qui aut cordis conſenſione decernit, quod cōcupiſcit, aut corporis miniſterio perficit: which Saint Paul could not ſay, if either he had conſented in his heart, to that whereunto his concupiſcence led him, or by the miniſtery and ſeruice of his bodie had done it. The Apoſtle then did not giue the miniſterie or ſeruice of his bodie to ſinne.

Cont. Iulian. lib. 2. in fine.

2. Man hath ſometime his denomination of the mind, but not of the bodie: S. Paul ſaith not, my body is carnall, but I am; and afterward, in me, that is, my fleſh. Saint Pauls fleſh is himſelfe, but he himſelfe conſiſteth both of bodie and ſoule: Ergo, the fleſh is in them both: ſee more of the expoſition of this place, part. 3. iſtius quaſtion. argum. 2.

Argum. 2. There is a moſt euident place for this purpoſe, Gal. 5. 17. the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh: The Apoſtle by fleſh here vnderſtandeth the corrupt part both of body and ſoule: for a little after, among the workes of the fleſh, he nameth not onely ſinnes of the bodie, as adulterie, vncleanneſſe, but the ſinnes alſo of the ſoule, as hatred, emulation, hereſies, verſ. 20. And all this while the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to and of the regenerate: theſe are contrarie each to other, ſo that ye cannot do the ſame things ye would: this he writeth to the faithfull among the Galathians. So to the beleeuers among the Coloſſians, he ſaith, Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleanneſſe, couetouſneſſe: which ſins are as well in the minde as the body: wherefore they are not members only of the body, but of the old man vnregenerate both in ſoule and body: And thus, I truſt, it appeareth, that the fleſh, euen in the regenerate, doth comprehend the corruption remaining in them, both in ſoule and body.

Shall Auguſtine now ſpeake: Hæc eſt lex membris omnium inſerta mortalium, quæ repugnat legi mentis: cogitationum ſpinæ & tribuli in nobis germinare incipiunt: This is the law ingraft in the members of all mortall men, which rebelleth againſt the law of the mind or ſpirit: for the thornes and thiſtles of euill thoughts begin to bud in vs: de tempor.ſerm.47. Out of theſe words I reaſon thus: There concupiſcence the law of the members is, where euill thoughts ariſe; but they are bred in the mind, not in the bodie: Ergo, concupiſcence is as well in the mind as in the body.

Concil. Arauſican.2.cap.2. Si quis dicit ſoli Ada prauaricationem ſuam nocuiſſe, &c. nec peccatum quod mors eſt animæ per vnum hominem in omne genus humanum tranſyſſe, &c. If any man ſay that Adams tranſgreſſion onely hurt himſelfe, and that ſinne, which is the death of the ſoule, did not through one man come vnto all mankind, let him be accurſed. Originall ſinne then is the death of the ſoule: Ergo, it hath the place in the ſoule, where it worketh.

Origen ſaith, *Hom.*8.Leuitic. Audi Dauidem dicentem, &c. Heare David ſay, I was conceiued in iniquitie, ſhewing, that Quæcunque anima ex carne naſcitur, &c. That euery ſoule is borne of the fleſh, and is polluted with iniquitie: if the ſoule then be polluted with originall ſinne, then it followeth, that it hath the place and ſeate in the ſoule.

The Maſter of the Sentences agreeth, Lib.2.diſt.32.e. Nec caro corruptibilis animam peccatricem fecit: The corruptible fleſh did not make the ſoule ſinfull, but the ſinfull ſoule maketh the fleſh corruptible. Lib.3.diſt.17.b. Ipſius carnalis concupiſcentiæ cauſa, non eſt in anima ſola, nec in carne ſola: The cauſe of carnall concupiſcence is not in the ſoule alone, or in the fleſh alone, for it is made of them both, &c. Lib.3.diſt.27.f. Caro non dicitur concupiſcere, niſi quia anima carnaliter concupiſcit, &c. The fleſh is not ſaid to luſt, but becauſe the ſoule doth carnally luſt.

THE SIXT PART, OF THE PVNISHMENT of originall ſinne.

THe puniſhment due to originall ſinne, is double, either temporall or eternall: firſt, of the eternall puniſhment, then of the temporall.

OF THE ETERNALL PVNISHMENT due to originall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

19.Error. BEllarmine affirmeth, that infants dying without Baptiſme in originall ſinne, are eternally puniſhed: but their puniſhment, is, damni, non ſenſus, ſiue ignis ſenſibilis, of loſſe onely becauſe they are excluded from heauen, not of any ſmart or outward paine of fire: ſuch as the damned ſuffer in hell. Concerning the firſt poynt, whether infants not being baptized, are damned; we haue before intreated, in the twelfth Controuerſie, and the third queſtion of the neceſſitie of Baptiſme.

Yet thus much of it here, that the popiſh opinion, in holding all infants dying without Baptiſme, to be in the ſtate of damnation; is very cruell, and moſt vncharitable: whereby it both reſtraineth Gods power, as though he were not able to ſaue infants without the ſacrament; and obſcureth his mercie, and impugneth his iuſtice, in ſuffering ſo many, hauing not yet ſinned in acte, to be loſt.

Our opinion rather is this, agreeable to Scripture, and the rule of charitie: firſt, that although all infants in themſelues, being borne with that maſſe of originall corruption, are ſubiect to damnation; yet that many of them are ſaued, both by the couenant made to their faithfull parents, both or either of them, and to their ſeede: and that both immediatly, if their next parents were beleeuers, and mediately ſometime, when their former predeceſſors haue beleeued, though their next progenitors are Infidels, (for Gods promiſe made to them that loue him, extendeth to a thouſand generations, Exod.20.) as alſo ſuch as are not within the couenant; ſo many as God hath ordained to life, are ſaued by the free election of grace.

Conſul. Iunium de grat. reſponſ. ad ration.28. Secondly, as we denie not, but that if any infants ſo dying are damned, (which God beſt knoweth) he doth it moſt iuſtly: ſo chriſtian charitie bindeth vs to hope and thinke the beſt of children dying in their infancie, and to preſume that they are ſaued: ſeeing God preuenteth them, leaſt that they ſhould be ouertaken of the wickednes of this life: for which cauſe Henoch is ſaid to haue been taken vp, Sapient.cap.4.

But now to the ſecond point, concerning the maner of the puniſhment of infants, Bellarmine reaſoneth thus.

*Argum.*1. We reade in the Apocalypſe, As much as ſhe glorified her ſelfe and liued in pleaſure, ſo much giue you vnto her torment and ſorrow, Chapter 18.verſe 7. but infants neuer glorified themſelues, or liued in pleaſure; therefore they ſhall haue neither torment nor ſorrowe, Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat.lib.6.cap.4.

Anſw. Firſt, the Ieſuite abuſeth this place to ſignifie the torments of hell: it is a propheſie of the temporall deſtruction of the ſecond Babylon, which is the ſeate of Antichriſt, (and Rome by your leaue) as we haue at large proued, in the fourth controuerſie of the Pope: therefore the plagues are numbred which ſhall fall vpon her for pride, verſ.8. In one day ſhall come vpon her, death, ſorrow, famine: but famine I thinke, is none of the plagues in hell. But, ſecondly, if you will needs haue this place to be vnderſtood of hell torments: what haue you gayned by it? Surely, by your owne confeſſion, your Babylon and confuſed antichriſtian kingdome is appoynted to that place. Secondly, the argument followeth not: they that liue in pride or pleaſure, ſhall be tormented in hell: Ergo, they that doe not liue in theſe ſinnes, ſhall not be tormented: for by this reaſon not onely infants ſhall be excuſed, that are guiltie onely of originall ſinne, but all other ſinners, that offend not in the foreſaid ſinnes.

The Proteſtants.

THe due and wages of originall ſinne, is eternall death, which is the puniſhment both of bodie and ſoule in hell: And hell in the Scriptures is alwaies taken for a place of torment: if infants then dying before Baptiſme are condemned to hell, as the Ieſuite ſaith, they cannot there be exempted from torment.

*Argum.*1. Chriſt ſhall ſay to the goates on the left hand, that is, to thoſe that are condemned; Depart from me ye curſed into euerlaſting fire, prepared for the diuell and his angels, Matth.25. verſ.41. But of this number are infants which are condemned to hell: Ergo, they ſhall ſuffer torment in euerlaſting fire. Bellarmine ſaith, that the forme of iudgement is here preſcribed whereby they onely ſhall be iudged which were of the Church, for they are not condemned becauſe they had no faith, which is the cauſe of the condemnation of Infidels, and thoſe which are out of the Church, but for want of good workes: wherefore this place appertaineth not to children, that die without Baptiſme, which were not of the Church, *Bellarm.cap.*5.

*Contra.*1. The fayling or want of good workes, is cauſe of condemnation to all men, whether within the Church, or without, as S. Paul ſheweth, Know you not that the vnrighteous ſhall not inherite the kingdome of God, as fornicatours, idolaters, adulterers: and he reckeneth vp other workes of the fleſh: and ſuch ſaith he, were ſome of you, &c. 1.Corinth.6.11. he ſaith not for want of faith, but of good workes, that before they beleeued, they were in ſtate of damnation.

2 But to put this matter out of doubt: the text ſaith plainely, that in the day of iudgement all nations ſhall be gathered before Chriſt, verſ.32. Ergo, all ſortes of men, both within and without the Church: why is not the Ieſuite aſhamed then out of this number to exclude infants?

*Argum.*2. Apocal.20.15. Whoſoeuer was not found written in the booke of life, was caſt into the lake of fire: Ergo, infants alſo that are condemned: and if they be in the lake of fire, how are they not tormented?

Bellarmine: They ſhall be caſt, we graunt, into the lake of fire, that is, the place where fire is, but ſhall not be burnt of the fire, either becauſe they ſhall be in a higher place, or that the fire ſhall haue powre onely detinendi, non vrendi, to keepe them as it were in holde, but not to burne or conſume them.

Contra. Who ſeeth not what vaine and ſophiſtical ſhifts this fellow vſeth to obſcure the truth? but none of them can helpe him. Firſt, the text ſaith, they ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire, not into a place neere to, or higher then the fire, where they ſhall ſee but not feele it: but they ſhall haue their part in the lake, Apocal. 21. 8. And againe, It is ſayd to burne with fire and brimſtone, that is, to burne moſt hotely, and moſt fiercely, that whoſoeuer is in it, muſt needes be burned and tormented therein. Secondly, the Ieſuites anſwere here is contrarie to his doctrine elſewhere: for he ſaith, that Limbus infantium, the dungeon of infants, is higher then Purgatorie: and that Purgatorie is betweene it and hell, ſo that hell fire cannot come vnto it, *Bellarm de purgator. lib.*2. *cap.*6. If it be ſo, as he imagineth, then cannot infants any way be caſt into hell fire, ſeeing there is ſuch a great ſpace and diſtance betweene hell and their priſon: wherefore if the Scripture be true, then Bellarmine muſt be the lyer.

Auguſtine thus anſwereth Iulian the Pelagian, who obiected, that if children be borne in the ſtate of damnation, their parents, that are the cauſe of their birth, are no better then murderers of their owne children. Id melius dicis (ſaith he) hominum creatori, quàm genitoribus, nam quos præſciuit ignibus æternis arſuros, creare non deſinit: he might better obiect this vnto the creator of men, then to their begetters, for whom he foreſaw ſhould burne in euerlaſting fire, he ceaſeth not daylie to create, *cont. Iulian.*5.9. Children then, and whoſoeuer are borne and die in the ſtate of damnation, ſhall burne in euerlaſting fire.

*Synod. Moguntin.cap.*5. Primorum hominum peccatum propagatione in omnes homines transijt, &c. vt ſint natura omnes homines iræ Dei, mortis & damnationis rei, &c. The ſinne of the firſt men is by propagation paſſed vnto all men, ſo that all by nature are guiltie of Gods wrath, death, and damnation. Eternall condemnation then is the iuſt reward euen of originall ſinne.

bers of all mortall men, which rebelleth againſt the law of the mind or ſpirit: for the thornes and thiſtles of euill thoughts begin to bud in vs: de tempor.ſerm.47. Out of theſe words I reaſon thus: There concupiſcence the law of the members is, where euill thoughts ariſe; but they are bred in the mind, not in the bodie: Ergo, concupiſcence is as well in the mind as in the body.

Firſt, the text ſaith, they ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire, not into a place neere to, or higher then the fire, where they ſhall ſee but not feele it; but they ſhall haue their part in the lake, Apocal. 21. 8. And againe, It is ſayd to burne with fire and brimſtone, that is, to burne moſt hotely, and moſt fiercely, that whoſoeuer is in it, muſt needes be burned and tormented therein. Secondly, the Ieſuites anſwere here is contrarie to his doctrine elſewhere: for he ſaith, that Limbus infantium, the dungeon of infants, is higher then Purgatorie: and that Purgatorie is betweene it and hell, ſo that hell fire cannot come vnto it, Bellarm de purgator. lib.2. cap.6. If it be ſo, as he imagineth, then cannot infants any way be caſt into hell fire, ſeeing there is ſuch a great ſpace and diſtance betweene hell and their priſon: wherefore if the Scripture be true, then Bellarmive muſt be the lyer.

Auguſtine thus anſwereth Iulian the Pelagian, who obiected, that if children be borne in the ſtate of damnation, their parents, that are the cauſe of their birth, are no better then murderers of their owne children. Id melius dicis (ſaith he) hominum creatori, quàm genitoribus, nam quos præſciuit ignibus æternis arſuros, creare non deſinit: he might better obiect this vnto the creator of men, then to their begetters, for whom he foreſaw ſhould burne in euerlaſting fire, he ceaſeth not daylie to create, cont.Iulian.5.9. Children then, and whoſoeuer are borne and die in the ſtate of damnation, ſhall burne in euerlaſting fire.

Synod. Moguntin.cap.5. Primorum hominum peccatum propagatione in omnes homines tranſijt, &c. vt ſint natura omnes homines iræ Dei, mortis & damnationis rei, &c. The ſinne of the firſt men is by propagation paſſed vnto all men, ſo that all by nature are guiltie of Gods wrath, death, and damnation. Eternall condemnation then is the iuſt reward euen of originall ſinne.

Decr. part.2.cauſ.15.qu.1.c.1.præfat. Siue penes voluntatem, ſiue penes infirmitatem conſiſtant peccata, ſemper imputantur ad pœnam: Whether ſinnes be committed willingly, or conſiſt in infirmitie, they are imputed to puniſhment: puniſhment then and paine belongeth euen to ſinnes of infirmitie.

Part.3.diſt.4.c.3. Qui ſine ſacramento ſancti baptiſmatis de hoc ſeculo tranſeunt, ſempiterno igne puniendos: They which depart without the ſacrament of Baptiſme, ſhall bee puniſhed with euerlaſting fire: For although they had no ſinne of their proper action, yet of originall corruption, &c.

The Maſter of Sentences is of opinion, that infants ſhall haue ſenſe of inward paine and of the worme of conſcience: Quod Dei viſione carebunt in perpetuum: Becauſe they ſhall want the ſight of God for euer: lib.2.diſt.33.e. If they haue ſenſe of inward paine, why not alſo of outward.

THE SECOND POYNT OF THE TEMPORALL punishment of originall ſinne.

THere are many euils and plagues which are laid vpon men in their minde, and all the parts thereof, the will, vnderſtanding, and affections, and in their bodies, ſome externall calamities alſo of the life, which all are iuſt puniſhments of originall ſinne: firſt in the vnderſtanding there is great ignorance not onely in naturall things, but much more of heauenly and ſpirituall. Secondly, the fooliſhnes and fatuitie of the mind, the priuation or want of wit, which many children are borne withall, more then any beaſt in their kinde. Thirdly, the difficultie and great labour in attaining to knowledge and learning. Fourthly, the curioſitie of the minde, and the deſire that man hath to know things that are hid, and not belonging to him. Fiftly, the vanitie of the minde, which is occupied many times in fooliſh and idle thoughts: and ſuch other defects there be in the minde.

Secondly, in the will and affections: firſt, there is philautia, ſelfe-loue, whereby euery man is addicted to himſelfe. Secondly, the frowardnes of the will, in inclining to euill rather then good; chuſing vice, rather then vertue. Thirdly, the careleſnes of men in following after heauenly things. Fourthly, the too great deſire and coueting of earthly things. Fiftly, the inconſtancie and mutabilitie of the will. Sixtly, diſcontentment, murmuring, and repining, no man contented with his owne eſtate. Seuenthly, the weakenes of our affections, in being ſoone prouoked to anger, enuie, reuenge. 8. Laſtly, the concupiſcence and luſt of the affections, ſeeking to ouer rule reaſon.

Thirdly, in the bodie theſe infirmities are remaining: firſt, naturall defects and wants: as ſome are borne blinde, ſome deafe, ſome lame, &c. Secondly, the infinite diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, which our bodies are ſubiect vnto. Thirdly, the difficult, hard and vnpleaſant meanes in recouering our health. Fourthly, the great labour and toyle of the bodie for the preſeruation thereof. Fiftly, the ſhortnes of our life, and the mortalitie of our bodies, with the continuall feare of death imminent, and hanging ouer our heads.

Fourthly, beſide theſe, there are externall calamities without vs: firſt, by nature being the children of wrath, we are vnder the power of Sathan. Secondly, man is become by reaſon of his ſinne, one an enemie, yea, as the Preacher ſaith, chap.3.18. a beaſt, to another. Thirdly, the vnreaſonable creatures, whom man in his creation was made Lord of, are now become rebellious, & diſobedient. Fourthly, the reſt of Gods creatures, as the heauens, the elements, the earth are armed againſt vs: as when men are plagued with drouth, famine, peſtilence, mildewe, lightening, and ſuch like.

Theſe and many more calamities ſinne hath brought vs vnto, and they are iuſt puniſhments for our rebellion and diſobedience againſt God: As Saint Paul ſaith, Tribulation and anguiſh, indignation and wrath, ſhall be vpon the ſoule of euery one that doth euill, Rom.chap.2.verſ.9. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth, Cauſa iſtorum malorum, quæ nunc patimur, non eſt ob ſcelera ſuſcepta in vita ſuperiore, vt philoſophi putarunt, &c. The cauſe of theſe euils which men ſuffer, is not for the ſinnes done in another life, before the ſoule came into the bodie, as ſome Philoſophers haue thought; there remaineth then nothing elſe, but that either God muſt be charged with iniquitie, or impotencie, as either not willing, or not able to make man righteous, or that it is a puniſhment of the firſt tranſgreſſion: but becauſe God is neither vniuſt nor impotent, we muſt needes confeſſe, that this grieuous yoke ſhould not be layde vpon the ſonnes of Adam, but for originall ſinne: Contra. Iulian. lib.4.ca.16.

And thus farre we and our aduerſaries are agreed: that, wherein we varie and diſagree, is this poynt, as followeth.

The

The Papiſts.

20. Error. THere are three other effects, which we affirme to be the fruites of originall ſinne, but Bellarmine denieth them. Firſt, the loſſe of free will to doe good, which we ſay is vtterly decayed by Adams tranſgreſſion, which Bellarmine gaineſayeth. Secondly, the corruption of nature, which is ſuch euen in the regenerate, that they cannot chuſe but ſinne: but the Ieſuite affirmeth, that man by grace may receiue power to keepe the lawe. Thirdly, the third effect, as doubt, deſpaire, hatred of God and ſuch like: The two firſt the Ieſuite vtterly reiecteth, denying that there be any ſuch effects at all: and herein referreth vs to the treatiſes of free will, and iuſtification which follow: and for thoſe places we will alſo reſerue this matter. Concerning the third, he graunteth, that ſuch effects there be, yet not properly cauſed by originall ſinne, Bellarm. cap. 16.

Argum. Theſe motions are in ſome that haue not originall ſinne, as in diuels, and are not in other, that haue: Ergo, they are not the proper effects of originall ſinne, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. As it followeth not, heat and light are proper to the Sunne, therefore not to the fire: for as the Sunne hath one kinde of heate and light, ſo the fire hath another: After the ſame manner, it is no good conſequent, Lying and murther are proper to the diuell, Ioh. 8.44. and ſo likewiſe, deſpayre, diſtruſt, hatred of God, and the reſt: Ergo, they are not proper to men: for though theſe ſinnes in both beare the ſame name, yet are they not of the ſame nature, neither came they of one beginning: for theſe ſinnes in the damned ſpirits are alwaies actuall, and in the higheſt degree ſpringing from their proud and wilfull apoſtaſie: but man was ſeduced and deceiued by Sathan, and ſo tranſgreſſed; whoſe fall was neither ſo grieuous, as the apoſtaſie of the Angels, nor his ſinnes either originall or actuall ſo hainous.

2 There are ſome proper effects of originall ſinne by the Ieſuites owne confeſſion, that are not to be found in children: as curioſitie in the minde, whereby men are more readie to behold other mens ſinnes than their owne, Bellarm. cap. 9. he maketh this the ninth wound of the vnderſtanding: there is alſo malitia & peruerſitas, the frowardnes and malice of the will, which Bellarmine maketh the fift wound or diſeaſe in the will of man, cap. 10. But theſe defects are not in children, becauſe as yet they want ſuch acts of the will and vnderſtanding: wherefore either theſe are not proper effects of originall ſinne, as the Ieſuite affirmeth they are, or elſe there may be ſome fruits of this ſinne, that are not actually or preſently in children, which is moſt true, becauſe they want ſuch inſtruments and meanes, whereby thoſe effects ſhew themſelues. Therefore Bellarmines argument is not good: theſe motions of the minde, deſpayre, diſtruſt, are not in children: Ergo, they are not proper fruits of originall corruption.

The Proteſtants.

THat theſe euill motions of the minde, whereof wee ſpeake, are the immediate and proper effects of originall ſinne: it may thus appeare.

Argum. 1. Rebellion of the fleſh againſt the ſpirit, is a proper fruit of originall concupiſcence, Rom. 7.23. But deſpayre, diſtruſt, murmuring, and ſuch like, are nothing elſe but rebellion of the fleſh: Ergo.

Argum. 2. Theſe euill motions that ariſe ſuddainely in the minde without conſent of the will, doe ſpring immediately from originall ſinne: for there is no euill in man, but hath it beginning either from the corruption of our nature, or by the conſent of will, or from both: But theſe euill motions, deſpayre, diſtruſt, &c. in the regenerate haue no conſent of will: for Saint Paul ſaith, The euill which I would not, that doe I, Rom. chap. 7. verſe 19. And Dauid did theſe things in haſte, as we heard before: Ergo, they doe ariſe immediately from originall ſinne.

Auguſtine ſaith: Operatur in nobis peccatum deſideria illicita, quibus ſi nos obedimus (i. ſi voluntas conſenſit) & nos operamur; ſi non obtemperamus, operatur in nobis peccatum: Sinne worketh in vs vnlawfull deſires: which if we obey by conſenting vnto them, then doe we alſo worke together with ſinne: but if we obey them not, it is ſinne that worketh in vs, in Pſalm. 118. concion. 2. Ergo, All vnlawfull deſires and motions wrought in vs without conſent of the will, are the fruites and effects of originall ſinne.

THE THIRD CONTROVERSIE, BEING THE NINETEENTH IN THE WHOLE, OF THE REPARATION AND RESTORING of man by Chriſt.

THis Controuerſie hath foure parts: firſt, of our Predeſtination: Secondly, of our vocation, vnto the which belong the treatiſes of grace and free-will: Thirdly, of our iuſtification, and the fourth part is of ſanctification, that is, of good workes that follow our iuſtification, as neceſſarie fruites thereof.

THE FIRST PART, OF PREDESTINATION.

THis part is diuided into foure queſtions: firſt, what predeſtination is. Secondly, who they are which be predeſtinate. Thirdly, the cauſe of predeſtination. Fourthly, of the certaintie, and aſſurance thereof.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE DEfinition of predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

21. Error. BEllarmine thus defineth predeſtination: Prædeſtinatio eſt prouidentia Dei, &c. Predeſtination is a certaine prouidence, or foreknowledge of God, whereby certaine men elected, are by infallible meanes and wayes directed vnto life eternall, Bellarm. lib. 2. de grat. & liber. arb. cap. 9.

In this definition we finde a double fault: firſt, becauſe Bellarmine defineth predeſtination to be foreknowledge or preſcience. Secondly, for that he affirmeth it to be onely of the elect. But of this latter fault more ſhal be ſaid in the next part. As for the firſt, Bellarm. maketh predeſtination to be a ſpecies, a kinde or part of Gods prouidence: and further ſaith, that predeſtination partly belongeth to the will of God, partly to his knowledge and vnderſtanding, but moſt principally to his knowledge: Vbi (ſaith he) prædeſtinationis ratio & eſſentia conſiſtit: Wherein conſiſteth the very eſſence of predeſtination. He reaſoneth thus:

Argum. Saint Paul ſaith, God hath not caſt away his people whom he knew before, Rom. 11. 1. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his, 2. Timoth. 2. 19. Bellarm. from hence he concludeth, that predeſtination is a foreſight or foreknowledge of God, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe places doe euidently proue, that God foreſaw in his diuine prouidence thoſe that ſhould be ſaued: and that his preſcience is certaine and infallible; but that predeſtination is the very preſcience and foreknowledge of God, it is not hence prooued. Secondly, Saint Paul himſelfe doth diſtinguiſh them in the place alleaged, The foundation of God remaineth ſure (ſaith he) and hath this ſeale; the Lord knoweth, &c. He calleth predeſtination, the foundation, and preſcience the ſeale thereof: the foundation then, and the ſeale are not the ſame. Thirdly, we anſwere with Auguſtine: Aliquando prædeſtinatio ſignificatur nomine praſcientia vt Rom. 11. non repulit Deus plebem ſuam quam praſciuit: Sometime predeſtination is ſignified by the word preſcience, as in the 11. to the Romanes, God hath not reiected his people whom he knew before, de perſeueran. lib. 2. cap. 19. In this place therefore preſcience may be taken for predeſtination.

The Proteſtants.

THat predeſtination is alwaies ioyned with the prouidence and preſcience of God, we graunt: but that predeſtination properly iſſueth out from Gods will, being an act and effect thereof, and not of his knowledge, it may partly appeare by the name: for prædeſtinare, προορίζειν, doth properly ſignifie, to define and determine, which requireth rather the conſent of the will, than light of vnderſtanding. We therefore define it thus: Prædeſtinatio eſt decretum Dei &c. Predeſtination is the decree of God, touching the ſaluation and condemnation of men: our arguments are theſe.

Argum. 1. If the preſcience of God giue the eſſence, nature and kinde vnto predeſtination, as the Ieſuite ſaith, then is it the cauſe thereof, and the other is the effect; but Gods preſcience is not the cauſe of predeſtination: for he alſo confeſſeth, Homines gratis à Deo electos, ante omnem operum præuiſionem: That men are freely elected of God, before any foreſight of their workes, cap.10. Ergo, Gods preſcience giueth not the eſſence and nature of predeſtination. And here by the way, note the Ieſuites contrarie and repugnant ſayings: election, he ſaith, goeth before preſcience, and yet Gods knowledge is the cauſe of election: but how can the effect goe before the cauſe?

Argum.2. Saint Paul ſpeaketh euidently, that predeſtination proceedeth of Gods good will and pleaſure, which is the onely cauſe thereof: He hath predeſtinate vs according to the good pleaſure of his will, Epheſ.1.5. and according to his good pleaſure, which he had purpoſed in him, verſ.9. predeſtinate according to the purpoſe of him, which worketh all things, according to the counſell of his owne will, verſ.11. Theſe three words, beneplacitum voluntatis, propoſitum voluntatis, conſilium voluntatis, the good pleaſure of his will, the purpoſe of his will, the counſell of his will, haue no relation at all, to the knowledge or vnderſtanding of God, but onely to his will. Saint Peter alſo putteth a manifeſt difference betweene preſcience, and predeſtination, when he ſaith, that Chriſt was deliuered vp according to the determinate counſell and foreknawledge of God, Act.2.23. the decree or determination is ioyned to his counſell or will, not to his foreknowledge.

Auguſtine, ſpeaking of the free election of the children of God, ſaith thus: Sed diuinæ voluntatis eſt hoc donum, non humanæ fragilitatis meritum: Audi, qui omnia operatur ſecundum conſilium voluntatis ſuæ: But this is the gift or graunt of the diuine will, not a merit or deſert of humane frailtie: hearken, what the Apoſtle ſaith, which worketh all things according to the counſell of his owne will. He maketh election a free worke of Gods will. Hypognoſt. articul.16.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THOSE WHICH are predeſtinate, whether ſome are ordained to damnation, as other are elected vnto life.

COncerning this point, there are foure opinions: Some thought that all men in the end ſhould be ſaued; yea the diuels & all: which error is attributed to Origen: whom with the reſt of this opinion, Auguſtine confuteth at large, lib.21. de ciuitate Dei, cap.17. ad 24. Some other held, that God ordained grace and mercie for al, and was not any way the cauſe of the reprobation of men: This was the hereſie of the Pelagians, euery where confuted by Auguſtine in his learned workes written againſt the Pelagians: and I am afraid it hath too many fauourites and friends in theſe daies. The third opinion is of the Papiſts, who denie not, but that reprobation doth proceede in ſome reſpect from the will, and decree of God, but that it is not ſo properly Gods act, as election is. The fourth opinion is ours, that predeſtination is both of the elect to ſaluation, and of the reprobate to damnation. Againſt two of theſe opinions, wee will deale briefly at this time: firſt, againſt the Papiſts, then againſt the error of the Pelagians.

THE FIRST PART, OF REPROBATION.

The Papiſts.

GOd intendeth no mans damnation, ſay they, directly, or abſolutely, but in reſpect of their demerits, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom.9. ſect.9. And againe, God is not the cauſe of any mans reprobation or damnation, ibid. ſect.1. Of the ſame opinion is Bellarmine, who, although he ſimply denieth not reprobation, as afterward we ſhall ſee: yet maketh God farre otherwiſe the author of it, then of election: yea he excludeth it out of the definition of predeſtination; which he defineth to be the prouidence of God onely to direct thoſe that are elected, to eternall life, lib.2. de grat. c.9. Their arguments are theſe. 22. Error.

Argum.1. Timoth.2.4. God would haue all men to be ſaued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. 2. Pet.3. ver.9. God would haue no man to periſh, but would haue all men to come to repentance. Ezech.18. verſ.23. God will not the death of a ſinner: Ergo, the death and damnation of men, ſtandeth not properly with the will of God.

Anſw. 1. God is ſaid not to will or deſire the death of a ſinner: not becauſe in his ſecret counſell, he hath not decreed it at all, but becauſe, God in their condemnation hath reſpect to his owne glorie, which is the chiefe and principall end both of election and reprobation: And God is ſo tender of his own honor & glorie, that in reſpect of it, he is ſaid not to will or deſire other things: he willeth not death or dãnation, that is, not as the chiefe end of his will or purpoſe, but intendeth a further thing, than their damnation, that is, the ſetting forth of his owne glorie: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.9.14. that God hath ſet vp Pharao to ſhew his power in him: So Auguſtine ſaith, Ita plenitudo diuinæ præſcientiæ in alios manante iuſtitia, in alios gratia profluente completa eſt: So the fulnes of Gods preſcience is accompliſhed, his iuſtice being ſhewed vpon ſome, and vpon others, grace and mercie: de Prædeſt. lib.1. cap.13.

2. God is ſaid not to will the death of any, becauſe no man is to impute his damnation vnto God, becauſe the wicked are iuſtly puniſhed for their ſinnes, without any reſpect had to the ſecret counſell of God: Gods eternall decree then, is not the next and immediate cauſe of damnation, but the ſinnes of men: therefore he may truly ſay, God will not the death of a ſinner, becauſe he no waies willeth ſinne, which is the cauſe of their death. But as Auguſtine ſaith, Prædeſtinauit ſolum iudicium ſuum, quo vnicuiq; prout geſſit, retributurus eſt: He hath predeſtinate only his iudgements, to giue to euery man, as he hath done: articul. falſ. impoſit. 16.

Enchirid. cap. 103.

3. Whereas Saint Paul ſaith, God would haue all men ſaued, &c. Auguſtine expoundeth it thus: Omnes homines, omne genus hominum intelligamus: By all men, we may vnderſtand all ſorts of men, not euery particular man. And this is very agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning, which a little before exhorted men to pray for Kings and Princes: and then he giueth this reaſon, becauſe God would haue all men to be ſaued, that is, high and low, Kings and people, men of all ſorts.

4. We muſt vnderſtand theſe and the like places, not of the ſecret, but of the reuealed will of God, who offereth vnto all the outward meanes of ſaluation: there is, voluntas medij vel ſigni, and, voluntas finis: the will of God concerning the end, & concerning the meanes leading to the end: So although God haue willed and determined euery mans end, ſome one way, ſome another, yet the externall meanes of ſaluation are denied to none. And that this is the Apoſtles meaning, that which followeth doth declare: God would haue all men come to the knowledge of the truth, verſ. 4. and to come to repentance, 2. Pet. 3. 9. Thus alſo Auguſtine expoundeth theſe words: Remota hac diſcretione, quam diuina ſcientia intra ſecretum iuſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſynceriſſimè credendum eſt, &c. Setting apart the conſideration of the ſecret counſell of God, it is ſyncerely to be beleeued, that God would haue all men to be ſaued: that is, offering to all the outward meanes of ſaluation, as his word and Sacraments: cont. articul. falſ. impoſit. articul. 2. To this purpoſe Saint Ambroſe lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 1. Quamuis omnes dominus ſaluos fieri, &c. Although God would haue all men ſaued, and come to the knowledge of the truth: non tamen ſibi diſpenſationum ſuarum abſtulit poteſtatem, &c. yet hath he not taken away the power of his diſpenſation, that the order of his counſell ſhould runne otherwiſe, than he in his ſecret iudgement had appointed.

5. Saint Ambroſe alſo ſheweth another way, how this is to be expounded, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 3. Habet populus dei plenitudinem ſuam, &c. The people of God haue a certaine plenitude or fulnes, and in the elect there is a ſpeciall kinde of vniuerſalitie: like as when the Scripture ſpeaketh of the wicked, Ea, quæ de parte quadam dicuntur, &c. Thoſe things, which are ſpoken but of a part, doe ſeeme to appertaine to all: as Philip. 2. All ſeeke their owne, &c. Videmus ergo pro parte hominum omnes homines nominari: We ſee then that for a part of men, all men are named. After the ſame maner may the Apoſtle be vnderſtood, when he ſaith, God would haue all men to be ſaued.

6. Saint Ambroſe alſo hath another expoſition of this place: Vult Deus omnes ſaluari, ſed ſi accedunt ad eum, &c. God would haue all to be ſaued; but if they come vnto him: non ſic vult, vt & nolentes ſaluentur: he ſo would it not, as that they againſt their wils ſhould be ſaued, &c. but all men are not willing to be ſaued: Ergo, God would not ſuch to be ſaued: Ambroſ. in 1. Tim. 2. Among ſo many expoſitions of this place, there is none of them, that enforceth theſe words to ſignifie a generall decree and purpoſe in God to ſaue all.

The Proteſtants.

GOd as he hath made all men, ſo hath hee freely diſpoſed of their end, according to the counſell of his owne will, ordaining ſome to be veſſels of honour, and others to be veſſels of wrath: And this notwithſtanding ſtandeth with the iuſtice of God, to ſaue ſome and reiect others: for he might iuſtly condemne all to eternall death. So Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo iuſtitiæ Deum arguat, ſi vni indebitam donauerit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam pœnam: Let no man ſeeme to chalenge Gods iuſtice, if hee giue vnto one grace vndeſerued, and to another puniſhment due and deſerued: de Prædeſt. lib. 1. 4.

Further, we ſay with Auguſtine epiſt. ad Hieronym. Nihil nos cogat deum credere vllarum animarum ſine culpa damnatorem: Nothing muſt compell vs to beleeue, that God is a damner of ſoules, without their fault. Againe, we confeſſe with Auguſtine: Deus multis eſt cauſa ſtandi, nemini labendi: God is the cauſe of ſtanding to many, of falling to none: Hypognoſ. cap. 13. Nemini per hoc, quod falli non poteſt, aut neceſſitatem aut voluntatem intulit delinquendi, cap. 14. God, in that he cannot be deceiued, hath not forced any either with a neceſſitie or will to ſinne. We ſo then affirme the reprobation of the wicked, as that we thinke none ordained to condemnation, which they haue not iuſtly deſerued by their ſinne, and that God only hath decreed and willed their puniſhment, but not their ſinne, that bringeth them vnto it.

Argum. 1. God hath made the wicked for the day of euill, Prouer. 16. 4. They were before of old ordained to this condemnation, Iud. 4. The Prophet Iſai ſaith, Topheth, that is, hell is prepared of old, chapter 30. 33. And euerlaſting fire is ſaid to be prepared for the diuell and his angels, Matth. 25. 41. If hell were prepared of old; then they were alſo prepared of old, that ſhould be tormented in hell: for hell was not made for nought.

Argum.2. But of all other places this is moſt euident in the ninth to the Romanes: out of the which chapter, for this matter wee gather diuers arguments: Firſt, the Apoſtle alleageth the example of Eſau, and Iacob, I haue loued Iacob, and hated Eſau: which was ſpoken before they were borne: Ergo, God in his eternall decree electeth ſome, and reiecteth others. It cannot be anſwered here, that this is onely to be vnderſtood of the temporall reiection of Eſau, and election of Iacob, concerning the promiſed land: for the Apoſtle throughout this chapter reaſoneth of Gods eternall election, and reprobation, as it appeareth by the example of Pharaoh: yea, and this Bellarmine liberally confeſſeth: that the example of Eſau and Iacob is to be applied vnto eternall election, and reprobation, *lib.2.de grat.cap.*10. But he hath another euaſion, making a diſtinction betweene negatiue and poſitiue damnation, which ſerueth not his turne here, as afterward ſhall be ſeene.

We haue Auguſtines iudgement alſo of this matter: Et reprobi in Eſau demonſtrantur Iudæi, & prædeſtinati in Iacob apparent Chriſtiani: The reprobate Iewes are ſhewed in Eſau, and the elect Chriſtians appeare in Iacob. He vnderſtandeth this example of election, and reprobation. De ſymbol. lib.2 cap.2. tom.9.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, that as the veſſels of mercie are prepared to glorie, ſo the veſſels of wrath are prepared to deſtruction: And that God hath as great right and power ouer his creature, as the Potter hath ouer the clay, to make of it a veſſell of honour or diſhonour.

Thirdly, verſ.17. The Lord ſet vp Pharaoh, to ſhew his power in him, Pro.16. The Lord hath made all things for himſelfe, and the wicked againſt the euill day: The damnation of the wicked then, doth as well ſet forth the glorie of God, as the ſaluation of the elect: for God hath done both for his owne ſake: Ergo, both are the Lords proper acts, the one, as well as the other.

Auguſtine ſaith, Filius perditionis dictus eſt traditor Chriſti, perditioni prædeſtinatus: The betrayer of Chriſt is called the childe of perdition, becauſe he was predeſtinate or ordained to perdition: *Tract.in Iohan.*107.

Againe, he ſaith, Tenenda eſt inconcuſsè hæc regula, impios in peccatis, antequam eſſent in mundo præſcitos eſſe tantum, non prædeſtinatos, pœnam autem ijs prædeſtinatam: This rule wee muſt vndoubtedly hold, that the wicked were onely foreſeene or foreknowne of God in their ſins, not predeſtinate, but their puniſhment was predeſtinate, Hypognoſt.articul.6. So then God ordaineth not men to ſinne, but he ordaineth men to puniſhment for their ſinnes: yet are not the wicked to complaine, for they are iuſtly forſaken of God, becauſe of their rebellion, and diſobedience. Neither are the godly and faithfull by this doctrine to be diſcouraged: foraſmuch as God hath not denied them the grace of his ſpirit, but hath giuen them faith and repentance, and ſtrength to walke before him, in his feare: all which are pledges vnto them of their free election, and ſaluation in Chriſt.

We want not the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers for the reprobation of the wicked: Magiſter ſen.lib.3.diſtinct.4.e. Dicuntur filij gehennæ, non ex illa nati, ſed in illam præparati: They are called the children of hell, not becauſe they are borne of hell, but ordained, or prepared vnto it. Lib.3.diſt.32.liter.E. De reprobis, qui præparati ſunt non ad vitam, ſed mortem, quæritur, &c. It may be asked concerning the reprobate, which are not prepared to life, but vnto death, whether it may be graunted, that God did loue them from the beginning: we ſay then, that it muſt be graunted onely of the elect, that God loued them from the beginning, &c. but of the not elected it muſt be ſimply granted, that God did hate, that is, reprobate them. A more euident teſtimonie we cannot haue.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE VNIuerſalitie of the grace of God.

23.Error. IT was the error of the Pelagians, as Auguſtine noteth, that the grace of God was not only in reſpect of the outward meanes, generally offered to all, but in Gods eternall decree and purpoſe ordained for all, if they would receiue it: for thus they affirmed: Quantum ad Deum, omnibus paratam eſſe vitam æternam, quia vult omnes ſaluos fieri: quantum ad arbitrij libertatem attinet, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: On Gods behalfe, they ſay, life eternall is prepared for all, becauſe God will haue all men ſaued: and as for the freedome of the will, ſo many apprehend or lay hold of eternall life, as of their owne accord doe beleeue in God. It followeth vpon this opinion, that Chriſt alſo dyed in the purpoſe and intention of God, for all men generally, and not for beleeuers onely, ſuch as are ordained vnto life. In epiſt.Proſper ad Auguſtin.

Bellarmine confuteth this error, and would make vs beleeue that he himſelfe is farre from it: yet elſewhere he ſeemeth to affirme it in theſe words: Si ſanguis Chriſti dandus eſſet omnibus pro quibus fuſus eſt, dandus eſſet omnibus omnino hominibus, etiam Turcis, Iudæis, Ethnicis, quibuſcunque impijs: ſanguis enim ille pro omnibus fuſus eſt: If the blood of Chriſt ſhould be giuen to all, for whom it was ſhed, it ſhould bee giuen generally to all men, Turkes, Iewes, Ethnikes, to all wicked men: for his blood was ſhed for all, Bellarm.de Euchariſt.lib.4.cap.25. This ſhould ſeeme alſo to haue been the iudgement of the elder Papiſts: for Iohn Careleſſe Martyr was charged by a popiſh Doctor, that he ſhould hold, that Chriſt did not dye effectually for all men, Fox.pag.1920. It ſhould appeare then, that he himſelfe thought that the benefit of Chriſts death was ordained and purpoſed for all: and therefore that he dyed effectually for all.

There be at this day three ſundrie opinions maintained by ſome concerning the vniuerſalitie of grace: The firſt is, Chriſtum ſine vllo diſcrimine pro omnium hominũ peccatis eſſe mortuum, & omnia hominum peccata non modo ſufficienter verum etiam efficienter expiaſſe, &c. That Chriſt hath dyed for all men, without any difference, and hath actually purged all mens ſins, not onely ſufficiently, but effectually: abſque vllo fidei vel incredulitatis reſpectu, without any reſpect to their faith, or incredulitie: *Huberus theſ.*19. Againe, Omnes reprobos, & electos æque per Chriſtum ſaluatos ſiue credant, ſiue non: That the reprobate as well as the elect are ſaued by Chriſt, whether they beleeue or not, *Huber.theſ.*270. That Chriſt dyed as well for the damned and reprobate, as for Peter and Paul: Iacobus Andre. colloq. Mompelgartenſ.p. 548. yet are not the reprobate ſaued, becauſe they deſpiſe this grace offered, and ſo are depriued of this reconciliation purchaſed by Chriſt, *Huber. theſ.*245.

The ſecond opinion is, Omnes & ſingulos homines beneficio & gratia vniuerſali ſummi patris eſſe per Chriſtum ſeruatos: That all men, and euery one by the vniuerſall grace of God the father in Chriſt, are ſaued: yet not without reſpect had to their faith: but they ſay further, Fidem in Deum naturalem eſſe, omnibus inditam & innatam: That this faith in God is naturally giuen vnto all: ſic Puckſius præfation. So that in effect they affirme the ſame thing, which the other doe, that by nature all men are actually ſaued by Chriſts death, if they doe not afterward wilfully reiect this grace.

The third opinion is, Quod ſit Dei propoſitum ſaluare omnes, & elegerit eos & prædeſtinarit vitæ æternæ, ſeruata tamen conditione: That it is Gods purpoſe, that all men ſhould be ſaued, and that he hath elected and predeſtinate them to eternall life, the condition kept, that is, if they beleeue: *Hemming.de gratia vniuerſal.p.*20. So alſo Suecanus: Deus vniuerſaliter omnium in Chriſto miſertus aſſumpſit humanum genus in reconciliationis fœdus: That God hauing mercie vpon all, hath receiued whole mankinde into the couenant of reconciliation, *de Prædeſtinat.*480. That is, as many as beleeue: which gift to beleeue they acknowledge to be of God, and the ſame not denied to any, but offered generally to all: and that it is in mans power to giue aſſent vnto grace offered, and to beleeue: Voluntatem à Deo doctam, & motam à ſpiritu ſancto poſſe ſe applicare ad gratiam, aſſentiri Euangelio, credere: That the will being taught of God, and ſomewhat ſtirred of the ſpirit, may applie it ſelfe to grace, giue aſſent to the Goſpell, beleeue, &c. Hemming.de libero arbit.

Theſe three opinions, though in ſome circumſtances differing from themſelues, as the firſt holdeth all men actually by nature to be ſaued by Chriſt, without any reſpect to their faith; the ſecond by nature, not excluding faith; the third by grace and faith, which they ſay is offered of God, and apprehended of mans free will: yet all theſe herein agree, that Chriſt was not giuen of his father to dye for a certaine and definite number of the elect, which they denie, but vniuerſally for all men in the world.

The firſt opinion, applying Chriſts death to all, as well vnbeleeuers as beleeuers, doth manifeſtly impugne the Scripture, which ſaith, God ſo loued the world, that he hath giuen his only begotten ſonne, &c. that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhould not periſh, &c. Ioh.3.16.

The ſecond, making faith a naturall gift, is contrarie alſo to the word: for that which is naturall is common to all: but all men haue not faith, 2.Theſſ.3.2.

The third, aſcribing power to mans free will to receiue and apprehend grace offered, gainſaith the truth which ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing, Ioh.15.5.

But leauing the ſeuerall abſurdities of theſe opinions, wee will deale againſt them all in that wherein they agree, concerning the vniuerſalitie of grace: and eſpecially againſt the latter, which ſeemeth to be much approued euen of ſome of our owne countrey men, and alreadie hath gotten ſome patrones and defenders in our Church. Wherefore this matter being waightie in it ſelfe, and daungerous for feare of further infection, wee will not lightly paſſe ouer this place, but take ſome paines, firſt to anſwere the arguments vſed by the aduerſe part, and then bring foorth our owne.

Their arguments are of two ſorts, either drawne directly from ſome places of Scripture, or from ſome ſhew and apparance of reaſon: of the firſt in the firſt place.

*Argum.*1. Firſt, they obiect ſuch places of Scripture, where it is directly affirmed, that Chriſt died for all men.

1. God will that all men ſhall be ſaued, 1.Tim.2.4. and verſ.5. Chriſt gaue himſelfe a ranſome for all men: *Huber.theſ.*70. *Puck.ration.*83.

2. Chriſt died for all, 2.Cor.5.verſ.15. *Huber.theſ.*87. *Pucks.ration.*79.

3. The Lord would haue no man periſh, but would haue all men come to repentance: 2.Pet.3.9.*Pucks.ration.*90.*Huber.theſ.*93.

4. *Chriſt gaue himſelfe for vs all,*Rom.8.32.

5. *Chriſt did taſte death for all men,*Hebr.2.9.

Out of theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture,they inferre and conclude,that Chriſts death is effectuall to all,and that in the purpoſe of God he was giuen generally for all men.

Contra. Firſt, to theſe places wee will anſwere in generall, and then in particular: that Chriſt died for all men, the Scripture ſo affirming,wee denie not: but becauſe elſewhere the Scripture ſaith,that Chriſt died for his ſheepe, Ioh.chap.10. for the Church, Epheſ.chap.1. He prayeth not for the world,Ioh.chap.17.much leſſe died for it: leaſt now the Scripture ſhould ſeeme to be contrarie to it ſelfe,we muſt not take the letter,but follow the ſenſe,where we finde mention made of the vniuerſalitie of Chriſts death: Chriſts death therefore is ſaid diuerſly to be vniuerſall,or to be giuen for all men.

1. The death of Chriſt,*ſecundum ſufficientiam,*in reſpect of the ſufficiencie and the fulnes of redemption thereof,hath ſatisfied for all men: but *ſecundum efficientiam,*it is efficacious and effectuall onely to thoſe,which were fore-ordained to life in Chriſt; thus Auguſtine diſtinguiſheth: Quod ad magnitudinem & potentiam precij, ſanguis Chriſti redemptio eſt totius mundi: quoniam tamen non omnes captiuitate eruti ſunt,redemptionis proprietas haud dubiè penes illos eſt, qui membra ſunt Chriſti,&c. In reſpect of the greatneſſe and price, the blood of Chriſt is the redemption of the whole world: but becauſe all are not redeemed from captiuitie,the proper effect of redemption is onely wrought in the members of Chriſt,Tom.7.ad articul.falſo.impoſit.

Obiect. This is a vaine diſtinction of ſufficiencie,and efficacie, Quia nil magis requiritur ad ſufficientiæ veritatem,quàm efficacitas: For there can be no ſufficiencie, vnleſſe the ſame be effectuall, *Pucks.ration.*2.

Reſponſ. 1. There is as great difference betweene ſufficiencie,and efficacie,as betweene δύναμις, ϗ ἔργον, facultie or abilitie,and the worke: as a tree firſt is good,there is the ſufficiencie; then it bringeth forth good fruit,which is the efficacie:the tree may be good,though it haue not alwaies good fruit: ſo there may be a kinde of ſufficiencie without efficacitie. Secondly, we ſay that the death of Chriſt is both ſufficient and efficacious in it ſelfe, though it be not to thoſe that periſh for want of beleefe:and it is efficacious alſo to them in ſome ſort, for through Chriſt they enioy what good thing ſoeuer they haue,though not after that ſingular manner,as it is to the faithfull: *ſic Iunius ad ration.*3.Puckſij.

To this purpoſe Saint *Ambroſe lib.*3.*de fide cap.*4. Ille quidem miſericordia ſua omnibus natus eſt,ſed perfidia hæreticorum fecit,vt non omnibus naſceretur,qui omnibus natus eſt: He in mercie was borne for all,but the vnfaithfulnes of the heretikes is the cauſe,that he, which was borne to all,is not borne for all. Likewiſe,*lib.*5.*in Luc c.*7.Si Chriſtus pro omnibus mortuus eſt, pro nobis tamen ſpecialiter paſſus eſt: If Chriſt died for all,yet more ſpecially he hath ſuffered for vs. What is this ſpeciall ſuffring of Chriſt but his effectuall dying onely for the elect?

*Magiſt.ſentent.lib.*3.*diſtinct.*20.liter.c. Chriſtus precium noſtræ redemptionis obtulit pro omnibus quantum ad ſufficientiam,ſed pro electis tantum,quantum ad efficaciam: Chriſt offered vp the price of our redemption for all in reſpect of the ſufficiencie,but for the elect only as concerning the efficacie.This diſtinction is receiued by *Thomas,Lyra,*and the whole ſchoolemen:Eſpenc.in 1.*Tim.p.*36.

2. Chriſt is ſaid to haue died for all,and that effectually, that is for all the elect: for as there is an vniuerſalitie of the wicked, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *All ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Ieſus Chriſts,*Philip.chap.2.verſ.21.that is,all falſe teachers: ſo there is an vniuerſalitie of the faithfull: as Chriſt ſaith,Iohn 12.*When I am lift vp from the earth,I will draw all men vnto me,*meaning all beleeuers: Omnes prædeſtinatos ad ſalutem: All ordained to ſaluation, as Auguſtine expoundeth it, *Tractat.*53. Likewiſe Iſai.54.They ſhall be all taught of God: that is all the faithfull. So one ſaith, Et populus Dei ſuam habet plenitudinem,&c. in electis & præſcitis ſua quædam cenſetur vniuerſitas,vt de toto mundo totus mundus,& de omnibus hominibus omnes homines videantur aſſumpti: The people of God hath a certaine fulnes,and there is a kind of vniuerſalitie in the elect, that out of the whole world, a whole world, and from among all men, all men in ſome ſort ſhould be deliuered, *Ambroſ.de vocat.Gentium lib.*1.*cap.*3.

3. Chriſt is ſaid to haue dyed for all; and all men are ſaid to bee redeemed by his death, becauſe as many as are redeemed, doe obtaine redemption onely by Chriſt: ſo is that place to bee vnderſtood,1.Corinth.chap.12.verſ.6. *God worketh all in all,*not euery man hath all gifts; but becauſe, what good gift ſoeuer there is in any man, it commeth onely of God. So Auguſtine ſaith, Dictum eſt, omnes iuſtificari per Chriſtum, non quia omnes iuſtificantur in Chriſto, ſed qui iuſtificantur non aliter iuſtificantur, quàm in Chriſto; ſicut dicimus omnes homines intrare in domum per vnam ianuam, quia non intrant niſi per ipſam: It is ſaid, many are iuſtified by Chriſt,not becauſe all are iuſtified in Chriſt, but they that are iuſtified,are not otherwiſe iuſtified,than in Chriſt,as we ſay,all men went into the houſe by that doore,becauſe none went in,but by it: Auguſtin.contra Iulian.lib.6.cap.12.

4. When the Scripture vſeth in this caſe theſe generall termes,omnes,omnia, all men,all things, we muſt not vnderſtand them vniuerſally,as comprehending euery particular,but indefinitely,as for *omnes homines,*all men,we vnderſtand *omnia hominum genera,*all ſorts of men: this is Auguſtines rule alſo,*tractat.in Iohan.*53. So it is ſaid, that Chriſt healed omnem morbum, euery diſeaſe,that is, euery kinde of diſeaſe,Matth.4.23.Decimatis omne olus: You tithe all herbes,that is, euery kinde, Luk.11.42. Omnis Iudæa exibat: All Iudea went foorth vnto Iohn, Mark.15.that is,out of euery part of Iudea.

5. Chriſt is ſaid to haue dyed for all: in reſpect of the externall preaching of the Goſpell, and common oblation of grace vnto all,which notwithſtanding is not auailable or effectuall in all: as in the Goſpell the marriage feaſt was prepared for all; but all that were called came not: For many are called(ſaith our Sauiour) *few choſen,*Matth.22.So the grace of God,*ex peccato euocat omnes communiter, ſuos excitat ſingulariter,*doth call all men from ſinne generally,but his elect he ſtirreth vp after a ſingular manner,and effectually.

Obiect. If God doe offer Chriſt outwardly to all,and yet all be not thereby called,hee ſhould ſeeme to mocke and diſſemble with men, *Pucks.ration.*57.

Reſponſ. Firſt,the calling of God in it ſelfe is effectuall to all, if all had grace to lay hold of it: now, if God giue grace vnto ſome to obey their calling, and thereby to be conuerted, and not to others,we muſt not be inquiſitiue to ſearch, but leaue it vnto God, whoſe iudgements may be hid and ſecret,but they are alwaies moſt iuſt: for he hath mercie on whom he will. Secondly,though the calling of God worke not it proper and naturall effect in the incredulous,vnto their conuerſion;yet it is effectuall,more accidentario, accidentally, being made vnto them, through the hardnes of their owne heart,the ſauour of death vnto death. Thirdly,Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth for this diſtinction of generall and effectuall calling: *lib.2.de vocat.Gentium cap.8. Præter illam generalem gratiam parciùs & occultiùs hominum corda pulſantem,excellentiore opere,largiore munere,potentiore virtute vocatio ſpecialis exeritur,&c.*Beſide the generall grace more ſparingly and ſecretly beating vpon mens hearts, there is a ſpeciall calling more excellent in working, of a larger gift,and more mightie in vertue.

THE PARTICVLAR ANSWERE TO the former places.

TO the firſt,that God would haue all men to be ſaued,we haue anſwered before,queſt.2.of this Controuerſie, part.1. and to this effect, that it cannot bee literally vnderſtoode, that God would abſolutely haue all men to be ſaued,for why then ſhould not all be ſaued? For who hath reſiſted Gods will? Rom.9.19. Neither can it be anſwered here,as ſometime by the old Pelagians, that Gods will is not fulfilled, becauſe man will not: for this were to make men mightier than God. The meaning then of the place is this: firſt,that God offereth the externall meanes of ſaluation to all: which if they refuſe,they are in fault themſelues,God is not to be blamed. Secondly, the Apoſtle,as Auguſtine ſaith,by all men,vnderſtandeth all ſorts of men: as high and low,Kings,Princes,and the people, as it may appeare by that which goeth before in this place. Thirdly,in the ſame ſenſe Chriſt is ſaid to giue himſelfe a raunſome for all men,that is,for all ſorts of men,or for all the elect,or ſufficiently for all in generall.

In the ſecond place, 2.Cor.5.15. the Apoſtle ſheweth, that howſoeuer the death of Chriſt is ſufficient for all, yet it is effectuall onely to the faithfull, to them, *That from henceforth liue not to themſelues, but to him that dyed for them,*verſ.15. and to ſuch as are new creatures, verſ.17. But all are not new creatures in Chriſt, therefore for all and to all Chriſts death is not effectuall.

In the third place S. Peter ſpeaketh to the faithfull, whom he calleth verſ.1.beloued, and God is patient toward vs, ſaith he, verſ.9. and would haue no man periſh: that is, none of vs,none of the faithfull and elect: *Sic Iunius reſponſ.ad ration.*90. And againe, The patience, long ſuffering,and bountifulneſſe of God, leadeth euery man to repentance: Rom.2.4. But thou (ſaith the Apoſtle) after thine hardneſſe,and heart that cannot repent,&c. They therefore which abuſe and deſpiſe the patience of God, are themſelues the cauſe of their deſtruction: God is not to be charged with it.

In the fourth place, Rom.8.32. the Apoſtle ſaying, Chriſt gaue himſelfe for vs all, meaneth the vniuerſalitie of the faithfull and elect: whom he hath predeſtinate, called, iuſtified, verſ.30.

In the fift place, Heb.2.9. where the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt did taſte death for all men, he afterward expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.10.ſaying, *That Chriſt brought many children to glory,*ſuch as are ſanctified,verſ.11.whom Chriſt vouchſafeth to call his brethren,verſ.12.and his children verſ.13. Theſe are not vniuerſally all men, but the faithfull and elect onely: Chriſt onely is the Prince of their ſaluation, whom he bringeth to glory, verſ.10.

*Argum.*2. Their ſecond generall argument is drawne from ſuch places of Scripture, where mention is made of the whole world, in the benefit of redemption: as Iohn 1.29, Behold the lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinne of the world: Iohn 6.51. The bread that I will giue is my fleſh, which I will giue for the life of the world: Iohn 12.47. I came not to iudge the world, but to ſaue the world: 2. Cor.5.19. God was in Chriſt, and reconciled the world to himſelfe. Theſe places are alleaged by *Hemingius lib. de vniuerſalitate gratiæ. Huberus, lib. theſeω: Puckſius, ration.*60.91. to proue the vniuerſalitie of the benefite of Chriſts death to all.

Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt is ſayd to take away the ſinnes of the world, in reſpect of the ſufficiencie of his death, which is able to ſatisfie in it ſelfe, not onely for the ſinnes of the world, but, as Thom. Aquinas ſaith, ſi plures mundi eſſent, if there were many worlds: yet is his death effectuall onely to thoſe that beleeue, and are ordayned vnto life. Epiſtol. decret. Gaij. Effuſio iuſti ſanguinis Chriſti tam diues fuit ad precium, vt ſi vniuerſitas captiuorum in redemptorem ſuum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent: The ſhedding of Chriſts righteous blood, was ſo rich to pay our ranſome, that if all the captiues did beleeue in their redeemer, none of them ſhould be held in the diuels bonds. Secondly, the world in Scripture is not alwayes taken for the vniuerſall companie of men both good and bad, but as it is ſometime taken onely for the wicked, as Iohn 14.30. The prince of this world commeth, &c. And Iohn 17.14. The world hath hated them: ſo alſo doth it ſometime ſignifie onely the elect companie diſperſed ouer the world: as Iohn 17.23. That the world may know that thou haſt ſent me. And againe, verſ.25. The world hath not knowne thee, but I haue knowne thee, and theſe haue knowne that thou haſt ſent me. So then there is a world that hath not knowne Chriſt, namely the wicked world: there is a world that hath knowne Chriſt, that is, the company of the elect: ſo Abraham is called the heire of the world, Rom.4.13. that is, the father of the faithfull, verſ.11. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth, *Tract. in Ioh.*53. Mundus appellatur in malis hominibus, qui toto terrarum orbe diffuſi ſunt: appellatur mundus in bonis, qui ſimiliter toto terrarum orbe diffuſi ſunt: vnde dicit Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum reconcilians ſibi: The world is vnderſtood of wicked men, that are diſperſed ouer the world: the world alſo is named of good men, that are ſo likewiſe diſperſed; as the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe. This world Chriſt came to ſaue, not to iudge, he gaue himſelfe for the life of this world: this is the reconciled world, as Auguſtine againe ſaith, Mundus damnatus quicquid præter Eccleſiam: mundus reconciliatus Eccleſia: The reconciled world is onely the Church: the damned world all thoſe that are beſide the Church.

Obiect. But Saint Iohn ſaith, Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſinnes, and not for our ſinnes onely, but for the ſinnes of the whole world: Chriſt then dyed not for the elect onely, (not for our ſinnes onely, ſayth the Apoſtle) but for all in the world: and therefore hee ſaith the whole world: *ſic Huber. theſ.*131.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Iohn in ſaying (not for our ſinnes onely, but, &c.) meaneth that Chriſt hath not ſatisfied by his death, for our ſinnes that now beleeue, ſaith the Apoſtle, but for as many as ſhall beleeue, while the world ſtandeth: as our Sauiour ſaith, I pray not for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall beleeue in me through their word: Iohn 17.21. Secondly, by the whole world the Apoſtle may here as well vnderſtand the vniuerſall company of the faithfull, as he ſaith, The whole world lyeth in wickedneſſe, 1. Iohn 5.19. meaning the wicked onely. Therefore Auguſtine writeth well, *Epiſtol.*48. Totus mundus in maligno poſitus eſt propter zizania, quæ ſunt per totum mundum, & Chriſtus propitiatio eſt peccatorum totius mundi propter triticum, quod eſt per totum mundum: The whole world lyeth in euill, becauſe of the tares throughout the whole world, and Chriſt is the propitiation of the ſinnes of the whole world, becauſe of the good wheate throughout the world.

*Argum.*3. Their third generall argument is grounded vpon ſuch places of Scripture, where the fall of mankind by Adam, and the redemption by Chriſt are compared together: as Rom.5. verſ.18. As by the offence of one the fault came vpon all to their condemnation: ſo by the iuſtifying of one the benefit abounded towards all men, &c. And againe, 1.Cor.15.22. As in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made aliue: Chriſts redemption then is as generall, as Adams fall; vnleſſe ye will ſay, that Adams ſinne exceedeth the merite of Chriſt. But all are dead in Adam: Ergo, all are redeemed by Chriſt: *Huber. Theſ.*48. *Suecan. de prædeſt. pag.*486.492.494. & alibi.

*Anſw.*1. Auguſtines expoſition may here ſafely be admitted, that all men are ſaid to be iuſtified by Chriſt, not that all men are actually iuſtified by him, but becauſe all that are iuſtified, are not otherwiſe iuſtified, then by him: as all that are dead, are dead in *Adam: Auguſt. de natur. & grat. cap.*40. And againe he ſaith, Sicut in Adam omnes, &c. as in Adam all die, &c. Sicut omnes qui moriuntur, non niſi in Adam moriuntur, &c. As all that die, do not die but in Adam; ſo all that are made aliue, are made aliue in Chriſt. Auguſt. Hieronym. So then as all that pertaine to Adam, in the firſt generation, are dead in Adam; ſo all that by regeneration and new birth are engraft into Chriſt, are made aliue by him. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, that all they which are iuſtified by Chriſt, ſhall raigne in life by Chriſt, verſ.17. but all that are of Adam ſhall not inherite eternall life: Ergo, all are not vniuerſally iuſtified by Chriſt, neither dyed Chriſt in that ſenſe for all. 3. Neither doth it follow, that if more periſh by Adam, then are redeemed by Chriſt, that the grace of Chriſt ſhould be of leſſe force, then the ſinne of Adam. Firſt, becauſe they which haue no fruite in Chriſts death, are depriued thereof through their owne vnbeleefe, not for want of any ſufficiencie in the raunſome and price of redemption. Againe, though ſo many ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, as are dead in Adam, yet herein grace ſhould be but equall to the ſinne of Adam: as many for as many: But now the Apoſtle preferreth grace, not in reſpect of multitude or number of the redeemed, but in a double regard. Firſt, Adams ſin brought death, grace by Chriſt giueth life: now it is an eaſier thing for many to periſh, then for one to be reſtored: Adam alone loſt himſelfe and all the world: but all mankind ioyned together cannot ſaue a ſoule: grace therefore is preferred in reſpect of the difficultie of the worke. In this ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.5.17. If through the offence of one, death raigned; much more ſhall they, which receiue abundance of grace, reigne in life, &c. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſayth, The fault came of one offence to condemnation, verſ.16. that is, onely originall ſinne, which we deriue from Adam, maketh vs guiltie of condemnation: but the gift is of many offences to iuſtification: in Chriſt not onely our originall, but actuall ſinnes alſo are pardoned. This then is the preeminence of grace.

The other place, 1.Cor.15. is either to be vnderſtood of the reſurrection, or rather of the life of the Saints in glorie: for the Apoſtle ſaith, all ſhall be made aliue in Chriſt: not that they alreadie are: And in this ſenſe it maketh nothing for the vniuerſalitie of grace. And if we vnderſtand it of redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, by (all) here, the elect onely are ſignified, namely, they which are of Chriſt, as verſ.23. And ſo Ambroſe vpon this place expoundeth it, vpon theſe words, 1.Corinth.15. Sicut in Adam,&c. As in Adam all die: Sicut Adam peccans mortem inuenit, & omnes ex eius origine tenuit: ita Chriſtus mortem vincens, omnibus qui ſunt ex eius corpore vitam acquiſiuit: As Adam ſinning wrought death vpon all of his offſpring; ſo Chriſt hath purchaſed life to all that are of his body: vel ſicut,&c. or as in Adam all, both iuſt and vniuſt do die: ſo in Chriſt all, both beleeuers and vnbeleeuers ſhall riſe, though vnto puniſhment.

Argum.4. Their fourth argument out of Scripture, is from ſuch places, which ſeeme to extend the benefites purchaſed by Chriſts death generally to all.

Firſt they vrge that place, Ioh.1.9. This is the true light, that lightneth euery man which commeth into the world: Ergo, the light of grace is common to all: *Pucks ration.*55.

Anſw. Firſt, this place muſt be vnderſtood not of that ſingular and eſpeciall light of grace, which is giuen onely to the elect, but of the light of nature, or common grace, which is infuſed into all: for what light he meaneth, is plainely ſhewed before, verſ.4. In it was life, and the life was the light of men: he ſpeaketh of the naturall life and light, and that capacitie of reaſon, which is in all by nature. Secondly, if we ſhould vnderſtand the light of peculiar grace, then it would follow, that not onely grace is offered, but receiued of all: for this light is ſayd verily and indeed to lighten all. Thirdly, Auguſtines expoſition may here ſafely be receiued: Illuminat omnes homines, i.omnis generis homines: He lighteneth all men, that is, all ſorts of men: or thus, Illuminat omnem hominem, quia niſi ab ipſo nullus illuminatur: He lighteneth all men, becauſe there is none lightened but by him: *Enchirid.cap.*96.

Obiect.2. Rom.11.32. God hath ſhut vp all vnder vnbeleefe, that he might haue mercie vpon all Mercie then is ordayned for all.

Anſw. The meaning of the place is this, God will haue mercie vpon all, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for of them the Apoſtle entreateth throughout the whole chapter: Intelligitur (ſaith Auguſtine) de Iudæis & Gentilibus quos Deus prædeſtinauit: It is to be vnderſtood of thoſe of the Iewes and Gentiles, whom God had predeſtinate: *de ciuitat.dei.lib.*21.*cap.18.&* 24.

Obiect.3. Coloſſ.1.20 It pleaſed God the Father,&c. by him to reconcile all things to himſelfe,&c. both the things in earth, and the things in heauen, through the blood of his croſſe: Ergo, Chriſt dyed for all: Pucks.82.

Anſw. Firſt, if they will ſo ſtrictly vrge this word, omnia, all things, Chriſt ſhall not onely be the redeemer of men, but of all things in the world. Secondly, this word therefore is to be reſtrained, according to the matter or ſubiect, wherof the Apoſtle entreateth: who hauing firſt ſet downe the worke of the creation, whereby all things viſible and inuiſible were created, verſ.16. he commeth then to the worke of redemption, which he extendeth not to all things viſible, and inuiſible, as he did the creation, but reſtraineth to the Church, whereof Chriſt is the head, verſ.18. which Church conſiſteth of two parts, of the Saints in heauen, and the Saints in earth, verſ.20. As the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere: Of whom is named the whole familie in heauen, and in earth, Epheſ.3.15. The benefit of redemption therefore belongeth onely to the Church and familie of the Saints.

Obiect.4. Iohn 17.2. Thou haſt giuen him power ouer all fleſh, that hee ſhould giue eternall life to all them that thou haſt giuen him: Ergo, all fleſh is reconciled vnto God by Chriſt: *Huber.theſ.*161.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, Chriſt hath power ouer all fleſh, therefore all fleſh is reconciled by Chriſt: for he hath power ouer all creatures in heauen and earth, euen ouer bruit beaſts, yet they haue no part in this reconciliation. Secondly, it is one thing to haue power giuen ouer all fleſh, another thing to haue men giuen vnto Chriſt out of the world, as Auguſtine ſaith: Poteſtatem quidem omnis hominis accepit, vt liberet, quos voluerit; damnet, quos voluerit: ſed eos ſibi eſſe datos oſtendit, quibus omnibus det vitam æternam: He hath receiued power ouer all men to deliuer whom he will, and to condemne whom he will: but they onely are giuen vnto him, to all whom he giueth eternall life: in Iohan. tractat. 111. Thirdly, that not all men, but onely ſome in this ſenſe are giuen vnto Chriſt, he himſelfe witneſſeth: I haue declared thy name vnto the men, whom thou gaueſt me out of the world. All the world therefore was not giuen vnto Chriſt, but a certaine number choſen out of the world. And thus much of their obiections out of Scripture: let vs now ſee ſome other of their arguments.

Argum. 2. Their ſecond generall argument is drawne from thoſe abſurdities and inconueniences, which do follow, as they imagine, vpon this doctrine, that God in his eternall counſell hath predeſtinate ſome vnto damnation, as he hath ordained others to life.

Obiect. 1. If God haue appointed ſome vnto damnation, and it is impoſſible that ſuch ſhould not ſinne, neither can Gods ſentence be altered: it ſhould ſeeme then, that they are not in fault themſelues, ſeeing they can no wayes eſcape the wrath of God: how then can it be auoided, but that God ſhould be the author of ſin? Sic Huberus in theſib. Suecan. p. 483. & 500.

Anſw. 1. I anſwere with Auguſtine: Qui deficiunt, non ex opere Dei, ſed ex voluntate ſua deficiunt, nec impelluntur vt cadant, nec eijciuntur vt deſerant; caſuri tamen ab eo, qui falli non poteſt, præſciuntur: They which fall away, or ſinne, do not fall away, by any thing that God doth or worketh, but of their owne will and voluntarie inclination; they are neyther compelled to fall, nor caſt off to that intent they ſhould forſake God: but God, who cannot be deceiued, onely foreſaw they ſhould fall. The fall of man therefore is voluntarie, and none the cauſe of it but himſelfe: God foreſeeth (from whoſe eyes nothing can be hid) that ſinne ſhould be committed in the world: but hee decreed it not, but onely foreordained the puniſhment of ſinne: And although ſin be euill, yet the puniſhment thereof, as it is appointed of God, is iuſt and good: Non ipſe ignis æternus, qui cruciaturus eſt impios, malus eſt, habens modum & ordinem ſuum, ſed cruciatus eſt damnatis malus, quorum peccatis eſt debitus: Euerlaſting fire, which ſhall torment the wicked, is not euill it ſelfe, being not without ſome meaſure, and order, but the torment is euill to the damned, to whoſe ſinnes it is due.

Artic. falſ. impoſit. 16.

De natura boni cap. 37.

Let vs heare for this matter the teſtimonie of Suecanus a Patron alſo of vniuerſall grace: Deum indurare, aut iuſto odio deſtinare, quos vult; & homines interea ſponte, non coactè malefacere &c. ſimul ſubordinata non pugnantia: Theſe two ſayings, for God to harden; and ordaine to be hated, whom he will; and for men notwithſtanding to doe euill willingly, not of conſtraint, are not contrarie; but one ſeruing and ſubordinate to another. Noſtræ voluntates manent liberæ ſub diuina prouidentia: poſita prima cauſa, non tolluntur mediæ cauſæ, ſed potius ſtabiliuntur: Our owne wils remaine free vnder Gods prouidence, the firſt cauſe doth not take away the ſecond, but rather eſtabliſheth them: hæc ille de prædeſtinat. pag. 622. His meaning is this, that though Gods will and decree be the firſt cauſe of all things, and ſo of the ſaluation, or damnation of men; yet are there ſecond cauſes, whereby Gods will is effected: as the corrupt will of man is the cauſe of ſinne, and ſinne the cauſe of damnation. It is not Gods will, that any man ſhould come to condemnation, who firſt willingly falling into ſin, doth not iuſtly deſerue the ſame. So then Gods decree is not the cauſe of ſin, but the corruption onely of mans will. Thus haue we the teſtimonie of an aduerſarie very cleare on our ſide.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth, lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium. c. 4. Æterna Dei cognitio nulla nos vrget neceſſitate peccandi, &c. The eternall knowledge of God, doth not vrge any neceſſitie to ſinne, neither doth iniquitie proceede from whence commeth equitie, &c. From the free will of men tranſgreſſion firſt tooke beginning.

Magiſt. ſenten. thus lib. 1. diſt. 41. liter. E. Non reprobatio ita eſt cauſa mali, ſicut prædeſtinatio cauſa boni, neq; obduratio ita facit hominem malum, ſicut miſericordia bonum. Reprobation is not ſo the cauſe of euill, as predeſtination is the cauſe of good: neither doth obduration ſo make a man euill, as mercie maketh him good.

Anſw. 2. But if God would (they ſay) men might be preſerued from ſin: why ſhould hee rather giue his grace to one, then to another? Auguſtine alſo very well anſwereth this matter: Cur illum retineat, illum autem non retineat, nec poſſibile eſt comprehendere, nec licitum inueſtigare: But why he withholdeth ſome from ſin, and not others, it is neither poſſible to comprehend, nor lawfull to enquire. The Apoſtle alſo may reſolue vs herein, who ſayth, according as God ſpake to Moſes, I will haue mercie vpon whom I will haue mercie, and will haue compaſſion vpon whom I will haue compaſſion: Rom. 9. 15. Other reaſon we muſt not be deſirous to know, neither ſhall we be euer able to comprehend.

Obiet. 2. But why ſhould God ſaue ſome, and not others, ſeeing they are all his creatures and workmanſhip? how is not God vniuſt, or partiall in ſo doing,and an acceptor of perſons? *Suecan.p.*480.de prædeſtinat.

Anſw. 1. Saint Paul herein doth ſatisfie them to the full: firſt he ſaith,Who art thou O man,that pleadeſt againſt God? Rom.9.20.It is an vnreaſonable thing,that the creatures ſhould call the creator to account,or demaund a reaſon of his doings. Secondly, hee ſheweth by the example of the potter,that God may with better right diſpoſe of his creature, as it pleaſeth him, than the potter maketh of one lumpe, veſſels of honour and diſhonour. Thirdly, the Apoſtle giueth a reaſon, which may content vs,why he electeth ſome,namely,to ſhew the richnes of his mercie, and why he reiecteth others,namely,that his power may be knowne,verſ.22.Gods glorie then,which ſtandeth partly in mercie,partly is ſeene in his iuſtice,cannot appeare to the full, but in the ſaluation of ſome,and damnation of others: he therefore that thinketh Gods dealing herein to be vniuſt,is an enemie to the glorie of God.

Anſw. 2. Auguſtine hath a ſingular ſpeech of this matter: Nemo (ſaith he) iuſtitiæ Deum arguat, ſi vni indebitam donauerit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam pœnam: an audebit debitor creditorem iniquitatis arguere, ſi alteri donans, ab eo, quod debebat, exegerit? Let no man ſeeme to charge or accuſe Gods iuſtice,if he giue grace to one vndue,and to another render puniſhment due and deſerued: ſhall the debtor accuſe the creditor of vniuſt dealing,if he forgiue one his debt, and exact of thee that which thou oweſt? *de prædeſt.lib.*1.4. Neither can God be charged with partialitie, or hauing reſpect of perſons,in that of his free grace and mercie he ſaueth ſome,and leaueth the reſt in their ſinnes: he is ſaid to reſpect perſons,that for ſome qualitie or outward circumſtance preferreth one before another: as the Iudge is ſaid to reſpect the perſon, when hee heareth the rich and the great men,before the ſmall and the poore,Deut.1.17. As Samuel being ſent to annoynt one of Ieſſe his ſonnes,reſpected the outward comely perſon of the elder brethren: But with God there is no ſuch reſpect of any ſuch outward condition or qualitie. Act.10.35.God is no acceptor of perſons,but in euery nation he that feareth God: that is, God reſpecteth not ẏ perſon of men,that is,of what kindred or countrie they are: So is it likewiſe taken,Rom.2.10,There is no reſpect of perſons before God: that is,whether they be Iewes or Gentiles.It is not therefore of any thing in men themſelues, that ſome are ſaued and not others, but of the free mercie of God: God ſeeth nothing in man, thereby to be moued to ſhew him mercie: therefore he reſpecteth no mans perſon: but all is of grace.

*Obiect.*2. The perſon of man betokeneth not onely ſome externall qualitie,or outward reſpect in man,but the eſſence and ſubſtance of man alſo: As in the Trinitie, the name of perſon is taken ſubſtantially.Therefore if God be no acceptor of perſons,one man cannot any waies be preferred before another: *Suecan.de prædeſtinat.p.*480.

Anſw. Firſt,the perſon of God and the perſon of man, are not well compared together: for as much as there is nothing accidentall in God;but whatſoeuer, is belonging to his eſſence: but ſo is it not in man,in whom many things are accidentall, and ſubiect to chaunge. Secondly, though the perſon in the Trinitie be ſubſtantiall,yet is it not all one with the ſubſtance of the Trinitie:for there is but one ſubſtance of the Trinitie; and if the perſon were the ſubſtance, then ſhould there be but one perſon alſo,which were great hereſie to affirme, and ſo are they ouerthrowne by their owne example. Thirdly,if they will ſo ſtrictly exclude all reſpect of man on Gods behalfe; how commeth it to paſſe,that beleeuers are ſaued,all vnbeleeuers damned? vnleſſe the reſpect of their faith make a difference between them,through the gracious and free acceptation of God.Wherefore God is ſayd not to accept the perſons of men no otherwiſe than I haue ſayd, that is, not to regard any thing in man,or of man, whereby originally one man ſhould haue a preeminence to another.

3. They are all Gods creatures,we graunt: but what then? muſt either all be ſaued,or ſhould God refraine from creating thoſe,whom he foreſaw ſhould fall? No,it is ſufficient that God is not the cauſe of their fall. And if God in his preſcience ſaw they ſhould fall,and ſhould for this cauſe deſiſt from creating them,that they might not fall: then ſhould the preſcience of God be deceiued in foreſeeing that to be,which ſhall neuer be. Auguſtine alſo doth very well touch this point:

Contr.artic. falſ. impoſit.3.4.

Creat homines ſecundum conſilium bonæ voluntatis ſuæ,reparaturus in multis,quod ipſe fecit,& puniturus, quod non fecit: God,according to the counſell of his good will,did create men,being to repayre in them that,which he had made,and to puniſh that, which he made not.

*Obiect.*3. If it be ſo, that God hath caſt lots ouer euery man, and hath alreadie decreed concerning their ſaluation or damnation; then all exhortation and preaching, and all endeuour to liue a godly life,is in vaine: for,de vnoquoque fiet,vt prædeſtinatus eſt, it ſhall befall euery man,as he is predeſtinate. So the Pelagians obiected, *de perſeuer.lib.*2.15.

Anſw. 1. The doctrine of predeſtination doth no more hinder godly endeuour and exhortation,than the doctrine of Gods preſcience and foreknowledge: Sicut non deterremur, (ſaith Auguſtine) à confitenda præſcientia Dei,&c. As we are not terrified,or frayed from confeſſing Gods preſcience, becauſe whether men liue well or euill, tales erunt, quales præſciuit Deus, they ſhall be none other then God foreſaw they ſhould be: ſo, ſaith he, we ought not for this cauſe to be driuen from confeſſing predeſtination, Auguſtin.ibid.

2. Auguſtine alſo in another place putteth this example: As (ſaith he) though the Apoſtle confeſſe, that God worketh in vs both the will and the deede, yet hee ceaſeth not euery where to exhort vs, both to will and worke thoſe things that pleaſe God. Our Sauiour Chriſt alſo biddeth vs to beleeue in him: Ye beleeue in God, beleeue alſo in me, Iohn 14. Nec tamen eius falſa eſt ſententia: And yet it is true which our Sauiour ſaith, That no man can come vnto him, vnleſſe his father draw him: for faith is the gift of God. So men notwithſtanding ought to endeuour themſelues to walke in obedience before God, although they be predeſtinate thereunto.

De perſeuerant.lib.2. cap.14.

3. Chriſt alſo (ſaith Auguſtine) teaching his Apoſtles to pray, further telleth them, that God knoweth what is needfull for vs, before we aske, and yet wee ought to pray notwithſtanding. So although God foreſaw and did predeſtinate the end of euery man, yet wee muſt exhort and ſtirre vp one another to all holines of life, thereby to make ſure our election, as Saint Peter ſaith, 2.Pet.1. verſ.10.

4. I will alſo adioyne Maſter Philpots learned and godly anſwere: Some (ſaith he) for an extreame refuge in their euill doing runne to Gods predeſtination and election, ſaying: If I be elected of God to ſaluation, I ſhall be ſaued, whatſoeuer I doe: but ſuch be great tempters of God, and abominable blaſphemers of Gods holie election, and caſt themſelues downe from the pinacle of the temple in preſumption, that God may preſerue them by his Angels through predeſtination. Such verily may reckon themſelues to be none of Gods elect children, that will do euill that good may enſue; whoſe damnation the Apoſtle ſaith, is iuſt: Gods predeſtination ought with a ſimple eye to be conſidered, to make vs more warily to walke according to Gods word: for this is the end and fruit of our election, That wee ſhould be holie and blameleſſe in his ſight, Epheſ.1. *Epiſtol. ad congregat.Chriſtian.pag.*1832.

Gregorie hath an excellent ſaying, which may ſerue as a full anſwere to this obiection: as he is alleaged, *Cauſ.*23.*qu.*4.*c.*21.Obtineri nequaquã poſſunt, quæ prædeſtinata non fuerunt, &c. Thoſe things cannot be obtained, which are not predeſtinate: but thoſe things, which holie men effect by their prayer, were predeſtinate to be obtained by prayer: for predeſtination is ſo diſpoſed of God, that they which are elected ſhould come vnto it by labour. Wherefore predeſtination doth not take away the meanes, as prayer, inſtruction, exhortation, which tend vnto it.

*Obiect.*4. To what end commanded Chriſt, that the Goſpell ſhould be preached to euery creature, if it were not Gods meaning that all men ſhould come to the knowledge of the truth, and ſo be ſaued: otherwiſe the Lord ſhould ſeeme to purpoſe one thing and doe another? Sic Huber. in theſib.

Contra. Firſt, God calleth all men generally by the preaching of the Goſpell, neither is God to be blamed, if they obey not their calling, which in it ſelfe is ſufficient, but they onely are in fault that refuſe it: As Saint Ambroſe well ſaith, In alÿs præualuiſſe gratiam, in alÿs reſiluiſſe naturam: That in ſome grace preuaileth, in ſome their owne nature reſiſteth. He ſpeaketh of thoſe, to whom the Goſpell is preached, *lib.2.de vocat.Gent.cap.*8. Secondly, it followeth not, that becauſe the Goſpell is preached to all, God hath decreed to ſaue all: for Chriſt commaunded his Apoſtles to preach vnto thoſe the Goſpell of peace, that ſhould notwithſtanding neither heare them nor receiue it, Matth.10.13. So Ezechiel is ſent to a people, that will not heare, Ezech.2.5. And why may not the Goſpell be preached in like ſort to many that ſhall periſh? Thirdly, the cauſes therefore why the Goſpell is preached to all, and yet all are not ordained to be ſaued, are theſe two chiefly: firſt, becauſe the elect and the reprobate are mixed together in earth, neither is it knowne vnto men, whether euery man appertaineth, therefore is the Goſpell offered to all, that ſome might be ſaued. And it is more agreeable to Gods mercie, that euen the reprobate ſhould haue the externall meanes of ſaluation offered vnto them for the elects ſake among them, than that the elect ſhould be defrauded thereof becauſe of the other. Of this Auguſtine writeth well: Correptio medicinaliter omnibus adhibenda eſt, etiamſi ſalus ægrotantis incerta ſit: vt ſi is, qui corripitur ad numerum prædeſtinatorum pertinet, ſit ei correptio ſalubre medicamentum; ſi autem non pertinet, ſit pœnale tormentum: de corrept.grat.cap.13. The medicine muſt be giuen to all, though it be vncertaine who ſhall haue their health: that if hee that is rebuked be of the predeſtinate, his chaſtiſement ſhall be healthfull to him; if not, it ſhall be a penall torment. So then the ſecond reaſon is, that the wicked may be left inexcuſable, when as the word of God is preached vnto them, and they regard it not.

Huberus here obiecteth, *theſ.*304. If it be ſo, that the word of God be vnto ſome the ſauour of death vnto death, it were better neuer to heare it, than that the hearing thereof ſhould be to ſome to their condemnation.

Contra. 1. It is an abſurd conſequent, that the word ſhould not be preached at all, becauſe ſome profit not by it: by the ſame reaſon, becauſe ſome in the Sacrament doe eate and drinke their owne damnation,it might be inferred, that it were good for none to receiue it : or becauſe ſome abuſe meate and drinke to gluttonie and drunkenneſſe; that therefore none ſhould eate or drinke. 2. That it were better for the wicked, neuer to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they haue knowne it to turne away,&c.as Saint Peter ſaith, 2.Epiſt.2.21.We graunt: but it followeth not, that it were better not to haue it knowne at all: It is better, that by the preaching of the Goſpell ſome ſhould be ſaued,though other be left without excuſe, than by not preaching,to helpe to excuſe vnbeleeuers, none ſhould be ſaued.

Obiect.5. This obiection is not much differing from the former : Seeing that Baptiſme is offered to all : Goe and baptize all nations, Matth.28.ver.19. grace alſo together with Baptiſme is offered : for God would neuer haue inuited all men to Baptiſme,if he would not impart vnto them that grace,which is ſealed by Baptiſme : *Sic Heming.de vniuerſal.grat.pag.*75.

Contra. 1.That Baptiſme is auailable only to thoſe that beleeue,the Scripture teſtifieth,Mar.16. He that beleeueth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaued? And to beleeue is the worke of God, Ioh.6.29. And to them onely,that are ordained to euerlaſting life,is it giuen to beleeue, Act.13.48. Therefore to them onely is Baptiſme of efficacie. 2. As before we ſaid of the preaching of the Goſpel, ſo now of Baptiſme : that they are offered to all,that amongſt many,ſuch as are ordained to life, ſhould be ſaued : for it were not meete, that becauſe ſome are found abuſers and prophaners of the Sacraments,therefore they ſhould be denied to all. 3. If all in Baptiſme are verily partakers of grace,how are not all ſaued? If they anſwere,that through their owne negligence this grace is loſt, which is their onely anſwere here, Heming.pag.75. they ſpeake contrarie to the Scripture, which teſtifieth,that whom God loueth,he loueth to the end,Ioh.13.1. And that the gifts of God are without repentance,Rom.11. But of this more God willing afterward.

Obiect.6. The doctrine of predeſtination,ſay ſome,is a doctrine of deſpaire: for if it be ſo,that God hath decreed ſome to damnation from the beginning,what comfort now remaineth to thoſe that are in deſpaire,and diſtreſſe of conſcience,if we cannot aſſure them,that the mercie and grace of God is free for all men,and not denied to any?

Anſw. 1. The doctrine of predeſtination,is a true and ſound doctrine, yet not at all times, nor in the hearing of all perſons to be vttered : for ſo Saint Paul ſaith, That he gaue vnto ſome milke, not ſtrong meate. for they were not able to beare it, 1.Corin.3.2. The doctrine of predeſtination is ſtrong meate,and therefore not to be miniſtred to the weake and bruſed conſcience. Hæc vna eſt cauſa tacendi verum,(as Auguſtine ſaith) ne peiores faciamus,qui non intelligunt, dum volumus eos,qui intelligunt, facere doctiores: This is one cauſe of concealing the truth,leaſt we make them worſe,that vnderſtand not,while wee would teach thoſe, which are of better capacitie. He preſcribeth alſo the manner how predeſtination ſhould be taught and handled : namely, in the hearing of the faithfull,to entreate onely of election : But if any man be diſpoſed likewiſe to touch the other part of reprobation : Non de ipſis,qui in populo audiunt,dicendum eſt per ſecundam perſonam, ſed de alijs ad ipſos per tertiam: He muſt in no wiſe ſpeake in the ſecond perſon to thoſe that are preſent,but of others in their hearing in the third perſon, *lib.2.de perſeuer.cap.*23.

De perſeuer. lib.2.cap.16.

2. This doctrine notwithſtanding,there is ſufficient place for comfort : If any man doubt of his ſaluation, wee muſt neither build vpon a falſe ground, to comfort them; as to beare them in hand, that God hath a purpoſe to ſaue all men: nor yet referre them to Gods eternall decree, which is too ſtrong meate for them in that weake eſtate to beare: But as if a man ſhould denie that the fire is hot,or that the Sunne ſhineth,we would vſe no better argument, to perſwade him, than by experience of the effects, as how the fire burneth, and the Sunne giueth light : ſo in this caſe to aſſure a man of ſaluation,we would exhort him to vſe the ſecondarie meanes, as faith, repentance,to beleeue in Chriſt,and as the Apoſtle ſaith,to make his election ſure by good works: And by the experience of Gods mercie and goodnes,which he hath felt,to grow vp vnto the aſſurance of his fauour.

3. I will conclude with Auguſtine, who thinketh this doctrine of predeſtination to be a doctrine not of deſpayre and diſtruſt, but of comfort and confidence : Abſit à vobis ideo deſperare de vobis,quoniam ſpem veſtram in ipſo habere iubeamini,non in vobis: An verendum eſt,ne tum de ſe homo deſperet,quando ſpes eius ponenda demonſtratur in Deo? God forbid that you ſhould deſpayre of your ſelues,becauſe ye are willed to put your truſt in God,and not in your ſelues : Is it to be feared,leſt man ſhould then deſpayre of himſelfe, when hee is taught to place his hope and truſt in God? *de perſeuer.lib.2.cap.*23. For this the doctrine of predeſtination teacheth vs, that whatſoeuer is in vs, that is good,it neither is of our ſelues,nor yet commeth vnto vs by chaunce,but is beſtowed vpon vs freely, as God in mercie in the beginning had appointed.

Huberus further obiecteth thus : If it be ſo that Chriſt dyed not for all,but onely for ſome,then all comfort and conſolation is taken away: as if a man ſhould thus reaſon: Some men are elected to ſaluation in Chriſt,I am a man : *Ergo,*I ſhall be ſaued. This were a weake argument of comfort, concluding onely vpon particulars, *Huber.p.*20.97.

Contra. 1. If we ſhould draw our comfort immediatly from Gods eternall will and decree, our aduerſaries muſt needes fall into the ſame ſtraits of particularities : for it is certaine, that in the day of iudgement all ſhall not be ſaued, but ſome muſt goe into euerlaſting paine, others to eternall life, as God in the beginning had decreed. Wherefore there muſt be a certaine number of ſuch as are ordained to life. 2. To aſſure our ſelues then of our ſaluation before God, we muſt not runne immediatly vnto Gods ſecret decree and counſell, as though by ſome extraordinarie ſpeculation or reuelation, we could attaine to the knowledge thereof : but we muſt iudge of our election, by the fruites and effects thereof, as our faith, vocation, ſanctification : and this Snecanus ſheweth at large, pag.466. Our argument then of comfort grounded vpon the word of God, is this : Whoſoeuer beleeueth in Chriſt, ſhall be ſaued, I beleeue in Chriſt : Ergo, I hope to be ſaued ; So then our comfort ariſeth not from any particulars, but from the vniuerſall promiſes of God made to all thoſe which beleeue. But in the aſſumption of this argument, two things may trouble vs : firſt, if Sathan ſhall tell vs, that wee beleeue not, how we may aſſure our ſelues of faith. The remedie againſt this tentation is this: We muſt examine our faith by the fruits thereof: as 1.Ioh.2.3. Hereby we are ſure we know him, if we keepe his commandements. Neither are we to be diſmaied, though we finde in our ſelues ſome contrarie motions of feare, doubtfulnes, and ſuch like. But though our faith be yet imperfect, we muſt conſider how Chriſt did ſuccour and cheriſh the weake in faith, as it was written of him, Iſai.24. that hee ſhould not breake the bruiſed reede, nor quench the ſmoaking flaxe : as alſo we muſt pray continually with the Apoſtles, Lord encreaſe our faith ; and with him in the Goſpell : Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeleefe, Mark.9. The ſecond thing that may trouble vs, is, to know how we attaine to faith : for all haue not faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2.Theſſ.3.2. Our remedie here, is to acknowledge faith, and all other gifts to come from God, not to thinke it ſtandeth in our owne power to beleeue : and therefore by faithfull prayer to ſeeke for this precious gift at Gods hands.

3. Who ſeeth not then, but that this is a more ſure and readie way vnto comfort, as wee haue ſhewed, then to beare men in hand, that God would haue all men to be ſaued, and that Chriſt dyed for all? So their argument of comfort ſtandeth thus : Chriſt dyed for all, euen for thoſe that ſhall be damned, therefore he dyed for me. What comfort now can a troubled conſcience reape by the death of Chriſt, ſeeing that notwithſtanding hee may be damned : and that Chriſt hath done as much for thoſe that ſhall be damned, as for other? May not the diſtreſſed conſcience iuſtly ſay vnto ſuch, Miſerable comforters are ye, and phiſitions of no value? Iob.13.4. And thus farre of their arguments, and obiections, that do maintaine the vniuerſalitie of the grace of God. Now we wil come, by euident teſtimonies of ſcripture, & other effectuall reaſons to eſtabliſh and make knowne the truth.

THAT CHRIST DIED ONLY for the elect.

OVr ſentence then is this, that whereas all men were by nature the children of wrath, and like to periſh in themſelues, God from the reſt hath according to his good pleaſure elected ſome, to whom he hath appointed Chriſt Ieſus to be their Mediatour and Redeemer. And here we are to conſider, firſt the beginning of election: ſecondly, the progreſſe thereof: laſtly, the end: The beginning, in that God according to his good pleaſure, elected his in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, Epheſ.1.4. The progreſſe, in that hee hath giuen the elect vnto Chriſt to be ſaued, and redeemed by him, Epheſ.1.5. He hath predeſtinate vs to be adopted through Ieſus Chriſt : The end is, that whom hee hath predeſtinate, (that is the beginning) called, iuſtified, (there is the progreſſe) them alſo he hath glorified, Rom.8.30. he hath purpoſed to bring them to glorie: that is the end. That now Chriſt onely was giuen to dye for the companie of the elect : not that it is not ſufficient for the whole world in it ſelfe, but becauſe the efficacie and benefit of Chriſts death is onely applied by faith vnto the beleeuers : and faith onely is of the elect : That therefore Chriſt died onely for the elect, it remaineth now to be proued. Our arguments we will diſtribute into three places: firſt we will produce direct places of ſcripture for our purpoſe. Secondly, reaſons grounded vpon ſcripture. Thirdly, we will ſhew the abſurditie of the aduerſarie opinion.

Firſt, our euident teſtimonies out of ſcripture are theſe : Firſt, Ioh.10.15. Chriſt laieth downe his life for his ſheepe : the elect onely are his ſheepe : Ergo.

Huberus denieth the aſſumption : ſaying, that all men are Gods ſheepe, and inheritance, who, if afterward they ſtray away from the Lords ſheepfold, the fault is in themſelues, theſ.1069.

Contra. But our Sauiour ſpeaketh of ſuch ſheep, as do heare his voyce, and follow him, and they will not follow a ſtranger, ver.5. They therfore that fall away, & follow any other, are not ẏ ſheep of Chriſts fold : therefore for ſuch ſheepe only he died, as finally are his : thoſe are the elect only.

2. Ioh.11.52. Chriſt died not for the nation onely, that is, of the Iewes, but, That he might gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered. But the elect only are the children of God:

of whom he ſpeaketh againe, namely, of theſe diſperſed and ſcattered children, Ioh. 10.16. Other ſheepe I haue alſo, which are not of this folde, them alſo I muſt bring, &c. Theſe are the predeſtinate, as Auguſtine ſaith: Erant prædeſtinati, nondum congregati: They were predeſtinate, though not yet gathered together: Auguſtin. ſerm. 50. de verbis Domini, in Iohan.

3. Ioh. 15.13. Chriſt dyed onely for his friends; the elect onely, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, only are the friends of Chriſt. And if that place of the Apoſtle be obiected, Rom. 5. That Chriſt died for vs, when we were yet enemies: We anſwere with Bernards diſtinction, Serm. 10. de Pſalm. Qui habitat: Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impijs & inimicis mortuus eſt, ſecundum prædeſtinationem autem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt according to the diſpenſation of time died for the wicked and his enemies: but in reſpect of his predeſtination, for his friends and brethren.

4. S. Paul teſtifieth, Epheſ. 5. verſ. 26. That Chriſt gaue himſelfe for his Church, that he might ſanctifie it, &c. and hee is the Sauiour of his bodie, verſ. 23. But the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, are members onely of his bodie: Ergo, for ſuch onely he dyed.

Contra. Huberus anſwereth, that the Church is here taken for the whole aſſemblie of beleeuers, and vnbeleeuers, who all were ſanctified and waſhed with the blood of Chriſt, but afterward are defiled againe by their vnbeleefe: Huber. theſ. 1088.

Anſw. That Church which Chriſt ſanctifieth, and cleanſeth with his blood, he alſo glorifieth: to make it a glorious Church (ſaith the Apoſtle) without ſpot or wrinckle, verſ. 27. But the elect only and predeſtinate vnto life ſhall be glorified: Ergo, they only are the true Church, and liuely members of Chriſts bodie. Secondly, our reaſons and arguments grounded vpon the word of God, are theſe, and ſuch like which follow.

1. Chriſt dyed onely for thoſe that ſhould beleeue in him, Ioh. 3.16. But it is not giuen to all to beleeue in Chriſt, except only to the elect, which are ordained to life: Ergo, for them only Chriſt dyed. That faith is onely of the elect, it is thus proued: firſt, Matth. 13.11. To you it is giuen to know the ſecrets of the kingdome, to them it is not giuen: this knowledge then is not giuen to all. Contra. The meaning is, not that God in his eternall decree, had ordained knowledge vnto ſome, and denyed it to others, but that the miniſterie of the word being offered to all, ſome through their incredulitie refuſed the ſame, and ſo their hearts were iuſtly hardened: as the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, That they did put away from them the word of God, which it was neceſſarie ſhould haue been firſt ſpoken vnto them, and ſo iudged themſelues vnworthie of euerlaſting life, Act. 13.46. The reſt, which did not abuſe their naturall gifts of hearing and vnderſtanding, but willingly gaue eare vnto Chriſt, had power to beleeue in Chriſt, and to continue therein: ſic Huber. theſ. 826. Suecan. p. 522. Anſ. 1. That they which loue not the truth, are iuſtly giuen ouer of God to a reprobate ſenſe, we grant, as Saint Paul ſheweth, 2. Theſſ. 2.10. Becauſe they would not receiue the loue of the truth, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, &c. 2. Yet men are not ſo the cauſe to themſelues of their beleefe, as they are of their incredulitie: but the cauſe and beginning is of God, as our Sauiour teſtifieth, Matth. 11.26. It is ſo, O father, becauſe thy good pleaſure was ſuch. The cauſe then why ſome vnderſtand the myſterie of the kingdome, is not in their willingnes, but in the good pleaſure of God: It is not a gift equally offered to all, which all may receiue, if they will; it is giuen to you, ſaith Chriſt, it is not giuen to them.

To this purpoſe S. Ambroſe: Qui veniunt dei auxilio diriguntur, qui non veniunt ſua poteſtate reluctantur: They that come are directed by Gods helpe; they which come not, by their owne power doe reſiſt, lib. 2. de vocat Gent. c. 9. And againe, Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, quales hi, qui in ſua duricie ſunt relicti, ſed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit, iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit, &c. They were the ſame, that are drawne, which they were, that remained in their hardnes: but grace giueth vnto them, as God would; iuſtice rendreth to the other as they deſerue. Wherefore though a man reſiſting the calling of grace, is the cauſe why hee beleeueth not, yet in them which obey their calling, it is of the grace of God that they beleeue.

Againe, Chriſt ſaith, Ioh. 10.26. You beleeue not, for you are not of my ſheepe. It is not therfore giuen to all to beleeue in Chriſt, but to his ſheepe onely, that is the elect, to whom hee giueth eternall life, verſ. 28.

Thirdly, Act. 13.48. As many, as were ordained to eternall life, beleeued: To beleeue therefore is giuen only to the elect, which are ordained vnto life.

Contra. Huberus thus expoundeth this place: they beleeued, which were ordained to life, that is, which followed the order appointed of God, whereby men ſhould be ſaued, that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell: for this, ſaith hee, is the ordinance of God, that they that beleeue the Goſpell ſhould be ſaued, Huber. theſ. 834.

Anſw. 1. If this be the meaning, that they beleeued that were ordained, that is, followed Gods ordinance, which was to beleeue, it is all one to ſay, they beleeued, that beleeued; and ſo there ſhould be a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing. 2. If we vnderſtand it of faith and beleefe, yet it includeth an act of the ordainer, and they paſſiuely are ordained to beleeue: whereupon it will enſue, that they onely beleeued that were ordained to beleeue: for whereas they aſcribe vnto man an actiue power to beleeue; but this, to be ordained, is actiue in God, and paſſiue in man, it cannot be vnderſtood ſimply of the act of beleefe, but of the ordinance of God before going. 3. Though God as well ordaine the meanes, as the end, to the which the meanes doe leade; yet becauſe the end is here directly mentioned, namely, to eternall life, wee are thereby directed to vnderſtand the ordinance of the end, rather, or as well as of the meane: ſo that this muſt be the ſenſe, they that were ordained, that is, appointed of God to be ſaued eternally, beleeued: life eternall is the end, beleefe in Chriſt is the meane, the ordinance or foreappointment of God is the cauſe or beginning. Other not ſatisfying themſelues with the former expoſition, haue found out a new: As many as were ordained, &c. that is, many of the Gentiles, according to the ordinance of God, beleeued. So they vnderſtand this word (quotquot, as many, as) not of their particular perſons, that beleeued, but by way of diſtribution, of euery kind & ſort of men preſent: that is, euen the Gentiles alſo as well as the Iewes (as God had foreordained) beleeued: for it is not like, ſay they, that all, in the citie of Antioche, which ſhould be ſaued, were at this time conuerted, but ſome at one time, ſome at another: Sic Heming.p.23.Suecan.p.527.

Anſw. Firſt, they now are conſtrained to vſe that diſtinction, which they will not allow vnto vs: for whereas, wee interprete Saint Pauls ſaying, God would haue all men to be ſaued, of all ſorts of men, they vtterly reiect that ſenſe, and yet are driuen here to vſe it themſelues. Secondly, yet the word there vſed, πάντες, omnes, will better beare that ſenſe, then the word ὅσοι, quotquot, (as many, as) which we reade here: for the word (omnis) all, ſometime in Scripture ſignifieth, not euery particular, but euery kinde, as Luk.11.42. Decimatis omne olus, You tithe euery herbe, that is, euery manner of herbe. But whereſoeuer you ſhall reade, ὅστις, ὅσοι, quiſquis, quotquot, (as many as) it includeth euerie particular, as Luk.18.22. Sell all that euer thou haſt: Act.2.39. As many as the Lord your God ſhall call: Act.4.34. As many as had lands, ſold them: that is, euery one: and ſo muſt it be taken here. Thirdly, it cannot be vnderſtood here of euery kinde, that is, both Iewes and Gentiles: for they were all Gentiles that beleeued here, the Iewes openly reſiſted the Apoſtles. Fourthly, to their reaſon we anſwere: that it is not neceſſarie to reſtraine this ſpeech, As many, as were ordained to life, beleeued, to that preſent time: but as Saint Luke ſaith, Act.2.47. God added from day to day to the Church ſuch as ſhould be ſaued: ſo this may be ſpoken indefinitely, that by the preaching of the Apoſtle, ſo many firſt and laſt beleeued, as ſhould be ſaued. And yet if wee applie it to the preſent auditorie then, not to the whole citie, (for al the citie heard him not at once) we know nothing to the cõtrary, but that euery one of them that was ſaued in that aſſemblie, at that inſtant beleeued.

Our ſecond argument out of Scripture is this: for whom Chriſt is a Redeemer, for them alſo he is a Mediatour and aduocate: but hee is an aduocate onely for the elect, not for the reprobate: Ioh.17.19. I pray not for the world, but for thoſe which thou haſt giuen me: Ergo, Chriſt by his death onely redeemed the elect.

Contra. 1. Huberus anſwereth, that Chriſt prayeth not for the world, that is, that the workes and endeuours of the wicked and vnbeleeuers ſhould be approoued: yet ſaith he, Pro mundo orandum eſt, vt conuertatur: We muſt pray for the world, that it may be conuerted: Theſ.925.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt ſo farre forth prayeth not for the world, as he prayeth for his; but for his owne he prayeth, that they may be ſaued: verſ.24. I will that they which thou haſt giuen me, to be with me where I am: Therefore in that ſenſe he prayeth not for the world, that it ſhould be conuerted or ſaued: and therefore ſeeing the world hath no part in Chriſts mediation, and interceſſion, neither haue they any benefit by his redemption.

2. Chriſt prayeth onely for thoſe, which were giuen him out of the world, verſ.6.9. But all the world was not giuen vnto Chriſt to be ſaued: for how can the world be giuen out of the world? Againe, Chriſt giueth glorie, that is, eternall life to thoſe that are giuen him, verſ.22. but the whole world hath not eternall life, but thoſe onely that are elected thereunto: Ergo, the world is not giuen Chriſt to be ſaued, neither doth he pray for them.

3. Though wee in charitie may pray for the conuerſion of Turkes, Iewes, Infidels, out of the world: yet it followeth not that Chriſt did pray for the world: for hee knew who they were, that ſhould be ſaued, and ſo doe not we, and therefore we are to hope the beſt, euen of thoſe which are in the world.

4. Origen thus expoundeth this place, hom.9.in Leuitic. Non exorat Chriſtus pro his, &c. pro illis exorat tantum, qui ſunt ſors Domini: Chriſt prayeth not for them, &c. but onely for thoſe which are the Lords lot or portion.

*Contra.*2. Hemmingius anſwereth, that by the world here we muſt vnderſtand the peruerſe and obſtinate companie of the Iewes, which had alreadie wilfully refuſed grace offered vnto them, and ſo had committed ſin againſt the holie Ghoſt, Mark.3. for thoſe Chriſt prayeth not, pag.42.

Anſw. That Chriſt by the world vnderſtandeth not onely the wicked of that time, but all vnbeleeuers to the end of the world, it is thus ſhewed: As they are, which are giuen Chriſt, for whom he prayeth; ſo is the world to be vnderſtoode, for them which he prayeth not: but by thoſe that are giuen him he vnderſtandeth all beleeuers, not onely at that time, but to the end of the world, verſ.20. and 24. Therefore, by the world our Sauiour meaneth all vnbeleeuers whatſoeuer; and not the obſtinate onely of that time.

Contra.3. Suecanus de prædeſtinat.p.660. ſaith, that by the world Chriſt vnderſtandeth thoſe that doe contemne the benefit of Chriſts death, as Ioh.15.18. If the world hate you, it hated me before you: and ſo they exclude themſelues from grace offered in Chriſt, not that any ſimply are excluded before their vnbeliefe.

Anſw. Firſt, it is true, that there are none elected in the eternall counſell of God, but are ordained in time to beleeue, nor none excluded, but doe afterward by their owne malice and frowardnes iuſtly exclude themſelues from beliefe: yet it is certaine, that the number and companie of beleeuers is foreſeene and preordained of God, and ſo conſequently of the other alſo: as it may thus appeare: Chriſt praying for thoſe, that ſhall beleeue in him, verſ.20. ſaith, verſ.22. I haue giuen them the glorie, &c. and verſ.24. I will, that they which thou haſt giuen me, &c. They which as yet beleeued not, but ſhould beleeue, are alreadie giuen vnto Chriſt, and euen now glorified: what is this elſe, but that they are preordained of God, which ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, and that they are alreadie giuen vnto him, and glorified in the purpoſe of God? Secondly, wee will adioyne alſo the teſtimonie of Auguſtine: Eſt mundus damnandorum, de quo ſcriptum eſt, ne cum mundo hoc damnemur, 1.Cor.12. *pro iſto mundo non rogat, neque enim quò ſit prædeſtinatus, ignorat: eſt mundus ſaluandorum, de quo Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum ſibi reconcilians, pro iſto mundo rogat, vt credat, &c tractat. in Iohan.*110. There is a world of the damned, of the which it is written, that wee be not damned with the world: for this world Chriſt prayeth not; for he was not ignorant to what end it was predeſtinate: There is a world of thoſe that ſhall be ſaued, of the which the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world, &c. for this world Chriſt prayeth, that it may beleeue: Ergo, for this world Chriſt onely dyed.

Our third argument is this: Chriſt onely dyed for thoſe, to whom the benefit of his death verily and indeede is applied, and which finde life by his death: Ioh.17.19. For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe (that is, to be an acceptable ſacrifice vpon the croſſe) that they alſo may be ſanctified. And verſ.2. Chriſt giueth eternall life to all that were giuen him: But all the world is not ſanctified, or regenerate by Chriſt, nor yet commeth to eternall life, but onely thoſe that ſhall be ſaued: Ergo, Chriſt dyed not for the whole world, but for the elect onely, that ſhall be ſaued. Neither can it be anſwered, that Chriſt died for all, becauſe all may, if they will, beleeue; and ſo be ſaued: for Chriſt ſpeaketh not of a power or poſſibilitie onely to be ſanctified, and ſo ſaued, but of an actuall ſanctification, and ſaluation: they are verily ſanctified, for whom Chriſt ſanctifieth himſelfe, and he giueth eternall life indeede to all them that are giuen him: wherefore ſeeing that all men are not ſanctified, nor brought to eternall life, but ſuch as are indeed ordained to ſaluation; it followeth, that for them onely Chriſt died.

Argum.4. Chriſt died onely for thoſe that are appointed to ſaluation, for the death of Chriſt is a ſubordinate meane for the ſaluation of thoſe, whom God would haue ſaued: But all men in the world are not appointed to ſaluation, therefore Chriſt died not for all. It will be anſwered, that it is Gods will, that all men ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt, with this condition, ſo that they beleeue in him, and that God hath not made any ſpeciall election and ſeparation of ſome from the reſt, which ſhould be ſaued, but that indifferently all men are comprehended vnder Gods conditionall decree of election, that is, as many as ſhall beleeue. If then we can proue out of the word of God, that Gods election vnto life is not conditionall, but abſolute, in ſetting a certaine number apart, who onely ſhould haue power to beleeue, and ſo onely be ſaued by Chriſt, and none beſide, then it will appeare manifeſtly, that for them Chriſt onely dyed.

1. Our firſt place to proue an abſolute and particular election of ſome onely vnto life, is that Matth.22.14. Many are called, but few choſen: which place ſheweth, that although the externall meanes of ſaluation be offered to many, yet not all of them, but ſome onely are elected and choſen vnto life.

Hubertus anſwereth, that there is a generall election, and ſpeciall: the generall election is of all, which are called to the kingdome of God, and outwardly profeſſe obedience: the ſpeciall election is of thoſe which do obey their calling, and indeed perſeuere and continue in the faith to the end, *theſ.*734. So then his meaning is, that few are elected, not in reſpect of any election and ſeparation made in the counſell and decree of God, but becauſe ſome amongſt many perſeuere to the end.

Contra. Firſt, there can be no ſuch generall election: for what choiſe is there, when all indifferently are receiued? An election therefore implieth a receiuing of ſome, and a refuſing of others: all therefore cannot be elected. This were alſo to confound vocation, and election: Many are called, but not many are choſen: to ſay therefore that many are choſen, where Chriſt ſaith, A few onely are choſen, were to contradict his words. Secondly, if the ſpeciall election depend vpon mans perſeuerance and continuance, not this rather vpon the other; if ſome are ſaid to be elected, becauſe they perſeuere, and not rather to perſeuere becauſe they are elected; then are men the cauſe of their owne election, and they chuſe God firſt. But Chriſt ſaith contrarie, you haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you: and S. Iohn ſaith, not that we loued God, but he loued vs firſt, 1. Iohn. 4. 10. Saint Paul alſo ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? 1. Corint. 4. 7. It is God that electeth and ſeparateth men one from another, and diſtributeth vnto them his gifts. And again, in the parable, Mat. 20. 15. Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne? The election therefore of ſome dependeth not vpon their owne will, but vpon the good will and pleaſure of God.

2 The ſecond place, Matth. 20. 23. The kingdome of God ſhall be giuen vnto them, for whom it is prepared of my father: The kingdome of God then is not prepared for all, but for ſome. Saint Paul alſo ſheweth, Rom. 9. 22. That there are veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction, and veſſels of mercie prepared vnto glorie: All therefore are not veſſels of mercie, neither are all prepared to glorie.

Suecanus anſwereth, pag. 602. that theſe places proue not any particular exception or reſtraint of ſome certaine men prepared to glorie, or of others to deſtruction, but that generally and indifferently, the kingdome of God is prepared for all that ſhall beleeue, and they that beleeue not, are prepared by their owne incredulitie to deſtruction.

Contra. We alſo grant, that none but beleeuers are prepared to glorie: but we make beleefe a conſequent and effect of their election and preparation to glorie: ſo that the number of beleeuers is as certaine before God, as certainly he hath decreed who ſhall be ſaued: for I aske, whence commeth it that wee haue faith? it is not of our ſelues, but it is the gift of God, Epheſ. 2. 9. And, it is the worke of God to beleeue, Ioh. 6. 29. If faith then be Gods gift, how is it that all haue not faith? but becauſe God giueth it not to all. And why is it not giuen to all? but that God in mercie hath choſen ſome, whom he purpoſeth to ſaue in Chriſt: And vnto theſe onely faith is giuen. If ye ſay, God giueth faith to all, but all receiue it not: then is Gods will reſiſted: for if he would haue all men beleeue, and they will not; then doth the will of man fruſtrate Gods will.

Huberus anſwereth, that all men are elected and adopted in Chriſt, theſ. 748. And that God giueth faith, conuerteth the heart, illuminateth, worketh effectually in all that are ſo elected, and made the veſſels of mercie, theſ. 867. But yet ſo that the veſſels of honour thus prepared of God, may be made the veſſels of diſhonor, theſ. 903. So the ſame veſſels are prepared of God to honor, of themſelues and Sathan to deſtruction, theſ. 870.

Contra. Firſt, thus it ſhall come to paſſe, that the veſſels of honor ſhall be prepared to deſtruction, which is contrarie to the text alleaged, That the kingdome of heauen ſhall be giuen vnto them for whom it is prepared: But by his ſaying, they that are prepared for it ſhall not haue it. Secondly, by this meanes alſo Satan is made ſtronger than God: for whom he prepareth to glorie, the other prepareth to deſtruction. But Chriſt ſaith otherwiſe, none is able to pluck them out of mine hand, Ioh. 10. 28

3 The third place: They onely are ordained to life, that are giuen to Chriſt: Ioh. 17. 2. Chriſt giueth eternall life to all, that are giuen him: but a certaine number taken out of the world, not the whole world is giuen to Chriſt, verſ. 6. thou gaueſt them me out of the world, thine they were, &c. Ergo, the number is certaine and definite before God, of them that ſhall be ſaued.

Suecanus anſwereth: Firſt, Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of eternall election, but of ſuch as were giuen him out of the world to be his Apoſtles, of which number Iudas was one, who was giuen vnto Chriſt, & yet periſhed: but they that by eternall election are giuen vnto Chriſt, periſh not, p. 724.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe that were giuen him eternally, it is plaine; becauſe, to them Chriſt giueth eternall life, verſ. 2. he glorifieth them, verſ. 22. he will haue them to be where he is, verſ. 24. But ſuch are eternally elected. Secondly, though Iudas may be ſaid in ſome ſenſe to be giuen to Chriſt in reſpect of his Apoſtleſhip; yet was he not giuen as the reſt of the Apoſtles: for of them Chriſt ſaith, that they kept his word, verſ. 6. that he was glorified in them, verſ. 10. they were not of the world, verſ. 14. But Iudas neither kept Chriſts word, neither yet was Chriſt glorified in him; and he was of the world: therefore they were giuen eternally to Chriſt, though Iudas was not.

Suecanus. Secondly, though wee vnderſtand here eternall election, whereby ſome were giuen vnto Chriſt, yet it implieth not a ſpeciall exception and choiſe of ſome perſons, but that all indifferently were giuen vnto Chriſt, that ſhould beleeue in him, Suecan. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſt ſaying, the men, which thou gaueſt me out of the world, aſſigneth ſome ſpeciall perſons, that were giuen vnto him, namely his Apoſtles, as it is cleere by the text: And if ſome particular perſons were giuen vnto him, why may there not be a particular aſſignement, and cogniſance alſo before God of the reſt that are giuen vnto him? Secondly, where Chriſt ſaith, ſpeaking of his Apoſtles, thine they were, and thou gaueſt them me, verſ. 6. it ſheweth an abſolute election before God, without any reſpect of their faith: for firſt, Chriſt ſaith, they are thine, that is, by election; and then they are giuen to him, to know him, and beleeue in him, verſ. 8.

4. The fourth place: Philip.4.3. Whoſe names are in the booke of life: Apocal.17.8. Whoſe names are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: Therefore ſome were elected in the beginning before God, ſome not elected.

Huberus anſwereth: that all are elected in Chriſt, and written in the booke of life, but with a condition; ſo that they beleeue, and continue in faith: whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that they which beleeue not, do loſe their ſaluation, and ſo are as not written in that booke, but are raſed out of it, *theſ.*917.

Puckſius alſo anſwereth to the ſame effect, that not to be written in the booke of life muſt be vnderſtood poſitiuely, not priuatiuely, that is, they are written and declared thorough their contumacie or contempt worthy of damnation: *ration.*96.

Cont. 1. The text is, They are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: which firſt ouerthroweth Huberus anſwere, that ſaith, they were written, but after raſed out: for they were not written from the foundation of the world, not from the beginning, that is, neuer.

2. Secondly, it meeteth with the other cauill: for in that they were not written from the foundation, &c. it ſheweth, that they were ſhut out of the booke of life, before their contumacie or infidelitie appeared; and therefore their contumacie which appeared in the world, could not be the cauſe of their names not writing in the booke of life, which was done before the foundation of the world: And thus much of our reaſons and arguments deduced out of Scripture.

Laſtly, that Chriſt died only for the elect, this euidence we haue of antiquitie. 1. *Origen.hom.*9. Leuitic. alleadged before, affirmeth, that Chriſt prayeth onely, pro illis, qui ſunt ſors Domini; for them, that are the Lords lot or portion: *homil.*1 in Cantic. Eccleſiam cætum omnium aduerte ſanctorum: By the Church vnderſtand the company of all Saints. If the Saints onely make the Church, and Chriſt dyed onely for his Church, Epheſ.5.25. then conſequently he dyed onely for the Saints.

2. S. *Ambroſe lib.*5. *in Luc.c.*7. Chriſtus pro omnibus mortuus, pro nobis tamen ſpecialiter paſſus: Chriſt dyed for all, but more ſpecially ſuffered for vs. In 1.*Cor.*15. Omnibus qui ſunt ex eius corpore vitam acquiſiuit: He procured life to all of his body.

3. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Electi ſunt ad regnandum cum Chriſto: They were elected to raigne with Chriſt, *de corrept.& grat.c.*7. but Chriſt onely dyed for thoſe that ſhal raigne with him, Iohn 17.24. Father I will, that they, which thou haſt giuen me, be with me, where I am. Againe, Chriſt dyed onely, and gaue his life for his ſheepe, Iohn 10.11. the elect onely are the ſheepe of Chriſt, as Auguſtine ſaith, De ouibus iſtis, nec lupus rapit, nec fur tollit, nec latro interficit: Of theſe ſheepe, neyther the woolfe ſnatcheth, nor the theefe taketh, nor the robber killeth, *tract.*48. in Ioann.

4. *Concil. Aquiſgranenſ.c.*14. Chriſtus eccleſiam, quam precioſo ſuo ſanguine redemit, nunquam deſerturus eſt: Chriſt wil neuer forſake the Church, which he hath redeemed with his precious blood: but they, which are neuer forſaken, are the elect.

5. Concil.Wormatienſ. præfat. Eccleſiam catholicam precio ſui ſanguinis redemptam, cum eo credimus in perpetuum regnaturam: We do beleeue that the catholike Church redeemed with the price of his blood, ſhall raigne with him for euer: but the elect onely ſhall raigne with him for euer.

6. *Bernard.ſerm.*9. *in Pſal.*90. Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impijs mortuus, ſecundum prædeſtinationem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt in reſpect of the time dyed for the wicked; in reſpect of predeſtination onely, for his brethren and friends.

7. *Cauſ.*33. *diſt.*4. *c.*8. ex Auguſtino: Illi Chriſto intelliguntur dari, qui ordinati ſunt in vitam æternam: They are vnderſtood to be giuen to Chriſt, which are ordained to eternall life: as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Iohn 6.39. This is the will of my Father, that of all, which he hath giuen me, I ſhould loſe nothing: and againe, Ioh.11.52. Chriſt dyed to gather together in one, the children of God, which were ſcattered: he dyed then onely for the children of God, that is the elect.

8. *Magiſt. ſententiar.lib.*3. *diſtinct.*19. G. Chriſtus omnes fideles per mortem reconciliauit: Chriſt reconciled the faithfull by his death: *diſt.*31. d. Chriſtus electos tantum ſicut ſe dilexit, eorumq; ſalutem optauit, &c. Chriſt loued onely the elect as himſelfe, and deſired their ſaluation.

THE THIRD GENERALL ARGVMENT, AGAINST the vniuerſall and confuſed communitie of Redemption by Chriſt, drawen from the manifold inconueniences and abſurdities, which neceſſarily enſue and follow vpon this opinion.

ABſurdum 1. Firſt in affirming that Chriſt dyed vniuerſally for all that ſhould beleeue, and not for any ſpeciall elected ſort, they conſequently do hold, that God ſpecially and particularly elected none vnto ſaluation, but onely in generall, and indifferently all that ſhould beleeue.

And thus in effect, they take away predeſtination, making it to be a confuſed and conditional decree of God to ſaue whomſoeuer: This we are then to proue, that Gods election is certaine and definite, and that he knoweth and decreeth the number of the choſen.

First, we reaſon thus, whatſoeuer God did foreſee, that he was to do in the world, that alſo hee decreed and ordayned: Some things he foreſeeth onely, namely, ſuch thinges as are done in the world, and not by him, as euill and ſinfull workes: but whatſoeuer God doth in the worlde, hee both foreſaw and decreed: as Auguſtine ſaith, Prædeſtinatione ea Deus præſcierat, quæ erat facturus, præſcire autem poteſt, quæ non eſt facturus: God in predeſtinating did foreſee, that is, did both predeſtinate and foreſee, whatſoeuer he was to doe in the world; but he onely foreſaw the things that he was not to do, as all ſinnes whatſoeuer, *lib.2.de perſeuerant.cap.*10. But God in the beginning did foreſee the particular ende of euery man in the world: The Lord knoweth who are his: 2.Tim.2. verſ.19. that is, he knoweth the definite and certaine number of the elect: as Auguſtine alſo witneſſeth, Non temerè quenquam creat Deus, aut quid de illis boni operetur ignoret: God createth no man raſhly, neither is ignorant to what good vſe or purpoſe he hath made them, cont.Iulian.lib.5.cap.3. Ergo, God hath defined and decreed the particular number of ſuch, as ſhall be ſaued.

And for better proofe of the propoſition: firſt, we ſay further, that ſeeing the knowledge and will of God, are infinite, as he himſelfe; and that the attributes of God, receiue neither magis vel minus, more or leſſe, his wil is not greater then his knowledge, nor this more ample then the other, in their proper obiects: hereupon it followeth, that ſeeing God by his knowledge knoweth all things, which are to be knowen, ſo by his will he decreeth all things, that do fall vnder his decree, namely, ſuch things as are good, and to his glory: ſuch is the particular election of thoſe, that are ſaued: Ergo, by him it is decreed. 2. Further, there can be but two kindes of thinges, which are without the compaſſe of Gods decree, either what he knoweth not or what he doth not; of the firſt ſort there is none, becauſe God knoweth all thinges; of the ſecond, are all euill and ſinfull workes, which God hath no part in: But the particular election of men, is neither vnknowne nor vnwrought by God, but both knowne of him and wrought by him: Ergo, alſo decreed. 3. The particular end of the elect dependeth either of ſome fatall neceſſitie, ſome accidentall chance, or of the will of man, or it ſtandeth by Gods euerlaſting decree: there can be aſſigned no other cauſe: Not the firſt, for that were to tie God vnto ſecondary cauſes, for ſuch was the ſtoicall deſtinie; not the ſecond, for that were to ouerthrow Gods prouidence, by the which all things are gouerned, and not by chance: not the third, which were to aduance the creature aboue his Creator: and Saint Paul ſaith, It is not of the willer, nor the runner, &c. Ergo, Gods ſpeciall and definite decree muſt ſtand: As Auguſtine alſo concludeth: Certè hic, vbi nulla eſt fati immobilitas, nulla fortunæ temeritas, nulla perſonæ dignitas, quid reſtat niſi miſericordia & veritatis profunditas? Certainly in this caſe, where neither things are gouerned by fatall neceſſitie, nor by raſh vnaduiſed chance, what other cauſe remaineth then the profunditie of Gods mercy and truth? Cont.Iulian.6.cap.5. Fourthly, it skilleth not, concerning the matter in hand, namely, the particular and perſonall election of thoſe that ſhall be ſaued, whether wee vrge Gods preſcience onely or predeſtination: for if God did onely foreſee in particular, who, and how many, and of what condition, ſhould beleeue in Chriſt, and be ſaued; and that as God foreſaw, ſo it muſt be, that the ſame, ſo many, no other, no more ſhall beleeue, then God foreſaw; then muſt the number of the elect and beleeuers be as certaine, definite and determined, as if they yeelded to Gods decree herein: wherefore they muſt either doubt of Gods preſcience, or confeſſe a certaine determination of the number of the elect.

Secondly, we haue direct places of Scripture for particular election, Ioh.10.3. Chriſt calleth his ſheepe by name: they are all knowne particularly, and aſſigned to ſaluation as by name: The Apoſtles were perſonally elected of God, and giuen vnto Chriſt, Ioh.17.6. And as ſome of the elect be, ſo are the reſt, for there is one condition of them all. Saint Paul ſpeaking of certaine perſons his fellow labourers, amongſt whom hee nameth Clement, ſaith, Their names are written in the booke of life, Phil.4. Ergo, they were ſpecially and particularly elected. Further, the Scripture ſaith, that God calleth the ſtarres of the skie by their names; how much more the ſonnes of men, the children of ſaluation are particularly knowne vnto him: and if the haires of their head are numbred, much more themſelues.

The Preacher alſo ſaith: I know, that whatſoeuer God ſhall doe, it ſhall be for euer: to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminiſh: Eccleſ.3.14. But the election of ſuch as ſhall be ſaued is one of Gods workes: Ergo, to it can no man adde, or take from it, and ſo conſequently the number of the elect is certaine and determined: But if Gods election were left at large for all, then is it in mans power to adde vnto it, or take from it, as they are many, or few that apprehend and lay hold of their election.

Thirdly, we vrge that place of the Apoſtle, Roman.chap.9.verſ.13. I haue loued Iacob, and hated Eſau: which the Apoſtle referreth to the purpoſe of Gods free election before the children were borne, or had either done good or euill, verſ.11. Hence we conclude, that Gods election is not generall and indefinite, but particular and perſonall.

Firſt, it is here anſwered, that the particular perſons of Eſau and Iacob are not here vnderſtood, but that they are types of two people, the one of the Iſraelites, of whom Meſſiah ſhould come; the other of the Idumeans: that two people are here ſignified, their reaſons are theſe: Firſt, Geneſis 24.23. the Lord ſaith to Rebecca, two nations are in thy wombe: Secondly, the elder ſhall ſerue the younger, which was accompliſhed in their poſteritie, for Iacob in his owne perſon ſubmitted himſelfe to Eſau, Huber.theſ.675. Suecan.p.565. Thirdly, theſe words, Iacob haue I loued, and hated Eſau, were vttered by the Prophet Malachy, about 1400. yeares after the birth of the children, and therefore it cannot be, that the Prophet ſhould vnderſtand onely the perſons of Iacob and Eſau, that were dead ſo long before, Suecan.p.566. Fourthly, becauſe S. Paul ſpeaking of Iſmael and Iſaac, Galath.4. vſeth the word type or allegorie, in like maner Eſau and Iacob may be ſet forth for types in this place, *Suecan.*533.

Contra. 1. To admit that in Iacob and Eſau two people are prefigured, yet it followeth not, that their perſons are to be excluded: for whatſoeuer was foretolde of their poſteritie, it was firſt and in part true in them: As where it was ſaid, Two nations are in thy wombe: Iacob and Eſau were not bare types of two nations, but the beginners and progenitors, and two nations were euen now in their loynes: The elder ſhall ſerue the younger: ſo Eſau ſolde vnto Iacob his birthright, and reſigned vnto him in his owne perſon the ſoueraigneſhip. So in like maner, where God ſaith, Iacob haue I loued, and hated Eſau, Firſt, this diſtinction of loue and hatred appeared in Iacob and Eſau, and then in their poſteritie. Secondly, there are two ſorts of types, there is, typus hiſtoricus, ſeu factus, an hiſtoricall type which was done, typus poeticus ſeu fictus, a deuiſed and inuented type. In types of the ſecond kinde, that which is prefigured is not neceſſarie to be firſt true in the type: as Chriſt for the ſuddainneſſe of his comming is compared to a theefe, though the type in all reſpects properly agree not vnto him: In types of the firſt kinde, firſt, the example muſt be true, then the thing exemplified: as 1.Corinth.10.11. the olde Iſraelites that were puniſhed for their fornication, are types and examples to admoniſh vs, that we commit not fornication as they did, and be puniſhed likewiſe with them. So Iſaac and Iſmael are ſet forth as types, Galath.4. but firſt the thing exemplified by them is true in the types: As verſe 29. As then he that was borne after the fleſh perſecuted him that was borne after the ſpirit, ſo it is now: after the ſame maner Iacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples, the one of Gods loue, the other of his hatred: which firſt muſt agree to their owne perſons. Thirdly, Pharaoh is ſet forth an example of the ſame thing, whereof Eſau is, namely, of the hatred of God: the perſon therefore of Eſau can be no more exempted here, then the perſon of Pharaoh. And that both the perſons of Iacob and Eſau are to be vnderſtoode, it appeareth by theſe circumſtances: Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the conception of theſe children in their mother Rebecca, and of their birth: but Eſau and Iacob perſonally were thus conceiued and borne, not the whole nations: ſecondly, vnto them this loue and hatred belongeth, that had yet neither done good, or euill: but this is ſpoken of the perſons of Eſau and Iacob verſe 11. Ergo, alſo the other.

Secondly, it is anſwered, that this loue and hatred, are to be vnderſtood only of temporall bleſſings, becauſe Iacob was made heire of the promiſed land, and Eſau refuſed; and in this reſpect the one was loued, the other hated, not that Eſau was eternally, but onely temporally refuſed: *Suecan.pag.*550. *Huberus theſ.*697. their reaſons are theſe: firſt, Iacobs bleſſing pronounced by his father, Gen.27.28. is onely of temporall things, God giue thee the dewe of heauen, and the fatnes of the earth, &c. Secondly, Eſau is bleſſed as well as Iacob: But if Iacob only had been heire of the ſpirituall bleſſings, they ſhould haue been denied to Eſau.

Contra. 1. That Iacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples in ſpirituall things, it appeareth by the ſcope of the place; for how agreeth it with the Apoſtles purpoſe, to bring in examples of temporall things? verſe 8. he bringeth in a diſtinction, of the children of the fleſh, and the children of promiſe; theſe hoping to be iuſtified by faith, and to be partakers of the promiſe in Chriſt, the other remaining ſtill in their carnall ignorance and vnbeliefe: of thoſe two kinds, he propoundeth Iacob and Eſau as examples, the one of the children of promiſe, the other of the children of the fleſh: As Eſau had the carnal prerogatiue, but Iacob was made heire by promiſe. And that Iacob and Eſau doe exemplifie theſe two generations, it is confeſſed by *Hemmingius de grat. vniuerſ.p.*33. and by *Suecanus p.*533. Secondly, that theſe examples doe ſhadow forth ſpirituall things, it thus further appeareth: the Apoſtle to the Hebrues ſaith, that by fayth Iſaac bleſſed Iacob and Eſau concerning things to come, chap.11.20. but fayth is ſeene in things ſpirituall not temporall, it is of things inuiſible, not viſible, verſe 1. Againe, Eſau is called a prophane perſon, becauſe hee ſold his birthright, chap.12.16. It is not prophanenes to contemne things temporall, but ſpirituall. Saint Ambroſe doth take Iacob and Eſau for examples of Gods eternall election and reiection, in 9. ad Roman, vnum elegit preſcientia, alterum ſpreuit, Eſau 1. & Iacob. He did chuſe one in his preſcience, and deſpiſed another. The Maſter of the Sentences doth ſet them forth as examples of eternall election and reprobation, lib.3.diſt.32.e. Thirdly, now as touching their reaſons: firſt, Iacob is not onely bleſſed in things temporall, but in ſpirituall alſo: for he ſaith, Bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee, and curſed be he that curſeth thee, Geneſ.27.29. In the very ſelfe ſame words, wherein the promiſe of Chriſt is made to Abraham, Gen.12.3. ſo that this muſt needes be ſpiritually vnderſtood: for otherwiſe we ſhall obſcure the moſt manifeſt promiſes of the Meſſiah, which were made to Abraham. Secondly, though Eſau haue a ſhare with his brother in his temporals, yet hath he no part in his ſpirituall bleſſing: Eſau alſo ſhall haue of the fatnes of the earth, and of the dewe of heauen: but Iſaac ſaith not vnto him, as before vnto Iacob, Bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee, &c. Therefore the Apoſtle to the Hebrues concerning this ſpirituall bleſſing ſaith, that when Eſau would haue inherited the bleſſing, he was reiected: neither found he any place of repentance, though he ſought it with teares, chap.12.16. that is, his father by no meanes would reuoke that bleſſing, which he had giuen to Iacob: Eſau therefore was not bleſſed in like ſort as Iacob was.

Thirdly, it is anſwered: that theſe words, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, are to be vnderſtoode comparatiuely, not as though Eſau and his poſteritie were abſolutely reiected of God: but that God rather made choice of Iacob, of whoſe ſeede the promiſed Meſſiah ſhould come, then of Eſau and his ſeede, Suecan.p.568. Heming.p.34. Their reaſons are theſe: firſt, it is not neceſſarie in euery place in Scripture, where we reade of election and reiection, or reprobation, to referre it to eternall ſaluation or damnation, as Pſalm.78.verſ.67.68. He refuſed the tabernacle of Ioſeph, and choſe not the tribe of Ephraim, but choſe the tribe of Iuda and mount Sion, which he loued: Becauſe God preferred Iuda, it followeth not that the other tribes were condemned: So in this place though in compariſon of Iacob, Eſau be refuſed, yet is he not abſolutely reiected: Huber, theſ.720.

Anſw. Firſt, we graunt that the loue and hatred here ſpoken of in the perſons of Iacob and Eſau are comparatiuely to be vnderſtood: that Eſau is ſayd to be hated, not that God ſimplie hateth any, but becauſe Iacob is elected, and the other pretermitted; the one choſen, the other neglected: yet comparatiuely, not in reſpect of any ſuch temporall preeminence, but concerning eternall election, or pretermiſſion. Secondly, becauſe election ſometime implyeth a temporall preferring onely in reſpect of ſome ſpeciall and peculiar benefit, and is not neceſſarily alwaies referred to eternall ſaluation; it is therefore to be interpreted according to the ſcope and circumſtance of the place: as in the Pſalme alleaged, it is plaine, that the Pſalmiſt meaneth, that in reſpect of the Sanctuarie, which was placed at Ieruſalem, Iudah was elected, and Ephraim refuſed: So in this place the Apoſtle treating thorough the whole chapter, of the mercie of God vpon ſome, and his wrath vpon others, not in this or that reſpect, but ſimply, as they ſtand before God, would haue vs ſo to vnderſtand the inſtance of loue and hatred in the perſons of Iacob and Eſau: So is Pharaoh brought in an example of eternall hatred and reiection: ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of veſſels of mercie prepared to glorie, and veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction: ſo are we to vnderſtand the loue of Iacob and hatred of Eſau.

Secondly, that Eſau was eternally hated, or reiected of God, it cannot be vnderſtoode of Eſau his poſteritie: for then all his ofſpring ſhould haue been caſtawaies: which is not true, for Iob is thought to come of Eſau his ſtocke, Suecan.pag.574. Neither is it true of Eſau his perſon: for if he had been eternally reiected, to what end was he circumciſed? Suecan.p.574. he liued alſo in his fathers houſe, who loued him, and he was obedient to his father: what reaſon had Iſaac to loue whom God hated? Huber.theſ.709. Iſaac alſo is ſaid by faith to haue bleſſed Eſau: which his bleſſing had been in vaine, if Eſau had been eternally reiected of God, Suecan.p.588.

*Anſw.*1. If in Eſau and Iacob, not their perſons onely, but their whole generations are to be conſidered, which if it be rightly vnderſtoode, we will not greatly gaineſay: yet it followeth not, that all of Iacobs carnall linage ſhould be likewiſe loued, and Eſaus poſteritie hated: for in Iacob we vnderſtand all the children of promiſe, though they be not of his carnall ofſpring; and in Eſau, all the children of the fleſh, though not deſcending of his ſtocke: So that in this ſenſe, as all they are not Iſrael, which are of Iſrael, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſe 6. ſo all are not Eſau, that are of Eſau. And therefore Iob, though of Eſau after the fleſh, yet is the ſonne of Iacob by promiſe: And thus Hemingius expoundeth this place, de vniuerſ. grat.p.33.

2. Concerning Eſau his perſon; how he ſtandeth before God, whether in the ſtate of ſaluation, or damnation, though we hold it the ſafeſt, to leaue him vnto God, before whom he ſtandeth, or falleth; nor to affirme any thing raſhly without warrant: yet we may be bolde to proceede ſo far herein, as we haue the word of God to goe before vs. Firſt therefore their reaſons, which they bring in defenſe of Eſau, are very inſufficient: for Eſaus outward and temporall circumciſion, cannot exempt him from this hatred, no more then Iſmael was priuiledged by his circumciſion: Who notwithſtanding was borne after the fleſh, and was a perſecutor of him that was borne after the ſpirit: Gal.4. The Apoſtle himſelfe alſo diſtinguiſheth of circumciſion: that there is a circumciſion of the fleſh, and a circumciſion of the heart, Rom.2.28. The firſt Eſau had, the other he had not: for though he had the ſigne of the couenant, yet the couenant it ſelfe he deſpiſed in ſelling his birthright, Geneſ.25.34. As touching Eſau his obedience to his father, firſt, it was not ſuch, as it ought to be; for then he would not haue married two wiues of the daughters of the Hittites, to vexe his parents withall, Gen.26.34.35. Secondly, that it was but in hypocriſie: as it may appeare, in that he purpoſed to ſlay his brother Iacob after his fathers death, Gen.27.41. which he would not haue done, if he had truely reuerenced his father: for he would haue loued his brother for his fathers ſake. Againe, when he vnderſtood that his father gaue his ſonne Iacob charge, not to marrie with the daughters of Canaan: Eſau like an hypocrite hauing already diſpleaſed his parents, in marrying with the daughters of Canaan, went and tooke to wife the daughter of Iſmael, Geneſ.28.9. So that nothing els kept Eſau in ſome awe to his father, but onely a hope of ſome temporall bleſſing, Gen.27.4. But Iſaac loued Eſau, would he loue him whom God hated? *Anſw.*1. It was a fatherly and in ſome ſort a carnall loue: he loued him, for veniſon was his meate: Gen.25.28. Eſau was an actiue and valiant fellow, and a good hunter, therefore Iſaac made account of him: he loued Eſau onely as a father, but Iacob beſide as a Prophet. 2. Iſaac loued Eſau, as Abraham loued Iſmael, and prayed, that he might liue in Gods ſight, Geneſ.17.18. yet both of them were refuſed: ſo Samuel being ſent to annoynt Dauid King, liked other of his brethren before, whom God liked not: theſe holy Prophets and Patriarches were men, and had their naturall affections. Thirdly, what if Iſaac did not ſee fully into the ſtate of his children as yet: for he did but as in a cloude behold things to come: ſo much was not reuealed to him, as afterward to the Prophets, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, Malach.1.2. And more to the Apoſtles, who doubt not to call him a prophane perſon, Hebr.12.16. for as the Patriarches and Prophets liued neerer to the times of our Sauiour Chriſt, ſo were their reuelations more full, and their viſions cleerer.

Now whereas it is ſaid, that Iſaac by faith bleſſed Iacob and Eſau; this doth no whit priuiledge Eſau: for it was Iſaacs faith, not Eſaus: and though he bleſſed both, yet not alike; for Iacob hath both a ſpirituall and temporall bleſſing: Eſau had onely a temporall, the ſpirituall he could not obtaine, no not with teares. Thus whatſoeuer can be ſaid for Eſau, is eaſilie remoued. Now againſt him thus much may be alleaged out of Scripture: firſt, Eſau contemned his birth-right, Geneſ.25, 24. and held it not ſo deare as a meſſe of pottage: wherefore the Scripture calleth him a prophane perſon, Hebr.12.16. this is firſt a fearefull ſigne of eternall damnation, to contemne and deſpiſe holy things: for ſuch as make a mocke of Chriſt, Hebr.6.6. (as Eſau did that deſpiſed this birthright in Chriſt) and deſpite the ſpirit of grace, Hebr.10.29. there remaineth nothing elſe, but a fearefull looking for of iudgement, verſe 27. Secondly, Eſau hated Iacob, he is become a perſecutor of the righteous, he hateth thoſe, whom God loueth, Geneſ.chap.27.verſe 41. So Iſmael perſecuted Iſaac, he that was borne after the fleſh, him that was after the ſpirit, Galath.4.verſe 29. Thirdly, Eſau was diſobedient to his parents, he maried heatheniſh women, daughters of Infidels, to vexe his parents withall: As the Apoſtle ſaith of the Gentiles, God gaue them ouer to a reprobate minde, to doe thoſe things that were not conuenient; as being full of enuie, murther, (ſo was Eſau toward Iacob) diſobedient to parents, ſo was he toward Iſaac and Rebecca, Rom.1.verſ.29.30. Fourthly, Eſau expecteth, and wiſheth his fathers death: the dayes of mourning for my father will come ſhortlie: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, I hope my father will not liue long; then will I ſlay my brother Iacob: Geneſ.27.verſ.41. Thus enuie in Eſau bringeth forth murther: and this murtherous heart continued toward Iacob twentie yeares: for ſo long ſerued Iacob in Labans houſe, Geneſ.31.verſ.38. And after at his returne he ſent a meſſenger to be reconciled to his brother Eſau, who came againſt him with foure hundred men with a purpoſe to haue ſlaine him, Geneſ. chap.32.verſ.6. but that at the inſtance of Iacobs prayer, by the mightie power of God, (in whoſe hands the hearts of kings are to turne them, as the veſſels vpon the waters, Prouerb. 21. verſ. 1.) his heart was mollified, and his affection relented towards his brother, Geneſ. 33. Laſtly, Saint Paul intreating of Gods eternall election, bringeth in the examples of Iacob and Eſau, the one loued, the other hated of God.

Thus by more euident coniecture, and likely arguments we are able to proue out of Scripture the finall reiection of Eſau, then they can ſhew the contrarie: And ſo conſequently, notwithſtanding all theſe humane deuiſes, we haue a moſt firme and euident teſtimonie for particular and perſonall election in this place, drawne from the example of Iacob and Eſau. And thus much of the firſt inconuenience that muſt needes enſue vpon this opinion concerning vniuerſall grace, which ouerthroweth the foundation of Gods predeſtination: which they doe as it were hang in the ayre, affirming that it is nothing elſe but an vniuerſall confuſed decree, as though God either did not know the particular ende of euery man, or knowing the ſame willed it not.

Now laſtly, that God hath from the beginning made a particular and abſolute election of ſome, and that Gods election is not generall and conditionall, it hath been the auncient doctrine of the Church.

1 Ambroſe. 1.Timoth.5. Electos Angelos dicit, quia ſunt alij reprobi, non Dei Angeli, ſed diaboli, boli,&c. He ſaith elect Angels, becauſe there are ſome reprobate, not the Angels of God, but of the diuell. As there be then among the Angels ſome elect, ſome reprobate, ſo is it among men: but the election and reprobation of Angels was particular and certaine: Ergo, ſo is the election and reprobation of men.

2 Againe, de vocat. Gentium lib.1.c.7. Multi diſcretionem illam, qua Deus alios eligit, alios non eligit, &c. That diſcretion or ſeparation, whereby God hath choſen ſome, and not choſen others, many doe aſcribe to mans will. Et lib.2.c.8. Hac altitudine diſcretionis dei non conturbabitur cor noſtrum, &c. By this depth of Gods ſeparation or diſcerning of men our heart ſhall not be troubled, if wee ſtedfaſtly beleeue that Gods iudgement is iuſt. If there be then a ſeparation, and diſcerning of men in Gods euerlaſting decree; then are not al generally and conditionally elected: for this were not to make a ſeparation, but a confuſion of all together.

3 Saint Auguſtine to this purpoſe writeth very directly: Tract.14. in Iohan. Eſt quidam populus præparatus ad iram dei, damnandus cum diabolo, &c. There is a certaine people prepared to the wrath of God to be condemned with the diuell.

4 Tract.43. Iſti morti æternæ prædeſtinati reſpondebant, &c. Thoſe which were predeſtinate to euerlaſting death, anſwered, Thou haſt a diuell.

5 *Tract.*48. How ſaid he to thoſe, You are not of my ſheepe, Quia videbat eos ad ſempiternum exitium præparatos, &c. Becauſe hee ſaw that they were prepared to euerlaſting deſtruction, and not redeemed to eternall life by his blood. By theſe places it is euident what Auguſtines iudgement was, that Gods election was not indefinite or vncertaine, but that the end of euery man, whether to life or death, was determined and decreed in particular.

6 Magiſt. ſenten. lib.1. diſt.43.E. Non vult Deus omnes homines iuſtificari, & tamen quis dubitat eum poſſe: God will not iuſtifie all men, and yet who doubteth but he can. Lib.2. diſt.21.f. Humana natura, ex parte redempta eſt: Mans nature is redeemed but in part. If all be not redeemed, then all are not elected. Lib.3. diſt.32.a. Magis diligit rationales creaturas, & de illis eas amplius, quæ ſunt membra vnigeniti: God loueth reaſonable creatures more than vnreaſonable; and among the reaſonable, thoſe which are the members of his onely begotten ſonne. If all men be not loued alike, then are they not all elected alike.

THE SECOND INCONVENIENCE THAT followeth the opinion of vniuerſall grace.

ABſurd.2. The ſecond inconuenience that iſſueth out of this doctrine of vniuerſall election, is this, that Gods election ariſeth ex præuiſa fide, from the foreſight of their faith which ſhall be ſaued: Hubertus theſ.786. Deus electionem ſuam non abſolutè ſtatuit, ſed defixit eam in filio ſuo, vt qui credunt in eum, ſalui fiant: God hath not abſolutely made any election, but he hath founded it in Chriſt, that they which beleeue in him ſhould be ſaued; they that beleeue not, ſhould be damned. So Hemmingius ſaith: Præſcientia Dei regula eſt electionis & prædeſtinationis: The preſcience of God is the rule of election and predeſtination, *pag.*21. And againe, Non quia præſciti & electi ſumus, credimus, ſed quia credimus, præſciti & electi ad vitam cenſemur: Wee doe not beleeue, becauſe wee are foreſeene and elected, but becauſe wee beleeue wee were foreſeene and elected vnto life, *pag.*27. Snecanus, though he ſeeme in words to confeſſe, that æternum eligendi propoſitum non dependet ex vlla noſtræ fidei, vel bonorum operum præuiſione: that the eternall purpoſe of election dependeth not of the foreſight of our faith or workes, *pag.*461. yet he is driuen by the ſtreame of words to affirme as the reſt doe, that fides continetur in Dei propoſito, that faith is included in the purpoſe of Gods election, *p.*463. and that God vniuerſally ordained to ſaluation all that ſhould beleeue, *pag.*480. They would ground this their opinion concerning the foreſight of faith vpon theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, as Rom.8.29. Thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be like the image of his ſonne: Predeſtination then is grounded vpon the foreknowledge of God: *Hemmingius de vniuerſalit. grat. pag.*29.

Contra. 1. We graunt with Auguſtine, that prædeſtinatio ſine præſcientia eſſe non poteſt, that predeſtination cannot be without preſcience in God, *lib.1. de prædeſtinat. cap.*10. And thus are they ioyned together in this place: but it followeth not, that one is the cauſe of another. 2. The text maketh directly againſt them: for he ſaith not, whom he knew before ſhould be like the image of his ſonne he predeſtinate; but, whom he knew before he did predeſtinate to be like his ſonne: ſo that this conformitie by faith vnto Chriſt is an effect and conſequent of their predeſtination. 3. Though we admit the former reading, yet haue they gained nothing: for the conformitie to the image of Chriſt conſiſteth in being made partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, whereof Saint Peter intreateth, 1.Pet.4.13. vnleſſe they therefore will affirme, that the foreſight of mens afflictions is the cauſe of their election, and ſo ioyne in opinion with the old Pelagians, that grounded election vpon the foreſight of good works, this place is not for their turne. 4. By the knowledge of God in ſcripture,the loue,liking,and approbation of God is often ſignified ; as Pſal.1. The Lord kneweth the way of the iuſt, that is, approueth it, Ioh.10.14. I am the good ſhepheard, and know my ſheepe, that is,loue them:ſo in this place,whom he knew before(whom he loued and fauoured) he did predeſtinate.

Againe, they obiect that place, Epheſ.1.4. Hee hath choſen vs in him before the foundation of the world: that is, God hath choſen thoſe whom he foreſaw ſhould beleeue in Chriſt,Hemming.fol.26. pag.2.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle meaneth not,that we were ſo choſen in Chriſt, that is, for the foreſight of our faith in him, but that Chriſt was appointed of God, as the foundation , by whom our election ſhould be accompliſhed : as in the next verſ. Hee hath predeſtinate vs to be adopted through Chriſt: We were not firſt adopted in Chriſt,and then predeſtinate ; but firſt predeſtinate,and then choſen in Chriſt,verſ.11.In whom we were choſen,when we were predeſtinate according to the purpoſe of him,&c. Firſt,therefore there is the decree of election and predeſtination, grounded onely vpon the good pleaſure of God,verſ.5. then followeth the accompliſhment and execution of that decree by our adoption in Chriſt..

2 Auguſtine vpon theſe words,He hath choſen vs in him that we ſhould be holy,groundeth a cleane contrarie argument : Non elegit, quos futuros ſciuit immaculatos,ſed elegit vt eſſemus ſancti,non quia futuri eramus,ſed vt eſſemus : Hee did not chuſe thoſe whom hee ſaw ſhould be vnſpotted,but hee choſe them that they ſhould be holy,not becauſe they were holy, *lib.1. de prædeſtinat.c.*18. So then faith,holines,ſanctification,are fruits and effects of election,not cauſes thereof.

3 Chriſt Ieſus,or our faith in Chriſt foreſeene,cannot be the cauſe of our predeſtination, ſeeing Chriſt himſelfe, in reſpect of his office of redemption, and mediation, was predeſtinate,and preordained of God : the ſame thing then cannot be the cauſe of predeſtination and the obiect together,Chriſt Ieſus as the head,with his bodie,which is the whole companie of the elect,are the obiect of predeſtination,that is,thoſe which were predeſtinated : Ergo,he is not the cauſe. Auguſtine alſo ſaith,*Chriſtus præclariſſimum lumen eſt gratiæ prædeſtinationis, qui, vt hoc eſſet, quibus tandem ſuis,vel operum vel fidei meritis,natura humana, quæ in illo eſt, comparauit? ſicut ergo prædeſtinatus ille vnus eſt,vt caput noſtrum eſſet, Rom.*1.4. qui prædeſtinatus eſt filius Dei,ita multi prædeſtinati ſumus, vt membra eius eſſemus : Chriſt is a notable light of the grace of predeſtination, in whom his humane nature deſerued not by the merit of his workes,or faith,to be ioyned to his Godhead: As he therefore was predeſtinate to be our head,Rom.1.4. predeſtinate the Sonne of God (that is in reſpect of his office and humanitie)ſo are wee predeſtinate to be his members,that is,without reſpect to our faith or workes, onely according to the good pleaſure of his will. And this ſhall be our firſt argument on the contrarie ſide,againſt this reſpectiue election,and further we proue it thus:

De prædeſt. lib.1.cap.15

Luk.12.31.It is your fathers pleaſure to giue you a kingdome : There is no other reaſon to be rendred,why God hath elected his children, and appointed them a kingdome,but this : Complacuit patri,it was your fathers pleaſure.

Iohn 15.16.You haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you : Whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth : Quod ſi autem ipſi primò crediderunt in eum,elegerunt eum, ipſe non elegit eos : But if ſo be that they firſt beleeued in him,they choſe him,he choſe not them. Their onely anſwere here is, that this is to be vnderſtood not of their eternall, but temporall election to the office of their Apoſtleſhip.

Anſw. To this alſo Auguſtine anſwereth: Elegit eos de mundo cùm hîc ageret in carne, ſed iam electos in ſeipſo ante mundi conſtitutionem: He choſe them indeede out of the world when he liued in the fleſh : but they were choſen in himſelfe before the world was made,*lib.1.de prædeſtinat.cap.*17. Our Sauiour alſo ſaith,I haue choſen you,and ordained you, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine : This ſheweth that he ſpeaketh of their eternall election to ſaluation.

Thirdly,we haue a moſt direct place,Rom.9.11.where the Apoſtle ſaith,That before the children were borne,and had done either good or euill,the Lord pronounced of them, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated: Ergo,in Gods eternall election, which goeth before our birth, there is no reſpect had vnto any thing that followeth after the birth, either faith,or workes : for the reaſon is generall againſt both.

Anſw. Suecanus anſwereth,that (theſe words) I haue hated Eſau,are as much, as odiſſe decreui, I haue decreed to hate,for God really and verily hateth none but for their ſin,*pag.*567. And therefore where the Scripture calleth Eſau a prophane perſon, the formall cauſe is added, for ſelling his birthright,Heb.12.16.*Suecan.pag.*590.

Contra. 1. We graunt that no man is verily condemned (which is the reall reprobation) but for his owne ſinne and wickednes : but here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the decree it ſelfe, not of the execution ; the decree is before all time,the execution of the decree followeth in the time appointed : the execution followeth after the birth,and after men haue done good or euill. This therefore,which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of,which was determined before their birth,and before they had done any thing,is the abſolute decree of God. Neither is that place to the Hebrues any thing like vnto this: for there the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any purpoſe or decree of God concerning Eſau, before any euill done, as hee doth here; but onely of an act of prophanenes committed in his life. And though we admit his interpretation, I haue hated, that is, decreed to hate: yet wee muſt vnderſtand the decree ſtill: that although reall hatred be cauſed by their owne ſinne, yet hatred or loue decreed, is grounded onely vpon the will and purpoſe of God: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that the purpoſe of God might remaine, &c. by him that calleth, verſ. 11. but if election ſhould be becauſe of faith foreſeene, it ſhould ſtand as much by the called, as him that calleth.

2 That this therefore pronounced concerning Eſau and Iacob, is to be vnderſtood onely of Gods eternall decree and free purpoſe without the foreſight of faith, or workes, not of the execution of the decree, alone, or of them both together; as Suecanus ſeemeth ſometime to affirme, pag. 572. thus it ſhall appeare by the opening of that which followeth.

Verſ. 14. The Apoſtle anſwereth an obiection, Is there vnrighteouſneſſe then with God? God forbid. Which obiection ariſeth vpon the former examples: If God then doe elect one and reiect another, neither of them hauing done either good or euill, but both being alike, how is hee not vnrighteous, in that he ordaineth not alike vnto thoſe that are in the ſame caſe? But if ſo that God preferreth ſome becauſe of their beleefe, and reiecteth others for their vnbeleefe, there were no ſuch occaſion to complaine of God as vnrighteous, or ſo to obiect, becauſe the cauſe of difference in Gods election is apparant, namely, the reſpect to their faith: and it is a iuſt and righteous thing, that God ſhould preferre beleeuers before vnbeleeuers: therefore if election depended vpon any ſuch foreſight, and not abſolutely vpon the will and purpoſe of God, there could be no ſhew of vnrighteouſnes in God, nor any cauſe ſo to obiect.

Hemingius maketh the meaning of the obiection to be this: that God ſhould ſeeme to be vniuſt, becauſe he doth not adopt and elect Iſmael and Eſau for his children for the merite of their workes, as well as Iſaac and Iacob, pag. 47.

Contra. The merit of faith is as well excluded as the merit of workes: and if God ſhould elect vpon the foreſight of faith, the ground of this obiection is as well remoued, as if he did elect vpon the foreſight of workes: for then God ſhould ſee ſomewhat more in thoſe that are elected, than in the other, that is, their faith, and ſo they ſhould haue no colour to charge God with vnrighteouſnes: This appeareth alſo by the verſe following.

Verſ. 15. I will haue mercie on him, to whom I will ſhew mercie. And verſ. 18. He hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he will be hardeneth: that is, ſaith Hemingius, God ſheweth mercie vpon thoſe that beleeue, who are ſaued only by faith, through the mercie of God in Chriſt, and he reiecteth al that refuſe to beleeue, and ſuffereth them to be hardened, Heming. fol. 49. p. 1. Suecan. 698. & alibi.

Contra. 1. Thus they applie theſe places only to the execution of Gods decree, and vnderſtand them only of that temporall difference, which God maketh in this world betweene beleeuers and vnbeleeuers: whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that difference, which God maketh in his eternall election: as may appeare by the examples of Iacob and Eſau, betweene whom there was a diſtinction made before they were borne: and to this end hee bringeth in the ſimilitude of the potter, verſ. 21. that as he hath power to make his veſſels not yet made, how he will; ſo God may appoint his creatures to ſuch purpoſes, as him pleaſeth, euen before they are: he hath not power to diſpoſe of them onely after they are made and borne. 2. If Gods mercie be decreed vpon the foreſight of faith, I aske them, whence is this faith? Is it of themſelues that beleeue, or of God, or of both? if it be of man, then God hath not mercie on whom he will, but vpon whom man will: becauſe it is (ſay they) in mans power to beleeue; and if he will beleeue, then will God ſhew mercie, and not elſe. And againe, whereas they ſay, God would haue all men to beleeue, and ſo be ſaued; it followeth that God hath mercie vpon all, conditionally if they beleeue: but the Apoſtle ſaith contrarie, that hee hath mercie vpon ſome, not vpon all, and that hee withholdeth his mercie from others, whom in his iuſt iudgement he hardeneth. But if faith be of God, and none can haue it, vnleſſe he giue it, what other reaſon is there, that he giueth it not to all, but becauſe he hath not elected all?

3 Neither is God ſaid to harden ſome mens hearts only by ſuffering them to be hardened, but as Auguſtine ſaith of Pharao: Deus indurauit per iuſtum iudicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God hardened his heart by his iuſt iudgement, Pharao by his freewill. And againe, where Dauid ſaith, that God bade Shemei curſe him, Auguſtine ſaith thus: Vtique non iubendo dixit ei, ſed quod eius voluntatem proprio ſuo vitio malam, in hoc peccatum iudicio ſuo iuſto & occulto inclinauit: He did not commaund him ſo to do, but becauſe by his iuſt and ſecret iudgement, he did incline his will of it ſelfe corrupt, and wicked, to this ſinne: de liber. arbit. cap. 20. & 23. God therefore onely permitteth not as a looker on, but is an agent and a doer as a iuſt iudge, yet without ſinne.

Verſ. 16. It is not in him that willeth or runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercie: that is (ſaith Hemingius) it is not in him that willeth or runneth after the fleſh, but in him that willeth and runneth by faith, which is grounded vpon the mercie of God; who of meere loue gaue his ſonne to be the redeemer of the world, pag. 48.

Contra. 1. The oppoſition here is not betweene man willing by nature, and man willing by faith,but betweene man willing or running,and God ſhewing mercie. If it be all one for man to will according to faith,and for God to ſhew mercie, then is it Gods grace and mercie, that ſome men haue faith: for if to will according to the fleſh be one thing, and to will according to faith another, ſeeing all men are the ſame naturally and according to the fleſh,whence is it then,that ſome mens will is regenerate by faith? is it not of the grace and mercie of God? Mercie therefore is firſt ſhewed,and then faith is giuen: the foreſight then of faith is not the cauſe of grace and fauour. 2. It is Gods mercie you ſay, that Chriſt was giuen for the redemption of the world: but this is a common mercie,as ye hold,that Chriſt dyed for all men: is it not alſo a mercie of God to giue faith to beleeue in Chriſt? If you affirme only that common mercie: then is it not true,which the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath mercie only on ſome,and hardeneth others; but God is mercifull to all alike in offering Chriſt both to beleeuers & vnbeleeuers. And concerning faith,if it be not Gods mercie that we haue it,then Gods mercie in giuing Chriſt,is nothing without our owne mercie vpon our ſelues in beleeuing in Chriſt: yea our owne mercie ſhall exceede Gods mercie, in as much as beleeuers haue more mercie than vnbeleeuers.If it be of Gods mercie,that we haue faith,why is not this mercie ſhewed to all,but that it pleaſed not God to elect all, but to receiue to fauour onely his choſen? Theſe patrons of vniuerſall and common grace, are neuer able,holding their opinion,to make all ſound here.

Verſ.19.Thou wilt ſay vnto me, Why doth he yet complaine, who hath reſiſted his will? verſ.20. But who art thou ô man,that pleadeſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the ſame lumpe one veſſell to honour, another to diſhonour? Hence we conclude,that euen ſo in the beginning God had power by ſpeciall election to appoint ſome vnto honour,pretermitting others and leauing them in diſhonour, and this of his owne freewill and purpoſe,not hauing any reſpect at all vnto man.

Hemingius anſwereth: That this ſimilitude holdeth not in euery point, but is brought in by the Apoſtle to ſhew the power of God, that hee is able to puniſh the contemners of his word, and vpon their repentance to renew them againe, as the potter, &c. And ſo is it applied by Ieremie chap.18: for otherwiſe ſimplie God maketh not the wicked, as the potter doth the baſer veſſels: *pag.*50.30.

Contra. 1. The obiection here moued,Who hath reſiſted his will? ſtandeth not with this interpretation, nor with Hemingius opinion: for if God would haue all men to beleeue,and ſo be ſaued; then is Gods will ouerthwarted,and his purpoſe is gainſaid,and his wil reſiſted,for he would haue all ſaued,and yet all are not ſaued. But the Apoſtle hauing ſet downe this principle, that God in the beginning elected whom he would, and left the reſt, whom he would not receiue to mercie: then this obiection is made,that ſeeing Gods will is performed in both,that whom hee would,are ſaued;whom he would not,remaine as they were: why then ſhould there be any complaint made of their diſobedience? vnleſſe therefore we make the Apoſtles ſcope to be this, the obiection hath no coherence at all with the precedent part.

2. This ſimilitude we do not vrge in all points: for man is otherwiſe by creation,than a piece of clay,but ſo farre onely,as it is applied by the Apoſtle as we haue ſhewed. Ieremie vſeth the ſimilitude ſomewhat to a diuers purpoſe, then the Apoſtle doth: for the Prophet ſetteth forth Gods power in the externall workes of his prouidence in the gouernment and adminiſtration of the world; as in the planting, and deſtroying of nations: the Apoſtle entreateth of the workes of Gods election,and predeſtination,verſ.11.That the purpoſe might ſtand according to election. Therefore Gods power is not here ſet forth toward thoſe that are now contemners, or beleeuers, but before they were ſuch.

3. As touching his reaſon: Though God make veſſels to diſhonour, that is, ordaine wicked men to puniſhment,yet he maketh them not wicked: they are wicked of their owne making,but the puniſhment due to their wickednes, which is eternall ſhame and diſhonor,is made and ordained of God: as Prou.16.4.God made the wicked againſt the euill day.

Verſ.22. What if God to ſhew his power,&c. the veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction,and to declare the riches of his glorie vpon the veſſels of mercie,which he hath prepared to glorie? Ergo, from the beginning ſome were prepared to glorie,ſome to deſtruction.

Suecanus ſaith,That none abſolutely before God are appointed to be veſſels of honour or diſhonour, but conditionally in Chriſt,*pag.*686. that is, as they ſhould beleeue or not beleeue in him. Huberus ſaith,That God indeede prepareth the veſſels of mercie,giuing them faith,and illumination,but they are made the veſſels of wrath of themſelues,and by Sathan. And therefore the Apoſtle chaungeth the phraſe, ſaying, that God prepareth the veſſels of mercie,but the other are prepared: *Theſ.*868.869.870.

Contra. 1. The veſſels of honor and diſhonor are ſimplie,not conditionally formed: elſe the Apoſtles ſpeech were impertinent, verſ.20. Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? But now if they were formed onely conditionally, which condition is performed not by the former, but by the thing formed; then are they formed by themſelues: but the Apoſtle ſaith they are formed of God: all condition then on their part is excluded. 2. Againe, as the potter of the ſame lumpe maketh veſſels of honour, or diſhonour, ſo God doth ordaine men of the ſame maſſe and condition in themſelues, ſome to honour, ſome to diſhonour: but now if God ſhould reſpect the faith of ſome, and the vnbeleefe of others, and ſo according to this foreſight ordaine them, they ſhould not be one lumpe, or of one mould, but diuers.

To Huberus wee anſwere: firſt, if God prepare the veſſels of mercie, and worke effectually in them, one of theſe two muſt needes be graunted; that God either prepareth all men generally for the veſſels of mercie, and they afterward are made by themſelues the veſſels of wrath, (which ſeemeth to be his opinion) then is the will of God reſiſted. If they ſay Gods will is conditionall, if they beleeue, yet this helpeth them not: for God giueth faith to all (as he ſaith) and ſo would haue all to beleeue: ſeeing then all doe not beleeue, Gods will is gaineſaid, and ouerruled: Or elſe if God prepare ſome and not others, by giuing faith and grace, whereof commeth this difference, but that God hath ſorted out ſome from the reſt by his eternall election?

2. Huberus ſeemeth to note a myſterie, in that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the veſſels of wrath, vſeth another word, and in the paſſiue voyce, ſaying, σκεύη κατηρτισμένα, veſſels fitted or compoſed to deſtruction: but of the other he ſpeaketh actiuely, which God hath prepared, προητοίμασε. Firſt, for the change of the voyce which he obiecteth, it is nothing: for is it not al one to ſay, which he prepared, or which are prepared of him? And Matth.25.verſ.34.41. Both the kingdome of God, and euerlaſting fire are ſaid paſſiuely to be prepared of God. And for the word, both that which is here pronounced of the veſſels of mercie, is vſed in the Scripture of the preparation to deſtruction, Matth.25.41. And on the contrarie, the other word applied to the veſſels of wrath, is attributed to the faithfull, 1.Corin.1.10. Be ye knit together, κατηρτισμένοι: and he ſpeaketh to thoſe which are ſanctified in Chriſt, and Saints by calling, verſ.2.3. So that here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not, how men by their owne wickedneſſe are fitted to damnation, but how they ſtand in the decree of God, how they are vnder the hands of the potter: the reddition of the ſimilitude muſt anſwere to the propoſition; the potter maketh himſelfe both kinde of veſſels, he maketh not the one, and the other maketh it ſelfe: ſo God decreeth both concerning the elect and reprobate.

Thus haue we opened the true ſenſe of this chapter, and freed it from the corrupt gloſſes of the contrarie minded: And ſo haue we a moſt cleere teſtimonie of the Apoſtle, for Gods free and gracious election, without any foreſight of faith or any thing elſe in vs. And thus Auguſtine expoundeth it: *Apoſtolus non ſolum fratres, ſed geminos, nec geminos ſolum, ſed vno concubitu fuſos in vtero comparauit, vt quoniam in nondum natis, aut aliquid operatis nulla eſſe poterant momenta meritorum, paria etiam eſſent parentum merita, quæ diuerſo tempore varia eſſe potuerunt: itaque Apoſtolus eos vaſa miſericordiæ vocat, vt totum, quicquid eſſent, ſecundum miſericordiam ſe eſſe cognoſcerent: De prædeſtinat. lib.1.cap.*10. The Apoſtle doth compare together not brethren onely, but twinnes borne at one birth: that becauſe in thoſe which were not yet borne, neither as yet had done any thing, there could be no difference of merit, and their parents merits were alike, which might haue been at diuers times vnlike: the Apoſtle therefore calleth them veſſels of mercie, that they might acknowledge all, whatſoeuer they had, to be of mercie.

Saint *Ambroſe in Tit.*3. vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Secundum miſericordiam ſuam, &c. According to his mercie he ſaued vs: Hoc bonum, quod in Chriſtianis florere cernimus, de radice diuinæ pietatis oritur, &c. This goodneſſe, which doth floriſh in Chriſtians, doth ariſe of the roote of the diuine pietie, or loue, for God by his mercie hath ſaued vs in Chriſt.

Againe, de vocat. Gent. lib.1. cap.3. Non omnis Iſrael reprobatus, nec omnis electus, ſed partem cæcitas voluntaria auertit, partem ſibi illuminatio gratuita reſeruauit: All Iſrael was not reprobated, nor all elected: but part through their voluntarie blindnes is turned aſide, part by gracious illumination is reſerued.

Hieron. apolog. ad Ruffinum: Non ait Apoſtolus elegit nos, &c. cum eſſemus ſancti, ſed vt eſſemus: The Apoſtle ſaith not he hath choſen vs, when we were holie, &c. but that we ſhould be holie.

Thus Auguſtine thought in the end of the grace of freenes of election, though hee had been ſometime of another minde, that God, though hee elected not by the foreſight of workes, yet, Elegit fidem, vt quem ſibi crediturum præſciret, ipſum eligeret: Yet hee elected their faith, that is, whom he foreſaw ſhould beleeue, him he elected. This ſometime was Auguſtines opinion, which he afterward retracted: Sed nondum (inquit) diligentius quæſiueram, nec inueneram, qualis ſit electio gratiæ: But yet I had not diligently ſearched, or found out, what to thinke of the election of grace: *lib.1. de prædeſtinat. cap.*3.

Auguſtine therefore being better reformed in iudgement thus writeth: Electio gratiæ non ſolum opera humana, ſed fidem præuenit, ex qua omnia opera bona incipiunt: The election of grace doth not onely preuent, or goe before mens workes, but before faith, where all good workes begin.

So I wiſh that they, which thinke now, as Auguſtine ſometime did, would not be aſhamed with Auguſtine to correct their erroneous opinion. It was counted in time paſt Semipelagianiſme, to aſcribe election to the foreſight of faith. Bellarmine a patrone of poperie yet abhorreth this opinion, and proueth at large, Nullam eſſe cauſam in nobis prædeſtinationis: That there is no cauſe in vs of our predeſtination, neither that God hath elected vs vpon the foreſight of our workes: aut propter bonum vſum liberi arbitrij, aut gratiæ: or for the good vſing of freewill, or grace: Lib.2.de grat & liber.arbit.cap.10. Is it not therefore a ſhame for Proteſtants, euen in a popiſh error to be more ſtiffe and reſolute, then a popiſh profeſſor? And thus much of this ſecond abſurditie: Wee will be ſhorter in the reſt.

THE THIRD INCONVENIENCE or Abſurditie.

ABſurd. 3. The patrones of vniuerſall grace, who affirme that God conditionally hath apointed all men to ſaluation, if they will beleeue, and that he would haue all men to beleeue: Heming.de vniuerſal. grat.pag.58. And that if all beleeue not, it is not for any defect of grace, but through their owne fault: Suecan.de liber.arbit. pag.408. They thus holding are driuen to confeſſe, that to beleeue, man hath power of himſelfe, by his freewill: for God offereth grace and faith to all, and it is in mans power to receiue, or refuſe it.

Hemingius further deliuereth his opinion thus: That faith is both the gift of God, becauſe it is wrought by his holy ſpirit in thoſe that deſire it; it is alſo of mans free will, becauſe it is in the will of man to giue or withhold his conſent to and from the calling of God: And yet (ſaith he) this will, whereby we beleeue, is alſo Gods gift, becauſe it appertaineth to free will, which was giuen in the creation: ſo there are foure things, which concurre vnto faith, to heare the Goſpell, to conſent vnto it, to deſire grace offered, and to beleeue God, which promiſeth: all theſe are voluntary in man: De vniuerſ.grat.pag.57. So hee concludeth, that faith is partly the gift of God, becauſe he giueth his word, and inwardly moueth the heart; partly the worke of man, becauſe man, volens credit, beleeueth willingly, being once moued of the ſpirit, à bonitate obiecti, by the goodneſſe of the obiect: pag.56. So his opinion is, That the will of man is not onely paſſiue, but alſo actiue in the conuerſion of man: de libero arbit.pag.118. And as God worketh by teaching, inſpiring, mouing; ſo man worketh, by willing, conſenting, endeuouring: pag.120.lin.1.2. So the beginning and occaſion of faith is of God, but the act and perfection of faith, in man.

Yet Hemingius much forgetting himſelfe, alloweth that ſaying of Auguſtine: Liberi arbitrij eſt velle, tamen bene velle, gratiæ Dei eſt: That it is in our free will, to will; but well to will, is of grace, De liber.arbitr.pag.98. And that of Bernard alſo he alloweth: Deus eſt author ſalutis, liberum arbitrium tantum capax, nec dat illam niſi Deus, nec capere valet niſi liberum arbitrium: God is the author onely and worker of ſaluation, free will is onely capable, none giueth but God, nor nothing is capable of it, but free will: pag.120. Thus he confeſſeth with theſe fathers, that mans free will is meerely paſſiue in diuine things, and onely receiueth, worketh nothing. And further he confeſſeth, That a man regenerate and taught of God, may will that is good, by his free will, which hee hath of grace: pag.114.lin.17. Here he ſaith, that free will to good is of grace: and thus he is contrary to himſelfe.

Suecanus likewiſe runneth in a maze, and confoundeth himſelfe: One while hee ſaith, That grace and mans will worke together: and that men may reſiſt God, and of their owne motion giue aſſent vnto him, Quantum ad ipſam naturalem volendi actionem in creatione inditam attinet: By the very naturall action of the will, as it was giuen in the creation: De liber.arbitr.pag.405. Yet with the ſame breath hee ſayth, that mans will is no efficient, or working cauſe of his conuerſion, but onely a principall ſubiect, wherein the ſpirit of God worketh: And that in ſpirituall actions, as in faith, regeneration, A man vnregenerate neither vnderſtandeth, nor is able to do or will any thing: pag.398. And that the whole benefite of our conuerſion, in the beginning, midſt, and end, is neither begun nor finiſhed by our ſtrength, but is onely of grace: pag.405. Thus they ſpeake and write contrary things, and blow hote and cold with one breath. But for all this, they cannot thus ſhuffle vp the matter, but we further vrge them thus.

Contra. They that affirme that God offereth grace and faith equally to all, and that God would haue all men to beleeue, and if they beleeue not, it is not for want of grace, but the fault is onely in themſelues: do conſequently hold, that to beleeue is either wholy or in part in mans power. The firſt, to affirme that faith is in mans power wholy without the gift of God, is Pelagianiſme, and maketh man the author of his owne ſaluation. Yet ſo holdeth Puckſius, one of the patrones of this opinion: but Hemingius and Suecanus, or other vniuerſall men, are not yet ſo groſſe. Their opinion is then, that faith is partly of God, partly of man, that conſenteth vnto the calling of God by his freewill. Againſt the which opinion we haue the decree of the Arauſican.Concil.2.can.5.Si quis ſicut augmentum, ita & initium fidei, ipſum credulitatis affectum, &c. If any man ſay, that as the encreaſe, ſo the beginning of faith, likewiſe the very inward diſpoſition to beleeue, whereby we beleeue in him, that iuſtifieth the vngodly, is not giuen vs by grace, and the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, which conuerteth our will from infidelitie to faith, but that it is naturally in vs, is contrary to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, We truſt that he which hath begun this worke in you, will finiſh it vntill the day of the Lord. This decree maketh both againſt thoſe, that affirme faith to be naturally in vs, as Puckzius, as alſo againſt them which aſcribe either the beginning of faith or the increaſe, or the diſpoſition to freewill, and not all to grace, as Hemingius. The abſurditie of which opinion, we further declare thus.

1. If it be in mans power to beleeue, whether do you vnderſtand man regenerate, or vnregenerate: Man vnregenerate is not able to beleeue, for the naturall man perceiueth not the thinges of the ſpirit of God, 1.Cor.2.14. And this is partly confeſſed by Hemingius and Succanus, as wee haue ſeene before. If man muſt firſt be regenerate before he can beleeue, how commeth it to paſſe, that ſeeing an equall meaſure of faith, and grace is offered on Gods behalfe vnto all, that all men are not regenerate? You will ſay, ſome are regenerate by grace: But why do ſome apprehend the grace of regeneration more then other? there is no power yet in their will, becauſe it is vnregenerate: muſt it not then be needes confeſſed, that God giueth a greater meaſure of grace to ſome, ſuch as he hath elected, then to other? And this the Apoſtle notably prooueth, where he ſaith: God is the Sauiour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe which beleeue, 1.Timoth.4.10. But if God for his parte offer grace no more to beleeuers, then vnbeleeuers, but in that they accept of grace offered themſelues, how is he after a more eſpecial ſort the Sauiour of beleeuers, more then of others? This place then inferreth of neceſſity a more ſpeciall grace and fauour of God toward them that beleeue.

2. That all cannot haue faith, but ſuch as are ordained and elected thereunto: theſe Scriptures are our warrant: Iohn 10.26. Ye beleeue not, for ye are not of my ſheepe: Iohn.12.39. They could not beleeue, becauſe God had blinded their eies: Act.13.48. As many as were ordayned to eternall life, beleeued. Their anſwers to theſe places wee haue ſeene before, that wee neede not to repeate them againe.

3. That faith and euery good gift, the beginning, perfection and end, is onely of God, thus alſo it is teſtified in the word of God: It is not of him that willeth, or runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie, Rom.9.16. It is God that worketh both the will and the deed, Phil.2.13 Without me you can do nothing, Iohn 15.5. No man can come vnto me, except my father draw him, Iohn 6.44. Hemingius anſwereth, that God draweth, by ſetting before vs the promiſes of eternall life, and by miniſtring ſo excellent an obiect: *pag.*57. But after this manner God (you ſay) draweth all men: and ſuch drawing men may reſiſt, for all that are thus drawne by this common grace, follow not: But they that are drawne of God, as here our Sauiour ſpeaketh, muſt needes come vnto Chriſt, verſ.37. All that the Father giueth me, ſhall come to me.

To conclude this place, theſe patrones of common grace do fall into a flat point of Pelagianiſme, whoſe aſſertion was this: Vitam æternam omnibus paratam eſſe, quantum ad Deum, quantum ad arbitrij libertatem, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: That life eternall, on Gods behalfe is prepared for all, and as for the libertie of freewill, they lay hold of eternall life, that of themſelues beleeue God: In epiſtol. Proſper. ad Auguſtinum. This did the old Pelagians hold, this do the new vniuerſaliſts affirme.

Hemingius pag.109.

Now to requite vs againe, for this charge, they accuſe vs of Manicheiſme, the Manichees tooke away the vſe of freewill altogether, and affirmed all things to bee done of neceſſitie, and conſequently made God the author of ſinne: to this opinion they ſay, we come neere.

Contra. We defie the monſtrous ſect of the Manichees and all Manicheiſme. Firſt we affirme, not all things to be done of abſolute neceſſitie: for though God haue decreed the ende of euery man, yet this no more bringeth a ſtoicall and fatall neceſſitie, then to ſay that God hath foreſeene all things (which they themſelues affirme:) for whether God onely foreſeeth, or beſide predeſtinateth, things cannot otherwiſe fall out, then hee hath foreſeene or appointed: yet it followeth not, that the yoke of abſolute neceſſitie is therefore layd vpon vs: for neither Gods preſcience nor predeſtination taketh away ſecond meanes and cauſes, as the libertie of mans will, and ſuch like, but rather eſtabliſheth them: for as God did foreknow and ordaine things to be done, ſo he willed and decreed, and foreſaw the meanes whereby they ſhould be done.

2. We make not God the author of ſinne, though he haue not elected all: for the not elected, being left to themſelues by the corruption of their owne will, fall into ſinne, which God foreſaw, but willed not, but the puniſhment of ſinne, he decreed before, and in his time will ſee executed.

3. Neither do we take away freewill: which we ſay is the beginning and fountaine of ſinne in man: ſo man hath a freewill, that is without conſtraint to do euill. And in good things wee exclude not the will of man: but man (we ſay) willeth, and by grace his will is reformed to will that that is good: So grace worketh, the wil of man is wrought: Man then hath a wil in good things, but altogether paſſiue: yet God otherwiſe worketh in man, then in bruite beaſtes, for they haue no will or vnderſtanding at all, man hath, though corrupted. Hence are all thoſe precepts, and exhortations in Scripture, not that man of his owne accord is able to receiue them: but God ſpeaketh to men as a reaſonable creature, that naturally doth will, and vnderſtand, that they ſhould be ſtirred vp by ſuch exhortations, to ſeeke for further grace at Gods hand, to reforme and regenerate their wils to the obedience of his holy precepts. Thus then it appeareth, that wee are no Manichees. Other obiections concerning freewill, becauſe they are common to the Papiſts, and theſe new freewill men (which differ not much in this matter) I will reſerue to the treatiſe of freewill, which followeth. And yet, what ſaid I? that they much differ not? Nay, of the two theſe vniuerſall freemen are more erronious concerning this point of freewill, than the Papiſts.

1. The Papiſts make a diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace on Gods behalfe, Bellarm. lib. 1. de grat. cap. 2. But theſe Vniuerſaliſts ſay that, on Gods behalfe, like effectuall grace is giuen to all, but their freewill maketh the difference, whereby ſome beleeuing, make this common grace to themſelues more effectuall: So they aſcribe more to freewill, namely, to make grace effectuall, than the Papiſts doe. 2. The Papiſts ſay, we haue freewill (yet ayded and aſſiſted by God) to doe good workes: theſe Vniuerſaliſts ſay, wee haue freewill to beleeue, which is a greater gift, than to doe good works, which are a neceſſarie conſequent of faith. 3. The Papiſts ſay, that the firſt grace whereby we are iuſtified, that is the beginning of iuſtification, is meerely of grace both in the giuer and receiuer: theſe Vniuerſaliſts ſay, that God indeede offereth grace, by mouing, and ſtirring the heart, but man by his freewill giueth conſent to his calling: ſo that the beginning of their calling is but free in behalfe of the caller, but it is of themſelues, that they are effectually called. And thus much of this third inconuenience.

That it is not in a mans power to beleeue, Saint Ambroſe thus further witneſſeth, in 4. ad Galat. vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Seeing ye know God, or rather are knowne of God: Cum enim hi non quærerent Deum, aduocauit eos ad ſuam gratiam: For when they did not ſeeke God, hee called them to his grace. Lib. 1. de vocat. Gentium cap. 9. Licet inſit homini bonum nolle, tamen niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: illud contraxit natura per culpam, hoc recipit natura per gratiam: Although it be in man to nill that is good, yet he cannot will that is good, vnleſſe it be giuen him.

THE FOVRTH INCONVENIENCE or abſurditie.

ABſurd. 4. Another conſequent of their opinion is, that as it is in mans power to beleeue, and obey his effectuall calling, ſo may he reſiſt it if he will. So Hemingius pag. 117. lin. 17. The will of man being moued by the word of God, and the holy Ghoſt, may both obey and reſiſt the ſame. The ſame is affirmed by Suecanus de libero arbitrio pag. 405. for they ſay, that the cauſe why all beleeue not that are called, is not at all for any want of grace on Gods behalfe, but it is onely in themſelues, that refuſe grace offered: Suecan. pag. 919.

Argum. Our Sauiour ſaith, O Ieruſalem, &c. how often would I haue gathered thy children together, &c. and thou wouldeſt not? Matth. 23. Wherefore if they would, they might haue been ſaued: It is therefore in mans power to reſiſt his vocation: ſic Heming. pag. 117.

Contra. 1. True it is, that it is not for any defect or want of grace on Gods behalfe, that many being called, beleeue not, but the defect is in themſelues: there is no defect properly in God: his calling is ſufficient vnto all; but that it is effectuall to ſome and not to others, it commeth of their owne corruption, and euilnes of nature, which God taketh away and healeth in whom he pleaſeth, and ſuffereth the reſt to remaine in their hardnes of heart.

2. There is a ſufficient calling for all, when God offereth the externall meanes of ſaluation, whereby all might come to ſaluation, if they had grace to apprehend: this calling may be reſiſted by men, whom God iuſtly leaueth to themſelues. There is alſo an effectuall calling, when as God worketh inwardly by the efficacie of his ſpirit, and draweth his elect, of vnwilling making them willing, to obey their calling: and thus are the elected onely called, and this calling cannot be reſiſted. So ſaith our Sauiour, Many are called, namely, ſufficiently on Gods behalfe, but few are choſen, that is, effectuallie called, as the elect onely are: The firſt calling was offered to Ieruſalem.

Here it will be obiected: firſt, This generall calling of God, if it be not effectuall to all, how is not God to be charged with the periſhing of thoſe, to whom it is not effectuall?

Anſw. God in no wiſe is chargeable therewith: for Gods calling in it ſelfe is ſufficient to all, it is for want of grace in themſelues, that it is not effectuall to them.

Obiect. 2. But why doth not God by the powerfull operation of grace, make it effectuall to all as to ſome? is he not now partiall?

Anſ. God is a debter to none: but whereas all by nature haue made themſelues the ſeruants of ſinne, if God in his iuſtice ſhould leaue them all to themſelues, he were not therefore to be iudged vniuſt. But now ſeeing hee of his infinite mercie ſaueth ſome, and giueth them his grace, it is not partialitie in him, who findeth nothing in man to be reſpected, but a work of his meere grace and fauour: for, as the Apoſtle ſaith, hee hath mercie on whom hee will, and whom hee will hee hardeneth.

3. That Gods effectuall and gracious calling of election cannot be reſiſted, thus the Scripture beareth witneſſe: Rom.9.19. No man hath reſiſted Gods will: But as the Pſalme ſaith, Whatſoeuer it pleaſed him, that did he in heauen and earth. Whom it pleaſed God therefore to ſaue, and call by his grace, they ſhall be ſaued and called.

Ioh.6.37. All that my father giueth me, ſhall come vnto me. And verſ.45. Euery man that hath heard, and hath learned of the father, commeth vnto me: Not that God ſaueth any man againſt his will, but, as Auguſtine ſaith, Ex nolentibus volentes facit: Of vnwilling he maketh them willing. Auguſtine further alſo writeth notably of this matter: Non poteſt effectus miſericordiæ Dei eſſe in hominis poteſtate, vt fruſtra ille miſereatur, ſi homo nolit: quia ſi vellet etiam reluctantium miſereri, poſſet ita vocare, quomodo illis aptum eſſet, &c. Illi ergo electi, qui ſic vocati, vt vocantem non reſpuant: Cæteri non electi, quia non ſecuti, quantumuis vocati: ad Simplician. lib.1. quæſt.2. It cannot bee in mans power to fruſtrate the efficacie of Gods mercie, if man will not: for if God alſo would haue mercie of thoſe, that ſtriue againſt his mercie, he could alſo call them, as it were meete for them: They therfore are elected of God, who are ſo called, that they refuſe not their calling: the reſt are not elected, which are called, but obey not. And thus much alſo of this inconuenience, that if man may fruſtrate Gods effectuall calling, that God ſhall not haue mercie, vnleſſe man will; then is the will of man ſtronger and of greater power, than Gods will is.

Laſtly, concerning theſe three points: firſt, that there is a generall calling which is ſufficient to all, and beſide that a ſpeciall calling effectuall only in ſome. Secondly, that the generall calling by the hardnes of mans heart may be made fruſtrate. Thirdly, that the effectuall calling of God can not be reſiſted. Saint Ambroſe doth thus witneſſe euidently.

Firſt, he ſaith, lib.1. de vocat. Gent. c.2. Credimus ſecundum ſcripturas, &c. We beleeue according to the Scriptures, that Gods prouidence was neuer wanting to the vniuerſall companie of men: quæ licet exceptum ſibi populum ſpecialibus ad pietatem direxerit inſtitutis, &c. which prouidence of God did yet giue ſpeciall directions vnto godlineſſe to his people, which hee had excepted from the reſt.

For the ſecond he thus teſtifieth: Si quis non credit in Chriſtum, generali beneficio ipſe ſe fraudat, vt ſi quis clauſis feneſtris radios ſolis excludat: If any man beleeue not in Chriſt, he doth defraud himſelf, as if a man ſhould ſhut the windowes to keepe out the Sunne-beames: lib.2. cap.2.

Thirdly, lib.1. de vocat. Gent. cap.10. Nihil obſiſtere diuinæ gratiæ poteſt, quo minus id, quod voluerit impleatur: Nothing can reſiſt the diuine grace, that it ſhould not fulfill whatſoeuer it would. And againe, cap.9. Quantumlibet impiorum malignitas accuſetur reſiſtens gratiæ, &c. Although the malignitie of the wicked be accuſed, as reſiſting grace; ſhall it be thought, that they deſerued grace, vpon whom it was conferred, or that grace, which ſubdued whom ſhe would, could not conuert thoſe, which remaine vnconuerted? they which were called, were the ſame, which they are that remaine in their hardnes of heart: ſed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda, quod voluit; iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit: but grace gaue vnto them, what ſhe would; and iuſtice rendred to the other, what was due.

Auguſtine alſo thus witneſſeth: Volenti ſaluum facere nullum hominum reſiſtit arbitrium: Mans will is not able to reſiſt God, being willing, or purpoſed to ſaue: De corrept. & grat. cap.14. ibid. Non eſt dubitandum voluntati Dei voluntates humanas reſiſtere non poſſe: It is not to be doubted, but that mans will cannot reſiſt Gods will.

THE FIFT ABSVRDITIE.

ABſurd.5. Theſe patrones of vniuerſall and conditionall election and grace, which affirme that men are no otherwiſe elected, but with condition if they beleeue, and ſo long are they elected, as they continue in faith, doe conſequently alſo hold, that men may both loſe their election, and loſe their faith: and of the veſſels of honour, if they fall from faith, become veſſels of wrath: Heming. pag.30. And they which are written in the booke of life may be raſed out of it: Huber. theſ.757. The ſame alſo is maintained by Suecanus, that the elect may finally fall away from Chriſt. pag.976.

Arg.1. That election may be loſt, they would thus proue it out of Scripture: Exod.32.32. Moſes ſaith vnto God: If thou wilt not pardon them, raſe me out of the booke which thou haſt written: The Lord anſwered, Him that ſinneth will I put out of my booke. Neither Moſes would haue asked an impoſſible thing, neither would God haue ſo anſwered, if that they could not be raſed out of the booke of life that are written there: Huber. theſ.766.

*Anſw.*1. Moſes being carried away with an extraordinarie zeale of Gods glory, and loue to the people, forgetting himſelfe and his owne eſtate, wiſheth, that himſelfe ſhould periſh, rather then the people: yet it followeth not, that he could periſh: For after the ſame maner S. Paul with the like zeale wiſheth he were accurſed, ſo the Iewes might be ſaued, Rom.9.3. yet the Apoſtle was ſure that he could not periſh, nor be ſeparated from the loue of God, Rom.8.38. And he knew there was a crowne of glorie laide vp for him, 2.Tim.4.8. No ſuch thing therefore can be inferred vpon theſe extraordinarie examples of zeale. 2. But the Lord anſwering Moſes, ſaith, he will put out, &c. though Moſes might be carried away in zeale ſo to ſpeake, yet the Lord ſpeaketh aduiſedly. Anſw. Firſt, the Lord applieth his ſpeech vnto Moſes infirmitie at this time, and by way of conceſſion, ſaith vnto him, that if it were ſo, that ſome were to be put out of his booke, yet Moſes ſhould not, but they rather that ſinned. Againe, it is a metaphoricall ſpeech, for God hath indeede no ſuch booke, ſuch putting in or putting out: but by writing in that booke, the decree of ſaluation is ſignified; by not writing or blotting out, the decree of damnation: God will put them out that ſinne, that is, hath decreed their iuſt damnation: for otherwiſe to ſpeake properly they were neuer written in the booke of life, Apoca.17.8. Here we haue a direct teſtimony, that ſuch as are loſt, were neuer written in the booke of life; how dare then any man wreſt the Scripture to a contrary ſenſe, and ſo make it ſpeake contrary things? Or as Auguſtine interpreteth, Non ſic accipere debemus, quòd quenquam Deus ſcribat in libro vitæ & deleat illum, ſi homo dixit, quod ſcripſi, ſcripſi; Deus quenquam ſcripſit, & delet? quomodo ergo ibi delentur? hoc dictum eſt ſecundum eorum ſpem, quia ibi ſe ſcriptos putabant: We muſt not ſo take it, as though God writeth any in the booke of life, and blotteth them out again: for if a man ſaid, what I haue written, I haue written (ſo Pilate ſayd concerning the inſcription of the Croſſe) doth God write any, and blot out againe? how are they then blotted out? It is ſo ſaid in reſpect of their hope, becauſe they thought they were written there.

They alſo obiect that place, 1.Cor.9.27. I beate downe my bodie, leaſt, &c. I my ſelfe ſhould be a reprobate: Ergo, the elect may become a reprobate: *Pucks.rat.*77.

*Anſw.*1. That Paul was aſſured he could not be a reprobate, we haue ſhewed before, for he knew that there was a crowne of righteouſnes laid vp for him. 2. It is not then to be referred to the perſon of Paul, as though he feared any reprobation before God, but to his miniſterie, leaſt, if he ſhould doe himſelfe otherwiſe then he preached to others, his miniſterie ſhould be diſgraced, and reproued.

*Argum.*2. Now that faith alſo may be loſt, they ſhew it thus: 1.Corin.8.11. Through thy knowledge ſhall the weake brother periſh for whom Chriſt dyed: Ergo, a man may loſe his faith and ſo periſh: *Heming.pag.*24.

*Anſw.*1. None can finally or eternally periſh, whom Chriſt hath redeemed by his death: for Chriſt cannot loſe any thing of that which is giuen him, Ioh.6.39.17.12. 2. Therefore the Apoſtle here by periſhing vnderſtandeth not a finall deſtruction, but a ſhaking or weakning of their faith, which verſe 12. he calleth a wounding of their conſcience: now it is one thing to wound, another to ſlay: that this is the meaning, it may appeare by comparing this place with the like, Rom.14.15. Deſtroy not him with thy meate for whom Chriſt dyed: where the ſame word is vſed, μὴ ἀπόλλυε, deſtroy not: that is, thy brother is grieued, verſ.15. he ſtumbleth, is offended, or made weake, verſ.21. And againe, verſ.20. Deſtroy not the worke of God for meates ſake: the word is, κατάλυε: ſo then, ἀπόλλυε, and κατάλυε, deſtroy not, with the Apoſtle are all one: and to build vp is contrarie to deſtroy, as they are oppoſed, Gal.2.18. If I build again the things that are deſtroyed: So then, as to build vp and edifie our brother, is nothing elſe but to inſtruct and confirme his faith, ſo to deſtroy, is not to periſh his perſon, but to empaire his faith. 3. Or thus we may reade, Through thy knowledge thy weake brother ſhall periſh: that is, as much as in thee lyeth, by thy meanes thy weake brother might periſh, not that ſimplie or abſolutely he doth periſh. 4. Laſtly, S. Paul ſpeaketh not here of the eternall purpoſe of God, in them for whom he hath giuen Chriſt to die, but that, as he himſelfe giueth the rule, Loue hopeth all things, 1.Cor.13.7. ſo we ſhould thinke none other of our weake brother that beleeueth, but that Chriſt dyed for him: And that the Apoſtle thus ſpeaketh, not in reſpect of Gods ſecret decree in the death of Chriſt, but of that hope and opinion, that we ought one to haue of another, it appeareth, Rom.14.4. where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Gods ſecret decree, ſayth, Euery man ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter: euery man ſtandeth not, but ſome ſtand, ſome fall: But in reſpect of the iudgement and charitable opinion of men, he ſaith, verſ.3. God hath receiued him: verſ.4. He ſhall be eſtabliſhed: for God is able to make him ſtand: yet in the ſame verſe, he ſaith, before God he ſtandeth, or falleth: but in the iudgement of men, euery beleeuer ſtandeth, is eſtabliſhed, and receiued: and ſo conſequently for him Chriſt dyed, verſ.15.

Contra. Now on the contrarie ſide, that both our election is ſure before God, neither that the faith of the elect, though it may fayle, and empayre, yet cannot vtterly be loſt, thus we are aſſured by the euident teſtimonie of Scripture.

*Argum.*1. Rom.11.29. The gifts and calling of God, are without repentance: Ioh.13.1. Whom God loueth, he loueth to the end: Ioh.10.29. My father is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand: Ergo, the elect cannot periſh, Hemingius pag.65. anſwereth, that no man by violence can plucke the elect from God, yet they willingly may fall away: Suecanus alſo graunteth, that on Gods behalfe our election is ſure and immoueable, but not on mens behalfe, vnleſſe they continue, and hold faſt their faith to the ende: pag.976.

*Contra.*1. The text is, My father is ſtronger then all: he is then ſtronger then our ſelues, that neither willingly nor vnwillingly the elect cannot depart from God: For I giue vnto them eternall life, ſayth Chriſt, and they ſhall neuer periſh: Iohn 10.verſ.28. They can in no wiſe periſh, neither by force, nor by voluntarie declining from God: Ierem.32.40. I will put my feare into their hearts, that they ſhall neuer depart from me: Hoſh.2.19. I will marrie thee for euer vnto me in righteouſneſſe.

2 That Gods election is abſolutely ſure both on his owne behalfe, and on their part that are elected: our Sauiour teſtifieth, Iohn 6.39. This is my fathers will, that of all which he hath giuen me, I ſhould looſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it vp at the laſt day. All that are elected, ſhall be aſſuredly raiſed vp to life eternall: And God, to ſuch, as he hath choſen, will giue grace to continue. They therefore that finally fall away, were not elected in the beginning: And that faith, which ſome haue made ſhipwracke of, 1.Timoth.1.19. is not the iuſtifying faith of the elect, but a temporarie, or hiſtoricall faith. Mens falling away from faith then, cannot make Gods election voyd: as the Apoſtle ſaith: Shall their vnbeleefe make the faith of God without effect? Rom.3.3.

3. We notwithſtanding confeſſe, that Gods election ſtandeth faſt, and is immutable in them that are elected, not by their owne ſtrength, but by the grace and gift of God, for of our ſelues we are mutable and changeable, readie to fall away, but that we ſtand by grace, as Ambroſe ſaith, lib.2.de vocat.gentium.c.9. Si defectura erat fides tanti Apoſtoli, niſi pro eo Christus oraret, inerat ei profecto mutabilitas,&c. If the faith of ſo great an Apoſtle ſhould haue fayled, if Chriſt had not praied for him, there was mutabilitie in him, for the vnchangeable firmenes of the minde is not to be found here.

Obiect. If they, whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, made ſhipwracke onely of a temporarie faith, that is, a faith in ſhew, or imagined, then they loſt nothing: And is it a ſinne worthie of eternall puniſhment, to loſe the image onely, and ſhew of faith? Againe, where S. Paul ſayth, In the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith: they may as well here alſo vnderſtand, a diſſembled and imagined faith: Huber.theſ.243.

Anſw. Firſt, though thoſe, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, had not a true iuſtifying faith, and therefore could not make ſhipwracke of that which they had not, yet had they more then a bare image of faith: for they had a forme of knowledge, and the profeſſion of the trueth. Men alſo in ſome ſort may be lightened, taſte of the heauenly gift, be partakers of ſome gifts of the holy Ghoſt, taſte of the word of God, and of the powers of the world to come: Hebr.6.4,5. And theſe things not in ſhew onely, but in their kinde and meaſure in ſome ſort indeed, for it is but a taſte (as the Apoſtle ſaith) not as it were a full draught: and yet for all this they haue not a iuſtifying faith, which if they had, they could not finally fall away. Therefore though they haue but an image or ſhew of the liuely iuſtifying faith, which they indeed haue not, but ſeeme onely to haue, Luk.8.18. yet a kind of faith they haue indeed, which they make ſhipwracke of. Secondly, the Apoſtle here vnderſtandeth not a right iuſtifying faith, which worketh alwaies by loue, Galath.5.6. and is ioyned with a good conſcience, Rom.5.1. 1.Timoth.1.19. But theſe firſt had put away a good conſcience, and then made ſhipwracke of their faith. To this purpoſe S. Ambroſe lib.2.de vocat Gentium c.2. Dignus erat perdere inutilem fidem, qui non exercuerat charitatem: He was worthie to looſe an vnprofitable faith, which did not exerciſe charitie: ſuch a fruitleſſe faith then may be loſt. Thirdly, by faith in the place alleaged, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth the forme of true doctrine, as it appeareth by the oppoſite member, they ſhall depart from the faith, that is, from the doctrine of the truth, and giue heede to the doctrine of diuels: So in this place Hymenæus maketh ſhipwracke of faith, that is, concerning the truth hath erred, 2.Timoth.2.18. And the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein he erred, ſaying, the reſurrection is paſt alreadie. Thus by making ſhipwracke of faith, the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth, the leauing of the trueth, and falling into error. Fourthly, and for this Apoſtaſie from the trueth, they deſerued eternall puniſhment, without their repentance: although the Apoſtle ſpeake not here of eternall damnation, but ſaith onely he had deliuered them to Sathan, that is, excommunicated them, for their amendment, to learne not to blaſpheme: as he decreed concerning the inceſtuous young man, 1.Corinth.5.5. who notwithſtanding afterward repented, and was reſtored.

*Argum.*2. 2.Timoth.2.19. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. We then thus reaſon: Gods preſcience cannot be deceiued: but God foreſawe in the beginning not onely in generall, but in particular, who ſhould be ſaued: Ergo, the ſame, and no other ſhall be ſaued: therefore none of the elect can periſh. So Auguſtine writeth: Horum, qui electi ſunt, ſi quiſpiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus: horum ſi quiſpiam perit humano vitio vincitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia nulla re vincitur Deus: If any of the elect ſhould periſh, God is deceiued, but none of them periſheth, becauſe God is not deceiued: if any of them periſh, God is ouercome by the infirmitie of man; but nothing can ouercome God: therefore none of them periſheth. This argument drawne from the definite certaintie of Gods preſcience, hath not yet been anſwered by any of theſe Vniuerſaliſts: neither ſhall they euer be able to anſwer it.

Obiect. Doe we not ſee by experience, that many which beleeued, fall away; how is not faith then loſt, and election withall? We anſwere with Auguſtine: Firſt, they that finally fall away, neuer were endued with a right faith, nor elected of God: Quibuſdam filijs ſuis Deus non dat perſeuerantiam, quia non ſunt de illis prædeſtinatis, qui verè ſunt filij promiſſionis: Vnto ſome, which appeared to be Gods children, God giueth not grace to perſeuere, becauſe they are not of the number of the predeſtinate, which are the true children of promiſe. Secondly, but concerning the elect he ſaith: Horum fides aut omnino non deficit, aut ſi deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: Their faith either faileth not at all; or if it doe, it is reſtored before their life be ended: *Lib. de correpț. & grat.cap.*7.8.

Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith, in 8.ad Roman. Qui credere videntur & non permanent in fide, à Deo electi negantur: They which ſeeme to beleeue, and continue not in faith, are not elected of God: Eſt qui ad tempus eligitur, ſicut Saul & Iudas, non de præſcientia, ſed de præſenti iuſtitia: there is, that is choſen for a time, as Saul and Iudas, not of preſcience, but according to their preſent iuſtice.

Obiect. If then the elect cannot finally periſh, nor be depriued of their faith, to what end are all thoſe admonitions in Scripture, Let him that ſtandeth take heed leaſt he fall: to him that ouercommeth will I giue a crowne? &c. Suecanus to this anſwereth well, that theſe exhortations doe ſerue as meanes to preſerue our faith, and doe ſtirre vp in vs a care of godlines, whereby we may riſe vp in aſſurance daily of our election: pag.470. for though our election be alwaies ſure before God, yet is it not otherwiſe aſſured to vs, but by the effects and workes of our calling, 2.Pet.1.10. And though our ſaluation be certainely decreed before God, yet is it by meanes, ſuch as he hath appointed, accompliſhed toward vs. As Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth, lib. 2. de vocat. gent. cap. 10. Quamuis quod ſtatuit Deus, nulla poſſit ratione non fieri, ſtudia tamen non tolluntur orandi, nec per electionis propoſitum liberi arbitrij deuotio relaxatur: Although that which God appointeth cannot be but done, yet the ſtudie or deſire of prayer is not taken away, nor the deuotion of mans freewill releaſed by election.

And for the certaintie of election he further thus teſtifieth: *Lib.*2.*de vocat. gent.c.*9. Sicut nullus infidelium in hac ſorte numeratus, ita nullus piorum ab hac ſorte diſcretus: de plenitudine quippe membrorum corporis Chriſti, præſcientia Dei, quæ falli non poteſt nihil perdit, &c. As no vnbeleeuer is numbred in this lotte, ſo none of the godlie is ſeparated from it; for the preſcience of God, which cannot be deceiued, doth looſe nothing of the fulnes of the members of Chriſt.

Hierome Epiſt. ad Pammach. & Ocean. rehearſeth this to be one of the errors of Origene: that in the ende after diuers worldes, Id ipſum fore Gabrielem, quod diabolum; Paulum, quod Caipham: Gabriel ſhall be the ſame, that the diuell; and Paul, that Caiphas: Huberus hath the like ſaying, as I haue ſhewed before, that Paul and Peter were no more elected, then Iudas.

And thus much of this inconuenience, which they are driuen to confeſſe, namely, that election and faith may be loſt: whereupon follow many abſurdities, as we haue ſeene: Firſt, that by this meanes the preſcience and foreknowledge of God may be deceiued, if election, which he both foreſaw and decreed, may be altered. Secondly, Gods purpoſe of ſaluation is by mans infirmitie ouerthrowne: that if he hold not, neither doth the decree holde. Thirdly, it breedeth vncertaintie of ſaluation, and ſo deſpayre: for by this meanes the ſtrength of our hope is ſtayed vpon mans freewill: a miſerable hold for a diſtreſſed conſcience to ſtay vpon. Fourthly, the Vniuerſaliſts herein are more erronious then the Papiſts: for they confeſſe an abſolute and determinate certaintie of our election before God, though they deny a full perſwaſion and aſſurance thereof vnto men: but theſe deny both: Let vs now finiſh the reſt.

THE SIXT INCONVENIENCE.

A*Bſurd.*6. In ſaying that God onely purpoſed to ſaue thoſe that ſhould beleeue, and to condemne all vnbeleeuers, they conſequently affirme, that, Incredulitas ſit vnica cauſa condemnationis, that incredulitie is the onely cauſe of condemnation: *Huber.theſ.*187. And ſo they extenuate other ſinnes, as Puckſius: In ſimplice ignoratione, aut incredulitate nullum eſt ſcelus: In ſimple ignorance and vnbeleefe, there is no ſinne, *ration.*56. And againe, Reſpectu peccati originalis, neminem æterna morte plecti: That no man is puniſhed eternally for originall ſinne: *ration.*13. That mortalitie and other miſeries of this life, are onely the puniſhment of originall ſinne: ration.1.& 5. Suecanus alſo ſaith, that the originall corruption of mans nature, is not the foundation of reall reprobation, but the contempt of the grace of God: His reaſon is, becauſe then euery man ſhould be reiected, becauſe there remaineth originall corruption in all: De prædeſtin.pag.655.

*Contra.*1. That ſimple ignorance or incredulitie excuſeth not, S. Paul ſheweth, Rom.2.12. As many as haue ſinned without the lawe, ſhall periſh without the lawe. And verſe 14. They hauing not the lawe, are a lawe to themſelues. Here the Gentiles are not accuſed of wilfull contempt of grace, which was not preached vnto them, but onely of ſimple ignorance, yet are they worthie of condemnation. Secondly, that originall ſinne in it ſelfe deſerueth eternall death, it is at large declared by the Apoſtle, Rom.5.12. By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne. And afterward he ſheweth what death, The fault came of one offence to condemnation, verſe 16. Thirdly, that originall ſinne is not the ground or cauſe of reall reprobation, and actuall condemnation, in part it is true, in part falſe: It is true, becauſe by the mercie of God it is not imputed to thoſe which are ſaued by Chriſt, as no other ſinnes are: It is falſe, firſt, becauſe, though originall ſinne be not imputed by grace, yet in it ſelfe it hath ſufficient matter of condemnation: againe, it is the ground of all actuall ſinne, and ſinne is the ground or cauſe of damnation: thirdly, vnto ſome it is the ground of reprobation, as vnto ſuch children of infidels, as are not ſaued by election of grace.

Now concerning wilfull incredulitie, and contempt of grace, that it is not the only cauſe of reprobation, I will briefly ſhew by theſe two arguments, ab incommodo, which follow.

Firſt, it will follow vpon this opinion, that all thoſe nations of the Gentiles, which had no knowledge of God, were freed from damnation, becauſe the Goſpell was not preached vnto them, as Act. 14. 16. In times paſt God ſuffered the Gentiles to walke in their owne wayes, verſe 17. he notwithſtanding left not himſelfe without witneſſe, in that he gaue them rayne from heauen, &c. They had no other witneſſe but the teſtimonie of the creatures: the word they had not, Act.17.30. The time of this ignorance God regarded not: Seeing therefore that grace was not offered them, they could not bee contemners of grace, and ſo conſequently by their opinion, were free from damnation.

Suecanus goeth about here rather to make an anſwere, then indeed anſwereth: All theſe nations which were ſtrangers from Iſrael, and from the promiſe, in the beginning contemned the grace of redemption offered, and refuſed the promiſe, and therefore were worthilie reiected: De prædeſtinat.pag.665.

Contra. Let it be graunted, that all nations at the firſt deſpiſed the promiſe (yet ſhall he neuer be able to proue, that in the time of the lawe, grace was vniuerſally offered to all people) how could their poſteritie after them be counted contemners of grace, which they neuer heard of? The parents actuall ſinnes, though they may be the cauſe of temporall puniſhment vpon the children, yet can they not, in the iuſtice of God, be the ground of their eternall reiection. And as for their originall corruption, it is confeſſed already, that it cannot be the foundation of reall reprobation. To this obiection therefore we expect a more ſufficient anſwere.

This obiection is ſtrongly vrged and enforced by Saint Ambroſe: lib. 1. de vocat. gent, cap.5. Liberatur pars hominum parte pereunte, &c. Part of mankinde is deliuered, the reſt periſheth; and if we will aſcribe this to the wils of men, that grace neglected the euill, and did chuſe the good: Reſiſtet nobis innumerabilium cauſa populorum: The condition of innumerable people will gainesay vs, vnto whom for many ages no light of heauenly doctrine did ſhine: neither can we ſay, that their poſteritie was better, of whom it is ſaid, the people, that ſate in darkenes, ſaw great light. As Ambroſe concludeth, that the Gentiles were not called for their merites, becauſe they ſate in darkenes, and had no heauenly light; ſo it may be inferred, that they could not contemne or deſpiſe that light which did not ſhine vnto them.

Secondly we obiect, concerning the infants both of the faithfull and infidels, that if vnbeleefe onely exclude from election, then are they not excluded, for they are not capable of faith, and therefore cannot deſpiſe faith and grace. To this obiection diuers anſwers haue been deuiſed, but none of them ſufficient.

Firſt it may be, and is anſwered of ſome, that infants are iudged according to the foreſight of their beleefe or vnbeleefe, if they had liued.

Contra. Auguſtine confuteth this, by that place of S. Paul. 2.Cor.5.10. That euery man ſhall receiue according to the things done in the bodie: he ſaith not, which were foreſeene ſhould be done, but which were verely done. Againe, Chriſt vpbraiding the vnthankfull cities that ſaw his workes, and repented not, ſaith, If the great workes which haue been done in them, had been done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented, &c. By this reaſon Tyrus and Sidon ſhould not haue been iudged, becauſe of the foreſight of their repentance.

De prædeſtinat.ſanctor. cap.12.

Secondly, It may be ſayd, that infants dying, though they be not ſaued, becauſe they haue no faith, yet are they not damned, but they ſhall haue a certaine kinde of beatitude, though not in the kingdome of heauen.

Contra. But this alſo is ouerthrowne by S. Paul, Rom. 5. where he ſheweth, that by one mans ſinne, death came vpon all to condemnation: and therefore children, if they be not ſaued, are neceſſarily damned. This alſo is confuted by Auguſtine lib de bon. perſeueran. cap. 12.

Thirdly, Suecanus anſwereth concerning the children of the faithfull, that they are all elected, and belong vnto the promiſe, Gen. 17. 7. I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeede: S. Paul alſo calleth them holy, 1. Cor. 7. 14. p. 667. As for the children of infidels, he leaueth them vnto God, who may deale with them (he ſaith) extraordinarily, and further he defineth not their ſtate: pag. 675.

Contra. 1. Concerning the children of the faithfull that dye in their infancie, we affirme that they all by nature are ſubiect to eternall damnation, and if God adiudge any of them to condemnation he doth it iuſtly: which we leaue vnto Gods ſecret iudgement: yet we are of charitie rather to iudge, that the infants, whom God calleth to himſelfe, and ſo preuent the curſe of ſinne, are ſaued, becauſe they are vnder the couenant. And here we vnderſtand not onely thoſe children to be vnder the couenant, whoſe immediate parents were beleeuers, but if any of their predeceſſors in former times beleeued, for the promiſe of grace is made to a thouſand generations, Exod. 20. But whereas Suecanus holdeth all the children of the faithfull, both thoſe that dye, and they that remaine, that they are elected; whereas we ſee, that many righteous mens children doe fall away from God: how can it be? vnles they will affirme, that men may fall away from election, which how abſurd it is, we haue ſhewed before. Againe, though the children of the faithfull be ſaued by the couenant of grace, yet are they not by faith: faith then alone is not the obiect of election, as they affirme.

2 Concerning Infidels children, it is ſtrange that Suecanus ſo much forgetteth himſelfe, as to ſend vs to Gods extraordinarie and ſecret working; whereas he telleth vs, I am ſure aboue an hundred times in his booke, De prædeſtinatione; that God dealeth not with vs in the matter of predeſtination, Secundum abſolutam ſuam, aut extraordinariam potentiam, according to his extraordinarie power, pag. 677. aut occulta ſua voluntate, or after his ſecret will, ſed ex lege ſui fœderis in ſacra ſcriptura patefacti, pag. 633. but after the lawe of his couenant ſet forth in Scripture: What meaneth he then in the predeſtination of infidels children to ſend vs to Gods extraordinarie worke, and ſecret will? he ſhould haue ſhewed vs ſomewhat reuealed in Scripture.

But to helpe him a little: we affirme, that euen children of Infidels, whom it pleaſeth God, may ordinarily be elected: firſt, ſuch children of Infidels, whoſe immediate parents were vnbeleeuers, but their former anceſtors were faithfull, may be ſaued by the couenant of grace, which is made to a thouſand generations: the reſt that are ſaued, whoſe progenitors were altogether Infidels, are ſaued by Gods ſecret election: vnto the which Suecanus is faine to flye for the reſolution of this queſtion. And thus much alſo of this inconuenience.

Saint Ambroſe thus enforceth this obiection concerning infants: Lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 5. Reſpice ad vniuerſalem multitudinem paruulorum, &c. Look vnto the vniuerſall multitude of little ones: which all before the vſe of vnderſtanding and freewill, ſome goe vnto eternall happines being regenerate, others to perpetuall miſerie being not borne againe: If you confeſſe originall ſinne, they are all guiltie: if you ſeeke for innocencie, they are all without fault: non inuenit, quod diſcernat humana iuſtitia, ſed habet, quod eligat inenarrabilis gratia: Humane iuſtice can find nothing, to diſcerne or make difference, but the vnſpeakable grace findeth ſomewhat to elect. The election of children is grounded onely vpon the grace of God, here is no foreſight, or reſpect had vnto faith.

THE SEVENTH INCONVENIENCE.

A*Bſurd.* 7. If it were ſo, that God elected ſo many, as he foreſaw ſhould beleeue, and vpon this foreſight cauſed the Goſpell to be preached vnto them, and that God reiected thoſe whom he foreſawe would not beleeue, and therefore ſuffered them to abide in ignorance ſtill, it were no myſterie or ſecret at all in our faith, why God hath choſen ſome, and refuſed others: for the reaſon is apparant, becauſe ſome beleeue, and others doe not. But Saint Paul acknowledgeth here a great & vnſearchable myſterie, that ſeeing al are ſhut vp in vnbeliefe, and ſo are in the ſame common caſe, yet God hath mercie onely on whom he will. Whereupon the Apoſtle in admiration of this great ſecret, crieth out, O the deepnes of the riches of the wiſedome and knowledge of God! how vnſearchable are his iudgements, and his waies paſt finding out? Rom. 11. 33. To this place our aduerſaries anſwere diuerſly.

First Puckſius ſaith, that the Apoſtle crieth not out in admiration, as not finding a ſolution concerning the queſtion, why ſome were choſen, others refuſed: for it had been a thing vnworthie ſo great an Apoſtle, ſo to leaue his diſputation imperfect: but thus rather, hauing fully diſcuſſed this doubt, that the cauſe why ſome are refuſed, is their diffidence onely and diſtruſt, he giueth thankes to God for the finding out of this ſolution, from whoſe wiſedome hee had learned it: ration.76.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle bringeth no ſuch ſolution here, as he dreameth of, as though the cauſe were in the beleefe or vnbeleefe of men, why God had mercie on ſome, and not on others: nay rather the contrarie appeareth, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, All men are ſhut vp in vnbeleefe: they are all by nature alike, none in themſelues more worthie of fauour then other: And therefore all is aſcribed to Gods mercie: but mercie is free, and therfore not cauſed by any deſert of faith, or works. 2. That the Apoſtle falleth into an admiration, the manner of his ſpeech declareth: and he plainly confeſſeth this doctrine farre to exceede all humane reach: Gods wayes (he ſaith) are vnſearchable, and paſt finding out: Is not this cauiller therefore aſhamed, to confeſſe that doctrine to be eaſie and plaine, which the Apoſtle calleth deepe, profound, and vnſearchable? 3. Neither doth the Apoſtle leaue his diſputation imperfect, but it is perfect and abſolute: (if we vnderſtand ſuch perfection, as man in this life may attaine vnto) for otherwiſe if the knowledge of the greateſt Prophets and Apoſtles in this life be compared with the reuelations of the life to come, it is imperfect: We know in part, and propheſie in part, when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part ſhall be aboliſhed, 1.Cor.13.9,10. Neither doth Saint Paul commit any thing vnworthie his Apoſtleſhip, in ſubiecting himſelfe to the depth of Gods iudgements: but here ſheweth himſelfe an example of that, which hee teacheth others, That no man preſume to vnderſtand aboue that which is meete to vnderſtand, but that he vnderſtand according to ſobrietie, Rom.12.3. Neither was it a diſgrace to the Apoſtle to be ignorant of ſome part of Gods counſell, no more, then where elſe he ſaith, he heard words which cannot be ſpoken, which are not poſſible for men to vtter, 2.Cor.12.4. If he could not vtter that which hee heard and ſawe, how much more that, which was not at all reuealed vnto him, but kept ſecret in Gods counſell?

Secondly, Hemingius ſaith, The waies of God are here ſaid to be vnſearchable, becauſe they can not be found out by the wit of man: For the naturall man perceiueth not the things that are of God: But yet it followeth not, but that in the word of God, whatſoeuer is neceſſarie to ſaluation to be knowne is reuealed: as Saint Paul ſaith, We haue the minde of Chriſt, 1.Corin.2.16. Sic Hemingius pag.52. Suecan.pag.762.

Contra. Firſt, that all things neceſſarie to ſaluation are reuealed in the Scriptures, we graunt, for they are able to make vs wiſe to ſaluation, and perfect to all good workes, 2.Tim.3.15.17. But to know the cauſe why God electeth ſome, and not others, is not any part of this neceſſarie knowledge, but rather a point of curioſitie. Secondly, that the myſterie of ſaluation, though not reuealed to fleſh and blood, yet is diſcerned by the ſpirituall man in the Scriptures we graunt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1.Cor.2.10.16. yet are there ſome ſecrets of God which are not reuealed in this life, neither to the regenerate, nor vnregenerate, of the which ſort this is, whereof the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh: he meaneth that theſe waies of God, concerning the ſecrecie of election, are ſimply vnſearchable of all; as it may appeare by that which followeth: Who hath knowne the minde of God, or who was his counſeller, or who hath giuen vnto him, firſt? &c. But no man either naturall or ſpirituall hath been Gods counſeller, to know his minde, or hath giuen vnto him firſt: where the Apoſtle ſecretly excludeth all manner foreſight in our election, of faith or workes in men; for then they ſhould haue giuen vnto God firſt, which here is denied. Laſtly, the Apoſtle breaketh out into this admiration, not in the perſon of the carnall man, but in his owne perſon as ſpiritual, and confeſſeth, that euen vnto himſelfe the waies of God herein were vnſearchable.

Thirdly, Huberus anſwereth firſt, after a ſcoffing manner, that wee may as well in other queſtions concerning faith and the Sacraments, as why all men profit not by hearing the Goſpell preached, why all that are baptized, are not ſanctified, why all doe not receiue the Eucharist worthily, wee may anſwere in theſe queſtions, as in this of election, very compendiouſly, ô abyſſus, ô abyſſus! O depth! but afterward he giueth vs a more ſober anſwere: There be, ſaith he, two ſort of profound things in the workes of God. Some things ſo profound, that God hath kept the knowledge therof to himſelfe, whereof there is nothing reuealed in Scripture. Another ſort of profound things there is, when as we know that God hath done this or that, but the cauſe thereof wee know not, neither are able to ſearch: we know them, τὸ ὅτι, that they are, but not δι' ὅτι, why they are: As in this example whereof the Apoſtle intreateth: that the Gentiles were firſt reiected, and the Iewes called, and afterward the Gentiles choſen and the other refuſed, wee knowe it ſo to be done, but wherefore we know not, the cauſe thereof is vnſearchable, Huber.theſ.937.947.948. So Suecanus ſaith, that the Apoſtle here doth reſtraine humane raſhnes, that we ſhould not be too buſie in ſearching out the cauſe of Gods workes. Pag.762.

Contra. 1. Huberus ſcorneth not vs, but ſcorneth the Apoſtle, who though in al other queſtions in religion, he were able to giue a diuine anſwere, as appeareth notably in his heauenly epiſtles, yet in this caſe of Gods ſecret iudgements, giueth no other anſwere but this, ô abyſſus! We in like manner, in other matters concerning our faith, where the word of God goeth before vs, wee truſt by Gods grace, are able to frame ſome reaſonable anſwere, and neede not to ſay abyſſus: (As to the queſtions propoſed) the effect of preaching, the efficacie of Baptiſme, the ſacramentall grace, are extinguiſhed in vnworthie men through their vnbeleefe and other ſinnes, whereof they haue not repented, which although they be not the chiefe cauſe of their reiection, yet are they of their actuall condemnation; yet in this profound matter, why God hath mercie on ſome, and not on other ſome, we are not aſhamed to anſwere with the Apoſtle, ô abyſſus! Secondly, their diſtinction we miſlike not: it maketh for vs, and againſt them: for vs, wee acknowledge in the worke of election, τὸ ὅτι, that God hath in his eternall counſell elected ſome, and not others, but διότι, why and for what cauſe God hath ſo done, we know not, but hold it to be vnſearchable: And particularly who are damned, who are ſaued, it is ſimply a profound ſecret: we neither know, ὅτι, that this man, or that, is ſaued or damned (though there be a meanes for euery man to know it in himſelfe) much leſſe doe wee know, διότι, the cauſe or reaſon thereof. It maketh againſt them, for they take vpon them to ſet downe the cauſe of the election of the Gentiles, and reiection of the Iewes, and generally of all men, the foreſight of faith in the one; and vnbeleefe or contempt of grace in the other: And ſo they make the iudgements of God eaſie and plaine, and not vnſearchable at all.

De vocat. gent. lib. 2. c. 3. I will conclude this place with that ſaying of Ambroſe, or who elſe was the author of that booke, Altitudo diuitiarum ſapientiæ & ſcientiæ Dei, cuius imperueſtigabiles viæ, ſic ſemper miſericordiam & iudicium temperauit, vt ſecretiſſima æterni conſilij voluntate noluerit in omnibus, ſuper omnes generationes, aut ſuper omnes homines, æquales donorum ſuorum eſſe menſuras. Quæ autem cauſæ ſint harum diſſimilitudinum ſanctis ſcripturis non loquentibus quis loquetur? patienter & æquanimiter ignoretur, tam remotum ab humana cogitatione ſecretum, in quo ſcientia Pauli Apoſtoli, à diſputatione tranſijt ad ſtuporem: The depth of the riches of the knowledge and wiſedome of God, whoſe wayes are vnſearchable, hath ſo tempered his mercie and iudgement, that in the ſecret will of his eternall counſell, hee would not haue an equall meaſure of his gifts to be beſtowed vpon all men: but what might bee the cauſe of this difference, the Scriptures not ſaying any thing, who can ſpeake? Let vs with patience be content to be ignorant of ſo great a ſecret: wherein the knowledge of the Apoſtle Paul giueth place, and leauing to diſpute beginneth to wonder. Thus doth this father expound this place of the Apoſtle.

Saint Auguſtine likewiſe counteth the doctrine of predeſtination a great ſecret: de corrept. & grat. cap. 16. Cur hunc retineat, non illum, nec poſſibile eſt comprehendere, nec licitum veſtigare: Why God doth keepe one from falling, and not another, it is not poſſible to comprehend, nor lawfull to enquire. And againe, Cur hunc potius quam illum liberet, ſcrutetur qui poteſt, iudiciorum eius tam magnum profundum, ſed caueat præcipitium: Why God doth deliuer one and not another, let him ſearch out, that can, ſo great a depth of Gods iudgements; but let him take heede of a downfall: ad Simplician. lib. 1. qu. 6.

Saint Hierome alſo thus writeth: ad Cteſiphont. Quam quidem quæſtionem Apoſtolus ad Romanos, ſcribens ventilat, ignorans hæc, & Dei concedens ſcientiæ, &c. Which queſtion the Apoſtle handleth to the Romanes, being ignorant of this ſecret, and giuing place to the knowledge of God.

Origen hom. 12. in Geneſ. Cur antequam ex vtero procederent, &c. Why it is ſaid by the Prophet, Eſau haue I hated, Iacob haue I loued, before they came out of their mothers wombe? Hæc ſupra noſtram linguam ſunt, & ſuper auditum veſtrum, &c. Theſe things exceede my tongue, and your hearing.

Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 4. c. 8. ex Auguſtin. in talibus rebus exclamamus, quam inſcrutabilia ſunt iudicia eius, &c. In theſe matters, we crie out, How vnſearchable are his iudgements? &c.

Magiſt. lib. 1. diſt. 40. d. Non aperit, ſed miratur Apoſtolus dicens, ô altitudo &c. The Apoſtle doth not open this matter, but wondreth at it, and crieth out, O the depth of the riches of the wiſedome of God! &c.

Laſtly, Saint Ambroſe thus moſt excellently writeth: Cum Apoſtolus hæc diuinorum operum myſteria quodam mentis ſuæ profudiſſet exceſſu, &c. When the Apoſtle had in the exceſſe of his minde or meditation vttered theſe myſteries, he endeth his expoſition with aſtoniſhment, and wondring at that he had ſaid, he exclaimed, O the depth, &c. omitting nothing of theſe things, whereof wee muſt not be ignorant, and handling nothing, which it is not lawfull to know: for there are many things in the adminiſtration of Gods workes, whoſe effects only are ſhewed, the cauſes lying hid, vt cum pateat quid geritur, non pateat cur geratur, that when it is apparant what is done, yet it appeareth not wherefore it is done, &c.

And thus hitherto in the Church of God, hath the doctrine of predeſtination been taken for a great ſecret, and hidden myſterie; which now in the opinion of theſe men, is an eaſie, plaine and common point of religion: and thus by humane reaſon they will comprehend the deepe things of God, and therefore becauſe with the Apoſtle, wee ſay that Gods iudgements in electing whom he will,and refuſing as it pleaſeth him, are vnſearchable, they ſcorne and deride both vs and our faith. But we hold this in religion to be a great abſurditie,to meaſure diuine myſteries by humane wit,and by reaſon to vnderſtand that which is by faith to be beleeued. Thus farre of the abſurdities,and ſtrange concluſions, which the patrons of vniuerſall ſauing grace doe maintaine.

1 That God hath created men without any particular knowledge or determination of their ende.

2 That God electeth vpon the foreſight and foreknowledge of faith.

3 That it is partly in mans power by the ſtrength of his freewill to beleeue.

4 That a man may reſiſt the effectuall calling of God.

5 That the elect may become reprobates,and ſo loſe both their election and faith.

6 That contempt of grace is the onely cauſe of reprobation,whereas many nations neuer had grace offered,and ſo could not contemne it: and infants beſide are not capable of faith, which therefore they cannot deſpiſe.

7 They affirme the doctrine of Predeſtination to be eaſie and plaine,and within the compaſſe of mans vnderſtanding: All theſe inconueniences they are forced to graunt, who affirme that Chriſt died effectuallie for all men vniuerſallie, and not for thoſe onely whom he ordayned to life.

To theſe we may adioyne other abſurdities: firſt,that if Chriſt died for all,and yet all be not ſaued by Chriſt,it followeth, that Chriſt for ſome dyed in vaine: this Huberus willingly granteth, *theſ.*1123. But the Scipture ſaith, that Chriſt loſeth nothing of all, that is giuen him, Iohn 6. 39. but all that he gaue himſelfe for,are giuen vnto him. Secondly,that the efficacie of Chriſts death may be made fruſtrate by man: confeſſed by *Huberus theſ.*1124. denied by Saint Paul, ſhall their vnbeleefe make the faith of God without effect? Rom.3.3. Thirdly,that in reſpect of Chriſt there is no difference betweene the reprobate and the elect, ſeeing he died effectually for both, graunted by *Huberus pag.*1127. denied by the Apoſtle, God is the Sauiour of all men (for he faueth both men and beaſt,as being the preſeruer of that which he hath made) ſpecially of thoſe that beleeue, 1.Tim.4.10. Ergo, God hath done ſomewhat more ſpecially for beleeuers as their Redeemer, then for other men,as their Creator.

Toſſan.theſ.21

I will then conclude this place with that ſaying of Auguſtine, Quomodo iſtis dixit, non eſtis ex ouibus meis? quia videbat eos ad ſempiternum exitium præparatos, non ad vitam æternam ſui ſanguinis precio comparatos: How did our Sauiour ſay vnto ſome,you are not of my ſheepe? becauſe he ſaw, they were prepared to euerlaſting deſtruction,not appoynted to life eternall by the price of his blood: *Tractat. in Iohan.*48. Here Auguſtine teſtifieth two things, both that the wicked and vnbeleeuers are ordayned to euerlaſting death,and that the blood of Chriſt was onely ſhed for the heires of ſaluation.

Laſtly,I will adioyne the ſeale of this doctrine, that is the teſtimonie of the holy martyrs: Iohn Careleſſe thus profeſſeth his faith, I beleeue that Chriſt did effectuallie dye for all thoſe that effectually beleeue,and repent, and for none other, Fox. pag.1920.col.1.

Thus haue I ſufficiently (I truſt) maintained this auncient truth concerning the efficacie and benefit of Chriſts death ordained onely for the elect: wherein (I doubt not) but that they which are ſomewhat wauering,and not yet ſetled in iudgement, may ſoone be reſolued, if on the one ſide they doe conſider the ſubſtantiall groundes,and euident demonſtration of the truth,and on the other the weakenes of their proofes,the diuerſitie of opinion in themſelues,and the neceſſary conſequence of ſo many abſurdities, that follow vpon the opinion of vniuerſall or common grace. Wherefore I wonder, that ſome heretofore thoroughly perſwaded of the trueth, ſhould now begin to ſtagger in opinion: to whom may be applyed that ſaying of the Apoſtle, I maruell that ye are ſo ſoone remoued away to another Goſpell, Galath.1.6. Againe, Who hath bewitched you,that you ſhould not obey the trueth, to whom Ieſus Chriſt was before deſcribed in your ſight? Galath.3.verſ.1. Wherefore the death of Chriſt being ſo euidently deſcribed vnto vs in Scripture, to appertaine onely to the elect: let vs therein reſt,and leauing all other ſtrange and new opinions,which may diſturbe our peace,and diſtract ſimple mindes, let vs from henceforth follow the truth in loue; which God graunt.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE cauſe of Predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

OVr aduerſaries are not all of one opinion concerning this matter. The Rhemiſts affirme, that God doth neither elect nor reprobate any,but in reſpect of their workes either good or euill: Concerning election thus they write, Chriſt doth not appoynt any by his abſolute and eternall election,to be partakers of the fruite of his redemption, without any reſpect or condition of their owne workes, obedience or freewill. Rhem. Heb.5.ſect.9. Concerning reprobation alſo, thus they ſay: God doth not hate or reprobate any man, but for ſinne, or the foreſight thereof, Rhem. Rom.9.ſect.2.

Bellarmine is of a contrarie iudgement to the Rhemiſts, ſo well they agree together: for he confeſſeth that the election of Gods Children dependeth onely of the gracious will of God without any reſpect to their workes: he graunteth, electos eſſe gratis, ante omnem operum præuiſionem, that they are elected freely, before any foreſight of their workes, *lib.2. de grat. cap.*10. And he doth not onely affirme it, but proueth it by many arguments, and at large confuteth the contrarie opinion. But for reprobation, his ſentence is this, Partim ad ſolam Dei voluntatem, partim ad peccata præuiſa referendam eſſe: That is partly to be referred to the will of God, partly to the foreſight of ſinne: not wholy to either, but in part to both. *cap.*16.

And further he explaineth his mind thus: there is, ſaith he, reprobatio negatiua, a negatiue reprobation; as thus, God hath no will or purpoſe to ſaue the wicked: There is alſo reprobatio poſitiua, a poſitiue reprobation, as when God doth ordaine ſome, not onely not to be ſaued, but to be condemned: the firſt act of reprobation dependeth onely of the will of God, without any reſpect had vnto men: the ſecond is cauſed by the foreſight of ſinne, ibid.

And here we doe not much miſlike the Ieſuites opinion in this matter as agreeable to ours, and not much differing from the trueth, as euen now ſhall be ſeene: ſo that in this place we haue no great cauſe to contend with Bellarmine: but our whole buſines is with the Rhemiſts.

Firſt, for their ſentence concerning election, that it ariſeth onely from the foreſight of our workes, they reaſon thus, the Apoſtle ſaith, He is made the author of ſaluation, to all that obey him: Heb.5.9. They are not elected we ſee, without condition of obedience: To the ſame purpoſe alſo is alleaged by ſome that place of the Apoſtle, 2. Tim.2.20. In a great houſe, &c. and ſome veſſels are for honor, ſome for diſhonour, if any man purge himſelfe from theſe, he ſhall be a veſſell of honour: here we ſee, that by free will and good works a man is made a veſſell of honour.

Anſw. Firſt, God in deede electeth all that ſhall be ſaued, not with any condition on their own behalfe, but on his owne behalfe, for vnto them; whom he chuſeth he will giue grace to obey, will to beleeue, and power to doe that he appointeth.

Secondly, good workes are the effects and fruites that follow Predeſtination, Rom.8.30. Whom he hath predeſtinate he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath iuſtified, &c. Therefore they can be no cauſe of election.

Bellarm. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad 2. teſtimon.

Thirdly, a better anſwere cannot be found, then that which Bellarmine maketh: the Apoſtle ſaith not, that a man by purging himſelfe from vice is made a veſſell of honour, but onely, that he is, or ſhall be: that is, is knowne ſo to be, for our faith and obedience are no cauſe why the Lord elected vs: but they are meanes certificatorie, and infallible arguments to aſſure vs of our election: as S. Peter ſaith, Make your election ſure, &c. Epiſt.1.10.

Argum.2. Rom.8.29. Thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be made like to the image of his ſonne, &c. Ergo, Gods preſcience is the cauſe of predeſtination.

Anſw. Firſt, God in deede doth know in his preſcience all thoſe, which are predeſtinate to life: for how can they be predeſtinate, if they be not knowne. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith not he knew them before to be like, &c. but he did predeſtinate them to be like his ſonne: this conformitie then is an effect of their Predeſtination, not a cauſe. Thirdly, Gods preſcience here may be taken for the knowledge of approbation: as Iohn 10. Chriſt is ſaid to know his ſheepe, that is to loue them, approue them: So Pſalm.1. God is ſaid to know the way of the righteous.

Argum.3. Matth.20. Call the labourers and giue them their reward, Ergo, heauen is ordayned for mens good workes.

Anſw. Firſt, this place ſheweth that good workes are the way vnto heauen, wherein we muſt walke; but not, that the decree of life hath reſpect to good workes: There is difference then betweene the decree of predeſtination, and the execution thereof: good workes goe before the poſſeſſion of heauen, but not before the decree and ordination.

Secondly, S. Ambroſe out of this place frameth a contrary argument, prouing thereby, that election is altogether of grace without any reſpect to workes. Lib.1. de vocat. gentium. c.3. Hora vndecima intromiſſis in vineam, &c. They which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre, by the diuine indulgence were made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the price of their labour, but ſhewing the riches of his goodnes to thoſe, whom he choſe without workes. Let vs now ſee on the other ſide, what they can ſay concerning reprobation.

Argum.1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Wrath, and indignation ſhall be vpon the ſoule of euery man that doth euill, Rom.2.9. therefore the reprobation of the wicked hath relation to their euill workes.

Anſw. S. Paul ſpeaketh not in this place of the decree of reprobation made againſt the wicked; but of the execution rather of that decree: the euill workes then of wicked men, are not the onely cauſe of their reiection, which is an abſolute acte of Gods owne will, yet are they a iuſt cauſe of their damnation; that although wrath and indignation be decreed againſt them from the beginning, ginning, yet this ſentence is not executed vpon them, before by their euill workes comming betweene,they haue worthilie deſerued the damnation decreed againſt them.

*Argum.*2. To condemne a man without cauſe, is an vniuſt thing, and therefore it is farre off from God who is moſt iuſt,to condemne the wicked without reſpect to their ſinnes.

Anſw. Firſt, there is great difference betweene damnation it ſelfe,and the decree or ſentence of damnation : God indeede condemneth none without their deſerts : for there is no man which is condemned in hell,but by his euill life before worthily deſerued it : and ſo it is moſt true,which Auguſtine ſaith: Bonus eſt Deus, iuſtus eſt Deus, poteſt aliquos ſine bonis meritis liberare, quia bonus eſt, non poteſt quenquam ſine malis meritis damnare,quia iuſtus eſt : God is good, and God is iuſt, he may ſaue a man without any good workes of his,becauſe he is good;but he cannot condemne any man without his euill deſerts,becauſe he is iuſt: *cont. Iulian.*3.18. Secondly, but as for the decree and ſentence of condemnation, it is no vniuſt thing for God, as it pleaſeth him to diſpoſe of his creature,whether to honour,or diſhonour : as the potter hath right and power to make of the ſame clay veſſels either to honorable,or vile vſes,Rom.9.21.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt,that the election of the faithfull proceedeth onely from the mercifull and gracious will of God without any foreſight of their good workes as any cauſe thereof: we proue it thus.

*Argum.*1. That which is the effect of our election, cannot be the cauſe thereof: but good workes are the fruites and effects of our election : Ergo. This is proued by Saint Paul: God hath choſen vs in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, that we ſhould be holy, Epheſ.1.4. vpon the which words Auguſtine writeth vs, Elegit nos vt eſſemus ſancti, non quia futuri eramus, ſed vt eſſemus, & ſecundum bonam voluntatem ſuam,non noſtram,quæ bona eſſe non poſſit,niſi ipſe ſecundum bonam voluntatem ſuam vt bona fieret, ſubueniret : He hath choſen vs,ſaith the Apoſtle,that we ſhould be holy, not becauſe he ſaw we ſhould be holy,but to the end we might be holy, and according to his good pleaſure, not after our owne will, which could not be good vnleſſe he according to his good will ſhould aſſiſt vs to make it good. So then our holines and obedience is a fruite and effect of our election,not a cauſe thereof,neither is there any freewill or good diſpoſition in man,till God make it free and good.

*Argum.*2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Our election, is not of the willer, or of the runner, but of God that ſheweth mercie,Rom.9.16. Ergo, the mercie of God is the only ground of our election : for if our faith or workes ſhould be for any ſuch end or purpoſe foreſeene, it ſhould be of the willer, and runner,which the Apoſtle denieth. Auguſtine alſo ſaith : Quia per gratiam liberantur, non vaſa meritorum ſuorum, ſed vaſa miſericordiæ nominantur: Becauſe they are ſaued or deliuered by grace, they are called not veſſels of their owne merites,but veſſels of grace, *de natur. grat. lib.*1.c.5. Yea the Rhemiſts confeſſe againſt themſelues,that Gods meere mercie is ſeen in the elect: *Rom.9 ſect.*2. Ergo, our election is a worke of Gods meere mercie: there is then no reſpect at all had to our works,for then it were not of Gods meere and ſole mercy.

*Argum.*3. Luke 12. It is your Fathers pleaſure to giue you a kingdome : Iohn 15. You haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you: but if men be choſen for their good workes,then they ſhould chooſe God firſt. Rom.11.14. I haue reſerued or left to my ſelfe ſeuen thouſand, &c. hee ſaith not, they are reſerued,but I haue reſerued:ſo then ſaith the Apoſtle, there is a remnant,through the election of grace: if of grace, then not of workes.

Likewiſe Rom.9.11. the Apoſtle propoundeth the examples of Iacob and Eſau,of whom it was ſaid, Iacob haue I loued, Eſau haue I hated, before they were borne, and before they had done good or euill, that the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election,not by workes: Ergo,Gods election is not vpon the foreſight of any mans workes.

Obiect. Theſe are examples of temporall, not ſpirituall bleſſings, and Iacob and Eſau ſignifie two people, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the election or reprobation of any in particular.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of election, not in temporall things,but to euerlaſting glory : verſ.23. That he might ſhew the riches of his glory vpon the veſſels of mercie, prepared vnto glory. 2. So likewiſe he entreateth of particular election, and reprobation, as may appeare by the example of Pharao, who is brought in as an inſtance of particular reiection.

*Argum.*4. Bellarmine that mightily impugneth this opinion, vſeth diuers effectuall reaſons out of Scripture, to proue election to proceed onely of grace : I will brieflie repeate them.

1. None can be ſaued without faith : but faith is the gift of God : Ergo,election is the free gift of God. It will be anſwered, that faith is not giuen to all, becauſe all will not receiue it, but they which do obey their calling (for God calleth all, and giueth all ſufficient helpe to beleeue, if they will) are foreſeene that they will beleeue, and ſo predeſtinate. Contra. Though God do offer vnto all generall and ſufficient meanes of their calling, yet none can beleeue, vnleſſe God effectually worke in them : Iohn 10. Ye beleeue not,becauſe ye are not of my ſheepe.

2. Without the gift of perſeuerance, none can be ſaued,Matth.10. He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaued: but perſeuerance is the free gift of God; of grace, not of workes: nor yet giuen to all: Iohn 13.17. If yee know theſe things, bleſſed are yee, if yee do them: I ſpeake not of you all, I know whom I haue choſen: Ergo, election vnto life is of grace.

3. Infants dying, ſome are ſaued, ſome condemned, hauing done yet neither good nor badde: Ergo, election is not of workes: it will be anſwered, that Infants are predeſtinate according to the foreſight of their workes, which they ſhould haue done, if they had liued: and beſide, Infants are not condemned to hell, but haue a place of reſt appointed for them, though they be not ſaued. Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Euery man muſt receyue according to the things done in the fleſh, 2.Cor.5.10. not foreſeene to be done. 2. Againe S.Paul ſheweth, that death and condemnation are the reward of originall ſinne, Rom.5.16. vnto which Infants are ſubiect being borne in originall ſinne: if then they are not ſaued, they are condemned.

4. Chriſt as he was man was freely predeſtinate to be the Sonne of God Rom.1.4. man Chriſt could not deſerue by any workes to be the Sonne of God: Ergo, his members alſo are freely predeſtinate.

5. If men were elected by the foreſight of their works, then it ſhould be no myſterie nor matter of admiration as the Apoſtle maketh it, Rom.11.33. for the reaſon is euident, why God electeth ſome and not others, namely becauſe of their workes that are foreſeene. *Bellarm.lib.2.de grat.cap.*12.

Secondly, concerning the decree of reprobation, our ſentence is this: firſt, that as eternall ſaluation is from the beginning ordained for the elect, ſo eternall deſtruction is decreed for the reprobate: for we cannot but affirme, that God both our firſt Creator, and laſt Iudge, did both foreſee and appoint the end of euery creature. Secondly, God doth reiect the wicked two wayes, conſilio, in his eternall counſell, and facto, by the execution of his counſell and decree, which ſhal be in their actuall damnation: his counſell or decree of reiection is alſo twofold, it is eyther decretum præteritionis, the abſolute decree in paſſing by or not chooſing ſome, but leauing them in their owne nature: And this is called reprobation in two reſpects: firſt, by way of compariſon, becauſe he that is not loued or leſſe loued, is ſaid to be hated, as Gen.29.31. Iacob is ſaid to deſpiſe Lea, that is, he loued her not as he did Rachel: and Deut.21.15. if a man haue two wiues, one beloued, the other hated &c. that is, not ſo much loued: ſecondly, it is ſo called becauſe of the ende and euent, becauſe reprobation and damnation followeth vpon the decree of preterition. There is alſo decretum ex præſcientia, the decree of reprobation iſſuing out of Gods preſcience and foreknowledge: who as he did foreſee in the beginning the obſtinacie and wickedneſſe of men, ſo hee preordayned in his iuſtice the ſame to be puniſhed: as a Iudge foreknowing and vnderſtanding the wickedneſſe of a malefactor, may iuſtly with himſelfe ordaine his puniſhment, before hee be brought forth in open iudgement. From hence wee obſerue theſe three things: firſt, the difference betweene thoſe two decrees: the decree of preterition or omiſſion is not the efficient cauſe of damnation, but onely an antecedent or forerunner to it: the proper cauſe of damnation is the ſinne of the creature: the externall or accidentall cauſe is the iuſtice of God, that cannot otherwiſe chuſe, but puniſh ſinne: but the decree of preſcience, according to the foreſight of their ſinnes, that are reiected, doth ordaine and procure vnto them moſt iuſtly eternal damnation: Pœnam Deus decreuit, & ordinauit efficienter vt iuſtus iudex: God as a iuſt Iudge, is the efficient cauſe by his decree of the puniſhment, *Iun.reſponſ.ad ration.*72. Secondly, we muſt note the difference betweene the decree of election and reprobation: for men are elected without any foreſight of their works, but they are not reiected without reſpect to their workes: God did both foreſee and ordayne both the godly life and glorious ſaluation of the elect, as the proper cauſe of them both; but as for the ſinnes of the reprobate, God foreſaw them onely: their iuſt and deſerued puniſhment, he both foreſaw, and did ordaine: ſo that, cauſa perditionis ab hominibus interna, ſalutis à Deo externa eſt: the cauſe of mens perdition is inward in themſelues, the cauſe of their ſaluation is externall from God, *Iun.reſponſ.ad ration.*16. Thirdly, the decree of preterition, that is, of not chuſing ſome, which Bellarmine calleth negatiue reprobation, is a free act of Gods will, without reſpect had to the creature; but the decree according to Gods foreknowledge, hath relation vnto their works: ſo that the decree of reprobation, as it dependeth not abſolutely altogether vpon Gods will, without reſpect had vnto the ſinne and rebellion of the reprobate, ſo neither doth it ſpring onely from the foreſight of ſinne, as the Rhemiſts affirme, that God doth not reprobate any but for ſinne.

Argum. The Lord ſaith, I haue loued Iacob and hated Eſau, before that the children were borne, or had done either good or euill, Rom.9.verſ.11. As God loued Iacob, ſo he hated Eſau: but he loued Iacob freely, without reſpect to his good workes: Ergo, Eſau was hated, that is, not loued or choſen of God, without any foreſight of his euill works. This place then is as ſtrong to proue the free and voluntary act of reprobation, as it is for free election.

Auguſtine putteth the caſe of two twinnes: Quorum vnus aſſumitur, alius relinquitur, diſpar eſt exitus, merita communia : One of them is receiued, the other forſaken, their end is farre vnlike, and yet the works of them both are the ſame: Two Infantes die in their infancie, one before Baptiſme, and ſo as the Papiſts hold, is damned; another after Baptiſme, and is ſaued : the workes of them both are alike: if therefore their predeſtination ſhould depend of the foreſight of their works onely, good or euill, they ſhould both haue the ſame end.

And as we ſee it to be in children, ſo ſaith Auguſtine: Hoc & in maioribus fieri nequaquam cunctemur : We neede not to doubt, but that God euen ſo dealeth with men of greater yeeres: therefore he thus concludeth : Inueſtigabilis ergo eſt Dei miſericordia, qua cuius vult miſeretur, nullis eius præcedentibus meritis; & inueſtigabilis veritas, qua quem vult obdurat , eius præcedentibus meritis, ſed cum eo cuius miſeretur, plerunque communibus : Therefore vnſearchable is the mercie of God, whereby hee hath mercie on whom he will, no merites of his going afore: and vnſearchable is his trueth, whereby he hardeneth whom he will, his deſerts going before, but the very ſame with his, vpon whom God hath mercy, *de perſeueran. lib.2.cap.*11. It remaineth then, that neither election, nor reprobation are decreed, becauſe of mens workes that are foreſeene, but do proceede from the free will and Counſell of God.

Laſtly, I will adde one other reaſon out of Auguſtine, to ſhut vp this place withall : Si humanum genus, quod creatum primitus conſtat ex nihilo, non cum debita mortis & peccati origine naſceretur, & tamen ex eis creator omnipotens in æternum nonnullos damnare voluit interitum, quis omnipotenti Creatori diceret, cur feciſti ſic? If that mankind , which in the beginning God created of nothing, were not by nature ſubiect both to ſin, and death, and yet the almighty Creator would condemne ſome to euerlaſting deſtruction , who would ſay vnto him, Lorde why haſt thou done ſo ? His opinion is this, that though there were no matter of condemnation naturally in man , yet God by the right of his Creatorſhip, might diſpoſe of his creature as hee thought beſt, whether vnto death or life: Therefore the decree of reprobation is not cauſed onely by the foreſight of mens works : but iſſueth immediatly from the eternall will and counſell of God.

Laſtly, that election is onely of grace, S. Ambroſe is a notable witneſſe, lib.1.de vocat. Gentium. cap.5. ſpeaking of Infants, of whom ſome are ſaued and elected , others refuſed , he thus concludeth: Non inuenit, quod diſcernat humana iuſticia, ſed habet, quod eligat inenarrabilis gratia : Humane iuſtice can finde nothing whereby to diſcerne them , but vnſpeakable grace findeth how to elect them. And againe, Omnibus hominibus cuiuſlibet generis &c. cauſa percipiendæ gratiæ voluntas Dei eſt, apud quem ratio electionis abſcondita eſt, &c. The cauſe of receiuing grace vnto all men , of what kind ſoeuer, is the will of God, with whom the reaſon of election is hidde and ſecrete, their merites beginning from that grace, which they receiued without merites.

De prædeſt. lib.1.cap.16.

Lib.2.c.3. Datur ante vllum laborem, vnde quiſq; mercedem accipiat, ſecundum ſuum laborem, &c. It is giuen before any labour, whereby according to their labour euery man ſhall receiue reward.

Againe, lib.1.c.3. Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, &c. They which are called, are the ſame , that they which remaine in their hardneſſe : Illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit; iſtis retribuit veritas iuſta, quod debuit : vt iudicium Dei magis inſcrutabile ſit in electione gratiæ, quam in retributione iuſtitiæ: Grace giueth to them, as ſhe would ; Iuſtice rendreth to the other, that which is due: that the iudgment of God ſhould be more vnſearchable in the election of grace, then in the retribution of iuſtice.

Secondly, that actuall reprobation is decreed to none without their deſerts : that although election cannot be merited, yet that damnation is deſerued, the ſame father thus witneſſeth , lib.2.de vocat. Gent.c.1. Nec damnati iuſta eſt querimonia , nec iuſtificati verax eſt arrogantia, ſi vel ille dicat non meruiſſe ſe pœnam, vel iſte aſſerat meruiſſe ſe gratiam, &c. Neyther can the damned iuſtly complaine, nor the iuſtified truely boaſt ; if either he ſay he hath not deſerued puniſhment, or the other, that he hath deſerued grace: & cap.9. Cum illos propria nequitia demergat ad pœnam, iſtos Dei gratia perducat ad gloriam : Seeing their wickedneſſe doth caſt them downe into paine, and grace bringeth the other to glorie.

Likewiſe Auguſtine, as he is alleaged, cauſ.23.qu.4.c.24. Nec de iudicio Dei querimur, quo deſerit meritos deſeri, & miſericordiæ eius gratias agimus, qua liberat non meritos liberari: Neyther do we complaine of the iudgement of God, whereby he forſaketh thoſe that deſerued to be forſaken, and we giue thankes to his mercie, whereby he deliuereth thoſe , which deſerued not to be deliuered.

Thus we conclude, that actual reprobation is not decreed to any, nor executed without reſpect to their deſerts ; yet the electing of ſome, and the not electing of others dependeth onely of the abſolute will and purpoſe of God, as I haue ſhewed.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, OF THE CERtaintie of Predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

25.Error. 1. THere are two parts of this queſtion : firſt, whether Gods decree, concerning the election of men, be certaine and vnchangeable : Secondly, whether a man in this life may in himſelfe be aſſured of his election. The firſt our aduerſaries dare not plainly affirme: for it were great blaſphemie openly to ſay, that Gods decree may be changed: yet they do in circumſtance of ſpeech affirme it : as Rhemiſt. Act.27. ſect.3. (Men cannot be ſaued, though they be predeſtinate, vnleſſe they keepe Gods commandements.) As though it were poſſible for men predeſtinate, not to keepe the commandements of God, or in the end not to be ſaued. Likewiſe it was concluded in the Councel of Trent, *ſeſſ.6 can.*23. that the grace of iuſtification may be loſt, which is as much to ſay, that a man may loſe his predeſtination : for none are iuſtified, but whom God before hath predeſtinate, Roman. 8.30. They cannot therefore fall away from the grace of iuſtification, vnleſſe they fall away from predeſtination.

The Proteſtants.

THat the decree of God, concerning ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, remaineth ſure and certaine, and that it is impoſſible for any of the Elect to fall away, the Scripture euery where proueth.

Argum. Whom God loueth, he loueth to the end, Iohn 13.1. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11.29. My Father is greater then all, and no man is able to take them out of his hand, Iohn 10.29. Ergo, our election is certaine, for with God there is not ſo much as any ſhadow of change, Iam. 1.17.

Auguſtine ſaith, Horum qui electi ſunt, ſi quiſpiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus : Of the Elect, if any periſh, God is deceiued : but none of them can periſh, becauſe God cannot be deceiued, *De correp. & grat. cap.*7. This ſentence is repeated in the decrees. *cauſ.*33. *diſt.*2. *de pœnit. c.*25.

Many other places to this purpoſe are cited out of Auguſtine by Eſpencaus a popiſh writer, *commentar. in 2. Timoth. pag.*51. as *lib.*18 *de ciuitat. Dei. c.*51. Ex eis quos praſciuit Deus, perire nullus poteſt : None can periſh of thoſe, whom God hath foreknowne : *lib.*20. *c.*8. Nunquam ab illo eccleſia ſeducetur prædeſtinata & electa ante mundi conſtitutionem : The Church predeſtinate and elected before the conſtitution of the world, ſhall neuer be ſeduced from God : *de catechizand. rudib. c.*11. Satis fixum corde debet retineri, nullum ex Ieruſalem illa periturum eſſe, quia qui perierat, ex illa non erat: It muſt be held as fixed in the heart, that none of that Ieruſalem can periſh, becauſe he that periſheth, was not of it.

Aquinas is very ſound in this matter ; *part.*1. *qu.*23. *artic.*3. *ad.*2. & 3. Prædeſtinatum abſolutè quidem, & ſecundum ſe conſideratum, poſſe in peccato mortali emori. &c. That he, which is predeſtinate being abſolutely and in himſelfe conſidered, may die in mortall ſinne, and periſh, non tamen ex ſuppoſitione, ſeu in ſenſu compoſito, but not by way of ſuppoſition, or in the compound ſenſe, that is, Gods euerlaſting will and decree beeing preſuppoſed : For certaine it is, that the predeſtinate of themſelues are ſubiect to fall ; but Gods decree of their ſaluation conſidered, they can neuer fall.

The ſame *Aquinas, qu.*24. *artic.*3. Simpliciter in libro vitæ ſcriptos nunquam deleri, &c. That ſimply, they which are written in the booke of life, cannot be blotted out : but they are ſaid to be blotted or raſed out, which are written there not by predeſtination, but in reſpect of their preſent iuſtice : that this blotting out is to be referred to the opinion of men, not to the veritie it ſelfe and knowledge of God.

Their owne Decrees agree : *Cauſ.*23. *qu.*4. *c.*24. Eſſent prædeſtinati ſi eſſent reuerſuri : They ſhould be predeſtinate, if they were to returne : Ergo, becauſe they returne not, they are not predeſtinate.

*Cauſ.*33. *diſt.*2. de pœnitent. Nullus eorum ex bono in malum mutatus finit hanc vitam: None of them being changed from good to euill, endeth his life : *diſt.*4. *c.*10. Ex his nemo ſeducitur : None of thoſe which are elected, are ſeduced.

The Maſter of Sentences euidently concludeth, for the certaintie of predeſtination, *lib.*1. *diſtinct.*40. b. Non poteſt vtrumq; ſimul eſſe, vt aliquis ſit prædeſtinatus & non ſaluetur, &c. Both of theſe cannot be together, that one ſhould be ſaued, and not predeſtinate; or one to be predeſtinate, and yet damned : ibid. C. Non poteſt eſſe vt ab æterno ſit prædeſtinatus, & modò non ſit prædeſtinatus: it cannot be, that one ſhould from euerlaſting be predeſtinate, and yet now not be predeſtinate. Thus I truſt this point is euery way cleared as touching the certaintie of the decree of predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

FOr euery man to be aſſured infalliblie that hee ſhall be ſaued without ſpeciall reuelation, is a moſt damnable, falſe illuſion, and preſumption, *Rom.*8. *ſect.*9. They call it a faithleſſe perſwaſion of ſaluation,to be confident of Gods grace and ſaluation,and fides dæmoniorum,not Apoſtolorum,the faith of diuels,not of Apoſtles,*Rhemiſt.*1.Corin.9 ſect.9. So the Tridentine Councell calleth certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum, vanam, & ab omni pietate remotam fiduciam,the certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes,a vaine and faithleſſe perſwaſion. And therefore euery man, De gratia formidare,& timere poteſt,may ſtand in doubt,and be afraide,whether he be in the ſtate of grace, ſeſſ.6. cap.9.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith: I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby iuſtified: Paul durſt not aſſure himſelfe,whether he were iuſtified,Rhemiſt.

Anſw. Paul was moſt ſure of Gods grace, and his iuſtification through faith, Rom.8.38. He is perſwaded that nothing can ſeparate him from the loue of God in Chriſt: but hee doth acknowledge,that he is not iuſtified by his faithfull labours in the Goſpell,or any other works of his own, although he were cleere in conſcience.

*Argum.*2. Philip.2.12. Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling: Ergo,men muſt not be ſecure of their ſaluation.

Anſw. We doe not teach men to walke ſecurely,or preſume of their election, but wee proteſt vnto them, that ſeeing men are predeſtinate vnto good workes, that vnleſſe they be carefull to leade an holie life, they cannot aſſure themſelues to haue part in predeſtination: yet wee teach men notwithſtanding,aſſuredly to beleeue the promiſes of God made to all thoſe that beleeue,to be ſaued. And this confidence doth very well agree with the feare of God. See theſe arguments anſwered more at large in the ſecond part of iuſtification,queſt.2.argum.3. and 4. Then as Proſper well ſaith: ſentent.6.ad capitul.Gallor. Gratia non abolet arbitrium, ſed adolet: Grace doth not aboliſh mans will and endeuour,but cheriſh it.So predeſtination doth not make men more ſecure, but more carefull.

The Proteſtants.

OVr ſecuritie of ſaluation is no vaine preſumption, but an aſſurance vpon the word of God, that through faith in God,and walking in that way which God hath appointed vs,wee ſhall vndoubtedly come in the end to eternall life.

*Argum.*1. As our election is certaine, ſure, and vndoubted before God: ſo it is the Lords pleaſure,that euery Chriſtian while hee liueth, may and ought in himſelfe to be aſſured thereof by a liuely faith: as Saint Peter teacheth vs to labour and giue our diligence to make our calling and election ſure,2.Pet.1.10.

*Argum.*2. Rom.8.38. Saint Paul ſaith, I am ſure,that neither death nor life,&c.ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God in Chriſt Ieſus: Ergo,the Apoſtle was certaine of his ſaluation.

Rhemiſt. Firſt,the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely in generall: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, So many as are elected,cannot certainly periſh.

Anſw. It is falſe,for the Apoſtle pronounceth particularly of himſelfe: as more plainly,2.Timoth.4.8. From henceforth there is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſnes.

Rhemiſt. Secondly,Saint Paul might haue this perſwaſion by ſome eſpeciall reuelation.

Anſw. The ground of the Apoſtles perſwaſion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithfull,the loue of God in Chriſt. And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place,writing thus: Iſti, ſignificati ſunt ad Timotheum,&c. Theſe, of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, are ſignified in another place to Timoth.2.2.19.The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his: Ergo,this aſſurance and confidence is common, though not in the like meaſure to all faithfull Chriſtians. So the Apoſtle ſaith,2.Tim.4.8.that there was a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid vp not onely for him, but for all thoſe which loue his appearing. De correpi. & grat.cap.7.

Bernard alſo telleth vs, what this reuelation is: Hoc non fit,niſi reuelante ſpiritu per fidem homini æternum dei propoſitum ſuper ſua ſalute futura: quæ ſane reuelatio non eſt aliud, quam infuſio gratiæ ſpiritualis,per quam facta carnis mortificantur: This is not brought to paſſe, but by the ſpirit of God reuealing vnto a man by faith,the eternall purpoſe of God concerning his ſaluation: which reuelation is nothing elſe but the ſpirituall infuſion of grace, whereby the deedes of the fleſh are mortified,&c. *Epiſtol.*108. So then a man by reuelation of the ſpirit commeth to the knowledge of his ſaluation: but not by any ſpeciall or extraordinarie reuelation, but that which is by faith, and worketh mortification, which is common to all the faithfull. See more of this,part.2.of Iuſtification,queſt.2.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quia non ſecundum merita noſtra ſed illius miſericordiam firma eſt promiſſio, nemo debet cum trepidatione prædicare,vnde non poteſt dubitare: Becauſe the promiſe remaineth ſtedfaſt, not by our workes,but his mercie: we muſt not with trembling and fearefulnes pronounce that, whereof we cannot doubt. No marueile then if Papiſts doubt of their ſaluation,becauſe their confidence is built vpon their workes: but if they would with the faithfull of God, renounce their owne workes, and be content to ſubmit themſelues to the faith of Chriſt, they would not thinke it ſo ſtraunge a thing,for Chriſtians to haue a full and ſtedfaſt perſwaſion of their ſaluation.

Bernard alſo ſaith: Pignus ſalutis donat ſpiritus, reddens teſtimonium ſpiritui tuo quod filius Dei ſis: qui certiſſima ſigna prædeſtinationis tuæ cordi tuo imprimat & oſtendat.ſerm.2.in die Pentecoſt. The holie ſpirit giueth vs a pledge of our ſaluation,giuing teſtimonie to thy ſpirit,that thou art the ſonne of God:which doth imprint,and ſhew to thy heart moſt ſure ſignes of thy predeſtination. If a man may haue ſure ſignes of his predeſtination, how is hee not ſure and certaine of his predeſtination?

Saint Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth de obit.Theodoſ.Fidelis Deus, quæ ſeruis ſemel præparat, non ſubtrahit,&c. God is faithfull,what he once prepareth for his ſeruants he taketh not away:if our faith remaine,the promiſe alſo holdeth:See O man the grace of God toward thee, in terris quateris,& in cœlo poſſides: thou art ſhaken, or toſt in earth, and haſt a poſſeſſion in heauen, let thy heart be where thy poſſeſſion is.

See this truth ſealed by the holie Martyrs: Maſter Tyndal ſaith thus: *Chriſt is thine, and all his deedes are thy deedes: neither canſt thou be damned,except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaued,except he be ſaued with thee: Fox pag.*1248.

Maſter *Bradford: Know for a certaine,that as the diuell goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt,whether you be Gods childe:ſo whatſoeuer ſhall moue you to admit that dubitation,be aſſured,the ſame to come of the diuell: Fox pag.*1640.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROuerſie, of the grace and gifts of God.

THe ſeuerall queſtions handled in this part,are theſe: firſt,whether the grace of God,whereby we are made acceptable vnto him,be a qualitie inherent in vs. Secondly,of the diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace, and wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth. Thirdly,of the diſtinction of grace *operantis,cooperantis,*helping and working grace.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER Grace be a qualitie inherent.

The Papiſts.

27. Error. THe Ieſuite ſetteth downe this diſtinction of grace: There is gratia gratis data,& gratia gratum faciens: Grace freely giuen,and they are ſuch ſpirituall gifts of wiſedome, knowledge, vtterance,and ſuch like, which are giuen rather for the benefit of others: there is alſo grace,whereby we are made acceptable vnto God,the grace of iuſtification; which grace Bellarmine defendeth to be,qualitatem per modum habitus in homine permanentem, a qualitie,in manner of an habite, reſiant and permanent in man,*de grat.lib.*1.*cap.*3.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, *As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous,*Rom.5.19. But wee are made ſinners, not by the imputation of Adams vnrighteouſnes,but by ſinne inherent,and permanent in vs: Ergo, we are iuſtified,not by the imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, but by iuſtice or righteouſnes inherent in vs, *Bellarm.cap.*4.

Anſw. Firſt, I marueile that the Ieſuite hath ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe: for before he denied, that originall ſinne is a poſitiue qualitie in man: *lib.*5.*de amiſſ.grat.cap.*15. Here he affirmeth the contrarie,that it is a qualitie or habite inherent in vs, which is all one,as if he had ſaid, it is a poſitiue qualitie: for what is it to be inherent,or permanent in vs,but the ſame, which he calleth poſitiue? Secondly,Saint Paul in this place compareth the things themſelues together, that as by Adam we are made ſinners, ſo we are iuſtified by Chriſt: not the manner how they are done. This note of ſimilitude then, *ſo by the obedience of one man,*doth not inferre a likenes or equalitie in euerie reſpect, but wherein they are compared. The Ieſuite therefore can no more gather vpon this (ſo) as hee doth, that our righteouſnes by Chriſt muſt be inherent,as our ſinne by Adam is,then that naturally we ſhould be iuſt by Chriſt,as we are euill naturally by Adam: or that vniuerſally all men ſhould be ſaued by Chriſt,as all are dead in Adam: or that Chriſt ſhould free vs from the mortalitie of bodie,as Adams ſinne hath made vs ſubiect to death, and corruption. As this(ſo) doth not enforce a neceſſitie of theſe things,ſo neither of that inſtance, which the Ieſuite vrgeth. Thirdly, that the Ieſuite may more fully vnderſtand our minde, euen in this point alſo, in ſome ſort,the ſimilitude may hold: for as in originall ſinne there are two things,the guilt of Adams ſin, which though it were not by vs actually committed, yet is ours by propagation, and the corruption or deprauation of nature,which is the fruit of Adams diſobedience,verily and really graft in vs: ſo in our iuſtification are two things; firſt,the imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, which anſwereth to the propagation of Adams ſinne,and the effects or fruits of this righteouſnes, that is, holines and ſanctification; which is an imperfect iuſtice inherent in vs: yet not by this, but by Chriſts iuſtice imputed, are we made iuſt before God : as by the propagation of Adams ſinne wee are properly made ſinners, Rom.5.12. The corruption of our nature being the fruite and effect, or puniſhment rather of Adams diſobedience in his poſteritie.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour ſaith, Ioh.7.38. He that beleeueth, out of his belly ſhall flow riuers of waters of life. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.5.5. The loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt,&c. 1.Iohn 2.20. Ye haue an oyntment from him that is holie,&c. 1.Iohn 3.9. His ſeede remaineth in him. This fountaine, oyntment, ſeede, what is it elſe but an habite of grace inherent, whereby wee are made acceptable to God? *Bellarm.cap.*2.

Anſw. In thoſe places the Scripture ſpeaketh not of the firſt grace of iuſtification, whereby we are accepted before God, but of the ſecond grace of ſanctification, whereby we are approued vnto men, which is a conſequent of our iuſtification by faith : as Ioh.7.39. This ſpake he of the ſpirit, which they that beleeue in him ſhould receiue. And Rom.5.1: We are firſt iuſtified by faith in Chriſt, then the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holie Ghoſt, verſ.5. So then the fountaine, oyntment, ſeede, that is in the regenerate, doth ſignifie their ſpirituall ſtate and ſtrength wrought in them by the iuſtification of faith : ſo that they are firſt iuſtified by faith, and then theſe graces are conferred and beſtowed vpon them.

The Proteſtants.

THat grace whereby we are iuſtified, and made acceptable before God, is not a qualitie inherent or dwelling in vs, but we are made iuſt by the imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt: that righteouſnes which is in vs, is imperfect, and not able to iuſtifie vs before God.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, He hath made him to be ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that wee ſhould be made the righteouſnes of God in him, 2.Cor.5.21. Out of this place this argument may be drawne: As our ſinnes were made Chriſts, ſo is his righteouſnes made ours : but our ſinnes were not habitually inherent in him, but onely imputed : Ergo, his righteouſnes, and the grace whereby wee are iuſtified, is not inherent in vs, but imputed onely.

*Argum.*2. If wee are iuſtified by faith onely, then this iuſtifying grace is by imputation only, not inherent in vs : but faith onely iuſtifieth : Ergo. The propoſition is thus prooued : Faith iuſtifieth either formally and actually as a qualitie inherent, or inſtrumentally or paſſiuely, as it apprehendeth the iuſtice of Chriſt : but it doth not iuſtifie, as it is a qualitie or grace wrought in vs, for the Apoſtle ſaith, not of workes, Epheſ.2.9. Therefore faith, as a worke in vs iuſtifieth not : for then other ſpirituall graces, as loue, hope, ſhould iuſtifie as well as faith : if faith then onely iuſtifie inſtrumentally, as it apprehendeth Chriſt, then doth the propoſition follow, that the grace, whereby we are iuſtified, is not inherent in vs, but in Chriſt apprehended.

That faith onely iuſtifieth, the Apoſtle euidently proueth, Rom.3.28. Wee conclude that a man is iuſtified by faith without the workes of the law. And if they anſwere, that the workes of the lawe are here excluded, not the workes of grace : Saint Paul elſewhere doth alſo exclude ſuch workes : By grace are ye ſaued through faith, not of workes,&c. And afterward hee ſheweth what workes : Euen good workes, which God hath ordained vs to walke in: theſe are workes of grace. But of this matter, wee ſhall entreate (God willing) more at large, when we come to handle that waightie controuerſie of Iuſtification by faith. Other arguments alſo for this matter which wee haue in hand, wee will bring forth, in the queſtion of inherent iuſtice.

We will conclude here with that ſentence of Auguſtine : Iuſtitia ſit, ſed ex gratia ſit, à Deo tibi ſit, non tua ſit: ſacerdotes (inquit) tui induantur iuſtitia: veſtis accipitur, non cum capillis naſcitur, pecora de ſuo veſtiuntur: Let there be righteouſnes, but let it be of grace, let it be of God, let it not be thine owne : Let thy Prieſts (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) be cloathed with righteouſnes : cloathing is receiued outwardly, it groweth not in vs, as our haire, nor as the ſheepe are cloathed of their owne : *De verb. Apoſt. ſerm.*15. So then iuſtifying grace is no more ours or inherent in vs, than the veſture or garment, which wee are cloathed with, which is not in vs, but onely adhereth, and is applied to vs.

We want not here the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers, as Albertus Pighius thus teſtifieth, *lib.*5. de liber. arbitrio. In ſcholis imaginantur gratiam dei qualitatem aliquam increatam animæ à deo,&c. In the ſchooles they thinke that the grace of God is a qualitie created in the ſoule, either the ſame with the habite of charitie, or diuerſe from it : quæ commentitia vniuerſa exiſtimo,&c. which I thinke all to be but fained, and to haue no warrant or authoritie from the Scriptures.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE DISTINction or difference of ſufficient and effectuall grace.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine thus diſtinguiſheth them: gratia ſufficiens, ſufficient grace, is when God doth ſo call 28.Error. and ſtirre vp a man, ayding and aſſiſting him by his direction and protection, and working together with him, that the man thus called, hath power to will that which is good, but yet in deede willeth it not: gratia efficax, effectuall grace is that, whereby a man ſo ayded, aſſiſted, and called, doth will indeed and performe that which is good, *lib.*1. *de grat. cap.*2. This then is the Ieſuites opinion, that Gods internall vocation, and his ſpeciall grace inwardly working, is not to all effectuall, but ſufficient onely: being ſufficient for their conuerſion, but yet not in deede effecting it.

Argum. The Lord ſaith thus by the Prophet Iſay: What could I haue done any more to my vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? I looked that it ſhould bring forth grapes & it bringeth forth wilde grapes, Iſay 5.4. The like place we haue Matth. 23.37. O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, which killeſt, &c. how often would I haue gathered thy children together, as the Henne, &c. and thou wouldeſt not: Theſe had grace neceſſarie and ſufficient to their conuerſion, for the Lord ſaith, What could I haue done more, and I would haue gathered them together; yet were they not conuerted: this grace then, whereby they were called, was ſufficient; yet not effectuall, *Bellarm. cap.*11.

Anſw. Theſe places alleaged are not vnderſtoode, of the internall calling, or of grace inwardly working, but onely of the externall calling, and oblation of grace, and the ſupplie of all neceſſarie outward meanes to ſaluation. As the Prophet Iſay ſpeaketh of hedging the vineyard, caſting out the ſtones, planting it with the beſt plants, ſetting vp a watch tower: that is, they had the watchmen the Prophets, alſo the beſt plants, the true worſhip and ſeruice of God, they had the law and the Prophets, and all ſtones, that is externall impediments, which might hinder them, were remoued: So our Sauiour ſaith, that he would haue gathered them together by his preaching, and by the voice of the Goſpell, as the Henne by her clocking doth call her chickens, but they refuſed, and reſiſted, as they likewiſe ſerued the Prophets, and other meſſengers of God, ſent vnto them.

We graunt then, that the externall meanes of ſaluation in themſelues may be and are ſufficient to all, but effectuall onely to thoſe, to whome God giueth his eſpeciall grace: and in this ſenſe we doe not much miſlike this diſtinction: but we deny any ſuch difference of the internall grace, whereby God calleth, ſtirreth vp, aſſiſteth, moueth, directeth the hearts of men: this grace cannot be ſufficient in any, but it muſt needes alſo be effectuall. Yet here we deſire not to be miſtaken, but further doe enlarge our meaning thus: Firſt, we denie not altogether this diſtinction of ſufficiencie and efficacie: it hath place in the externall calling, and common grace offered to all, which is ſufficient to many, but effectuall onely to the elect: but not in the inward ſpirituall calling. Secondly, we graunt a diuers meaſure of inward grace in the effectuall calling of the elect, and admit ſome degree in their ſpirituall calling, which though it be not alike effectuall in all that are ſo called, yet is it effectuall. Thirdly, we confeſſe, that ſomewhat may be inwardly wrought by Gods ſpirite euen in hypocrites: but we affirme, that no inward temporarie gift wrought in them is ſufficient to their ſaluation: for hereupon it would follow, that they might reſiſt their inward powerfull, ſufficient calling, and that the abſence of their owne will onely maketh it without effect: that therefore there is no ſuch powerfull inward working grace ſufficient onely, but that the ſame is effectuall alſo, we ſhew it thus.

The Proteſtants.

Argum. 1. THe Prophet Dauid ſaith, I will runne the way of thy commaundements, when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart, Pſalm. 119.32. Draw me, and we will runne after thee, Cantic. 1.3. And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he hath predeſtinate, he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath iuſtified, Rom. 8.30. All theſe places proue that the internall calling of God is alwaies effectuall: After drawing and enlarging the heart, followeth running, after vocation, immediatly enſueth iuſtification.

Argum. 2. The grace of God is not in vaine in any: as S. Paul ſaith, His grace that was in me, was not in vaine, 1. Corinth. 15.10. But if ſo that the grace of God inwardly mouing and calling men, ſhould fayle in the effect, then ſhould it be in vaine: Ergo, it is effectuall in all the children of God, in whom it ſo worketh.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake: Lex extra hominem ſcripta vt eum terrificet, gratia in homine eſt, vt eum intrinſecus iuſtificet: The lawe is written without man to terrifie him, grace is within man inwardly to iuſtifie him, *de ſpirit. & liter. cap.*17. As terror then outwardly followeth the knowledge of the Lawe, ſo iuſtification alwaies followeth grace inwardly working: it is therefore alwaies effectuall where it is ſufficient, ſpeaking of the inward and ſpirituall calling. Alſo in another place he ſaith: Quando Deus docet, ſic docet, vt ſcienda ſciamus, aperiendo veritatem, ſic docet vt facienda faciamus, inſpirando ſuauitatem: When God teacheth, he ſo teacheth, that things which are to be knowne we doe know, God opening the trueth to vs, and things which are to be done, we doe, by inſpiring a deſire into vs, Pſalme 118. con. 17. Gods inward teaching then by his holy ſpirite is alwaies effectuall in his children, and in none of them it is ſufficient, but together alſo effectuall.

*Magiſter ſentent. lib.*1. *diſt.*17. liter. K. thus teſtifieth, Spiritus ſanctus non ſolum non habenti, verum etiam habenti non incaſſum permittitur, non habenti quidem, vt habeatur, habenti, vt amplius habeatur:

The holy ſpirit is not giuen in vaine neyther to him, that hath it not; nor to him, that hath: to him that hath not, that he may haue him, to him that hath him, that he may haue him in greater meaſure: Wherefore the inward calling of the ſpirit is alwayes effectuall.

AN APPENDIX OR SECOND PART OF THIS queſtion, wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth.

The Papiſts.

29.Error. Bellarmine dare not attribute the efficacie of grace onely to free will, that this ſhould be the cauſe, why that grace in ſome worketh effectually, in ſome others it doth not, becauſe ſome giue their free aſſent vnto grace working in them, other withhold it: for then (ſaith he) it ſhould reſt in mans power, whether Grace ſhould be effectuall or not: Neither doth he thinke, that God onely is the cauſe of this efficacie, by drawing and framing our willes to conſent to his grace: But this efficacie, he ſaith, partly dependeth of Gods inward perſwaſion, partly of the free aſſent of the will, Deus, (ſaith the Ieſuite) quos efficaciter trahere decreuit, eam ſuaſionem adhibet, quam videt congruere ingenio eorum: God doth vſe that perſwaſion to thoſe, whom he purpoſeth effectually to call, which he knoweth beſt to fit their humour, and which it is moſt like they will agree vnto, Bellarmin. cap. 12. So thus in the Ieſuites opinion, God is not a drawer, or worker of mans will, but a mouer, and perſwader onely.

Argum. If God ſhould not onely moue and perſwade men by his ſpirite, but alſo produce and worke in them the very act of willing: then ſhould there be no freewill in man to doe any thing: and ſo no action in man ſhould be voluntarie, but of neceſſitie and conſtraint, becauſe man is not left to himſelfe, to giue his aſſent freely, but his will is determined of God, Bellarmin. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it is no abſurditie at all, to ſay that in man by nature there remaineth no freewill at all, to that which is good: for our Sauiour ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing, Iohn 15.5. but to giue our conſent or will vnto good is ſomewhat, therefore of our ſelues without Chriſt we cannot doe it. Auguſtine ſaith, Cum de libera hominis voluntate loquimur, de illa ſcilicet, in qua homo factus eſt, loquimur: When we ſpeake of mans freewill, we meane that, wherein man was created: de natur. grat. cap. 57. He graunteth no other freewill to good, but that, which was once in Adam, and is now vtterly loſt. But of this more, by Gods grace, in the queſtion of Freewill.

Secondly, although God onely doth conuert and incline the will of man to goodnes, yet for all this, man worketh willingly, not of neceſſitie or conſtraint: for our Sauiour ſaith, If the Sonne make you free, ye ſhall be free indeede, Iohn 8.36. God of vnwilling maketh vs willing.

And here we refuſe not the diſtinction of their owne gloſſe, Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 24. There are two kindes of neceſſitie: Simplex vna, altera conditionalis: A ſimple neceſſitie, as it is neceſſarie that all men be mortall; conditionall, as when I ſee a man walke, it is neceſſarie he ſhould walke, not neceſſarie by the nature of the thing, for ſimplie it is not neceſſarie to walke, but in reſpect of the condition, becauſe I ſee him or know him to walke: ſo in reſpect of Gods knowledge, and working grace, there is a conditionall neceſſitie, but no ſimple or abſolute neceſſitie in the things themſelues, which yet doe retaine their owne libertie: Thus farre, and to this purpoſe the Gloſſe.

The Proteſtants.

GOd onely is the cauſe, that his grace worketh effectually, and is not in vaine in vs: neither doth he onely moue and perſwade, but actually worketh the aſſent and inclination of the will.

Argum. 1. It is God that worketh in vs, the will and the deede, Philip. 1.13. God worketh: this is more then to moue or perſwade: Deus operatur in nobis velle: God worketh in vs to will: what is this elſe, but, producere ipſum actum volendi: To bring forth the very act of willing, which the Ieſuite denyeth, cap. 12. So the Scripture ſaith, that God opened the heart of Lydia, that ſhe attended to thoſe things that Paul ſpake, Act. 16.14. To open the heart, is more then to moue, or ſtir the heart: it betokeneth rather an actuall operation, and inclination of it. Further, thoſe places which are alleaged to proue that the efficacie of grace doth not depend wholy vpon the aſſent of our will, doe likewiſe ſhew; that mans will herein worketh not at all, but the whole worke in making grace effectuall, is to bee aſcribed to the ſpirite of God: as Iohn 6.45. Euery man that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, commeth to me, Pſalm. 94.12. Beatus homo quem tu erudieris, &c. Bleſſed is the man, whom thou teacheſt O Lord: 1. Cor. 4.7. Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt thou, that thou haſt not receiued? Theſe texts doe as well proue that no part of the diuine worke is to be imputed to mans will, as that the whole is not: for if Gods teaching onely cauſe vs to come vnto him, and make vs bleſſed, if God onely ſeparate vs, &c. then it is of Gods ſpirit onely, that grace worketh in vs effectually.

together with him, that the man thus called, hath power to will that which is good, but yet in deede willeth it not: gratia efficax, effectuall grace is that, whereby a man ſo ayded, aſſiſted, and called, doth will indeed and performe that which is good, *lib.*1.*de grat.cap.*2. This then is the Ieſuites opinion, that Gods internall vocation, and his ſpeciall grace inwardly working, is not to all effectuall, but ſufficient onely: being ſufficient for their conuerſion, but yet not in deede effecting it.

God onely is the cauſe, that his grace worketh effectually, and is not in vaine in vs: neither doth he onely moue and perſwade, but actually worketh the aſſent and inclination of the will.

*Argum.*1. It is God that worketh in vs, the will and the deede, Philip.1.13. God worketh: this is more then to moue or perſwade: Deus operatur in nobis velle: God worketh in vs to will: what is this elſe, but, producere ipſum actum volendi: To bring forth the very act of willing, which the Ieſuite denyeth, *cap.*12. So the Scripture ſaith, that God opened the heart of Lydia, that ſhe attended to thoſe things that Paul ſpake, Act.16.14. To open the heart, is more then to moue, or ſtir the heart: it betokeneth rather an actuall operation, and inclination of it. Further, thoſe places which are alleaged to proue that the efficacie of grace doth not depend wholy vpon the aſſent of our will, doe likewiſe ſhew; that mans will herein worketh not at all, but the whole worke in making grace effectuall, is to bee aſcribed to the ſpirite of God: as Iohn 6.45. Euery man that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, commeth to me, Pſalm.94.12. Beatus homo quem tu erudieris, &c. Bleſſed is the man, whom thou teacheſt O Lord: 1.Cor.4.7. Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt thou, that thou haſt not receiued? Theſe texts doe as well proue that no part of the diuine worke is to be imputed to mans will, as that the whole is not: for if Gods teaching onely cauſe vs to come vnto him, and make vs bleſſed, if God onely ſeparate vs, &c. then it is of Gods ſpirit onely, that grace worketh in vs effectually.

Argum. 2. We will deſire no better proofe, then the Ieſuites owne confeſſion: who being preſſed with that place, Iohn 6. Euery one, that hath heard, and learned of my father, commeth vnto me, verſe 45. thus anſwereth, Infallibilitas effectus, non habet pro cauſa ſtudium diſcipuli, ſed excellentiam magiſtri, ſicut allegat dominus ibidem prophetiam Iſaiæ, erunt omnes docibiles Dei: The infallibilitie or certaintie of the effect, ariſeth not of the deſire and ſtudie of him that is taught, as the cauſe thereof, but of the excellencie of the teacher, as in the ſame place our Lord Chriſt alleageth the Propheſie of Iſay, They ſhall be all taught of God, Iohn 6.45. Bellarmin. cap. 12. And againe he ſaith: Si eadem motione accepta vnus credit, alter non credit, longe maiorem habuit Dei gratiam, is qui credit, quam qui non credit: If by one, and the ſelfe ſame motion inwardly receiued, one man beleeue, another doth not, ſurely he that beleeueth hath a greater grace of God, then he which beleeueth not: de grat. lib. 1. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad obiect. 3. Here Bellarmine aſcribeth the efficacie of grace, to the excellencie of the teacher, and to the greatnes of grace, which ſome haue, and others haue not: It is then of God onely, nothing of our ſelues, that grace worketh effectually in vs.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Alia eſt cauſa iam credentis in Deo, alia non credentis, qui enim non credit, verum lumen videre non poteſt, niſi Deus prius in corde eius ſpiritu ſuo illuxerit: atque ita non eſt volentis, aut currentis, ſed miſerentis Dei: There is another reaſon of him, that beleeueth in God, and of him, that beleeueth not: for hee that beleeueth not, cannot ſee the true light, vnleſſe God firſt doe lighten his heart with his ſpirite: and ſo it is not of him that willeth, or of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie: cont. Pelagian. art. 3. The cauſe then of beleefe, is onely the illumination of Gods ſpirite: for if any thing were to bee aſcribed to man, it ſhould not be wholy of him that ſheweth mercie, but ſomewhat alſo of the willer, and the runner, which the Apoſtle denieth.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. can. 2. Si quis ſine gratia Dei, credentibus, volentibus, deſiderantibus, ſtudentibus miſericordiam dicit conferri, non autem diuinitus per inſpirationem ſpiritus in nobis fieri, reſiſtit Apoſtolo qui dicit, quid habes, quod non accepiſti? If any man ſay that mercie is conferred vpon thoſe that beleeue, deſire, ſtudie, &c. of themſelues without the grace of God, and not rather wrought in vs by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, reſiſteth the Apoſtle which ſaith, what haſt thou, which thou haſt not receiued? It is the inward inſpiration then of God, not our voluntarie conſenting, that grace is effected in vs.

Their owne decrees alſo thus teſtifie: Part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 154. Qui dixerit gratiam Dei, qua iuſtificamur, &c. Hee that ſaith, that the grace of God, wherewith wee are iuſtified by Ieſus Chriſt, is onely of force to forgiue vs our ſinnes, not that we ſhould not commit them afterward, let him be accurſed. If it be the grace of God, that both taketh away our ſinnes alreadie done, and keepeth vs from committing the like, what is left vnto mans will? Ibid. c. 155. Qui dixerit, &c. Hee that ſaith the grace of God doth helpe onely to reueale vnto vs the will of God, whereby wee knowe what to deſire, and what to ſhunne, and that thereby we are not enabled to doe that wee knowe, let him be accurſed. Grace then doth not onely moue or perſwade, or reueale vnto the will what is to be done, but giueth power to doe it.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION of Grace into gratiam operantem, & cooperantem, vel adiuuantem: grace-working, and grace-helping.

The Papiſts.

30. Error BEllarmine thus doth define and diſtinguiſh them: Gratia operans eſt, quæ facit vt velimus: It is the working grace, which maketh vs to will, that which is good: Gratia cooperans, quæ facit, vt quæ voluerimus, impleamus: Helping grace, or grace working together with vs, is that, which cauſeth vs to fulfill, or doe that, which wee will or deſire: Bellarmine cap. 2. This then is his minde, that God onely worketh the beginning of euery good action; that is, the conſent of the will: but the accompliſhment of the action is not onely of God, but he worketh together with man.

Argum. The Ieſuite would illuſtrate his matter by this ſimilitude: As if it were expedient for a man to ſayle into the Eaſt countries, and yet hee is vnwilling, his friend commeth, and perſwadeth with him, and prouideth things needfull for the nauigation, as money, victuals, and ſuch like: though his friend may ſay, I onely was the cauſe, that hee tooke this nauigation in hand, yet can hee not ſay, that I onely caried or conueyed him vnto that place, but helped him onely: So ſaith hee, God onely worketh the beginning of any action by perſwading the will, but hee is helping onely and aſſiſtant to man in the finiſhing thereof, lib. 1. de grat. cap. 13.

Anſw. Firſt, this ſimilitude is very inſufficient, and the things here compared are altogether vnlike: for what preſumption is it, to match the doing of man with the power of God? Firſt, man draweth onely by perſwaſion, he hath no power ouer an others heart: but God is greater then our heart, he doth not onely applie perſwaſion to it, but bendeth and turneth it: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Deus magis habet in poteſtate hominum voluntates, quam ipſi ſuas: God hath greater power ouer the willes of men, then they haue themſelues. Secondly, all the helpes that man prouideth, or miniſtreth for any action, are externall: But God is ayding and aſſiſting euery where by his power, and worketh mightily in the inward man. We ſee then the inſufficiencie of this ſimilitude.

De corrept. & grat. cap. 14.

*Anſw.*2. Though it were a fit and meete compariſon, yet we know that ſimilitudes proue not, no more doth this: it needeth not therefore any large confutation.

The Proteſtants.

THis diſtinction of grace, that it ſhould be ſometime the principall, chiefe, and onely working cauſe in man, and another while but ayding, and aſſiſting onely, and that man ſhould bee ioyned with God as a fellow worker in any good action, wee holde it to bee a blaſphemous doctrine: that the will of man worketh together with grace, as it is, cauſa phyſica, a naturall cauſe of ſuch actions as are wrought by man, not reſpecting the qualitie and goodnes of them, but the worke onely, we deny not: but the grace of God onely is, cauſa moralis, the morall cauſe of euery good action. As they are but actions and operations, ſo they proceede from the will of man: but as they are good or commendable, they are the workes onely of grace.

Argum. God worketh the will and the deede, Philip.2.13. As he worketh the will, ſo alſo he worketh the deede; the will of God alone worketh: Ergo. Againe, That God may be all in all, ſaith the Apoſtle, 1.Corinth.15:28. But God ſhould not bee all in all in euery good action, if man ſhould be ioyned as a fellow worker. S. Iames ſaith, Euery good and perfect gift is from aboue: 1.17. therefore no good gift, or worke is from below, that is of man, either in part, or in whole. Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere: Without me, you can doe nothing: of the which words Auguſtine writeth thus: Non ait ſine me difficilè poteſtis facere, aut ſine me nihil poteſtis perficere, ſed ne facere quidem: Hee ſaith not, without me you can hardlie doe any thing, or without me, you cannot finiſh any thing, but you are not able to doe it at all: cont. 2. *Epiſtol. Pelag. lib.*2.*cap.*8.

But if ſo that in any good action God ſhould worke part, and man part; then might man worke ſomewhat, that is his part, without Gods helpe: And if God doe but helpe to worke, what is that elſe, but to giue power more eaſilie onely to worke; as though man, without that helpe, yet more hardly and difficultlie of himſelfe might doe it? But all this is contrarie to that ſaying of our Sauiour, Without me you can doe nothing.

Saint Ambroſe here hath an excellent teſtimonie, *Epiſt.*84. Gratia Dei tota repellitur, niſi tota ſuſcipitur, &c. The grace of God is wholy refuſed, if it bee not wholy receiued: and as hee is no faithfull man which in any one poynt diſſenteth from the catholike veritie; Sic extra gratiam efficitur, qui aliquid de eius plenitudine diffitetur; So hee is without grace, which doth deny any thing of the fulnes thereof: Grace then worketh fullie, and not in part onely.

*Decret. part.*3. *diſtinct.*4. *c.*156. Quicunque dixerit, &c. Whoſoeuer ſaith, that the grace of iuſtification is giuen, that, what we are bid to doe by freewill, Facilius impleamus per gratiam, we ſhould doe more eaſilie by grace; let him bee accurſed. If Gods grace doe but helpe to worke, what doth it elſe but onely make vs more eaſilie to worke, which this canon condemneth.

The Maſter of ſentences maketh both theſe, the working grace and helping grace, all one grace and gift, *Lib.*2.*diſt.*26.liter.l. I then reaſon thus: if it be all one grace, it worketh alwaies alike: but it worketh alone in preparing the will; as the Maſter alleageth out of Auguſtine: Per ſolam gratiam, que eſt in fide Chriſti poſita, præparatur voluntas, &c. The will is prepared by grace alone, which conſiſteth in the faith of Chriſt: *Ibid. diſt.*26.liter. d. Ergo, it alſo worketh alone in helping and aſſiſting the will. Therefore both the firſt worke in preparing the will, and the ſecond in enabling the will, is onely of grace.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CONtrouerſie of freewill.

THe ſeuerall queſtions are theſe. Firſt, of the nature, condition and qualitie of freewill. Secondly, of the power of freewill. Firſt, in naturall things. Secondly, in morall duties. Thirdly, in ſpirituall.

Argum. 2. We will deſire no better proofe, then the Ieſuites owne confeſſion: who being preſſed with that place, Iohn 6. Euery one, that hath heard, and learned of my father, commeth vnto me, verſe 45. thus anſwereth, Infallibilitas effectus, non habet pro cauſa ſtudium diſcipuli, ſed excellentiam magiſtri, ſicut allegat dominus ibidem prophetiam Iſaiæ, erunt omnes docibiles Dei: The infallibilitie or certaintie of the effect, ariſeth not of the deſire and ſtudie of him that is taught, as the cauſe thereof, but of the excellencie of the teacher, as in the ſame place our Lord Chriſt alleageth the Propheſie of Iſay, They ſhall be all taught of God, Iohn 6.45. Bellarmin. cap. 12. And againe he ſaith: Si eadem motione accepta vnus credit, alter non credit, longe maiorem habuit Dei gratiam, is qui credit, quam qui non credit: If by one, and the ſelfe ſame motion inwardly receiued, one man beleeue, another doth not, ſurely he that beleeueth hath a greater grace of God, then he which beleeueth not: de grat. lib. 1. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad obiect. 3. Here Bellarmine aſcribeth the efficacie of grace, to the excellencie of the teacher, and to the greatnes of grace, which ſome haue, and others haue not: It is then of God onely, nothing of our ſelues, that grace worketh effectually in vs.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Alia eſt cauſa iam credentis in Deo, alia non credentis, qui enim non credit, verum lumen videre non poteſt, niſi Deus prius in corde eius ſpiritu ſuo illuxerit: atque ita non eſt volentis, aut currentis, ſed miſerentis Dei: There is another reaſon of him, that beleeueth in God, and of him, that beleeueth not: for hee that beleeueth not, cannot ſee the true light, vnleſſe God firſt doe lighten his heart with his ſpirite: and ſo it is not of him that willeth, or of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie: cont. Pelagian. art. 3. The cauſe then of beleefe, is onely the illumination of Gods ſpirite: for if any thing were to bee aſcribed to man, it ſhould not be wholy of him that ſheweth mercie, but ſomewhat alſo of the willer, and the runner, which the Apoſtle denieth.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. can. 2. Si quis ſine gratia Dei, credentibus, volentibus, deſiderantibus, ſtudentibus miſericordiam dicit conferri, non autem diuinitus per inſpirationem ſpiritus in nobis fieri, reſiſtit Apoſtolo qui dicit, quid habes, quod non accepiſti? If any man ſay that mercie is conferred vpon thoſe that beleeue, deſire, ſtudie, &c. of themſelues without the grace of God, and not rather wrought in vs by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, reſiſteth the Apoſtle which ſaith, what haſt thou, which thou haſt not receiued? It is the inward inſpiration then of God, not our voluntarie conſenting, that grace is effected in vs.

Their owne decrees alſo thus teſtifie: Part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 154. Qui dixerit gratiam Dei, qua iuſtificamur, &c. Hee that ſaith, that the grace of God, wherewith wee are iuſtified by Ieſus Chriſt, is onely of force to forgiue vs our ſinnes, not that we ſhould not commit them afterward, let him be accurſed. If it be the grace of God, that both taketh away our ſinnes alreadie done, and keepeth vs from committing the like, what is left vnto mans will? Ibid. c. 155. Qui dixerit, &c. Hee that ſaith the grace of God doth helpe onely to reueale vnto vs the will of God, whereby wee knowe what to deſire, and what to ſhunne, and that thereby we are not enabled to doe that wee knowe, let him be accurſed. Grace then doth not onely moue or perſwade, or reueale vnto the will what is to be done, but giueth power to doe it.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION of Grace into gratiam operantem, & cooperantem, vel adiuuantem: grace-working, and grace-helping.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CONtrouerſie of freewill.

THe ſeuerall queſtions are theſe. Firſt, of the nature, condition and qualitie of freewill. Secondly, of the power of freewill. Firſt, in naturall things. Secondly, in morall duties. Thirdly, in ſpirituall.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE NATVRE and definition of freewill.

BEllarmine defineth freewill after this manner: Eſt libera poteſtas vnum præ alijs eligendi, vel reſpuendi, intelligenti naturæ attributa, &c. It is a free or abſolute power, to chuſe, or refuſe one thing before another, giuen of God vnto a reaſonable and vnderſtanding nature, or creature. We miſlike theſe poyntes in this definition: firſt, concerning the power of freewill, as well in chuſing, as refuſing: ſecondly, of the obiect of freewill, that it is naturally, as it is now to be found in man, inclined as well to good as euill: thirdly, concerning the qualitie and condition of freewill, that it is actiue, and not paſſiue: fourthly, of the ſubiect of freewill. Of theſe in their order.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POWER of freewill.

The Papiſts.

31.Error. THere is, duplex libertas, a double kinde of libertie: libertas à neceſſitate, a libertie or freedome from neceſſitie, as when it is in our power to will, or not to will, indifferently to chuſe, or refuſe this or that, as to walke, to ſitte, to goe, none of all theſe being neceſſary, but ſubiect to our will and choice: libertas à coactione, a freedome from coaction, or conſtraint, is when, that we doe is of neceſſitie, and we cannot chuſe but doe it, yet we doe it willingly. As a man cannot chuſe but ſinne, yet he ſinneth voluntarily, he is not conſtrained thereunto: Bellarmine affirmeth, that in the freewill of man, there muſt be a freedome not onely from coaction, but from neceſſitie: lib.3.de grat.cap.4.

Argum. Eccleſ.15.14. God made man from the beginning, and left him in the hand of his counſell, he hath ſet water and fire before thee, ſtretch out thy hand, to which thou wilt: before man is life and death, good and euill, what him liketh, ſhall be giuen him: Ergo, the freedome of mans wil, is not onely not conſtrained, but hath no neceſſitie, ſeeing it is in his power, to chuſe or refuſe what him liketh, Bellarmin.cap.5.

Anſw. 1. We graunt ſuch a free will to haue been giuen to man in his creation, but is now loſt by his fall: as Auguſtine ſaith: Lex in Paradiſo non poneretur ſeruanda, niſi liber eſſet eam tam velle, quam nolle ſeruare, ſed ſicut per ſe lapſus eſt, non continuò per ſe, i. propriam voluntatem, reſurgere poteſt: A law ſhould not haue bin giuen man in Paradiſe to keepe, vnleſſe he had been free, eyther to wil, or nil to keepe it: but as man did fall of himſelfe, ſo he cannot riſe of himſelfe, that is, by his owne will, Cont.Pelag.articul.3.

2. You muſt preſſe vs with more waightie authorities, then thoſe out of Apocryphal ſcriptures, ſuch as the booke of Eccleſiaſticus is, if you would winne any credite to your cauſe: for the authoritie of ſuch bookes bindeth vs not.

Whereas Bellarmine alleageth diuers Fathers to proue the libertie of free will, not onely from coaction and conſtraint, but from neceſſitie, eyther to good or euill: they are ſo to be vnderſtood, that they eyther ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his perfection, or of the will of man, as it is by regeneration of grace, not by corruption of nature, or els by neceſſitie vnderſtand coaction and compulſion, as Auguſtine ſaith, Liberum hominis arbitrium ab omni neceſſitatis vinculo vindicamus, &c. Wee do redeeme mans will from all bond of neceſſitie: that is, as he expoundeth it, ſub fato ſtellarum, &c. We place no mans birth vnder the fatall deſtinie of the ſtarres, lib.2.cont.Fauſtum.c.5. By neceſſitie he vnderſtandeth a fatall deſtinie and compulſion: from ſuch neceſſitie we alſo free the will of man.

The Proteſtants.

A Freedome of will from neceſſitie we graunt to haue been in our firſt parents, whereby it was in their power, to haue choſen eyther the good, or the euill way: But ſince that by Adams tranſgreſſion the whole power of nature was ſhaken, and all the gifts and graces of creation decayed; there remaineth no freenes of will vnto good in man, but onely a voluntary promptneſſe and inclination to euill without conſtraint.

Argum. This haue I found, ſaith the Preacher, That God hath made man righteous, but hee hath ſought many inuentions, Eccle.7.31. I know, ſaith Saint Paul, that in me, that is, my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing, Rom.7.18. Theſe places proue, that, howſoeuer it was with man in his creation, now by nature there remaineth no good thing in him: and therefore no inclination to that which is good.

We are not able, ſaith the Apoſtle, to thinke any thing of our ſelues, but our abilitie or ſufficiencie is of God, 2.Cor.3.5. Vpon the which wordes Auguſtine writeth thus, Non idonei ſumus cogitare aliquid (dicit Paulus:) minus autem eſt cogitare quam cupere : neque ait non ſumus idonei, aliquid magnum, aut perfectum cogitare, ſed ne aliquid, cui contrarium eſt nihil : Wee are not fit, to thinke any thing ſaith the Apoſtle, but it is farre leſſe to thinke, then to deſire : neither ſaith he, we are not fit to thinke any great matter, but not any thing, the contrary whereof is nothing. If we are not then by nature able to thinke any good, much leſſe to will it. Cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. 2.8.

Bernard thus writeth : Nemo putet ideo dictum liberum arbitrium,&c. Let no man thinke it is called free will, becauſe it hath equall power to good and euill; for then neither God, which cannot be euill, nor the diuell, which cannot be good, ſhould haue free will : but therefore it is called free, becauſe none can be good or euill, niſi volens; but willingly, lib.de liber.arbit.

S. Ambroſe alſo is an euident witneſſe : lib.1.de vocat.Gent.c.9. Licet inſit homini bonum nolle, tamen niſi donatum, non habet bonum velle : Although it be in mans power to nill that is good; yet hee cannot will that is good, vnleſſe it be giuen him : the one he hath by corruption of nature, the other he receiueth by the operation of grace. Againe, Non in poteſtate noſtra eſt cor noſtrum & noſtræ cogitationes: Our heart and our thoughtes are not in our owne power : de fug.ſecul.c.1. Voluntas mutabilis quæ non ab immutabili voluntate regitur, tanto citius propinquat iniquitati, quanto acrius intenditur actioni : The mutable wil, vnleſſe it be gouerned of the immutable will, doth ſo much nearer approch to iniquitie, as it worketh more intendedly : Cui committi nihil aliud quam dimitti : For a man to be committed to his will, is all one, as to be dimitted or forſaken : Nihil in ſuis viribus habet, niſi periculi facilitatem : Mans will hath nothing of it owne power, but the facilitie of daunger: de vocat.Gent.lib.1.c.2. Then it followeth, that the will of man, by nature cannot chooſe but to do euill : What is this elſe but a neceſſitie not of coaction, but of deprauation ?

Bernard yet ſpeaketh more euidently : Serm 81.in Cantic. Anima malo libera neceſſitate & ancilla tenetur et libera; ancilla propter neceſſitatem, libera propter voluntatem, &c. The ſoule is by an vnhappy free neceſſitie, both bond and free; bond becauſe of neceſſitie, (it cannot otherwiſe chooſe) free, becauſe it is voluntary.

Peter Lombard lib.2.diſt.25.liter.e. Liberum videtur dici arbitrium, quia ſine coactione & neceſſitate valet appetere,&c. It ſeemeth that free will is ſo called, becauſe without coaction and neceſſitie it doth deſire,&c. He taketh coaction and neceſſitie for all one, and ſo affirmeth the will to be free from coaction; which wee alſo graunt.

Thomas 1.part.qu.82.art.2.ad 3. ſaith, Per peccatum periiſſe libertatem gratiæ, non libertatem naturæ, quæ eſt à coactione : By ſinne the libertie of grace is loſt, not the libertie of nature, which is from coaction.

Alphonſ.de caſtro lib.9. Libertas, quæ opponitur neceſſitati, ſeu, vt verius dicam, coactioni : That is libertie, which is oppoſed againſt neceſſitie, or more truely coaction. Theſe popiſh writers ſeeme to affirme a libertie onely in the will from coaction and compulſion.

THE SECOND PART, OF the obiect of Free will.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine ſaith, Voluntatis proprium & primarium obiectum bonum eſſe, ſiue aliquid apprehenſum ſub ratione boni, that the proper and principall obiect of the will of man, is that which is good, or that appeareth, or is ſo taken to be : and ſo he determineth, Per arbitrium non expeti mala, ſed bona: That by free will not euill things, but good are deſired, lib.de grat.3.cap.12. 32.Error.

Argum. The inclination of the will vnto his obiect is naturall, and therefore God is the author thereof: If God be the author, then it is good : the will of man then is not naturally enclined to euill, for ſo the inclination thereof ſhould be euill, which God hath made, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. That naturall power which God hath giuen to men, generally to will, to thinke, to deſire, to hate, to loue, muſt needs be good, becauſe it is of God; but the execution of this power in the abuſe thereof, by willing and chuſing euill, and refuſing and hating good, ariſeth of the corruption of our nature, and is euill; neither is God to be charged with it. We diſtinguiſh then betweene the naturall gift, and the vſe thereof, betweene the nature of man, as it was created of God, and the corruption thereof : to haue power to will, is a naturall gift giuen of God; but to will that is euill, is an abuſe of that power, cauſed in vs by the corruption of our nature.

Argum.2. The obiect of the appetite or deſire, is that, which is deſireable; but that which is good, is onely appetible or deſireable : Ergo, onely bonum, that which is good is the obiect of the will or deſire, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw.1. The propoſition is partly true, partly falſe : for if by (deſireable) that is vnderſtood which ought to be deſired in right, it is falſe; if that which is (de facto) deſired, we graunt it. Secondly, for the aſſumption; if it be vnderſtood of that which is naturally good : ſo it is true, that by the inſtinct of nature, euery creature deſireth that, which maketh for the conſeruation thereof; of; but this is not to the point in queſtion: But if he meane that which is morally, and verily, and truely good, the aſſumption is falſe; for that which is good in this ſenſe is not onely, nor yet at all by nature deſired.

The Proteſtants.

THat man by freewill may chuſe things naturally good, as for the preſeruation of his life, and maintenance of his ciuill eſtate, and ſhun the contrarie, that is, things hurtfull vnto his life, we doe eaſily grant; ſeeing it is a general gift of nature, euen beſtowed vpon vnreaſonable creatures, to diſcerne what is good, and what hurtfull vnto them: and in this ſenſe wee denie not, but that the proper obiect of the will, namely in naturall and ciuill matters, is to couet good, or at the leaſt, which appeare ſo to be: But yet concerning things morally good, that is, vertuous and godly acts, the will of man hath no inclination thereunto naturally, but is prone to euill onely: Neither is the will deceiued in taking vice for vertue, and following euill, in the name of good. Some indeede may pretend ſome naturall or ciuill good, as profit, or pleaſure, but not that which is morally, that is verily & truly good: As he that ſtealeth, is perſwaded it is for his profit, which is a ciuill good; but he cannot think, that therein he doth iuſtly, which is the morall good. An adulterer propoundeth to himſelfe pleaſure in that ſinne: but he doth not ſo much as imagine, that hee can be chaſt in committing adulterie, which is the morall vertue. Wherefore wee doubt not to conclude, both that mans freewill naturally hath no inclination to that which is truly good. And againe, Malum, etiam ſub ratione mali, proprium obiectum voluntatis eſſe: That euill, that is, ſinne, euen as it ſinne, is the proper obiect of the will, by reaſon of the corruption of nature.

Argum. 1. That the wicked are naturally inclined to euill, euen as it is euill, the Scripture teacheth vs: It is a paſtime to a foole to doe wickedly, Prou. 10.23. A foole maketh a mocke of ſin, Prou. 14.9. The wicked perſon is not deceiued in taking vice for vertue, but doth naturally as verily loue vice, as by grace the righteous embraceth vertue: Woe vnto them (ſaith the Prophet) that ſpeake good of euill, and euill of good, which put darknes for light, and light for darknes, Iſai. 5.20. The Prophet cryeth not out againſt thoſe, which ſinne of ignorance and ſimplicitie, taking euill for good: but againſt ſuch, which doe ſinne of malice, and willingly and wittingly commend euill, euen becauſe it is euill, and hate that is good, for the goodnes ſake; Which draw iniquitie with cordes of vanitie: but if they were ſeduced by error in taking one thing for another, they ſhould be led themſelues, and drawne into ſinne: but now the Prophet ſaith, They doe hale and draw ſin to themſelues, as with cart-ropes.

Argum. 2. Auguſtine in his booke of Confeſſions, is not aſhamed to confeſſe how that he was accuſtomed to ſteale apples in his childhood and yonger yeeres, when as he both might haue had better at home, and hauing ſtolen them, he caſt them to the hogges: ſo that (ſaith hee) whereas theeues, adulterers, and the like, doe propound to themſelues in their euill doing, ſome end or other: Ego nihil hîc amaui præter furtum: I loued nothing elſe but theft it ſelfe, lib. confeſſ. 2. cap. 4. For Auguſtine neither did it for pleaſure, for he had better fruite at home; nor for profit, for hee caſt them to the ſwine. Wherefore ſinne, euen as it is ſinne, is naturally the obiect of the will.

Likewiſe the diuell loueth euill becauſe it is euill: the wicked hate and deteſt God, who is good: Ergo, the will may both deſire that which is euill, and hate and deteſt that which is good.

1. Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, Auguſtine in his theft loued the ſinne, but vnder the ſhew of ſome delectable good, becauſe hee reioyced to deceiue his neighbour with the reſt of his companions.
2. Secondly, the diuell loueth our ſinne, but vnder the ſhew of ſome good to himſelfe, thinking it
3. profitable to himſelfe, that many periſh. Thirdly, the wicked hate God, but vnder the ſhew or colour of euill, becauſe they hold him a ſeuere Iudge, Bellarm. cap. 12. reſp. ad 2.4 argum.

1. Contra. Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, Nihil amaui: I loued nothing but the theft it ſelfe. He could beſt expreſſe his owne meaning, wherefore hee ſimply loued and deſired that which was euill: if hee made a ſport to deceiue his neighbours, this was no morall good thing, but a carnall and ſenſuall delight onely: and ſo wee denie not, but euen in ſinne there is a ſhew of ſenſuall delight and pleaſure, but not of any morall or true vertue.

2. Secondly: Firſt, the diuell procureth our euill, not for hope of any eaſe to himſelfe, for hee is paſt all hope of eaſe or releaſe, but to doe vs hurt. It is ſaid, that death came into the world thorough the enuie of the diuell vnto vs, Wiſd. 2.24. not through ſelfeloue to himſelfe. Secondly, this were to extenuate the malice of Sathan, as though he ſought not our deſtruction ſo much to doe vs hurt, as to benefit himſelfe. Thirdly, this good which Sathan is ſaid to ayme at, is not any morall good, or true vertue, but a malitious and Sathanicall delight. Fourthly, but if in our euill Sathan pretend good, what good can he imagine in his owne deſperate ſinne? The Scripture ſaith, he is a lyar, and the father thereof, Ioh. 8.44. Then as the father in his childe, ſo he delighteth in ſin as his owne, and deſireth it, euen as it is euill.

3. Thirdly: firſt, the wickedeſt man, that liueth, is by nature perſwaded, that God is good, and therefore cannot hate him, as euill: but their wicked nature abhorreth God, as good. So the Scripture ture ſaith,that *the iuſt man is an abomination to the wicked,*Prou.29.27.he hateth him for his vertue ſake: And the Lord himſelfe thus ſaith to the wicked: Is thine eye euill, becauſe I am good? Mat.20. verſ.15.Here goodnes it ſelfe is hated of the wicked.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Homo niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: Man cannot deſire that is good, vnleſſe it be giuen him: de vocat. Gent.lib.2.cap.9. Nulla ſpecies cuiuſquam virtutis occurrit, quæ ſine dono diuinæ gratiæ,&c. There is no ſhew of any vertue occurrent,which is deſired without the gift of the diuine grace,*ibid.*Therfore morall goodnes is not the proper obiect of the will by nature.

Peter Lombard: Eſt libertas non vera,&c. There is a libertie not good to doe euill, when reaſon diſſenteth from the will,iudging that not to be done, which the will deſireth: lib.2.diſt.25.liter.k. How can that ſeeme good to the will,which reaſon iudgeth to be euill?

Guiliel.Ockam(one of their ſchoolemen) affirmeth with vs,that the wil may be carried to deſire euill, *ſub ratione mali,*as it is euill: in lib.3.ſenten.qu.13.diſt.3.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE END IT SELFE be the obiect of the will, and whence the will is moued to deſire the end.

The Papiſts.

33.Error. FIrſt,Bellarmine affirmeth,that the end,as eternall life, is not properly the obiect of the will,but the meanes tending to the end. His beſt reaſon is out of Ariſtotle his Ethikes,lib.3.cap.2. No man conſulteth to be happie,but of the meanes how he may be happie.

34.Error. Secondly,the loue or deſire to the end(he ſaith)is a naturall act of the will,not infuſed or inſpired of God,but naturally imprinted in the will. His reaſon is this, becauſe if this deſire be an act of the will,then it muſt proceede actiuely: but if it ſhould be inſpired or added beſide the naturall inclination,it ſhould be paſſiue:Bellarm.lib.3.de grat.cap.14.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, 1. We ſay that the end is the firſt and chiefeſt thing in the deſire and intention. 2. There is difference betweene the deſire and deliberation, betweene will and counſell. Conſultation is of the meanes to effect that which the will intendeth, or deſireth: and ſo your Philoſopher is to bee vnderſtoode. 3. The Scripture teſtifieth with vs: Saint Paul ſaith, *I deſire to be diſſolued,and to be with Chriſt,*Philip.1.23.which is beſt of all. What is the end,but that, which is beſt of all,to be with Chriſt,which here is the obiect of the Apoſtles deſire? Your owne Scripture alſo ſaith,Eccleſiaſtic.15.14. Before man is life and death,good and euill,what him liketh ſhall be giuen him. Life and death are ſet before man, as the obiect of his will: which are the very ends themſelues. 4. We reade in the Goſpell,how Thomas ſaid vnto our Sauiour, Ioh.14.5. We know not whither thou goeſt,how then can we know the way? We ſee then, that firſt the end is to be knowne and deſired, and then the way. Our Sauiour anſwereth, I am the way,the truth,and the life: whereby is ſignified, that Chriſt is to be deſired,not onely as the way,but as the end, which is life. As Ambroſe vpon theſe words, *Sequimur te Domine, ſed vt ſequamur accerſi,&c.*We follow thee Lord, but fetch vs,that wee may follow thee: no man doth aſcend without thee,thou art the way,the truth,the life, the poſſibilitie,faith,reward: de bon.mort.c.12. Chriſt then is to be followed,as the way and the life,as both the truth, and faith, and reward.

Secondly, 1. The will is actiue in reſpect of his proper obiect: but it is paſſiue, as it is moued and ſtirred of God. 2. The Scripture is euident, that the deſire of comming to, and being with Chriſt,both of the way and end,is not naturall,but aboue nature, from God. Iohn 6.44. No man commeth to me,vnleſſe the father draw him: The loue of Chriſts appearing is rewarded with a crowne of glorie,2.Tim.4.8.but no naturall gift is ſo rewarded. 3. Saint Ambroſe: Nulla ſpecies cuiuſquam virtutis occurrit,quæ ſine dono diuinæ gratiæ habetur: There is no ſhew of any vertue, which is had or deſired without the gift of the heauenly grace: Ergo, the end, which is ſaluation, which is not without a ſhew of vertue, is not deſired without grace. 4. Capreolus(one of their ſchoolemen) thinketh,that this deſire of the will is wrought onely by God,and is altogether paſſiue in that reſpect: in 2.ſent.diſt.24.qu.1.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE QVALITIE AND condition of freewill,whether it be actiue or paſſiue.

The Papiſts.

35.Error. BEllarmine affirmeth,that the will of man is neither paſſiue onely, nor partly actiue,and partly paſſiue: ſed ſimpliciter & abſolutè actiuum: but ſimply and abſolutely actiue. Of the ſame opinion are diuers of the Schoolemen,as *Thomas Aquinas,Scotus,Henricus,Capreolus,Ferrarienſ.*as they are cited and alleaged by Bellarmine,lib.3.de grat.cap.10.

Argum. If freewill ſhould be paſſiue, and not actiue, that is, if it be not a perpetuall agent and working cauſe, but ſhould it ſelfe ſuffer, and receiue, and be wrought vpon by other cauſes: then can it not be free, for it is not in the power of the patient, or of that which ſuffereth, to doe this, or that, but in the power of the agent, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee graunt, that in what things ſoeuer the will of man naturally is free, there it worketh freely, and ſo actiuely, as namely in all euill actions: But vnto good things, it hath naturally no freedome at all, but is made free onely by grace: and therefore we denie, that in this caſe, it is either free by nature, or of any actiue power. Secondly, not onely grace worketh vpon the will of man, but naturally alſo the vnderſtanding moueth the will actiuely, vnleſſe (contrarie to nature) the will rebell againſt the reaſon and vnderſtanding.

The Proteſtants.

THe will of man we cannot abſolutely determine to be either actiue or paſſiue in working: for as the obiect of the will is, and the thing that is willed, ſo is the will it ſelfe affected: for in euery thing which is willed, or deſired, wee are to reſpect two things: the generall power of willing and deſiring, without any reſpect vnto good, or euill; and the qualitie of the obiect, the goodnes, or euilnes thereof. If we conſider the generall power, whereby we thinke, wee will, we deſire this, or that; ſo is the will of man free and actiue, whether it be good or euill, that is ſo willed: if we reſpect the qualitie of the obiect, as if it be euill, which is deſired, here alſo is the will of man both free, and actiue: But if it be good, the will is onely paſſiue: it hath no naturall inclination vnto good things, vnleſſe it be drawne by the ſpirit of God working in vs. So then, velle in nobis eſt, to will is in our owne power, bene velle à Deo, to will as we ſhould, is of God.

Argum. Iohn 8.36. If the Sonne make you free, then are you free indeed. Philip.2.13. It is God, which worketh in you both the will, and the deede. The will of man then in good things worketh not, but is wrought; it maketh not it ſelfe free, but is made free: Ergo, it is not in this caſe actiue, but onely paſſiue, receiuing power from another cauſe.

Auguſtine ſaith: Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem: The will of man doth not by the freeneſſe therof obtaine grace, but by grace obtaineth freedome: *de correption.& grat.cap.*8. The freedome then of the will, is the worke and effect of grace: Ergo, it is paſſiue, for the effect, or the thing wrought or cauſed, doth ſuffer in reſpect of the efficient and working cauſe.

Petrus Lombard compareth freewill to the ground, grace vnto raine: Terræ mentis noſtræ, i. libero arbitrio voluntatis, infunditur pluuia diuinæ benedictionis: The raine of the heauenly bleſſing is infuſed into the ground of the minde, that is, freewill: But the earth in reſpect of the raine that falleth, is paſſiue, and not actiue.

Eſpenc.in 2.ad Timoth.p.40.b. Paſſiua promiſſi expectatio hominum eſt: The paſſiue expectation of the promiſe is of men. Faith then, which is the act of the will and vnderſtanding, is paſſiue.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE VNDERſtanding or intelligence doe worke actiuely vpon the will of man.

The Papiſts.

36.Error. BEllarmine to maintaine his owne conceite, that the will of man is onely actiue, not paſſiue, doubteth not to denie, voluntatem moueri à ratione, that the will is moued by reaſon: or that the intelligent part doth actum voluntatis effectiue producere, produce and effect the act of the will: *lib.3.de grat.cap.*10.

Argum. The intelligent part worketh neceſſarily, or is a neceſſary cauſe, then it would follow, that to will is neceſſarie, not free, if the vnderſtanding moue the will neceſſarily, as it doth: Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the vnderſtanding doth not alwaies worke neceſſarily: for the will and deſire many times rebelleth againſt reaſon, and is not alwaies moued or perſwaded by the vnderſtanding. Secondly, though it ſhould worke neceſſarily, yet the will may retaine the freedome ſtill: for not neceſſitie, but coaction and compulſion take away libertie: as grace worketh neceſſarily vpon the will, that is, ſurely effectually, yet grace taketh not away freewill.

The Proteſtants.

THat the vnderſtanding or intelligent part mooueth the will of man actiuely, it is euident.

Argum. That which is the life of man is the agent and actiue worker in mans will: for all actions proceede from the life: but the reaſon and vnderſtanding is the life, becauſe it is the light: for the life is the light of man, Iohn 1.4. Ergo.

Againe, that wherein Gods image properly conſiſteth, is the chiefe agent and mouer: but the image of God is in the minde the ſeate of knowledge: and the renewing of the minde is in knowledge after the image of him, that created him, Coloſſ.3.10. Ergo, the vnderſtanding is the mouer of the will.

Auguſtine reſembleth the vnderſtanding to the man, the will to the woman: Mulier dicitur mater viuorum, id eſt, animalis pars eſt mater rectè factorum, cum conuerſa fuerit ad mentem: The woman is ſaid to be the mother of all liuing, that is, the naturall or ſenſuall part, is the mother of all good acts, being conuerted to the ſoule: lib.2.de Geneſ.cap.21. The minde then worketh actiuely vpon the will, which is the ſenſuall part.

Diuers of the Schoolemen hold the will to be paſſiue in reſpect of the vnderſtanding that moueth it, though it be actiue in reſpect of the obiect which is wiſhed or deſired: ſic Gabriel.in 2.ſent. diſt.25.qu.vnic. Petrus Paludan.in 4.ſent.diſt.49.qu.3.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE ſubiect of freewill.

The Papiſts.

37.Error. B*Ellarmine* affirmeth, that freewill is incident onely to reaſonable creatures, which no man denieth, and hee confeſſeth that there is freewill in God and in the Angels: and to this purpoſe alleageth theſe places, Pſalm.135.6. Whatſoeuer pleaſed the Lord, that did he in heauen and earth. Epheſ.1.11. Which worketh all things, according to the counſell of his owne will: cap.16. Hence hee concludeth, that the will of God is moſt free not onely from coaction and compulſion, but from all kind of neceſſitie: and he blameth Bucer and Caluin for aſcribing a neceſſitie to the will or works of God: lib.3.de grat.cap.15.16.

Anſw. Firſt, wee willingly affirme, that Gods will worketh moſt freely, that is, without any conſtraint, and this out of theſe places is concluded, but not that Gods will is free from all neceſſitie: for it is neceſſary that God ſhould not will any thing that is euill. Secondly, Bellarmine alloweth Lombards definition of freewill: Liberum eſt ad vtrumlibet: It is free to either part, cap.5. And in the ſame place he proueth, that it is not ſufficient for the will to be free from coaction, but from neceſſitie alſo: then it muſt follow in their ſenſe, that Gods will muſt be free to either part, both to good and euill, which were blaſphemie to affirme.

The Proteſtants.

WE neither tie God to a fatall neceſſitie, as the Heathen Philoſophers did: neither doe wee affirme, as he ſlaundereth Caluin to ſay, that God can doe no more, than he doth: for as Iohn ſaith, he could of ſtones raiſe vp children to Abraham, Matth.3. Neither doe wee denie, that God hath a freewill, but not ſuch a freewill as the Papiſts define: which is free to either part, free both from coaction, and from all neceſſitie: free to good and euill.

Argum. That which is impoſſible to God is neceſſarie, It is impoſſible for God to lye, Hebr.6.18. Ergo, it is neceſſarie that he ſhould not lye. That which God doth not, neither can doe, hee willeth not: God tempteth no man to euill, Iam.1.13. he neither doth nor can: Ergo, his will here is not libera ad vtrumlibet, free vnto each part. From this neceſſitie of not willing or doing euill, Gods will then is not free. Wherefore let them chuſe which they will, that either God hath no freewill, or that freewill is not free from neceſſitie, though it be from compulſion or coaction.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si illa definitur neceſſitas, &c. If we define that to be neceſſitie, as when wee ſay it is neceſſarie, that this thing ſhould be ſo, we neede not feare leaſt this neceſſitie ſhould take away the freedome of will: for neither doe we put Gods foreknowlege vnder neceſſitie, when we ſay, it is neceſſarie God ſhould know all things afore: lib.5.de ciuitat.Dei cap.10. Auguſtine denieth not, but that there is a kinde of neceſſitie in God; a neceſſitie determined, not conſtrained; implied, not enforced. So the fathers, when they exclude neceſſitie from God, they meane a fatall and preſcribed or naturall neceſſitie, not otherwiſe: as Gregor.Nyſſen.lib.de fat.cap.vlt. Omnipotens neq; natura neceſſitate, neque legis praſcripto operatur: The Omnipotent worketh neither by neceſſitie of nature, nor preſcript of law. Ambr.Operatur pro libero voluntatis arbitrio, non pro neceſſitatis obſequio: He worketh according to the freedome of will, not thraldome of neceſſitie.

Pet.Lombard. in the ſame ſenſe ſaith: Deus non neceſſitate, ſed libera voluntate omnia facit, &c. God not of neceſſitie, but of his freewill worketh all things. By neceſſitie hee vnderſtandeth coaction. Liberum arbitrium dicitur, quia ſine coactione & neceſſitate: It is called freewill, becauſe without coaction and neceſſitie it willeth: lib.2.diſt.25. Wherefore ſeeing God truly hath freewill, and the elect Angels haue freewill; as in the ſame place Lombar. Multo liberius erit arbitrium, quod non poteſt ſeruire peccato; Will ſhall be much more free, when it cannot ſerue ſinne: It followeth, that neceſſitie onely, where no coaction or compulſion is, doth not take away the libertie and freedome of the will.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE power of freewill.

THere are three kindes of humane actions: Some are naturall, and ciuill,as to walke,to ſit,to ſow,to plant,to make warre & ſuch like: Some are moral,ſuch are the actions which appertaine to vertue,or vice; as to giue almes,to liue chaſtly,contrarie to the which are theſe,to ſteale, to commit adulterie; with the like: Some are diuine and ſupernaturall,as to beleeue,to hope,to loue,&c. This queſtion then hath according to this diuiſion three parts: firſt, of the power of freewill in naturall and ciuill actions: ſecondly,in morall: thirdly,in diuine and ſupernaturall.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POWER of freewill in naturall things.

THis part of the queſtion is diuided into other particulars: as firſt, whether the deitie and power of God may be knowne by the light of nature. Secondly,whether man haue freewill in naturall things.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER THE GODhead may be knowne by the light of nature.

The Papiſts.

38.Error. BEllarmine not contented with Caluine his iudgement of this matter,who graunteth that by the light of nature generally the Godhead may be knowne,addeth further,Verum & vnum deum naturaliter poſſe cognoſci,& non ſolum deum in communi,&c. That the true and onely God naturally may be knowne,and not onely after a common and generall manner. And likewiſe hee ſaith yet furthermore,that to this naturall knowledge and demonſtration of God, a man may nullo labore aſſentiri, giue his aſſent without any labour,and neede not,*auxilio gratiæ ſpeciali,*any ſpeciall helpe or aſsiſtance of grace thereunto,Bellarm.lib.4.de grat.cap.2.

Argum. S.Paul ſaith,that the Gentiles euen *by the light of nature might haue groped after God,and found him,*Act.17.28. The knowledge of God is ſo eaſie, and readie at hand, to be found euen in the creatures,as a thing that may be groped,and felt. Alſo the ſame Apoſtle ſaith,*that the inuiſible things of God,as his power, eternitie, are ſeene by the creation of the world: Ergo,*God is knowne by his creatures,to be iuſt,good,almightie,&c.Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Theſe places proue a generall and confuſed knowledge of God by the creatures,which we graunt,but ſuch a particular, and manifeſt light of knowledge,which the Ieſuite ſtriueth for, they prooue not: they might (ſaith the Apoſtle) haue groped after God: but men vſe to grope and feele in the night, and in the darke: and this naturall light ſerueth onely to make men without excuſe.Rom.1.20.*Ad hoc,*ſaith the Apoſtle,vt ſint ipſi inexcuſabiles: It cannot bring them to any cleere,or perfect knowledge of God. So we reade in the booke of *Iob: All men ſee it,and behold it a farre off,*Iob.36.25,that is, the light of nature is but a dimme and obſcure light,as when a man beholdeth a thing a farre off.

The Proteſtants.

I Marueile much,that the Ieſuite here dealeth againſt vs, as enemies to the light of nature; ſeeing they themſelues,if they be conſtant in their doctrine, and agree in iudgement one with an other,in this matter haue been more ſtraite-laced, than we. This queſtion is at large diſcourſed betweene D.Harding, and that reuerend learned father Biſhop Iewel: who hauing affirmed, That men,euen by the light of nature,though they are not able to be led thereby to the perfection of faith,yet may diſcerne oftentimes betweene truth and falſehood in religion. Harding thereupon openeth his mouth wide,and crieth aloude,This is his heatheniſh heart,what could Porphyrie,or Iulian,or Celſus ſay more? Defenſ.Apol. pag.42. But Biſhop Iewel in defence of the light of nature,alleageth that place of the Apoſtle, Rom.1.20. which the Ieſuite obiected, *How that the power of God is knowne by the creatures: And the Heathen, that haue not the law, yet by nature know the things,that pertaine to the law,*Rom.2.14. Hee alſo citeth the teſtimonie of Hierome to the ſame purpoſe: Homo naturaliter poteſt ſcire de Deo, & quod ſit,& quod iuſtus ſit: Man may naturally know of God,both that he is,and that he is iuſt.

This then is our opinion,that by the light of nature it may be knowne,both that God is,and that he is almightie,iuſt,eternall,&c. For otherwiſe he ſhould not be knowne to be God: See the iudgement of Beza.annot.Rom.1.20. With what face then can the Ieſuite open his mouth againſt vs,as though we condemned the light of nature,and knowledge of the creatures?

But ſuch a naturall knowledge,that is,a particular,ſpeciall,manifeſt,direct knowledge of God, which the Ieſuite vrgeth, we cannot approue, nor yet that a man, without ſpeciall grace, can giue his aſſent vnto ſuch naturall knowledge, and come to know his Creator thereby.

Argum. 1. Firſt, that the light of nature is not ſo full, cleare, and perfect, that it is able to bring vs to the true knowledge of God, we learne out of the Scripture: Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, No man commeth to the Father but by me, Iohn chap. 14. verſ. 6. The true knowledge of God is not reuealed vnto vs, but by Chriſt: the light of nature leadeth vs not to Chriſt, therefore not to the true knowledge of God.

Argum. 2. Secondly, that man of himſelfe, without Gods ſpeciall gift, cannot make vſe of this naturall knowledge of God, and ſubſcribe to the ſame, and giue aſſent in his heart, it is cleare alſo out of the word of God: he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not, Ioh. 1. 10.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. This place is vnderſtood of the ſonne of God the ſecond perſon of the Trinitie: which myſterie of the Trinitie, we graunt, cannot be knowne by the light of nature, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. The Euangeliſt ſpeaketh here of the creation of the world: The world was made by him: and yet they knew not their Creator: this notwithſtanding is a point of naturall knowledge, to confeſſe God to be the Creator and Gouernour of the world: for the power of God is ſeene by the creation of the world, Rom. 1. 20.

Bellarm. 2. The light appeared in darkneſſe, that is, the wiſedome of God is ſeene euen in the ſenſeleſſe creatures, as in trees and ſtones, which are called darkeneſſe, becauſe they want reaſon: and therefore it is true of theſe creatures, that they comprehended not the light.

Contra. The Euangeliſt in very direct tearmes ſpeaketh of that light of nature, which is in men, verſ. 4. The life was the light of men, and This is the true light that lightenth euery man that commeth into the world, verſ. 9. The Ieſuite then doth ſhamefully abuſe this place, in applying it vnto vnreaſonable creatures.

Bellarm. 3. Laſt of all, the Ieſuite thus playeth the interpreter, by the darkneſſe we vnderſtand, Homines ignorantes, & peccatores, ſinfull and ignorant men, which perceiued not this light, not becauſe they could not, but becauſe they would not.

Contra. Neither can this expoſition hold: for the Euangeliſt ſheweth the condition of all men, what they are by nature, euen full of darkeneſſe and ignorance, as it may appeare by comparing the ninth verſe, This is the light, that lightneth euery man: he meaneth then not ſome, but all. Secondly, not to comprehend, noteth a want of power, not of will; as to comprehend, ſheweth a preſence of abilitie or power: That ye may be able to comprehend, Epheſ. chap. 3. verſ. 18. vt poſſitis, ſaith the Apoſtle, that ye may; not, vt velitis, that you will. Laſtly, we graunt alſo that it is true, noluerunt comprehendere, they would not comprehend: but that is not all: for the Euangeliſt declareth two things, wherein the miſerable ſtate of man by nature is ſeene; both that men are vnable though they would to comprehend, and vnwilling though they could, to receiue the light: for the firſt, hee ſaith, οὐ κατέλαβεν, non comprehenderunt, They comprehended not, that is, they could not, verſ. 5. and for the other, οὐ παρέλαβον, non receperunt, they receiued not, that is, they would not, verſ. 11. As not to comprehend ſheweth a defect of power; ſo not to receiue, importeth a want of will. Thus, notwithſtanding this ſmoake and miſte, which the Ieſuite rayſeth, this place remaineth cleere both againſt the ſufficiencie of natural light in it ſelfe, and the voluntary aſſenting thereunto on mans behalfe.

Auguſtine thus writeth vpon theſe wordes in the Goſpell: No man knoweth the Sonne, but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom the Sonne will reueale him, Matthew 11. 27. Which muſt not be ſo vnderſtood, as though no man knew the Sonne but the Father; but the Father was both knowne of the Sonne, and of thoſe to whom the Sonne reuealeth him, becauſe it is not ſayd of the Father concerning his Sonne, To whom the Father will reueale him: as it is ſaid of the Sonne, concerning the Father, To whom the Sonne ſhall reueale him: then it followeth, Sic potius dictum eſt, vt intelligamus, & patrem & ipſum filium per filium reuelari, quia ipſe eſt mentis noſtræ lumen: But it is ſet downe in this maner, that we ſhould vnderſtand, that both the Father and the Sonne are reuealed by the Sonne, becauſe he is the light of our mindes: Auguſtin. ſerm. 48. We ſee then that God is knowne onely by Chriſt, he is ſhadowed forth in the creatures, rather then knowne: And that Chriſt is that naturall light whereby euery man is lightned comming into the world; that is, the light of nature, is to ſmall vſe or purpoſe, but to thoſe that receiue grace by Chriſt.

Eſpenc. a learned popiſh writer, vrgeth that place of S. Paul to this purpoſe, 2. Timoth. 2. 7. The Lord giue thee vnderſtanding in all thinges. In omnibus humanis rebus ſcilicet, maximis & minimis: in all humane matters great and ſmall. And he further thus alleageth out of Lactantius; Falſum intelligere ſapientia eſt, ſed humana, &c. To vnderſtand that is falſe, is a point of wiſedome, but humane; beyond this degree man cannot proceed: to know the trueth is a point of diuine wiſedom,

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE power of freewill.

THere are three kindes of humane actions: Some are naturall, and ciuill,as to walke,to ſit,to ſow,to plant,to make warre & ſuch like: Some are moral,ſuch are the actions which appertaine to vertue,or vice; as to giue almes,to liue chaſtly,contrarie to the which are theſe,to ſteale, to commit adulterie; with the like: Some are diuine and ſupernaturall,as to beleeue,to hope, to loue,&c. This queſtion then hath according to this diuiſion three parts: firſt, of the power of freewill in naturall and ciuill actions: ſecondly,in morall: thirdly,in diuine and ſupernaturall.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE POWER of freewill in naturall things.

THis part of the queſtion is diuided into other particulars: as firſt, whether the deitie and power of God may be knowne by the light of nature. Secondly,whether man haue freewill in naturall things.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER THE GODhead may be knowne by the light of nature.

The Papiſts.

38.Error. B*Ellarmine* not contented with Caluine his iudgement of this matter,who graunteth that by the light of nature generally the Godhead may be knowne,addeth further,Verum & vnum deum naturaliter poſſe cognoſci,& non ſolum deum in communi,&c. That the true and onely God naturally may be knowne,and not onely after a common and generall manner. And likewiſe hee ſaith yet furthermore,that to this naturall knowledge and demonſtration of God, a man may nullo labore aſſentiri, giue his aſſent without any labour,and neede not,*auxilio gratiæ ſpeciali,*any ſpeciall helpe or aſsiſtance of grace thereunto,Bellarm.lib.4.de grat.cap.2.

Argum. S.Paul ſaith,that the Gentiles euen *by the light of nature might haue groped after God,and found him,*Act.17.28. The knowledge of God is ſo eaſie, and readie at hand, to be found euen in the creatures,as a thing that may be groped,and felt. Alſo the ſame Apoſtle ſaith,*that the inuiſible things of God,as his power, eternitie, are ſeene by the creation of the world: Ergo,*God is knowne by his creatures,to be iuſt,good,almightie,&c.Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Theſe places proue a generall and confuſed knowledge of God by the creatures,which we graunt,but ſuch a particular, and manifeſt light of knowledge,which the Ieſuite ſtriueth for, they prooue not: they might (ſaith the Apoſtle) haue groped after God: but men vſe to grope and feele in the night, and in the darke: and this naturall light ſerueth onely to make men without excuſe.Rom.1.20.*Ad hoc,*ſaith the Apoſtle,vt ſint ipſi inexcuſabiles: It cannot bring them to any cleere,or perfect knowledge of God. So we reade in the booke of *Iob: All men ſee it,and behold it a farre off,*Iob.36.25.that is, the light of nature is but a dimme and obſcure light,as when a man beholdeth a thing a farre off.

The Proteſtants.

I Marueile much,that the Ieſuite here dealeth againſt vs, as enemies to the light of nature; ſeeing they themſelues,if they be conſtant in their doctrine, and agree in iudgement one with another,in this matter haue been more ſtraite-laced, than we. This queſtion is at large diſcourſed betweene D.Harding, and that reuerend learned father Biſhop Iewel: who hauing affirmed, That men,euen by the light of nature,though they are not able to be led thereby to the perfection of faith,yet may diſcerne oftentimes betweene truth and falſehood in religion. Harding thereupon openeth his mouth wide,and crieth aloude,This is his heatheniſh heart,what could Porphyrie,or Iulian, or Celſus ſay more? Defenſ.Apol. pag.42. But Biſhop Iewel in defence of the light of nature,alleageth that place of the Apoſtle, Rom.1.20. which the Ieſuite obiected, *How that the power of God is knowne by the creatures: And the Heathen, that haue not the law, yet by nature know the things,that pertaine to the law,*Rom.2.14. Hee alſo citeth the teſtimonie of Hierome to the ſame purpoſe: Homo naturaliter poteſt ſcire de Deo, & quod ſit,& quod iuſtus ſit: Man may naturally know of God,both that he is,and that he is iuſt.

This then is our opinion,that by the light of nature it may be knowne,both that God is,and that he is almightie,iuſt,eternall,&c. For otherwiſe he ſhould not be knowne to be God: See the iudgement of *Beza.annot.Rom.*1.20. With what face then can the Ieſuite open his mouth againſt vs,as though we condemned the light of nature,and knowledge of the creatures?

But ſuch a naturall knowledge,that is,a particular,ſpeciall,manifeſt,direct knowledge of God, which the Ieſuite vrgeth, we cannot approue, nor yet that a man, without ſpeciall grace, can giue his aſſent vnto ſuch naturall knowledge, and come to know his Creator thereby.

Argum. 1. Firſt, that the light of nature is not ſo full, cleare, and perfect, that it is able to bring vs to the true knowledge of God, we learne out of the Scripture: Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, No man commeth to the Father but by me, Iohn chap. 14. verſ. 6. The true knowledge of God is not reuealed vnto vs, but by Chriſt: the light of nature leadeth vs not to Chriſt, therefore not to the true knowledge of God.

Argum. 2. Secondly, that man of himſelfe, without Gods ſpeciall gift, cannot make vſe of this naturall knowledge of God, and ſubſcribe to the ſame, and giue aſſent in his heart, it is cleare alſo out of the word of God: he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not, Ioh. 1. 10.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. This place is vnderſtood of the ſonne of God the ſecond perſon of the Trinitie: which myſterie of the Trinitie, we graunt, cannot be knowne by the light of nature, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. The Euangeliſt ſpeaketh here of the creation of the world: The world was made by him: and yet they knew not their Creator: this notwithſtanding is a point of naturall knowledge, to confeſſe God to be the Creator and Gouernour of the world: for the power of God is ſeene by the creation of the world, Rom. 1. 20.

Bellarm. 2. The light appeared in darkneſſe, that is, the wiſedome of God is ſeene euen in the ſenſeleſſe creatures, as in trees and ſtones, which are called darkeneſſe, becauſe they want reaſon: and therefore it is true of theſe creatures, that they comprehended not the light.

Contra. The Euangeliſt in very direct tearmes ſpeaketh of that light of nature, which is in men, verſ. 4. The life was the light of men, and This is the true light that lightenth euery man that commeth into the world, verſ. 9. The Ieſuite then doth ſhamefully abuſe this place, in applying it vnto vnreaſonable creatures.

Bellarm. 3. Laſt of all, the Ieſuite thus playeth the interpreter, by the darkneſſe we vnderſtand, Homines ignorantes, & peccatores, ſinfull and ignorant men, which perceiued not this light, not becauſe they could not, but becauſe they would not.

Contra. Neither can this expoſition hold: for the Euangeliſt ſheweth the condition of all men, what they are by nature, euen full of darkeneſſe and ignorance, as it may appeare by comparing the ninth verſe, This is the light, that lightneth euery man: he meaneth then not ſome, but all. Secondly, not to comprehend, noteth a want of power, not of will; as to comprehend, ſheweth a preſence of abilitie or power: That ye may be able to comprehend, Epheſ. chap. 3. verſ. 18. vt poſſitis, ſaith the Apoſtle, that ye may; not, vt velitis, that you will. Laſtly, we graunt alſo that it is true, noluerunt comprehendere, they would not comprehend: but that is not all: for the Euangeliſt declareth two things, wherein the miſerable ſtate of man by nature is ſeene; both that men are vnable though they would to comprehend, and vnwilling though they could, to receiue the light: for the firſt, hee ſaith, οὐ κατέλαβεν, non comprehenderunt, They comprehended not, that is, they could not, verſ. 5. and for the other, οὐ παρέλαβον, non receperunt, they receiued not, that is, they would not, verſ. 11. As not to comprehend ſheweth a defect of power; ſo not to receiue, importeth a want of will. Thus, notwithſtanding this ſmoake and miſte, which the Ieſuite rayſeth, this place remaineth cleere both againſt the ſufficiencie of natural light in it ſelfe, and the voluntary aſſenting thereunto on mans behalfe.

Auguſtine thus writeth vpon theſe wordes in the Goſpell: No man knoweth the Sonne, but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom the Sonne will reueale him, Matthew 11. 27. Which muſt not be ſo vnderſtood, as though no man knew the Sonne but the Father; but the Father was both knowne of the Sonne, and of thoſe to whom the Sonne reuealeth him, becauſe it is not ſayd of the Father concerning his Sonne, To whom the Father will reueale him: as it is ſaid of the Sonne, concerning the Father, To whom the Sonne ſhall reueale him: then it followeth, Sic potius dictum eſt, vt intelligamus, & patrem & ipſum filium per filium reuelari, quia ipſe eſt mentis noſtræ lumen: But it is ſet downe in this maner, that we ſhould vnderſtand, that both the Father and the Sonne are reuealed by the Sonne, becauſe he is the light of our mindes: Auguſtin. ſerm. 48. We ſee then that God is knowne onely by Chriſt, he is ſhadowed forth in the creatures, rather then knowne: And that Chriſt is that naturall light whereby euery man is lightned comming into the world; that is, the light of nature, is to ſmall vſe or purpoſe, but to thoſe that receiue grace by Chriſt.

Eſpenc. a learned popiſh writer, vrgeth that place of S. Paul to this purpoſe, 2. Timoth. 2. 7. The Lord giue thee vnderſtanding in all thinges. In omnibus humanis rebus ſcilicet, maximis & minimis: In all humane matters great and ſmall. And he further thus alleageth out of Lactantius; Falſum intelligere ſapientia eſt, ſed humana, &c. To vnderſtand that is falſe, is a point of wiſedome, but humane; beyond this degree man cannot proceed: to know the trueth is a point of diuine wiſedom, to the which a man cannot attaine of himſelfe, vnleſſe he be taught. The Philoſophers attained that which was the higheſt point of humane wiſedome, to vndeaſtand, what God was not, but yet attained not to ſay, what God was: ex citat. Eſpenc. comment. in 2. Timoth. p.26. liter. f. Wherefore the knowledge of nature concerning God, is obſcure, doubtfull, imperfect, not able to giue direction to the mind, without inſtinct of grace.

THE SECOND POINT, WHETHER MAN HAVE freewill in ciuill and naturall things.

The Papiſts.

39.Error. THis the Ieſuite affirmeth, and it is the common opinion of that ſide, that in naturall and ciuill actions man hath a free and abſolute will, whether to good or euill, they reaſon thus:

Argum. 1. It is in mans power to do ſome things, which he doth not, and againe to leaue ſome things vndone in ciuill matters, which he doth: Ergo, there is freewill in ſuch things: God ſaith to Salomon, Becauſe thou haſt asked wiſedome, and haſt not asked long life, &c. 1. King. 3. 11. So Peter ſaith to Ananias, After it was ſold, was it not in thine owne power? Act. 5. 4. Here we ſee Salomon might haue done that which hee did not, that is, asked riches, and long life, and not wiſedome: and Ananias might haue left that vndone which he did, as to haue ſold his poſſeſsions, and to bring the money to the Apoſtles: Bellarm. lib. 4. de grat. cap. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, though in ciuill indifferent matters to will and purpoſe, be in mans power, yet to doe or not to doe, to execute what he hath purpoſed, is not ſo in his power: for the Wiſeman maketh a manifeſt difference betweene theſe two: The thoughts of the heart are in man, but the anſwere of the tongue is of God, Prou. 16. 1. Man purpoſeth, but God diſpoſeth.

Secondly, it was not in Salomons power of himſelfe to aske wiſedome of God, rather then any other thing: but his will and deſire was thereto directed of God: for if the Lord put into Salomons minde to aske, who ſaid vnto Salomon, appearing to him in a dreame, Aske what I ſhall giue thee, 1. King. 3. 5. much more was it inſpired into him, what he ſhould aske. And concerning the other example: for a man to ſell or not to ſell, being a meere ciuill and indifferent action, it is freely in his power: but to ſell to good and godly vſes, to helpe the neceſsitie of others, as the brethren did in the Apoſtles time, was in them a worke of grace: All that beleeued were in one place, and had all things common, Act. 2. verſ. 44. They were beleeuers that did ſo, faith wrought it in them. And againe, Act. 4. verſ. 33. Great grace was vpon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked. It was a worke of grace then, that men ſold their lands, to relieue the wants of others.

Argum. 2. The Scripture giueth vnto man free election and choiſe of things, which cannot be
1.2. without freewill. Firſt, Ioſh. 24. 15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerue. Secondly, 2. Sam. 24. 12. I
3. offer three things vnto thee, chuſe of them, which I ſhall doe vnto thee. Thirdly, Matth. 19. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundements. Luk. 19. If any man will follow me, let him denie himſelfe.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. The people had not power of themſelues to chuſe the way of the Lord: but God had firſt choſen them. Deut. 4. 37. Becauſe he loued the fathers he choſe their ſeede: and here the people anſwere, We will ſerue the Lord, for he is our God, verſ. 18. Firſt, hee was their God in chooſing them, and giuing grace; and then they choſe the Lorde. Secondly, this place otherwiſe would enforce an abſolute election in diuine matters, and not in ciuill onely, which were a groſſe error: for this choiſe of the people was of the ſeruice and religion of God.

2. Secondly, Dauids will is directed by faith to make choiſe to fall into Gods hands: for (ſaith he) his mercies are great, verſ. 14. His faith and confidence in Gods mercies directeth his choiſe.

3. Thirdly, 1. Thoſe places are vnproperly alleaged to prooue freewill in ciuill matters: to enter into life, and to follow Chriſt, are not ciuill, but ſpirituall and diuine: will hee then conclude that a man hath power of himſelfe to follow Chriſt, and enter into heauen? blaſphemous is the mouth, that ſo affirmeth. 2. Why the precepts of Scripture are thus ſet forth vnto man, Saint Ambroſe excellently ſheweth: Non ob aliud vnquam datur præceptum, niſi vt quæratur præcipientis auxilium; voces docentium, literæ paginarum Deo ſeruiunt, non carent eius virtute cui ſeruiunt: & quando id quod iubetur ab obediente perficitur, tunc effectus diuini operis declaratur: The precept is giuen, that the helpe of the precept giuer may be ſought; the voyce of the teacher, the letters of Scripture doe miniſter vnto God; neither doe they want his vertue, whom they ſerue: and when that is fulfilled, which is commaunded, the operation of the diuine worke is declared, epiſt. 84. The precepts then of Scripture proue not a freewill in man, but onely ſtirre vs vp to ſeeke for his helpe to performe the precept, that giueth it.

Argum. 3. Here a great troupe of both Greeke and Latine fathers is brought in for the proofe of freewill. I anſwere: firſt, it is certaine that ſome of the Greeke fathers aſcribed too much to freewill, more I thinke than the Papiſts dare acknowledge: as in the Homilie vnder Chryſoſtomes name vpon the ſtorie of Zacheus: In te eſt vt poſſis, quia in te eſt vt velis, &c. It is in thy ſelfe to be able to doe, becauſe it is in thee to will to doe. If it be in vs, what neede grace? Secondly, the fathers extoll freewill, hauing to deale with the contrarie hereſie of the Manichees, who imputed ſin vnto nature, and not to mans will. Thirdly, the fathers affirming freewill, either ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation: as Baſile alleaged ſaith, Anima voluntariam adepta vitam, &c. The ſoule hauing obtained a voluntarie life, was created according to the image of God. Or elſe they meane the freedome of will by grace: as Epiphan. hæreſ. 16. Liberum arbitrium exhibuit nobis Deus, &c. God hath giuen vnto vs a freewill, ſaying, If ye will obey and heare, ye ſhall eate the good things of the land. This libertie or freedome, as I ſhewed before out of Ambroſe, is wrought in vs by grace. Or laſtly, they ſpeake of a libertie of will free from compulſion or violence, as Chryſoſtome ſerm. 2. de fato: Dæmon dicit, Non eſt in te, quod extendas manum, ſed neceſſitate & vi id agis: The diuell ſaith, It is not in thee to extend thy hand, but thou doeſt it of neceſsitie and force. And S. Hierome cited in 26. Ierem. Liberum homini ſeruatur arbitrium ne ex præſcientia eius, quaſi ex neceſſitate cogatur, &c. Mans freewill is reſerued, ſo that he is not conſtrained as of neceſsitie by Gods preſcience to doe this or that. In any of theſe three ſenſes if the fathers be vnderſtood, according to their owne minde, we doe willingly conſent: that man in his creation had freewill; that by grace now alſo mans will is made free and; that by nature mans will is free from compulſion or conſtraint.

The Proteſtants.

WE here diſſent from our aduerſaries in two points: Firſt, wee graunt, that in ciuill matters, being in themſelues indifferent, there is a freewill in man, as to eate, to labour, to ſit, to goe, to plant, to build: but to doe any of theſe to any good, or godly end, as to labour, thereby to auoide ſtealing, to goe vnto prayer, to build houſes for poore people onely of charitie, without opinion of merit, theſe godly actions are not of our ſelues, but wrought in vs by the ſpirit.

Secondly, wee affirme, that although in ſuch things mens thoughts or deuiſes, are free; yet ſo are not their actions: it is not as free for men to doe, or not to doe, as to will, or not to will.

Argum. 1. The heart of man purpoſeth his way, but the Lord doth direct his ſteps, Prou. 16. 8. Many deuiſes are in mans heart, but the counſell of the Lord ſhall ſtand, Prou. 19. verſ. 21. I know, that the way of man is not in himſelfe, neither is it in man to direct his ſteps, Iere. 10. 23. S. Iames alſo reproueth them which ſay, to morrow I will goe into the citie: Ye ought to ſay, if the Lorde will, I will doe this or that, Iam. 4. 14. By theſe places we gather, that it is not in mans power to doe what himſelfe willeth, or purpoſeth, and therefore he hath not a free and abſolute will in theſe things.

Anſw. It is one thing to haue liberam electionem, a free choiſe of things, another to haue liberam exequutionem, freely to execute that which a man willeth: theſe places ſhew, that man hath not power freely to execute his will: his will or purpoſe may be free notwithſtanding in it ſelfe, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Contra. The Ieſuite hath made here an anſwere contrarie to himſelfe: for before hee thus defined, liberum hominem, a freeman, or a man of freewill, qui pro arbitrio facit, vel non facit, which doth or not doth, this or that, according to his owne pleaſure, cap. 7. argum. 2. But here forgetting what he ſaid before, he limiteth freewill within the compaſſe of the minde and purpoſe, not extending it to the action or execution: ſaying to this effect, that the purpoſe of man is free; but to accompliſh or execute his purpoſe he hath not free or abſolute power: which is the very ſame, that wee affirmed before: that howſoeuer mens thoughts in meere ciuill and naturall things are left vnto them free, yet ſo are not their actions.

Argum. 2. Iſay. 26. 12. Thou haſt wrought all our workes for vs. Rom. 11. 36. Of him, through him, and for him are all things. 1. Corin. 12. 6. God worketh all in all: Ergo, the diſpoſition of the will is of God.

Bellarm. Mans freewill, and Gods grace doe worke together: like as without the light a man cannot ſee, yet the light being preſent, it is in a mans power to open his eyes and ſee, or to ſhut his eyes and not ſee: ſo the grace of God preſuppoſed, yet it is in mans will to chuſe or refuſe: Bellarm. cap. 11. obſeru. 2.

Contra. Firſt, this gloſſe is contrarie to the text: for if God worke all our workes for vs, if hee worke all in all, then our will worketh nothing: how worketh God all, if hee worke not all, but with a fellow helper? Secondly, the reaſon is not alike betweene the gifts of nature, and the gifts of grace: for the power to ſee, to heare, is once giuen in the nature of man, and to the execution thereof, there neede no ſpeciall direction, but the generall aſſiſtance of Gods prouidence: but in the workes of grace, as in the diſpoſing of the will to good, the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirit is neceſſarie: a man may ſhut his eyes againſt the light, but a man cannot ſhut his heart againſt the effectuall working of grace. Thirdly, this was the hereſie of the Pelagians: Ita dei gratiam ponunt, vt non per ſingula opera eius nitamur auxilio: They did ſo affirme the grace of God, that wee neede not for euery worke Gods aſſiſtance: but referred themſelues to freewill, which was once giuen them. Their ſentence was this, that it was the grace and gift of God, that they had freewill: but after this gift once giuen, the execution and diſpoſition of it was in themſelues: Hieron. epiſt. ad to the which a man cannot attaine of himſelfe, vnleſſe he be taught. The Philoſophers attained that which was the higheſt point of humane wiſedome, to vndeaſtand, what God was not, but yet attained not to ſay, what God was: ex citat. Eſpenc. comment. in 2. Timoth. p. 26 liter. f. Wherefore the knowledge of nature concerning God, is obſcure, doubtfull, imperfect, not able to giue direction to the mind, without inſtinct of grace.

THE SECOND POINT, WHETHER MAN HAVE freewill in ciuill and naturall things.

The Papiſts.

39.Error. THis the Ieſuite affirmeth, and it is the common opinion of that ſide, that in naturall and ciuill actions man hath a free and abſolute will, whether to good or euill, they reaſon thus:

Argum. 1. It is in mans power to do ſome things, which he doth not, and againe to leaue ſome things vndone in ciuill matters, which he doth: Ergo, there is freewill in ſuch things: God ſaith to Salomon, Becauſe thou haſt asked wiſedome, and haſt not asked long life, &c. 1. King. 3. 11. So Peter ſaith to Ananias, After it was ſold, was it not in thine owne power? Act. 5. 4. Here we ſee Salomon might haue done that which hee did not, that is, asked riches, and long life, and not wiſedome: and Ananias might haue left that vndone which he did, as to haue ſold his poſſeſsions, and to bring the money to the Apoſtles: Bellarm. lib. 4. de grat. cap. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, though in ciuill indifferent matters to will and purpoſe, be in mans power, yet to doe or not to doe, to execute what he hath purpoſed, is not ſo in his power: for the Wiſeman maketh a manifeſt difference betweene theſe two: The thoughts of the heart are in man, but the anſwere of the tongue is of God, Prou. 16. 1. Man purpoſeth, but God diſpoſeth.

Secondly, it was not in Salomons power of himſelfe to aske wiſedome of God, rather then any other thing: but his will and deſire was thereto directed of God: for if the Lord put into Salomons minde to aske, who ſaid vnto Salomon, appearing to him in a dreame, Aske what I ſhall giue thee, 1. King. 3. 5. much more was it inſpired into him, what he ſhould aske. And concerning the other example: for a man to ſell or not to ſell, being a meere ciuill and indifferent action, it is freely in his power: but to ſell to good and godly vſes, to helpe the neceſsitie of others, as the brethren did in the Apoſtles time, was in them a worke of grace: All that beleeued were in one place, and had all things common, Act. 2. verſ. 44. And againe, Act. 4. verſ. 33. Great grace was vpon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked. It was a worke of grace then, that men ſold their lands, to relieue the wants of others.

Argum. 2. The Scripture giueth vnto man free election and choiſe of things, which cannot be
1.2. without freewill. Firſt, Ioſh. 24. 15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerue. Secondly, 2. Sam. 24. 12. I
3. offer three things vnto thee, chuſe of them, which I ſhall doe vnto thee. Thirdly, Matth. 19. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundements. Luk. 19. If any man will follow me, let him denie himſelfe.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. The people had not power of themſelues to chuſe the way of the Lord: but God had firſt choſen them. Deut. 4. 37. Becauſe he loued the fathers he choſe their ſeede: and here the people anſwere, We will ſerue the Lord, for he is our God, verſ. 18. Firſt, hee was their God in chooſing them, and giuing grace; and then they choſe the Lorde. Secondly, this place otherwiſe would enforce an abſolute election in diuine matters, and not in ciuill onely, which were a groſſe error: for this choiſe of the people was of the ſeruice and religion of God.

2. Secondly, Dauids will is directed by faith to make choiſe to fall into Gods hands: for (ſaith he) his mercies are great, verſ. 14. His faith and confidence in Gods mercies directeth his choiſe.

3. Thirdly, 1. Thoſe places are vnproperly alleaged to prooue freewill in ciuill matters: to enter into life, and to follow Chriſt, are not ciuill, but ſpirituall and diuine: will hee then conclude that a man hath power of himſelfe to follow Chriſt, and enter into heauen? blaſphemous is the mouth, that ſo affirmeth. 2. Why the precepts of Scripture are thus ſet forth vnto man, Saint Ambroſe excellently ſheweth: Non ob aliud vnquam datur praeceptum, niſi vt quaeratur praecipientis auxilium; voces docentium, litera paginarum Deo ſeruiunt, non carent eius virtute cui ſeruiunt: & quando id quod iubetur ab obediente perficitur, tunc effectus diuini operis declaratur: The precept is giuen, that the helpe of the precept giuer may be ſought; the voyce of the teacher, the letters of Scripture doe miniſter vnto God; neither doe they want his vertue, whom they ſerue: and when that is fulfilled, which is commaunded, the operation of the diuine worke is declared, epiſt. 84. The precepts then of Scripture proue not a freewill in man, but onely ſtirre vs vp to ſeeke for his helpe to performe the precept, that giueth it.

Argum. 3. Here a great troupe of both Greeke and Latine fathers is brought in for the proofe of freewill. I anſwere: firſt, it is certaine that ſome of the Greeke fathers aſcribed too much to freewill, more I thinke than the Papiſts dare acknowledge: as in the Homilie vnder Chryſoſtomes name vpon the ſtorie of Zacheus: In te eſt vt poſſis, quia in te eſt vt velis, &c. It is in thy ſelfe to be able to doe, becauſe it is in thee to will to doe. If it be in vs, what neede grace? Secondly, the fathers extoll freewill, hauing to deale with the contrarie hereſie of the Manichees, who imputed ſin vnto nature, and not to mans will. Thirdly, the fathers affirming freewill, either ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation: as Baſile allcaged ſaith, Anima voluntariam adepta vitam, &c. The ſoule hauing obtained a voluntarie life, was created according to the image of God. Or elſe they meane the freedome of will by grace: as Epiphan. hæreſ.16. Liberum arbitrium exhibuit nobis Deus, &c. God hath giuen vnto vs a freewill, ſaying, If ye will obey and heare, ye ſhall eate the good things of the land. This libertie or freedome, as I ſhewed before out of Ambroſe, is wrought in vs by grace. Or laſtly, they ſpeake of a libertie of will free from compulſion or violence, as Chryſoſtome ſerm.2. de fato: Dæmon dicit, Non eſt in te, quod extendas manum, ſed neceſſitate & vi id agis: The diuell ſaith, It is not in thee to extend thy hand, but thou doeſt it of neceſsitie and force. And S. Hierome cited in 26. Ierem. Liberum homini ſeruatur arbitrium ne ex præſcientia eius, quaſi ex neceſſitate cogatur, &c. Mans freewill is reſerued, ſo that he is not conſtrained as of neceſsitie by Gods preſcience to doe this or that. In any of theſe three ſenſes if the fathers be vnderſtood, according to their owne minde, we doe willingly conſent: that man in his creation had freewill; that by grace now alſo mans will is made freeand; that by nature mans will is free from compulſion or conſtraint.

The Protestants.

WE here diſſent from our aduerſaries in two points: Firſt, wee graunt, that in ciuill matters, being in themſelues indifferent, there is a freewill in man, as to eate, to labour, to ſit, to goe, to plant, to build: but to doe any of theſe to any good, or godly end, as to labour, thereby to auoide ſtealing, to goe vnto prayer, to build houſes for poore people onely of charitie, without opinion of merit, theſe godly actions are not of our ſelues, but wrought in vs by the ſpirit.

Secondly, wee affirme, that although in ſuch things mens thoughts or deuiſes, are free; yet ſo are not their actions: it is not as free for men to doe, or not to doe, as to will, or not to will.

Argum.1. The heart of man purpoſeth his way, but the Lord doth direct his ſteps, Prou.16.8. Many deuiſes are in mans heart, but the counſell of the Lord ſhall ſtand, Prou.19.verſ.21. I know, that the way of man is not in himſelfe, neither is it in man to direct his ſteps, Iere.10.23. S. Iames alſo reproueth them which ſay, to morrow I will goe into the citie: Ye ought to ſay, if the Lorde will, I will doe this or that, Iam.4.14. By theſe places we gather, that it is not in mans power to doe what himſelfe willeth, or purpoſeth, and therefore he hath not a free and abſolute will in theſe things.

Anſw. It is one thing to haue liberam electionem, a free choiſe of things, another to haue liberam exequutionem, freely to execute that which a man willeth: theſe places ſhew, that man hath not power freely to execute his will: his will or purpoſe may be free notwithſtanding in it ſelfe, Bellarm.cap.11.

Contra. The Ieſuite hath made here an anſwere contrarie to himſelfe: for before hee thus defined, liberum hominem, a freeman, or a man of freewill, qui pro arbitrio facit, vel non facit, which doth or not doth, this or that, according to his owne pleaſure, cap.7.argum.2. But here forgetting what he ſaid before, he limiteth freewill within the compaſſe of the minde and purpoſe, not extending it to the action or execution: ſaying to this effect, that the purpoſe of man is free; but to accompliſh or execute his purpoſe he hath not free or abſolute power: which is the very ſame, that wee affirmed before: that howſoeuer mens thoughts in meere ciuill and naturall things are left vnto them free, yet ſo are not their actions.

Argum.2. Iſay.26.12. Thou haſt wrought all our workes for vs. Rom.11.36. Of him, through him, and for him are all things. 1.Corin.12.6. God worketh all in all: Ergo, the diſpoſition of the will is of God.

Bellarm. Mans freewill, and Gods grace doe worke together: like as without the light a man cannot ſee, yet the light being preſent, it is in a mans power to open his eyes and ſee, or to ſhut his eyes and not ſee: ſo the grace of God preſuppoſed, yet it is in mans will to chuſe or refuſe: Bellarm. cap.11.obſeru.2.

Contra. Firſt, this gloſſe is contrarie to the text: for if God worke all our workes for vs, if hee worke all in all, then our will worketh nothing: how worketh God all, if hee worke not all, but with a fellow helper? Secondly, the reaſon is not alike betweene the gifts of nature, and the gifts of grace: for the power to ſee, to heare, is once giuen in the nature of man, and to the execution thereof, there neede no ſpeciall direction, but the generall aſſiſtance of Gods prouidence: but in the workes of grace, as in the diſpoſing of the will to good, the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirit is neceſſarie: a man may ſhut his eyes againſt the light, but a man cannot ſhut his heart againſt the effectuall working of grace. Thirdly, this was the hereſie of the Pelagians: Ita dei gratiam ponunt, vt non per ſingula opera eius nitamur auxilio: They did ſo affirme the grace of God, that wee neede not for euery worke Gods aſſiſtance: but referred themſelues to freewill, which was once giuen them. Their ſentence was this, that it was the grace and gift of God, that they had freewill: but after this gift once giuen, the execution and diſpoſition of it was in themſelues: Hieron. epiſt. ad

Cteſiphont. Bellarmine ſeemeth not to be farre off from this hereſie, that matcheth the naturall faculties of the ſenſe,and the ſpirituall diſpoſition of the will together: as though a general aſſiſtance of Gods power and prouidence ſufficed to the one,as well as to the other.

Aug.artic.3. contr.Pelag. Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith: Fatemur quidem liberum eſſe in omnibus hominibus arbitrium,habens quidem iudicium rationis,non per quod ſit idoneum,quæ ad Deum pertinent, ſine Deo aut inchoare,aut perficere; ſed tantum in operibus vitæ præſentis, tam bonis, quam malis; bonis dico, quæ bono naturæ oriuntur, vt velle manducare, laborare,domũ fabricare,&c. We confeſſe a kind of freewill to be in all men,which hath the iudgement of reaſon,not by the which it is fit either to begin,or to finiſh without Gods helpe, things appertaining to God,but only in the workes of this life preſent, both good and euill; ſuch good things I meane,as haue a naturall or ciuill goodnes,as to will or purpoſe to eate,to labour, to build an houſe. With this teſtimonie,both theſe points are confirmed, which we haue now alreadie ſufficiently prooued out of Scripture. Firſt, Auguſtine graunteth a freewill in naturall things,ſo farre onely as they are naturally or ciuilly good,not as they are referred vnto God or any godly worke. Secondly,the execution of theſe naturall actions he doth not attribute to mans freewill,but the purpoſe onely and deſire, as velle laborare, manducare, to will to labour, to will to eate,and ſo of the reſt.

Saint Hierome epiſt.ad Cteſiphont. ſheweth what the power of mans will is in naturall things: the Pelagian obiected thus: Si voluere curuaro digitum,ſtare,ſedere,&c.ſemper mihi dei auxilium neceſſarium eſt? If I will bow my finger, ſtand,ſit,&c. is the helpe of God alwaies neceſſarie? He anſwereth thus: Audi ingrate, immo ſacrilege, Apoſtolum prædicantem: Heare thou vngratefull man,&c. the Apoſtle thus preaching,Whether we eate or drinke,or whatſoeuer we doe elſe,let all be done to the glorie of God. So then euen in theſe ciuill workes Gods aſſiſtance is neceſſarie.

Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth,*epiſt.*84.Quaſi homo auxilio dei in quadam actionum ſuarum parte egeat, in quadam non egeat,&c. As though man needed Gods helpe in ſome part of his actions, in ſome not: or that there were any time,or moment,wherein it were not pernicious and hurtfull to him, if the ſpirit of God were wanting: Ergo,euen in the direction of ciuill actions the preſence of the ſpirit is neceſſarie,if in no action,nor any time he can be wanting.

AN APPENDIX, AS TOVCHING THE NAME and difference of freewill before mans fall and after.

The Papiſts.

40.Error. Firſt, concerning the name of freewill, Bellarmine greatly complaineth, that ſome haue very boldly chaunged the name of freewill,calling it ſeruum arbitrium,bond will: his reaſon is, becauſe the fathers haue alwaies vſed the name of freewill in the defence of the faith: but it is not like,that the Church would haue vſed it, if it had been an offenſiue and vnfit name,*Bellarm.lib.*4.*cap.*6.

41.Error. Secondly,hee doubteth not to affirme,Poſt lapſum hominem eſſe liberi arbitrij ſi fuit ante lapſum: That man hath freewill after the fall,as well as he had it before.His reaſon is this,becauſe the prouidence of God is alleaged by Caluine to be the onely impediment of freewill: but Gods prouidence was as well before mans fall as after: *Bellar.lib.*4.*cap.*8.*argum.*6. Thus in Bellarmines opinion,man hath freewill as well after his fall,as before.

The Proteſtants.

Firſt, 1. That the name of freewill was very much vſed of ancient time by the fathers we grant, for they had to deale with the wicked Manichees,& other heretikes,who made the beginning of ſin in the euilnes of nature,not in the corruption of mans will; therfore againſt thẽ they maintained the name and nature of freewill;ſo long this name had not only a tolerable,but a neceſſary vſe: but now ſeeing it is abuſed to ſignifie an aptnes and libertie in mans will by nature to doe good,we may deale with it,as Hezekiah did with the braſen Serpent, which though it had a good beginning,yet becauſe in proceſſe of time it was abuſed to ſuperſtition,hee cauſed it to be broken downe.By the ſame example we may leaue and chaunge the vſe of this name of freewill.

2. The Scripture doth call mans will and man himſelfe by nature bond, and ſpeaketh of no freedome or libertie but by grace: Rom.6.20. Ye were the ſeruants of ſinne: Serui peccati: What is this elſe but to ſay, ſeruum arbitrium, your will was bond,or ſeruant to ſinne.

3. *Concil.Arauſican.*2.*c.*13. Quod amiſſum eſt,&c. That which is loſt cannot be reſtored, but by him,that firſt gaue it, as the truth ſaith: If the Sonne make you free, ye are free indeede, Ioh.8.36. The Scripture acknowledgeth no libertie of the will but by grace: wherefore the name of freewill by nature,is contrarie both to the ſenſe and phraſe of Scripture, and in that vnderſtanding may be refrained,and diſcontinued.

Secondly, 1. That man after his fall enioyeth freewill as he did before,is contrarie to the Scripture: Eccleſiaſt.7.31.God hath made man righteous,but he hath added many inuentions. And the image of God, after the which man was created, whereof his holie and freewill was a part, is by Adams fall decayed, and renewed in Chriſt, Coloſſ. 3.18.

2. Neither doth Caluine or any other ſay, that Gods preſcience or prouidence is an hindrance to the libertie of mans will: but we confeſſe with Ambroſe: Æterna dei, & ſemper tranquilla cognitio nulla nos vrget neceſſitate peccandi, nec inde manat iniquitas, vnde iuſticia: Gods eternall and ſtayed knowledge, doth not vrge vs with any neceſſitie to ſinne, neither doth iniquitie proceede from whence iuſtice commeth, *lib.2.de.vocat.Gent.cap.*10. It is not then Gods preſcience, but mans own corruption, that hath ſpoyled him of the libertie of will giuen in the creation: that which God foreknoweth, muſt neceſſarily come to paſſe, for otherwiſe it ſhould not haue been foreknowne: but his foreknowledge is not the cauſe thereof.

3. That Adams freewill by his fall is loſt, and that man hath not the ſame libertie of will before and after his fall, it is plentifully teſtified, by Councels and Fathers. Arauſican.2.c.8. Liberum arbitrium per peccatum primi hominis infirmatum & læſum: Freewill by the ſinne of the firſt man is weakened and wounded. Can.25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium: Freewill is ſo attenuate and degenerate by the ſinne of the firſt man, that no man can loue God, or beleeue in God, as hee ought, vnleſſe grace preuent him. *S. Ambroſe in Luc.*15. Prodigus viuendo luxurioſè conſumpſit omnia ornamenta naturæ: The prodigall childe by liuing riotouſly hath conſumed all the ornaments of nature. Peter Lombard. rehearſeth this ſentence out of Auguſtine, and giueth conſent to it: Libero arbitrio malè vtens homo, & ſe perdidit & ipſum: Man vſing euill freewill, hath loſt both it and himſelfe: lib.2.diſt.25.liter.H. Wherfore Bellarmine moſt abſurdly inſinuateth, that man after his fall may haue freewill as well as before.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE POWER OF the minde naturally in morall duties.

FIrſt, of the vnderſtanding and knowledge, which man hath by nature of theſe things: ſecondly, of the power of his will.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER MAN NATVrally doth vnderſtand what is true or falſe, good, or euill, in morall duties.

The Papiſts.

THe Ieſuite affirmeth, that a man by his naturall ſtrength may know, vnderſtand and iudge, aliquod verũ morale, what is true, at ſometimes, in morall duties, and to be followed, and ỹ not only generally, but in particular, as when and how to do iuſtly, how to giue almes: And further he addeth, Actio voluntatis ei vero conformis, erit actio virtutis: That if the will do follow the vnderſtanding, in this naturall iudgement of the truth, it will bring forth a vertuous action. This then is his opinion, ỹ naturally the mind of mã vnderſtandeth, which are true vertuous actions, lib.5.de grat. 42. Error.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, When they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God, Rom.1.21. Ergo, the Gentiles had the knowledge of God naturally by the creatures, and might thereby haue been preſerued from idolatrie, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, a knowledge of the Creator by the creatures, we graunt, but an obſcure, imperfect, a generall and confuſed knowledge onely, ſeruing to make men inexcuſable, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.20. but not able to bring them to the right worſhip of God, as the Ieſuite ſuppoſeth: for the Goſpell onely, as S. Paul defineth, is the power of God to ſaluation: that is, the only effectuall meanes to bring vs to know God vnto ſaluation. This naturall knowledge of God, though the Gentiles had conſented to it, could neuer of it ſelfe haue brought forth a vertuous act.

2 Bellarmine confeſſeth himſelfe, that a man cannot beleeue in God, ſine ſpeciali gratiæ auxilio, without ſpeciall aſſiſtance of grace: *lib.6 cap.*1. nor yet ſo much as thinke, much leſſe doe of himſelfe any thing, quod ad pietatem pertinet, which belongeth to godlines, *cap.3.lib.5.reſponſ.ad arg.*1. but ſo to know God, as thereby to be able to abſtaine from Idolatrie, belongeth to godlines, and is a fruit iſſuing from beleefe: therefore it is not in mans power: And yet the contrary is here affirmed by the Ieſuite, Potuiſſe Gentiles per cognitionem vnius Dei ex creaturis acceptam abſtinere à cultu Idolorum: That the Gentiles by the naturall knowledge of God in the creatures, might haue abſtained from the worſhip of Images. Bellarmi gainſt himſelf.

*Arg.*2. The Gentiles which haue not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, they hauing not the law, are a law to themſelues, which ſhew the effect of the law written in their harts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſſe, &c. Rom.2.14.15. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that the Gentiles, hauing not the law written, yet by the naturall light of reaſon did know ſome thinges, which appertained to honeſt liuing, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee denie not, as wee haue alreadie declared, but that the Gentiles naturally had ſome knowledge of right, and wrong, of good and euill, and did naturally ſuch thinges: but this knowledge and practiſe of theirs was farre from bringing forth any vertuous action, or good acceptable worke (which is the thing the Ieſuite ſhould haue prooued) becauſe they had no faith, without the which it is not poſsible to doe any acceptable worke, Hebr. 11. verſ. 6.

Secondly, this place as well ſheweth, that the Gentiles had power naturally as well to doe, as to know ſuch things: but it is impoſſible to performe the workes of the law naturally, as Beliarmine himſelfe ſheweth: Non poſſe ſolis natura viribus adimpleri præcepta moralia omnia, ſecundum ſubſtantiam operis: That by the power only of nature, the morall precepts cannot be kept, as touching the ſubſtantiall, that is, the externall worke, cap. 5. Ergo, neither the knowledge of morall precepts is obtained onely by the inſtinct of nature.

The Proteſtants.

A Light of nature wee acknowledge, whereby naturally men, after a darke and obſcure manner, may vnderſtand, in morall actions, ſome reſemblance and likelihoode of equitie and truth: And the Gentiles directed by theſe naturall principles, were able to prouide by their lawes againſt adulterie, murther, theft, and ſuch notorious diſhoneſtie of life: But that there is any ſuch naturall diſtinct or effectuall power or knowledge in man, whereby he is able to bring foorth any good or vertuous act, we hold it as a great vntruth.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, We are not ſufficient of our ſelues to thinke any thing, but our ſufficiencie is of God, 2. Cor. 3. 5. Therefore it is not in mans power naturally to thinke or conceiue that which is good.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch thoughts as concerne godlines, and appertaine to life eternall, which we graunt, are not in mans power: not of morall duties, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul vnderſtandeth all good thoughts whatſoeuer are in man, that they are of God: for elſewhere he ſaith, that euery thought muſt be brought into captiuitie to the obedience of Chriſt, 2. Cor. 10. 5. But if man had any good thought of himſelfe, what neede it be ſubdued to the obedience of Chriſt? In ſaying (euery thought) hee ſheweth, that without Chriſt, all our thoughts and motions are rebellious.

2. As though morall duties doe not appertaine alſo to godlines of life: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Godlines is great gaine, if a man be content, &c. Contentment of minde, and auoiding of couetouſnes, which the Apoſtle treateth of here, is a morall vertue, yet Saint Paul calleth it godlines.

3. What if we graunt, that godly workes, and morall duties are two diſtinct things: yet they are both of God: for euery good giuing is from aboue, Iam. 1. 17. And Paul among the fruits of the ſpirit, reckoneth vp goodneſſe as well as faith, Galath. 5. verſ. 22. that is, the goodneſſe and honeſtie of life, in thought, will or deede, is as well wrought in vs by the ſpirit, as faith in religion.

Argum. 2. The imaginations of the thoughts of mens hearts, are only euill continually, Gen. 6. 5. Ergo, man hath by nature no good thoughts.

Anſw. The thoughts of mens hearts are ſaid to be euill, becauſe vt plurimùm ſunt mala, they are for the moſt part euill, Bellar. cap. 3.

Contra. 1. If it had been written in generall termes thus; the thoughts of mans heart are euill, the Ieſuites anſwere would haue ſeemed more probable: but ſeeing the Scripture ſaith, they are onely euill, and that continually, they cannot be partly good and partly euill, or good at one time, and euill at another, but wholy and onely euill, and alwaies. Wherefore if this ſcripture be true, then is his anſwere falſe, and impertinent to this place.

2. We haue other teſtimonies of ſcripture, that doe witneſſe with this text, which wee haue alleadged: God hath made man righteous, but they haue ſought many inuentions, Eccleſ. 7. 31. All righteouſnes then is of God, the inuentions which man followeth are vaine. The Goſpell ſaith, The light ſhineth in darknes, and the darknes comprehended it not, Ioh. 1. 5. The trueth is the light, the minde of man by nature is darknes: if the minde naturally vnderſtandeth the truth, then ſhould darknes comprehend the light.

Laſtly, the Pſalme ſaith, There is none, that would vnderſtand and ſeeke God, Pſal. 14. 2. Ergo, man hath no vnderſtanding of good things by nature.

Auguſtine ſaith: Nemo recte ſapit, recte intelligit, niſi acceperit ſpiritum ſapientia & intellectus: No man can vnderſtand aright, or truely be wiſe, vnleſſe he haue receiued the ſpirit of wiſdome, and vnderſtanding, Epiſt. 105. Therefore true and right vnderſtanding is not ingraft by nature, but wrought by grace.

S. Ambroſe, ſerm. 10. in Pſal. 119. vpon theſe wordes, Giue me vnderſtanding, that I may learne thy commandements: Si Propheta intellectum ſibi dari poſtulat, quis tam arrogans, qui profiteatur in ſua poteſtate eſſe intelligentiam, &c. If the Prophet deſire vnderſtanding to be giuen him, who is ſo arrogant, as to profeſſe that intelligence or vnderſtanding is in his owne power?

Pet.Lombard. Rectè dicitur homo naturalitèr velle bonum, quia in recta & bona voluntate conditus eſt: A man is well ſaid naturally to will that is good, becauſe he was created in a good and right will: the naturall will and knowledge of that is good, he referreth to the ſtate of man in creation, not to his preſent condition of corruption.

Many of the Schoolemen are of this iudgement, that no morall trueth can be knowne of humane vnderſtanding now in the ſtate of nature corrupted, without Gods ſpeciall helpe: *ſic Gregor. Ariminenſ.in 2.ſen.diſt.*26 *qu.*1.*art.*1.*concluſ.*2. Capreol.in 2.*diſtinct.*28.*qu.vnic,artic.*3. *Gaſpar Caſſalius, lib.*1.*de quadripar.iuſtitia,c.*32. So that for this trueth we want not euidence from our aduerſaries themſelues.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE POWER OF FREE-will in morall dueties, two Queſtions.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER A MAN without faith and ſpeciall helpe from God may performe any thing morally good, if no tentation aſſault him.

The Papiſts.

43.Error. B*Ellarmine* doubteth not ſo to affirme that a man naturally without faith, both with ſpeciall aſſiſtance from God, and without it, can performe ſome morall good worke, if no tentation let: for a man by nature alone without Gods helpe cannot reſiſt tentation, c.9.

*Argum.*1. God doth reward morall workes done without faith; as the Ægyptian Midwiues 1.
are rewarded for ſauing the male children of the Hebrewes, Exod.1.21. 2.Nabuchadnezzar is re- 2.
compenſed for his ſeruice done vnto God, in the beſieging and ouerthrow of Tyrus, Ezech.29.
verſ.20. I haue giuen him the land of Egypt for his labour, becauſe he wrought for me. 3. Dan.4.24. 3.
Redeeme thy ſinnes by mercie to the poore: Here the almes of an Infidell doth auert the temporall puniſhment: Ergo, it was a good worke. 4. Rom.2.14. The Gentiles hauing not the Law, do by nature the things contayned in the law: the Gentiles by the light of nature did the workes of the law: Ergo, without faith, ſome morall workes of the law may be performed, Bellarm.lib.5.de grat.c.9.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. They were not the Ægyptian Midwiues, but the Midwiues of the Hebrew women, verſ.15. Bellarm. therefore is herein groſlie deceiued. 2. This worke of theirs was not without faith, verſ.21. They feared God: wherefore it is impertinently alleaged, for the probation of morall good workes without faith.

2. Secondly, 1. It may wel be, that Nabuchadnezzar went againſt Tyrus, by the ſecret inſtinct of God, as Necho king of Egypt, (whom Ioſias vnaduiſedly went againſt) going vp againſt Carchomis, was commanded of God to make haſte, 2.Chron.35.21. Then this example is vnfitly alleaged for morall workes done by nature. 2. It followeth not, that becauſe hee wrought for God, that it was a good ſeruice: ſo Sathan did execute Gods will vpon Iob, and the Iewes in putting Chriſt to death, yet neyther I truſt did well. 3. Neyther doth the temporall reward proue it to be a good worke: ſeeing that the wicked are temporally recompenſed without deſert, with raine and Sunſhine, Matth.5.45. and Ahab by his temporarie and worldly repentance deferred Gods wrath, 1.King.21.29. but it was no good worke, being but a worldly ſorrow, riſing rather from the feare of Gods iudgments vpon his houſe, then from the deteſtation of ſinne: and worldly ſorrow (ſaith the Apoſtle) cauſeth death, 2.Cor.7.10. that is, helpeth not to ſaluation, but tendeth rather vnto periſhing. 4. Such a ſeruice, ſuch a reward; a bloodie ſeruice in ſacking of Tyre, is rewarded with a bloodie victorie in ouercomming Egypt. 5. Auguſtine ſaith, Non officijs ſed finibus virtutes à vitijs diſcernendæ ſunt, ſi enim non propter hoc facit homo bonum, &c. Vertue is to be diſcerned from vice, not by the officious act, but by the vertuous end: if then a man doth good not for that end he ſhould, he ſinneth, *cont. Iulian.*43. Therefore vnleſſe it can be proued, that Nabuchadnezzar ſacked Tyrus for obedience to Gods will, not for reuenge of his owne malice, or of an ambitious deſire to enlarge his kingdome, it was no good worke.

3. Thirdly, 1. the text is to be read, breake off, not redeeme, for ſo is the hebrue word פרק parach taken, Geneſ.27.40. where Iſaack ſaith to Eſau, Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke. 2. We confeſſe, that in the Infidels, their almes, and ſuch like good woorkes in ſhew, were much better then their manifeſt ſinnes, and that to breake off ſuch ſinnes, by ſuch workes, it was commendable; yet it followeth not, that they were good. 3. Theſe almes deedes, in that Daniel by the ſpirit of God gaue this counſell, ſhould alſo haue proceeded, not from his naturall inclination, but from the inſtinct of the ſpirit: as Auguſtine well ſaith, Colligitur ipſa bona opera, quæ faciunt, non ipſorum eſſe, ſed illius, qui bene vtitur malis; ipſorum eſſe peccata, quibus bona male faciunt: It is gathered, that good workes, which Infidels do, are not theirs, but his, which well vſeth that, which is euill, but the ſinne is theirs, whereby they do good things euill, cont. Iulian. lib.*4.*cap.*3. 4. Hee ſaith againe, Nec miſericordia ſemper eſt bona, propter quam meruit Saul à Domino miſericorde damnari: Neyther is mercie or almes alwayes good, for the which Saul deſerued of the mercifull Lord to be damned, ibid. 5. The auerting of a temporall puniſhment, doth not proue it ſimplie to be good: as Auguſtine ſaith, Cui non datur ſemper viuere, quid prodeſt bene viuere? What doth it profite a man to liue well, if he liue not euer? *in Iohan.*45. Wherefore theſe temporall works profited not infidels, and conſequently were not good, becauſe they auayled not to euerlaſting life.

4. Fourthly, 1. Some of the fathers expound that place of the Apoſtle, of ſuch of the Gentiles aswere conuerted to the faith: As Origen, Si videris Gentes ad Ieſum venire & credere ei, &c. If thou ſeeſt the Gentiles come vnto Chriſt and beleeue in him, and fulfill the worke of the law, &c. doubt not to ſay that Ieſus hath written the law in theſe ſtones, hom.*9.*in Ioſua. So alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagians; they are ſaid to do the things of the law, Quia ex Gentibus venerunt ad Euangelium: Becauſe they came from among the Gentiles to the Goſpell, cont. Iulian.*4.3. But I do not greatly vrge this interpretation. 2. We ſay, that they among the Gentiles, that followed the light of nature, wanted not ſome ſpeciall helpe, though they had not faith, which helpe others among them had not: So S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quod illuminante gratia inuenerunt, obcæcante ſuperbia perdiderunt: That which they found by illuminating grace, they loſt by blind pride, *de vocat. Gent. lib.*2.*c.*2. The better ſort then among them, had a certaine meaſure of illumination, which all had not, which they by the pride of their heartes corrupted. 3. But our more full anſwere is this, that it followeth not, becauſe the Gentiles did by nature ſome thinges agreeable to the law, as appertaining to iuſtice, temperance, mercie, therefore their workes were good: they did things that had a ſhew of goodneſſe, but not with a good minde: they were not then good workes, no more then the almes, faſting, prayer of the Phariſees, were good workes; which were not done of conſcience, but for the praiſe of men: and as Auguſtine ſaith, Tolerabilius in die iudicij punientur &c. They ſhall be more eaſily puniſhed in the day of iudgement, becauſe naturally, they did the things of the law: cont. Iulian. lib.*4.*c.*3. And this is that the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 2. 15. Their thoughts accuſing one another or excuſing: not excuſing from the whole puniſhment, but in making their puniſhment leſſe or more eaſie, as Auguſtine expoundeth.

The Proteſtants.

THat a man without faith and grace, by the inſtinct of nature onely, cannot do any thing that is good before God, whether he be aſſaulted by any ſpeciall temptation or not: it is thus euident out of Scripture.

1. Argum. 1. Pro. 15. 8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. 2. Gen. 6. 5. The
2. imaginations of the thoughtes of mans heart are onely euill continually. 3. Pſal. 13. 3. All are gone out of
3. the way, there is none that doth good, no not one.
4. 4. Ierem. 17. 9. The heart is wicked and deceitfull aboue all thinges.
5. 5. Matth. 7. 18. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruite: but euery man by nature is a corrupt tree. Likewiſe Luke 6. 45.
6. 6. Iohn 3. 6. That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh.
7. 7. Iohn 15. 5. Without me yee can doe nothing.
8. 8. Rom. 14. 23. Whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne.
9. 9. Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.
10. 10. Tit. 1. 15. To the vnbeleeuing nothing is pure. 1. Iohn 2. 16. All that is in the world, is the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, the pride of life. All theſe places do ſtrongly conclude, that man by nature without fayth, is apt to doe nothing but euill: I will examine Bellarmines anſwere to theſe Scriptures.

1. 1. Bellarm. The argument followeth not, The ſacrifices of the wicked are an abomination: Ergo, their morall workes: For there is great difference betweene the one and the other. Sacrifices muſt be offered with a pure conſcience, and to this end, to pleaſe God; but to morall workes neyther is required: not the puritie of conſcience; neyther in their almes is there any other end, but to helpe the needie: Bellarm. c.*10.*reſp. ad loc.*1.

Contra. 1. Betweene ſacrifices and almes deedes, there is no difference in this behalfe, for the Apoſtle calleth diſtribution to the poore a Sacrifice, Hebr. 13. 16. 2. Hee ſaith, To do good and diſtribute forget not, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: wherefore ſuch almes deedes as God is not pleaſed with, as was the almes of the Phariſees, are no good workes: for, if they do good, they are acceptable to God. 3. Neyther can the worke be good, where the conſcience is defiled: as S. Paul ſheweth, Tit. 1. 15. that nothing is pure to vnbeleeuers, becauſe their conſcience is defiled.

2. 2. Bellarm. The meaning of the place is, that the moſt part of their thoughts were euill, not all: for it followeth, verſ. 9. that Noe was a iuſt and vpright man; *reſp. ad loc.*2.

Contra. 1. The text is, all the imaginations of mans heart are euill; how then is he not aſhamed to contradict Scripture, and ſay, not all. 2. This place may be expounded by that, Pſal.14.3. There is none that doth good, no not one: Here I truſt there is no exception of any, as they are by nature. 3. Noe was iuſt, but not by nature, verſ.8. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord: he was by nature the ſame that others, but changed by grace. 4. So notwithſtanding this, all the imaginations of mans heart are euill by nature, as it is ſo expounded, *c.*8.21. Mans thoughtes are euill from his youth.

3. 3. Bellarm. This place concludeth not, that there is no man that doth any good morall worke; but none, that is iuſt: for one or two good workes make not a iuſt man, that hath many ſinnes beſide, *reſponſ.ad loc.*3.

Contra. 1. The words are very direct, there is none that doth good, and with a repetition, no not one: doth he not moſt impiouſly now contradict Scripture, in ſaying; Yes, ſome do good by nature? 2. If they be not iuſt nor righteous, how can they bring forth any righteous or good worke; for an euill or corrupt tree cannot ſend forth any good fruite, Matth.5.18. 3. S. Paul is the beſt expounder of this place, Rom.3.12. they are become altogether vnprofitable, ἅμα ἠχρειώθησαν, if they bee wholy or altogether vnprofitable, how can they bring forth any good or profitable worke?

4. 4. Bellar. Mans heart is ſaid to be euill or wicked, not becauſe it can do no good moral worke, but for that it is the fountaine and originall of euill: as Chriſt ſaith, Matth.15.19. Out of the heart come euill thoughts, murders, &c. reſponſ.ad argum.6.

Contra. 1. If the heart be the fountaine of euill, it can bring forth no good: Iob.14.4. Who can bring a cleane thing out of filthineſſe, no not one: Iam.3.12. The ſame fountaine cannot bring forth bitter water and ſweete: but if mans heart being the fountaine of euill, as he confeſſeth, ſhould worke any good thing, the ſame fountaine, contrary to the Apoſtle, ſhould ſend out bitter and ſweet water. 2. In the ſame place our Sauiour ſayth, theſe are the thinges which defile a man: if then an euill heart defile a man, how can that be cleane which commeth from him? Our Sauiour ſayth againe, Cleanſe firſt the inſide of the cup, that the outſide may be cleane, Matth.23.26. The inſide is the heart, the outſide are the workes, which cannot be cleane, as long as the heart is vncleane: and the heart is not cleanſed or purified, but by faith, Act.15.9.

5. 5. Bellar. 1. Chriſts meaning is, not that an euill tree can bring forth no good fruite at all, but for the moſt part and ordinarily it bringeth forth euill fruite. 2. The euill tree is the euilneſſe of nature, the good tree is the goodneſſe of nature: When a naturall man doth good, it is not of the concupiſcence or corruption of nature, which is the euill tree, but ex bono naturæ, of the goodneſſe of nature, which is the good tree. 3. An euill tree can bring forth no good fruit, that is, an euill man can doe no good worke meritorious of life and ſaluation, Bellar.reſp.ad arg.7.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſts meaning is that an euill tree, that is an euill man, can bring forth no good fruit at all: Firſt, Matt.12.33. Make the tree good, and his fruit good: the tree then muſt firſt be made good, before the fruit can be good. Secondly, How can ye ſpeake good things (ſaith Chriſt) when ye are euill? verſ.34. If an euill man can ſpeake any good thinges, our Sauiour had not reaſoned well. Thirdly, Luk.6.44. Neither of thornes gather men figs, nor of buſhes grapes. Like as then a thorne doth not ordinarily, but not at all bring forth figs, nor a buſh grapes: ſo an euill heart cannot moue any thing that is good. Fourthly, thus Auguſtine expoundeth: When Iulian the Pelagian, had propounded this example, whether it be ſinne in an Infidell to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth thus: Vtrum hoc male facit, vel bene? &c. Whether doth he this well, or euill? If you ſay euill, you cannot denie, but he ſinneth: if well, then an euill tree bringeth forth good fruit: *cont.Iulian.*4.3. In Auguſtines iudgement then an euill tree cannot bring forth any good fruit at all.

Secondly, 1. It is a moſt groſſe anſwere and contrarie to Scripture, that a mans will or heart by nature is both a good and euill tree: for the good tree is expounded to be the good treaſure of the heart, Matth.12.35. And Saint Paul ſaith, that this good treaſure, which we carrie in earthen veſſels, is the light of the knowledge of God in Chriſt, 2.Cor.4.6. Say if you dare alſo that this treaſure of knowledge is in man by nature. 2. That the good tree is not by nature, but planted by grace, the Scripture euery where teſtifieth, Matth.15.13. Euery plant, which God hath not planted, ſhall be rooted out. God pulleth not vp good trees, but he pulleth vp whatſoeuer is not planted by grace: for that is Gods planting: Ergo, the plant of nature is not a good plant. Iohn 15.3. You are cleane, that is, good branches by the word, Ergo, not by nature: verſ.16. I haue ordained, that ye goe and bring forth fruit: Ergo, they are not ſo ordained by nature.

Thirdly, no good worke is meritorious of life and ſaluation, yet euery good worke is rewarded euerlaſtingly: Matth.10.42. He that giueth a cup of cold water in the name of a diſciple, ſhall not loſe his reward. Ioh.15.16. I haue ordained, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine. The fruit then that remaineth not, and ſhall not be rewarded of Chriſt, is no good fruit.

6. 6. Bellarmine, a naturall man, doth not alwaies in euery worke obey the fleſh, but he may doe ſomething of his naturall propenſion to good, not of his vitious concupiſcence: reſp.ad arg.8.

Contra. Firſt, whatſoeuer is in man, is either of the fleſh, or of the ſpirit, the carnall part or regenerate: I aske then, whether a naturall man can worke by the ſpirite? I thinke they are not ſo abſurd: for then, if a man be by nature borne of the ſpirite, regeneration or ſecond birth were not neceſſary, contrary to our Sauiour, Iohn 3.3. Except a man be borne againe, &c. Then it followeth, that a naturall man working by the fleſh, doth nothing but that which is carnall and euill: for the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, the ſpirit againſt the fleſh, and theſe are contrarie one to the other, Galat.5. verſ.17. but good is not contrarie to good: therefore of the fleſh there is nothing good. 2. S. Paul ſaith, that in the fleſh there dwelleth nothing that is good, Rom.7.18. and euery man doth eyther ſow to his fleſh, or ſow to the ſpirite: but hee that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption, Galath.6.8. a naturall man cannot ſow to the ſpirite; therefore ſowing onely to the fleſh, he reapeth nothing but corruption.

7. 7. Bellar. Without Chriſt we can do no good worke tending to ſaluation; but morall good workes we can, reſponſ.ad loc.9.

Contra. This anſwere S. Paul quite ouerthroweth, in the place euen now alleaged, Galath.6.8. He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption; he that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirite reape life euerlaſting. The workes then of nature, if they be of the ſpirite, are tending to euerlaſting life; if of the fleſh, they are tending to corruption: but a good worke is not a corrupt worke or tending to corruption; therefore the works of the fleſh, are no good workes: neither are there any good fruites, which remaine not vnto life, Iohn.15.16.

8. 8. Bellarm. The Apoſtle by faith, vnderſtandeth not here that faith, whereby wee beleeue in Chriſt, but a perſwaſion of the conſcience, whereby wee are perſwaded a thing to be lawfull, *reſp. ad argum.*10.

Contra. Auguſtine anſwereth; for after this manner the Pelagians obiected, Si hoc de cibis intelligendum putes, &c. If you thinke this is to be vnderſtood of meates: yet the Apoſtle by this general ſentence, would proue this ſpeciall ſinne concerning meates, as it is elſewhere written, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr.11.6.*cont. Iulian.*4.3.

9. 9. Bellarm. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God to eternall ſaluation; but yet the goodneſſe of mans nature, and the workes proceeding from it, doe alſo pleaſe God, *reſponſ. ad argument.*15.

Contra. 1. He is contrarie to himſelfe, for he graunted before, reſponſ.ad 1.argum. that the ſacrifice and other morall workes of a naturall man, Deo non placeant, do not pleaſe God, and yet here hee ſaith; God by them may be pleaſed. 2. That God is not any way pleaſed with vs, without Chriſt, the Scripture is euident, Rom.5.9. We ſhall be ſaued from wrath by him: Epheſ.2.2. We were by nature the children of wrath: Can the children of wrath pleaſe God? 3. If he ſpeake of the naturall goodneſſe of the creature, as it is created of God, I anſwere with Auguſtine, that if in this ſenſe man is good: ſo the diuell alſo, as he is an Angell, is good, and conſequently doth pleaſe God.

10. 10. Bellarm. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of meates, which are vncleane to thoſe that haue an vncleane conſcience, and are not wel perſwaded of them. 2. Or if it be taken generally, then this is the ſenſe, that all the works of Infidels are vncleane, namely, ſuch which proceede from their infidelitie. 3. S. Iohn ſpeaketh of man, not as he is Gods creature, but as he is a ſinner and louer of the world; for in man as he is Gods creature, there be many good things, as his will, vnderſtanding, *reſponſ.ad loc.*14.16.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all the workes of infidels, verſ.16. They are abominable, diſobedient, to euery good worke reprobate. 2. All the works of Infidels muſt needs proceede from their infidelitie, ſeeing their mindes and conſciences are defiled, which is the reaſon the Apoſtle giueth, that nothing is pure vnto the impure. 3. We ſpeake not of the ſubſtance of nature and naturall faculties, which are good as created of God, not onely in men, but in diuels; therefore this anſwere is not to the purpoſe: the Apoſtles argument is very firme and ſtrong: That euery man is eyther a louer of the worlde, or a louer of God; a naturall man, cannot loue God, which is the fruite of the ſpirite, Galath.5.22. and hee that loueth the worlde, loueth that which is in it, and nothing elſe, as the concupiſcence of the eye, of the fleſh, the pride of life: Ergo, a naturall man neyther loueth, nor followeth any thing els. Thus notwithſtanding all theſe popiſh gloſſes, and hereticall ſhiftes, the trueth confirmed by Scripture remayneth, that a man by nature hath no inclination to good, neyther without faith can perfourme any thing acceptable to God.

Auguſtines iudgement, I haue diſperſedly ſhewed in theſe ſeuerall anſweres: S. Ambroſe thus teſtifieth vpon theſe words, Act.3.16. Faith which is by him, hath giuen this man, ὁλοκληρίαν, integram ſanitatem, perfite health: Totum ergo, ſiue palam per cooperatoris gratiæ, ſiue occultè per ſubminiſtrationem ſpiritus, &c. The whole therefore, whether outwardly by the fellow-worker of grace, or ſecretly by the miniſtration of the ſpirite, he beginneth, encreaſeth, finiſheth, whoſe husbandrie and building we are, de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 8. If Chriſt then worke all in vs by faith, then nature is able to worke no good thing at all.

Hierom. dialog. 3. aduerſ. Pelagian. vpon theſe wordes, I am the vine: Like as the braunches doe wither, being cut off from the roote: Ita omnis fortitudo marceſcit, ſi à dei auxilio deſeratur: So all mans ſtrength withereth and periſheth, if it be forſaken of Gods helpe: Ergo, nature (without Gods helpe) can doe nothing.

Their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum boni operis eſt ſuperædificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there is no building of any good worke.

Pet. Lombard. agreeth: Quæ ſine fide fiunt, bona non ſunt, quia omne bonum placet Deo: Thinges done without faith are not good, becauſe euery good thing pleaſeth God: but without faith God is not pleaſed, lib. 2. diſt. 41. liter. A.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE POWER of freewill in morall duties.

The Papiſts.

44. Hæreſ. Man, euen as it now ſtandeth with him in the ſtate of corruption, hath freewill in morall duties, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the euill, that is, to embrace vertue, and eſchue vice, Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 14. Wee will firſt examine their arguments, whereby they vrge certaine abſurdities and impoſſibilities, which would follow, as they think, if there ſhould be no freewill, and then we will anſwere their allegations out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Sinne is either neceſſarie or voluntarie: if the firſt, it cannot be auoided, and ſo conſequently is no ſinne: if the ſecond, it may be auoided: Ergo, man hath freewill, he may auoide ſin if he will, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. This was the very ſame obiection, which the Pelagians, and freewill-men vrged Auguſtine withall many yeeres agoe: Si peccata caueri non poſſunt, peccata non ſunt: If ſinnes cannot be auoided, they are no ſinnes. And againe Iniuſtè iudicarentur homines, ſi ea non faciunt, quæ iubentur impoſſibilia: Men ſhould be vniuſtly condemned, if they doe not theſe things which are commaunded being impoſſible. To this obiection, we neede no better anſwere, than Auguſtine himſelfe maketh.

1 Poſſibile & facile præceptum fuit Adamo datum, ex quo contempto omnes ex eo peccatum traxerunt: Adam receiued both an eaſie and poſſible commaundement, by the contempt and diſobedience whereof, all men are become ſinners: cont. Iulian. 3. 18. And againe he ſaith, Arbitrij libertas ſemel data eſt homini, ſed quia peccauit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem, peccatum habendi neceſſitas: Man had once freewill giuen him, but becauſe he ſinned willingly, there followed as a reward of his ſinne, a neceſſitie of ſinning, cont. Celeſtinum de perfect. iuſtit. Auguſtine therefore teacheth vs to denie this conſequent: Sinne is neceſſarie: Ergo, it is no ſinne. Becauſe that this neceſſitie of ſinne is not by creation, but commeth by the corruption of nature, and proceedeth from Adams voluntarie tranſgreſſion.

2 Poteſt caueri peccatum, poteſt reſiſti, ſed opitulante illo, qui non poteſt falli: Sinne may be reſiſted, it may be auoyded, but by his helpe and aſſiſtance, who cannot be deceiued. Duobus modis cauetur corporis malum, vt non accidat, & ſi acciderit, cito ſanetur: ſic vt non accidat peccatum cauemus dicendo, ne nos inferas in tentationem; vt cito ſanetur, dicimus, dimitte nobis: Two waies we take heede of the bodily diſeaſes, that neither we fall into them; and if we doe, eftſoone to be healed: ſo that we fall not into ſinne, we take heede in ſaying, leade vs not into temptation; that we may be healed from our ſinne, we pray, forgiue vs our ſinnes, &c. de natur. grat. cap. 67. Thus alſo we learne out of Auguſtine to deny this other conſequent, ſinne may be auoided: Ergo, we haue freewill: for ſinne is ſhunned by grace working in vs, not by our owne power.

3 A third conſequent alſo in this argument fayleth: Sinne is voluntarie, therefore it is not neceſſarie; ſay they, it may be auoided. It followeth not: for our will is free, not à neceſſitate, from neceſſitie, but à coactione, from conſtraint or compulſion: Men ſinne voluntarilie, that is, willingly of their owne accorde, not ſo voluntarily as that they may chuſe whether they will ſinne or no.

4 The diuels and damned ſpirites cannot but doe euill, and wickedly, it is therefore in them of neceſſitie, yet they doe verily and truly ſinne: It is then no good conſequent, if men doe euill of neceſſitie, they in ſo doing ſinne not, becauſe they can no otherwiſe chuſe. To this Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is true in generall, that the diuels doe euill neceſſarily; it is falſe in particular, becauſe all the euill which they doe, they doe not of neceſſitie: for it is in their power not to doe many things which they doe, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Contra. Firſt, if it be not true in particular, that diuels doe euill of neceſſitie, neither is it true of men,for they haue greater power to leaue ſome ſinne vndone, which they doe, then the euill ſpirits haue,becauſe their nature is not ſo corrupt,neither are they ſo voyde of all goodnes, as the diuels are. Secondly, if it be true but in generall, that the diuell ſinneth of neceſſitie, and yet is properly ſayd to ſinne,it is ſufficient for our purpoſe; for then that propoſition is not true in generall, Si neceſſarium eſt, non eſt peccatum. If it be neceſſarie, it is no ſinne: for it may be neceſſarie in generall ſaith the Ieſuite,and yet ſhall be ſinne.

Bellarmine further would make vs beleeue, that in defending of freewill they are farre off notwithſtanding from the hereſie of the Pelagians: I pray you let vs ſee how?

The Pelagians affirmed, that a man by freewill might, vitare omnia peccata, auoide and eſchew all ſinnes: but they holde, vitari poſſe ſingula peccata, non omnia, that not all ſinnes, but that euery ſinne may be auoided.

Contra. I pray you,what great difference is there now betweene theſe two? The Pelagians ſay, that all ſinnes in all men by freewill may be auoided: the Papiſts holde, that euery ſinne in euery man, may by freewill be auoyded? Euery man hath not all ſinnes, but euery man hath ſome ſinnes: which ſome notwithſtanding to him,that hath no more, are all his ſinnes. If euery man then may by his freewill take heede of euery his owne ſinnes, then of all his ſinnes: for if there bee any one ſinne,which it is not in his power to eſchew,by the Ieſuites rule,it is no ſinne. Therefore vntill the Ieſuite can better diſcharge himſelfe,we muſt needes tell him, that there is not one haires breadth betweene the Pelagian and popiſh hereſie about freewill.

*Argum.*2. If there were not in man freewill, there ſhould be no place left for reward or puniſhment: for if a man doe euill of neceſſitie, he deſerueth no puniſhment,and if he doe well vnwillingly,he is worthie no rewarde: *Bellarm. cap.*15.

Anſw. The very ſame obiection was moued to Auguſtine: Vbi neceſſitas, ibi non eſt corona: Where there is neceſſitie, there is no crowne, or reward. He anſwereth: 1. In recte faciendo ideo nullum eſt vinculum neceſſitatis, quia libertas eſt charitatis, quæ diffuſa eſt in cordibus noſtris per ſpiritum ſanctum: In well doing there is no bond of neceſſitie, becauſe freedome or libertie commeth of loue,which is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt: *Auguſt. de natur. grat. cap.*67. that is, God of vnwilling maketh vs willing, and inſpireth a loue and deſire of good things into our hearts: and thus the reward is giuen to thoſe that worke willingly,yet of grace. 2. Alſo puniſhment is due vnto ſinne,though men by nature cannot chuſe but ſinne: the Apoſtle ſheweth the reaſon: By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne, Rom.5.12. Adams ſinne was voluntarie, and therefore worthie of puniſhment: the ſame ſinne, with death,the reward thereof, Adam hath propagated to his poſteritie: ſo that wee are both partakers of the ſinne, and the puniſhment.

*Argum.*3. If there be no freewill,then all men ſhould either be good or euill; and if they be good,none ſhould be better then other; if they be euill,none ſhould be worſe then other: whereof then is this difference that ſome are good,ſome euill; and ſome are euill in the meane, ſome in the extreame, but from the libertie of mans will. Gods election is not the cauſe: for without freewill election maketh none good? for then infants and mad men might be good by election without freewill, *Bellarmin.c.*16.

Anſw. Firſt,the difference and ſeparation of men,the Apoſtle ſheweth to proceede onely from God,and not from the will of man, 1.Cor.4.7. Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt thou, which thou haſt not receiued? Secondly,it is true that election requireth freewill to make men good: but then will is firſt made free by grace; as Ambroſ. Virtus nolentium nulla eſt, ipſa gratia hoc agit, vt in eo, quem vocat primam ſibi famulam præparet voluntatem: Indeede vertue in thoſe that are vnwilling there is none,but grace firſt of all maketh the will an obedient ſeruant in them which are called: *lib.*2. *de vocat. gent.c.*9. Thirdly, and in that infants hauing no freewill yet are ſaued by election,it ſheweth, that not freewill maketh the difference,but election. Fourthly,the cauſe then why ſome are good, ſome euill, is becauſe all haue not grace; the reaſon why ſome are better then others, is,that all haue not the ſame meaſure of grace,as Ambroſe excellently ſaith, Præter illam generalem gratiam parciùs & occultiùs hominum corda pulſantem, excellentiore opere, largiore munere, potentiore virtute vocatio ſpecialis exeritur: Beſide that generall calling,more ſparingly beating vpon mens hearts, the ſpeciall calling ſheweth it ſelfe by a more excellent operation, a larger gift, a ſtronger power, *lib.*2. *de vocat. gent. c.*8. There is then a generall calling and a ſpeciall, a more excellent worke of the ſpirite,and a leſſe excellent,a larger gift, and a ſmaller: as is the difference of the grace that worketh,ſo is the difference in them vpon whom it worketh. Now let vs ſee what places of Scripture they obiect againſt vs.

*Argum.*1. The lawe ſaith, Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine: Honor thy father and mother,&c. and many other precepts there are in the word of God, which were giuen in vaine,if man had not freewill to chuſe or refuſe them: *Bellarm.cap.*18.

Anſw. Firſt,the precepts of the law are not giuen in vaine, though it lye not in mans power to keepe them: for the vſe and end of the law is as a Schoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, Galat.3. verſ.24. So Auguſtine ſaith, Ad hoc lex præcepit iſta,vt cum in his implendis homo deficeret,non ſe extollat ſuperbia tumidus, ſed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus: For this cauſe did the law commaund theſe things,that man ſeeing himſelfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, ſhould haue no cauſe to ſwell in pride,but being wearied in himſelfe, to flye to grace for ſuccour: cont.Celeſt.de perfect.iuſtit. Secondly,againe he ſaith, Homo gratia iuuatur,ne ſine cauſa voluntati eius iubeatur: Man is aſſiſted by grace,leſt his will ſhould be commaunded in vaine. Man hath not freewill of himſelfe,but is enabled by grace to doe that is commaunded.

De grat.& liber.arbit.c.6.

Argum.2. The Scripture offereth diuers promiſes vnder certaine conditions: as Iſay.1.19. If ye conſent and obey,ye ſhall eate the good things of the land. Matth 19. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. If it be in our power to performe theſe conditions,then haue we freewill: if not, to what end are they propounded? Bellarm.cap.19.

Anſw. Firſt,if theſe conditions be poſſible,then it is poſſible to keepe the commaundements, which the Apoſtle denieth: for therefore is euery one that is of the workes of the lawe vnder the curſe,becauſe they cannot keepe it,Galath.3.10. Secondly,by this argument,a mans freewill is ſufficient to performe theſe conditions without grace: for if man cannot performe them of himſelfe, the ſame queſtion remaineth, why they are propounded to him,that cannot keepe them. Thirdly, Auguſtine ſheweth the reaſon of theſe conditionall precepts: Vt eſſet vbi homo ſe inſpiceret,&c. That man might therein behold himſelfe, and know which way to turne himſelfe, quare gratularetur, quid precaretur, for what to giue thankes,and what to pray for, or begge, epiſt ad Hieronym. Theſe are ſufficient cauſes of theſe precepts, that man may ſee his owne infirmitie and weakenes,and pray for grace to aſſiſt him, and giue thankes for the ſame receiued. Fourthly, againe,whereas the Pelagians obiected this very place vrged, Iſay.1.19. Saint Auguſtine maketh this anſwere: Non ob aliud ſuperbis data iſta præcepta ſunt, quam vt in ſuis viribus deficientes in quibus confidebant, liberatorem requirerent: Theſe precepts were for no other cauſe giuen to the proude Iewes,then that failing in their owne ſtrength,wherein they truſted,they ſhould ſeeke for an helper or deliuerer, cont.Celeſtin.de perfect.iuſtit.

Argum.3. The Lord ſaid to Cain: Vnto thee his deſire ſhall be ſubiect, and thou ſhalt rule ouer him, Geneſ.4.7. This the Ieſuite ſaith muſt bee vnderſtoode of ſinne, that it ſhould be in his power, and if hee would,hee might ſubdue and ouercome it: Ergo, there is freewill in man, cap.22.Bellarm.

Anſw. Firſt,this place cannot in any good ſenſe be applied to ſinne, but is more fitly and properly referred to Abel,ouer whom the Lord giueth vnto Cain the dominion of the birthright: for firſt,the text is, his deſire,&c. which very improperly ſhould be ſpoken of ſinne, which is a thing deſired,it hath no deſire: ſecondly,becauſe this promiſe made to Cain (if we vnderſtand it of ſin) was neuer accompliſhed, Thou ſhalt rule ouer it: and ſo God ſhould be found vntrue of his promiſe. Secondly,if we ſhould admit the Ieſuites expoſition, that the Lord here meaneth ſin, Auguſtines interpretation commeth neerer the trueth,who readeth thus: Ad te conuerſio eius, i. nulli alij tribuat peccatum, quam ſibi.& tum quiſque dominatur peccato, cum id ſibi non defendendo præpoſuerit, ſed pœnitendo ſubiecerit: The conuerſion, or the turning thereof, ſhall be towards thee: that is,let him attribute his ſinne to none elſe,but to himſelfe: and then euery man ruleth ouer ſinne, when he doth not preferre it,by defending it, but by repentance doth bring it vnder: De ciuitat. Dei.lib.15.cap.7.

Argum.4. Euery where in the Scripture God complaineth of the ſtubbornes and wickednes of men: Ierem.32.23. They obeyed not thy voyce, nor hearkened to thy law. Matth.23.37. How often would I haue gathered thy children together, and thou wouldeſt not? Act.7.51. O ye of vncircumciſed hearts and eares. If it be in a mans power not to ſinne, then hath he freewill; if it be not,God complaineth in vaine,ſeeing man cannot otherwiſe chuſe. 2. Againe,Deuter.30.14. This commaundement is not hid from thee,neither farre off,it is in thy mouth and in thy heart to doe it: *Ergo,*man hath freewill to keepe Gods commaundements, Bellarm.lib.5 de grat.cap.20.

Anſw. Firſt,God iuſtly complaineth of the wickednes of men, becauſe, though it be not in their power to beleeue without grace, yet it is in their power to reſiſt grace: as Ambroſe ſaith, Qui veniunt dei auxilio diriguntur; qui non veniunt, ſua poteſtate reluctantur: They that come,are directed by Gods helpe; they that come not, reſiſt by their owne power, lib.2.de vocat.Gent.cap.9. Secondly,though now Adams poſteritie be yoked with a neceſſarie bondage of ſinne, yet in him that firſt tranſgreſſed it was voluntarie, and therefore they are iuſtly blamed. So Bernard ſaith, ſerm.81.in Cantic. Neſcio quo miro modo ipſa ſibi voluntas in deterius mutata neceſſitatem faciat,&c. I cannot tell how it commeth to paſſe,that the will being corrupted by ſinne,doth make a neceſſitie to it ſelfe,that neither neceſſitie,ſeeing it is voluntarie,can excuſe the will,nor the will being entiſed,can exclude neceſſitie. And Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Conuenientiſſ.eſt,vt malum meritum prioris eſſet natura ſequentis,&c. It is moſt conuenient, that the euill merit of the firſt ſhould be the nature of the next: de liber.arbit.lib.3.cap.20. So then it is a voluntarie neceſſitie wherewith Adams ſeede is enwrapped: and therefore is iuſtly blamed. Thirdly, Saint Paul expoundeth that place in Deuter. of the worde of faith, Rom.10.8. This is the word of faith,which we preach: If then obedience of the law be by faith, it is of grace, and not of mans freewill.

1. Argum.5. Firſt, Deuter.30.19. I haue ſet before you life and death, therefore chuſe life, &c. Ioſh.24.
2. verſ.15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerue. Secondly, 2.Cor.9.7. As euery man purpoſeth in his hart,
3. let him giue not grudgingly, or as of neceſſitie: Almes then proceedeth from a mans freewill. Thirdly, 1.Corin.7.37. He that ſtandeth firme in his heart, that he hath no neede, but hath power ouer his owne will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart, that hee will keepe his virgine, &c. Ergo, it is in a mans power to keepe his virginitie, Bellarm.cap.23.

Anſw. Firſt, this choiſe and election was not in their owne power: 1. but as the Apoſtle expoundeth this place, the word is in thy heart, that is the word of faith, Rom.10.8. By the word of faith then they made this choiſe. 2. The people alſo anſwere, God forbid, or farre be it from vs, that wee ſhould forſake the Lord, verſ.16. which is a ſecret inuocation, and a calling for grace to be directed in their choiſe. 3. If Abrahams ſeruant praieth to be directed to make a good choiſe of a wife for his maſters ſonne, Geneſ.24. how much more haue wee neede to be directed by grace in the heauenly choiſe? 4. How elſe ſhould that Scripture be true: It is not in man to direct his way, Iere.10. verſ.23. if the choiſe were in a mans freewill.

Secondly, almes muſt proceede from a willing and cheerefull heart: but it is God which firſt maketh the heart willing by his grace: as the Apoſtle ſheweth in the ſame place, verſ.8. God is able to make all grace abound towards you: Verſ.15. Thankes be vnto God for his vnſpeakable gift: which hee expoundeth, verſ.13. to be their liberall diſtribution.

This very anſwere S. Auguſtine made to the Pelagians, vrging that place to Philemon, verſ.14. That it be not as it were of neceſſitie, but willingly: Quaſi aliter ſit voluntarium, &c. As though it is otherwiſe become willing, or voluntarie, but that God doth worke in vs the will and deede, according to his good pleaſure: cont.Celeſtin.de perfect.iuſtic.

Thirdly, 1. The place is not to be vnderſtood of keeping or not keeping a mans virginitie: but the Apoſtle giueth a rule for parents when to keep their virgines and daughters vnmaried, when to beſtow them in mariage. Thus Auguſtine expoundeth this place, ſhewing that it is vnuſuall in the ſcripture to take a virgine for virginitie, 57.quaeſt.ſuper Numer. So alſo Theophylact. Primaſius, Sedulius, with others, expound it; as Eſpenc. ſheweth, de cland.matrim.cap.7.

2. The circumſtance of the place giueth this ſenſe: firſt, If it be vncomely that his virgine paſſe the flower of her age, 36. this ſhould be improperly ſpoken of a mans virginitie, which is not ſo limited to the flower of age. Secondly, the Syriake tranſlation readeth, Si non tradiderit eam viro, If hee hath not giuen her to a husband: But how can a mans virginitie be giuen to a husband? Thirdly, the Arabian tranſlation, verſ.37. readeth in ſtead of virgine, daughter, to put all out of doubt.

3. If it ſhould be ſo vnderſtood of a mans virginitie, it maketh more againſt freewill, than for it: for euery man hath his proper gift, verſ.7. and here his will dependeth vpon his owne need or neceſſitie: verſ.36. If neede ſo require let them be married: verſ.37. If hee hath no neede, but hath power ouer his owne will, he may keepe his virgine. So then, whether it be referred to the neede of his virgine, that is daughter, or to his own neceſſitie, his will is not abſolutely to diſpoſe, but as his occaſion and neede is. This text then is improperly alleaged for freewill.

4. Thus alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagiãs, obiecting the very ſame place, 1.Cor.7.36. Quod vult faciat, Let him doe what hee will, 1. Quaſi pro magno habendum ſit velle nubere, &c. As though it were ſo great a matter to haue a will to marrie, where the queſtion is of the aſſiſtance of the diuine mercie. 2. Aut prodeſt aliquid velle, &c. Or as though it profited any thing here to will, vnleſſe God by his prouidence, whereby he gouerneth all things, do ioyne the man and the woman: cont.Celeſtin.de perfect.iuſtic.

Laſtly, Bellarmine heapeth vp a great companie of fathers as witneſſes for freewill: to whom I make this generall anſwere: Firſt, that ſome of them are counterfeit authors, as Clemens, alleaged c.25.3. Secondly, ſome had their notable errors, as Origen, Tertullian. Thirdly, ſome were led with the error of their time, as Chryſoſtome, and ſome other Greeke fathers, which attributed too much to mans freewill. And hereof Eſpencaeus a learned Papiſt doth well admoniſh vs: Hîc & penè vbique Graeci περὶ τȣ͂ αὐτεξουσίȣ cautè legendi: Heere and almoſt euery where the Greekes of freewill muſt be cauteloully read, that it is no marueile, that in their catalogues of hereſie Pelagius is not reckoned. Fourthly, ſome of them extoll freewill, hauing to deale with the contrarie hereſie of the Manichees, who altogether tooke away the vſe of mans will, imputing ſin to the neceſſitie of nature. Thus Auguſtine is to be taken in his bookes againſt the Manichees: as he confeſſeth himſelfe lib.1.retract. that in his booke againſt Adamantius, he affirmed, In hominis eſſe poteſtate, That it is in mans power to chaunge his will: whereas (ſaith he) this power is of God. So Hierome excuſeth himſelf for enueying ſo much againſt mariage in his booke againſt Iouinian. Aliud eſt γυμναστικῶς ſcribere, aliud δογματικῶς, aliud docere diſcipulum, aliud vincere aduerſarium: It is one thing to write of ſtrife, another for inſtruction; one thing to teach a learner, another to confute a gainſayer, apolog. ad Pammach. Fiftly, ſome haue retracted afterward, which before they had written of freewill: as Auguſtine retracteth that ſaying in his bookes ad Simplician. Quamuis ſit in vniuſcuiuſq; poteſtate vt velit, non tamen vt poſſit: Though it be in euery mans power to will, yet not to doe, or be able: for (ſaith he) the will alſo muſt be prepared of God, lib.2.retract. Sixtly, the reſt of the fathers ſpeake of freewill: firſt, either as it was giuen to Adam in the creation. Secondly, or as it is made free by grace. Thirdly, or as it is free onely from compulſion and conſtraint: all which we graunt.

The Proteſtants.

THat man hath no freewill of himſelfe in morall duties, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the euill, to embrace vertue, and decline from vice, but as he is wholy directed and gouerned by the ſpirit of God: and that not only the beginning of our calling is of God, but that the drawing and inclining of the will and conſent thereunto, is a worke alſo of the ſpirit: thus we make it euident by the word of God.

*Argum.*1. Pſalm.119.36. Incline mine heart vnto thy teſtimonies, and not to couetouſnes: Ergo, it is God that inclineth the heart.

Anſw. 1. God inclineth the heart, by inward perſwaſion, and inuiting, ſo that notwithſtanding it is left in the power of the will to conſent vnto Gods calling: *Bellarm.cap.29.reſponſ.ad teſtim.*3.

Contra. 1. The Prophet Dauid in the ſame place ſaith, Deduc me in ſemita· Leade me in the path of thy commaundements, verſ.35. And our Sauiour ſaith, that his father muſt draw vs, or elſe we cannot come vnto him, Iohn 6.44. Theſe phraſes of Scripture, to incline, to leade, to draw, doe ſignifie a more forcible and powerfull calling, than is found in the bare act of perſwading, inuiting, alluring, &c. 2. If God ſhould onely call vs by perſwaſion, he ſhould haue no greater power in mouing vnto good, then Sathan hath in tempting to euill: for Sathan alſo dealeth by perſwaſion: Suadere & ſollicitare poteſt diabolus, cogere non poteſt, non extorquet à nobis conſenſum, ſed petit: The diuell doth ſollicite and perſwade, he cannot conſtraine vs, he doth not extort or wring from vs our conſent, but craueth it: *Auguſt.homil.*12. 3. If God onely moue the heart by enticiſing and alluring it, not by an actuall drawing and enforcing, then man ſhould haue greater power ouer his will, than God hath: for many times the will of man without perſwaſion, of it voluntarie motion is inclined to euill: but God is greater than the heart. And Auguſtine ſaith, Deus magis habet in ſua poteſtate hominum voluntates, quam ipſi ſuas: God hath greater power ouer the wils of men, then they haue themſelues: *de corrept.& grat.cap.*14. Ergo, God worketh otherwiſe in the will than by perſwaſion.

Anſw. 2. God indeede doth worke in vs by his grace to giue our conſent to his calling: Sed hoc facit adiuuando infirmitatem, non tollendo libertatem: But in thus doing, he helpeth our infirmitie, he taketh not away our freedome or libertie, Bellarm.ibid. So his opinion is, that grace and our freewill worke together.

Contra. 1. One of the Ieſuites anſwers ouerthroweth the other: for before he ſaid, Inclinat Deus corda noſtra non regendo, ſed ſuadendo: God inclineth the heart, not by enforcing it, but by perſwading: but here he ſaith, Quid aliud facit Deus, cum nos inclinat, quam operari vt conſentiamus? What elſe doth God, what he inclineth vs, then ſo worke, that we giue our conſent? To worke then and to doe, is more than to moue and perſwade. 2 Our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing: as a braunch cut off from the ſtocke withereth, and is altogether fruitleſſe, Iohn 15.5,6. And Saint Paul ſaith, That in his fleſh dwelleth no good thing, Rom.7.18. that is, in the naturall man: Ergo, there is no good motion in the wil of it ſelfe, but all goodnes is wrought in vs wholy by grace: it is not then partly of our ſelues, and partly of grace. So Auguſtine ſaith, Laborant homines inuenire in voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, quod non ſit ex Deo; quod quomodo inueniri poſſit ignoro: Men doe labour to finde ſome goodnes in the will, that ſhould be of our ſelues, and not of God: but I am altogether ignorant how any ſuch thing ſhould be found: *lib.1.cont.Pelag.cap.*18.

*Argum.*2. The ſeruants of ſinne are not free, but by nature we are all the ſeruants of ſinne, Rom.6.17. Ergo, we are not free, and ſo conſequently by nature haue no freewill.

Bellarmine: The ſeruice of ſinne is contrarie to the libertie from ſinne, but it taketh not away the libertie of nature, but that notwithſtanding a man by his freewill, aſſiſted by Gods helpe, may ſhake off the ſeruitude of ſinne, reſponſ.ad 4.teſtim.cap.29.

Anſw. 1. Neither doe wee conclude from this place, that the libertie of nature is taken away from freewill: for as your Maſter diſtinguiſheth, there is libertas gratiæ à peccato, libertas naturæ à neceſſitate: lib.2.diſt.25.q. There is a libertie of grace from ſinne, and a libertie of nature from neceſſitie, coaction or conſtraint. Wee graunt that mans will worketh freely, that is without conſtraint, but not freely, that is without ſinne.

2. That mans will is a ſeruant to ſinne the Apoſtle ſheweth, verſ.19, becauſe all our members were ſeruants to iniquitie : if all, then the will alſo, which is a member and facultie of the ſoule. And verſ.20.When ye were ſeruants to ſinne, ye were freed from righteouſnes: If then the mans will by nature be ſinfull and ſo voide of righteouſnes, how can it haue any inclination at all vnto it?

3. If the will cannot riſe from ſinne vnleſſe it be ayded by grace, then is it not free. A priſoner, though he be not fettered, yet if the priſon doores be ſhut, ſo that he cannot come forth, vnleſſe the doores be opened, is notwithſtanding a priſoner ſtill.

*Argum.*3. Ioh.15.3. As the branch cannot beare fruite of it ſelfe, vnleſſe it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me: Ergo, without the grace of Chriſt mans will can doe nothing.

Bellarm. This place ſheweth the neceſſitie of grace, that mans will can doe nothing without it, but it excludeth not freewill, *reſponſ.ad argum.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, if the branch can bring forth no fruit at all without the vine, nor mans will do nothing without Chriſt, as he ſaith, verſ.5.Without me ye can doe nothing; then the whole actiuitie of our will is of grace. Secondly, the braunch indeede is as a trunke, wherein the iuyce of the vine runneth; it hath of it ſelfe rine and barke, but no life or growth without the ſappe of the ſtocke: ſo man hath power by nature to will, to moue, to affect, deſire, but a diſpoſition to goodnes it hath none at all without grace. This place taketh not away the naturall power of mans will, but the actiuitie thereof vnto goodneſſe it vtterly excludeth.

*Argum.*4. Saint Paul ſaith, What haſt thou that thou haſt not receiued? 1.Corinth.4.7. Wee haue then no good thing of our ſelues: Ergo, neither haue wee any freewill or inclination to that is good.

Anſw. Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, ſed hoc dono accepto Domini ſumus actionum,&c. Wee haue freewill by the gift of God, and hauing receiued this gift, then we work freely, and are Lords and commaunders of our actions: Bellarm.ibid.reſp.ad ſextum teſtimon.

Contra. The Ieſuites anſwere in effect is this, that to haue a deſire and inclination to good things, is of God, becauſe freewill, from whence commeth this deſire, is the gift of God: ſo that this receiuing, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, hee would haue referred to the creation, when God beſtowed this gift of freewill generally vpon all. This anſwere is eaſily ouerthrowne: firſt, S.Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch gifts as are receiued by grace, and not ſuch as were beſtowed in the creation: for the benefits of creation are generall, and indifferently diſtributed to all: but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch graces, as were diuerſly beſtowed vpon men, wherein one excelled another, one ſwelled againſt another, verſ.6. one was diſcerned, that is, preferred before another. Therefore the Apoſtle cannot vnderſtand the gift of freewill, as it was conferred vpon all in the creation, but as it is giuen vnto ſome by grace.

Secondly, the Pelagians did expound this place alſo, euen as the Ieſuite doth, de bonis naturæ, of the gifts of nature: whom Auguſtine confuteth thus: Nunquid per hæc dona communia homines diſcernuntur ab hominibus? Men are not ſeparated or diſcerned one from another by theſe common gifts of nature: but the Apoſtle ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? Againe, Non dicit Apoſtolus, quid potes habere, quod non accepiſti vt poſſis habere, ſed nunquid habes? poſſibilitas habendi fidẽ non diſcernit,&c. The Apoſtle ſaith not, what canſt thou haue, which thou didſt not receiue a poſſibilitie by nature to haue? but what haſt thou alreadie? for it is not the poſſibilitie to haue faith, or any other grace, which doth diſcerne men, but the hauing of faith it ſelfe: *de prædeſtinat.lib.*1.*cap.*5. This place then cannot bee vnderſtoode of the poſſibilitie of freewill, which ſhould bee in euery man by nature: but of thoſe good thinges that are really and actually in vs: all which wee doe receiue of God.

Thirdly, the Ieſuite is driuen to borrow an anſwere from the old heretikes the Pelagians: for thus they ſaid: Non contra gratiam diſputo,(inquit Pelagianus) quia liberum arbitrium defendo: ſi enim hominem creauit Deus, & illi liberũ arbitrium donauit, quicquid homo poteſt de libero arbitrio, cuius gratiæ debetur, niſi eius, qui eum condidit cum libero arbitrio? I doe not reaſon againſt grace (ſaith the Pelagian) while I defend freewill: for if God created man, and gaue him freewill, whatſoeuer a man is able to do by his freewill, to whoſe grace is he indebted, but to his, who made him with freewill? The very ſame anſwere doth the Ieſuite giue vs here, that whatſoeuer a man doth by vertue of his freewill, it is by the gift of God, becauſe freewill is his gift. Et nos iſtam, qua conditi ſumus, quanquam hoc nomine appellatam minime legerimus, tamen quia gratis data eſt, gratiam fatemur, ſed oſtendimus maiorem eſſe iſtam, qua Chriſtiani ſumus: And we alſo doe acknowledge the grace of creation, whereby we were made, becauſe it is freely giuen, though we finde it no where called by the name of grace, but yet there is a greater grace, and more properly ſo called, by the which grace we are made Chriſtians: *Auguſt.de verbis Apoſtol.ſerm.*11.

*Celeſtin.epiſtol.decretal.*1.*cap.*9. Ita Deus in cordibus hominum, atque in ipſo libero operatur arbitrio, vt ſancta cogitatio, pium conſilium omniſq; motus bonæ voluntatis ex Deo ſit, quia per illum aliquid boni poſſumus, ſine quo nihil poſſumus: quod igitur tempus interuenit, in quo eius non egeamus auxilio: So God worketh in the hearts of men, and in freewill, that euery holie thought, godly counſell, good motion of the will is of God : ſo by him wee are able to doe ſome good, without whom wee can nothing : there can be therefore no time, when we ſtand not in neede of his helpe.

Further, Saint Auguſtine thus teſtifieth : Liberum arbitrium & ad malum & bonum nos habere confitendum eſt,&c. We muſt confeſſe that we haue freewill both to good, and euill : but in doing of euill euery man is free from righteouſnes, and the ſeruant of ſinne; but in doing of good no man is free, vnleſſe he be freed by him, that ſaid, If the ſonne make you free, then are you free indeed, lib. de corrept. & grat. cap. 1.

Againe, Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem : Mans will by libertie obtaineth not grace, but by grace libertie or freedome, cap. 8. Ergo, the libertie of the will is wholy of grace.

To this purpoſe, Auguſtine fitly compareth liberum arbitrium iumento, gratiam ſeſſori : freewill to the beaſt, grace to the rider : like as the beaſt is guided by the riders hand to goe ſtraight in the way, ſic liberum arbitrium gratiæ regimine regitur: ſo freewill is directed by grace, &c. cont. Pelagian. artic. 3. Like as the rider then giueth all the direction and regiment to the beaſt ; which indeede goeth, and trauaileth, but cannot goe right in the way without the rider : ſo mans will hath no inclination to the right way, without the illumination of grace.

Bernard vſeth this ſimilitude : Quis cum ad ignem venerit algens, &c. Like as a man comming frozen and cold to the fire, doubteth not, but he had his heate from the fire : ſic ſpiritus in nobis operatur omnia: ſo the ſpirit worketh all in vs: in die Pentecoſt. ſerm. 1. Like as then there is no heate but from the fire, when a man is ſtarke with colde; ſo there is no goodneſſe in mans will, but from grace.

Saint Ambroſe, vpon theſe words, 1. Corinth. 2. 12. We haue receiued, not the ſpirit of the world, but the ſpirit of God, that wee might know the things that are giuen vs of God : Vnde ſiquis eſt, qui aliqua ſe exiſtimat habere bona, quorum non deus largitor eſt, &c. If therefore there be any man, which thinketh he hath any good thing, whereof God is not the giuer, but himſelfe the author, he hath not the ſpirit of God, but of the world, epiſt. 84. The Papiſts then haue not the ſpirit of God, who aſcribe part of the good worke vnto grace, part vnto freewill, but not all vnto grace.

Saint Hierome vpon theſe words, Iohn 6. No man can come vnto me, except my father draw him : Qui trahitur, non ſponte currit, &c. He that is drawne, doth not runne of himſelfe, ſed aut tardus, aut inuitus adducitur, but is brought either ſlowly, or vnwillingly : lib. 3. aduerſ. Pelagian. Mans will then hath no aptnes or inclination of it ſelfe at all to come vnto God.

Peter Lombard. out of Auguſtine alleageth, Iuſtitiam in homine Deus ſolus operatur: God onely worketh vertue and righteouſneſſe in man, lib. 2. diſtinct. 28. a. Ibid. liter. d. It is in mans power to chaunge his will to the better : ſed ea poteſtas nulla eſt, niſi à Deo detur: but that is no power at all, vnleſſe it be giuen of God : Ergo, in mans will, without grace, there is no power at all.

Laſtly, this doctrine, that man hath no freewill by nature to doe that which is good, hath been ſealed by the blood of Martyrs : Richard Woodman Martyr, againſt mans freewill, alleadged theſe places of Scripture : Euery good gift commeth from aboue, Iam. 1. 17. Of his owne will begate he vs: Ibid. verſ. 18. It is God which worketh in vs the will and the deede, Philip. 2. 13. Ergo, mans owne will in good things is little worth, Fox pag. 1995. For this truth, agreeable to the Scripture, ſuffered alſo Thomas Spicer, Iohn Deny, Edmund Poole, becauſe they affirmed no mortall man to haue freewill in himſelfe to doe good or euill : Fox pag. 1912. articul. 7.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE POWER OF freewill in diuine and ſupernaturall things.

HEre wee are to handle theſe two ſeuerall poynts : firſt, whether the ſtrength of freewill be vtterlie loſt by the tranſgreſſion of Adam. Secondly, what power it hath in ſpirituall matters.

The Papiſts.

FReewill, they ſay, is not vtterly extinguiſhed, but onely abated in ſtrength, and attenuated : Bellarm. de grat. lib. 5. cap. 30. Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 1. 45. Error.

Further, Bellarmine thus explaneth his minde, that Adams freewill in two things was ſtronger than ours : firſt, Adam was free not onely in the very act of willing, but in the execution alſo, ſo are not wee : for though we haue libertie to will, yet wee are hindred by the corruption of nature from executing our will. Secondly, wee haue neede of Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance againſt temptation, ſo had not Adam, but was able by the ſtrength of his freewill, without further helpe, to reſiſt temptation, lib. 5. de grat. cap. 27. So his opinion is, that in the act of willing good or euill, we are as free as Adam was.

Argum. The Rhemiſts gather by the parable of the man in the Goſpell, that fell among theeues, and was left for halfe dead, Luk. 10. verſ. 30. that neither vnderſtanding, nor freewill, nor other powers of the ſoule, are vtterly extinguiſhed and taken away, but onely wounded by the ſinne of Adam.

Anſ. 1. It is but a feeble collection, and of ſmall force, which they do draw from this allegorie: for allegories and ſimilitudes doe not hold in all things, but wherein onely they are compared: for our Sauiour Chriſt alleaged not this parable to any ſuch end, but onely to ſhew, that we ought to doe good vnto all, and that they are our neighbours which doe vs good, though they be ſtrangers and vnknowne vnto vs.

2. We denie not, that the powers of the ſoule, yea and freewill alſo in ſubſtance remaine ſtill, but that the propertie and qualitie of them is extinguiſhed, that they haue now no naturall inclination vnto good. Auguſtine ſaith well of this matter: Semper eſt in nobis voluntas libera, ſed non eſt ſemper bona: gratia autem Dei ſemper eſt bona, & per hanc fit, vt homo ſit bonæ voluntatis, qui prius fuit malæ: There is alwaies in vs freewill, but it is not alwaies good: but the grace of God is alwaies good, and by this grace it commeth to paſſe, that man, who had before an euill will, hath now a good will: de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 15.

The Proteſtants.

THat the ſtrength of freewill in good things is vtterly decayed in man, not wounded and maimed onely, but wholy loſt, till it be reſtored by grace: and that we haue not the like libertie in the act of willing as Adam had in his creation, thus we ſhew it.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, When we were dead by our ſinnes, he hath quickened vs in Chriſt, Epheſ. 2. 1. 5. Ye which were dead in your ſinnes, hath he quickened together with him, Coloſſ. 2. 13. He ſaith not, as in the Parable, ἡμιθανῆ, they left him for halfe dead, but νεκρὸς, plaine dead men indeede: As Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Vt homo redeat ad iuſtitiam, opus habet medico, quia ſanus non eſt; opus habet viuificatore, quia mortuus eſt: Man before hee can returne to doe righteouſly, hath neede of a Phiſition, becauſe hee is ſicke; had neede of a quickener and reuiuer, becauſe hee is dead: de natur. grat. cap. 23. Man then is not onely ſicke and wounded, but plaine dead, and voide of all life, quicknes or agilitie in good things.

Auguſtine ſaith yet more plainly: Cum peccauit primus homo, non in parte aliqua, ſed in tota, qua conditus eſt natura deliquit: When the firſt man ſinned, he did not offend in any one part, but wholy in that nature wherein he was created: Contr. Pelag. articul. 3. And in another place, Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in ipſa radice vitiata: Our nature was wholy corrupted by freewill, in the verie roote or originall, that is in Adam: in Iohan. tract. 87. Ergo, all the powers both of bodie and ſoule, are wholy corrupt and decaied in ſpirituall things.

Innocentius epiſtol. decretal. 25. Liberum arbitrium Adam perpeſſus, dum ſuis inconſultius vtitur bonis, in præuaricationis profundo demerſus eſt, & nihil quomodo inde ſurgere poſſit, inuenit: Adam ſuffering his freewill, while he vnaduiſedly vſeth his gifts, was drowned in tranſgreſſion, and found (nothing) in himſelfe whereby to riſe from thence againe: Ergo, there remaineth in our freewill by nature no abilitie at all to that which is good.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. can. 25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium, vt nullus poſtea aut diligere Deum ſicut oportuit, aut credere in Deum, aut operari propter Deũ poſſit, niſi gratia eum præuenerit: By the ſinne of the firſt man freewill is ſo turned and empayred, that none ſince can loue God, as they ought, beleeue in God, or worke according to God, vnleſſe grace preuent them.

Bernard hath this ſaying: Homo non omnino amiſit arbitrium, i. iudicium rationis, in iudicando & diſcernendo, quanquam libertatem ſuam amiſerit, in eligendo & agendo, &c. Man hath not altogether loſt his will, that is, iudgement of reaſon in iudging and diſcerning, although he hath loſt his libertie in chuſing and working: for a puniſhment of his ſinne, and a teſtimonie of his naturall dignitie loſt, his will is ſet for a ſigne, but captiued: de vit. ſolitar. So his ſentence is, that man hath altogether loſt the libertie of his will, though the facultie of his will doe ſtill remaine.

THE SECOND POINT OR ARTICLE, OF the ſtrength and power of freewill in ſpirituall things.

The Papiſts.

46.Error. THey ſay not, that a man by his freewill onely is able to liue well, or to obtaine eternall life: for Bellarmine prooueth at large, that a man hath no power of himſelfe, without the eſpeciall aſſiſtance of grace, either to beleeue, lib. 6. cap. 2. or to prepare himſelfe to receiue grace, cap. 5. or to loue God, cap. 7. or to will any thing appertaining to ſaluation, without the helpe of Gods grace, cap. 4. This then is their opinion, that though the will of man be not able of it ſelfe only to do any thing in ſpiritual actions, yet being aided & aſſiſted by grace, it may: ſo that they attribute part to grace, part to freewill: the firſt motion and ſtirring of the heart they ſay is onely of God; and here the will worketh nothing at all: then it is the part of freewill to apprehend grace offered, to giue conſent vnto it, and to worke together with it: Trident. Concil. ſeſſ.6. cap.5. canon.4. The Rhemiſts alſo thus define the matter: Though our election, calling, firſt comming to God, be not wholly or principally vpon our will or workes, yet our willing and working of any good to our ſaluation, is the ſecondarie cauſe: Gods ſpeciall motion, grace, aſſiſtance is the principall, Rom.9 ſect.4. This then is their meaning, that Gods grace and mans freewill doe worke actiuely together: as the Rhemiſts note, The Gentiles, though they beleeued ſpecially by Gods grace and preordination, yet they beleeued alſo by their owne freewill: Rhem. Act.13. ſect.2.

Bellarmine more particularly doth thus determine: firſt the grace, whereby men are firſt ſtirred and moued vnto any good thing, worketh alone without the helpe of our will: Nihil omnino in hoc genere ex ſe facere homo poteſt: Man in this caſe worketh nothing of himſelfe, Lib.6. cap.15 propoſ.3. Secondly, that we may giue our aſſent, gratiæ excitanti, to grace mouing and ſtirring of vs, requiritur neceſſariò gratia adiuuans, the helping or aſſiſting grace is requiſite and neceſſarie: Ibid propoſ.7. ſo here grace worketh, and mans will worketh. Thirdly this grace that helpeth mans will to giue aſſent, doth onely deale by perſwaſion, it inforceth not, nor draweth it: but it remayneth for all this in mans power freely to giue or withhold his conſent: *propoſ.*8. And hereupon it commeth, that by the ſame grace and inward motion, one is conuerted, and another is not, becauſe it is in mans power to reiect grace: propoſ.9. And ſo he concludeth: Poteſt homo abſolutè per liberum arbitrium bene facere, ſi velit; & non facere, ſi non velit: That a man, notwithſtanding the firſt ſtirring, as alſo the helping and aſſiſting grace, abſolutely by his freewill may doe well if he will, and not doe well, if he will not: Lib.5. cap.29. reſponſ. ad teſtimon.2. Thus the Ieſuite maketh the will of man the principall, not the ſecondarie cauſe, (wherein the Rhemiſts are more reaſonable, as we haue ſeene, that make it onely the inferiour cauſe:) for the will of man may make grace fruſtrate, but grace cannot make freewill fruſtrate, by the Ieſuites doctrine: let vs ſee ſome of their arguments, whereby they would proue the fellow-working of grace and freewill together.

Argum.1. Caſt off the olde man, put on the new, Epheſ.4.22.24. Worke out your ſaluation with feare and trembling, Philip.2.12. Ergo, man together with God worketh his ſaluation: Bellarm. lib.6. de grat. cap.10.

Anſw. The Scripture thus vſeth to ſpeake vnto men, becauſe they are not as ſtockes and ſtones voyd of ſenſe, but reaſonable creatures, indued with naturall gifts of will and vnderſtanding: not becauſe men haue power to will or worke any good thing of themſelues. Worke your ſaluation, ſaith the Apoſtle, then it followeth: for it is God that worketh in you the will and the deede. So then man worketh, and God worketh: Man hath a naturall power generally to worke, to will: but to will or worke that which is good, is onely of God. Certum eſt, ſaith Auguſtine, Nos velle, cum volumus, ſed ille facit, vt velimus bonum; certum eſt, nos facere, cum facimus, ſed ille facit, vt faciamus. It is certaine that it is man which willeth, whatſoeuer is willed, but God is the cauſe that he willeth that which is good: it is certaine that we worke whatſoeuer is wrought, but God is the cauſe that we do that is good: De bono perſeuerant. cap.16. God only then is the agent and working cauſe, man is the inſtrument.

Arg.2. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Make haſte to helpe me O, Lord, Pſal.70.1. He helpeth our infirmities, Rom.8.26. But how can man be ſaid properly to be helped, vnleſſe he laboured? Bellar. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine himſelfe doth here furniſh vs with an anſwere: a better we cannot deſire: Opus pium, quatenus opus, à libero arbitrio eſt tantum, non tamen ſecluſo auxilio generali; quatenus pium, à ſola gratia eſt; quatenus opus pium, à libero arbitrio, & gratia ſimul: Euery godly worke as it is a worke, proceedeth onely from freewill, with the generall helpe of Gods prouidence; as it is good and godly, it is onely of grace; as it ioyntly is a good worke, it is of grace and freewill together: Lib.6. de grat. cap.15. propoſ.10. This is the ſame thing, that we ſaid from the beginning, that we deny not a naturall power in man ſimply to will this or that, but to will that is good, we hold it a worke onely of grace: and herein Bellarmine agreeth with vs in this place, howſoeuer elſewhere he diſſent from himſelfe in this poynt and vs. By this poſition of his, we may eaſily anſwere the argument: for if the good worke be ioyntly conſidered, as it is a worke, and beſides that, good; ſo grace onely helpeth the will: both of them ioyne together, the will to worke, and grace to make it good: but as the worke is good, it is onely of grace, and ſo grace helpeth not onely, but doth alone make the worke good. 2. So where the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirit helpeth our infirmities: we are to vnderſtand, that in the godly action of prayer, the ſpirit, and our ſoule worke together: we worke as it is an action proceeding from the will, the ſpirit as it is a godly action: and in this reſpect as the prayer is a godly and holy action, the ſpirit worketh onely, our infirmities nothing at all: And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirit it ſelfe maketh requeſt for vs: for we know not what to pray, as we ought: that is the goodnes of the action, and the gift to pray a right, is only of the ſpirit. Hauing now examined ſuch places of Scripture as are alleaged by our aduerſaries: let vs ſee ſome other of their obiections.

*Obiect.*1. If that man by his freewill hath no inclination vnto that which is good and godly, then belike men are compelled againſt their willes to the kingdome of God: *Sic Rhemiſt.Iohn.*6. *ſect.*3.

Anſw. Indeede, man by nature is vnwilling to any good thing, but God reformeth our willes, and giueth vs grace moſt gladly to embrace Chriſt. Thus Auguſtine ſaith, Trahit Deus miris modis, vt homo velit, non vt homines, quod fieri non poteſt, nolentes credant, ſed vt volentes ex nolentibus fiant: God draweth a man diuers wayes to make him willing: for men, which were impoſſible, doe not beleeue againſt their will, but of vnwilling are made willing: *Cont.*2.*epiſtol.Pelag.lib.*1. *cap.*20.

*Obiect.*2. If man haue no good motion of himſelfe, nor no deſire or will to good things: what is he better then a ſtone, or a piece of clay, being altogether deſtitute of freewill? *Rhemiſt. Rom.*9. *ſect.*7.

Contr.Pelag. l.5. Anſw. We ſay with Auguſtine: Non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis, aut in ijs quæ rationem non habent, Deus ſalutem noſtram operatur: God worketh not our ſaluation in vs, as in ſenſeleſſe ſtones, or vnreaſonable creatures: So we doe not take away mans proper motions, and thoughts, as the Rhemiſts accuſe vs: 2.Corinth.3.ſect.2. God giueth not a new minde, ſoule, will, or vnderſtanding to the regenerate, but onely altereth and changeth it: Man by nature hath power to will, to thinke, to vnderſtand: ſo cannot a ſtone or a piece of clay, or any brutiſh creature: but to will, or thinke that which is good, is onely a worke of grace.

*Obiect.*3. If God worke all, then man worketh nothing; what then can good workes profite him, ſeeing he worketh not?

Anſw. God by his ſpeciall grace worketh onely that which is good in man: man himſelfe alſo by nature hath a generall power to will and worke, yet not any good thing, but of grace: ſo God worketh, not without man, but in man and by man, as his inſtrument, which receiueth the whole actiuitie in good things from the firſt mouer and principal efficient. Auguſtine alſo thus anſwereth the like obiection: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: Thou wilt ſay then, that we our ſelues are wrought to good things, we worke not: Immo & agis, & ageris, & tum bene agis, ſi à bono ageris: Yea rather, thou art both wrought thy ſelfe, and workeſt: and then thou workeſt well, and that which is good, when thou art firſt wrought and made good: *De verb. Apoſtol. ſerm.*13.

*Obiect.*4. Thus alſo the Pelagians, and freewill men obiected: if man haue no freewill in good things: Tale ergo hominibus datum eſt arbitrium, quale in dæmonibus, quod nihil aliud poſſit, vel velit, quam malum: Then ſuch a will is giuen to men, as diuels haue, which neither can, nor will doe any thing but euill.

Anſw. Auguſtine anſwereth: Firſt, Talis eſt multorum malitia, qualis dæmonum, vt Dominus, vos ex patre diabolo eſtis: The like malice is in many wicked men, as is in the diuels themſelues, otherwiſe our Sauiour Chriſt would not haue ſaid to ſome, you are of your father the diuell. Secondly, Sed hoc inter homines malos & diabolum diſtat, quod hominibus etiam valde malis, ſupereſt etiam, ſi Deus voluerit, reconciliatio: dæmonibus nulla ſeruata eſt conuerſio: But this difference there is betweene wicked men and the diuell, that there remaineth hope of reconciliation, if God will, euen for the moſt wicked men: but no conuerſion or amendment is kept in ſtore for the damned ſpirits: *Lib. articul.cont.Auguſt.articul.*6. The ſame difference there is betweene the corrupt will of men, and the malice of diuels: that the will of men, though it be preſently euill, by grace may be made good: but the malice of the diuell can neuer be changed to the better.

The Proteſtants.

THere are two things to be conſidered in our will and thoughts, the naturall power of willing, and thinking, and the goodneſſe and holineſſe of our thoughts: the firſt is in vs, and is properly ours by the generall gift of God, but the other commeth onely of God, by his grace. The will, the vnderſtanding, the thoughts are ours, but the goodneſſe is meerely, and entirely wrought by the ſpirit of God: So that in reſpect of the goodneſſe inſpired into our mindes, our willes are altogether paſſiue: in reſpect of the generall power, and naturall facultie, of willing, thinking, vnderſtanding, they are alſo actiue.

One very fitly compareth mans freewill in good actions, vnto materia; the grace working, vnto forma: that as the ſaid materia, without forma, the matter without the forme is rude, and ſhapeleſſe; ſo freewill is a thing altogether rude and deformed, if it be not framed and faſhioned by grace comming thereunto: Ex epiſtol. Voluſian. Epiſcop. Carthag. ad Nicolaum Papam.

Auguſtine ſaith, Rectè comparari arbitror liberum arbitrium iumento, gratiam ſeſſori: I thinke mans freewil may very fitly be compared to ẏ beaſt which a man rideth vpon, grace to the rider or ſitter: Sicut iumentum illud dum in via dirigitur, ſeſſoris manu regitur, vt iter rectum ſecundum ſedentis in ſe voluntatem poſſit incedere; ſic liberũ arbitrium gratiæ regimine regitur, vt poſſit in ſemitis Domini rectè ambulare: And as the beaſt is guided by the hand of the rider, that it may goe right in the way, according to the riders pleaſure: ſo freewill is gouerned by grace, to walke aright in the wayes of God:

Cons.

*Cont.Pelag.articul.*3.Mans freewill therefore is no more able without grace,to doe any good thing; then the horſe is to goe the right way without a guide.

*Argum.*1. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Create in me a cleane heart,O God, Pſal.51.10. Mans will therefore doth no more worke with grace,then the creature doth with the creator,when it is created.And therefore the Prophet elſewhere ſaith: He hath made vs,and not we our ſelues, Pſal.100. which is ſpoken of the regeneration of men,rather then of the firſt creation; becauſe it followeth, We are his people,and the ſheepe of his paſture.

Anſw. There is not a new ſubſtance of the heart created in our regeneration: ſed ipſa munditiei efficitur: but the purenes or cleannes of the heart is onely wrought,the ſame ſubſtance remayneth, which worketh together with grace: *Bellarm.cap.*13.*reſponſ.ad loc.*2.

Contra. The Ieſuite by thus anſwering, confirmeth our argument rather then refuteth it: for we alſo affirme, and graunt, that the naturall power of the will and affections remayne ſtill, and worke together in the naturall action of willing, or thinking: but the ſupernaturall goodneſſe and purenes of our heart,our will,our thoughts,we holde onely to be wrought by grace,and that the will of man doth not helpe any thing thereunto. And thus much the Ieſuite graunteth, and ſo he confeſſeth againſt himſelfe, that the ſupernaturall purenes of mans will, is onely wrought by grace,though the naturall ſubſtance of the will remaine ſtill.

*Argum.*2. God worketh in vs both the will and the deede,Phil.2.13.he helpeth not onely but wholly worketh himſelfe.

Anſw. God indeede worketh our will, but not without vs: for the Apoſtle in the ſame place ſaith,*Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling,*verſ.14. *Ergo,*man worketh together with God: Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Gods working is the cauſe why man worketh: Worke out your ſaluation,ſaith the Apoſtle: and then he rendreth the reaſon or cauſe thereof; For it is God which worketh, &c. So that man worketh not any thing of himſelfe, but as his will is moued and wrought by the ſpirit of God: for if all were not of God,how then ſaith the Apoſtle,That God may be all in all. 1.Cor.15.28. and that *euery good gift is of God,*Iam.1.17. Auguſtine ſaith,Sicut homo ſedens in iumento dicit,feci hodie,vtpote 30.millia, cum iumentum illo ſedente cucurrerit,ſed rector dicitur facere, quia iumentum facere fecit: ſic liberum arbitrium fidei iter peragit, ſed non ſine gratia dirigente & gubernante: As a man ſitting vpon his beaſt, ſaith, I haue gone to day thirtie miles, or there about, when as not he, but his beaſt hath gone it; but the rider is ſaid to doe it, becauſe he maketh his beaſt doe it: ſo it is freewill that runneth the race of faith,but grace directeth and gouerneth it: Cont.Pelagian.articul. 3. Man then as Gods inſtrument worketh, but God giueth him the whole actiuitie and power to worke.

*Argum.*3. Saint Paul ſaith: I laboured more abundantly, then they all;yet not I, but the grace of God which is with mee, 1.Corinthian.15.10. By this correction of his ſpeech, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that of himſelfe he was not able to worke any good thing, but it was the grace of God in him.

Anſw. He ſaith, Gratia Dei mecum, The grace of God with him: ſo that the Apoſtle wrought not alone,but he,and grace together *Bellarm.cap.*10.

Contra. Nay, the Apoſtle aſcribeth all to grace: and by ſaying, The grace of God with me, he meaneth the grace that wrought in him, and was preſent with him: As elſewhere he ſaith, Thus I liue,not I now,but Chriſt liueth in me: Galath.2.20.So that whether he ſay,Grace with me, or in me, it is all one: his meaning is, that grace onely worketh in him, and he by grace. And ſo Auguſtine expoundeth it: Quicquid vult bonum,quicquid poteſt, à Domino eſt,quia ſine me,ayt Dominus,nihil poteſtis facere: What good ſoeuer a man either willeth, or is able to doe, it is of God: becauſe the Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, *Without me you can doe nothing: Hypognoſt.cont.Pelagian.articul.*2. Beſide theſe places of Scripture,which are manifeſt againſt this popiſh error of freewill,we haue alſo certaine obiections to appoſe them with.

*Obiect.*1. If the ſpirit of God doe not draw and enforce the will of man, but onely moue it by perſwaſion, then ſhould wee haue no more forcible meanes to leade vs to good, then wee haue to ſeduce vs to euill: for ſathan dealeth onely by intiſement, and perſwaſion: Euerie man is tempted, when hee is withdrawne by his concupiſcence, and entiſed: Iames 1.14. Auguſtine ſaith: Satanas non cogit inuitum: Sathan compelleth none againſt his will: *In Pſalm.*91. But it is certaine,that the ſpirite of God worketh more ſtrongly in vs vnto life, then the tempter doth vnto deſtruction: for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, The kingdome of God ſuffereth violence,and the violent take it by force: Matth.11.12. This ſpirituall violence and force is not wrought onely by perſwaſion: But Hell ſuffereth not violence, many there be that goe in thereat, that is, willingly,and of their owne accord, Matth.7.13. Auguſtine ſaith well: Virtus eſt vitio potentior, & anima virtute prædita animo vitioſo potentior: Vertue is mightier then vice,and a vertuous minde ſtronger then a vitious: *De liber.arbitr.cap.*12. This ſtrength is wrought by more effectuall meanes, then by perſwaſion:

for the will of man naturally is more prone to euill, that to good. And if it were on the one ſide entiſed to euill, on the other but perſwaded and moued onely to good, it would more eaſily be ſwayed that way, then this.

Obiect.2. Bellarmine ſaith: Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, & hoc dono accepto Domini ſumus actionum: Freewill is the gift of God, and by this gift once receiued, we are made Lords of our owne actions: ſo that it is in our power to doe well or no: Bellarm. lib.5. de grat.cap.29. reſponſ.ad argum.6. So belike, freewill is from God, but man himſelfe maketh it good: for then is the will of man good, when it willeth good things: but it is in mans power, as they ſay, to incline his will to good: Ergo, alſo to make the will it ſelfe. Marke then what followeth hereupon; as Auguſtine very well gathereth: Si libera voluntas à Deo eſt, bona autem ex nobis, melius eſt id, quod à nobis, quam quod à Deo; quod ſi abſurdiſſimum ſit dicere, oportet fateamur, & bonam voluntatem nos à Deo adipiſci: If freewill be of God, and good will of our ſelues, that is better which is of vs, then that which is of God: which if it be moſt abſurd to ſay, we muſt needes confeſſe, that our good will is alſo of God: Cont. Pelag.lib.1.cap.18.

Obiect.3. Bellarmine againe thus writeth, that God inclineth our hearts, Non cogendo, ſed ſuadendo, & inuitando, not by enforcing, but by mouing and inuiting it: ita vt in poteſtate voluntatis relinquatur conſentire vocanti: ſo that it is left in the power of the will to conſent to him that moueth, and calleth: Lib.5.cap.29. reſponſ. ad teſtimon.3. And againe hee ſaith, it is in a mans power, whether he will bee perſwaded or not, poteſt non perſuaderi: Lib.6.cap.13.reſponſ.ad loc.4.

Who ſeeth not now how neere the Ieſuite commeth to that old Pelagian hereſie: Hominem tantum à Deo adiuuari, reuelando tantum, quod fieri debeat: That man is helped only of God, by reuealing only what is to be done. Which hereſie Auguſtine confuteth thus: Nos eam gratiam volumus, qua non ſolum reuelatur ſapienta, ſed amatur: nec ſuadetur ſolum omne bonum, ſed perſuadetur: We vnderſtand ſuch a grace, whereby wiſedome is not onely reuealed, but loued; not propounded, but perſwaded. He then that confeſſeth not ſuch a grace of God, whereby we are made to loue that is good, and are throughly perſwaded thereunto, thinketh not as Auguſtine thought, but as the old Pelagians: But thus doth Bellarmine: he ſaith, that, Gratia ſuadendo inclinat, grace doth onely moue; but, homo poteſt non perſuaderi, it is in mans power whether he will be perſwaded: So then, gratia doth ſuadere, non perſuadere, moue, but not perſwade, by his opinion: which is the very poſition of the Pelagians.

de grat.Chriſtian.cap.14.

Obiect,4. It was another hereſie of the Pelagians: that God to this end gaue his grace to men, Vt quod facere iubentur per liberum arbitrium, facilius implere poſſint per gratiam: That, what they are commaunded to doe by their freewill, they may more eaſily accompliſh by grace. What els now doe the Rhemiſts ſay giuing this note: That although the Gentiles doe eſpecially beleeue by Gods grace, yet they do beleeue by their freewill: annot. Act.13.2. And againe, Man was neuer without freewill, but it is made more free by grace: Rhemiſt. Iohn.8.ſect.2. So then grace in their iudgement, helpeth man onely more eſpecially, fully, freely, that is, more eaſily to beleeue: Whereupon it followeth, that they may beleeue without grace, though not ſo eſpecially.

This hereſie Auguſtine confuteth thus: Velo facilius, remo difficilius, tamen & remo itur: iumento facilius, pedibus difficilius, ſed tamen & pedibus peruenitur: Non eſt ſic, (verus magiſter ait) ſine me nihil poteſtis facere: As if you ſhould ſay: the veſſell goeth more eaſily with the ſayle, more hardly with the oares, yet it goeth with the oares: A man trauelleth better by horſe, not ſo eaſily a foote, yet he trauelleth: It is nothing ſo (ſaith Auguſtine) as our maſter witneſſeth, who is true, and cannot lye, Without me you can doe nothing: De verb. Apoſt.ſerm.13.

Thus was it alſo concluded, Concil. Mileuitan.cap.5. Quicunque dixerit ideo nobis gratiam iuſtificationis dari, vt quod facere per liberum iubemur arbitrium, facilius impleamus per gratiam; tanquam etſi gratia non daretur, non quidem facile, ſed tamen poſſemus ſine illa implere diuina mandata, anathema ſit: Dixit enim Chriſtus, ſine me nihil poteſtis facere, non dixit, ſine me difficilius poteſtis facere: Whoſoeuer ſaith that the grace of iuſtification is therefore giuen vs, that, what we are commaunded to doe by freewill, we may more eaſily doe by grace: as though if grace were not giuen, we might, though not eaſily, keepe the commaundements, let him be accurſed: for Chriſt ſaid, Without me you can doe nothing: he ſaid not, without me you can hardly doe.

Man therefore of himſelfe is vnable, not onely to ſayle, but to rowe; not onely to ride, but to goe in the way of righteouſneſſe: But euery good deſire, will, and thought, is wrought in vs by grace. Thus, I truſt, we haue requited our aduerſaries, and anſwered their obiections; and repayed them againe with as many in number, but in waight greater.

Now laſtly, the holy Martyrs haue ſealed this doctrine with their bloud: That bleſſed man Maſter Bradford confeſſeth beleefe onely to be Gods gift: whereas Frier Alphonſo, diſputing with him, held on the other ſide, that the act of beleeuing is in mans power: Fox pag.1619. There were diuers perſons to the number of twentie perſecuted in the townes of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke, anno 1556. for maintaining this article with others, That man had no freewill of himſelfe vnto good, Fox pag.1913.

See alſo for this matter, Arauſican.Concil.2.can.7. Si quis per naturæ vigorem bonum aliquod, quod ad ſalutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere, prædicationi ſalutari conſentire poſſe dicit abſque illuminatione ſpiritus, hæretico fallitur ſpiritu; cum Dominus ait, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere: If any man ſay, that by the ſtrength of nature man can thinke or chooſe any thing, that appertaineth to eternall life, or conſent vnto the preaching of ſaluation, without the illumination of the ſpirit, is ſeduced with the ſpirit of hereſie: for Chriſt ſaith, Without me you can do nothing.

S. Ambroſe: Voluntas nihil habet in ſuis viribus, niſi periculi facilitatem: The will of man hath no power in it ſelfe, but onely a facilitie of ſinning: *de vocat.Gent.lib.2.c.2.epiſtol.*84.Gratia tota repellitur, niſi tota ſuſcipitur: Grace is wholy refuſed, if it be not wholy receiued. Grace then worketh wholy, not grace and mans will together.

Decret.p.2.cauſ.33.diſtinct.1.c.35. Reſuſcitatus corpore viuit, abſente ſuſcitatore, non autem ſic reſuſcitatus in anima: He that is rayſed in his body liueth, though he be abſent, that rayſed him; but he that is rayſed in his ſoule cannot: Ergo, without grace the ſoule can do nothing.

Pet.Lombard. vpon theſe words. It is not in him that runneth, or willeth, but in God that ſheweth mercie, &c. reproueth their interpretation that ſay, It is not in mans will onely: and further reaſoneth thus, That if it be not onely in the will, nor onely of mercie, the Apoſtles wordes might be turned thus, It is not in him that ſheweth mercie, but in him, that willeth, &c. ſo he concludeth, ideo rectè dictum intelligatur, vt totum detur Deo, therefore this is ſo to be vnderſtood, that the whole may be giuen vnto God: lib.2.diſt.26.liter.b. Ergo, if all be of grace, nothing remayneth by mans will to be performed.

AN APPENDIX OF AVGVSTINES IVDGEMENT, throughly diſcuſſed concerning Freewill.

BEcauſe this learned Father, and in his time the moſt zealous defender of the grace of God againſt the power of freewill, and the mightieſt impugner of the hereſie of the Pelagians, hath written at large of this matter; and more without all queſtion, then any of the fathers beſide: I I will therefore produce the teſtimonies alleaged on both ſides, that in the ende it may appeare, which way the iudgement of this father enclined.

The Papiſts.

THe places of Auguſtine vrged by Bellarmine for the proofe of freewill, are theſe. 47.Error.

1. Lib.de quantit.animæ, cap.36. Datum eſt animæ liberum arbitrium, &c. There is giuen to the ſoule of man freewill, &c. which they that denie, are ſo blind, &c. The ſame is repeated by Bellarmine lib.5.de grat.c.27.

2. *Lib.5.de ciuitat.Dei, cap.*10. Nullo modo cogimur, &c. Wee are not conſtrayned, retayning Gods preſcience, to take away voluntatis arbitrium, the iudgement of the will.

3. Hypognoſtic.lib.3. Quiſquis negauerit liberum arbitrium, &c. Whoſoeuer denieth freewill, is no Catholike: Bellarm.lib.4.de grat.c.9.

Anſw. 1. Auguſtine vnderſtandeth freewill from coaction or compulſion: as *lib.5.de ciuitat. dei, c.*10. Nec ideo peccat homo, &c. Man doth not ſinne, becauſe God foreſaw he ſhould ſinne: Gods preſcience doth not force or compell mans will to do any thing. 2. Likewiſe elſewhere Auguſtine, ſaith, Liberum arbitrium nos habere, &c. It muſt be confeſſed, that we haue freewil to do both good and euill, &c. Sed in bono faciendo, liber nullus eſſe poteſt, but in doing of good no man is free, except he be freed by him, that ſaith; If the Sonne make you free, then are you free indeed, *lib.de corrept.& grat.c.*1. In this ſenſe wee confeſſe freewill with Auguſtine, free to euill without conſtraint, free alſo vnto good, but by grace.

4. Lib.4.contr.Iulian.c.3. Tolerabilius illas, quas in impijs dicis eſſe virtutes, &c. More tolerably thoſe vertues, which you ſay are in the wicked, you ſhould rather aſcribe diuino muneri, to the diuine gift, then to their will, though they know it not, Bellarm.lib.5.de grat.c.9.

Anſw. This place maketh againſt Bellarmine, for Auguſtine would haue the vertues euen in Infidels, aſcribed in ſome ſort to the gift of God, rather then to their owne will.

5. Lib.de perfect.iuſtit.contr.Cæleſtin. That place being obiected out of S. Paul, Quod vult faciat, let him do what he will: Auguſtine anſwereth thus; quaſi pro magno habendum ſit, velle nubere as though it were ſuch a great matter, to haue a will to marrie: where wee reaſon of the aſſiſtance of Gods mercie; hence Bellarmine concludeth a free will in morall workes without grace. obiect.

Anſw. This place alſo maketh againſt him: for to haue a wil to marrie, is natural, neither good nor euill: but to marrie to ſuch end as God hath appointed marriage, is a good worke, and is not in mans will without Gods helpe: as it followeth in the ſame place, Quaſi prodeſt aliquid velle, &c.

As though in this caſe it auailed to will, vnleſſe God by his prouidence do ioyne the man and the woman.

6. Hypognoſtic.lib.3. Eſſe fatemur liberum arbitrium,&c. Wee confeſſe a freewill, not by the
2. which it is fitte to beginne or finiſh things appertaining to God, ſed tantum in operibus vitæ præſentis,tam bonis quam malis, but onely in the workes of this preſent life, eyther good, or euill: Bonis dico, quæ de bono naturæ oriuntur, &c. I call thoſe good things, which do come of the goodneſſe of nature, as to worke in the field, to eate, to drinke,&c. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. All this we graunt, that naturall and ciuill workes are in mans power, as to worke, to eate, to drinke: but to do theſe things well, and to referre them to the glory of God, which is the morall goodneſſe of theſe actions, is from God, and not from mans will.

7. *Auguſtin.lib.*1.*de liber.arbitrio,c.*12. Vides in voluntate noſtra eſſe conſtitutum, &c. You ſee it is in our will, whether we enioy ſo great a good, or want it,&c. Againe, Quis peccat in eo quod nullo modo caueri poteſt,&c. Who ſinneth in that, which cannot be ſhunned: but we ſinne, Ergo,it may be ſhunned. Bellarm.lib.5.c.27.

8. *Lib.2.de animab.*12. Peccatorum reum quenquam: For a man to be held guiltie of ſin, becauſe he did not that, which he could not do, ſumma inſania eſt, is great madneſſe: wherefore the ſoules, that which they do, if they do it of nature, not of will, if they want a free motion to do or not to do, &c. they can not be held guiltie of ſinne,Bellarm.ibid.

9. Lib.2.actor.cum Felice.Manich.c.3. Eſſe liberum arbitrium,& inde peccare quemq; ſi velit,&c. That there is a free will, and thereby euery one may ſinne if he will, and not ſinne if he will not, is euident in the Scripture: Againe, Habet vnuſquiſq; in voluntate,aut eligere, quæ bona ſunt,&. Euery man hath in his will, eyther to chooſe the good, and ſo to be a good tree, or to chooſe the euill, and to be an euil tree, ibid.

Anſw. 1. I anſwere here for Auguſtine,as Hierome for himſelfe,who diſputing againſt Iouinian, who ſeemed to extenuate Virginitie, falleth into the other extreame to be thought to condemne Mariage; ſaith he, Debuerat prudens lector, ea, quæ videntur duriora, æſtimare de cæteris,&c. The diſcreet Reader ſhould eſteeme and meaſure the hard ſayings by the reſt,and not to accuſe me,in one and the ſame booke to bring forth contrarie ſentences: Quis enim ita hebes,&c. Who is ſo blockiſh to prayſe and condemne the ſame thing? Againe, Aliud eſt docere diſcipulum,aliud aduerſarium vincere. It is one thing to teach a diſciple; another to confute an aduerſarie: are yee angrie with me, quia Iouinianum non docuerim, ſed vicerim, becauſe I did not teach Iouinian, but confute him? apolog. ad Pammach. The like may be ſaid for Auguſtine: Do we thinke he was ſo forgetfull or vnſkilfull, as one while to extoll freewill, another to depraue and empayre it?we muſt conſider againſt whom he writeth, namely the Manichees, who imputed ſinne to the neceſſitie of nature: Auguſtine dealing againſt them, when he ſpeaketh of freewill, doth conuince rather then teach them.

2. Let vs giue Auguſtine leaue to expound himſelfe: Who *Lib.*1.*retract.c.*9.thus ſayth, Cùm de libera voluntate rectè faciendi loquimur, de illa, in qua homo factus eſt, loquimur: When wee ſpeake of
3. the free will of doing well,we ſpeake of that will,wherein man was made: Thus if we vnderſtand Auguſtine ſpeaking of free will, we willingly graunt all. Bellarmines exception is a meere cauill, that Auguſtine ſhould affirme the ſame will to chooſe good or euill to be in vs, that was in Adam, but not the ſame power of execution. Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh directly,de voluntate, non poteſtate rectè faciendi, of the will not the power of doing well, which he ſaith was in Adam,and not in vs.
4. Secondly, he elſewhere ſaith, Vitiato libero arbitrio, totus homo vitiatus eſt: That free will being corrupt, man wholy was corrupted. *Hypognoſtic.c.*3. If man wholy, then his will alſo wholy was corrupt; then conſequently the freedome of his will to good and euill was corrupted.

3. Auguſtine further expoundeth himſelfe, and *lib.*1.retract. treating of his bookes De libero arbitrio, he retracteth this very ſentence vrged before, *loc.*7. as that ſinne may be ſhunned, that a man may liue well if he will: he thus explaineth himſelfe, Voluntatem bene non velle, niſi à Deo li-
5. beretur, That the will cannot will well, vnleſſe God make it free: Et nihil poſſe ſentienti, intelligenti bonum occurrere,&c. And that nothing that is good, can come into the ſenſe or vnderſtanding, but from God: thus if we will giue Auguſtine leaue to expound himſelfe; where he treateth of free will to do good, he muſt be vnderſtood to include a neceſſarie ſenſe of Gods grace, whereby it is made free, and not by nature.

10. *Lib.de.ver.religion.c.*14. Non dubitandum video,&c. It is not to be doubted, that the minde hath freewill: for God would haue his ſeruants to ſerue him freely, which cannot be, ſi non voluntate ſed neceſſitate ſeruirent, if they ſhould ſerue him not willingly, but of neceſſitie,Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. 1. By neceſſitie Auguſtine vnderſtandeth the forcing and conſtrayning of the will: as before *loc.*2. Non cogimur tollere, We are not compelled to take away free will, becauſe of Gods preſcience: likewiſe ſuch a neceſſitie, as the heathen aſcribed to the ſtarres, and fatall deſtinie, in freewill he denieth, *lib.de incarnat.verbi c.*2. but ſuch a voluntary neceſſitie,whereby the will cannot now chooſe,but willingly ſinne, Auguſtine affirmeth, *Lib.*1.retract. treating of his bookes de libero arbitrio: Quod homo non poſſit,&c. That man cannot now refraine from luſtful concupiſcence; Non natura eſt primò inſtituti hominis, ſed pœna damnati, it is not the nature of the man firſt created, but the puniſhment of him being condemned: if homo non poteſt, if a man cannot abſtaine, how is there not a neceſſitie laid vpon him? 2. God indeed will haue vs to ſerue him willingly and freely, but as Auguſtine elſewhere ſaith, Ex nolentibus, volentes facit, of nilling hee maketh vs willing: and as S. Ambroſe; Virtus nulla nolentium eſt, ſed ipſa gratia hoc agit: There is no vertue, where vnwillingneſſe; but grace it ſelfe worketh this: that is, that we are willing, lib.2.de vocat.Gent.c.9. Hitherto then Auguſtines ſenſe is maintained to be ſound and good.

11. Lib, de grat.& liber.arbit.c.1. Reuelauit Deus per Scripturas, eſſe in homine liberum arbitrium: God hath reuealed by the Scriptures, that there is a freewill in man, Bellarm.c.28.

12. Epiſtol.47. Catholica fides neque negat liberum arbitrium: The Catholike faith neither denyeth freewill in man, neq; tantum ei tribuit, vt ſine gratia valeat aliquid, neyther doth it attribute ſo 8.
much vnto it, as though it could do any thing without grace, Bellarm.c.28.

13. Lib.2.de nupt.& concupiſc. Non negamus liberum arbitrium: We denie not free will: lib.1.ad Boniſ.c.2. Quis noſtrum dicit? Which of vs ſaith? That by the ſinne of the firſt man free will is loſt from mankind, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. 1. Auguſtine expoundeth himſelfe, loc.12. how he vnderſtandeth freewill, that it cannot do any thing at all that is good, without grace: and elſewhere, he calleth it liberam voluntatem, propter gratiam Dei, a free will becauſe of Gods grace, which doth free it from the law of ſinne, act.
cont.Fortunat.2.dier. 2. In that he ſaith, the freewill, which Adam had is not loſt, hee vnderſtandeth a libertie from coaction, and forcing: 1. as thus he defineth the will, Voluntas eſt motus ad ali- quid faciendum nullo cogente: The will is a motion to do any thing without forcing: this libertie of will remayneth ſtill. 2. Yet Auguſtine acknowledgeth that our will by nature is not free from ne-ceſſitie: Poſtquam ille libera voluntate peccauit, nos in neceſſitatem præcipitati ſumus: After Adam had 9.
ſinned by his freewill, we were precipitate into neceſſitie; and he giueth this example: as before a man is accuſtomed to a thing, he hath free will to do it, or not to do it; but afterward, cum con- ſuetudine implicatur voluntas, vincere non poteſt, quod ſua libertate fabricata eſt: When the will is entangled with cuſtome, it cannot ouercome that, which firſt it willingly deuiſed: As many would not ſweare, yet by cuſtome they cannot forbeare: act.2.diei cont.Fortunat. Such a voluntary ne-ceſſitie Adam by his ſinne hath brought vpon his poſteritie. 3. Auguſtine ſaith, Liberum ſanctos in vita futura habituros arbitrium, ſed ita liberum, vt non poſſit iam peccare: The Saints ſhall haue freewil in the next life, but ſo free, that it cannot ſinne, lib.22.de ciuitat.Dei.c.30. As they ſhal haue a free will with a neceſſitie of not ſinning, ſo we by nature haue a freewill with neceſſitie of ſinning.

14. Auguſtine lib.de grat.& liber.arbit.c.2. Illa præcepta diuina homini non prodeſſent,&c. The diuine precepts ſhould not profite a man, vnleſſe he had freewill: quomodo iubet, how doth God commaund, if there be no freewill, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſhall expound himſelfe, who thus anſwereth the like obiection of the Pelagians, taken from the precepts of Scripture: Spiritu dei aguntur filij dei vt agant, non vt ipſi nihil agant, & ad hoc eis oſtenditur quid agere debeant: The children of God are wrought by the ſpirite, that they ſhould worke, not that they ſhould do nothing, and therefore it is ſhewed them, what they ſhould do: And againe, O homo in præceptione cognoſce, quid debeas habere, in correptione cognoſce tuo te vitio non habere; in oratione cognoſce, vnde accipias, quod vis habere: O man, in the precept know what thou oughteſt to haue; in the rebuke, that by thine owne fault thou haſt it not; in prayer acknowledge, whence thou muſt receiue that thou wouldeſt haue: de cor.& grat.c.3. Wherefore then the precepts of Scripture are to this end, to ſhew man, what hee ſhould do, and to driue him to ſeeke that at Gods hands, which is commanded; they demonſtrate a freewill in man, but to be wrought and directed by the ſpirite.

15. Auguſt.epiſt.89.qu.2. Neq; voluntatis arbitrium ideo tollitur, quia iuuatur,&c. Neyther is free will taken away, becauſe it is helped; but therefore it is helped, becauſe it is not taken away, Bellarm.ibid. That is not helped, that is not; therefore there is freewill in man, becauſe it is helped, Bellarm.rurſus, lib.6.c.11.tit.2.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſhall here alſo expound himſelfe: Adiutor noſter Deus eſt, nec adiuuari poteſt, niſi qui ſponte aliquid conatur: God is our helper, neyther can a man be helped, vnleſſe he do ſomewhat of himſelfe: then it followeth, Quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis,&c. Becauſe God worketh not ſaluation in vs as in ſenceleſſe ſtones, or as in vnreaſonable creatures, cont.Pelag.lib.1.c.5.
His opinion then is, that God is ſaid to helpe our will, in reſpect of the natural facultie of willing, becauſe man hath reaſon, will, and vnderſtanding by nature: but to will that which is good, man is not onely helped, but altogether guided and directed by grace: as he ſaith in another place, La- borant homines inuenire in voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum,&c. Men do labour to finde in the will ſome 10.
goodneſſe, which is not of God, which how it can be found, I am vtterly ignorant, ibid.c.18.

Bernard hath the like ſaying, Liberum arbitrium nos facit volentes, gratia bene volentes, ex ipſo nobis eſt velle, ex ipſa bonum velle: Freewill maketh vs willing, grace well willing; from that wee haue power to will, from the other power to will that is good : lib.de liber.arbitr. Thus then mans will and grace worke together, man by nature willeth, by grace he willeth that is good.

16. Auguſt.in Pſal.7.Diabolo non conſentire in poteſtate noſtra eſſe voluit: Not to conſent to the diuell God would haue it in our power : *de ſpirit.& liter.c.*34. Conſentire vocationi dei, vel ab ea diſſentire propriæ voluntatis eſt : To conſent to Gods calling, or diſſent from it, it is in mans owne will, *Bellar.ibid.cap.28.& lib.*6.*cap.*11.*Tom.*3.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſaith, that it is in the will of man to conſent, &c. but this will muſt be prepared, and wrought of God : firſt, thus hee expoundeth himſelfe, *lib.*1.retractat. making mention of his book againſt Adimant. he had affirmed, that it was in mans power to chaunge his will: Sed po-
11. teſtas iſta nulla eſt, niſi à Deo data : But this is no power, vnleſſe it be giuen of God. And againe, *lib.*2.
*cap.*1. he correcteth that ſaying in his booke ad Simplician. that it is in vniuſcuiuſque poteſtate, vt ve- lit, in euery mans power to will : nam à Deo etiam voluntas præparanda eſt, for the will alſo muſt be prepared of God. Secondly, he further thus explaneth himſelfe: Siue iniquitas, ſiue iuſtitia: Whether iniquitie or righteouſnes, vnleſſe they were in our will, they could not be in our power, being not in our power, there ſhould be neither iuſt reward, nor puniſhment : Ignorantia verò & infirmi- tas, &c. But this ignorance and infirmitie, that either man knoweth not, what he ought to will, or 12. cannot doe that which he willeth, ex occulto pœnarũ ordine venit, proceedeth from the ſecret order of puniſhment : *cont.Fauſt.lib.*22.*cap.*78. Here hee affirmeth, that both good and euill is in mans will and power, and yet that mans will by nature is ſo blind and weake, as that it can neither will, nor worke that, which it ought : wherefore the power of the will to good is not of it ſelfe, but of grace. Thirdly, ſo then as Bernard ſaith, Nec bonus nec malus eſt quiſpiam niſi volens : No man is either good or euill againſt his will : but (ſaith he) Deus facit voluntarios, vt non ſaluet inuitos, God maketh them willing, that they be not ſaued vnwilling, lib.de liber.arbit. Wherefore it is mans will that conſenteth to God, and conſenteth not to the diuell, but his will reformed and made free or willing by grace. Thoſe places are alleaged by Bellarmine, to proue the power of mans will in morall duties : theſe following are produced to ſet forth the cooperation or ioynt working of Gods grace, and mans will in ſpirituall workes.

17. *Auguſt.lib.*1.*retract.cap.*22. In noſtra poteſtate poſitum, & c. It is in our owne power to change our will, &c. ſed ea poteſtas nulla eſt niſi detur à Deo: but that is no power, vnleſſe it be giuen of God : Præparatur voluntas à Deo, The will is prepared of God : *Bellarm.lib.*6.*cap.*11. The will then being prepared of God, obeyeth, &c.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſaith in direct termes, Poteſtas nulla eſt, &c. That mans will hath no power at all, vnleſſe it be giuen of God : Ergo, if all the power be of God, there is no power in mans will.

17. Many other places are heaped vp to the like purpoſe: *Tom.*4.*lib.*1.ad Simplician.Vt velimus ſuum eſſe voluit & noſtrum : To will he would haue it both his and ours; his in calling, ours in obeying, Bellarm ibid.

18. *Tom.*5.*lib.*5.*de ciuitat.cap.*10. Multa facimus, quæ ſi nollemus, non faceremus : Wee doe many things, which if we would not, we ſhould not doe them.

19. *Tom.*6.*lib.*2.actor.contr.Felicem : Habet vnuſquiſque in voluntate : Euery man hath it in his owne will to chuſe the good, and ſo become a good tree; or the euill, and ſo be made an euill tree : Nemo niſi deus, facere arbores poteſt, None but God can make trees.

20. *Tom.*7.*lib.*2.*de remiſſ.peccat.cap.*5.Adiutor Deus, &c. God is the helper, neither can hee be helped, which doth not ſomewhat of himſelfe, Bellarm.ibid.

21. *Lib.de natur.grat.cap.*32. Illo operante cooperamur : He working we worke together, becauſe his mercie doth preuent vs.

22. *Lib.de prædeſt.cap.*3. Vtrumque noſtrum eſt : Both are ours, to loue and beleeue, becauſe of freewill, and both are giuen by the ſpirit of faith.

23. *De grat.& liber.arbit.cap.*15.Ne autem putetur, nihil ibi facere homines per liberum, &c. Leaſt it ſhould be thought, that man doth nothing by his freewill, it is ſaid, Harden not your hearts.

24. *Lib.de grat.c.*14. Arbitrium niſi adiutum, &c. No man commeth, vnleſſe his will be helped. *Lib.*2.*cont.*2.*epiſt.Pelag.c.*8. Niſi adiuuante illo : Vnleſſe he helpe, we can doe nothing.

25. *Tom.*8.*in titul.Pſal.*71.Non erat in poteſtate tua, &c. It was not in thy power to be borne of Adam, it is in thy power to beleeue in Chriſt.

26. *Tom.*9.*tract.*72.in Ioann. Credere in Chriſtum, &c. To beleeue in Chriſt, is the worke of Chriſt : this hee worketh in vs, but not without vs : With Chriſt working iuſtification, man worketh together.

27. *Tom.*10.*ſerm.*15.de verb. Apoſtol.Totum ex Deo, &c. All is of God : but wee muſt not be as aſleepe to doe nothing, to will nothing: Sine voluntate tua, non erit in te iuſtitia dei : Without thy will the righteouſnes of God ſhall not be in thee : he that made thee without thee, doth not iuſtifie thee without thee : *Bellarm.lib.*6.*cap.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, in all theſe places, where we are ſaid to worke together with grace, and to be helped by grace, *loc.*20.21.24. and that God doth not iuſtifie vs without vs, 27. Auguſtine vnderſtandeth onely the naturall power and actiuitie of the will, which as it willeth; ſo it is actiue, and worketh together with grace, and is helped and aſſiſted: but as it willeth that which is good, it is altogether paſſiue, and worketh not, but is wrought vpon: 1. How elſe ſhould all be of God, as hee ſaith, *loc.*27. and wee muſt onely not be as men aſleepe: and as elſewhere he ſaith; Neque ſic templum ſuum de vobis ædificat Deus, quaſi de lapidibus, qui non habent motum ſuum: Neither doth God ſo build his temple of you, as of ſtones, that haue no motion: *ſerm.*13.de tempore. Mans naturall power then of willing muſt be added to Gods grace that maketh it to will well. 2. This is further teſtified by Auguſtine, that our actiuitie to goodneſſe is altogether of Gods grace, and the mouing of his ſpirit: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: therefore you will ſay we are done to, wee doe not. The anſwere followeth: Immo & agis & ageris, & tum bene agis, cùm à bono agaris: Yea thou art both done to, and thou doeſt, and then thou doeſt well, when thou art done to, and art driuen of that, which is good: *ſerm.*13.de tempor. The will then cannot doe well, but as it is driuen: See our anſwere before *ad loc.*14.15.

Secondly, concerning the precepts in ſcripture, whereby Auguſtine inſinuateth freewill, *loc.*23. his further iudgement of that matter is this: Ad hoc lex præcepit iſta, vt cum in his implendis homo deficeret non ſe extollat ſuperbia tumidus, ſed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus: To this end hath the lawe commanded theſe things, that when man ſeeth himſelfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, he ſhould not by pride be lifted vp: but being wearied in himſelfe, haue recourſe to grace: cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. iuſtic. We ſee he confeſſeth, that without grace man hath no power to performe the precepts enioyned.

Thirdly, where Auguſtine ſaith, it is in a mans will to chuſe good or euill, *loc.*19. to beleeue in Chriſt, *loc.*25.26. he before expounded himſelfe, *loc.*19. Deus ſolum facit arbores, &c. God only maketh good trees: The will then of man hath this power, but not from it ſelfe, but from God: Poteſtas nulla eſt, &c. It is no power, vnleſſe it be giuen of God: as before I alleaged out of Auguſtine in our anſwere *ad loc.*16. And that this is the reſolute iudgement of Auguſtine, that man hath no power of will by nature to any good thing, it euery where appeareth in his workes: Arbitrij libertas ſemel data eſt homini, ſed quia peccauit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem peccatum habendi neceſſitas: 12. Libertie of will was once giuen vnto man, but becauſe his will ſinned, there followed and fell vpon the ſinner a neceſſitie of ſinning: cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. iuſtic. Here Auguſtine ſaith, that there is in the will by nature a neceſſitie to ſinne; how then can it haue any inclination to good?

Againe, Vt homo in peccatum iret, &c. For a man to runne into ſinne his owne freewill ſufficeth, whereby he corrupted himſelfe; vt autem redeat ad iuſticiam; but to returne to righteouſneſſe, he had neede of a Phiſition, becauſe he is not ſound, opus habet viuificatore, quia mortuus, he had neede 13. of a reuiuer, becauſe he is dead: *lib.*1.*cont. Pelag. cap.*23. If mans will be then dead by nature, it hath no life, nor actiuitie at all.

And to conclude, he thus teſtifieth, *lib.*1.*de prædeſtinat. cap.*9. Liberum, quod à Deo habemus arbitrium, &c. The freewill, which we haue of God, is prone to wickednes, & cum ad virtutis indolem deo deſerente nihil poſſit, ad genus omne peccati idonea fultum virtute ſubſiſtit: and hauing no power, or being able to doe nothing vnto vertue, it hath ſufficient ſtrength of it ſelfe to all kinde of ſinne. Here is an euident teſtimonie, that the will, nihil poſſit, can doe nothing of it ſelfe to attaine vnto vertue.

Thus (I truſt) I haue ſufficiently anſwered the obiections out of Auguſtine, now I will proceede to alleage ſuch euident and cleere teſtimonies out of his workes, whereby it may appeare, that he was an vtter enemie to the naturall power of freewill to good.

The Proteſtants.

THe teſtimonies out of Auguſtine againſt the power or abilitie of freewill naturally vnto good, are theſe.

1. *Epiſtol.*106. Sine gratia ad non peccandum nihil voluntatis arbitrium valere: The will without grace hath no power at all not to ſinne.

Anſw. Firſt, his meaning is, that the will without grace hath no power to liue altogether without ſinne, not to abſtaine from ſome one ſinne: for Auguſtine ſaith, Si ita eſt, nullus locus adiutorio gratiæ reſeruatur: If it be ſo, there is no place left for the helpe of grace. Grace is not excluded, if ſomething be left to the will, but if all be aſcribed to it. Secondly, by not ſinning he may vnderſtand, the reſiſting of temptation, which the will cannot doe without grace: *Bellarm. lib.*5.*cap.*11. *reſponſ. ad arg.*2.

Contra. Firſt, if ad non peccandum, not to ſinne, were ad viuendum ſine peccato, all one, as to liue without ſinne, Auguſtine had ſaid iuſt nothing: for euen with grace the will of man hath no power to liue altogether without ſinne: He ſpeaketh then of that which is poſſible in this life, to abſtaine from ſome ſinne, not of that which is impoſſible to liue without any ſinne.

Secondly, the conſequent is good, that grace muſt be either wholy admitted, or wholy refuſed: Saint Paul ſo reaſoneth, Rom. 11. 6. If of grace, it is no more of worke: for grace were no grace, &c. The grace then of God and the worke of mans will cannot ſtand together. Ambroſe likewiſe ſaith, epiſt. 84. Gratia dei tota repellitur, niſi tota recipitur: Grace is wholy refuſed, if it be not wholy receiued.

Thirdly, it is well you confeſſe, that a mans will without grace cannot reſiſt temptation: for thus you confeſſe the cauſe, that ſinne cannot be auoided without grace: for there is no ſinne, which commeth not by temptation: Iam. 1. 14. Euery man is tempted, when he is drawne by his owne concupiſcence: therefore if the will cannot reſiſt temptation without grace, it cannot reſiſt ſin, and conſequently not doe any good without grace.

2. Enchirid. cap. 30. Quid boni operari poteſt perditus, niſi in quantum à perditione liberatus? What good can a man of perdition doe, but as he is freed from perdition? Now euery one by nature is the childe of wrath and perdition: therefore by nature no good can be done.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of ſuch good workes as tend to ſaluation, which indeede cannot be done without grace: ibid. reſp. ad 3. loc.

Contra. Firſt, the Scripture counteth no workes good, but corrupt and euill, which are not reaped of the ſpirit to life euerlaſting: Galath. 6. 8. He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption, and nothing elſe: He that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reape life euerlaſting. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith directly: Scito nos illum bonum hominem dicere, illam voluntatem bonam, illud opus bonum, per quod ſolum homo poteſt ad æternum dei regnum perduci: Know this, that I call him a good man, and that a good will, and that a good worke, by the which onely a man may be brought to Gods euerlaſting kingdome, lib. 4. cont. Iulian. c. 3. Ergo, in Auguſtines iudgement thoſe are not to be counted good workes at all, which tend not to ſaluation. Thirdly, Auguſtine affirmeth, Virtutes illas, quas dicis in impijs eſſe diuino muneri potius, quam eorum voluntati, &c. That euen the vertues, which are in the wicked, muſt rather be attributed to the diuine gift, than to their will: cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 3. Euen theſe workes, though they be not perfectly good, are of the diuine gift rather, than of mans will.

Loc. 3. Auguſt. lib. 2. de remiſſ. peccat. cap. 18. Si voluntas aut bona eſt, aut mala, & vtiq; malam non habemus ex deo, reſtat vt bonam voluntatem habeamus ex deo: If the will be either good, or euill, and we haue not an euill will from God; it remaineth, that we haue a good will from God.

Anſw. By a good will here is vnderſtood the power of the will, and not the act: for a will that is not good may bring forth ſome good act, as the good will of a righteous man may bring forth ſinne, Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad arg. 4.

Contra. Firſt, that a good act can proceede from a will that is not good, is contrarie to the Scripture: Matth. 7. 18. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. Secondly, if a righteous man bring forth an euill worke, it commeth not from his regenerate will, but from his ſinfull and corrupt will: Rom. 7. 20. It is not I, but the ſinne that dwelleth in me. Thirdly, whereas he ſaith, the good act of the euill will, is ex bono naturæ, of the naturall goodneſſe: he ſpeaketh contraries: for how can there be any good thing in an euill will or minde? As Auguſtine ſaith, Laborant homines inuenire in ipſa voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, &c. Men doe labour to finde ſomewhat in the will that is good, which is not of God; which how it can be found, or ſhewed, I am vtterly ignorant: contr. Pelag. c. 18.

Loc. 4. 5. Auguſtine lib. 1. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. vltim. affirmeth, Bonum vſum liberi arbitrij eſſe ex Deo: That the good vſe of the freewill is of God. Lib. 3. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. 8. Liberum arbitrium captiuatum non niſi ad peccatum valet: Freewill being captiued by ſinne, cannot doe any thing but ſinne.

Anſw. He is ſaid to vſe freewill well, not that doth one or two good morall workes, but that liueth well, and this is of grace; as hee is not ſaid to write well, that can make two or three letters well: ſo the freewill by nature is ſaid to haue no power but to ſin, becauſe for the moſt part it ſinneth: Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad loc. 5. 6.

Contr. Firſt, yet he that can make 2. or 3. letters well, can write ſomewhat well; but the will of it ſelfe can do nothing well: as our Sauiour ſaith, Ioh. 15. 5. Without me you can do nothing. And Aug. before, loc. 1. Nihil valet: The will can do nothing at all. And lib. 1. de prædeſt. c. 9. Ad virtutis indolem deo deſerente nihil poteſt: If God do leaue, that is, not aſſiſt the wil, it can do nothing to the attaining of vertue. And againe, Nulla poteſtas niſi ex deo data: There is no power at all, but giuen of God: lib. 1. retract. cap. 22. If there be no power in the will, then at no time, neither to doe any good thing: wherefore Bellarmine doth very fondly wreſt Auguſtines words againſt his owne ſenſe.

Loc. 6. Enchirid. c. 30. Libero arbitrio malè vtens homo, & ſe perdidit & ipſum, &c. Man vſing free will euill, loſt himſelfe, and it. Victore peccato, amiſſum eſt liberum arbitrium: Sinne being conqueror, freewill was loſt.

Anſw. He meaneth not, that freewill is vtterly extinct, as man himſelfe is not, but onely made worſe; as things are not periſhed, but loſt, that are taken by the enemie in battell: ſo the libertie of grace onely is loſt, not the libertie of nature: Bellarm.c.30.lib.5.reſponſ.ad loc.1.

Contra. 1. Neyther do we ſay, that freewill or the nature of man is wholy extinct, but there remaineth a freeneſſe in the will ſtill, a freedome from coaction or conſtraint, which is the libertie of nature, but there is no freedome to good without Gods aſſiſtance, which is the libertie of grace: ſo Auguſtine ſaith; Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in ipſa radice vitiata: The whole nature of man was corrupted in the roote by freewill, tract.87.in Ioan. If the whole be corrupted, then no part thereof remaineth vncorrupt. 2. This the ſimilitude of captiuitie ſheweth: for like as he that is a priſoner, or taken captiue, walketh not whither he would, but is led whither he would not; as Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Iohn 21.18. ſo the will of man being captiued to ſinne, becommeth wholy the ſeruant thereof, Rom.6.16. Know yee not, that to whomſoeuer you giue your ſelues as ſeruants to obey, his ſeruants ye are, to whom ye obey?

*Loc.7. Epiſt.*144. Sine gratia Dei non poteſt libera eſſe voluntas,&c. Without grace the will cannot be free, being ſubiect to the concupiſcence ouercomming it.

Loc.8. De ſpirit.& liter.c.30. Per gratiam ſanatio animæ à vitio peccati, per animæ ſanitatem libertas arbitrij, per arbitrij libertatem dilectio iuſtitiæ: By grace, the healing of the ſoule commeth from the corruption of ſinne; by the health of the ſoule, the libertie of the will; by the libertie of the will, the loue of righteouſneſſe.

Loc.9. Lib.de correpť.& grat.c.13. Peccant per liberum arbitrium, non liberatum: They ſinne by freewill, but not yet freed, that is, by grace: Ergo, there is no libertie or freedome of the will to good, without grace.

Anſw. Bellarmine anſwereth to all theſe places; that Auguſtine ſpeaketh of the libertie of grace, not of the libertie of nature: for although the will be the ſeruant of ſin without grace, yet it is free à naturali neceſſitate, from naturall neceſſitie: as the eye, though it cannot exerciſe the ſight without light; yet ſimply it can ſee of it ſelfe, ibid.reſponſ. ad 4.5.7.loc.

Contra. He hath granted as much as we deſire: for like as there is in the eye a poſſibilitie of ſeeing: but yet without the light it cannot diſcerne this or that: ſo we ſay that it is in mans power by nature to will without conſtraint; but it cannot will any thing that is good, without the illumination of grace: as Bernard ſaith, Ex ipſo nobis eſt velle, ex ipſa bonum velle: Of the will it is that we do will; of grace, that we will that is good. A libertie then of the will ſimply and abſolutely wee graunt by nature; but to will that which is good, proceedeth from the libertie of grace: All this ſeemeth by Bellarmine to be acknowledged, which we willingly condeſcend vnto.

Loc.10. Lib.1.retract.c.15. Qui cogenti cupiditati bona voluntate reſiſtere non poteſt, iam hoc ita peccatum eſt, vt ſit etiam pœna peccati: He that cannot reſiſt his forcing concupiſcence by a good wil, it is ſo ſinne in him, that it is alſo the puniſhment of ſinne.

Loc.11. Lib.de corrept.& grat.c.12. Si relinqueretur ipſis ſua voluntas, vt in adiutorio Dei manerent ſi vellent,&c. If they ſhould be left to their owne will, to continue in Gods helpe, if they would, through ſo many and great temptations, their will through it infirmitie would giue place: Et ideo perſeuerare non poſſent, quia deficientes infirmitate nec vellent: And therefore they cannot perſeuere or continue, becauſe fayling by infirmitie, they will not.

Loc.12. Ex libro de perfect.iuſtit.reſponſ.9. Quia peccauit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem peccatum habendi dura neceſſitas: Becauſe the will ſinned, there followed vpon the partie ſinning, a neceſſitie of hauing ſinne. Here it is confeſſed by Auguſtine, that by nature the will cannot otherwiſe doe but ſinne, and therefore hath no power of it ſelfe to do any thing, that is good.

Anſw. The ſumme of Bellarmines anſwere to all theſe places is this; that this neceſſitie or impotencie of the will, is conditionall, not abſolute, quia poteſt auxilium Dei implorare, becauſe man may ſue for Gods helpe; which if he do not, it is his owne fault: ſo then there is no ſuch neceſſitie affirmed by Auguſtine, in any of theſe places, that taketh away the libertie of the will, Bellarm. ibid.reſponſ.ad 3.6.8.teſtim.

Contra. 1. Thus Bellarmine fighteth with himſelfe, affirming, that without the inuocation of Gods helpe, the will hath no power to reſiſt the concupiſcence, and conſequently not to do any thing that is good: if it be then of grace, how can it be of nature? 2. Wee affirme that this neceſſitie of nature is not ſo abſolute, but by the condition of Gods grace and aſſiſtance it may be looſed: but it is not in euery mans power by nature, to receiue this condition, and to ſue vnto God for his helpe. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.8.26. We know not what to pray as we ought, but the ſpirit helpeth our infirmities: it is then of the ſpirite, that we haue a minde to pray not by nature. 2. Auguſtine ſaith, Quantum eſt quod valet voluntas, niſi fortè ſi pia eſt, vt oret auxilium? What is it, that the will can do, vnleſſe it being godly, do pray for helpe? lib.1.retract.c.15. It muſt firſt then be godly, before it can ſue for grace; but godlineſſe is not by nature: and againe, abſq; adiutorio gratiæ, quod Deo placet, non valet incipere: without the helpe of grace it is not able to begin any thing, that doth pleaſe God: *Hypognoſtic.*3. Ergo, without grace a man cannot pray.

3. This neceſſitie of nature, which cannot but ſinne, taketh not away the libertie of the will: as Bernard ſaith, Nemo nec malus nec bonus eſt, niſi volens: No man is eyther good or euill againſt his will: ſo he, that doth that which is good willingly, is made willing by grace; and hee that doth euill, is thereto made willing by the corruption of his owne nature.

*Loc.*13. *Lib.*2.*de peccat.remiſſ.c.*18. Laborant homines inuenire in noſtra voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, quod non ſit ex Deo: Men do labour to finde ſome good thing in the will, which is ours, and not of God, which I am vtterly ignorant, how it can be found.

Anſw. Auguſtines meaning is, that freewill of it ſelfe doth not worke together with God, but by the gift of preuenting grace, *Bellarm.lib.*6.*c.*14.*reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. 1. If it be by the gift and working of grace, that the will worketh with grace, it is that which we affirme, that the will worketh not vnto good, but by the efficacie of grace. 2. If hee ſay, that Grace doth but giue the hint, as it were, and the beginning, and the will followeth then of it owne accord; then is there ſome good to be found in the will, which is not of grace, which Auguſtine here denieth: Thus then we enforce this teſtimonie: If will worke any thing of it ſelfe without grace, then Auguſtine is found to be a lyar, which he denieth; if it do not, that is confeſſed, which we conclude.

*Loc.*14. *Lib.de grat.Chriſt.c.*14. Arbitrium ſic adiuuatur, vt non ſolum quid faciendum ſciat, ſed quod ſcierit, etiam faciat,&c. The will is ſo helped, that it onely doth not know, what is to be done, but doth alſo that which it knoweth: and when God teacheth, he ſo teacheth by the grace of his ſpirite, that what any man learneth, he doth not onely ſee it by knowing, but doth deſire it by willing, and perfite it by doing.

Anſw. This place maketh for vs, for if the will be helped in knowing and doing, then conſequently there is a freewill in theſe thinges, which is helped, *Bellarm.ibid.reſponſ.ad argum.*2.

Contra. 1. Mans will worketh together with grace, in reſpect of the naturall actiuitie and power thereof to will, and ſo in his ſenſe it may be ſaid to be helped onely; but as it willeth that which is good, it is not in part helped, but wholy directed. 2. Yet it is no vnuſuall phraſe to ſay, one is helped, when he can do nothing of himſelfe: as Mark.9.24. Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeleefe: will he therefore inferre that a man is but helped in part to faith, and that part is of himſelfe: contrarie to the Scriptures which ſaith, that faith is Gods worke, Iohn 6.29. that is onely and wholy his. 3. As the will is helped to know, ſo it is helped to do, but God onely doth illuminate the ſoule, it cannot lighten it ſelfe; for Chriſt is the light, that lighteth euery man, Iohn 1.9. Ergo, he only helpeth the will to worke. 4. The ſimilitude of the teacher ſheweth the ſame; for how doth hee that is taught helpe toward his teaching, but onely in the vſe of his naturall wit; but the forme and qualifying of the wit and the inſtruction is onely of the teacher: ſo when God teacheth, the naturall willing is in man by gift of his creation; but the ſpirituall inſtruction, direction, inclination to grace, is onely of God.

*Loc.*15. *De bon.perſeueran.c.*13. Hoc nobis expedit credere, dicere, &c. vt totum detur Deo: It behoueth vs thus to beleeue, and ſay; that the whole may be giuen to God.

Anſw. Nos damus totum Deo,&c. We do aſcribe all vnto God, neyther do we part works with him, neyther do we attribute any thing to our ſelues, which is not of God, *Bellarmin.c.*14.reſponſ. ad 3.teſtim.

Contra. 1. If you in trueth aſcribe the whole worke of the will to the grace of God, there is no queſtion betweene vs: for this is that, which we vrge according to the Scripture, Philip.2.13. that God worketh in vs both the will and deede of his good pleaſure. 2. But if you vſe this euaſion; that all is of God and of grace, becauſe he firſt gaue vs freewill, and ſo by grace vnderſtand a gift of creation; this is but an old ſhift of the Pelagians, who did alſo affirme freewill to be of grace, quia nos tales condiderit Deus, becauſe God made vs ſuch, &c. Hieron. ad Cteſiphont. But wee vnderſtand by grace, not the ſtanding gifts of the creation; but the continuall influence of the ſpirite in our regeneration.

*Loc.*16. *De corrept.& grat.c.*14. Volenti ſaluum facere nullum hominum reſiſtit arbitrium: Mans will cannot reſiſt God being willing to ſaue vs: Ergo, mans will is not free, as he will himſelfe, to good or euill.

Anſw. Effectuall grace doth no more induce a neceſſitie, or take away the libertie of the will, then preſcience: and whereas it is ſaid that effectual grace cannot be reſiſted; it is not to be vnderſtood abſolutely, but by way of an hypotheſis, or ſuppoſition, that it is impoſſible that a man ſhould not follow or obey God calling in that manner, &c. *reſp.ad argum.*4.

Contra. 1. Neyther do we affirme, that effectuall grace doth preiudice freewill: for as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus ex nolentibus volentes facit, God of nilling maketh vs willing, and ſo willing, that when God draweth, we cannot chooſe but obey. 2. Neither doe wee make an abſolute neceſſitie, as though mans will of it ſelfe could not reſiſt Gods calling, being of it ſelfe mutable and flexible, but Gods grace preſuppoſed, whereby it is made firme and ſtable.

*Loc.*17. *De grat.& liber.arbitr.c.*17. Vt velimus, ſine nobis operatur; cum autem ſic volumus vt operemur, nobiſcum cooperatur: That we will he worketh without vs; but when we ſo will, that we work, he worketh with vs.

*Loc.*18. Totum Deo dandum eſt, qui hominis voluntatem bonam & præparat adiuuandam, & adiuuat præparatam: All is to be giuen to God, which doth prepare mans good will to be helped, and doth helpe it being prepared.

Anſw. God one way worketh the will without vs, that is by perſwaſion: but we alſo worke by conſenting: and therefore here he ſaith, wee doe cooperari, we doe worke together with God in the outward act, *Bellar.ad loc.*5.

Contra. Firſt, God doth not onely perſwade, but cauſeth the will alſo to conſent: for otherwiſe God ſhould doe no more, than man doth, who may miniſter counſell and perſwaſion, but cannot worke the heart: ſo the ſcripture ſaith, that God draweth vs, Ioh.6.44. but to draw is more than to perſwade. And Auguſtine ſaid before, that mans will cannot reſiſt Gods calling: therefore it is not in mans will to conſent or not to conſent. Secondly, we graunt, that mans will worketh with God, vt naturale inſtrumentum ab alio motum, as a natural inſtrument moued or ſtirred by another, which are Bellarmines owne words: then like as the inſtrument in the workmans hand hath no cunning in it ſelfe to faſhion or frame the worke, but is directed by the workman; ſo the will is but as a naturall inſtrument working naturally to will: but to will that which is good, it is directed by grace, as the workmaſter vnto it.

Thus notwithſtanding theſe cauillous and ſophiſticall anſwers, I truſt it is euident to any indifferent eye, not obſcured with wilfull darknes, that Auguſtine is a reſolute patrone of Gods grace againſt mans freewill, as it is now by nature ſubiect and ſubdued vnto ſinne.

Beſide theſe places alleaged, many other alſo may be produced out of Auguſtine: as theſe that follow.

*Loc.*19. *De corrept. & grat.c.*8. Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia libertatem: Mans will doth not by it freenes obtaine grace, but by grace freedome.

20. *Ibid.c.*11. Liberum arbitrium ad malum ſufficit, ad bonum parum eſt, niſi adiuuetur, &c. Freewill is ſufficient to euill: but little or of ſmall force to doe good, vnleſſe it be helped.

21. *Artic.*3.contr.Pelag. Non eſt idoneum, quæ ad deum pertinent, ſine deo &c. It is not fit without God to begin any thing, that appertaineth to God.

22. Ibid. Homo eſt tanquã ouis errans libero arbitrio in operibus diaboli, &c. Man is as a ſheep going aſtray by freewill in the workes of the diuell, whom Chriſt taketh vpon his ſhoulders, &c. Like as a ſtray ſheepe cannot returne, vnleſſe he be carried: ſo freewill is drawne vnto that which is good, by grace; it hath no power of it ſelfe thereunto.

23. *In Pſal.*26. Dic illi, voluntatem liberam mihi dediſti, ſed ſine te nihil eſt mihi conatus meus: Saye vnto GOD, thou haſt giuen mee freewill: but without thee mine endeuour is nothing.

24. *In Pſal.*133. Tu in teipſo non facis, quod vis, ſed ipſe tibi dat gratiam, vt facias in teipſo, quod vis: Thou canſt not doe in thy ſelfe, what thou wouldeſt, but he giueth thee grace, to doe in thy ſelfe, as thou wouldeſt.

25. *Epiſt.*88.*ex Sapient.*8.21. Sciui, quod nemo eſt continens, niſi deus det; non ex libero arbitrio eſt, ſed dono dei: I know that none can haue continencie, vnleſſe God giue it. It is not then of freewill, but of Gods gift.

26. *De ciuitat.dei.lib.*13.*cap.*15. Ad malum hominis prior eſt voluntas, ad bonum prior eſt voluntas creatoris, ſiue vt eam faceret, quæ nulla erat, ſiue vt lapſam reficiat, quæ perierat: To euill mans will is firſt, to good the Creators will is firſt, either to make the will, which was not; or to reſtore it, which was loſt.

27. *De ciuitat.lib.*14.*cap.*11. Arbitrium voluntatis proprio vitio amiſſum, niſi à quo dari potuit, reddi non poteſt: The iudgement of the will cannot be reſtored, but by him, that firſt gaue it. Like as then we wought not with God in the firſt creation of the will, ſo neither in the reparation thereof, but all is of God.

28. *Cont.Pelag.*1.5 Vt oculus vt videat, adiuuatur à luce, neque hoc omnino niſi illa adiuuerit, poteſt, &c. As the eye that it may ſee is helped of the light, neither can it ſee any thing at all, vnleſſe it be ſo helped: ſo God, which is the light of the inward man, doth helpe the ſight of the minde, that not according to ours, but his righteouſneſſe, boni aliquid operemur, wee may worke ſome good thing. Thus then as the eye without the light ſeeth nothing at all: ſo the will without grace willeth no good thing at all.

29. *Cont.Pelag.*1.*cap.*18. Si libera voluntas à deo eſt, bona ex nobis, melius eſt id, quod ex nobis, quam quod à deo, &c. If freewill be of God, a good will of our ſelues, then that is better which is of vs, than that which is of God: which if it be moſt abſurd, oportet fateamur & bonam voluntatem nos à deo adipiſci: we muſt confeſſe, that we haue our good will from God.

30. *Lib.8.de Geneſ.c.*11. The queſtion being propounded, why Adam is ſaid to labour in Paradiſe, Id dicitur, vt intelligamus & operari hominem vt ſit, & cuſtodire vt iuſtus ſit: This is ſaid, that we may vnderſtand, that God both worketh man to haue a being, and keepeth him, that he may be iuſt: both the one then, as well as the other, are wholy of God.

31. *Soliloqu.c.*15.16. Credebam me aliquid fore ex me, exiſtimabam me ſufficere per me, nec percipiebam, quoniam tu regebas me, &c. I beleeued, that I was ſomewhat of my ſelfe, I thought I ſufficed by my ſelfe, neyther did I perceiue that thou diddeſt gouerne me: Si quid boni eſt, magni vel parui, donum tuum eſt, noſtrum non eſt niſi malum; ſiquid boni vnquam habui, à te recepi; ſiquando ſteti; per te ſteti, ſiquando cecidi, per me cecidi: If there be any good in me, great or little, it is thy gift, ours is nothing but euill: if euer I had any good thing, I receiued it of thee; if I ſtand, I ſtand by thee; if I fall, I fall by mee, &c. Hee proceedeth, Tentator defuit, & vt deeſſet tu feciſti, &c. The tempter was wanting, and that it ſhould ſo be, thou waſt the cauſe: place and time were wanting, thou alſo diddeſt cauſe it, Affuit tentator, non defuit locus, &c. There was a Tempter, and there wanted neither place nor time, ſed vt non conſentirem, tu feciſti, that I ſhould not conſent, the cauſe was in thee, &c. Thus Auguſtine leaueth no power at all to the will of man without grace, no not where temptation is wanting.

32. Soliloqu.c.25. Non eſt hominis velle, quod poſſit; aut poſſe quod velit, vel ſcire quid poſſit & velit; ſed potius à te greſſus hominis diriguntur: It is not in mans power to will that he can, or to can that he will, or to know what he can or will, but mans wayes are directed by thee.

33. In c.7.Matth. Totum reputa, quod iuſtus es pietati, quod autem peccator es, tuæ iniquitati aſcribe: omne enim crimen, facinus, peccatum noſtræ eſt negligentiæ; omnis virtus, ſanctitas, Dei indulgentiæ: Aſcribe the whole that thou art iuſt, to pietie; that thou art a ſinner, to iniquitie: euery crime and ſinne is of our negligence; euery vertue, of the diuine indulgence, &c. Here all is aſcribed to grace.

34. *Tom.*10.de verb. Apoſtol. ſerm.6. Ideò mens humana ne tibi tribuas, ne multum ſuperbias, immò, ne omnino ſuperbias, &c. Wherefore O thou mind of man, attribute nothing to thy ſelfe, be not ouer proud, nay be not proud at all: for that thou doſt not conſent to the deſires of the fleſh, the law of the ſpirite of life in Ieſus Chriſt doth free thee.

35. In Pſal.91. Vt cum lapidem calori ſubtraxeris, frigeſcet, &c. ſic tu, ſi à Deo receſſeris frigeſces: As when thou takeſt a ſtone from the heate of the fire or Sunne, it waxeth cold: ſo thou, if thou departeſt from God, &c. the will then of man hath no more goodnes of it ſelfe without God, than a ſtone hath heate.

36. De patient.c.22. Homo non poteſt eligere aut diligere, niſi prius electus dilectuſq; curetur, qui cæcitate eligenda non cernit, & languore diligenda faſtidit.: Man cannot elect, or affect, vnleſſe he be elected, and affected of God, and ſo healed: who by his blindnes ſeeth not things to be elected, and by his weaknes doth lothe things to be deſired and affected.

37. De pœnitent.cap.6. Noſtrum eſt velle, ſed voluntas ipſa mouetur, vt ſurgat, ſanatur, vt valeat, dilatatur, vt capiat, & impletur, vt habeat: To will is ours, but the will is ſtirred, that it may riſe; it is healed, that it may haue ſtrength; it is enlarged, to receiue; and filled, that it may retaine or haue, &c. Thus the will can doe nothing of it ſelfe.

38. Epiſt.107. Neque fideles fiunt ſine libero arbitrio, & tamen illius gratia fideles fiunt, qui illorum à poteſtate tenebrarum liberauit arbitrium: They are not made beleeuers without freewill, and yet by his grace they are become beleeuers, which hath deliuered their freewill from the power of darknes, &c. God onely then deliuereth our will from the power of darknes and captiuitie of ſinne.

39. De natur.grat.cap.67. Cum de libera hominis voluntate loquimur, de illa ſcilicet, in qua homo factus eſt loquimur, nunc ſunt omni animæ peccanti duo iſta pœnalia, ignorantia, difficultas, &c. When wee ſpeake of mans freewill, we ſpeake of that, wherein he was made: but now theſe two penall things are laid vpon euery ſoule that ſinneth, ignorance and difficultie: ignorance bringeth error, difficultie ſorrow, &c.

40. De bono perſeuerant.2.13. Cogitantes credimus, cogitantes loquimur, &c. We thinking beleeue, we thinke, when wee ſpeake, and when wee doe any other thing: ſed tamen quod attinet ad pietatis viam, non ſumus idonei cogitare aliquid ex nobis, &c. But as touching the way of godlines, we are not fit to thinke any thing of our ſelues, but our ſufficiencie is of God, &c. Wee are not able to thinke any thing, how much leſſe to will that is good?

Many ſuch like places beſide might be alleaged out of Auguſtine: but theſe (I truſt) may ſuffice to cleare this point, that this learned father aſcribed no power at all to mans will by nature, but referred all to grace. In other controuerſies the like might be ſhewed: but that it were neither conuenient at large on both ſides to diſcuſſe the ſentences of the fathers, whereby this volume might grow to be too large; nor yet ſo profitable in this worke, which is intended chiefly for their vſe that are not profeſſed in theſe ſtudies; nor yet ſo agreeable to my purpoſe and ſcope in this treatiſe, which haue chiefly propounded to my ſelfe to decide theſe controuerſies by Scriptures.

THE FOVRTH PART OF THIS CONTROUERSIE, concerning Iuſtification.

THe ſeuerall queſtions that are handled are theſe: firſt of faith: ſecondly, of iuſtification it ſelfe.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF FAITH.

THe parts of this queſtion: firſt, what faith is. Secondly, of the diuers kindes of faith. Thirdly, whether faith may be ſeparated from charitie. Fourthly, of the validitie of faith. Firſt, after what manner faith iuſtifieth. Secondly, whether faith onely iuſtifie.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NATVRE and definition of faith.

WE define iuſtifying faith, to be an vndoubted confidence, ioyned with a certaine knowledge, whereby we both vnderſtand, and are perſwaded, euery man in, and for himſelfe, that the promiſes of God made vnto vs in Chriſt, are verily ours, and we made partakers of them in him.

The Ieſuite taketh exception againſt three points of this definition: firſt, he denieth faith to be a confident or ſure perſwaſion. Secondly, that it is not neceſſarily ioyned with knowledge. Thirdly, he affirmeth, that the promiſes of God in Chriſt, are not the proper obiect of faith: Of theſe then in their order.

THE FIRST POINT, WHETHER FAITH, whereby we are iuſtified, be a ſure confidence of the heart.

The Papiſts.

B*ellarmine* holdeth, that faith hath the proper ſeate and place onely in the vnderſtanding, not in the heart or affections; and therefore denieth, that it is any ſuch aſſurance or confidence: 48. Error.
*lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.*6. The Councel of Trent likewiſe determineth, that iuſtifying faith, is no confidence of the heart: *ſeſſ.6.can.*13. The Rhemiſts affirme it, to be an act onely of vnderſtanding: *Annot.2.Cor.*13 *ſect.*1.

*Argum.*1. Confidence is the effect of faith, and faith the cauſe thereof: We haue entrance with confidence by faith in him, Epheſ.3.12. faith worketh confidence: Ergo, it is no confidence, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Saint Iohn ſaith, God is loue, 1.Epiſt.4.8. yet it is no good conſequent, that God therefore worketh not loue in vs: for Saint Paul ſaith, That the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt, Rom.5.5. God is loue one way, that is, eſſentially, and originally; and hee worketh loue another way in vs, or rather another kinde of loue, which is an image, and effect of his loue: So faith worketh confidence, and it ſelfe neuertheleſſe, is a kinde of confidence. 2. As the effect is, ſo is the cauſe: can the waters be ſweete, if the fountaine be bitter? It is the propertie of fire to giue heate, therefore it muſt it ſelfe alſo be hot: ſo faith worketh confidence; therefore it muſt needes be much more confident it ſelfe. 3. We ſay not, that fides, and fiducia, faith and fiduce, or confidence, are all one: for this confidence is a common qualitie both to faith and hope: but this we ſay, that faith is alwaies ioyned with confidence. Now betweene this confidence, that accompanieth faith, and that confidence, which is wrought by faith, we make this difference: faith hath a generall confidence and aſſurance of all the promiſes of God, and it is the fountaine and ſtorehouſe from whence iſſueth out all our aſſurance and confidence in particular: As faith maketh vs to pray confidently, Aske in faith, and wauer not, Iam.1.6. which is the ſame which the Apoſtle ſaith here, We haue entrance with confidence, Epheſ.3.12. Faith alſo worketh confidence, and reioycing in tribulation, Rom.5.3. This confidence and aſſurance in theſe Chriſtian exerciſes, is nothing elſe but the particular vſe and application of that generall confidence in the promiſes of God, which we ſay is neceſſarily required in faith.

*Argum.*2. Firſt, faith and hope are two diuers things: 1.Cor.13.13. Now abideth faith hope and loue, theſe three: but hope is nothing elſe but confidence: Ergo, faith is not. Secondly, againe 2.Cor.10.5. Bringing into captiuitie euery thought to the obedience of Chriſt: faith then doth captiuate the vnderſtanding, and ſubdueth it to Chriſt: Ergo, not the will: *Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtificat. cap.*6.

Anſw. Firſt,fiduce or confidence is a common qualitie both to faith and hope,and as the genus to them both: therefore it is abſurdly reaſoned, hope hath confidence: Ergo, faith not: as if he ſhould haue argued thus: A beaſt hath ſenſe: *Ergo,*man hath not.Who would not hiſſe ſuch a diſputer out of the ſchooles?

Secondly, 1. It followeth not,faith doth captiuate the vnderſtanding: Ergo, not the will: it doth not captiuate the thoughts onely, but euery high thing that is exalted againſt the knowledge of God; and ſo alſo the rebellious will of man. 2. Obedience is properly in the will,and not in the vnderſtanding, therefore it working obedience to Chriſt, worketh alſo vpon the will and affections of man: and ſo the Scripture ſpeaketh directly,that the heart, which is the ſeate of the affections,is purified by faith,Act.15.9.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme not,that faith only is an aſſurance of the hart,but that the light of vnderſtanding,and knowledge of the minde,is requiſite thereunto. As faith is deſcribed,Hebr.11. ver.6.He that commeth vnto God,muſt beleeue that God is: Here is the certaine knowledge,that God is,and that he is holie,iuſt and true: And that he is a rewarder of thoſe that ſeeke him: Here is the aſſured perſwaſion and confidence of the heart. That faith then is inſeparablie ioyned with this aſſured confidence,it is thus warranted by the word of God.

*Argum.*1. Rom.4.19.20.Abraham was not weake in faith,&c.neither did he doubt of the promiſe of God through vnbeleefe,but was ſtrengthened in faith, being fully aſſured,&c. Here firſt the Apoſtle ſaith,he doubted not through vnbeleefe: As vnbeleefe then is ioyned with doubting, ſo faith hath confidence: and this it is to be ſtrong,and not weake in faith. Secondly,being fully aſſured: therefore the aſſured perſwaſion of the heart doth perpetually accompanie faith.

Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read,after the Latine tranſlation, pleniſſimè ſciens, moſt fully knowing,not fully perſwaded. And by this the Ieſuite would prooue, that faith conſiſteth rather in knowledge,than perſwaſion,*Bellarm.cap.6.loc.*1.

Contra. The word in the originall is,πληροφορηθεὶς, which muſt be tranſlated *perſuaſus,*or *perſuaſum habens,*being perſwaded,or aſſured,not *pleniſſimè ſciens,*fully knowing. Firſt,it being a participle of the paſſiue,cannot properly be tranſlated by an actiue. Secondly, there is not a letter or ſillable in this word included,whereby knowledge is ſignified or expreſſed in the Greeke tongue. Thirdly,the vulgar tranſlator doth reade otherwiſe in other places,tranſlating this word πληροφορεῖν, and the deriuatiues thereof by theſe Latine words,*implere,complere,*to fill,or fulfill: as Luk.1.1. 2.Timoth.4.5. In which places, though the tranſlator expreſſe not the full meaning of the word,as we will now proue,yet he varieth from his reading in this place: which ſheweth the imperfection of the tranſlation agreeing not with it ſelfe. Fourthly,this tranſlation, *pleniſſimè ſciens,*fully knowing,which ſeemeth to define faith by the fulnes of knowledge, impugneth the Ieſuites opinion, who denieth,as wel that *fides,*is *notitia,*faith is a knowledge,as that it is *fiducia,*fiduce or aſſurance: therefore he ſhould not gaine much by this reading. Fiftly,that this word πληροφορέω,ſignifieth,as we reade,to perſwade,*plenam fidem facere,*to make a thing certaine or aſſured,it may appeare by comparing other places of ſcripture,where this word is vſed: as Luk.1.1:the Euangeliſt ſaith,He hath taken in hand to write the ſtorie of thoſe things, whereof we are fully perſwaded: the word is πεπληροφορημένων: the vulgar tranſlateth, of things, quæ in nobis completa ſunt, which are fulfilled in vs; very ignorantly,not diſtinguiſhing betweene the Greeke words, πληροφορεῖν, and, πληροῦν,the firſt ſignifieth, to certifie or perſwade; the ſecond,to fill: And πεπληροφορημένα πράγματα,are ſuch things which are ſo euidently proued,that there remaineth no more doubting: as Maſter Beza ſheweth out of Vlpianus. So the word πληροφορία,is truly tranſlated,aſſurance, 1.Theſſ.1.5.Our Goſpell was not in word only vnto you,but in power and much aſſurance,*certa perſuaſione,*not *plenitudine multa,*much fulnes:but the ſcripture vſeth another word to expreſſe fulnes,and that is πλήρωμα, Epheſ.1.23. 3.19. not πληροφορία. Sixtly,Eſpenc. a learned Papiſt alſo approoueth this interpretation of the word,and to that purpoſe he alleageth theſe places: Rom.4.14. Coloſſ.2.2. Heb.6.10.in the which places πληροφορία, is taken for a certaine faith and perſwaſion: πληροφορηθεὶς,being perſwaded,&c. *in 2.Timoth.pag.*149. liter.d. Seuenthly,this is prooued by the Etymology or denomination of the word: for πληροφορῶ, is as if we ſhould ſay,πλήρη πίστιν φέρω, *plenam fidē affero,*I bring or giue certaintie or aſſurance to a thing. Eightly, that it is ſo to be taken in this place,for a full aſſurance, the words before going declare: He doubted not of the promiſe: what is that elſe,but to be aſſured?

*Argum.*2. S.Paul ſaith,Rom.8.38.*I am perſwaded, that neither death,nor life,&c. ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God,&c.*the word is πέπεισμαι,from whence the word πίστις, faith, is known to be deriued.The vulgar text hath *certus ſum,*I am certaine. *Origen tract.*23.in Matth. is tranſlated thus: confido, I truſt, that neither death nor life: Ergo, faith hath a fiduce, confidence, or certaine perſwaſion.

Bellarmine here diſtinguiſheth, that there are two kinds of fiduce or confidence,one in the vnderſtanding,the other in the will: the firſt faith hath,the ſecond hope: *Bellar.c.*6.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine forgetteth his owne argument vſed before: hope hath confidence: Ergo, not faith: for if there be two kindes of confidence, as he ſaith, he hath made a ſimple argument. Secondly, Bellarmine propoundeth the queſtion generally, Fidem iuſtificantem non eſſe fiduciam, that iuſtifying faith is no fiduce, or confidence at all, cap.6. and therefore it is ſufficient for vs that hee graunteth it to be any confidence. Thirdly, yet that the Apoſtle here meaneth a perſwaſion of the heart and affection it is euident, becauſe he ſpeaketh of loue, which is in the heart: If it be taken actiuely for our loue toward God, as Origen vnderſtandeth it, writing vpon theſe wordes, 1.Corinth.13.8. Loue doth neuer fall away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illæ voces, confido, &c. From this charitie neuer falling away proceeded thoſe words of the Apoſtle, I am perſwaded, that neither life nor death, &c. can ſeparate vs from the loue of God, Hom.23.in Matth. But if we take it paſſiuely for Gods loue to vs, which is the better ſenſe, it commeth all to one: for the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.35. That tribulation and anguiſh cannot ſeparate vs from this loue, that is, from the aſſurance thereof. Now tribulation, &c. worketh not vpon the vnderſtanding, but the affection: this perſwaſion then of the Apoſtle was not only in his vnderſtanding, but in his heart and affection.

Auguſtine ſaith: Si nunc tempus eſt fidei, ſalus autem animarum merces eſt fidei, quis dubitet in fide, quæ per dilectionem operatur, peragendum diem vltimum, atque in fine diei, recipiendam eſſe mercedem, non ſolum redemptionem corporis, verumetiam ſalutem animarum? If now it be the ſeaſon of faith, and the ſaluation of the ſoule be the reward of faith, who doubteth, but that a man ſhall dye in this faith, that worketh by loue, and afterward receiue the reward, both the redemption of the bodie, and ſaluation of the ſoule? Tractat.in Iohann.86. Quis dubitet? Who can doubt? ſaith Auguſtine: Ergo, faith expelleth doubting. Decret.11.Iulij.1. Qui dubius in fide, infidelis: He that is doubtfull in faith, is an Infidell.

Saint Ambroſe vpon theſe words, Epheſ.3.17. that Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. Certi ſint de Chriſto, &c. Let them be ſure of Chriſt, that he dwelleth in their harts by faith: vt cùm fidem eius habeamus in cordibus noſtris, &c. that when wee haue his faith in our hearts, wee may ſeeme to haue him. The ſeate then of faith is the heart: not the heart taken generally for the whole inward man, as Bellarmine anſwereth, cap.6. but properly as it is the ſeate of loue, and of other affections: as it followeth in the ſame 17.verſe, being rooted and grounded in loue: the heart then is the ſeate both of faith and loue.

Peter Lombard. agreeth: Fidem in corde, &c. That a man ſeeth his faith in his heart. And he alleageth thus out of Auguſtine: Credimus vt cognoſcamus, non cognoſcimus vt credamus: Wee beleeue to vnderſtand, we vnderſtand not to beleeue. But if faith were only in the vnderſtanding, we ſhould firſt vnderſtand, then beleeue: lib.3.diſt.25.liter.g.

The holy Martyrs thus iudged of the Chriſtian faith, that it brought a moſt certaine aſſurance with it: Maſter Bradford holy Martyr did no more doubt, that by dying for the fayth of Chriſt, he ſhould pleaſe the Lord, then that the Sunne did ſhine, which at that time did ſhine in at the window, Fox. pag.1614.

Maſter Philpot bleſſed Martyr, when a popiſh Biſhop had ſaid vnto him, thus, theſe heretikes take vpon them to be ſure of all things they ſtand in: you ſhould rather ſay, I truſt I know Chriſt, then that I am ſure of it: the holy Martyr thus anſwered: Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth; God giue me grace alwayes to beleeue, that I am ſure of true faith, and fauour in Chriſt, Fox. pag.1825.

THE SECOND POYNT, WHETHER knowledge be neceſſary vnto fayth.

The Papiſts.

49.Error. BEllarmine ſaith, fidem non eſſe notitiam, ſed aſſenſum, that faith is no knowledge, but a bare aſſent of the minde, without knowledge or vnderſtanding of that whereunto it aſſenteth. Thus alſo the Rhemiſts note, there is a kind of faith called fides implicita, the faith of ſingle men, and Idiotes: who although they are not able to giue a reaſon of their beleefe, yet it is enough for them to ſay, they are Catholike men, and that they will liue and die in that faith which the Catholike Church doth teach, Rhemiſt.annot.Luk.12.ſect.3.

This implicite faith, which they ſay is ſufficient for common Catholikes, is nothing els, but to beleeue, as the Church beleeueth, though they knowe nothing themſelues particularly: that faith is ſufficient without knowledge, thus they reaſon.

Argum. Though I know all ſecrets, and all knowledge (ſaith the Apoſtle) yea if I had all faith, &c. 1.Cor.13.2. the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth knowledge, and faith, as being two ſundry things, Bellarm. cap.7.

*Anſw.*1. Though the Apoſtle reckon vp here diuers particular giftes, yet doth he not ſo ſeparate and deuide them, but that one may communicate with another: for if this be a good conſequent, becauſe Saint Paul ſaith, all knowledge, and all faith, making two ſundry giftes of them, therefore fayth hath no fellowſhip with knowledge: then by the ſame reaſon, becauſe he alſo ſaith, if I could propheſie, and know all ſecrets, therefore he that propheſieth hath no knowledge of ſecrets.

2 Saint Paul ſpeaketh not here of iuſtifying faith, but of the faith of miracles, If that I had faith whereby I could remoue mountaines,&c. which faith may be ſeparated from loue: but iuſtifying faith cannot: faith working by loue, ſaith the Apoſtle, Gal.5.6. this place therefore concludeth nothing againſt iuſtifying faith.

The Proteſtants.

AS before they ſpoyled faith of the better part thereof, which is a ſtable and certaine perſwaſion of the heart: ſo now alſo they rob it of the other part, which is an euidence and light of ſpirituall knowledge: for faith cannot ſtand with ignorance, but neceſſarily bringeth with it, an illumination of the minde, as it worketh ſtablenes in the heart.

Neither doe we affirme, that we doe perfectly vnderſtand with the minde, thoſe things which by faith we beleeue: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that neither the eye hath ſeene, nor the eare heard, neither came into mans heart, the things that God hath prepared for thoſe that loue him, 1.Cor.2.9. And now we ſee thorough a glaſſe darkely, then ſhall we ſee face to face, 1.Cor.13.12. We ſhall neuer therefore bee able perfectly to vnderſtand in this life ſo much, as wee beleeue: yet we doe know and vnderſtand them after a ſorte: for as M. Latimer ſaith; there is great difference betweene certaine knowledge, and cleare knowledge, for that may be of things abſent that appeare not; this requireth the preſence of the obiect: A man therefore may certainely and ſurely know the thing which he perfectly beleeueth, though he doe not cleerely and euidently know it.

Againe, concerning this diſtinction of implicita, and explicita fides, our iudgement is this: we doe not abſolutely condemne or refuſe it; but with two conditions are content to receiue it: firſt, if they vnderſtand that to be the explicita fides, when as a man by ſufficient knowledge and learning is able to mayntaine euery poynt of his faith: that to be implicita fides, not when a man is vtterly ignorant to giue a reaſon of his faith, but when his knowledge and inſtruction is not ſo full, as is to be found in the learned ſort: So then the explicite faith, is not that which onely hath skill and knowledge; the implicite, that which hath none: but they differ onely in degree, the one hath a greater meaſure of knowledge then the other.

The ſecond condition is this, that we vnderſtand the implicite faith, to be that, not which is grounded vpon the determination of the Church, but vpon the truth of the holy Scriptures: As if a man ſhould thus profeſſe, this is my faith, and thus doe I beleeue, becauſe I am ſo taught by the Scriptures, though otherwiſe I be not able to giue an exact account of my faith. With theſe reſpects and conditions we will admit of this diſtinction: as we finde it to haue been admitted by that holy Martyr, Maſter Saunders, whoſe wordes I will ſet downe: Albeit I cannot explicita fide, as they call it, conceiue all that is to be conceiued, neither can diſcuſſe all that is to be diſcuſſed, in the doctrine of this moſt true religion: yet I doe binde my ſelfe, as by my humble ſimplicitie, ſo by my fidem implicitam, that is, by faith in generality, to wrap my beliefe in the credite of the ſame, that no authoritie of the Romiſh religion, repugnant thereunto, ſhall by any meanes remoue me from the ſame, Fox.pag.1495:ex epiſt. Saunder. ad Wintonienſ. This holy Martyr confeſſeth this implicite faith, and modeſtly acknowledgeth his faith to be ſuch, not that he was altogether rude and ignorant, but not yet attayned to the depth of Chriſtian knowledge: ſecondly, he groundeth his faith not vpon the determination of the Romiſh Church, but vpon the truth of his religion warranted by the Scriptures. Such an implicite faith doe we alſo graunt. But a popiſh implicite faith altogether voide of knowledge, when men vtterly ignorant content themſelues to beleeue as the Church beleeueth, we do deteſt and abhor: Such a faith, as the Biſhop of Cauaillon in France, commended ſometimes to the Chriſtians of Merindol, in theſe words: It was not neceſſary or requiſite to ſaluation, that they ſhould be ſo cunning, as to expound or vnderſtand the articles of their faith, but that it was ſufficient that they knew it in Latine: for there were many Biſhops, Curates, yea and Doctors of Diuinitie, whom it would trouble to expound the Pater Noſter, or the Creede, Fox.pag.949. Againſt this blind, popiſh, and vnſauory faith, we reaſon thus.

*Argum.*1. Saint Peter ſaith, We muſt be readie to giue account to euery one that asketh, of that hope, which is in vs, 1.Pet.3.15. Ergo, it is not ſufficient for a Chriſtian to ſay he beleeueth, as the Church beleeueth: but he muſt be able to giue account of his beleefe.

*Argum.*2. Maſter Lambert holy Martyr, againſt this popiſh implicite faith which indeede is no fayth, but a blockiſh ignorance, alleadgeth theſe teſtimonies of Scripture: Brethren, be not children in wit and vnderſtanding, but as concerning maliciouſnes be you children, 1.Cor.14. Be not like the horſe and mule, which haue no vnderſtanding, Pſalm.32. Trie all things, and keepe that which is good, 1.Theſ.5.21. Ergo, Chriſtians ought to haue knowledge to diſcerne good from euill, &c. Fox. pag.1103.

Maſter George Wiſehart holy Martyr, condemned for this truth, becauſe he ſaid, that it was neceſſary to euery man to know and vnderſtand his baptiſme, Fox.pag.1269.

Laſtly, Auguſtine writeth thus: Ita apud omnes vulgatam & confirmatam eſſe Catholicam fidem, vt nec notitiam poſſit fugere popularem: That the Catholike faith was ſo common and ſo plaine, that it could not be hid, no not from the popular ſort: for now ought the propheſie of Ieremy to be fulfilled, They ſhall all knowe me from the leaſt to the greateſt. Heb.8.11.

Sic ex appendice Concilij Baſil. ex oration. præſidentis ad Bohemos: Certiores de fide mea & doctrina eſtote, quam ſi quid proprijs conſpiciatis oculis: Be ye more certaine of my faith and doctrine, then when you ſee any thing with your owne eyes: ſo the Church is brought in ſpeaking, Euery member of the Church muſt be thus ſure of the doctrine of the Church: but how can they be ſure thereof vnleſſe they know it?

Peter Lombard. to this purpoſe alleageth thus out of Auguſtine, that faith cannot be without knowledge: Lib.3.diſt.24.C. Nemo poteſt credere in deum, niſi aliquid intelligatur, &c. No man can beleeue in God, vnleſſe ſomewhat bee vnderſtood, becauſe faith is of hearing. Againe, Nec ea quæ creduntur prius, quam intelliguntur, penitus ignorantur, &c. Neither the things, that are beleeued before they are vnderſtood, are altogether vnknowne, ſeeing faith commeth of hearing, &c. By this text Auguſtine proueth, that faith is ioyned with knowledge: for how can a man beleeue by hearing that he knoweth not?

THE THIRD POINT, OF THE obiect of faith.

The Papiſts.

50.Error. Bellarmine* affirmeth, that it is not the propertie of faith, ſpecially to apply to euery beleeuer the promiſes of God in Chriſt, for this he blaſphemouſly calleth preſumption, but generally to beleeue whatſoeuer is contained in the word of God to be true, Bellarmin.lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.4. The Chapter alſo of Trent, thus decreeth, that iuſtifying faith is not that aſſured beleefe, and confidence of the heart, whereby we are perſwaded, that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs in Chriſt, *ſeſſ.6.can.*13. Our Rhemiſts alſo thus deliuer their ſentence, that faith which iuſtifieth, is a generall, or vniuerſall beleeuing of the articles of Chriſts death, and reſurrection, not any fond ſpeciall faith, fiducia, or confidence of each mans owne ſaluation, Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.4.ſect.9.

*Argum.*1. That faith, which Peter confeſſed when he ſaid to our Sauiour, thou art the Chriſt, the Sonne of the liuing God, was the ſame faith that iuſtifieth: But this faith was a confeſſion onely of the Diuinitie of Chriſt, no ſpeciall application of his merites: Ergo, faith is no ſuch thing, Bellar. lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.8.

Anſw. 1. By our aduerſaries owne confeſſion, this was not the whole iuſtifying faith, which Peter here profeſſeth: for they affirme, that faith is an vniuerſall beliefe of the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection, &c. But at this time, though Peter confeſſed thus of the Sonne of God, yet he neither beleeued that Chriſt ſhould die, for therefore he deſerued to be called Sathan, verſ.23. becauſe he went about to perſwade Chriſt not to die: and as for the reſurrection of Chriſt, the Apoſtles doubted of it euen when Chriſt was riſen againe, Luk.24.verſ.11. how then could this be the iuſtifying faith in reſpect of Peter that confeſſed it?

2 This faith which Peter confeſſed, though it were not the whole iuſtifying faith, yet it was a principall part thereof: for there is in faith the matter and ſubſtance thereof, which is the beliefe of the articles of the faith, and the forme, which is the particular vſe and application thereof to euery man ſeuerally: to confeſſe therefore, that Chriſt is the Sonne of God, (which doth comprehend both the natures of his Godhead and humanitie, and the offices of Chriſt, whereunto he was annoynted, his kingdome, propheſie and prieſthood) belongeth to iuſtifying faith, as the matter and ſubſtance thereof.

3 Though ſimply to confeſſe Ieſus to be the Sonne of God, be not that faith that iuſtifieth, becauſe the diuels haue made ſuch a confeſſion, Mark.5.7. yet this confeſſion may ſo proceed from a man, and it might be, was ſo vttered by Peter in this place, that it may declare a right iuſtifying faith: that is, ſo to confeſſe Chriſt to be the Sonne of God, and to be the annoyned Meſſiah, to take away the ſins of the world, that he which ſo confeſſeth, beleeueth it with comfort, and that Chriſt is ſo euen to him: Therefore Saint Paul ſaith, that no man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt, 1.Cor.12.3. And our Sauiour ſaith to Peter, after he had made this confeſſion, that fleſh and blood had not reuealed it vnto him, but his father in heauen. Wherefore it is certaine, that he vttered more then a generall beliefe of this article, which may be in diuels: vnleſſe you will ſay, that the diuels alſo made the ſame confeſſion by the holy Ghoſt, and by reuelation from God.

*Argum.*2. Abrahams faith was nothing elſe, but his beliefe of a certaine article reuealed vnto him from God, and credite giuen to Gods ſpeeches, that he ſhould be the father of many nations, by his Sonne, which was yet vnborne, whom his wife Sara, both barren and now old, was to beare vnto him: But Abrahams faith was a iuſtifying faith: Ergo, Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.4.ſect.9.Bellarm. lib.1.de iuſtificat.cap.8.

Anſw.1. The obiect of Abrahams faith, or the thing which Abraham beleeued, was not onely concerning the birth of his ſonne Iſaac, and the multiplying of his ſeede by him: but the promiſe which Abraham gaue credite vnto, was ſpirituall concerning Chriſt: As the Apoſtle noteth, he ſaith not, and to the ſeedes, as ſpeaking of many, but, and to thy ſeede, as of one, which is Chriſt, Galath.3.16. And Abraham was promiſed not ſo much to be the father of many nations, as to be the father of all them that beleeue, Rom.4.11. therefore it was not a temporall, but a ſpirituall promiſe, which was made vnto Abraham. 2. Neither was Abrahams faith onely a generall or hiſtoricall beliefe, that this promiſe was true: but a ſure confidence and truſt in God that this promiſe pertayned to him, and that he himſelfe ſhould be bleſſed, in that promiſed ſeede: as our Sauiour teſtifieth Ioh. 8.16. Abraham deſired to ſee my day, and ſaw it, and reioyced: for whereof ſprang that exceeding ioy in Abraham, but vpon that certaine hope and perſwaſion, which he had of his owne ſaluation in Chriſt?

*Argum.*3. That faith, which Chriſt required, and confirmed by miracles, was a iuſtifying faith: but that was no certaine fiduce or particular perſwaſion, but onely a general beleefe in the power and omnipotencie of Chriſt.

Ergo, a iuſtifying faith requireth no ſuch particular perſwaſion, &c.

The aſſumption Bellarmine proueth by diuers places of Scripture.

1. Matth.9.28. Chriſt ſaith to the blind, Beleeue yee that I am able to do this? According to your faith be it vnto you.

2. Such was the faith of the Centurion, which Chriſt ſo commended, ſaying, hee found not ſo great faith in Iſrael. Luke 7.7. Say the word onely, and my ſeruant ſhall be whole.

3. Such was Nathanaels faith, Iohn 1.50. Becauſe I ſaid I ſaw thee vnder the figtree, beleeueſt thou?

4. Iohn 11.27. I beleeue that thou art Chriſt the ſonne of God, which ſhould come into the worlde.

5. Iohn 20. Chriſt ſaith to Thomas; Thou haſt ſeene and beleeued, &c. Hee beleeued onely the trueth of this article, That Chriſt was riſen from the dead.

6. Mark.1.40. The Leper doubted of Chriſts mercie; If thou wilt, thou canſt make mee cleane; he beleeued onely his power.

7. The Phariſee had confidence that he was iuſt and righteous, Luk.18. yet was he not for all that iuſtified.

8. The Eunuch had no aſſurance of Gods mercie, but ſaid onely, I beleeue Ieſus Chriſt to be the Sonne of God, Act.8.37.

9. Rom.10.9. If thou confeſſe with thy mouth the Lord Ieſus, and ſhalt beleeue in thy heart, that God raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaued: iuſtifying faith is nothing els, but the beleefe of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

10. 1.Iohn 5.1. Whoſoeuer beleeueth, that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: Here is no perſwaſion or particular confidence required, Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtificat.c.8.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. To the propoſition I anſwere, that indeed, that faith which Chriſt required and preached, was the true iuſtifying faith, which included a certaine aſſurance of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: as Luk.7.47. Chriſt ſaith of the penitent woman, Many ſinnes are forginen her, for ſhee loued much: ſhe by her loue vnto Chriſt, teſtified her inward feeling and aſſurance of forgiueneſſe. 2. Though this faith Chriſt required, yet in his mercie he refuſed not the leaſt beginning of faith, which was to beleeue his power, that he was able to worke miracles vpon their bodies, which was the faith of miracles, yet an introduction to the true iuſtifying faith: and therefore it was written of Chriſt, A bruiſed reed ſhall he not breake, and ſmoaking flaxe ſhall he not quench: Matth.12.20. that he ſhall beare with the infirme and weake, and not reiect their ſmall meaſure of faith.

1. Secondly, our particular anſwere to the places obiected, is this: 1. Thoſe blind men beleeued not onely that Chriſt was able to helpe them, but were perſwaded of his mercie, in ſaying, O ſonne of Dauid haue mercie vpon vs. 2. To the receiuing of a temporall benefite in recouering of their ſight, a temporarie faith (which we call the faith of miracles) might ſuffice.

2. Secondly, 1. the Centurions faith is ſhewed in beleeuing Chriſt to be able to heale his ſeruants bodily ſickneſſe: but there remiſſion of ſinnes is the obiect of iuſtifying faith, and therefore it is improperly alleaged. 2. Yet this Centurion had as well confidence in Chriſts mercie, as beleefe of his power, Chriſt hauing ſaid to him, verſ.7. I will come and heale him. 3. The Centurions faith, was for another; but the iuſtifying faith, is the aſſurance that euery man hath for himſelfe.

3. Thirdly, 1. Nathanael is commended for this good beginning of faith, which Chriſt promiſeth to encreaſe: thou ſhalt ſee greater things then theſe. 2. And his faith is not without particular confidence, acknowledging Chriſt to be King of Iſrael: of which number he was, being affirmed by Chriſt to be a true Iſraelite, verſ.47.

4. The faith of Martha, was not onely a generall confeſſion of the reſurrection, which ſhe had made before, Ioh.11.24. but a particular beliefe, wherby euery one is by Chriſt ſaued frō the death of ſin: as ſhe, being asked, Beleeueſt thou this? anſwered, Yea: that is, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in Chriſt ſhal neuer die. v.26. This is the particular aſſurance of faith, to be preſerued frō euerlaſting death.

5. Thomas faith alſo was particular, in ſaying to Chriſt, Thou art my Lord and my God: Ioh.20. verſ.28. It was not a generall apprehenſion onely, that he was riſen againe.

6. Firſt, the Lepers requeſt was for the cleanſing of his body; what is this to the remiſſion of ſins, which is the proper obiect of iuſtifying faith? 2. Neither doth he doubt of Chriſts will and mercie, becauſe he ſaith, If thou wilt: will ye ſay that Chriſt doubted of his Fathers good will, becauſe he thus prayed; Father, if thou wilt, take away this cuppe, Luk.22.42. that is, Thou canſt take it away, if thou wilt: but a man is thus to pray for things temporall, namely with a condition not that God fayleth in mercie, when he withholdeth them, but becauſe it is not alwayes good for vs to receiue them. 3. The Lepers confidence appereth in his earneſt prayer, Mark.1.40. He beſought him, and kneeled downe, &c. and Chriſt had compaſſion vpon him: By the effect then it appeareth, he prayed with confidence, as our Sauiour ſaith, Mark.11.24. Whatſoeuer yee deſire when yee pray, beleeue that you ſhall haue it, and it ſhall be done vnto you.

7. The Phariſee doth boaſt of his owne worthineſſe, and hath a vaine confidence in himſelfe, which was no confidence at all: though he ſay, God I thanke thee; he doth it in hypocriſie, acknowledging herein a gift from God, but procured by his owne worthineſſe.

8. The Eunuches faith wanted not a particular apprehenſion and application of Chriſts death: What letteth me (ſaith he) to be baptized? verſ.36. that as hee was in his fleſh ſprinkled with water; ſo he beleeued, that in his ſoule he was waſhed in Chriſts blood from his ſinnes.

9. The faith and confeſſion which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is not without a particular perſwaſion and aſſurance of the heart. 1. So he ſaith, Rom.6.8. If we be dead with Chriſt, we beleeue wee ſhall liue with him: The beleefe then of Chriſts death and reſurrection worketh in vs aſſurance of life. 2. It followeth in the next verſe, Rom.10.11. Whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed: but it is the hope and aſſurance of the heart, that maketh not aſhamed, Rom.5.5. not a generall apprehenſion onely. 3. Rom.10.14. How ſhall they call vpon him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued? Inuocation is a fruit of this faith: but true inuocation or prayer is not without aſſurance to bee heard. Marke 11.24.

10. Euer the Apoſtle in that faith requireth particular confidence; for it followeth, 1.Ioh.5.1. Euery one that loueth him; Euery one that beleeueth, that Ieſus is Chriſt, loueth him: but loue caſteth out feare and doubtfulneſſe, and maketh vs to haue boldnes in the day of the Lord, 1.Ioh.4. verſ.16.17. Ergo, faith expelleth doubtfulnes, and worketh in vs boldneſſe and confidence.

The Proteſtants.

A Iuſtifying faith is not onely a generall beliefe of the articles of faith, that Chriſt was dead, borne, roſe againe for them that beleeue: but it is an aſſured and ſtedfaſt confidence, whereby euery man particularly doth apply to himſelfe the generall promiſes of God, for the hope of remiſſion of his ſinnes in Chriſt, that Chriſt dyed, roſe againe, and did all the reſt euen for him.

*Argum.*1. Saint Iames ſaith, the diuels alſo doe beleeue that God is, and doe tremble, Iam.1.19. yea no doubt, but they beleeue that the word of God is true and confeſſe the articles of the faith: for they acknowledge Chriſt to be the Sonne of the liuing God, Mark.5.7. But the faith of diuels is no iuſtifying faith: Ergo, neither this hiſtoricall and generall faith. Thus Maſter Tindal holy Martyr witneſſeth, who ſaith, that the diuel beleeueth that there is a God, and life euerlaſting, and that there is an hell, yea he beleeueth that the father, the ſonne, and the holy Ghoſt are but one God, yet he is nothing the better for this beliefe, *vid.plur.Fox.*p.1255.artic.5.

*Argum.*2, Saint Paul was ſaued by no other faith, but the common iuſtifying faith of all Chriſtians; but this faith wrought a particular perſwaſion in him: from henceforth is layd vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe, 2.Tim.4.8. And againe: I liue by the faith of the ſonne of God, who hath loued me and giuen himſelfe for me, Galath.cap.2.verſ.20. Ergo, ſuch ought the faith of all Chriſtians to be.

Bellarmine would here ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat, but he confirmeth our argument rather by his anſwere, then ouerthroweth it: Rectè dicunt poſſe vnumquemque generales promiſſiones ſibi applicare per fidem: They ſay right, that euery man by faith, may apply the generall promiſes to himſelfe, for as I beleeue by the Catholike faith, that Chriſt died for all, Ita eadem fide, credo mortuum eſſe pro me, ſo by the ſame faith, I beleeue he died for me, *Bellarm.cap.*11.*reſponſ.ad obiect.*5. Doth not the Ieſuite now confeſſe againſt himſelfe, that the ſpeciall mercy of God is the obiect of faith, which he before denied? And if a man by faith may apply to himſelfe the generall promiſes of God, why did he ſay before, Certam promiſſionem ſpecialis miſericordiæ, ad præſumptionem, non ad fidem pertinere: That for a man to promiſe to himſelfe ſpeciall mercy, it belongeth to preſumption, rather then to faith, Bellarm.cap.4. What neede now any other confutation, ſeeing the Ieſuit confuteth himſelfe.

Argum.3. Iuſtifying faith bringeth tranquillitie and peace of conſcience: but the promiſes of God generally apprehended, doe not worke the peace of cōſcience, vnleſſe they be particularly applied: Ergo, they are not the obiect of iuſtifying faith. Bellarmine here in flat tearmes denieth, that faith breedeth the ſecuritie and peace of minde, but rather pauores auget, it breedeth feare and terror in the minde, Bellarm. reſp. ad obiect.5. wherein he doth contradict of purpoſe the holy Apoſtle, which ſayth, being iuſtified by faith, we haue peace toward God, Rom.5.1. Ergo, iuſtifying faith worketh peace.

Argum.4. That faith doth not generally only apprehend, but particularlie applie, and worke a ſpeciall aſſurance thereof in the heart, theſe places of ſcripture further doe teſtifie.

1 Mark.11.24. Whatſoeuer ye deſire, when you pray, beleeue that ye ſhall haue it, and it ſhall be giuen vnto you.

2 Iam.1.6. Let him aske in faith, and wauer not.

3 2.Chron.20. Put your truſt in the Lord your God, and ye ſhall be aſſured.

4 Therefore the Scripture reproueth fearefulnes and doubtfulnes, as ſhewing a want of faith. Matth.8.26. Why are ye fearefull, O ye of little faith! Matth.14.31. Chriſt ſaith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? If want of faith bring doubtfulnes, then faith worketh aſſurance.

5 Rom.4.14. It is by faith, that the promiſe may be ſure to all the ſeed: Ergo, faith bringeth aſſurance.

1 Anſw. Bellarmine. It is true we muſt beleeue, that we ſhall receiue, but yet conditionally, if we aske aright: reſp. ad obiect.2.

Contra. We graunt this condition, if a man aske aright, that is in faith, he is ſure to be heard, as S. Iames ſaith, 5.15. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. Ergo, the condition of faith bringeth aſſurance; which is the ſame thing we affirme: thus he hath yeelded the cauſe.

2 Anſw. The Apoſtles meaning is, that we ſhould not doubt of Gods power, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. No nor yet of Gods mercie and good will: for before he had ſaid, Iam.1.5. Which giueth to all men liberally, and reprocheth no man: to be a liberall giuer without reproch, ſheweth Gods will and mercie, not his power onely. Againe, let him aske in faith, nihil hæſitans, doubting nothing at all: Ergo, he muſt not doubt either of Gods power or mercie.

3 Anſw. It followeth in the ſame verſe, credite prophitis eius, beleeue his Prophets, and all things ſhall fall out well: 2.Chron.20.20. But we muſt not put our truſt in the Prophets, Bellarm.

Contra. Firſt, is it all one, to ſay credite in Deum, &c. beleeue in God, as the text is, and credite Prophetis, beleeue the Prophets? To beleeue the Prophets, is to acknowledge they ſpeake the truth; to beleeue in God, is to put our truſt in him. Secondly, it is a groſſe conſequent, we muſt not put our truſt in the Prophets, Ergo not in God. Thirdly, the text is, truſt in God, & ſecuri eritis, ye ſhall be aſſured: but where there is any doubtfulnes, there is no aſſurance.

4 Anſw. Chriſt reproueth his Diſciples becauſe they doubted of his power: for if they had beleeued Chriſt to be omnipotent, &c. they would not haue doubted the danger of ſhipwracke, Bellarm. reſp. ad obiect.3.

Contra. Firſt, will yee make the Apoſtles of leſſe faith, then the poore Leaper, Matth.8.2. If thou wilt thou canſt make me cleane? he doubted not of Chriſts power. Secondly, neither did the Apoſtles make queſtion of Chriſts power at this time, ſaying, verſ.25. Saue vs or elſe we periſh: they doubted not in thus praying, but that he was able to ſaue them. Thirdly, to beleeue Chriſt to be able, belongeth to the intelligence; to be aſſured thereof, is of the heart and affections: but feare or doubtfulnes is not in the intelligence or vnderſtanding part, but in the heart: Ergo, this feare or doubt was not of Chriſts power: but they failed in their confidence and aſſurance.

5 Anſw. The promiſe made to Abraham was not of remiſſion of ſinnes, but of the calling of the Gentiles: and it was onely an hiſtoricall or dogmaticall faith, in the power and omnipotencie of God, *Bellarm.c.*11.reſp. ad obiect.4.

Contra. Firſt, the promiſe in deed was made of the calling of the Gentiles, and conſequently of remiſſion of ſins: for the promiſe was, that in his ſeed (which is Chriſt, Gal.3.16.) all the kinreds of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, Gen.12.3. but bleſſednes conſiſteth in the forgiuenes of ſins: Bleſſed are they, whoſe iniquities are forgiuen, Rom.4.7. Secondly, Abraham was not only reſolued in his iudgement of Gods power, but aſſured in his heart of his loue: for he both ſaw the day of his Chriſt in his ſpirit, and reioyced in his heart, Iohn 8.56. Abraham reioyced to ſee my day, he ſaw it and was glad.

Let vs heare the iudgement of holy martyrs and confeſſors: That honourable Earle the Lord Cromwell, who now doth ſhine in heauen, who was ſometime famous vppon earth, whoſe godly memorie ſhall neuer die: Hee in that ſweete prayer which he made at the houre of his death, ſayd thus: Thou mercifull Lord was borne for my ſake, thou didſt ſuffer both hunger and thirſt for my ſake; thou didſt teach faſt, and pray for my ſake; all thy holy actions and workes, thou wroughteſt for my ſake; thou ſufferedſt moſt grieuous paines and torments for my ſake: finally thou gaueſt thy moſt precious blood to be ſhed vpon the croſſe for my ſake: now moſt mercifull Sauiour, let all theſe things profite me, which thou haſt done freely for me,which haſt alſo giuen thy ſelfe for me,&c.Fox.1190. faith, we ſee,wrought in this true noble breaſt a particular perſwaſion of Gods mercy, with a ſweete application of the merits of Chriſt.

M.Bradſord thus writeth in a certain letter of his to a godly Gentlewoman: What profit ſhould it be to you, to beleeue this to be true (I am the Lord thy God) to others, if you ſhould not beleeue that it is true to your ſelfe, Fox pag. 1639.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quicquid cum loquor,agnoueris in te, quiſquis expertus es,crede contingere omnibus In Pſal.106.
qui de manu inimicorum pretioſo ſanguine redimuntur : That which I ſay, thou that haſt experience thereof in thy ſelfe,know that it is common to all,That are redeemed by that precious blood: Ergo,euery man muſt haue a particular feeling of his redemption in himſelfe.

Interrelig. Cæſarean. cap. 3. Qui pretioſo Chriſti ſanguine redimitur & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur, is continuò iuſtificatur, i. inuenit remiſſionem peccatorum: He that is redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and to whom the merite of Chriſt is applyed, he is forthwith iuſtified, and findeth remiſſion of ſinne. Thus the Elder Papiſts confeſſed a particular application of Chriſts redemption to be neceſſarie in iuſtification, and not a generall beleeuing onely of the trueth thereof to be ſufficient.

Peter Lombard alleageth thus out of Auguſt.lib.3.diſt.23.g. Fidem ipſam videt quiſque in corde ſuo eſſe ſi credit: Euery man ſeeth faith in his own hart,if he beleeue: but a man cannot ſee his faith that is not ſure of his faith : that he ſeeth onely in his heart,which is firme,fixed,and ſetled in his heart.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DIuers kinds of fayth.

The Papiſts.

WHereas we affirme,that there are diuers kinds of faith:as firſt, fides hiſtorica,an hiſtoricall 51.Error.
faith, which is to beleeue the truth of whatſoeuer contained in Scripture: there is alſo, fides miraculorum, the faith or gift of working myracles,whereof S. Paul ſpeaketh, 1.Cor.12.9. the third kinde is, fides iuſtificans, that faith which iuſtifieth, which is an aſſured beleefe of Gods promiſes made vnto vs in Chriſt: the Ieſuite and the Rhemiſts affirme, all theſe kinds of faith in ſubſtance to be all one : the faith of myracles differeth onely from iuſtifying faith, in an accidentall qualitie,of more feruor,deuotion,and confident truſt, Rhem.annot. 1.Cor.12.9. Bellar.de iuſtificat. lib.1.cap.4. Yea our Rhemiſts are yet more abſurd:that faith (ſay they) which S.Iames calleth a dead faith,is notwithſtanding a true faith,and the ſame which is called the Catholike faith,& which the Apoſtle defineth,Heb.11.1.and in ſubſtance al one with that,which iuſtifieth,Rhe.an.Iam.2.ſect 11.

Argum.1. That faith which S.Paul defineth,Heb.11.1. is the ſame faith,which iuſtifieth:but that faith alſo,is the hiſtoricall faith : thorough faith we vnderſtand that the world was ordained,&c. verſ.2. it is the ſame alſo with the faith of myracles: thorough faith,they ſtopped the mouths of Lions,quenched the violence of the fire,&c. verſ.33.34. And all this while the Apoſtle diſcourſeth of that faith,which he deſcribed in the beginning of the chapter,Bellarm.cap.5.

Anſw. We graunt that theſe three kindes of faith may ſometime be found in one man : for the hiſtoricall,and the faith of myracles doe as handmaids accompany the iuſtifying faith:the hiſtoricall faith,that is, the beleefe of all things contained in Scripture,is neuer diſioyned from the true faith:and the faith of myracles,ſo oft as is neceſſary,doth waite vpon the ſame: all theſe three were together,in thoſe holy Patriarches,whoſe faith the Apoſtle commendeth: Yet it followeth not,that they made all one faith: for the hiſtoricall faith may be,where iuſtifying faith is not, as in Diuels, Iam.2.19. they beleeue,that there is one God: the faith of myracles alſo may be in falſe Prophets, which haue no part in Chriſt,Matth.7.22. But if they were all one and the ſame,they could not be ſeparated,but where one is,there of neceſſitie ſhould be the other.

Argum.2. Mark.16.17. Theſe tokens ſhall follow them that beleeue : in my name they ſhall caſt out diuels,and ſhall ſpeake with new tongues,and take away ſerpents: hence it appeareth,that the faith of myracles and iuſtifying faith is all one,Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtific.c.8.

Contra.1. The argument followeth not: he that beleeueth in Chriſt, and hath iuſtifying faith, may worke myracles: Ergo,iuſtifying faith is all one with the faith of myracles:as it followeth not, he that hath faith,hath alſo loue and hope.Ergo,theſe three are all one. 2. The contrarie rather appeareth out of this text : for he that beleeueth,ſhall be ſaued,verſ.16. but a man may worke miracles and caſt out diuels,and yet not be ſaued,Matth.7.22. Againe,the faith of myracles is now ceaſed: but iuſtifying faith remaineth : but if the faith of myracles,and that whereby we are iuſtified were all one,then he that hath the one ſhould haue the other alſo: and where and when the one is,then and there ſhould be the other alſo.

The Proteſtants.

THat the faith of myracles, and the hiſtoricall faith are not of the ſame nature with iuſtifying faith : nor yet that a dead faith,and a true faith,are not all one,we ſhew it thus.

*Argum.*1. The faith of miracles may be in wicked men, Matth.7.23. the iuſtifying faith can be in none, but thoſe which ſhall be ſaued, Mark.16.verſ.16. They that beleeue ſhall be ſaued: Ergo, they are not all one. Againe, the faith of myracles may be ſeparated from loue, 1.Cor.13.3. but iuſtifying faith cannot, Galat.5.6. Faith working by loue: Ergo, what intollerable boldneſſe then is this, to aſcribe greater confidence and truſt to that faith of wicked men, then to the true iuſtifying faith in the elect.

*Argum.*2. That the dead faith which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, is not of the ſame nature with the iuſtifying faith; nor with that faith, which is handled, Heb.11. it may thus appeare: firſt, by that faith there deſcribed, the Patriarches pleaſed God, and beleeued that hee was a rewarder of thoſe, that ſought him, verſ.6. but this dead faith hath no ſuch operation. Secondly, as a dead man cannot be ſaid properly to be a man, no more can a dead faith be properly called a faith. Nay further, the faith of diuels and the faith of Saints cannot be of one nature and ſubſtance: but this dead ſpeculatiue faith may be in diuels, Iam.2.19. Ergo, it is a blaſphemous aſſertion, that theſe two faiths are all one.

Auguſtine ſaith, Diſcerne fidem tuam à fide dæmonum, dæmones credunt, quod oderunt: diſtinguit Apoſtolus, fides, quæ operatur per dilectionem: Diſcerne thy faith from the faith of diuels, the diuels beleeue that which they hate: the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them, faith, which worketh by loue: Ergo, a dead faith, which is fruitleſſe, and worketh not by loue, is the faith of diuels, and ſo not of one nature with a true iuſtifying faith.

Synod.Treuerenſ. ſub Iohanne cap.4. Populo perſuadeant non quamlibet fidem, qua in Deum creditur, ſed eam demum ſaluiferam fore, quæ per dilectionem operatur: Let them perſwade the people, that not euery faith, whereby men beleeue in God, but that onely bringeth ſaluation, which worketh by loue: by this diſtinction (not this, but that) we do gather that faith effectuall by loue, which is the true liuely iuſtifying faith, is in the iudgement of this Councel, of another kinde and nature, then other generall and common faiths are.

Decret.cauſ.33.diſtinct.2.c.11. In fide, ſpe, charitate, &c. Spiritus perfectorum corda non deſerit; in Prophetiæ virtute, miraculorum exhibitione, electis ſuis aliquando adeſt, aliquando ſe ſubtrahit: In faith, hope, charitie, and other giftes, &c. the ſpirite forſaketh not the hearts of the perfect: but in the power of prophecie, exhibiting of miracles, ſometime the ſpirite is preſent with the elect, ſometime he withdraweth himſelfe. If then faith ioyned with charitie remaineth, faith of myracles alwayes doth not remaine; then are they not one and the ſame kind of faith.

Peter Lombard.lib.3.diſt.23, liter.d. Fides ſine charitate informis qualitas mentis: Faith without charitie, ſuch as the diuels haue, is a deformed qualitie of the minde: Say if you dare, that faith, which iuſtifieth, is a deformed qualitie: Fides vna dicitur, non quia ſit vna manens in omnibus, ſed genere, i. ſimilitudine: Faith is ſaid to be one, not becauſe the ſame particular faith is in all, but in general the ſame, that is, by a certaine ſimilitude, ibid.liter.f. Faith which iuſtifieth, and faith without charitie are the ſame not in nature and trueth, but in ſimilitude onely.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER FAITH MAY be ſeparated from charitie.

The Papiſts.

52.Error. THat true iuſtifying faith, may be ſeparated from loue and other Chriſtian vertues: Bellarmine endeuoureth thus to proue it.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, If I had all faith, ſo that I could remoue mountaines, and had no loue, I were nothing, 1.Cor.13.2. Ergo, there may be a diuorce and ſeparation betweene faith, and loue.

*Anſw.*1. The Apoſtle thus ſpeaketh, ex hypotheſi, by way of ſuppoſition, that if it were poſſible for faith to be without loue, faith were nothing, as before he ſayd, though I ſpeake with tongues of men & Angels; not as though he could ſpeake as the Angels, but if he could, and had no loue, &c.

Bellarm. Thus much then we haue gayned by this anſwere, that faith profiteth not without charitie, therefore it cannot iuſtifie without charitie: for to what purpoſe els hath faith ſuch need of charitie, that it cannot be ſeparated from it, Bellarm.lib.1.de iuſtific.cap.15.

Contra. Charitie is neuer ſeuered from faith, not becauſe faith needeth charitie, or that it cannot iuſtifie without charitie: but becauſe charitie doth alwayes accompany faith, as a principall fruit, and effect thereof; as the fire is neuer without the heate, which is no part notwithſtanding of the eſſence or nature thereof, but a natiue qualitie iſſuing from thence: And like as a good tree is neuer void of good fruit; which good fruit make not the tree good; but the tree being firſt good, it maketh alſo the fruit good.

Anſw. 2. Or we anſwere rather that S.Paul ſpeaketh here of the faith of miracles, which wee graunt may be ſeparated from loue, and may be found in the wicked, Matth.7.23. for he meaneth ſuch a faith, whereby mountaines are remoued.

Bellarm. S.Paul ſpeaketh as well of that faith,which iuſtifieth,as of this faith of miracles. 1. He ſaith,if I had all faith,verſ.2.he ſpeaketh generally of all. 2. He meaneth that faith,which is ioyned with hope and loue,now abideth faith, hope and loue,theſe three,verſe 13.but this is a iuſtifying faith: Ergo.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul in ſaying all faith,meaneth not vniuerſally euery kind of faith: but that whole faith or generall power, whereby all myracles may be wrought,whereof he giueth one particular inſtance, of remouing mountaines. Secondly, in the laſt verſe he ſpeaketh of another kind of faith then in this place: for there he vnderſtandeth ſuch a faith as abideth ſtill; and is in all ages neceſſarie for all Chriſtians: but this faith whereby mountaines are remoued, now abideth not, the gift is ceaſed, therefore he meaneth not that faith.

Argum.2. Iohn 12.42. Many of the chiefe beleeued in him,but becauſe of the Phariſees, they did not confeſſe him, leaſt they ſhould be caſt out of the Synagogue, for they loued the prayſe of men, more then the prayſe of God. Here we ſee there was faith without charitie, Bellarm.ibid.argum.1.

Anſw. 1. We muſt eyther vnderſtand here a common and ſuperficial faith, not a true faith indeed: as our Sauiour ſaith, Iohn 5.44. How can yee beleeue, when yee receiue honour one of another? If theſe therefore were ſuch, as altogether neglected Gods honor,and onely loued the praiſe of men, they had not a true faith, and therefore it is no maruell, if they wanted charitie. 2. Or if we vnderſtand this place of ſuch chiefe men,as Nicodemus,and Ioſeph of Arimathea,who beleeued in Chriſt indeed, but were letted by their owne carnall weakeneſſe and infirmitie: then had they a true faith, though imperfect, and a loue alſo vnto Chriſt, though ſomewhat ouerſhadowed and obſcured with the loue of the world, and the feare of men.

Argum.3. Iam.2.14. What auayleth it my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, when he hath no workes? Ergo,faith may be without the workes of charitie: and the Apoſtle meaneth not a ſhadow of faith,but a true faith indeed. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith in the ſame place,that Abrahams faith wrought with his workes: but Abrahams faith was a true faith. 2. Verſ.24. the Apoſtle ſaith,that a man of workes is iuſtified, and not of faith onely: but the ſhadow of a faith iuſtifieth not. 3. Hee compareth a faith without workes to a bodie without a ſoule; but a dead bodie is a true bodie: Ergo, a dead faith is a true faith.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. Abrahams faith was a true faith, becauſe it was a working faith; doth it follow therefore that faith not working by loue is a true faith? nay, the contrary rather is inferred. 2. A faith,which is effectuall by workes, iuſtifieth: Ergo, a true faith: but a faith without workes cannot ſaue,verſ. 14. Ergo,it is not a true faith. 3. A dead bodie is in part a true bodie,in reſpect of the terrene and materiall part, but ſimplie it is not a true bodie, nor the ſame bodie, which it was before in all points,wanting life,actiuitie and motion: ſo a faith that worketh not,hath ſome of the materials of a true faith,as knowledge,vnderſtanding; but it is not the ſame,wanting conſcience, and charitie, and true confidence,which is the life and ſoule of faith.

Secondly,that a faith not working,is not a right or true faith, is euident by the Apoſtle: 1. Becauſe he compareth it to the faith of diuels, verſ.19. which is no right faith. 2. A faith without workes helpeth not, neyther ſaueth,verſ.14. but a working and effectual faith,iuſtifyeth,ver.24. Ergo, they are not the ſame; for the ſame faith will haue the ſame effect. 3. A dead faith and a liuely faith are not the ſame: but a faith not working is a dead faith, verſ.17. Faith if it haue no workes, is dead in it ſelfe: but as a dead man is not a man, no more is a dead faith a right faith.

The Proteſtants.

FAith and charitie,as they are two diuers gifts and graces of the ſpirit,ſo in nature and propertie they may be diſtinguiſhed: but in vſe they can neuer be ſeparated: for where a true liuely faith is,there is charitie; and where true loue and charitie is,it is an infallible ſigne of the preſence of faith: no faith then,no charitie: and againe,no loue,no faith.

Arg.1. Faith without workes is dead, Iam.2.26.and no better than the faith of diuels,ver.19. but a dead faith, and the faith of diuels is no true faith: Ergo, there is no true faith, without the workes of charitie.

Bellarm. 1. Fides dæmonum,ex parte obiecti vera eſt: The faith of diuels is a true faith,in reſpect of the obiect.

Anſw. Firſt,this ſpeech cannot by any ſound diuinitie be iuſtified,that the diuels haue in any reſpect a true faith. Secondly,if in this reſpect the wicked ſpirits haue a true faith, then they haue euery way a true and perfect popiſh faith. For thus they define their faith: It is an act of the vnderſtanding,*Rhemiſt.2.Cor.*13.ſect.1. whereby wee doe vniuerſally beleeue the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection,&c.Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.4.ſect.9. But the diuell hath this act of vnderſtanding,whereby he doth vniuerſally beleeue,&c. Iam.2.19. Mark.5.7. Ergo, hee hath a true popiſh faith,and is a right popiſh Catholike.

Bellarm.2. A dead faith may notwithſtanding be a true faith: as a dead bodie,is a bodie; and as ſtanding water,and a running water,are the ſame in ſubſtance,Bellar.c.15.

Anſw. Though a dead faith may be compared to a dead bodie, becauſe it is altogether voide of ſpirituall quickening, as the bodie is without naturall life: yet a liuely faith is not fitly reſembled to a liuing bodie, but rather to the life of the bodie; becauſe faith is not that which is quickened, but that which quickeneth and giueth life: for it is written, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. As therefore a dead man is no man properly, no more is a dead faith a true faith.

2. Againe, as a dead bodie hath the ſame terrene ſubſtance, which a liuing bodie hath, but not the ſame ſpirituall ſubſtance, which is the ſoule; and as a ſtanding puddle hath part of the ſame matter, which is in a running water, but yet groſſe, muddie, ſtinking and putrifying, ſo that it can be called the ſame water: ſo a dead faith hath ſome part of that which a true faith hath, as namely ſome light of knowledge and vnderſtanding; but yet not hauing the ſubſtance and liuelihood of faith, it cannot be a right and true faith.

Argum. 2. He that is borne of God hath loue: Euery one that loueth is borne of God, 1. Iohn 4. 7. He that dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God and God in him, verſ. 16. But hee that beleeueth, that Ieſus is Chriſt, is borne of God, 1. Ioh. 5. 1. Ergo, he that beleeueth hath loue.

Bellarm. We graunt, that fides formata, formed or perfect faith, hath alwaies loue annexed.

Anſw. As though we ſpake not all this while of a liuely, perfect, and iuſtifying faith, which we call a formed faith: for a faith without forme, is no faith: If he thus vnderſtand a formed faith, he ſaith the ſame now that we affirme, and is contrarie to himſelfe, who tooke vpon him in the beginning of this chapter to prooue, that fides vera, quæ iuſtificat impium, a true faith, and ſuch an one as iuſtifieth the vngodly, may be ſeparated from loue: If he haue found out a formed faith beſide this true liuely, and iuſtifying faith, he is contrarie to the Apoſtle here, who knoweth no other true faith, than to be beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt.

Argum. 3. 1. He that hath no charitie denieth the faith: 1. Tim. 5. 8. He that prouideth not for his owne, denieth the faith. 2. 1. Ioh. 2. 4. He that ſaith he knoweth God, and keepeth not his commaundements, is a lyar: Ergo, the true knowledge of God is not ſeuered from charitie. 3. The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. but without charitie, faith is dead, and can giue no life: Ergo, a true faith is not diuided from charitie.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine anſwereth out of Gregor. Hom. 29. in Euangel. Non habere veram fidem, qui non bene operantur: That they haue not a true faith, that doe not worke well: that is, they denie the faith in the worke, not in the heart.

Contra. Firſt, Gregories teſtimonie is very direct for vs, that there can be no true faith, where is no right worke. Secondly, the faith denied in worke, is denied alſo in the heart: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſinneth, (that is in worke) hath neither ſeene nor knowne him, (in his heart) 1. Ioh. 3. 6. Thirdly, as Saint Paul ſaith, 2. Tim. 3. 5. Hauing a ſhew of godlines, but haue denied the power thereof: ſo where the power of faith is denied, what elſe remaineth but onely a ſhew and ſhadowe of faith.

Anſw. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of a knowledge ioyned with loue and friendſhip: Bellar. c. 15. reſp. ad arg. 3.

Contra. Such is that knowledge, which accompanieth faith: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Ioh. 4. 16. We haue knowne and beleeued the loue, that God hath in vs: Ergo, the knowledge of faith is not without loue.

3. It muſt be vnderſtoode of faith formed with charitie, Bellarm. reſp. ad arg. 6.

Contra. He vnskilfully giueth an inſtance in the cauſe: this formed faith, is the faith which wee meane, a right and perfect faith, not a deformed and vnſhapen faith. Thus then by his owne confeſſion, a true faith, which he calleth a formed faith, is not without charitie.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si dilectio patris in te non manet, non es natus ex Deo; glariaris te eſſe Chriſtianum, nomen habes, & facta non habes: ſi factis te non oſtendis Chriſtianum, quid prodeſt nomen, vbi res non inuenitur? If the loue of the father be not in thee, thou art not borne of God: thou doeſt boaſt thy ſelfe to be a Chriſtian, thou haſt the name but not the deedes: if thou doeſt not ſhew thy ſelfe a Chriſtian, what good doth the name, where the thing is not found? Tract. 5. in Epiſtol. Iohann. If he be not borne of God, that hath no loue, then hath he not faith: for he that hath faith and beleeueth, is borne of God, 1. Iohn. 5. 1.

Againe, hee ſaith, Omnes negant Chriſtum in carne veniſſe qui violant charitatem: All they which violate charitie, denie Chriſt to be come in the fleſh, Tractat. 7. But they which denie Chriſt to be come, &c. are voide of faith: Ergo, alſo of charitie: hee that wanteth the one, wanteth the other.

Wee want not teſtimonie from themſelues: Cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. c. 14. gloſſ. In Chriſtum credere eſt amando in ipſum credere: To beleeue in Chriſt is by louing him to beleeue in him. This is that faith, which the Apoſtle defineth working by loue, Galath. 5. 6.

Peter Lombard. lib. 3. diſt. 23. liter. d. Credere in deum, eſt credendo amare, credendo in eum ire: To beleeue in God, is in beleeuing to loue him; in beleeuing to come vnto him. Diſt. 25. liter. c. Quan- tum credimus,tantum amamus: As much as we beleeue, ſo much we loue: Pia fides non eſt ſine charitate: A godly faith is not without charitie.

Eſpenc.Sine charitate fidei veritas immo vanitas non prodeſt: Without charitie the veritie,or rather vanitie of faith profiteth not,in 2.*Tim.p.*65. Faith then is vaine, that is no true faith without charitie.

Let the holie Martyrs ſpeake. Thus Maſter Tindall writeth: *If thy faith induce thee not to good workes, then haſt thou not the right faith, thou doeſt but onely thinke that thou haſt it: for S. Iames ſaith, that faith without workes is dead in it ſelfe: he ſaith not that it is little or feeble,but that it is dead,and that is dead,is not: Fox.p.*1255.

Maſter Bradford holy Martyr: when Harpsfield had thus ſaid, That all which beleeue in Chriſt, ſhall not be ſaued,alleaging that place,Matth.7.how many ſhall ſay to Chriſt in the day of iudgement, Lord, Lord, haue we not in thy name caſt out diuels? &c. the holy Martyr maketh this anſwere: *You muſt make a difference betwixt beleeuing,and ſaying,I beleeue: As for example, if one ſhould ſay and ſweare he loueth you, for all his ſaying you will not beleeue him, when you ſee he goeth about to doe all the euill he can againſt you: Fox.p.*1613. Ergo, by the teſtimonie of thoſe moſt bleſſed and holy Martyrs,true faith cannot be ſeparated from charitie: for that which hath no loue, is no faith.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE validitie of faith.

FIrſt,after what manner faith iuſtifieth,whether as a proper efficient cauſe of iuſtification,or as an inſtrument onely. Secondly,whether we are onely iuſtified by faith.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, AFTER WHAT manner faith iuſtifieth.

The Papiſts.

53.Error. FAith doth not iuſtifie as an inſtrument in apprehending the iuſtice or righteouſnes of Chriſt, but as a proper and true cauſe it actually iuſtifieth, by the dignitie, worthineſſe, and meritorious worke thereof,*Bellarm.lib.*1.*de iuſtificat.cap.*17.*Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.*3.*ſect.*3.

*Argum.*1. Theſe phraſes vſed in ſcripture: iuſtificari ex fide, Galath.3.8. & per fidem, Rom.3.30. to be iuſtified of,or thorough faith,doe betoken an actuall force and power in faith to iuſtifie: for theſe prepoſitions,ex;& per, of & thorough,are not attributed to the inſtrumentall,but to the proper efficient & working cauſe: As Rom.3.verſ.20.ex operibus legis, of the works of the law no fleſh is iuſtified,Galath.3.verſ.11.no man is iuſtified,per legem, by or thorough the law: he meaneth not by the law,that is,by the apprehenſion of the iuſtice thereof, but by the actuall working and iuſtice indeede: as therfore he denieth,that we are iuſtified by the law,that is,the actuall working thereof, ſo he affirmeth,that we are iuſtified by faith,that is,actually,by the very work. So the Apoſtle ſaith, per fidem vicerunt regna, through faith they obtained kingdomes: that is,verily,and indeed, not reſpectiuely onely: And by faith Abel offered a greater ſacrifice,&c.Heb.11.4.Faith wrought not this inſtrumentally,but verily and effectually,Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmines argument is grounded wholy vpon his logicke quiddities: as becauſe this prepoſition,*ex,*is a note of the materiall cauſe; and per, of the formall cauſe: therefore when the Scripture ſaith,ex fide, or, per fidem, we muſt vnderſtand faith to be more then the inſtrumentall cauſe. But let him know this,that the ſpirit of God is not bound to the rules of Logicke, neither yet will learne to ſpeake of men,but hath a proper ſpeaking of it ſelfe.

2. We are able to ſhew,that theſe prepoſitions,*ex,*and *per,*of,and through, are in Scripture attributed to the inſtrument: Rom.10.17.Fides ex auditu, Faith commeth of hearing: The Gentiles are made partakers of the promiſe of God in Chriſt, per Euangelium, by the Goſpell, that is,the preaching thereof, Epheſ.3.6. But the outward miniſterie, or hearing of the word, doth not actually worke or beget faith,but onely inſtrumentally,the ſpirit of God working by it.

3. It followeth not, becauſe the Apoſtle denieth that we are iuſtified by the law,that is verily, and actually,that hee ſhould affirme the ſame of faith: for vnto this negatiue, neminem iuſtificari per legem,vel ex operibus legis, that no man is iuſtified by the law,or the workes thereof; this affirmatiue anſwereth,iuſtificari per fidem Chriſti, Rom.3.22. to be iuſtified not ſimply by faith, but by faith in Chriſt: and by the redemption that is in Chriſt,verſ.24.by faith in his blood, verſ.25. the ſame thing then is affirmed of Chriſt,which is denied of the law, though not after the ſame manner: the iuſtice of Chriſt is the actuall and very cauſe indeede of our iuſtification,yet not actually in vs,but inſtrumentally applied vnto vs by faith. It is Chriſt then, not faith, that properly effecteth that which the law cannot: faith effecteth it not, but onely reſpectiuely, and as it hath relation to Chriſt.

4. Through faith they ſubdued kingdomes,ſtopped the mouthes of Lions,&c. Faith was not the proper efficient cauſe hereof: but faith apprehendeth Chriſt: Chriſt apprehended worketh all good things: *If God haue giuē vs his Son,how ſhall he not together with him giue vs all things?*Rom.8.32. Theſe great workes were verily done by them through faith, not as by the proper power and efficacie thereof,but by the power of Chriſt dwelling in them,and being preſent by faith. So Abels ſacrifice was preferred before Cains, not for the worthines of his faith, but by Gods gracious acceptation,to whom he was ioyned by faith. Laſtly,we make a great difference betweene iuſtification and ſanctification: faith iuſtifieth onely inſtrumentally, but of the workes of ſanctification it is a proper efficient cauſe,though not the principall: for there is a twofold righteouſnes, a perfect righteouſnes,whereby wee are made righteous before God; and that is the righteouſnes onely of Chriſt: and of this righteouſnes,faith onely is an inſtrument,no efficient cauſe. There is an imperfect righteouſnes,that is,ſanctification,whereby euery faithfull man is made righteous in himſelfe,not ſufficient to iuſtifie him before God,but yet auailable to leade an holie and vpright life in ſome meaſure. And of this righteouſnes faith is a proper efficient cauſe: for as the tree is the cauſe of good fruit,ſo is faith the roote and beginning of godly workes: faith ſtirreth a man vp to pray,Iam.5.15. it worketh peace of conſcience, Rom.5.verſ.1. and it hath other proper effects: but it maketh vs not righteous before God by it owne act, but as it apprehendeth, and layeth hold of Chriſt.

Argum.2. Faith is a worke,Ioh.6.29.we are iuſtified by faith: Ergo,by a worke, and ſo conſequently,by merit: faith then is meritorious.

Anſw. Faith indeede is a worke, but not any of our owne workes: it is called the worke of God,Ioh.6.29. God doth wholy worke it in vs: Ergo, we cannot merit by it: Faith iuſtifieth not then,as it is the work of God in vs:for by this reaſon all other gifts & graces, which are wrought in vs by the ſpirit of God,ſhould in like manner iuſtifie vs: But as it hath relation vnto the obiect Ieſus Chriſt,in apprehending his righteouſnes,which is the office only of faith,and not of any other ſpirituall grace.

1. Argum.3. Firſt,faith is our iuſtice it ſelfe: Ergo,not the apprehenſion onely of iuſtice: the firſt is proued: Rom.4.5.To him that beleeueth in him,that iuſtifieth the vngodly,faith is counted for righteouſnes. So 1.Corin.3.11.Other foundation can no man lay, then that which is laid, Ieſus Chriſt: Faith then is the foundation: and the foundation is part of the building. Act.15.9.Faith purifieth the heart,the puritie of the heart is our iuſtice: faith then is our iuſtice, and not the apprehenſion of iuſtice onely,*Bellar.c.*17.arg.2.

2. Secondly, Luk.7.50. Thy faith hath ſaued thee: Ergo, it doth more then apprehend ſaluation. The ſicke mans hand, that apprehendeth or reacheth the medicine, is improperly ſayd to heale him.

3. Thirdly, Rom.10.14.How ſhall they call vpon him,vpon whom they haue not beleeued? how ſhall they beleeue without a Preacher? As the cauſe of faith is preaching; ſo faith cauſeth inuocation, inuocation obtaineth iuſtification: faith therefore not reſpectiuely onely, but effectiuely worketh iuſtification,Bellar.ibid.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. It followeth not,faith apprehendeth iuſtice: Ergo,it is not our iuſtice. The eye apprehendeth,or receiueth the light of the day,and yet it is it ſelfe the light of the bodie,Matt.6.22. But like as the eye is but inſtrumentally the light of the bodie, by conueying and applying the outward light: ſo faith is our iuſtice inſtrumentally,in that we beleeue in him that iuſtifieth, as the Apoſtle there ſaith. 2. Chriſt is properly the foundation: and yet faith alſo is the rocke and foundation. Chriſt then and faith make but one foundation: Chriſt poſitiuely, and effectiuely; faith inſtrumentally, by applying and laying the foundation. 3. Faith is not ſaid to purifie the heart, but God by faith; God as the principall agent, or efficient; faith as the inſtrument.

2. Secondly, 1. It is no rare thing in Scripture to attribute the effect to the inſtrument: as Gen. 27.40.By thy ſword thou ſhalt liue: yet is the ſword but the inſtrument: ſo the iuſt man liueth by his faith,being the liuely and effectuall inſtrument of the ſpirituall life. 2. As Chriſt here ſayth, thy faith hath ſaued thee: ſo elſewhere: according to your faith be it vnto you,Matth.9.29.So that faith is but the meane or meaſure of the worke: Chriſt is the worker: as in the ſame place,verſ.28. Beleeue ye,that I am able to doe this?

3. Thirdly, 1. As preaching is the cauſe of faith,ſo I graunt faith is of iuſtification: but the preaching of the word is but the inſtrument, the ſpirit working by the word is the efficient. 2. But faith doth not ſo worke iuſtification as inuocation:for as I ſhewed before,faith efficiently produceth the workes of ſanctification, whereof inuocation is a principall, but it inſtrumentally onely cauſeth iuſtification.

The Proteſtants.

FAith doth not iuſtifie vs by the worthines and dignitie thereof, or as it is a qualitie inherent in man,by any meritorious act, or by the worke of beleeuing, or as a proper efficient cauſe; but by way of an inſtrument onely,being as it were the hand of the ſoule, whereby wee doe apprehend the righteouſnes of Chriſt.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith,By grace are you ſaued through faith,not of your ſelues, for it is the gift of God; not of workes,leſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelfe, Epheſ.2.8. Out of this place wee gather theſe arguments: firſt, grace and faith may ſtand together towards the attaining of our ſaluation: for the grace of God offered in Chriſt is the principall cauſe,faith apprehending grace the inſtrumentall: but grace and worke cannot ſtand together,Rom.11.verſ.6. *Ergo,*faith and workes cannot be matched together: faith then iuſtifieth not,as a worke.

Secondly, they that merit, muſt merit of themſelues, faith is not of our ſelues; it is the gift of God: *Ergo,*by faith we merit not.

*Argum.*2. Faith as it is commaunded in the law,iuſtifieth not: for the Apoſtle ſaith, *that a man is iuſtified by faith,without the workes of the law,*Rom.3.28.but faith,as it comprehendeth only the act of beleeuing,is a commaundement contained in the law: for we are commaunded to beleeue in God: *Ergo,*as it is an act of beleeuing only,it iuſtifieth not.

*Argum.*3. Maſter Bradford holy Martyr reaſoneth thus: As the Iſraelites were healed by beholding the braſen Serpent,ſo are we ſaued by beleeuing in Chriſt: but the looking vp of it ſelfe did not procure health vnto the Iſraelites,but the promiſe made in the obiect,which was the braſen Serpent,whereupon they looked, gaue them health by their looking vp: *Ergo,*after the ſame manner we are ſaued by our faith,and ſpirituall looking vp to the bodie of Chriſt crucified: not that the action it ſelfe of beleeuing, as it is a qualitie in man, doth ſo deſerue; but becauſe it taketh that dignitie and vertue from the obiect Ieſus Chriſt: Fox pag.1659.

Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo iuſtè viuit, niſi iuſtificatus, id eſt, iuſtus effectus: ab illo autem fit homo iuſtus, qui nunquam poteſt eſſe iniuſtus: ſicut lucerna à ſeipſo non accenditur, ita nec anima humana ſibi praeſtat lucem, ſed clamat ad Deum,tu illuminabis lucernam: No man liueth iuſtly,vnleſſe hee bee iuſtified, that is, made iuſt before: and man is made iuſt by him that can neuer bee vniuſt: for as the lanterne doth not fetch light from it ſelfe,ſo neither doth the ſoule of man giue light to it ſelfe,but cryeth vnto God,thou ſhalt lighten my lanterne,Pſal.109. Faith then is the lanterne that giueth light to the ſoule,that is,iuſtifieth: but as the lanterne giueth not light of it ſelfe, but as it is lighted it ſelfe; ſo faith by it owne act doth not iuſtifie, but as it hath reſpect vnto Chriſt who is the true light: Per fidem locum damus in corde Deo,qui in nobis & per nos bona operatur: It is the office of faith,to make roume for God in our heart, who in vs and by vs worketh that which is good,*in Pſal.*144. Faith it ſelfe therefore properly worketh not our iuſtification; but onely prepareth a way for the Lord,to come vnto our hearts: God then is the worker, faith is the way whereby hee worketh.

Likewiſe,ex epiſtol. Auguſtin.& 5.Epiſcopor.ad Innocentium: Non per legem iuſtitia,&c. ſed ex fide & dono Dei per Ieſum Chriſtum: Righteouſnes is not by the law, but by faith, and the gift of God by Ieſus Chriſt. Faith then doth not iuſtifie by the worke and merite thereof: for merit and gift cannot ſtand together,yet faith and gift may: becauſe faith it ſelfe is the gift of God. Againe,in the ſame epiſtle,Iuſtos patres ex fide viuentes,non poſſibilitas naturae, ſed dei gratia per fidem iuſtificauit: The righteous fathers which liued by faith,not the poſſibilitie of nature,but Gods grace by faith did iuſtifie. But grace and workes cannot ſtand together, therefore faith doth not iuſtifie by the merit of the worke.

Peter Lombard rehearſeth and approoueth this ſentence out of Auguſtine vpon theſe words of Saint *Paul,*Rom.6.24.We are iuſtified freely by grace: Hoc ideo dixit,ne fides ipſa ſuperba ſit,ne dicat ſibi: Therefore he ſo ſaid,leſt faith it ſelfe be proud and ſay, how freely? for that which faith meriteth, is reſtored rather,than giuen: Non dicat homo iſta fidelis,quia cum dixerit,habeo fidem, vt merear iuſtificationem,reſpondetur ei,quid habes,quod non accepiſti? Let not a faithfull man ſay ſo,becauſe if he ſay,I haue faith,to merit iuſtification,it will be anſwered, What haſt thou, that thou haſt not receiued,&c.lib.2.diſt.26.liter.d. Thus then faith is excluded from meriting or working of iuſtification.

Againe,lib.3.diſt.19.liter. a. Ut olim aſpicientes,&c. As in time paſt, they which looked vpon the braſen Serpent were healed from the biting of Serpents; ſi recte ergo fidei intuitu in illum reſpicimus,qui pro nobis pependit in ligno: ſo if by the beholding of faith,wee looke vpon him that hung vpon the tree,we are looſed from our ſinnes,&c. Thus faith then by the beholding onely and ſpirituall apprehending of Chriſt doth iuſtifie,euen by the ſentence of their Maſter.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER faith onely iuſtifieth.

The Papiſts.

54.Error. FAith is not the onely cauſe of our iuſtification: but there are other alſo, as hope, charitie, almes deeds, and other vertues, *Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.*8.*ſect.*6.*Bellar.lib.*1.*de iuſtificat.cap.*13. Yea works are more principall than faith, in the matter of iuſtification, *Rhem.Iam.*2.*ſect.*7. Whoſoeuer therfore ſaith, that a man is iuſtified only by faith, and that nothing elſe is required to iuſtification, we pronounce him accurſed, *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*6.*can.*9.

*Argum.*1. We are ſaued by hope, Rom.8.24. Ergo, not onely by faith, Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum.

Anſw. The Apoſtle here expoundeth himſelfe: for (ſaith he verſ.25.) If we hope for that wee ſee not, we doe with patience abide for it: We are ſaid then to be ſaued by hope, not becauſe we are thereby iuſtified, but becauſe by hope we doe expect and waite for our ſaluation, which is not yet accompliſhed: ſo then iuſtification is the proper obiect of faith, which is now preſent; ſaluation which is the end of our faith, and followeth iuſtification, is the proper obiect of hope. And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith is the ground of things hoped for, Hebr.11.1. the thing hoped for, is the ſaluation of our ſoules, the ground is iuſtification by faith in Chriſt. So wee are ſaued by hope, not that we are iuſtified by hope, which the ſcripture no where affirmeth, but becauſe hope worketh in vs a patient abiding and expectation, till the promiſed reward come.

*Argum.*2. Charitie iuſtifieth: Ergo, not faith only. The antecedent is thus proued, Luk.7.47. Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, for ſhe loued much: her loue is the cauſe, that her ſinnes are forgiuen. So ſaith S. Iohn, We know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren, 1.Ioh.3.14. Loue then is the cauſe why we are tranſlated from death to life, Bellar.ibid.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place we anſwere: that the womans loue is not rendred as a cauſe, that her ſinnes were forgiuen her by Chriſt: but by her exceeding loue which was an euident ſigne and effect of her faith, whereby her ſinnes were forgiuen her, our Sauiour Chriſt confuteth the Phariſies who reputed her as a ſinner, verſ.39. and ſheweth, that ſhe was not now in her ſinnes, but they were alreadie remitted; as it might appeare by her great loue: for ſhe hauing receiued ſo great a benefit, as the remiſſion of her ſinnes, doth hold her ſelfe much bound to Chriſt. It followeth therefore, to whom a little is forgiuen, he loueth a little: but to this woman much was forgiuen, therefore ſhe loued much. Her loue then followed the remiſſion of ſinnes, as an effect, it went not before as a cauſe: for in this reſpect our Sauiour telleth her, it was her faith that ſaued her, verſ.50. not her loue.

2. To the other place we likewiſe anſwere: the Apoſtle ſaith not, wee are tranſlated from death to life, &c. but, we know we are, becauſe we loue the brethren: that is, loue as a ſpeciall fruit of faith, is a certaine ſigne vnto vs of our regeneration: as verſ.19. thereby we know that we are of the truth. By loue iſſuing from faith, wee are aſſured our faith is not in vaine, not that thereby we are iuſtified: yet loue it ſelfe is no cauſe of our iuſtification, but onely a ſigne and badge thereof: for it is impoſſible, that wee ſhould loue GOD firſt: But herein is loue, not that we loued God, but he loued vs, chap.4.10. God then ſheweth his loue firſt, in reconciling vs by his Sonne whom wee apprehend by faith, and then after our reconciliation by Chriſt, and iuſtification by faith, loue alſo is wrought in vs toward God. If our loue then ſhould goe before our reconciliation, wherein Gods loue appeareth toward vs, then ſhould we loue God firſt, contrarie to the Apoſtle.

*Argum.*3. Feare doth iuſtifie as well as faith: as Prou.1.7. The feare of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Prou.14.27. The feare of the Lord is a welſpring of life: Ergo, faith onely doth not iuſtifie, or giue life, *Bellarm.c.*13.*diſpoſ.*2.

Anſw. Firſt, by feare here may be vnderſtood in generall the whole ſpirituall ſtate of man, as it alſo comprehendeth faith: as Pſal.128.1. Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord: but true bleſſednes is by faith: therefore faith cannot be here excluded. In this ſenſe, we doubt not to graunt, that the feare of the Lord, that is, being ioyned with faith, is the beginning of wiſedome. Secondly, if wee take feare more ſpecially, for a particular gift of the ſpirit; in this ſenſe iuſtification is not aſcribed to it: for in the firſt place, it is ſaid to bring knowledge; in the ſecond, it is called the fountaine of life: which in the ſame place is expounded, verſ.26. in the feare of the Lord is aſſured ſtrength. Theſe are the gifts and graces of ſanctification, knowledge, aſſurance, ſtrength, they are not iuſtification it ſelfe, but the fruits thereof, to the which the feare of God is the readie way.

*Argum.*4. If faith alone doe iuſtifie, and the other vertues, as of hope, charitie, doe not helpe any thing to iuſtification, then faith may as well iuſtifie, when thoſe vertues are abſent, as when they are preſent: But faith ſeparated from hope and charitie, iuſtifieth not: Ergo, faith alone doth not iuſtifie, *Bellarm.cap.*14.

Anſw. It followeth not,faith alone doth iuſtifie: Ergo,it is,or may be alone.In the Sunne,there is both heate and light:It is the heate onely that heateth the earth,not the light; and yet the heate cannot be ſeparated from the light: the tongue both toucheth and taſteth; by the taſte onely it diſcerneth the ſauor of meates,not by the touching or feeling; yet there can be no taſte without feeling: ſo faith alone iuſtifieth,yet it is not alone: faith and charitie are inſeparable, yet charitie helpeth not faith to iuſtifie. The good tree is neuer without good fruite, yet the good fruite doth not helpe to make the tree good; the tree is good firſt it ſelfe,before it can bring forth good fruit: So charitie doth not helpe to iuſtifie,that is,to make men good; but firſt he is made righteous by faith,and then he bringeth forth good fruits,as the workes of charitie.

The Proteſtants.

FAith whereby we are iuſtified,is to be conſidered,partly as it is paſſiue,partly as it is actiue: It is paſſiue in apprehending the promiſes of God in Chriſt,and applying Chriſt with all his benefits,in which reſpect faith onely iuſtifieth. It is alſo actiue in bringing foorth good fruites,and quickening of vs to euery good worke; but ſo it iuſtifieth not. Faith then is inſeparably ioyned with hope and loue,and neceſſarily yeeldeth in vs good fruit; but none of all theſe doe concurre with faith,in the act of our iuſtification: but it is the office onely of faith, to applie vnto vs the righteouſnes of Chriſt,whereby only we are made righteous before God.

*Argum.*1. If men are iuſtified without workes,then iuſtification is onely by faith. But the firſt is true, as it may appeare by theſe teſtimonies of Scripture: Wee conclude,that a man is iuſtified by faith,without the workes of the law,Rom.3.28. If Abraham were iuſtified by workes, he hath wherein to reioyce,but not with God,Rom.4.2. By grace are ye ſaued through faith,not of workes,Epheſ.2.9. That I might be found in him,not hauing mine owne righteouſnes which is of the law,but that which is through the faith of Chriſt,Philip.3.9. Ergo,faith onely iuſtifieth.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that the Apoſtle excludeth not all workes,for then faith it ſelfe ſhould be excluded from iuſtification, becauſe it is a worke: And if iuſtifying faith doe except euery law, then the law of faith alſo ſhould be excepted,*Bellarm.cap.*16. Such workes therefore only are excluded,which goe before faith,which are done, ſola cognitione legis,vel ſolis viribus liberi arbitrij,ſine gratia,by the knowledge onely of the law,or by the ſtrength onely of freewill,without grace: not ſuch workes as are of faith,and proceede of grace,*cap.*19.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle excludeth euen the workes alſo of grace: for when he had ſaid,we are ſaued by grace through faith,not of workes: he afterward ſheweth what workes; euen ſuch as the Lord had ordained for vs to walke in,Epheſ.2.10. Againe,in another place he ſaith, Not by the workes of righteouſnes which we had done,but according to his mercie he ſaued vs,Tit.3.5. The workes of righteouſnes are excluded: but no man by nature without the helpe of grace, can doe the workes of righteouſneſſe. Further, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that grace and workes cannot bee matched together: If it be of grace, it is no more of workes, or elſe were grace no more grace: if of workes,it is no more grace,for then worke were no more worke, Rom.11.verſ.6. Grace and workes cannot therefore iuſtifie together,becauſe the one deſtroyeth the other. Euen workes of grace cannot iuſtifie together with grace: for I aske them,the workes of grace, are they not workes? But if they ſhould iuſtifie together with grace,they ſhould be no more workes: or elſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) worke were no more worke.

2. Euen at this time, when Abrahams faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe, and his workes were refuſed in reſpect of his iuſtification; Abraham had done many excellent workes by his faith: As he obeyed God,to goe from his fathers houſe,vnto a ſtraunge countrey,which he knew not,Geneſ.12.1.which was a worke of faith,Hebr.11.8.He built altars,and called vpon the name of God,Geneſ.12.7.13.18. Before this time alſo Abraham was bleſſed of Melchiſedech, Geneſ.14.20. And then after all theſe workes of faith, the Scripture ſaith, That Abraham beleeued the Lord, and it was counted to him for righteouſnes, Geneſ.15.6. Wherefore euen Abrahams godly workes,iſſuing from his faith,are excluded from his iuſtification.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that although Abraham at this time wrought many workes by his faith, yet the Apoſtle taketh not exception againſt ſuch works,but thoſe onely that Abraham did without faith: for euen the faithfull,that haue faith,aliquando operantur non ex fide,ſometime do worke, but not of faith; as when they ſinne, or doe any pure morall workes, without relation to God: Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. As for the ſinfull workes of faithfull men,which we denie not,but they may ſometimes fall into,it is abſurd to thinke, that the Apoſtle excludeth any ſuch workes: as though any man were ſo blinde to thinke,that by his ſinnes or euill workes, he might be iuſtified. What then meaneth the Ieſuite, to giue an inſtance of the ſinfull workes of Abraham, or any other faithfull man,as though they euer came in queſtion,in the matter of iuſtification?

2. As for other workes of faithfull men, if they be good and vertuous,they are of faith: for whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne, Rom.14.23. but faith alwaies hath reſpect and relation to God: therefore whatſoeuer faithfull men doe well, it commeth of faith, and a good conſcience. All, whatſoeuer elſe in them, is ſinne, and ſo commeth not within the compaſſe of this queſtion.

3. Saint Paul, when he ſaith, That I may be found, not hauing mine owne righteouſnes, &c. doth not ſpeake onely of ſuch workes, as he did before he was called, but euen of thoſe which he did ſince he was an Apoſtle: For whom I haue counted all things loſſe, and doe iudge them to be dung, that I might winne Chriſt, Philip. 3. 8. He ſaith not onely, I haue counted, as ſpeaking of the time paſt, but I doe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle could in no wiſe vnderſtand his workes done after his calling, to iudge them as dung, becauſe he ſaith, that for ſuch workes, there was laid vp a crowne of righteouſneſſe, 2. Timoth. 4. 8. Nunquid Deus coronaret ſtercora? Should God crowne dung? Bellarm. cap. 19.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Paul doth not ſimplie call theſe workes dung, or loſſe, but in compariſon: I count all things loſſe, for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt. Secondly, God crowneth the workes of his Saints, not for the worthines of them, which indeede are but as dung, in reſpect of the excellencie of reward: but we with our workes are crowned for the worthines of Chriſt: Life eternall is the gift of God, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, Rom. 6. 23.

4. Now where the Ieſuite obiecteth, that faith is a worke, and that there is a law alſo of faith: Ergo, euery worke, and euery law is not excluded from iuſtification. We anſwere: Firſt, that faith is indeed a work, but not any of our works, it is the work of God wrought in vs only by his ſpirit: This is the worke of God, that ye beleeue in him, &c. Ioh. 6. 29. Secondly, faith iuſtifieth not as it is a worke, but in reſpect of that propertie, which it hath to apprehend, and apply the iuſtice of Chriſt: it iuſtifieth not by it owne worthines and dignitie, but by the worthines of the obiect. Thirdly, wee exclude not euery law, but legem operum, the law of workes: but the law of faith is not the law of workes: for the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them, Rom. 3. 27.

Argum. 2. The ſcripture aſcribeth iuſtification to faith and beleefe: Whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhall haue euerlaſting life, Ioh. 3. 16. Thy faith hath ſaued thee, Luk. 7. 50. We are ſaued through faith, Epheſ. 2 8. Ergo, faith onely iuſtifieth.

Anſw. Though faith onely be named, yet faith onely doth not iuſtifie: for by the ſame reaſon, becauſe other vertues ſometimes are onely named, as, Many ſins are forgiuen her, for ſhe loued much, Luk. 7. 47. And, We are ſaued by hope, Rom. 8. 24. As notwithſtanding, we cannot gather, that loue, or hope doe iuſtifie without faith, although they be named alone: ſo the contrarie cannot be concluded, by the ſole naming of faith, Bellarm. cap. 20.

Contra. Firſt, that neither hope, nor charitie doe iuſtifie in whole, or in part, neither that it can be gathered by theſe places, wee haue ſhewed before in our anſwere to their ſecond and third argument againſt iuſtification by faith. Secondly, we are able to bring foorth a place of Scripture, where faith onely is required: Chriſt ſaid vnto the ruler of the Synagogue, whoſe daughter was now dead: Crede tantum, Beleeue onely, and ſhe ſhall be made whole, Luk. 8. 50.

Bellarmine anſwereth: That Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of iuſtification, or remiſſion of ſinnes, but onely of doing a myracle, in raiſing vp one which was dead: and faith alone is able to obtaine a myracle, though it be not to iuſtifie, Bellarm.

Contra. 1. Our aduerſaries affirme iuſtifying faith, and the faith of myracles in ſubſtance to be all one, and that it is one and the ſelfeſame faith, whereby myracles are wrought, and the ſoules of men iuſtified, Bellarm. cap. 5. Yea, the Rhemiſts confeſſe, that the faith of myracles hath more feruor, deuotion, and confident truſt, than the iuſtifying faith: Annot. 1. Cor. 13. 9. If then faith only be ſufficient to worke myracles, why not allſo to iuſtifie, ſeeing, in their opinion, they are operations of the ſame faith? Nay, if to worke myracles, as they ſay, be the more worthie thing: if faith onely ſuffice for the greater worke, much more for the leſſe.

2. Our Sauiour Chriſt requireth no other faith of Iairus here, than he doth of the father, whoſe ſonne was poſſeſſed with a dumme ſpirit: Mark. 9. Chriſt requireth of him to beleeue, that he was able to caſt out the euill ſpirit; and of this man, to beleeue, that he was able to raiſe his daughter: But that faith was not ſufficient onely for myracles, but for all other purpoſes: If thou canſt beleeue, all things are poſſible to him that beleeueth, Mark. 9. 23. If all things, then not onely the health of the bodie, but the ſaluation of the ſoule: Ergo, this onely faith here required, where our Sauiour ſaith: Crede tantum, Beleeue onely, is ſufficient to obtaine all things.

3. This, crede tantum, beleeue onely, was no other faith, than that which was in the woman, healed of the bloodie iſſue: for ſhe beleeued onely that Chriſt was able to doe it. But Chriſt ſaith vnto her: Fides tua te ſaluam fecit, Thy faith hath ſaued thee, Luk. 8. 48. which the Ieſuite himſelfe confeſſeth to be vnderſtood of the health both of her bodie and ſoule: Fidei tribuit vtramque ſanitatem: He aſcribeth to faith both kindes of health. And in the ſame forme of words our Sauiour ſaith to the woman, whoſe ſinnes were forgiuen, Thy faith hath ſaued thee, Luk. 7. 50. Bellar. cap. 17. If all theſe places ſpeake of the ſame faith, which Chriſt commaundeth, in ſaying, crede tantum, beleeue onely; then this faith, to beleeue onely, is ſufficient to procure both bodilie and ghoſtlie health.

*Argum.*3. We are iuſtified freely by grace, Rom.3.24. Therefore not of workes, but by faith: By grace are ye ſaued through faith, Epheſ.2.8. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iuſtifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteouſnes, Rom.4.5. Wee are then iuſtified freely by faith and beleefe, without workes: Ergo, by faith onely.

Anſw. 1. Iuſtification freely by grace, excludeth not all workes or merits, but thoſe workes onely, which doe properly merit, ex condigno, of condignitie and worthines, not thoſe which doe merit ex congruo, of congruitie: there are other diſpoſitions then beſide faith which goe before iuſtification, which doe not merit of condignitie, that is, for their worthines abſolutely, yet of congruitie, in ſome ſort they doe merit: And yet for all this kinde of meriting, our iuſtification ſhall be free by grace, *Bellar.cap.*21.

Contra. 1. Before we haue faith, there is no place at all for merits: for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr.11.6. Where God is not pleaſed, there is no meriting: Ergo, without faith no man can merit. Thoſe diſpoſitions then, which goe before faith and iuſtification, cannot merit any thing at all, and therefore not ſo much, as, de congruo, of congruitie. 2. The leaſt degree of meriting in the world, taketh away the freenes of the gift: if iuſtification come freely by grace, it cannot be any way merited: for to him that worketh (ſaith the Apoſtle) the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt, Rom.4.5. And that wee might knowe, that our iuſtification is altogether of Gods meere mercie, the Apoſtle vſeth two words expreſſing the ſame thing: he ſaith, we are iuſtified by grace, yea and that freely: gratis per gratiam, freely by grace.

Anſw. 2. Iuſtification freely by grace excludeth not all workes and merits, but thoſe onely which are of our ſelues, thoſe merits which wee worke by grace, and are of God, may ſtand very well with grace: for as iuſtification by grace excludeth not faith, becauſe faith alſo is of grace, ſo it excludeth not other workes, becauſe they alſo are of grace, Bellar.ibid.

Contra. 1. Not onely the workes, which men are able to doe by their owne ſtrength, are excluded from iuſtification, but euen the workes of grace: Not by the workes of righteouſnes, but according to his mercie he ſaued vs, Tit.3.8. Mercie then ſhutteth out all workes, euen holie and righteous workes. We are ſaued by grace, &c. not of workes, yea good workes, which God hath prepared for vs to walke in, Epheſ.2.8.10. Grace therefore admitteth not ſo much as good workes, in the matter of iuſtification. See more of this before, *reſponſ. ad argum.*1. 2. Though faith be wrought in vs by grace, yet it ſtandeth together with grace, in the benefit of iuſtification, the one as the efficient, the other as the inſtrument thereof: faith meriteth not or deſerueth any thing towards iuſtification, but onely applyeth Chriſt crucified: which office of applying is proper onely to faith; it is not common either vnto workes, or any other gift beſide: therefore they are excluded. And againe, the Scripture ioyneth grace and faith together: By grace are ye ſaued by faith, Epheſ.2.8. but no where doe wee finde grace and workes coupled together, in our iuſtification. And this may be a ſufficient cauſe why workes are excluded, and not faith.

Anſw. 3. The Rhemiſts graunt, that the beginning of our iuſtification, which they call the firſt iuſtification, is meerely of Gods grace, neither can we haue any acceptable workes, before we are iuſtified: but in the ſecond iuſtification, which is the encreaſe of the former iuſtice, a man may merit by good workes: *Annot.Rom.*2.3. Saint Paul in this place ſpeaketh of the firſt iuſtification, not of the ſecond.

Cont. This is but a late and new deuiſe, of the firſt and ſecond iuſtification, as afterward we will ſhew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth vs, that not only the beginning of our righteouſnes, but the finiſhing, and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Chriſt: Epheſ.2.5.6. When we were dead in our ſinnes, he hath quickened vs together in Chriſt, by whoſe grace ye are ſaued, and hath raiſed vs vp, and made vs ſit together in heauenly places. We ſee that this ſaluation by grace, bringeth vs vp to heauen: Ergo, both the firſt and ſecond iuſtification are of grace, for they can bring vs no further than to heauen.

*Argum.*4. The Scripture teſtifieth, that all, which beleeue, are iuſtified and ſaued; which ſhould not be infallibly true, if faith onely did not iuſtifie: as Ioh.3.16. That whoſoeuer beleeueth in him ſhould not periſh: Act.10.43. Through his name, all that beleeue in him ſhall receiue remiſſion of ſins: Act.13.39. By him euery one, that beleeueth, is iuſtified.

Anſw. 1. The meaning of theſe places may be this: Euery one that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued, that is, none without faith can be ſaued: and none is iuſtified, except he beleeue, *Bellar.c.*22.

Contra. 1. You are a goodly interpreter, to expound an affirmatiue by a negatiue: as to ſay, euery one that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued: that is, he that beleeueth not, ſhall not be ſaued. This is rather a conſequence, than the ſenſe of the former: as Mark.16.16. Chriſt placeth them together, hauing firſt ſaid, he that beleeueth ſhall be ſaued he addeth, he that beleeueth not ſhall be damned. This is not the expoſition of the former, but a concluſion inferred vpon it. 2. Where Chriſt ſayth, Iohn 5. He that beleeueth, &c. hath paſſed from death to life : will you expound it thus, he that beleeueth not, hath not paſſed,&c. thus in your ſenſe, hath not paſſed, and hath paſſed, ſhall one expound the other : Such kind of interpreting is moſt groſſe.

*Anſw.*2. By all, which beleeue, are vnderſtood all ſortes of people, whether Iewes or Gentiles, that they are all ſaued by faith, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. If this ſenſe be admitted, all that beleeue, that is, all ſorts of men that beleeue ſhall be ſaued: the ſame concluſion ſtill remaineth, that faith to all ſorts of men both Iewes and Gentiles is ſufficient to ſaluation. 2 How all is to be expounded, our Sauiour ſheweth, Mark. 16.15, 16. Preach the Goſpell to euery creature, he that ſhall beleeue and be baptized, ſhall be ſaued : but the Goſpell is not preached onely in generall to all ſorts, nor yet Baptiſme miniſtred, but in particular alſo : Ergo, euery particular man that beleeueth is ſaued. 3. And as hee that beleeueth not is damned, ſo hee that beleeueth is ſaued ; but euery man in particular not beleeuing is damned. Ergo.

*Anſw.*3. Theſe Scriptures do proue that faith doth iuſtifie, if other things be not wanting, it ſufficeth not alone, but doth iuſtifie for the part thereof ; as likewiſe hope, charitie, for their part. Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. The want or abſence of faith onely condemneth, he that beleeueth not is damned, Mark. 16.16. Ergo, the preſence of faith onely saueth : He that beleeueth and is baptized ſhall be ſaued. 2. Baptiſme is the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as Saint Paul ſayth of circumciſion, Rom. 4.11. Ergo, faith onely ſealed in Baptiſme ſufficeth. 3. Whereas it is ſaid, through his name and by him euery one that beleeueth, ſhall be ſaued, Act. 10.43. & 13.39. we reaſon thus, Chriſts name onely iuſtifieth vs ; but faith onely, neyther hope nor charitie, applieth Chriſt: Ergo, faith in Chriſt onely ſufficeth.

Auguſtine ſaith, Intelligenda eſt gratia Dei per Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrũ, qua ſola liberamur à malo: We muſt vnderſtand the grace of God by Ieſus Chriſt, by which wee are onely deliuered from euill : *De correpr.& grat.cap.*2. If all be of grace, then nothing is of workes. That alſo is a knowne ſaying of Auguſtine : Opera non præcedunt iuſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur iuſtificatum : Works goe not before vnto iuſtification, but follow in him that is alreadie iuſtified. If a man therefore be iuſtified, before workes come, then workes helpe not at all toward his iuſtification. Againe hee ſaith, Quantalibet fuiſſe virtutis antiquos iuſtos prædices, non eos ſaluos fecit, niſi fides Mediatoris : How vertuous ſoeuer you report the ancient righteous perſons to haue been, they were not ſaued but by the faith of the Mediator : *Lib.*1.*cont.*2.*epiſt.Pelag.cap.*21. Likewiſe, Ex epiſtol. Auguſtin.& 5. Epiſcoporum ad Innocentium : Fide euacuata, qua hominis iuſtitia remaneat? Chriſtus manens Deus, homo factus, refecit ipſe, quod fecit : Faith being euacuated, what righteouſneſſe remaineth in man? Chriſt remaining ſtill God, being made man, did make againe, that is, reſtore what he had made. If no righteouſnes remaine where there is no faith, then all mans righteouſnes before God, is by faith in Chriſt.

The fathers are plentifull witneſſes for iuſtification onely by faith.

1. *Origen in c.*3.epiſt.ad Roman. Dicit Apoſtolus ſufficere ſolius fidei iuſtificationem : The Apoſtle ſaith, that the iuſtification onely of faith ſufficeth.

2. *Hilar.can.*8.in Matth. Fides ſola iuſtificat : Faith onely doth iuſtifie.

3. Baſil.homil.de humilitat. Nouit ſe ſola fide in Chriſtum iuſtificatum: He doth know himſelfe onely iuſtified by faith.

4. *Ambroſ.in c.*3.ad Roman. Sola fide iuſtificati ſunt dono Dei : They are iuſtified by faith alone by the gift of God: *in cap.*9. Sola fides poſita eſt ad ſalutem : Onely faith is appointed to ſaluation.

5. Chryſoſt.homil.de fide. Si credis fidei, cur alia infers, quaſi fides iuſtificare non ſufficiat ſola? If you beleeue faith, why do you bring in other things, as though faith onely ſufficed not to iuſtifie?

6. *Cyril.lib.*10.*in Ioan.c.*18. Hominem per ſolam fidem inhærere Chriſto: That a man by faith onely doth cleaue to Chriſt.

7. *Bernard.ſerm.*22.in Cantic. Solam iuſtificatus per fidem pacem habebit apud te: Being iuſtified onely by faith he ſhall haue peace with thee.

Anſw. Bellarmine to all theſe places anſwereth, that the fathers, in ſaying, Faith onely iuſtifieth, exclude not all other things beſide ; but eyther externall workes onely, as Origen 1. *Chryſoſt.*5. or the workes of the law without faith, as *Hilar.*2. *Baſil.*3. or the ceremonies of the law, as *Ambroſe loc.*4. For otherwiſe Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non ſolum fide opus eſt, ſed charitate: We haue not need onely of faith but of charitie, *hom.*1.in 1.*Timoth. Bellarm.c.*25.

Contra. Firſt, that charitie is neceſſarie, and other graces of the ſpirite beſide, we graunt, but yet faith onely hath this propertie to iuſtifie : for S. Paul hauing taught, that we are iuſtified by grace, not by the workes of righteouſneſſe, Tit. 3.5.7. yet exhorteth, that they which haue beleeued in God, ſhould be carefull to ſhew forth good workes ; theſe thinges are good and profitable to men : though he aſcribe iuſtification onely to faith, yet he vrgeth workes as neceſſary and profitable.

Secondly, that the fathers excluded all other things whatſoeuer, from the worke of iuſtification, imputing it onely to faith, it is euident.

1. Chryſoſtome ſaid before, Cur alia inferſ? Why do yee bring in any other thing to iuſtifie beſide faith?

2. Auguſtine before alleaged, Fides euacuata, quæ hominis iuſtitia remanet? Faith being euacuate, what other iuſtice of man remayneth?

3. Cyprian: Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe, quantum credimus: That faith onely profiteth, (to ſaluation) and that we onely can do ſo much, as we beleeue, lib.3.ad Quirin.c.42.

4. But S. Ambroſe of all other is moſt plentifull: Firſt, in Luc.13. Fides regnum cœlorum eſt: itaq; qui habet fidem, habet & regnum: Faith is the kingdome of heauen; he then that hath faith, hath the kingdome. Secondly, in 3.ad Roman. Beatos dicit, de quibus hoc ſanxit Deus, vt ſine labore & aliqua obſeruatione ſola fide iuſtificentur apud Deum: He calleth them bleſſed, of whom God hath decreed, that without any labour or obſeruation, they ſhould be iuſtified onely by faith. And againe, Manifeſtè beati ſunt; quibus ſine labore, vel opere aliquo remittuntur iniquitates, nulla ab his requiſita pœnitentiæ opera, niſi tantum vt credant: They are manifeſtly bleſſed, whoſe ſinnes are remitted without their labour, no worke of repentance being required, but onely that they ſhould beleeue, &c. Here Ambroſe excludeth euen the godly and religious workes of repentance from iuſtification. Thirdly, in 9.ad Roman. Conuenit, vt in ſolo nomine Domini conditoris conſequatur ſalutem creatura, hoc eſt, per fidem: It is conuenient, that the creature only ſhould obtaine ſaluation in the name of the Creator, that is, by faith, &c. I reaſon from hence thus; as the name onely of the Creator iuſtifieth; ſo faith onely in his name: but his Name alone, without any other thing whatſoeuer iuſtifieth: Ergo, Faith onely in his name, all other thinges excluded. Fourthly, Ibid. Nullum opus dicit legis, ſed ſolam fidem dandam in cauſa Chriſti: He ſaith no worke of the law, but onely faith to be giuen in the cauſe of Chriſt, &c. If faith onely is to be exhibited in the cauſe of Chriſt, what elſe is required, I ſee not. Fiftly, in 2.Cor.3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem, ſolam fidem poſcens: The law of the ſpirite doth giue libertie, requiring faith alone, &c. If the ſpirite require onely faith, who is it that ſhall require any thing els? Sixtly, in Epheſ.6. Arma Dei fides ſtabilis, per quam ſolam ſemper victus Sathanas: The armour of God is a ſtable faith, by the which onely Sathan alwayes hath beene ouercome, &c. As by faith alone we eſcape the condemnation of Sathan, ſo by faith alone wee obtayne iuſtification by Chriſt. Seuenthly, in 2.Timoth.2. Fundamentum Dei fides quæ continet, quæ promiſit Deus: The foundation of God is faith, which containeth all that God hath promiſed. &c. one foundation may ſuffice for one houſe; if faith be this foundation, who dare take vpon him to lay another? Eightly, in 3.ad Galath. Sciunt Abraham ſine operibus legis per ſolam fidem iuſtificatum: They know that Abraham without the workes of the law was iuſtified only by faith, &c. and by workes of the law are vnderſtood all good workes and graces, and not the law of Moſes only; as Hierome expoundeth, vpon theſe wordes; No fleſh is iuſtified by the workes of the law; Quod ne de lege Moſis tantum dictum putes, &c. Which leſt you ſhould thinke is ſpoken only of the law of Moſes, and not of all Gods commandements, the ſame Apoſtle writeth, ſaying, I conſent to the law of God in the inward man, &c. ad Cteſiphont. Thus then haue we the moſt cleare teſtimonies of the fathers, for iuſtification by faith alone, deliuered from this popiſh writers corrupt gloſſes.

Thirdly, wee want not teſtimonie here from themſelues, decret. part.3.diſt.4.c.99. Gratia Dei non requirit gemitum, non planctum, nec opus aliquod, ſed ſolam fidem, & omnia gratis condonat: The grace of God doth not require mourning, or ſighing, or any worke, but faith alone, and it forgiueth all freely.

Decret.Gregor.lib.3.tit.43,c.3.Innocent. Qui Chriſtum habet per fidem, etiamſi Baptiſmum non habeat, habet vtiq; fundamentum, præter quod aliud poni non poteſt, quod eſt Chriſtus Ieſus: He that hath Chriſt by faith, though he haue not Baptiſme, hath the foundation, beſide which none other can be laid, that is Chriſt Ieſus, &c. If Chriſt onely be the foundation, and faith holdeth this foundation, then faith ſufficeth, (not onely without Baptiſme, but all other thinges beſide excluded) to iuſtification.

Peter Lombard.lib.2.diſt.26.d. Hic apertè oſtenditur, quod fides eſt cauſa iuſtificationis: Here it is euidently ſhewed, that faith is the cauſe of iuſtification: lib.3.diſt.19.a. Per fidem mortis Chriſti, à peccatis mundamur: We are waſhed from our ſinnes by faith in the death of Chriſt, diſt.25.a.ex Auguſtin. Nemo liberatur à damnatione quæ per Adam facta eſt, niſi per fidem Ieſu Chriſti: No man is deliuered from damnation wrought by Adam, but by faith of Ieſus Chriſt, &c. If not otherwiſe then by faith; then faith alone doth it.

Laſtly, for this holy trueth, that we are iuſtified by faith onely in Chriſt, haue many holy Martyrs ſuffered perſecution and death: Patrick Hamelton condemned, for affirming that a man is onely iuſtified by faith in Chriſt: *Fox.*pag.974.col.2.artic.2. Iohn Tewksbury, for the ſame article with others, put to death, pag.1026.col.1.articul.5. Alſo Iohn Lambert holy Martyr, pag.1117. articul.31. Likewiſe B.Farrar ſuffered holy Martyrdome, for holding, that we are iuſtified before

God by faith onely, and that hope and charitie are not neceſſarily required to iuſtification.pag. 1554.col.2.articul.5.with many holy Martyrs, who confirmed and ſealed this trueth with their blood: Which euidence our aduerſaries ſhall neuer be able to ſhew for the contrary doctrine.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS ARTICLE, WHETHER faith be the beginning only of iuſtification.

The Papiſts.

55.Error. WE are ſayd to be iuſtified by faith, becauſe faith is the beginning onely, the foundation and roote of iuſtification: *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.6.cap.*8. The ſame alſo is the opinion of Bellarmine: Fidem eſſe initium iuſtificationis: That faith is the beginning of our iuſtification: *Lib.*1.*de iuſtificat.cap.*13.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, He that commeth to God, muſt beleeue that God is,&c. Hebr. 11.6. Ergo, faith is but a beginning and preparation to iuſtification: for he muſt haue it,that is,in comming to God: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt,it followeth not,faith is the beginning of iuſtification: *Ergo,*it is onely the beginning: he that commeth to God muſt haue faith, and he that is come alreadie,muſt haue faith alſo. In a commer and beginner, there is required a comming and beginning faith: and his faith muſt grow vp,and encreaſe with him: Lord I beleeue, ſaith the carefull parent in the Goſpell,here is the beginning of his faith; helpe my vnbeleefe, here is the encreaſe:Mark.9.24. Secondly, neither is it neceſſarie to vnderſtand,this comming vnto God onely for the beginning of our calling, but for the whole vocation of a Chriſtian: as is euident by theſe places: Come vnto me all ye that are wearie, and I will refreſh you, Matth.11.28. He that commeth vnto me ſhall not hunger, Iohn 6.35. *He that commeth to me, I caſt not away,*verſ.37. *He that is taught of God, and hath learned of the father, commeth to me,*verſ.45. But theſe are not fruites only of the beginning of our calling, namely, to be refreſhed,not to hunger,not to be caſt off,to be taught of God: but they proceede from the very perfection of our vocation and iuſtification: Ergo.

*Argum.*2. To as many as receiued him,he gaue them power to be the ſonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue in his name: Iohn 1.12. *Ergo,*they that beleeue in Chriſt,are not yet the ſonnes of God,but haue a power and poſſibilitie onely to be: faith then is a preparation to iuſtification, rather then the thing it ſelfe: Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. Firſt,they that beleeue in Chriſt are alreadie the ſonnes of God, as it followeth in the next verſe,which are borne of God: and,Whoſoeuer beleeueth that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: 1.Iohn 5.1. He ſaith not, ſhall be borne, or may be borne, but is borne: but he that is borne of God,is alreadie the ſonne of God. Secondly,He that beleeueth hath euerlaſting life, and hath paſſed from death to life, Iohn 5.24. But none are heires of life,but children: Rom.8.7. If ye be children, then heires alſo,&c. Ergo, he that beleeueth,is really and actually alreadie the child of God. Thirdly, *As many as are led by the ſpirit of God,are the ſonnes of God,*Rom.8.14. But they which beleeue are led by the ſpirit of God,for the father draweth them, Iohn 6.44. and they are borne not of bloud, nor of the will of fleſh,nor of the will of man,but of God, Iohn 1.13. And he that is not borne *of the fleſh,is borne of the ſpirit,*Iohn 3.6. Wherefore he that beleeueth, is the childe of God, he hath not onely poſſibilitie to be. Fourthly, this place then cannot carrie any ſuch ſenſe, as the Ieſuite inferreth vpon it,for then the Scripture ſhould be contrarie to it ſelfe; that God giueth a facultie and abilitie onely to them that beleeue, to be the ſonnes of God: But this place declareth rather, from whence faith receiueth this high dignitie,power and vertue,to make vs the ſonnes of God: that it commeth not of our ſelues, nor of the worthines of faith, but of the grace and free gift of God: as Saint Paul elſe where ſheweth, We are ſaued by grace through faith, not of our ſelues,&c. Epheſ.2.8.

The Proteſtants.

FAith is not onely the beginning and foundation of our iuſtification,but both the encreaſe,and perfection,and full accompliſhment thereof.

*Argum.*1. Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the power of God to ſaluation, &c. for by it, the righteouſnes of God is reuealed from faith to faith,Rom.1.17. Faith then leadeth vs to faith: It is not then onely the beginning, but the encreaſe of righteouſnes. The Scripture alſo ſaith, *The iuſt ſhall liue by faith,*Rom.1.17. But we liue not by iuſtification begun onely, but perfected and finiſhed: Ergo, our full iuſtification is by faith.

Anſw. We liue by faith, that is, faith perfected, and formed by charitie: And we are led from faith to faith,that is,from an imperfect to a perfect faith, which is perfected by charitie: *Bellarm. lib.*1.*de iuſtificat.cap.*20.

Contra. That there are degrees of faith we graunt: there is a beginning and encreaſe of faith: I beleeue,helpe my vnbeleefe, Mark.9.24. There is a great faith, Matth. 15.28. There is a little or ſmall faith,as a graine of Muſtard ſeede, Matth. 17:20. But that faith is formed or perfected by charitie,we vtterly deny it,as an vntrueth contrarie to Scripture,as ſhall be ſhewed more at large in the proper place: Faith indeede worketh by charitie, Galath.5.6. but the ſubſtance of faith is one thing,the working another: loue concurreth with faith in working, it is no part of the eſſence, or being of faith: loue is an effect of faith: That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being grounded and rooted in loue,&c. Epheſ.3.17. The dwelling of Chriſt by faith in vs, maketh vs to be grounded in loue: If loue then be an effect,and follow faith,it is rather perfected by faith,then a perfector of faith.

*Argum.*2. Abraham beleeued God, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe: Rom.4.3. But Abraham at this time was no nouice, or young beginner in faith, but a perfect righteous man: Ergo, of faith is not onely the beginning, but perfection of our righteouſneſſe.

Anſw. We ſay not, that faith is ſuch a beginning of iuſtification, as that it goeth away, when perfection commeth: but it is ſuch a beginning and foundation, as the groundworke of the houſe which though it be the beginning of the building,yet it remaineth,when the building is perfected and finiſhed. Therefore Abrahams iuſtice was both begun, encreaſed and perfected by faith: but not onely by faith: this we ſay,that faith is not able alone perfectly to iuſtifie the beleeuer: Bellarmin.ibid.

Contra. 1, We take this kindly at the Ieſuites handes, that he will graunt vs thus much, that faith is the foundation of iuſtification: the foundation is the principall part of the houſe, and ſo by his confeſſion, faith is the principall in our iuſtification:yet the Rhemiſts flatly denie it:for they ſay in theſe very words, That workes are more principall then faith in the matter of iuſtification: *Annot. Iam.*2.*ſect.*7. It were good for them firſt to be agreed, before they deale againſt vs, leſt they haue worke enough among themſelues. 2. Bellarmine in aſcribing to faith the beginning, encreaſe.and perfection of righteouſnes, though not to faith alone,herein diſſenteth from his ghoſtly fathers of the Tridentine Chapter,which,as he ſaith, Nihil amplius fidei dederit,quam vt eſſet initium iuſtificationis: Did giue no more vnto faith, then to be the beginning onely of iuſtification: *Bellarmin. cap.*13.initio cap. 3. That faith doth perfectly iuſtifie, we haue proued at large before, and it may appeare further thus: Hee that is at peace with God, is fully and perfectly iuſtified, his conſcience cleered, and his ſinnes remitted, but by faith we haue peace of conſcience: Being iuſtified by faith, we haue peace toward God, Rom.5.1. Ergo, by faith we are fully and perfectly iuſtified.

Auguſtine vpon theſe words: Iohn 6.29. This is the worke of God, that ye beleeue,&c. writeth thus: Si iuſtitia eſt opus Dei,quomodo erit opus Dei,vt credatur in eum, niſi ipſa ſit iuſtitia, vt credamus in eum? If iuſtice or righteouſneſſe be the worke of God, how is it the worke of God to beleeue in him, vnleſſe it bee righteouſneſſe it ſelfe to beleeue in him? See then, it is not initium iuſtitiæ credere, ſed ipſa iuſtitia, not the beginning of iuſtice to beleeue, but iuſtice and righteouſneſſe it ſelfe.

Concil. Baſilienſ. ex oration. præſidentis ad Bohemos, in appendice: Habitare,dicit Apoſtolus, Chriſtum per fidem in cordibus noſtris,nec ſolum habitabit, quinimo per fidem in filium adoptiuum aſſumet: omnes enim,inquit Apoſtolus,filij Dei eſtis per fidem: The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts by faith,Ephe.3. neither that he dwelleth only,but by faith adopteth vs to be his children: Ye are all the ſonnes of God by faith,ſaith the Apoſtle,Galath.3.26. If faith maketh vs the ſonnes of God, then doth it wholy iuſtifie vs: for before we are iuſtified we are not the ſonnes of God.

THE SECOND GENERALL PART, OF IVSTIFICATION it ſelfe.

THe particular queſtions are theſe: Firſt,whether inherent iuſtice be the formall cauſe of iuſtification. Secondly, of the certaintie of iuſtification by faith. Thirdly, whether faith, or the grace of iuſtification may be loſt.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER INHERENT iuſtice be the formall cauſe of iuſtification.

The Papiſts.

THey deny inſtantly, that men are iuſtified by the onely imputation of the righteouſneſſe of 56. Error.
Chriſt,or by the remiſſion of ſinnes: *Trident.Concil.ſeſſ.*6.*can.*11. or that we are formally made iuſt by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt:*can.*10. but hold them accurſed that ſo affirme and teach. This then is their ſentence, that Vnica formalis cauſa,eſt iuſtitia Dei,qua nos iuſtos facit,quam quiſque in ſe recipit: The onely formall cauſe of our iuſtification, is the iuſtice of God,whereby we are not reputed iuſt,but are made iuſt indeede. This is that iuſtice,which euery man hath within himſelfe, and is inherent in him: *ſeſſ.6.cap.7. Sic Rhemiſt.annot.Rom.*2.ſect.4. Bellarmine alſo conſenteth: *Lib.*2.*de iuſtificat.cap.*2. Firſt, let vs ſee their arguments for inherent iuſtice: ſecondly, againſt the imputatiue iuſtice of Chriſt.

Argum.1. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: Rom.5.19. At Adami inobedientia verè non imputatiuè nobis peccatum impreſſit: But Adams diſobedience did truely print ſinne in our nature, not imputatiuely onely: Ergo, we are truely made righteous by Chriſt, not by imputation onely: *Bellarmine cap.*3.*argum.*1. This argument Bellarmine taketh to be ſo firme, that he ſaith: Videtur nullam reſponſionem admittere: It cannot be anſwered. And therefore he doth inculcate the ſame argument often, euen thrice together in this one queſtion: Once, *cap.*3.*argum.*1. Againe, *cap.*7.argum.2. And againe, argum.6. Where he reaſoneth thus: Chriſt reſtoreth that to vs, which we loſt in Adam, but we loſt true inherent iuſtice in Adam: Ergo, we recouer true inherent iuſtice by Chriſt.

Anſw.1. This argument concludeth nothing, vnleſſe he will haue the Apoſtles compariſon betweene the diſobedience of Adam, and the obedience of Chriſt; our fall by the one, and our reſtitution by the other, to agree in all things: but that cannot be, for all men in the world are borne in Adams ſinne, yet all men are not made righteous by Chriſt. Againe, Adams diſobedience brought vs from paradiſe, Chriſts obedience ſhall not bringe vs to paradiſe, but to heauen: Ergo, this compariſon holdeth not in euery reſpect.

2. The Apoſtle himſelfe, in this ſimilitude, ſheweth ſome difference and diſſimilitude: The gift is not ſo, as the offence; the fault came of one offence to condemnation, the gift is of many offences to iuſtification, verſ.16. And againe, The gift is not ſo as the offence, verſ.15. For, if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God &c. That is, Chriſt is much more able to ſaue many by his righteouſnes, then Adam was to condemne many by his diſobedience. We ſee then that this compariſon, As by one mans diſobedience, &c. ſo by the obedience of one, &c. is not to be vrged in euerie part, but wherein onely the compariſon ſtandeth. And if it hold not in theſe poynts, which the Apoſtle himſelfe ſetteth downe, why ſhould it hold in this, which the Ieſuit vrgeth, ſeeing it is not that poynt, wherein the Apoſtle compareth them?

3. The Apoſtle then compareth them together, in reſpect of the worke or the thing done, many are made ſinners by one, and many are made righteous by one, but not in reſpect of the manner: that righteouſnes ſhould bee conueyed fom Chriſt, after the ſame manner, as ſinne was propagated from Adam: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that in Adam all ſinned, that is, verely and indeed in him they are ſinners: But ſpeaking of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, he ſaith, It is a gift, and of the abundance of grace, verſ.17. And how this gift is conueyed, he ſheweth, where he ſaith, The righteouſnes of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, vnto all, and vpon all that beleeue, Rom.3.22. This gift of righteouſnes is by faith in Chriſt.

4. If yet notwithſtanding the Ieſuite will ſtand ſtill ſtrictly vpon the equalitie and liknes of this compariſon in all poynts: let him remember, that he defineth originall ſinne to be nothing els, but priuatio & carentia iuſtitia originalis, to be a pruation or wanting of originall iuſtice: *De remiſſ.grat. lib.*5.cap. 19. Then by the ſame reaſon, it may be inferred by this compariſon, that as Adams ſinne brought nothing but a priuation of iuſtice; ſo Chriſts righteouſnes ſhould bring nothing to vs, but a priuation of originall ſinne and vnrighteouſnes. But Chriſt doth not onely free vs from ſinne, but alſo maketh vs righteous: as Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſolum peccata per Chriſtum interfecta ſunt, ſed iuſtitia tributa: Our ſinnes are not onely ſlaine by Chriſt, but righteouſnes alſo is giuen.

5. Yet ſomewhat better to content the Ieſuit, wee graunt alſo a ſimilitude euen in this reſpect betweene Chriſt and Adam, in the manner of transferring ſinne on the one ſide, and righteouſnes on the other: for as there are two parts of originall ſinne, the guilt of Adams ſinne propagated to his poſteritie, and the deprauation of our nature: ſo there is a two-fold iuſtice: there is a iuſtice imputed vnto vs by faith, which is the iuſtice of Chriſt; there is a iuſtice inherent and abiding in vs, which is our owne iuſtice: And as Adams ſinne entring into his poſteritie made them ſubiect to death and condemnation, Rom.5.12. and wholly corrupted and deprаued their nature; ſo it is the righteouſnes onely of Chriſt which freeth vs from condemnation, which worketh in vs an imperfect inherent righteouſnes, whereby we leade an holy life, but are not thereby iuſtified before God: And as Adams ſinne is propagated by the naturall and carnall generation, ſo Chriſts iuſtice is ſpiritually deriued vnto vs by the ſpirituall birth which is by faith.

Contra Iulian.lib.1.

6. Wherein this compariſon holdeth betweene Adam and Chriſt, in what reſpect Adam is ſaid to be a forme of him, that was to come, that is, of Chriſt; Auguſtine very well ſheweth in theſe words: Adam forma eſt futuri, i.Chriſti, quoniam ſicut ille ex ſemetipſo naſcentibus licet non manducauerint de ligno, factus eſt cauſa mortis, quæ per cibum inducta eſt: ita Chriſtus, qui ex ipſo ſunt, tametſi nihil iuſtè egerunt, factus eſt prouiſor iuſtitia quam per crucem nobis omnibus condonauit: Adam is the figure of him that was to come, namely Chriſt, becauſe, as he became the cauſe of death, which came in by the forbidden meat, to thoſe which were borne of him, although they did not eate of the tree: ſo Chriſt to thoſe which are of him, although they had done no righteouſnes, yet prouided for them righteouſnes, which he purchaſed by his croſſe, and gaue vnto them. Adam then may be a figure of Chriſt, and the compariſon may hold without inherent iuſtice: for the iuſtice giuen to vs, is the iuſtice of Chriſts croſſe, and we are made iuſt, without doing iuſtly, that is without our owne iuſtice: as Auguſtine here ſaith.

7. Now laſtly, whereas Bellarmine would haue Chriſt to reſtore whatſoeuer is loſt in Adam: by the ſame reaſon, by Chriſt men ſhould be exempted in this life from ſinne and death: for Adam before his fall, was ſubiect to neither. Our anſwere then is this: that indeed we find more in Chriſt, then we loſt in Adam: he doth reſtore vs to a farre more excellent eſtate, then man was created in: But this our happines is but begun in this life, the perfection and accompliſhment of it, is reſerued for the life to come. And thus, I truſt, this vnanſwerable argument is anſwered: our ſtout champion then was ſomewhat too forward in triumphing before the victorie.

1 *Argum.*2. Firſt, Hebr.11.4. Abel by faith obtained to be righteous: and Noah likewiſe, verſ.7. theſe were iuſt by their inherent iuſtice, becauſe they did righteous workes: as Abel did offer ſacrifice; Noah prepared the Arke, &c. *Bellar.arg.*5.

2 Secondly, Rom.8.29. He hath predeſtinate them to be made like the image of his Sonne: but Chriſt is iuſt, not by an imputatiue, but an inherent iuſtice: Ergo, ſo are his members.

3 Thirdly, Rom.6.5. We are graft into the ſimilitude of Chriſts death and reſurrection: but hee trulie died, and not putatiuely, or in opinion: Ergo, we alſo truly not putatiuely muſt die vnto ſinne, &c.

4 Fourthly, S. Paul ſpeaketh of the ſpirit of adoption now preſent, and of the adoption by the redemption of our bodies, Rom.8.15.23. but the adoption or redemption of our bodies, ſhall be true, and not putatiue, or in opinion: Ergo, ſo is our adoption now, *Bellar.arg.*7.8.

1 Anſw. Firſt, Abel and Noah we graunt had iuſt and righteous workes, which were fruites of their faith: but they were not by them iuſtified before God, but it was the righteouſnes of faith, whereby they were iuſt before God: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Noe was made heire of the righteouſneſſe which is by faith.

2 Secondly, the conformitie betweene Chriſt & vs ſtandeth not in our iuſtification: for the iuſtice of Chriſt was in him originall, but in vs it is deriued from him: but it conſiſteth in our ſanctification, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: Arme your ſelues with the ſame minde, that he, which hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſinne. We muſt then be conformable vnto Chriſt in dying vnto ſinne, and riſing to newnes of life.

3 Thirdly, to dye vnto ſinne is part of our ſanctification, not of our iuſtification, which we grant muſt verily and truly be in vs.

4 Fourthly: firſt, an adopted ſonne, is a reputed ſonne: and therefore ſeeing we are Gods ſonnes by adoption in Chriſt, we are ſo by reputation or imputation. Secondly, it followeth not our adoption is true, therefore not by imputation: for, the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt is as verily ours thorough imputation by faith, as if it were actually in our ſelues. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the ſtate of the next life, to our condition now: for then we ſhall ſee Chriſt face to face, we ſhall neede no faith, nor imputatiue iuſtice, but ſhall verilie and perfectly be made iuſt by Chriſt: our roabes ſhall be made white in the blood of the Lambe, Reuelat.7.14. but in this life we walke by faith, and not by ſight, 2.Corinth.5.7. and therefore are iuſt onely by the iuſtice of faith.

*Argum.*3 The Apoſtle ſaith, According to his mercy he ſaued vs by the waſhing of the new birth or regeneration, and the renewing of the holy Ghoſt, which he ſhed on vs abundantly, through Ieſus Chriſt our Sauiour, that we being iuſtified by his grace, &c. ad Tit 3.7. To be iuſtified then, is nothing els but to be regenerate and renewed by the holy Ghoſt: but our regeneration is inherent in vs: Ergo, ſo is our iuſtification: *Bellarm. cap.*13. *argum.*4.

*Anſ.*1. The Apoſtle in this place vſeth this word (to be iuſtified) in the largeſt ſenſe, as comprehending both the iuſtice of Chriſt imputed vnto vs by Chriſt, as alſo that iuſtice & holines which is wrought in vs by his ſpirite: for ſeeing the ſcripture doth call men iuſt both theſe wayes; iuſt by the righteouſnes or iuſtice of faith, as Noe, Heb.11.7. iuſt alſo, though imperfectly, by the righteouſnes wrought in them, as Lot is called iuſt, 2.Pet.2.7. not vnfitly both theſe kinds of iuſtice are comprehended vnder the word iuſtification. Againe, this word the Apoſtle in this ſenſe vſeth in other places, as Rom.8.30. Whom he iuſtifieth, he glorifieth; where iuſtification alſo comprehendeth ſanctification, which goeth before glorification. Likewiſe, Rom.5.18. the Apoſtle calleth the whole worke of our redemption, including alſo our ſaluation, which muſt anſwere in that place to condemnation, the iuſtification of life: yet at other times ſpeaking more diſtinctly, he maketh theſe three degrees, being freed from ſinne, here is our redemption, Ye haue your fruit in holines, this is ſanctification, and the end euerlaſting life, here is ſaluation, Rom.6.22. ſo in this place, the Apoſtle confoundeth theſe two words to be ſaued, and iuſtified: and ſo he doth, Ephes.2.8. At other times he diſtinguiſheth betweene them: as Rom.5.9. Being iuſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaued through him: and in the next verſe alſo he putteth difference betweene theſe two, to be reconciled, and ſaued: for ſaluation, to ſpeake properly, is of the end, iuſtification is the meane that leadeth to the end. Laſtly, the Apoſtle himſelfe doth diſtinguiſh this generall kinde of iuſtification into parts: They which beleeue in God (ſaith he, verſ.8.) this is the iuſtification by faith, ought to be carefull to ſhew forth good works: this is the iuſtice which is in vs.

2. The Apoſtle here ſaith, That the holy Ghoſt is ſhed on vs abundantly through Ieſus Chriſt, Tit.3.6. But faith is the meane and way whereby it is applied: We receiue the promiſe of the ſpirit through faith, Galath.3.14. He nameth alſo here the waſhing of the new birth, which new birth is by beleeuing in Chriſt, 1.Iohn 5.1. Whoſoeuer beleeueth, that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: So that the Apoſtle neceſſarilie vnderſtandeth in this place iuſtification by faith, though he alſo ſpeake of regeneration and renouation: ſo farre is the Apoſtle from making them all one: though he name them together, becauſe they muſt goe together, and are both neceſſarie towards the attaining of euerlaſting life.

Theſe, and the like arguments our aduerſaries haue deuiſed for their inherent iuſtice: Now let vs ſee, what they can obiect againſt the imputation of the iuſtice of Chriſt.

*Argum.*1. If the iuſtice of Chriſt be truly imputed vnto vs, ſo that thereby we are verily and truely counted iuſt, as if it were our owne proper righteouſneſſe, we ſhould then be counted no leſſe iuſt and righteous, then Chriſt himſelfe, and ſo conſequently be counted Redeemers and Sauiours of the world, as well as he: Bellarm.cap.7.argum.5.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, Chriſts iuſtice is verilie made ours, as if it were properly our own: Ergo, we are as iuſt as Chriſt: for Chriſts iuſtice was originally in him, it is ours but by imputation: his iuſtice was truly meritorious, and not of grace, our iuſtice by him is of grace: Neithere is the whole iuſtice that was in Chriſt, imputed to vs, for he was not iuſt onely, as he was man, but iuſt alſo as God. Secondly, we muſt diſtinguiſh betweene iuſtice it ſelfe and the communication thereof, betweene the proprietie and poſſeſſion of a thing, and the vſe. A thing may be common in vſe, yet proper in poſſeſſion: ſo Chriſts iuſtice is communicated to vs, that is, the vertue, power, and efficacie thereof, yet Chriſts perſonall iuſtice ſtill remaineth in himſelfe. The two oliue branches did continually emptie themſelues into the golden pipes: Zachar.4.12. The pipes or conduits had no oyle, but from the branches; yet the fountaine of oyle remained in the oliue tree ſtill: It cannot be ſayd now, that the pipes were as full of oyle as the braunches. By theſe oliue braunches, the Prophet vnderſtandeth Chriſt, from whom we receiue all the oyle of grace which we haue, in as ample manner, as if this oyle ſprang of our ſelues, yet farre inferiour for all this are the pipes to the oliue tree.

*Argum.*2. If we by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed to vs, are truely counted iuſt before God, and are become the ſonnes of God, by the ſame reaſon Chriſt by the imputation of our ſinnes, may be truely counted a ſinner, and ſo alſo the childe of the diuell, which were a moſt horrible blaſphemie. But if Chriſt, notwithſtanding the imputation of our ſinnes, be righteous and iuſt ſtill, we alſo, though the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt be imputed, ſhould remaine vnrighteous, and vniuſt ſtill, and therefore not thereby iuſtified: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. That our ſinnes were imputed to Chriſt, and that he tooke them vpon himſelfe, and ſuffered for them, being now counted his by imputation, wee haue euident teſtimonies out of Scripture to proue it: Eſai.53.verſ.6. The Lord hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: He ſhall beare their iniquities, verſ.11. He was counted with the tranſgreſſors, and bare the ſinne of many, verſ.12. This alſo was euidently prefigured by the ſcape goate, which was a type and figure of Chriſt: the ſinnes of the people were put vpon the head of the goate, and the goate did beare their iniquities into the wilderneſſe: And the goate by this imputation of the peoples ſinne, was counted vncleane, the beaſt yet by nature being vncapable of ſinne; inſomuch that hee, which carried the goate, was commaunded to waſh his cloathes and fleſh with water, as polluted with touching the goate, Leuit.16.22.26. So S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was accurſed, yea made a curſe for vs, Galat.3. verſ.13. And that he was made ſinne for vs, which knew no ſinne, 2.Cor.5.21. not onely a ſacrifice for ſinne, but euen ſo ſin for vs, that is by imputation, as we are made his righteouſnes: for ſeeing this is the perpetual rule of Gods iuſtice, that the ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhould dye, Ezech.18.20. how can it ſtand with Gods iuſtice, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for our ſins, if they were not in ſome ſort now annexed vnto him? Seeing then the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt bare our iniquitie, was accurſed, made ſinne for vs, counted among ſinners and tranſgreſſors: why ſhould wee doubt to ſpeake, as the Scripture doth, that Chriſt was for vs counted a ſinner and a tranſgreſſor, yet in himſelfe remained holie, iuſt, and righteous ſtill? So wee in Chriſt are verily reputed righteous, though by nature we are vniuſt and vnrighteous.

2. Now concerning theſe conſequents, which Bellarmine inferreth hereupon: as firſt, Si Chriſtus poterit dici verè peccator, tum etiam filius diaboli: If Chriſt may verily be counted or called a ſinner, ner,then alſo the childe or ſonne of the diuell,which is an horrible thing to be thought. Wee anſwere: not euery ſinner is the childe of the diuell: He that committeth ſin, is of the diuell,1.Ioh.3.8. But Chriſt neuer committed ſinne: *In him is no ſinne,ibid.*verſ.5.ſinne is laid vpon him only by imputation: Ergo. Againe,euen amongſt men,euery one that hath ſinne, is not of the diuell: for there is no man liuing but hath ſinne: If we ſay,we haue no ſinne,we deceiue our ſelues,1.Ioh.1.8. And yet it is true,which the ſame Apoſtle ſaith,Whoſoeuer is borne of God,ſinneth not,1.Ioh.3.9.for there is great difference betweene theſe two,to commit ſinne,and to haue ſinne, as Auguſtine diſtinguiſheth: Aliud eſt non peccare,aliud non habere peccatum,nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat,&c. It is one thing not to ſinne,another,not to haue ſinne:for he ſinneth not,in whom ſinne raigneth not,to obey the deſires thereof: in 4.cap.ad Galat. And againe,Quamuis diabolus(ſaith he)ſit princeps omnium peccatorum & author, non tamen filios diaboli faciunt quæcunque peccata,filios autem diaboli infidelitas facit:Although the diuell be the prince and author of al ſinnes,yet all ſinnes make not the children of the diuell, infidelitie onely maketh a man the ſonne of the diuell, Auguſt.cont.epiſt. Pelag.lib.3.cap.2. He then that committeth ſinne,that is, in whom ſin raigneth, or in whom there is infidelitie,is the childe of the diuell; not he which hath ſinne,but obeyeth it not,or is a beleeuer: much leſſe can it be inferred,that Chriſt is of the dinell,though he were for vs counted among ſinners,becauſe he neither hath,nor doth ſinne, but it was only imputed vnto him; into whoſe heart neuer any ſparke of infidelitie entred.

Secondly,the Ieſuite inferreth,that if our ſinnes were imputed to Chriſt,as his righteouſneſſe is to vs,then as Chriſt for all the imputation of our ſins,remaineth iuſt,and holie; ſo wee,notwithſtanding the imputation of his righteouſnes,ſhould be vnholy and vnrighteous ſtill.

Anſw. 1. True it is,that as Chriſt in his owne nature remaineth righteous and iuſt, though our ſinnes were imputed,the imputation of our ſinnes doth not pollute the purenes of his nature: ſo, if we ſhould ſet apart the righteouſnes of Chriſt,by the imputation whereof we are iuſtified; in vs by nature,there is nothing elſe but ſinne and corruption: as S.Paul ſaith, I know, that in me,that is,in my fleſh,dwelleth no good thing,Rom.7.18. 2. There is nothing the like reaſon, that the imputation of our ſinne ſhould leaue any ſtaine or blot in the holy nature of Chriſt, as, that the imputation of his righteouſnes ſhould worke holines in vs: whereupon it is,that wee are holy and iuſt by his righteouſnes imputed, but he notwithſtanding the imputation of our ſinne, is neither vniuſt nor vnholie: firſt,becauſe it is impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be vniuſt, his holy nature is not capable of ſinne, but it is poſſible that man ſhould become righteous: the humane nature is capable of righteouſnes,wherein it was once created,and ſhall be againe reſtored vnto it in Chriſt. Secondly,ſin is not ſo forcible to defile and deſtroy nature,as the grace of God is to preſerue and ſanctifie: as S.Paul reaſoneth: If through the offence of one many be dead,much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace,Rom.5.15. If grace euen in men, whoſe nature is ſubiect to ſinne, and death, be more able to ſaue,than ſinne is to deſtroy: much leſſe can ſinne preuaile more,or ſo much,being but imputed,in the nature of Chriſt to pollution, which cannot ſinne,as grace and righteouſnes doth in vs to ſanctification? And thus farre of their arguments.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge an inherent iuſtice in all faithfull men, wrought in them by the ſpirit of God,being now iuſtified by faith in Chriſt: but it is imperfect, not able to iuſtifie them before God; it is no other then ſanctification, which is a fruit of iuſtification: But that iuſtice, whereby we are iuſt before God,not falſely accounted,but made truly iuſt, is by the righteouſnes of Chriſt onely,which we apprehend by faith. And of this our iuſtification by Chriſt,there are two parts,the cleere remiſſion of our ſinnes and puniſhment due thereunto: for in Chriſt we are freed from the law of ſinne,and death,Rom.8.2. The other part is the imputation of the righteouſnes of Chriſt: By the iuſtifying of one, the benefit abounded toward all men, to the iuſtification of life, Roman.5.18. And that this is our righteouſnes before God, and no other, it remaineth now to bee proued by ſcripture.

Argum. 1. Abraham beleeued God,and it was counted to him for righteouſnes,Rom.4.2. And,Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen,and whoſe ſinnes are couered, and to whom the Lord imputeth no ſin, verſ.7.8. Ergo, the righteouſneſſe of man conſiſteth not in any actuall inherent iuſtice in himſelfe,but in that his ſins are forgiuen him,and the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt applied to him by faith.

Anſw. 1. Wee graunt that Abraham was reputed righteous by his faith, yet it followeth not, that to haue faith reputed or counted for righteouſnes,is to haue the righteouſnes of Chriſt imputed by faith: for faith,which is imputed for righteouſnes,is not the righteouſnes of Chriſt, but our owne righteouſnes. And to bee reputed for righteous here, ſignifieth not a bare opinion of righteouſnes,but ſuch an opinion, as the truth of the matter anſwereth: for the Apoſtle vſing the ſame word,ſaith,that to him that worketh,the wages is counted,or reputed not by fauour,but by debt,ver.4 But the wages is not giuen to him that worketh in opinion, or account onely, but verily,and in deede,Bellarm.cap.9.

Contra. 1. Faith,ſaith the Ieſuite, which is reputed for righteouſnes, is not the righteouſnes of Chriſt: and therefore it is all one to ſay,faith is reputed for righteouſnes,and righteouſnes is imputed.

Anſ. 1. The Apoſtle here by faith vnderſtandeth alſo the obiect apprehended by faith:as more plainly in theſe words,The righteouſnes of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt,Rom.3.22. So that in faith here reputed for righteouſnes,we are not to reſpect the worthines of the act of beleeuing in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of the obiect: the faith(ſaith the Apoſtle) of Ieſus Chriſt.

2. Againe,the Ieſuite elſewhere ſaith, that faith,in his meaning, vnderſtanding ſtill the dignitie of faith in it ſelfe,is but the beginning of righteouſnes: but the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith it ſelfe, not naming any thing elſe,is righteouſnes,that is more then the beginning.

3. And if faith as it is a work and act in vs doth iuſtifie; how can it be true,which the Apoſtle ſaith,To him that worketh not,faith is counted for righteouſneſſe,verſ.5. and God imputeth righteouſneſſe without workes,verſ.6.

2. We ſay not, that to be reputed iuæ,is to be iuſt onely in opinion,but verily and indeede: for ſeeing the Apoſtle vſeth the ſame word,ſpeaking of the reputing of the reward of debt, as well as of fauour: we ſay that of grace and fauour a man is as verily reputed righteous, as if hee were righteous indeede by his owne deſerts: for that which is reputed of fauour,is verily, and indeede, as that which is reputed of debt,though not after the ſame manner.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt is our wiſedome,righteouſnes,ſanctification,and redemption,1.Cor.1.30. Ergo,Chriſt onely is our righteouſnes,whereby we are iuſtified.

Anſw. Chriſt is ſaid to be our righteouſnes,becauſe hee hath ſatisfied God for vs,and this ſatisfaction is imparted to vs,when we are iuſtified,in ſuch ſort,that it may be called our ſatisfaction and our righteouſnes: for although we are truly iuſt,by our inherent iuſtice,yet thereby wee can not ſatisfie God for our ſinnes, and the puniſhment thereof: but it is an effect of Chriſts ſatisfaction,which is conferred, and applied to vs in our iuſtification: And ſo wee may ſafely ſay, that Chriſts righteouſnes,and his merits are imputed to vs,when they are ſo applied vnto vs, as if we our ſelues had ſatisfied: ſo that wee confeſſe alſo an inherent iuſtice, whereby wee are truly iuſt: *Bellarm.cap.*10.*reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Contra. 1. It is very abſurd,as the Ieſuite here ſetteth it downe, that wee ſhould be iuſtified by our inherent iuſtice,and yet thereby are not able to ſatisfie for our ſinnes: that onely hath power to iuſtifie vs,that is able to redeeme vs,and ſatisfie for vs: We are iuſtified freely by his grace,through the redemption that is in Chriſt,Rom.5.24. Our inherent iuſtice is not able to ſatisfie for vs, by the Ieſuites confeſſion: Ergo,not to iuſtifie vs. 2. We may thus reaſon alſo out of the Ieſuites words: That cannot be a cauſe of our iuſtification, which is an effect thereof: but our inherent iuſtice is an effect of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt applied vnto vs,which is nothing elſe but our iuſtification: Ergo. 3. That righteouſnes,whereby being applied vnto vs,we are as iuſt,as if in our owne perſon wee had ſatisfied for our ſinnes, is that righteouſnes, whereby we are iuſtified: but this doth the righteouſnes and merits of Chriſt applied and imputed to vs, as the Ieſuite here acknowledgeth: Ergo. 4. Bellarmine ſpeaketh contradictories,and ioyneth together impoſſibilities:he ſaith, that the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed to vs in as effectuall manner, as if we had ſatisfied our ſelues; and yet hee ſaith beſides, Iuſtitiam inhærentem veram eſſe & abſolutam iuſtitiam: That iuſtice inherent,is a true and abſolute iuſtice: How can this be an abſolute iuſtice,and that together which is imputed? There cannot be a double abſolute iuſtice: for that is abſolute which is perfect,and entire of it ſelfe: but Chriſts iuſtice imputed is an abſolute iuſtice,which hath ſatisfied for vs,as fully,as if we our ſelues had done,but the inherent iuſtice doth not ſatisfie for vs: all this is by the Ieſuite confeſſed: Ergo,it is not an abſolute iuſtice. 5. Doth not the Ieſuite now,in ioyning the iuſtice of Chriſt,and our iuſtice together, make two formall cauſes of our iuſtification? which notwithſtanding hee inſtantly denied before, affirming this to be the iudgement of the Tridentine chapter,that we are not iuſtified,not onely,but not at all by the iuſtice of Chriſt,*cap.*2. But here he ſaith,that by Chriſts iuſtice applied,we doe ſatisfie the wrath of God: what now is this elſe but by the iuſtice of Chriſt truly to be iuſtified? For to be iuſtified,is nothing elſe, but to be reconciled to God,and ſaued from his wrath,Rom.5.9.10. How is it now poſſible,that Bellarmine ſhould agree with others,ſeeing he ſo ſhamefully diſagreeth from himſelfe?

*Argum.*3. Saint Paul ſaith, He hath made him to be ſinne for vs,that knew no ſinne,that we ſhould be made the righteouſnes of God in him,2.Corin.5.21. Out of this place we reaſon thus: As Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, ſo wee are righteous in him: But our ſinnes were onely imputed to him,they were not actually in him: Ergo,ſo is his righteouſnes,wherby we are iuſtified,only imputed to vs.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt is ſaid to be made ſinne for vs, not that our ſinnes are imputed to him,otherwiſe,than for that he ſatisfied for our ſins,and was an offring for our ſinne: ſo the iuſtice of Chriſt is imputed to vs,in reſpect of his ſatisfaction: by the which notwithſtanding we cannot be counted iuſt: *Bellarm.cap.*10.*reſp.ad arg.*3.

Contra. 1. If ſinne be here taken onely for the ſuffering for ſinne; becauſe Chriſt bare the puniſhment of our ſinne: then where the Apoſtle ſaith, we are righteouſnes in him, we muſt vnderſtand, not righteouſnes it ſelfe, but onely the reward of righteouſnes: for theſe two members or parts doe anſwere one the other: as Chriſt was ſinne for vs, ſo we are righteouſnes in him: but Chriſt onely bare the puniſhment for ſinne: Ergo, we obtaine onely the reward of righteouſnes by him. 2. How could the puniſhment of ſinne in the iuſtice of God be laid vpon Chriſt, if the ſinnes were not in ſome ſort annexed to the ſufferer: ſeeing it is the perpetuall rule of Gods iuſtice, that the ſame ſoule that ſinneth, ſhould dye? Ezech. 18.20. And how can wee obtaine the reward of righteouſnes, if firſt we be not made righteous? 3. The Scripture alſo euidently affirmeth, that Chriſt bare not onely the puniſhment of our ſinnes, but our ſinnes alſo: He hath borne our infirmities, Eſai. 53.4. He was counted among tranſgreſſors, and bare the ſinne of many, verſ. 12. What aileth then the Ieſuite ſo boldly to denie, that our ſinnes were imputed to Chriſt? 4. He graunteth, that Chriſts ſatisfaction is imputed to vs, yet we are not thereby iuſt: If God be ſatisfied, his wrath appeaſed, are we not fully redeemed? If while we were enemies, wee were reconciled to God by the death of his ſonne, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaued by his life, Rom. 5.10. Reconciliation then and ſaluation, follow ſatisfaction by the death of Chriſt: Chriſt hath freed vs from the law of ſinne, and death, Rom. 8.2. there remaineth therefore no condemnation. If then Chriſt hauing ſatisfied for vs, we are made heires of life; how are we not by vertue of his ſatisfaction iuſt alſo? ſeeing firſt wee muſt be iuſt, before we can looke for the reward of iuſtice. Yea, Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, Remiſſio peccatorum non poteſt fieri, niſi iuſtitia infundatur: There can be no remiſſion of ſinnes, but iuſtice muſt be infuſed withall, as darknes cannot be chaſed away, but light muſt needes ſucceede: cap. 9. ad arg. 3. We will inferre hereupon: but by the ſatisfaction of Chriſt we haue remiſſion of ſins: Ergo, alſo thereby we obtaine iuſtice, and ſo conſequently are iuſt.

Anſw. 2. Or thus we may vnderſtand the Apoſtle: As Chriſt is made ſinne for vs, that is, being the head, he counteth the ſinnes of his members as his owne, ſo wee are the righteouſnes of God in him: that is, the diuine iuſtice which is in Chriſt our head, is communicated to his members, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. In the matter of iuſtification, we haue not any thing to doe with the diuine iuſtice of Chriſt, whereby hee is iuſt as hee is God; for that is not communicable to his members: but the Apoſtle meaneth, the righteouſnes of God, that is, of the grace of God through faith, Rom. 3. verſ. 22.24. but the diuine and eſſentiall righteouſnes of God, is neither apprehended, nor applied by faith.

2. If our ſinnes agree vnto Chriſt, as he is our head; then they doe more then by imputation, yea properly and verily agree vnto him: becauſe there is a reall coniunction and communication betweene the head and the bodie: he ſaid to Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? not becauſe our afflictions are imputed to Chriſt, but that the head and members make but one myſticall body: by denying imputation of ſinne, they fall into a greater gulfe, euen to appropriate ſinne vnto Chriſt.

3. The Ieſuite hath made a very good argument for vs: Chriſt is the head, wee are the members, both make but one bodie: one and the ſame bodie, hath one and the ſame forme: Ergo, Chriſt and his Church are both formally iuſt by the ſame righteouſneſſe, and that is the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt. The Apoſtle alſo ſayth, that the body of Chriſt, that is, his Church, is the fulneſſe of him that filleth all in all things, Epheſ. 1.23. our fulnes then is the fulnes of Chriſt, our righteouſneſſe is our fulneſſe: Ergo, and if Chriſt fill all in all, then Chriſt onely iuſtifieth: not not Chriſts iuſtice in part, and our owne iuſtice in part.

Anſw. 3. Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, that is, he tooke vpon him the ſimilitude of ſinful fleſh, and wee are righteouſneſſe, that is, do take the ſimilitude of the diuine iuſtice: As Chriſt then verily not imputatiuely tooke our fleſh, ſo we verily, not imputatiuely, are partakers of his iuſtice, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. This interpretation which the Ieſuite here enforceth cannot hold: for where the Apoſtle ſaith, hee came in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, it followeth, and condemned ſinne in the fleſh Rom. 8.3. If he will make one of them agree with this place, he muſt make both: then by his expoſition Chriſt was made ſinne, that is, condemned, or deſtroyed ſinne: Or where the Apoſtle ſaith, he was in like ſort as we are, ſin onely excepted, Heb. 4.15. wee muſt ſay after his interpretation, Chriſt was made ſinne, that is, tooke our nature without ſinne: A proper expoſition ſure; by the contrary, he was made ſinne, that is, he was not made ſinne. 2. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, hee was made ſinne, that knew no ſinne: in both clauſes, ſinne is to be taken and vnderſtood alike: if then to be made ſinne, be to take fleſh, then not to know ſinne, is not to know fleſh, which is to deſtroy Chriſts humanitie. 3. As Chriſt was made ſinne, ſo we are made righteouſneſſe: if Chriſt be ſaid here to take our humane nature, then wee alſo may be ſaid to take the diuine nature. But I thinke they will not ſay, that the diuine nature is ſo appropriated to vs, as the humane nature is to Chriſt. Wherefore ſetting apart all ſuch vaine gloſſes, and idle ſhifts, which we ſee do vaniſh as the miſt, the ſenſe of this place appeareth euidently and plainely to be this: that as our ſins by imputation were annexed to Chriſt in this paſſion, ſo his righteouſneſſe is appropriate to vs by faith in our iuſtification.

*Argum.*4. Act.13.38. Through this man is preached vnto you forgiueneſſe of ſinnes,&c. and by him euery one that beleeueth is iuſtified: Ergo, our iuſtification in the remiſſion of ſinnes is by the preaching of Chriſt apprehended by faith, and ſo conſequently not inherent in vs: Likewiſe *Luc.*18. verſe 13. The Publicane is ſaid to be iuſtified, ſaying, God be mercifull to me a ſinner: Our iuſtification then is in the forgiueneſſe of ſinne, grounded vpon Gods mercie, who in his mercie counteth vs no ſinners, but as iuſt in Chriſt: Ergo, we are not iuſtified by any inherent iuſtice.

1. Anſw. Firſt, by preaching of remiſſion of ſinnes, is not onely vnderſtood the condonation of the fault, but the ſucceeding alſo of inward iuſtice, whereof Chriſt is the efficient cauſe, but yet Chriſts iuſtice is not the formal cauſe thereof. Secondly, the Publicane prayeth not onely for forgiueneſſe, but for perfect reconciliation, which requireth alſo an infuſion of iuſtice, *Bellarm. cap.*12.

2. Contra. Firſt, 1. We graunt that remiſſion of ſinnes once obtained in Chriſt, wee are conſequently reputed as iuſt in Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſinnes, and imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe do alwaies concurre in act: but inherent iuſtice cannot ſtand together with remiſſion of ſins: the one being of grace and mercie, the other of worke; but grace and workes cannot agree together, Rom.11.6. If of grace; it is no more of worke. 2. As Chriſt is the efficient cauſe by his ſpirite of our iuſtifying faith: ſo is his iuſtice the very formall cauſe of our iuſtification: for it is not our owne righteouſneſſe, but the righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt vnto all that beleeue, Rom.3.22. whereby we are iuſtified.

Secondly, 1. The Publicane ſueth for perfect reconciliation, which is by Gods mercie in the free forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes in Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſayth, Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith, wee are at peace with God, and ſo are perfectly reconciled. 2. But hee ſtandeth not vpon any inherent iuſtice of his owne; the Phariſee did ſo, and was refuſed; but onely appealeth to Gods mercie.

*Argum.*5. Now in the laſt place wee will conclude, with that excellent ſaying of the Apoſtle: That I might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe, which is of the law, but that, which is through the fayth of Chriſt, euen the righteouſneſſe, which is of God through fayth, Phil.3.9. S. Paul here denyeth his owne righteouſneſſe: but he that hath inherent righteouſneſſe, hath ſome righteouſneſſe of his owne. Againe, he commendeth the righteouſneſſe of God through faith: that is, apprehended by faith, not conſiſting in the meritorious act or worthineſſe of faith: for if faith in it ſelfe ſhould be this righteouſneſſe, how can it alſo be the righteouſneſſe of God? the righteouſnes of God is not faith, for Chriſt hath no ſuch faith: it is the righteouſnes then of God apprehended by faith, which is our righteouſnes before God, not any inherent iuſtice in vs. Auguſtine ſaith well, Si dixerimus, quod nihil iuſtitiæ habemus, aduerſum Dei dona mentimur: ſi enim iuſtitiæ nihil habemus, nec fidem habemus: ſi autem fidem habemus, iam aliquid habemus iuſtitiæ: If we ſay, we haue no iuſtice at all, we do belie the good gifts of God; for if we haue no iuſtice, we haue no faith: but if wee haue faith, then haue we ſome iuſtice in vs. Here Auguſtine acknowledgeth no inherent iuſtice, but the iuſtice onely of faith. If it ſhall be anſweredr that euen the iuſtice of faith is an inherent iuſtice, becauſe it iuſtifieth by the worthineſſe and merit thereof: Auguſtine ſaith againe, writing vpon theſe words of our Sauiour, No man commeth vnto me, &c. Vt doceret nos, ipſum credere, doni eſſe non meriti, To teach vs that to beleeue, is of the gift of God, not of merit: *de verbis Apoſt. ſerm.*2. To conclude, he ſaith yet more plainely: Totum reputa, quod iuſtus es pietati; quod autem peccator es, tuæ iniquitati aſcribe: Omne crimen, facinus, vel peccatum, noſtræ eſt negligentiæ: Omnis virtus & ſanctitas Dei eſt indulgentiæ: That thou art iuſt, repute it wholy to godlineſſe; that thou art a ſinner, aſcribe it to thine owne iniquitie: euery ſin and offence is of our owne negligence: all holineſſe and vertue in vs is of Gods mercie, *in Mat. ſerm.*8. All our iuſtice then, whereby we are iuſt, dependeth of our godlineſſe, which is our faith, beliefe, and confidence in God.

S. Ambroſe alſo in 9. ad Roman. Conuenit vt in ſolo nomine Domini conditoris conſequatur ſalutem creatura, hoc eſt per fidem: It is conuenient that in the onely name of the Lord Creator, the creature ſhould obtaine ſaluation, that is, by faith, &c. If by faith onely in the name of the Creator we are iuſtified, there is no place for inherent iuſtice.

We haue here the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne: *Albertus Pighius contr.*2. Colonienſes, in antididagmat. do agree, that our inherent iuſtice is imperfect, and not the ſufficient and formal cauſe of our iuſtification.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE CERTAINTIE OF IUſTIFICATION BY FAITH.

The Papiſts.

56.Error. THe Rhemiſts call it a faithleſſe perſwaſion of ſaluation to be confident of Gods grace and ſaluation, and fides dæmoniorum, non Apoſtolorum, the faith of diuels, not of Apoſtles, *annot.*8. 1.Cor.9.ſect.9. So the Tridentine Councell, call certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum vanam, & ab omni Pietate remotam fiduciam: The certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes, a vayne and faithleſſe perſwaſion: And therefore euery man, de gratia timere & formidare poteſt, may ſtand in doubt and be afraid, whether hee be in the ſtate of grace, ſeſſ.6.c.9. This is alſo affirmed by Bellarm. that a man without ſpeciall reuelation, cannot be aſſured by his faith, that his ſinnes are forgiuen him, *lib.*3. *de iuſtif.cap.*2.

*Argum.*1. Prou.20.9. Who can ſay, my heart is cleane, I am pure from ſinne, which is not ſo to be vnderſtood, as though no man could haue a cleane heart: for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are the pure in heart, Matth.5. But the wiſe man thus ſpeaketh, becauſe no man can know whether his heart be cleane: *ſic Bellarm,cap.*4.

Anſw. 1. The words are thus to be read according to the Hebrue, Who can ſay I haue made my heart cleane: not after the vulgar Latine, Who can ſay my heart is cleane: So that the wiſe man here doth repreſſe the inſolencie of thoſe, which thinke to be iuſtified by their owne ſtrength. And thus anſwereth Catharinus a Papiſt. 2. We ſay, that the meaning of the wiſe man is this, that no man can be cleane from ſinne in this life: In many things, we ſinne all, Iam.3.2. which if the Ieſuite will denie, as indeed he doth, he giueth the holy Apoſtle the lye: and reneweth the olde Pelagian hereſie, Poſſe hominem ſine peccato eſſe per Dei gratiam: That a man by the grace of God, may be without ſinne, *Auguſt.de natur.grat.*1.11. 3. To be pure in heart, betokeneth not abſolute purenes in the ſight of God: for ſo neither the Angels nor the heauens are cleane, Iob.15.15. But to be pure in heart, is as much as to be vpright in heart, to be without deceit, as it is expounded, Pſalm.24.4. Not to haue a double heart, Pſalm.12.2. As our Sauiour ſaid of Nathaniel, this is a true Iſraelite, in whom is no guile, Ioh.1.47. This it is to be pure or vndefiled in heart. Auguſtine ſaith, Ingredi ſine macula dicitur, non qui iam perfectus eſt, ſed qui ad perfectionem irreprehenſibiliter currit: He is ſayd to walke without ſpot, not which is already perfect, but who doth walke on forward towards perfection without reprehenſion, Auguſtine cont. Celeſt. This purenes of heart, a faithfull man may ſee and knowe in himſelfe, as Dauid ſaith, Pſalm.73.13. I haue cleanſed my heart in vaine, and waſhed my hands in innocencie.

*Argum.*2. Eccleſ.9.1. No man knoweth whether he be worthy loue or hatred: Ergo, a man cannot be certaine of his iuſtification, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſ. The wiſe man meaneth not, that a man cannot any way at all know whether he be in fauour with God: but that it cannot be diſcerned, by the outward chances and accidents of this life: as he ſheweth in the next verſe, that there is the ſame outward condition to the iuſt and wicked. Nay it many times fareth better with the wicked, then with the righteous in this life: I ſaw, ſaith he, vnder the Sunne, that riches are not for men of vnderſtanding, nor yet bread for the wiſe, nor fauour for men of knowledge, verſ.11.

Bellarmine replieth: The Preacher ſpeaketh onely of the iuſt and wiſe, and of their works, ver.1. he compareth not the wicked and the righteous together, ibid.

Contra. In the next verſe the wiſe man expoundeth himſelfe, all things fall out alike to all, the ſame condition is to the iuſt and to the wicked, &c. as is the good, ſo is the ſinner, he that ſweareth, as he that feareth an oth: verſ.2. It is euident therefore, that the Wiſeman compareth here the righteous and wicked both together: and that he meaneth, that it cannot be diſcerned by the outward euents of mans life, which of them is in fauour with God. And that this is his meaning, it may appeare by the like place, chap.3.verſ.21. Who knoweth whether the ſpirit of man aſcend vpward, and the ſpirit of the beaſt deſcend downward? Not that we are altogether ignorant of the end of mans ſoule: but it cannot be diſcerned by the outward and corporall death, what difference is betweene the ſpirit of man, and of beaſts: for as the one dyeth, ſo dyeth the other, verſ.19. So in this place, the Wiſeman, ſaying, that no man knoweth hatred, or loue; doth not meane, that this is impoſſible to be knowne, but that it cannot by the externall things of this life be diſcerned: *Sic Caluin.lib.*3.*inſtitut.cap.*2.*ſect.*38.

Bellarmine anſwereth that Salomon in the third chapter ſpeaketh in the perſon of the vnwiſe, and worldly ſenſuall man, who knoweth no difference betweene the ſpirits of men, and bruite beaſts: *Bellarm. cap.*4.

Contra. So alſo doth the Preacher vtter many things in this chapter, in the perſon of the Epicure: as that, verſe 4. better is a liuing dogge, then a dead Lion: Goe eate thy bread, and drinke thy wine: At all times let thy garments be white, and let no oyle be wanting vpon thine head, verſe 7.8. Theſe are the very ſpeeches of carnall and ſenſuall men, that place their whole happines and felicitie in this life. Such alſo there were among the Corinthians, that ſayd, Let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow we ſhall dye: concerning whom the Apoſtle ſaith, Euill words corrupt good maners, 1.Corinth.15.33. for any thing then, that the Ieſuite hath yet ſayd, or is able to ſay, the meaning of the Preacher in this place is ſuch as we haue ſaid.

Argum.3. S. Paul ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby iuſtified, 1.Corinth.4.4. Though the Apoſtle had the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, yet he durſt not aſſure himſelfe, whether he were thereby iuſtified, Rhemiſt.in eum locum. Bellarm.lib.3.de iuſtificat.cap.5.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, I know not my ſelfe to be iuſtified, but I am not thereby iuſtified: therefore by this example it cannot be gathered, that we haue no knowledge of our iuſtification. Secondly, this place rather maketh againſt popiſh inherent iuſtice: for the Apoſtle ſaith, he is not iuſtified by his good conſcience, and ſo conſequently not by any good thing, that was in him. Thirdly, Paul was moſt ſure of Gods grace, and of his iuſtification thorough faith, Rom.8.30. Therefore it is too great boldnes, to ſay, the Apoſtle was not ſure of his iuſtification. Fourthly, this then is the Apoſtles meaning, that although he were cleere in conſcience, that he walked moſt painfully in his calling, yet this was not ſufficient to cleare him, and pronounce him moſt iuſt before God: for as S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart or conſcience condemne vs not, God is greater then our heart, and can eſpie what is amiſſe in vs, though we our ſelues ſee it not, 1.Ioh.3.20.

Bellarmine replieth, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Nihil mihi conſcius ſum: I knowe nothing by my ſelfe. Firſt, either he ſpeaketh of himſelfe in his owne iudgement, that he knew no ſinne in himſelfe, and then it is not true, that the Apoſtle was not iuſt, hauing no ſinne. Secondly, or that he knew his ſinnes to be forgiuen in Chriſt, and then alſo in their owne opinion, Paul was iuſtified, but now he ſaith, I am not thereby iuſtified. Thirdly, either they muſt ſay, that he ſpeaketh of the iudgement of others, but that cannot be: for he ſpeaketh of his owne iudgement, I iudge not my ſelfe, it remaineth then, that the Apoſtle ſheweth that notwithſtanding his conſcience that accuſed him not, he was not ſure of his iuſtification, Bellarm.c.5.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in generall of his owne ſtate, as though he knew no ſinne by himſelfe: the contrarie is confeſſed by him, that Chriſt came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of the which, ſaith he, I am chiefe, 1.Tim.1.15. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle ſpeake of himſelfe, as now acquited of his ſinnes by faith in Chriſt: for ſo euery where he confeſſeth he was iuſtified by Chriſt, Galath.2.16. We haue beleeued in Chriſt, that we might be iuſtified, &c. verſ.20. I liue by the faith of the ſonne of God, Philip.3.8.9. That I might win Chriſt, and might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe, but that which is through faith, &c. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh then of his outward diſpenſation and Apoſtleſhip, wherein his owne conſcience bare him record, he had been faithfull, and therefore he paſſed in that behalfe, very little to be iudged of them, becauſe I doe not iudge my ſelfe: that is as faultie or negligent in my calling, wherein I am iudged of others.

Argum.4. Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling, Philip.2.12. Ergo, men muſt not be ſecure, neither can be ſure of their ſaluation. Againe, Make your election and calling ſure by good workes, 2.Pet.1.10. But this certaintie that dependeth of good works, is but coniecturall: and if it doe ariſe from good works, then faith onely certifieth vs not of our iuſtification, Bellarm.cap.6.

Anſw. Firſt, the working of our ſaluation with feare, excludeth onely preſumption and careleſſe ſecuritie, not faithfull boldnes and confidence: As it may appeare in the verſe following, where the Apoſtle giueth a reaſon of this feare: For it is God which worketh, &c. We ought then to finiſh our ſaluation not doubtfully, becauſe God worketh it, and therefore we may be moſt ſure of his promiſe: but yet with feare and reuerence, as it becommeth children, for it is the Lord, with whom we haue to deale: thus we ſee confidence and the feare of God may very well ſtand together. Secondly, S. Peter maketh not mention only of good works, but ſaith, ioyne vertue and other ſpirituall graces to your faith, verſ.5. Good works then only doe not make our vocation ſure, but faith and good works, that is, faith working by loue: good works then are a certaine demonſtration of our faith: and by faith we vnderſtand our vocation, and iuſtification. Againe, neither is it an vncertaine demonſtration that is made by works, though it be not ſo perfect, as that which ſheweth the cauſe: for the heat doth euidently ſhew the fire, and a good tree is certainly knowne by good fruit: Neither did our Sauiour giue a coniecturall ſigne to know falſe prophets by, but a ſure and infallible marke, when he ſaid, by their fruits you ſhall know them, Matth.7. Laſtly, we muſt vnderſtand, that there is a double aſſurance of our vocation, and iuſtification: One which is more perfect, by the cauſe ſhewing the effect, and that is the inward teſtimonie of the ſpirit, Rom.8.16. And this is for thoſe that are wholy ſpirituall. There is another not ſo perfect, by the effects demonſtrating the cauſe, and that is by the workes and fruites of the ſpirit, whereof S. Peter ſpeaketh: And this is for thoſe which are not yet able to comprehend the other.

The Proteſtants.

THat by a liuely faith we may be aſſured, that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs, and that we be fully iuſtified in Chriſt, reconciled to God, and are remaining in the ſtate of grace: we haue moſt cleare and euident teſtimonies of Scripture to proue it.

*Argum.*1. Rom.8.15. Ye haue receiued the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we crie, Abba, father; the ſame ſpirit beareth witnes with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God: But the teſtimonie of the ſpirit is moſt certaine, for the ſpirit cannot be deceiued, neither doth deceiue any: Ergo, we may be certaine of our adoption, that we are the Sonnes of God.

Anſw. This teſtimonie of the ſpirit, whereby we are moued to crie Abba father, is not known vnto vs by faith, or any other expreſſe meanes, but onely by certaine coniectures which may deceiue vs, as by the inward peace, and taſt of ſome ſweetnes in the ſoule: for there be many that call God their father, as the Iewes, Iohn 8.41. and many ſay in the Lords prayer, Our father, who are not aſſured that they are the Sonnes of God, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad 6. teſtimon. cap.9.

Contra. Firſt, to beleeue that God is our father, is of faith: for to beleeue that God is, and that he is a rewarder, &c. is of faith, Heb.11.6. but it is more to beleeue that God is our father: how then ſaith the Ieſuite, Non conſtat nobis ex fide diuina: It is not knowne vnto vs by faith, that it is the ſpirit which moueth vs to crie Abba father?

Secondly, and ſay you that the inward peace of conſcience is but a coniecturall and deceitfull meanes: yet S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart condemne vs not, we haue boldnes toward God, 1.Ioh.3.21. is that vncertaine and barely coniecturall, which worketh boldnes in vs? The inward taſte alſo, and ſweetnes of the ſpirit, doth the Ieſuite make ſo ſmall account of it? he that hath a true taſte of the mercie of God, ſeeth God: Taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is, Pſalm.34.8. But he that ſeeth the Sonne, and beleeueth in him is ſure to haue euerlaſting life, Iohn 6.40.

Thirdly, and what if many ſay with their mouth, Abba father, and yet are not ſure they are the children of God? the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of a crying with the mouth, but a crying in the heart: He hath ſent the ſpirit of his Sonne into our hearts, which crieth Abba father, Galath. 4. 6. for though all vtter the ſame voyce, yet is it not the ſame crying: The vncleane ſpirit made the ſame confeſſion outwardly of Chriſt, Mark.5.7. acknowledging him to be the Sonne of God, which Peter did make, Matth.16. yet were not both one kind of confeſſion: the beleefe of the heart, which was in Peter, and not in the other, did diſcerne their confeſſions.

Now that the ſpirit of God, by his inward teſtimonie, doth not coniecturally but vndoubtedly aſſure vs, that we are the Sonnes of God, we ſhew it thus; the ſpirit of adoption expelleth all feare: for the Apoſtle ſaith, you haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe, Rom.8.verſ.15. and where no feare is, there loue is perfect, 1.Ioh.4.18. And where no feare is, there is no painefulnes: therefore neither doubtfulnes, nor miſtruſt. Secondly, they to whom the ſpirit of God teſtifieth, that they are ſo the Sonnes of God, that they be alſo heires with Chriſt, doe certainly know that they are the ſonnes of God: for how could they be heires, vnles they were ſonnes? But the ſpirit of God doth certifie vs that we are heires annexed with Chriſt, Rom.8.verſ.17. And our Sauiour ſaith, He that beleeueth, is already paſſed from death to life, Iohn 6.24. Ergo, much more are we ſure that we are Sonnes. Thirdly, he that hath the ſpirit of the Sonne is ſure he is alſo a ſonne: Becauſe ye are ſonnes, he hath ſent the ſpirit of his ſonne into your hearts, Galath.4.6. But he that hath the ſpirit of adoption, hath the ſpirit of the ſonne: Ergo, he is vndoubtedly ſure he is a ſonne. Many ſuch arguments may be gathered out of the text it ſelfe: whereby the Ieſuites groſſe and corrupt cauils and gloſes, may eaſily be auoyded: I wonder that they are not aſhamed, thus to obſcure the euident light of Gods trueth againſt their owne conſcience.

*Argum.*2. I am certaine, ſaith S. Paul, or I am perſwaded, that neither life, nor death, &c. ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God in Chriſt, Rom.8.38. The Apoſtle was fully perſwaded of his ſaluation in Chriſt.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely in generall, as if he ſhould haue ſaid: So many as are elected cannot certainely periſh, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap.9. reſponſ. ad teſtimon.7.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely in generall, but pronounceth particularly of himſelfe, I am certaine: As more plainely, 2.Tim.4.8. from hence forth is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſnes.

Anſw. Secondly, S. Paul might haue this perſwaſion, by ſome ſpeciall reuelation, Rhem. ibid.

Contra. The ground of the Apoſtles perſwaſion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithful, euen the loue of God in Chriſt: And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place, writing thus: Iſti ſignificati ſunt ad Timotheum, &c. Thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, are ſignified in another place to Timoth.2.2.19. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. And againe in another place: when the Apoſtle had ſhewed his owne confidence, There is layde vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe, he declareth that this priuiledge was not proper to him, but common to all the faithfull: And not to me onely, but vnto them alſo that loue his appearing, 2.Tim.4.8.

De correpť. & grat.cap.7.

Ergo, this aſſurance, and confidence is common, though not in the like meaſure, to all faithfull Chriſtians.

Anſw. Thirdly, the word which the Apoſtle vſeth, ſignifieth not a certaine and infallible perſwaſion, but ſuch an one as ariſeth of coniecture and geſſe: As elſe where he ſaith, I am perſwaded of you brethren, that you are full of goodnes,&c. Rom. 15.14. And I am perſwaded the ſame faith dwelleth in thee, 2. Tim. 1.5. But the Apoſtle did not certainely know this, but only by coniecture, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, we graunt, that this word πέπεισμαι, doth not alwaies ſignifie an vndoubted and infallible knowledge, and perſwaſion: yet I ſee no reaſon why it may not ſo ſignifie in thoſe places alleaged: for the Apoſtles had the gift of diſcerning of ſpirits, whereof we reade, 1. Cor. 12.10. though this gift be ceaſed now: by the which gift they might certainely be perſwaded, of the graces that were in the faithfull.

Secondly, Howſoeuer this word may other where be taken, it is certaine that S. Paul ſpeaketh here of a full and perfect perſwaſion and aſſurance that he had of his ſaluation, vnleſſe they will ſay that S. Paul ſtood in doubt, or was not ſure of his ſaluation; which is a blaſphemous vntruth, ſeeing the Apoſtle doth in ſo many places proteſt and teſtifie his aſſured hope and confidence: As he doubted not, but after his diſſolution to be with Chriſt. Phil. 1.23. That there is a crowne of glory layd vp for him, 2. Tim. 4.8. Who hath loued me and giuen himſelfe for me, Galath. 2.20. But whom Chriſt loueth, he loueth to the end, Iohn 13.1.

Thirdly, this word that ſignifieth, to truſt, to be ſure, or perſwaded, is no where vſed, where mention is made of heauenly things, but it ſheweth an infallible truſt and confidence: as Epheſ. 3.12. by whom we haue boldnes and entrance with confidence, by faith in him: the word here tranſlated confidence, is, πεποίθησις, which is deriued from the ſame word, which S. Paul vſeth in this place, Rom. 8.38. And it betokeneth a full and ſtedfaſt perſwaſion, being ioyned with two other very ſignificant and effectuall words, παῤῥησία, boldnes, and πίστις, faith.

Bellarmine hath nothing to anſwere here: but that S. Paul ſpeaketh not of the confidence or certaintie of our iuſtification, but of the truth of the articles of the faith, that Chriſt is now riſen, aſcended, and ſitteth at the right hand of God a Mediator, and interceſſor, and therefore we haue boldneſſe, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad loc. 12.

Contra. Firſt, it is not the knowledge onely of the articles of faith, that they are true, that can worke this boldnes, and confidence in vs: for then the diuell who beleeueth and acknowledgeth the trueth of theſe things, Mark. 5.7. Iam. 2.19. ſhould haue acceſſe with confidence as well as the faithfull.

Secondly, S. Paul declareth elſe where, that this acceſſe, or entrance with boldnes, is a fruit of our iuſtification by faith, Rom. 5.1. Being iuſtified by faith we haue peace with God,&c. then it followeth, by whom we haue acceſſe thorough faith vnto this grace, verſ. 2. therefore by the ſame faith which iuſtifieth, thorough the ſame we haue this boldnes.

Argum. 3. S. Iohn ſaith, We know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren, 1. Iohn 3.14. Againe, hereby know we, that we dwell in him, and he in vs, becauſe he hath giuen vs of his ſpirit, chap. 4.13. We know that we are of God, chap. 5.19. He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God, hath the witnes of God in himſelfe, 1. Iohn 5.10. By theſe places it is proued, that we may be aſſured of the fauour of God, and that we are in the ſtate of grace.

Anſw. This knowledge, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, doth not ſhew an abſolute and infallible certaintie or ſurenes: but we may be ſaid to know, when as by ſignes and coniectures onely we doe gather any thing, Bellarm. reſpon. ad loc. 13.

Contra. 1. It appeareth that this knowledge of our ſaluation wrought in vs by the ſpirit, is ſure and certaine, without any doubting, not coniecturall: becauſe the Apoſtle by this word vſeth to expreſſe the ſure and vndoubted apprehenſion, that we haue of any thing: We know that whoſoeuer is of God, ſinneth not: we know that the Sonne of God is come, 1. Iohn 5.18.20. this knowledge whereby we knowe, that they which are borne of God, ſinne not, that is, haue not ſinne raigning in them; and whereby we alſo know, that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is moſt firme and ſure without any wauering or doubting: Ergo, in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſayth, we know, that we are of God, verſ. 19. for why ſhould not the ſame word, being twiſe taken in the ſame place, both in the verſe next before, and in the verſe next after, for a ſure and certaine knowledge, be ſo alſo vnderſtoode in this verſe.

2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in the ſecond or third perſon, you knowe, or they knowe, but in the firſt, we know, putting himſelfe in the number: Now I truſt they will not ſay that the Apoſtle did geſſe only, and was not ſure that he had the holy Ghoſt: S. Paul indeede ſaith, I thinke that I haue the ſpirit of God, 1. Cor. 7.40. not as though he doubted of it or ſpake by coniecture: but he thus ſpeaketh in modeſtie, leaſt he ſhould ſeeme to boaſt; for he was ſure he had the ſpirit: for if he could pronounce certainely of others: God hath giuen you his holy ſpirit, 1. Theſſal. 4.8. much more was he certaine of himſelfe.

3. The knowledge of faith is ſure and certaine, without any doubting: as our Sauiour ſaith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? Matth.14.31. where faith is full and perfect then, there is no doubting. Saint Iames alſo ſaith, Let him aske in faith, and wauer not, Iam.1.6. But this knowledge, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is of faith: He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God, hath the witneſſe of GOD in himſelfe, 1.Iohn 5.10. Ergo, it is a certaine and infallible knowledge.

4. That knowledge, whereby we doe aſſure our hearts before God, and haue boldnes with God, is a certaine and vndoubted knowledge. Such is this knowledge: Thereby we know we are of the truth, and ſhall before him aſſure our hearts, 1.Ioh.3.19. and wee haue boldnes toward God, verſ.21. Ergo. If the Ieſuite anſwere vs, as hee doth, that, audacia non eſt certitudo, boldnes is not certaintie: we replie againe, that boldnes, which the children of God ſhall haue in the day of iudgement, is full of confidence, without any deſpaire or doubting, and therefore certaine: but this knowledge worketh in vs ſuch boldnes, 1.Ioh.4.17. Herein is loue perfect in vs, that wee ſhould haue boldnes in the day of iudgement: Ergo.

*Argum.*4. Prooue your ſelues, whether you are in the faith, examine your ſelues, know ye not your owne ſelues, how that Ieſus Chriſt is in you, except ye be reprobates, 2.Corin.13.5. Ergo, they that by faith are ſure that Chriſt is in them, are ſure alſo of their ſaluation, and know, that they are not reprobates.

Anſw. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the preſence of Chriſt by grace, but by his power and prouidence: ſo that his meaning is, that vnleſſe they are giuen ouer to a reprobate ſenſe, they will acknowledge the power of Chriſt working amongſt them, by theſe myracles, which the Apoſtle wrought: and by which power he deliuered ſome to Satan, *Bellarm.reſponſ.ad teſtim.*11.

Contra. That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the preſence of Chriſt by grace, and of iuſtifying faith; it may ſtrongly be gathered by theſe arguments: 1. The Apoſtle vſeth this phraſe of ſpeech, to be in the faith, or of the faith, when he would expreſſe the manner of our iuſtification: as Gal.3.9. They which be of faith, are bleſſed with faithfull Abraham: Where it is euident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of iuſtifying faith. 2. Examine your ſelues, ſaith the Apoſtle: but it is that faith, which iuſtifieth, whereby wee doe examine our ſelues: Let a man examine himſelfe, and ſo let him eate of this bread, &c. 1.Cor.11.28. to examine themſelues is to proue whether they be in the faith: 1.Cor.13.5. And that faith, whereby we doe eate and drinke worthilie the bodie and blood of Chriſt, is iuſtifying faith. 3. Saint Paul ſpeaketh of that faith, whereby we liue in Chriſt, verſ.4. But wee ſhall liue with him; but that is iuſtifying faith: The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom.1.17. I liue by faith in the Sonne of God, Galath.2.20. 4. For Chriſt to be in vs, ſheweth his preſence and being by grace, and not by his power onely: he in whom Chriſt is, hee hath Chriſt, and hath the Sonne: he that hath the Sonne, hath life, euen life eternall, 1.Ioh.5.11.12. Ergo, he in whom Chriſt the Sonne of God is, hath eternall life: Ergo, knowing Chriſt to be in him, he knoweth thereby that he ſhall be ſaued: by the being then of Chriſt in him, he is ſure of his ſaluation.

*Argum.*5. Further, we thus reaſon for the certitude of iuſtification by faith out of theſe places of Scripture.

1. First, Ioh.3.21. He that doth the truth commeth to the light, that his deedes may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought according to God. But this a man cannot know, not being aſſured of his faith and iuſtification, that his workes are acceptable to God: whom it is impoſſible to pleaſe without faith, Hebr.11.6.

2. Secondly, Ioh.14.17. But ye know the ſpirit, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you: Ergo, if we know the ſpirit to be in vs, we alſo conſequently know our iuſtification.

3. Thirdly, Rom.4.13. Therefore it is by faith, that the promiſe may be ſure: Ergo, we by faith are ſure of the promiſe.

4. Fourthly, Epheſ.3.12. By whom we haue boldnes and entrance with confidence by faith in him: Ergo, faith maketh vs confident and aſſured.

1. *Anſw.*1. Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe which in a ſimple heart came vnto him, as Nathanael, Nicodemus, not being yet iuſtified, but comming to be iuſtified; how then could they yet be ſure of their iuſtification? *Bellarm.c.9.reſp.ad loc.*2.

Contra. Chriſt ſpeaketh of beleeuers, verſ.18. He that beleeueth, ſhall not be condemned: of thoſe that doe the truth, and whoſe deedes are wrought according to God: but they, which are but comming to Chriſt, hauing yet no knowledge of the truth, cannot doe the truth, nor worke according to God.

2. Anſw. By the preſence of the ſpirit we are not ſure of our iuſtification, but onely we know, hauing faith, that it is not without Gods helpe, *Bellar.reſp.ad loc.*4.

Contra. A moſt abſurd anſwere: a man, ſaith he, is not ſure of his faith: but if he haue faith, he is ſure the ſpirit worketh it. Firſt, if a man be ſure of the ſpirit, how is he not ſure of faith, which is the effect of the ſpirit? as if there be fire, there is heate neceſſarily. Secondly, indeed if a man haue not faith,he cannot be ſure of it : but when he hath it,he knoweth he hath it,becauſe he knoweth he hath the ſpirit that worketh it.

3 Anſw. Abraham was ſure by faith:but we haue not ſuch a faith as Abraham had,Bellarm.reſp. ad 5.teſtim.

Contra. Firſt, that the promiſe might be ſure by faith to all the ſeede, ſaith the Apoſtle : Ergo, not in Abraham onely,but in all his ſeede faith worketh the ſame ſurenes. Likewiſe,Rom.4.verſ.12.That righteouſnes might be imputed to them alſo that walke in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham. Secondly, ſo S. Ambroſe expoundeth: Quid credidit Abraham? ſe ſemen habiturũ,in quo omnes gentes iuſtificarentur per fidem,ſicut & Abraham,&c. What did Abraham beleeue ? that he ſhould haue a ſeede,wherein all nations ſhould be iuſtified by faith,as Abraham was iuſtified,&c. in 4.ad Roman. Abrahams faith then and ours is the ſame.

4 Anſw. The certitude,which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of,is not of our iuſtification,but of the truth of the myſteries of faith,as of Chriſts death,reſurrection,&c. Bellarm.reſp.ad loc.12.

Contra. Saint Paul aſcribeth this aſſurance to iuſtification by faith : as Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith,we are at peace with God: then it followeth verſ.2. by whom we haue entrance by faith : where the Apoſtle vſeth the ſame word προσαγωγὴν, which hee doth here : ſhewing that our entrance with boldnes is a fruit or effect of our iuſtification by faith.

Auguſtine ſaith,Vnuſquiſque inſpiciat ſe intus,appendat ſe,probet ſe in omnibus factis ſuis : fides, quæ operatur per dilectionem, ſi in vobis eſt, iam pertinetis ad prædeſtinatos : Let euery man looke into himſelfe,examine,proue himſelfe, if faith working by loue be in you ; euen now ye doe belong to the number,and companie of the predeſtinate. Auguſtine otherwiſe expoundeth the Apoſtles words, than the Ieſuite doth : and ſheweth,that this examination of our ſelues by a true and liuely faith, is an infallible argument of our election. The Ieſuite therefore may be aſhamed thus to expound ſcripture againſt ſcripture : and to make the Apoſtle to ſpeake what he liſt himſelfe, euen againſt his owne meaning.

Origen ſaith,Tract.7.in Matth. Omnis anima, quæ ſe inſeparabilem eſſe cognoſcit à Chriſto,dicit,&c. Euery ſoule, which knoweth it ſelfe to bee inſeparable from Chriſt, ſaith, Who ſhall ſeparate vs &c.

Saint Ambroſe thus excellently writeth vpon theſe words,Epheſ.3.verſ.17.That Chriſt may dwell in your harts by faith : In eo petit eos magis firmari,vt non ambigant,ſed magis credant Chriſtum habitare in ſe,vt certi ſint de Chriſto,quod habitat per fidem,&c. He deſireth them therein to be confirmed, that they ſhould not doubt, but rather beleeue that Chriſt dwelleth in them, that they may be ſure of Chriſt that he dwelleth by faith in their hearts,that when wee haue his faith in our hearts, we may be knowne to haue him,vt ſecuri ſimus de auxilio eius,that wee may be ſure or ſecure of his helpe,becauſe he doth not forſake vs,but is alway preſent, becauſe of his faith, which he ſeeth to be in vs,&c.

We want not their owne teſtimonie : Decr.Greg.lib.5.tit.7.c.1.Stephanus : Dubius in fide infidelis eſt : He that is doubtfull in faith,is an Infidell.

Ambroſ.Catharinus apolog.cont.Dominic.à Soto,Enchirid. Colonienſ.tract. de iuſtificat. Theſe popiſh authors doe herein agree with vs : Poſſe fideles certa fide ſtatuere, ſibi remiſſa peccata: That faithfull men by their faith,may certainly determine that their ſinnes are forgiuen them.

Laſtly,let vs adioyne the conſent and teſtimonie of the holie Martyrs : Maſter Patricke Hamelton Martyr,condemned for this article with others, for ſaying, He is not worthie to be called a Chriſtian,which beleeueth not that he is in grace : Fox.pag.974.col.2.articul.4. Maſter Tyndall ſayth thus : Chriſt is thine,and all his deedes are thy deedes,Chriſt is in thee, and thou in him, neither canſt thou be damned,except Chriſt be damned with thee : neither can Chriſt be ſaued, except he be ſaued with thee : pag.1248. Maſter Bradford thus : Know for a certaine,that as the diuell goeth about nothing ſo much,as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods childe : ſo whatſoeuer ſhall moue you to admit that dubitation,be aſſured,the ſame to come of the diuell : *pag.*1640.epiſtol.quadam. Maſter Philpot thus boldly and confidently proteſteth : Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth,God giue me alwaies grace to beleeue,that I am ſure of true faith, and fauour in Chriſt : pag.1825. Iulius Palmer Martyr thus confeſſeth : No man can beleeue,but by the inſpiration of the holie Ghoſt : therefore if I were not a ſpirituall man, and inſpired with Gods holie ſpirit, I were not a true Chriſtian : Qui ſpiritum Chriſti non habet, hic non eſt eius : Hee that hath not the ſpirit of God,is none of his,pag.1938. All theſe holie Martyrs, with many other,both were aſſured themſelues of their ſaluation by faith in Chriſt, and in confirmation of this doctrine,gaue their moſt precious liues. Such a ſeale of their doctrine our aduerſaries are neuer able to ſhew.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER FAITH, OR the grace of iuſtification may be loſt.

The Papiſts.

A Man, they ſay, may fall away from the faith, which once truly he had, and be depriued altogether of the ſtate of grace, ſo that he may iuſtly be counted among the reprobates: *Bellarm. lib.3. de iuſtificat. cap.*14. 57. Error.

*Argum.*1. Firſt, they alleage theſe and ſuch like teſtimonies of Scripture, Ezech.18.24. If a righteous man turne away from his righteouſnes, &c. Saint Paul alſo ſaith of ſome, That they had made ſhipwracke of their faith, 1.Tim.1.19. *Rhemiſt. Bellarm. lib.3. de iuſtificat. cap.*12. Ergo, true faith and iuſtice may be loſt.

Anſw. The Apoſtle ſaith, ſome hauing put away a good conſcience, made ſhipwracke of faith: ſuch a faith indeede, that hath not a good conſcience may be loſt: for it is not a true liuely faith, but a dead fruitleſſe faith: So is alſo the place in Ezechiel to bee vnderſtoode, of ſuch righteous perſons, as ſeemed ſo to be rather, than were ſo indeede. And thus S. Luke teacheth vs to expound it: who, whereas other Euangeliſts write, From him that hath not, ſhall be taken away, euen that which he hath: he ſaith, that which he ſeemed to haue, Luk.8.18. God taketh away his grace from him, that hath it not; but ſeemeth onely to haue it: he giueth ſtill to him that hath. Thus one of your owne expoundeth this place: Fidem quam habere magis viderentur, quam haberent perdiderunt: They loſt faith, which they rather ſeemed to haue, than they had indeede: Eſpenc. in hunc locum.

*Argum.*2. Further, theſe places of Scripture are produced:

First, Luk.8.13. They receiue the word with ioy, but they haue no roote, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of tentation goe away: Theſe haue faith, for they beleeue the worde of God, yet fall away. 1.

Secondly, Iohn.15.2. Euery branch that beareth not fruit in me, he taketh away: but it can be no branch, vnleſſe it were once in the ſtocke. 2.

Thirdly, Matth.24.12. The loue of many ſhall waxe cold. 3.

Fourthly, 1.Cor.9.27. I doe chaſtice my bodie, leſt when I haue preached to others, I ſhould be a reprobate. 4.

Fiftly, Galath.5.4. Whoſoeuer are iuſtified by the law, are fallen from grace. 5.

Sixtly, Hebr.6.4. It is impoſſible, that they which were once lightened, &c. and haue taſted of the word of God, if they fall away, &c. Ergo, they which haue faith may loſe it, and fall away from it: *Bellarm. cap.*14. 6.

Anſw. 1. The text expoundeth it ſelfe, they had no roote, and they beleeued but for a while: Ergo, they had no true faith: for a true faith is not without a roote: Epheſ.3.17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being rooted, &c. 1.

2. Hypocrites and vnbeleeuers may for a while be counted among the braunches of Chriſt, but they were neuer true branches: firſt, Chriſt ſaith, verſ.5. I am the vine, ye are the braunches, ſpeaking to his faithfull followers. Secondly, Matth.15.13. Euery plant, which my father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted vp: there are plants then in outward ſhewe, not planted of God: but all the true braunches of the true vine are planted of God. Thirdly, then as S. Iohn ſaith, 1. Ioh.2.19. They went out from vs, but were not of vs: ſo theſe branches may be accounted among the true braunches, ſecundum præſentem iuſticiam, non ſecundum præſcientiam, according to their preſent iuſtice, but not in reſpect of Gods preſcience: as Ambroſe well ſaith. 2.

3. That loue, which falleth away, was neuer any true loue: as Auguſtine: Charitas, quæ deſeri poteſt, nunquam vera fuit: Charitie, which may be forſaken, was neuer true charitie. This ſentence is rehearſed, decret. p.2. cauſ.33. diſt.2. c.2. 3.

4. Firſt, Saint Paul hath no ſuch feare leſt hee ſhould become a reprobate or caſtaway: hee profeſſeth the contrarie, Rom.8.38. that he was perſwaded nothing could ſeparate him from the loue of God: and 2.Cor.13.6. I truſt ye ſhall know we are not reprobates. And ſay if you dare, that Paul the elect veſſell might become a reprobate. Secondly, but his meaning is this, leaſt if hee preached one thing, and practiſed another, hee might be reprooued and reproched of men: in which ſenſe hee ſayth, 2.Corinth.13.7. though we be as reprobates, that is in mans iudgement, and as hee expoundeth himſelfe, Galath.2. ver.18. If I build the things that I haue deſtroyed, I make my ſelfe a treſpaſſer, παραβάτην, which is all one, as if he had ſayd, ἀδόκιμον, reprooued, or reprobate to men. 4.

5. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any mans particular ſtate, but of the generall falling away of the Galathians from the doctrine of the Goſpell: as Gal.1.6. I marueile ye are ſo ſoone remoued to another Goſpell: Chap.3.3. Are ye ſo fooliſh, that when ye haue begun in the ſpirit, ye would end in the fleſh? This is then nothing to the purpoſe. 5.

6. 6. Theſe which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, neuer had any true faith, but onely a taſte thereof, and a momentanie or ſuperficiall lightning of the minde: for the Apoſtle ſaith, They that went out from vs, that is, fell away, were not of vs, 1. Iohn 2.19.

Thus their owne gloſſe expoundeth this text: Aliud eſt bibere, vel manducare, aliud deguſtare, &c. It is one thing to drinke or eate, another thing to taſte: hee drinketh, that is rooted in charitie: Ille deguſtat, qui ea aliquatenus communicat, à qua poſtea delinquendo recedit, de quibus Apoſtolus: Impoſſibile eſt, &c. He taſteth, that doth ſomewhat communicate of that water, but afterward by ſinning departeth; of whom the Apoſtle ſaith: It is impoſſible, that they which are once lightened, and haue taſted, &c. if they fall away, &c. Cauſ.33.diſt.2.c.44 gloſſ.

*Argum.*3. Dauid, Peter, did grieuouſly fall: Saul, Simon, Iudas, became reprobates: Ergo, the righteous may finally fall away. Bellarm.

Anſw. Firſt, the faith of Dauid and Peter, by their tranſgreſſion, was greatly decayed, and much ſhaken, yet not vtterly loſt: for Chriſt praied for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile, Luk.22. verſ.32. Secondly, as for the reſt, they were neuer truely iuſt or righteous. Iudas is called the child of perdition, and when he was in his holieſt courſe, he was but a theefe, and an hypocrite, as the Scripture teſtifieth of him. Saint Peter alſo ſaith of Simon Magus, That his heart was not right in the ſight of God, howſoeuer he appeared before men: Act.8.21. Theſe examples therefore proue nothing.

The Proteſtants.

OVr ſentence is this: that he which once hath receiued a true liuely faith, and is thereby iuſtified before God, can neuer finally fall away; neither can that faith vtterly periſh, or faile in him, though it may for a while ſomewhat decay, and be empayred, yet ſhall it reuiue, and hee be rayſed vp againe.

*Argum.*1. Iohn 4.14. Hee that drinketh of the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall neuer be more athirſt, &c. 1. Iohn 3.9. Whoſoeuer is borne of God, ſinneth not, for his ſeed remaineth in him, &c. Ergo, the grace of iuſtification cannot be loſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſo long as they haue this water and ſeed, they ſhal neyther thirſt, nor ſinne; but the fountaine may be dried vp, and the ſeed loſt: and then may they fall into both.

Contra. 1. The Goſpell ſaith, It ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing vp to euerlaſting life: Ergo, it cannot be dryed vp; for it ſpringeth continually and ſtinteth not, til it haue brought him to life eternall. 2. Saint Iohn ſaith not, they ſinne not, if, or while they haue their ſeede: but ſimply, becauſe their ſeed abideth. Neither doth hee reaſon thus: they ſinne not: Ergo, they haue the ſeede: But they haue this ſeede abiding: Ergo, they cannot ſinne: for if they that are borne of God, are ſubiect to ſinne in ſuch ſort, as the Apoſtle meaneth, then may the child of God, be the childe of the diuell: for hee that ſo ſinneth willingly with delight, and continuance therein, is of the diuell.

*Argum.*2. He that beleeueth, is alreadie paſſed from death to life, Iohn 5.24. If it be then poſſible for a man to be brought from life to death, from heauen backe againe to hell, then may a faithfull beleeuer become alſo a faithleſſe infidell.

*Argum.*3. Cantic.8.7. Much water cannot quench loue, neyther can the flouds drowne it: 1. Cor.13. verſ.8. Loue doth neuer fall away; if charitie cannot be loſt, then neyther faith, for without faith there is no charitie.

Anſw. Charitie indeed falleth not away, but a man may fall from charitie: and as long as charitie remaineth, no flouds, that is, perſecutions can drowne it or extinguiſh it: Bellarm.c.15.reſp. ad 1.teſt.& 4.

Contra. 1. As charitie it ſelfe is alwayes permanent, both in this world and the next, which I graunt is the ſpeciall meaning of the Apoſtle: yet it is true alſo, that true charitie cannot be ſeparated from the heart of a faithfull man, being rooted (ſaith the Apoſtle) and grounded in loue, Epheſ.2.17. How can that wither, which hath a roote? the ſeede ſowen in ſtonie ground doth wither, becauſe it hath no roote, Luk.8.13. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, radicata eſt charitas, ſecurus eſto, charitie is rooted, be ſecure or out of doubt: tract.8. ſuper epiſt.1.Ioan. rehearſed cauſ.33.diſtinct.2.c.3. 2. Origen expoundeth this place, 1. Cor.13. of the ſtabilitie and firmeneſſe of charitie, tract.23. in Matth. vpon theſe words, Charitie neuer falleth away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illæ voces dicentis, confido, &c. From charitie neuer falling away, proceeded thoſe ſpeeches of the Apoſtle, I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. can ſeparate me from the loue of God, &c. 3. S. Gregory alſo thus expoundeth the firſt place, Valida eſt vt mors dilectio, virtuti mortis dilectio comparatur, quia mentem, quam ſemel ceperit, à delectatione mundi funditùs occidit, &c. Loue is ſtrong as death; loue is compared to the ſtrength of death, becauſe it doth ſlay the mind for euer where it is the delight of the world, lib.10.moral.c.22. repeated, cauſ.33.diſt.2.c.4.

Auguſtine doth plainely ſet downe his ſentence of this matter: Horum fides quæ per dilectionem operatur, profecto, aut omnino non deficit, aut ſi qui ſunt quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur:

atur: de corrept & grat.cap.7. Their faith, which worketh by loue, either neuer faileth at all, or if it do fayle in any, it is repayred againe, before the life be ended: this ſentence is ratified, cauſ.33.diſtinct.2.c.25.

Interrelig.cap.5. Qui iuſtificantur, ijdem adoptantur Deo filij,&c. Et iam habent ius adeundæ hæreditatis illius, quæ eſt vita æterna: They that are iuſtified, are adopted the ſonnes of God, and haue already, or euen now, the right to come vnto the inheritance of eternall life. How then can they looſe the heauenly inheritance, that haue it already?

This trueth alſo is ſealed by M. Bradford holy Martyr: Our cecitie or blindneſſe, and corrupt affections, do often ſhadow the ſight of Gods ſeede in Gods children, as though they were plaine reprobates: whereof it commeth, that they praying according to their ſenſe, but not according to the trueth, deſire of God to giue them againe his ſpirit, as though they had loſt it, and hee had taken it away: which thing God neuer doth indeed; although he make vs to thinke ſo for a time. *Fox.*pag.1655.

THE FIFTH PART OF GOOD WORKES, FIRST in generall, then in particular.

CONcerning good workes in generall, the ſeuerall queſtions are theſe; firſt, of the law, which is the rule of good workes: ſecondly, of good workes themſelues.

THE FIRST QVESTION OF the lawe.

THe parts of this queſtion are theſe: firſt, of the differences of the law and the Goſpell: ſecondly, whether the law be poſſible to be kept: thirdly, of the workes of Supererogation: fourthly, whether God be to be ſerued for hope of reward, or feare of puniſhment.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE TRVE AND FALSE difference betweene the law and the Goſpell.

FIRST OF THE FALSE differences

THere are ſome differences betweene the law and the Goſpell, concerning the which wee are both agreed: as firſt the law ſetteth forth but the ſhadow of things to come; the Goſpell containeth the body it ſelfe, Coloſſ.2.17. Secondly, the law of Moſes was mutable, and to be changed, Heb.7.12. if the Prieſthood be changed, there muſt be a change alſo of the law: but the Goſpell is eternall: Thirdly, the law was not giuen, to iuſtifie vs, but to be onely a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, Galath.3.24. The Goſpel teacheth the way to life by Chriſt. Fourthly, the law of Moſes engendred feare: the Goſpell bringeth libertie and peace, Rom.8.15. You haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe. Fiftly, The law of Moſes was a hard yoke, grieuous to be borne, Act.15.10. but Chriſts yoke is eaſie, Matth.11.30. Theſe differences we acknowledge: but theſe following we do vtterly reiect.

The Papiſts.

58.Error. FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith, the Goſpell differeth from the law, as a perfect thing from an imperfect: and that the Goſpell is contained and included in the law, as the tree in the ſeed: and that the Goſpell doth not onely explane, and expound the law, but addeth the Counſels of perfection vnto it: Bellarm. de iuſtificat. lib. 4. cap. 4.

The Proteſtants.

Contra. 1. IF by the law we vnderſtand whatſoeuer is contained in the old teſtament, as for Moſes and the Prophets we willingly grant, that the doctrine of the Goſpell is included in the law: for of Chriſt ſpake all the Prophets, Luk. 1.70. but then ſhould we not ſpeake properly to our purpoſe: for when we compare the law and the Goſpell together, we vnderſtand onely the law of workes, which is called the morall law, as it is oppoſite to the doctrine of faith. 2. This then we affirme, that the law of faith, which is the ſubſtance of the Goſpell, is not incluſiuely contained in the decalogue, which is the law of workes; as it may appeare by theſe reaſons.

1. The law of works and the law of faith haue contrary effects: by the law ſinne is reuiued, and receiueth ſtrength, Rom. 7.9. but being baptized by faith into Chriſts death, we are dead vnto ſin, Rom. 6.2. Ergo, no affinitie betweene the law and the Goſpell, which commandeth faith. 2. If faith were commanded in the law, it ſhould be a worke of the law, which the Apoſtle denieth, concluding thus: That a man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the law: Rom. 3.28. 3. Grace excludeth workes, and works exclude grace, Rom. 11.6. If of workes, then no more of grace: works alſo exclude faith and beleefe, Rom. 4.5. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth, &c. If then the law of workes exclude faith, faith can in no wiſe be included in the law. The Goſpell therefore and the law are two diſtinct things: the law ſaith, Do this, and thou ſhalt be ſaued: the Goſpell; Beleeue onely, and it ſufficeth vnto life: For all things are poſſible to him that beleeueth: Mark. 9.23. the doctrine therefore of the faith of the Goſpell cannot be ſet forth in the law of workes: and if it were, this would ſhew an agreement rather betweene the law and the Goſpel, then a difference: for betweene the thing that containeth, and that which is contained, there muſt needs be ſome affinitie: therefore the Ieſuite cannot properly herein make any difference betweene the law and the Goſpell.

S. Ambroſe ſaith, in Luc. 12. Nemo ſub lege fidem conſtituat; lex enim intra menſuram, vltra menſuram gratia; nemo fidem intra menſuram legis conſtituat: Let no man place faith in the law: the law is within meaſure; grace is without meaſure: let no man place faith within the meaſure of the law, &c. Ergo, faith is not contained in the law.

Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 16. Cum lege ſcriptum ſit, diliges amicum, odio habebis inimicum, &c. Whereas it is written in the law, Thou ſhalt loue thy friend, and hate thine enemie, &c. It was lawfull then for righteous men to hate their enemies: quod in nouo Teſtamento compeſcitur: which is reſtrained in the new: If the law ſuffered that which the Goſpel forbiddeth, how is the one contayned in the other.

Peter Lombard. lib. 3. diſtinct. 37. liter. C. Litera Euangelij exprimitur, quod litera legis non exprimebatur: That is expreſſed in the letter of the Goſpell, which was not expreſſed in the letter of the law, &c. how then is the Goſpell contayned in the law?

3. Neither is it true, that the Goſpell addeth vnto the law, precepts or counſels, concerning workes of greater perfection: for all good workes appertaine to the law, as faith belongeth to the Goſpell: and therefore the Apoſtle concludeth, that if we be not iuſtified by the workes of the law, it followeth, that we are by faith, Galath. 2.16. He findeth no meane betweene. Our Sauiour Chriſt alſo ſaith, that there are no commandements greater, then to loue God aboue all, and our neighbour as our ſelfe, which are contained in the law, Mark. 12.31. Therefore the Goſpell cannot counſell or commaund any thing greater then the law: ſeeing there can be no greater thing, then to loue God with all the heart, ſoule and ſtrength, Mark. 12.33.

Hieron. ad Cteſiphont. vpon theſe words, No fleſh ſhall be iuſtified by the workes of the law: Quod ne de lege Moſis tantum dictum putes & non de omnibus mandatis, quæ vno nomine legis continentur, &c. Which that you ſhould not thinke to be ſpoken onely of the law of Moſes, and not of all commandements whatſoeuer, which are contained vnder the name of the law, the ſame Apoſtle ſaith. I conſent vnto the law in the inward man, &c. Ergo, all commandements of works, whatſoeuer belong to the law.

The Papiſts.

59.Error. B*Ellarmines* ſecond difference betweene the law and the Goſpell is this: The law onely teacheth the doctrine, and ſheweth the way, to diſcerne betweene vertue and vice: the Goſpell beſide this knowledge, giueth power and ſtrength to keepe the law: ſo ſaith S. Iohn, 1.17. The law was giuen by Moſes, but grace and trueth came by Ieſus Chriſt, Bellarm. cap. 4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, it is true, that the law is a reuealer and diſcouerer of ſinne, Rom. 7.7. not a giuer of righteouſneſſe, for that is impoſſible to the law, in as much as it was weake, &c. Rom. 8.3. Yet euen vnder the law by grace they receiued ſtrength, in ſome meaſure to keepe the law, though not thereby to be iuſtified: I will runne the way of thy commaundements, (ſaith the Prophet Dauid) when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart, Pſal.119.32. Secondly, grace indeed is giuen vnto vs in the Goſpell, not to enable vs to be iuſtified by doing the workes of the law, but by grace are we ſaued through faith, Epheſ.2.8. In that Chriſt is become our righteouſnes, 1.Cor.1.30. and we the righteouſnes of God in him, 2.Cor.5.21. So that as by grace the righteous both vnder the law and the Goſpell are ſanctified to walke in ſome meaſure of obedience to the law: ſo neither then, nor now doth grace giue power to vs to be iuſtified by the keeping of the law: but our iuſtification, wholy, onely, and immediatly is wrought by the faith of Chriſt, Galath.3.16. This therefore is no difference between the law and the Goſpell.

OF THE TRVE DIFFERENCES OF the law and the Goſpell.

The Papiſts.

60.Error. WHereas wee diſtinguiſh the law and the Goſpell, chiefly in theſe two reſpects: firſt, that the law engendreth terror and feare; the Goſpell peace. Secondly, the law requireth obedience of the commaundements thereby to bee iuſtified; the Goſpell commaundeth onely faith. Bellarmine refuſeth theſe two differences betweene the law and the Goſpell, and thus bendeth his force to ouerthrow them.

Argum.1. Firſt, that the Goſpell worketh feare, as well as the law, he would proue it by theſe menacings and threatnings, which are denounced in the Goſpell, as Matth.7.19. Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewen downe, &c. Rom.1.16. I am not aſhamed of the Goſpell of Chriſt, &c. Then he ſheweth the fruits and effects of the Goſpell: Firſt, the righteouſnes of God is reuealed from faith to faith. Secondly, the wrath of God is reuealed from heauen againſt all vngodlines: The Goſpell then reuealeth the wrath of God: Ergo, it worketh feare, Bellar.cap.2.

Anſw. Firſt, as whatſoeuer is contained in the old Teſtament, doth not appertaine to the law, as the promiſes of mercie in Chriſt foreſhewed by the Prophets, which though they were vttered in the time of the lawe, yet belonged to the Goſpell: ſo in the new Teſtament, all that wee finde there written, is not ſtraightway of the ſubſtance of the Goſpel: but the threatning of Gods iudgements there contained, doe as well appertaine to the law, as the comfortable promiſes in the olde Teſtament to the Goſpell. So that thoſe places doe prooue onely that the law and the Goſpell are ioyned in vſe; yet it followeth not, that they haue the ſame operation and effect: S. Peter, Act.2. and 3. and the reſt of the Apoſtles, in their ſermons tempered the threatnings of the law, and the comforts of the Goſpell together, by the one drawing the people to repentance, by the other miniſtring hope of remiſſion of ſinnes: the ſame courſe ought the Miniſters of the Goſpell to take in teaching the people now: firſt in humbling them by the lawe, then comforting them by the Goſpell: for the law, as Saint Paul ſaith, is a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, Galath.3.verſ.24. But all this ſheweth onely a ioyning of the lawe and the Goſpell in vſe, not in nature or propertie.

Secondly, the Goſpell worketh feare and terror, per accidens, not of it ſelfe, but accidentally and improperly: as Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the ſauour of life vnto life, and of death vnto death, 2.Corinth.2.16. That is, properly and of it ſelfe, it worketh vnto life, but not ſo vnto death: which is not the proper effect of the Goſpell, but is cauſed by the wilfull contemners, and diſobedient hearers of the Goſpell: by whoſe peruerſe nature the ſweetnes thereof is turned to bitternes. So then vnto the faithfull and beleeuers the Goſpell bringeth comfort and peace: if it do not ſo to others, the fault is in themſelues: But the law brought terror to all, euen to the righteous: for Moſes trembled, and quaked at the deliuering of the law, Heb.12.21.

61.Error. Argum.2. Bellarmine alſo prooueth, that the Goſpell requireth the condition of obedience as well as the law: as Chriſt ſaith to the young man, if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commaundements, Matth.19.17. Hence he inferreth, that the Goſpell alſo inioyneth obedience, and not onely faith: And the Councell of Trent, ſeſſ.6.cap.7. doe call this verbum fideï, and, verbum Chriſti, the word of faith, and the word of Chriſt, to be obeyed and followed of all Chriſtians, which Chriſt here vttered to the young man.

Contra. Firſt, wee graunt that the Goſpell requireth obedience, for it eſtabliſheth the lawe, and without this obedience there is no ſaluation: for euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit ſhall be cut down, &c. But it is not now required as in the law, to be a meanes and cauſe of life and iuſtification, as it was then ſaid, Do this, and thou ſhalt liue; but only as a neceſſarie conſequent of our faith, and an effectuall fruit of our iuſtification. Secondly, our Sauiour Chriſt vttered theſe wordes to the young man onely to humble him thereby, and to teach him to know himſelfe: for he willing to iuſtifie himſelfe by keeping of the law; as we reade, Luk.10.29. of another, which came to our Sauiour, with the ſame queſtion, What ſhall I doe to haue eternall life? our Sauiour hereby ſheweth him how farre ſhort he came of keeping the law, that not by doing, but by beleeuing from henceforth he ſhould hope to be ſaued. Thirdly, the Apoſtles exhorted men to beleeue without any other condition, and ſo to be ſaued, Act. 16. 31. Their doctrine was not diuers from Chriſts: therefore Chriſt onely required the condition of faith to iuſtification. By this meanes alſo, the law ſhould become a miniſter and inſtrument of life, contrarie to Saint Paul, who ſaith, it ſerueth onely as a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, Galat. 3. 24. It diſcouereth and reuealeth ſinne, Rom. 7. 7. the Apoſtle alſo calleth it the killing letter, and miniſterie of condemnation, 2. Cor. 3. 6. 9. It cannot therefore helpe to procure our ſaluation: but if that we are iuſtified by our obedience to the law, then ſhould the law helpe to iuſtifie vs, which is contrarie to the Apoſtle.

The Proteſtants.

NOw on the contrarie ſide, our arguments are theſe: Firſt, that the law worketh terror, the Goſpell onely comfort: Rom. 8. 15. Ye haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe, but ye haue receiued the ſpirit of adoption, whereby wee crie Abba father. And againe, Galath. 4. 4. God ſent his ſonne, that he might redeeme them that were vnder the law, that we might receiue the adoption of ſons, and becauſe ye are ſonnes, God hath ſent the ſpirit of his ſonne into your hearts, which crieth Abba father. Theſe places proue, that while we were vnder the law, wee were ſeruants, and kept in feare: but by the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt we are made ſonnes, and receiue the ſpirit of adoption.

Bellarmines anſwere here is very ſimple, that not the law but the old Teſtament, engendreth feare; and not the Goſpell, but the new Teſtament miniſtreth comfort, Bellarm. cap. 2.

Contra. 1. The contrarie rather hereof is moſt euident, that not the old teſtament, but the law; not the new teſtament, but the Goſpell, worketh the one feare, the other comfort: for both the old teſtament containeth comfortable promiſes of the Goſpell, and the new fearefull threatnings of iudgement: therefore neither the old wholy, nor the new wholy, can be, that the miniſter of feare, this of peace, but the law, and the Goſpell comprehended both in the old and new Scriptures.

2. Bellarmine himſelfe, forgetting what he had ſaid before, confeſſeth afterward in theſe words: Lex Moſis, lex timoris & ſeruitutis fuit; Euangelium lex amoris: The law of Moſes was the law of feare and ſeruitude; the Goſpell the law of loue and peace. Thus he himſelfe acknowledgeth this diſtinction betweene the law and the Goſpell: Bellarm. lib. 4. diſcrim. 7.

Auguſt. Hæc eſt breuiſſim. & apertiſſ. differentia duorum teſtamentorum, timor & amor, contr. Adimant. c. 17. This is a ſhort and manifeſt difference of the two teſtaments, feare and loue.

Ambr. in 3. ad Rom. Lex iram operatur, fides gaudium: The law worketh wrath, faith ioy. Ibid. Pacem cum deo habere fides facit non lex: Faith maketh vs to haue peace with God, not the law: In 11. ad Rom. Data eſt lex vt humanum genus terrore manifeſtata legis frænaretur: The law was giuen, that mankinde might be terrified by the manifeſtation thereof.

Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 15. gloſſ. In lege populus ſeruili timore cogebatur, &c. In the law the people was compelled with a ſeruile feare, and they had the law as a ſchoolemaſter: in Euangelio filiali amore inuitatur, but in the Goſpell they are inuited with a filiall loue, &c.

Argum. 2. That the Goſpell requireth not obedience to the commaundements as a meane to ſaluation, as the lawe doth, but onely commaundeth faith, Saint Paul euery where ſheweth: Roman. 3. 20 We cannot be iuſtified by the workes or obedience of the law: the reaſon followeth: for by the law commeth the knowledge of ſinne. And againe, verſ. 21. The righteouſnes of God (which is by the faith of Chriſt Ieſus, verſ. 22.) is made manifeſt without the law: Only faith then is required to make vs righteous before God, without the workes or obedience of the law.

August. expoſit. in Pſal. 77. Heare what Auguſtine ſaith: Teſtimonium legis eis, qui ea non legitimè vtuntur, teſtimonium eſt, quo conuincantur: eis, qui legitimè vtuntur, teſtimonium eſt, quo demonſtratur, quò liberandi confugere debeant peccatores: The teſtimonie of the law, to them which vſe it not aright, is a teſtimonie to conuince them: to them which doe, a teſtimonie to teach them, to whom ſinners ought to flie for their deliuerance: Ergo, the law worketh not our deliuerance it ſelfe, but ſendeth vs to our deliuerer.

Againe, Lex fidei æque atque lex factorum aijt ne concupiſcas, ſed quod operum lex minando imperat, fidei lex credendo impetrat: The law of faith, and the law of workes, doe both ſay thou ſhalt not couet: but what the law of workes, by threatning inioyneth, the law of faith by beleeuing obtaineth: de ſpiritu & liter. cap. 13.

Ambroſ. in c. 3. ad Galath. Non eſt ex fide lex, quia nihil mandat credendum: The law is not of faith, becauſe it commaundeth nothing to be beleeued, &c. As the law commaunded not faith, ſo neither doth the Goſpell commaund obedience to the law as a meane to our iuſtification.

Maſter Patricke Hamelton holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: The law ſheweth vs our ſinne, the Goſpell ſheweth vs remedie for it: the law is the word of ire, the Goſpell is the word of grace: the law is the word of deſpayre, the Goſpell is the word of comfort, &c. Fox. p. 977.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE libertie of the Goſpell.

BEllarmine here is not aſhamed to ſlaunder vs,that we ſhould affirme Chriſtian libertie herein to ſtand,in that we are altogether freed from the obedience and ſubiection of the law:Vt Moſes cum ſuo decalogo nihil ad nos pertineat: And that Moſes with his decalogue belongeth not to vs; lib.5.de iuſtificat.c.5.initio. But we call God and all the world to record, that wee witneſſe no ſuch thing,knowing that Chriſt came not to diſſolue,but to fulfill the law,Matth.5.17.Here therefore Bellarmine fighteth with his owne ſhadow,cap.5.

Chriſtian libertie then conſiſteth in theſe three poynts: Firſt,in that we are exempted from the ceremonies of the law,and the Iudicials,ſo farre forth,as they concerned the politike ſtate of the Iewes: Act.15.10.Why lay ye a yoke on the diſciples neckes,which neither our fathers nor we were able to beare? Secondly,we are freed from the curſe and guilt of the law: Galath.3.13.Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law,when he was made a curſe for vs. Thirdly, we are deliuered from the ſeruitude of ſinne,that although it remaine in vs,yet it raigneth not in vs,Rom.6.12. Herein the Ieſuite diſſenteth from vs.

The Papiſts.

62.Error.

BEllarmines opinion then is this, that by the libertie of the Goſpell wee are altogether freed from ſinne,ſo that it is throughly dead,and not onely not imputed,but not aliue,or hauing any being in the righteous,cap.6.

Argum. Rom.7.6.Now we are deliuered from the law, being dead vnto it, that wee ſhould ſerue in newnes of the ſpirit: If ſinne be dead in vs,and we vnto it,then hath it no life at all.

Anſ. Firſt,in the very ſame chapter,the Apoſtle ſheweth by his owne example,that euen in the regenerate there is ſome remnant of ſinne: verſ.20. Sinne that dwelleth in me: verſ.21. Euill is preſent with me: verſ.23.*I finde a law in my members rebelling againſt the law of my minde:*If ſinne dwell, be preſent,rebell euen in the righteous,then are they not fully purged from it. Secondly,wherefore the Apoſtle in ſaying,we are dead vnto ſinne,or to the law,would be vnderſtood as where he ſaith,*He that is dead,is freed from ſin,*Rom.6.7.that is,from obedience and ſeruice to ſin: verſ.12. Let not ſinne raigne in your mortall bodie: they are freed from the kingdome of ſinne, not from the hauing of ſinne.

The Proteſtants.

THat wee are by the libertie of faith, freed from the tyrannie and kingdome of ſinne, but not altogether from the dwelling and abiding of ſinne in vs, ſo long as we liue in the fleſh: thus we are perſwaded out of the Scripture.

Arg. Saint Paul being now an Apoſtle, and ſo conſequently a ſanctified and regenerate man, ſaith,*I am carnall,and ſold vnder ſinne,*Rom.7.verſ.14.And verſ.25.*In my fleſh I ſerue the law of ſinne: Ergo,*ſinne was yet abiding in him. Verſ.24.Who ſhall deliuer me from the bodie of death? that is the bodie of ſinne,Rom.6.verſ.6. *Ergo,*he was not yet fully deliuered from ſinne, though it raigned not in him: but his freedome onely conſiſted in this, *that the bodie of ſinne ſhould be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerue ſinne,*Rom.6.6. We are freed then from the ſeruice and obedience to ſinne,not from the poſſeſſion and habitation of ſinne.

Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud non eſt peccare, aliud non habere peccatum: nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat,id eſt,qui non obedit deſiderijs eius: in quo autem non exiſtunt iſta deſideria, non ſolum non peccat, ſed nec habet peccatum: It is one thing not to ſinne,another not to haue ſinne: for in whom ſin raigneth not,he ſinneth not,that is,obeyeth not the deſires thereof: but he in whom none of theſe deſires are,hath no ſinne at all: in 4.cap.epiſtol.ad Galat. But there is no man liuing,in whom there be not found ſome euill deſires: *Ergo,*no man,but hath ſinne.

Ambroſe ſheweth wherein Chriſtian libertie conſiſteth: in 2.Galath. Libertas in Ieſu Chriſto hæc eſt,non ſubijci legi: This is the libertie in Ieſus Chriſt,not to be ſubiect to the law: that is,the terror and feare thereof,as he expoundeth, Galath.4. Lex data eſt, vt terrori eſſet: The law was giuen to be a terror. Againe,in 2.Cor.3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens: The law of the ſpirit giueth libertie,requiring onely faith: *Ergo,*this is our libertie,that by faith we are deliuered from the thraldome and bondage of the law, both in the obſeruation thereof required as a meane to ſaluation,and the puniſhment of the tranſgreſſion thereof.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER IT BE poſſible to keepe the law in this life.

The Papiſts.

63.Error. IF any man ſay, that the precepts, and commandements of God vnto a man iuſtified, and in the ſtate of grace, are impoſſible to be kept, let him be accurſed, *Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ.6.can.*18.

*Argum.*1. Rom.8.4. That the righteouſnes of the law might be fulfilled in vs : Ergo, the law of God by the grace of Chriſt may be kept, and the keeping thereof is our iuſtice. Chriſt alſo ſaith, my yoke is eaſie, and my burthen light : Ergo, his commaundements are poſſible to be kept.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, that the law is fulfilled by vs, but in vs by Chriſt, who is our righteouſnes, and ſanctification, 1.Cor.1.30. The law remaineth ſtill impoſſible to be kept through the weaknes of our fleſh, verſ.3. Neither doth God giue vs abilitie to keepe it, but Chriſt hath fulfilled it for vs : God ſent his ſonne in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, verſ.3. Wee notwithſtanding are bound to walke in obedience to the commaundements, which is, to walke after the ſpirit, not after the fleſh, verſ.4. But this our obedience is imperfect, and farre off from that perfection, which Gods iuſtice requireth. Secondly, to him that is borne of God, his commaundements are ſaid to be eaſie, and not grieuous, not becauſe they are able perfectly to keepe them : but that ſtrength is giuen to keepe them in part, and they doe willingly, not of conſtraint exerciſe themſelues therein : as alſo for the reſt, that notwithſtanding their obedience is imperfect, yet the curſe of the law is taken away, and their ſinnes pardoned in Chriſt.

Auguſtine alſo telleth vs how Chriſts yoke is light : Præcepta ſunt nolentibus grauia, volentibus leuia, itaque ait iugum meum ſuaue eſt : de ſalutar. docum.cap.7. His precepts are heauie to the vnwilling, but to the willing light, therefore he ſaith, my yoke is pleaſant. The commaundements then are eaſie, not becauſe we can keepe them perfectly, but Chriſt maketh vs willing by his ſpirit in ſome meaſure to walke in obedience.

*Argum.*2. Rom.13. He that loueth his neighbour hath kept the whole law : but it is poſſible to loue our neighbour : Ergo, to keepe the law, *Bellar.cap.*11.

Anſw. He that loueth perfectly, as he ought, may keepe the law : but the aſſumption is falſe, that it is poſſible for any man ſo to loue. Bellarmine ſheweth, that our loue may be perfectly ſufficient toward the keeping of the law, becauſe Dauid ſaith, With my whole heart haue I ſought thee, Pſal.119. Contra. The Prophet Dauid in ſo ſaying, With my whole heart, ſheweth the qualitie rather, then the quantitie of his loue : to loue therefore with all his heart, is all one as where hee ſaith, I haue loued exceedingly, Pſalm.119.verſ.167. that is vnfainedly, not with a double heart: and as the hebrue phraſe is, a heart and a heart, Pſalm.12.2. This ſheweth not therefore the perfection of his loue before God, but the ſingleneſſe and ſimplicitie of his owne heart.

*Argum.*3. That it is poſſible to keepe the law, they would enforce further by theſe teſtimonies of Scripture.

1. Ioſu.11.15. Ioſua left nothing vndone of all, that the Lord had commanded Moſes.

2. Act.13.22. I haue found Dauid a man after mine owne heart, which will do all things that I will.

3. 2.King.23.25. Like vnto Ioſiah was there no king, that turned vnto the Lord, with all his heart, with all his ſoule, with all his might, according to all the law of Moſes.

4. Luke 1.6. Both were iuſt before God, (that is, Zacharie and Elizabeth) and walked in all the commandements and ordinances of the Lord without reproofe.

5. Iohn 17.6. Our Sauiour thus teſtifieth of his Apoſtles, Thine they were, thou gaueſt them me, and they haue kept thy word.

6. Rom.7.19. The euill that I would not, that do I : now, if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me, Verſ.25. I my ſelfe in my mind ſerue the law of God : then Paul ſinned not, for ſinne cannot be but in the mind, *Bellarm.lib.4.de iuſtificat.c.*11.

1. Anſw. 1. Ioſua in that particular, concerning the deſtruction of the cities of the heathen, did all as God commanded, Deut.7.2. 2. Otherwiſe Moſes himſelfe, that gaue the charge to Ioſua, did not abſolutely keepe all Gods commandements : for thus the Lord ſaith to him and Aaron, Numb.20.12. Becauſe ye beleeued not me, to ſanctifie me in the preſence of the children of Iſrael, yee ſhall not bring this congregation into the land, &c.

2. The Scripture maketh a manifeſt exception of the matter of Vriah, that Dauid did that, which was right in the ſight of the Lord, ſauing in that, 1.King.15.5. Ergo, he did not keepe all the commandements.

3. Ioſiah turned with all his heart vnto the Lorde, which noteth the ſinglene and integritie of his heart, rather then perfection : for hee alſo was diſobedient to the voyce of God in going againſt Pharao : as hee ſaid vnto him in the name of God, Leaue off to come againſt God that is with me, leſt he deſtroy thee, 2.Chron.35.21.

They

4. They were iuſt without reproofe: as Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud eſt eſſe ſine peccato, &c. aliud ſine querela: It is one thing to be without ſinne, which is ſaid onely of Chriſt; another to be without reproofe: de perfect iuſtit. contr. Celeſtin. Hierome alſo diſtinguiſheth of iuſtice: there is perfecta iuſtitia, a perfect iuſtice, and another, quæ competit noſtræ fragilitati, which agreeth with our frailtie, and ſo Zacharie and Elizabeth are ſaid to be iuſt, dialog.1. contr. Pelag. Otherwiſe that they were not perfectly iuſt, it is manifeſt, for the Angel ſaith to Zacharie, Thou ſhalt be dumbe, quia non credidiſti, becauſe thou haſt not beleeued my wordes, Luke 1.20.

5. In the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtles kept the word of Chriſt; as Paul ſaith, We are perfect, Philip. 3. verſ. 15. As many as be perfect: Secundum humanæ fragilitatis modum; after the meaſure of humane frailtie: As Hierome ſaith, dialog.2. contra. Pelag. For abſolutely the Apoſtles had not kept Chriſts word, ſeeing Peter before this, for giuing carnall counſell to Chriſt againſt his paſſion, deſerued to be called Sathan, Matth. 16.23.

6. Firſt, this place euidently maketh againſt him; for how dare he conclude that Paul had no ſin, ſeeing he confeſſeth that ſinne dwelt in him, Rom. 7.19. Secondly, by his mind and ſpirit is not vnderſtood his ſoule, but the regenerate part of the whole man, wherein, by the grace of God, hee conſented to the law of God; but the law of his fleſh, that is, the vnregenerate part reſiſted; ſo that his obedience to the law was thereby hindered. 3. Laſtly, Auguſtine thus ſaith, Idem Apoſtolus & perfectum ſe dicit & imperfectum; imperfectum cogitando quantum illi ad illam iuſtitiam deſit, &c. The Apoſtle doth call himſelfe perfect, Philip. 3.15. and imperfect, ibid. verſ. 12. imperfect; by thinking what hee wanted of that iuſtice, whoſe fulnes hee thirſted for: perfect; quòd ſuam perfectionem fateri non erubeſcit, becauſe he is not aſhamed to confeſſe his imperfection: Like as wee call a Traueller perfect, cuius bene promouetur acceſſio, quamuis non perficiatur intentio, niſi fuerit facta peruentio: Whoſe acceſſion ſtill is furthered, though his intention be not perfited, till his peruention be fulfilled, contr. 2. epiſtol. Pelag. 3.7. Paul therefore had no perfect or abſolute iuſtice and obedience.

Argum.4. The old Pelagians, who held the ſame or very like poſition to the Papiſts, obiected thus; Si impoſſibilia ſunt mandata, non in his erit culpa, qui accepere mandata, ſed in eo qui dedit impoſſibilia: If the commandements be impoſſible, the fault is not in them that receiued them, but in him that gaue them, Hieron. ad Cteſiphont.

Firſt, Hierome anſwereth, Nunquid præcepit mihi Deus, vt eſſem, quod Deus eſt? &c. Hath God commanded, that I ſhould be the ſame, that God is? that I ſhould haue that which the Angels haue not? Of Chriſt it is written, Peccatum non fecit, he did no ſinne: if this be common to mee and Chriſt, Quid ille habuit proprium? what had he proper to himſelfe?

Secondly, ſaith he, Poſſibilia ſunt Dei mandata, &c. The commandements of God are poſſible; who denieth it? but how this is to be vnderſtood, the choſen veſſell ſheweth. Rom. 8.3. That which was impoſſible in the law, &c. God ſending his ſonne, &c. His meaning is, that the commandements were poſſible in the obedience of Chriſt, Hieron. ad Cteſiphont.

Thirdly, Impoſſibilia ſunt, non imbecillitate naturæ, ſed animi laſſitudine: They are impoſſible, not by the imbecillitie of nature, (wherein Adam was firſt created) ſed laſſitudine animi, but through the infirmitie of the minde, (by Adams fall:) dialog.1. aduerſ. Pelagian.

The Proteſtants.

THat no mortall man is able to keepe the Lawe of God perfectly in this life, it may bee thus proued.

1. Argum.1. S. Peter ſaith, Act. 15.10. Why tempt ye God, to lay a yoke on the diſciples neckes, which neyther our fathers nor we were able to beare: Ergo, the law is an importable burthen, and ſo impoſſible to be kept.

2. Againe, S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 7.18. To will is preſent with mee, but I find no meanes to performe that is good: Ergo, Paul could not keepe the law.

1. Bellarm. S. Peter ſpeaketh of the ceremonial law, which being added to the moral law, made it importable; but now the ceremonial being aboliſhed, the moral law is portable. c.14. reſp. ad loc. 1.

Contra. 1. Though the Apoſtle in that place treat chiefely of the ceremoniall, yet the reaſon is generall: We beleeue through the grace of the Lord Ieſus to be ſaued, Act. 15. verſ. 11. Beleefe is oppoſed not onely to the ceremoniall, but morall law alſo: wherefore ſeeing that is made eaſie and portable by faith, which otherwiſe is importable, it followeth that both the ceremoniall and morall are in themſelues importable. 2. The Apoſtle generally ſpeaking of the whole law, ſaith it was impoſſible, Rom. 8.3.

2. Bellarm. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the acte of concupiſcence, which is no ſinne. reſponſ. ad obiect. 3.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſheweth the contrarie: that both it is a ſinne to luſt, Rom. 7.7. I knew not ſinne, but by the law; for I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt: Ergo, it is ſin to luſt. 2. He confeſſeth in direct wordes alſo, that this ſinne dwelleth in him, verſ. 10.

*Argum.*2. Galath.3.10. As many as are vnder the workes of the law,are vnder the curſe: for it is written,curſed is euery one that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law: The Apoſtle reaſoneth thus: who ſo keepeth not the law in all points,ſtandeth accurſed: but no man is able to keepe it: Ergo,euery man is vnder the curſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are accurſed, which thinke to keepe the law by their owne ſtrength,without grace,which indeed it is impoſſible to doe,but poſſible by grace: *reſp.ad loc.*2.

Contra. Nay the Apoſtle ſheweth, that it is poſſible no way to keepe the law perfectly: for if man by grace might performe the law,he might deliuer himſelf by grace from the curſe: but now are we redeemed only from the curſe by Chriſt,who was made a curſe for vs,verſ.13.Ergo,the law by no man can be performed. 2. The law is not of faith,verſ.12. But if by faith and grace the law could be kept,then the law ſhould be of faith.

*Argum.*3. If the righteous man doth keepe the law,then is he without ſinne: for where there is no tranſgreſſion of the law,there is no ſinne: but no man is without ſin, Iam.3. In many things we offend all: 1.Ioh.1. If we ſay wee haue no ſinne, wee deceiue our ſelues: Ergo, no man can keepe the law.

Bellarmine anſwereth,that the veniall ſinnes which iuſt men commit, are not directly againſt the lawe, but præter legem, beſide the lawe: and therefore they may keepe the lawe, and yet haue veniall ſinnes.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Iohn ſaith, Sinne is the tranſgreſſion of the law,and whoſoeuer committeth ſinne tranſgreſſeth the law,1.Iohn.1.4. but a veniall or ſmall offence is ſinne: Ergo, a tranſgeſſion: and where the law is tranſgreſſed it is not kept. Secondly, S.Iames ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole law,and yet faile in one point,he is guiltie of all,Iam.2.10. But he that committeth veniall ſinnes, faileth in ſome point, he doth ſomewhat (præter legem) beſide the law: Ergo, they are guiltie of the whole,and ſo tranſgreſſe contra legem,againſt the law: and ſo this diſtinction of ſinnes beſide,and againſt the law,is found nothing worth.

Auguſtine thus writeth of this matter againſt the Pelagians: Illud quod dicunt ſine vllo peccato aliquos homines vixiſſe in hoc ſeculo,vel viuere,optandum eſt vt fiat,conandum eſt vt fiat, ſupplicandum eſt vt fiat,non tamen,quaſi factum fuerit,confidendum: That which they ſay,that ſome may,and haue liued here without ſinne,we muſt endeuour,and pray,that it may be ſo,not preſume that it hath been done: *contr.Pelag.lib.*3.*cap.*10.

*Concil.Mileuitan.c.*6. Placuit,quod aijt S.Iohannes,ſi dixerimus,quod peccatum non habemus,nos ipſos ſeducimus, quiſquis ſic accipiendum putat, vt dicat propter humanitatem non oportere dici,nos non habere peccatum,non quia veritas eſt,anathema ſit: Whereas S.Iohn ſaith,if we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues: if any man thinke that of curteſie and humanitie,we ſay that we haue no ſin, not becauſe it is ſo indeede,let him be accurſed. But they which ſay,they can keepe the law, conſequently affirme that they haue no ſinne.

See the teſtimonie of the holie Martyrs: Patricke Hamelton Martyr,ſaith, that the law biddeth vs to doe that thing,which is impoſſible,in as much as the keeping of the commandements,which the law biddeth,is impoſſible,Fox pag.976.

Maſter Tyndall holie Martyr: The law,when it commandeth thou ſhalt not luſt, giueth thee not power ſo to doe,but damneth thee,becauſe thou canſt not ſo doe: If thou wilt therefore be at peace with God,then muſt thou turne to the promiſes of the Goſpell: Fox pag.1247.

AN APPENDIX, OF THE DIVIſion of the law.

The Papiſts.

64.Error. THe Maſter of the Sentences,whom the reſt doe follow, maketh but three commaundements in the firſt table,ioyning in one the firſt and the ſecond: *lib.*3.*diſt.*37.liter.b. and he diuideth the ſecond table into ſeauen, making two of the laſt commaundement: this to be the ſixt, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours wife: that which followeth, *Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours houſe, nor his ſeruant,&c.*to be the ſeauenth and the laſt: *lib.*3.*diſt.*40 liter.a. This deuice the Papiſts ſucceeding haue the more willingly embraced,that the ſecond commandement,which doth pinch them very ſore,might be left out altogether,which ſome of them haue moſt impiouſly attempted. And Catharinus,a great popiſh writer,is directly of this iudgement, mandatum ſecundum fuiſſe temporale, that the ſecond commaundement was but temporall, to continue for a time: opuſcul.de imaginib. For this their deuice,reaſons out of Scripture they haue none.

The Proteſtants.

THis diuiſion of the law, to ioyne the firſt and the ſecond commaundement in one, and ſo to make two of the laſt; wee ſhew it to be contrarie to the Scripture, to reaſon, and authoritie.

Firſt, Mark.10.19. our Sauiour Chriſt maketh but ſixe commaundements in the ſecond table: where in ſtead of the laſt, Thou ſhalt not couet, is put, μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, Thou ſhalt hurt no man, no not ſo much as by thought or deſire to couet any thing of his.

Againe, Saint Paul, Rom.7.8. calleth the law forbidding to luſt, ἐντολὴν, a commaundement in the ſingular number, not commaundements.

Secondly, reaſon alſo giueth, that this commaundement, Thou ſhalt not couet, ſhould be but one: firſt, diuers commaundements haue their diuers acts which are forbidden, as to ſteale, to kill, to commit adulterie: but theſe two ſuppoſed lawes haue but one action, which is to couet. Secondly, the concluſion, after the particular induction, nor any thing that is his, ſheweth, that all the particulars before going belong vnto the ſame charge and commaundement.

Thirdly, 1. Origen miſliketh this diuiſion thus writing in 8. Exod. Hæc omnia nonnulli putant ſimul vnum eſſe mandatum, quod ſi ita putetur, non complebitur decem numerus mandatorum: Some thinke all theſe to be one commaundement: which if it be ſo, how ſhall the number of tenne commaundements be fulfilled? Therefore this is the firſt commandement, Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods, &c. The ſecond, Thou ſhalt make no Idoll, &c.

Ambroſ. Conſtat primum eſſe mandatum, &c. It is euident this is the firſt commaundement, Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods, &c. then, Thou ſhalt make no image, &c. the third, Thou ſhalt not take the name &c. in 5 ad Epheſ.

Leodienſ. epiſt. cont. Paſchal.2. Tertium decalogi, &c. The third precept, Thou ſhalt not take in vaine, &c.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE WORKS of Supererogation.

The Papiſts.

THey teach, that it is not onely poſſible for men to keepe the law of God in this life, but to do 65. Error.
more than is preſcribed or commaunded: and that men of their abundance may allot vnto others ſuch workes of ſupererogation, Rhemiſt. 1. Cor. 9. ſect. 6. ex Tileman. loc. 3. err. 16.

Argum. 2. Cor. 8. ſect. 3. As your abundance now ſupplieth their want, their abundance alſo may ſupplie your want, that there may be equalitie. Saints, or other vertuous perſons may in meaſure and proportion of other mens deſeruings, allot vnto them as well the ſupererogation of their ſpirituall works, as thoſe that abound in worldly goods may giue almes of their ſuperfluities, to them which are in neceſſitie, Rhemiſt. totid. verbis.

Anſw. 1. This place proueth no communication of merits of one to another: but that as euery one aboundeth in the gifts and graces of God, ſo they ought to communicate the vſe thereof one to anothers benefit: for no man meriteth himſelfe by any worke of his: therefore he can not communicate that to another, which he hath not himſelfe. Here alſo mention is made of mutuall communication, for one to ſupplie anothers want: but he that doth ſupererogate to another of the abundance of his good workes, hath no neede to haue his wants ſupplied by another mans deſeruings: therefore there is no mutuall communicating betweene them, which is the thing whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place.

The Proteſtants.

Arg. THat no man is holpen by another mans deſeruings, but all that a man can doe, is little enough and not ſufficient for himſelfe; it is plaine in the Goſpell: where our Sauiour ſaith, That when we haue done all that is commaunded, we are vnprofitable ſeruants, and did no more than was our dutie, Luk.17.10. Ergo, a man cannot doe more than his dutie.

Hierome vpon this place thus concludeth: Si inutilis eſt, qui fecit omnia, quid de illo dicendum eſt, qui explere non potuit: If he be an vnprofitable ſeruant, which did all, what ſhall be ſaid of him which could not fulfill them? ad Cteſiphont.

Saint Ambroſe vpon the ſame words writeth thus: Ergo, & cum fecerimus quod nobis imperatum eſt, &c. Therefore, when we haue done that which is commaunded vs, we muſt not ſtraight be exalted, but humble our ſelues: quia non ſtatim, ſi aliquid fecerimus, impleuimus omnia ſeruitutis obſequia, quis tanta ſalutis beneficia digno poſſit æquare ſeruitio? quis poteſt ſoluere, quod accepit? becauſe not ſtraightwaies, if we haue done any thing, we haue performed all the duties of our ſeruice, who can be equall in his ſeruice to ſo great benefit of ſaluation? who can pay that which he hath receiued? ſerm. 16. in Pſal. 119. Ergo, no man can doe more than he is bound to doe.

Wee may alſo remember the parable of the Virgins, Matth.25. where the fiue wiſe refuſe to giue of their oyle to the fiue fooliſh: leaſt (ſay they) there will not be enough for vs and you. No man therefore hath attained to ſuch a perfection of goodnes, that he is able to ſpare ought for his brother, but ſhall haue neede thereof himſelfe.

Auguſtine writing vpon this parable ſaith: Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſti-

monio quicquam adiuuatur apud Deum : & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, vt ſibi teſtimonium perhibeat conſcientia ſua : Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe, neither is a man relieued by anothers teſtimonie before God : the teſtimonie of a mans conſcience is hardly ſufficient for himſelfe. See more of this matter : *Controuerſ.*14.*quaeſt.*7.*part.4.& quaeſt.*8.*part.*3.*artic.*2.

Tertullian hereof alſo thus writeth, lib.de Pudicit. Sufficiat martyri propria delicta purgaſſe, ingrati, vel ſuperbi eſt in alios ſpargere, quod ipſe pro magno fuerit conſecutus: ecquis alienam mortem ſua morte ſoluit, niſi ſolus filius dei? Let it ſuffice a Martyr to haue purged his owne ſin, it is the part of an vnthankfull or proude man, to ſcatter vpon others, that which he hath obtained for a great benefit : doth any man by his death looſe anothers death, but onely the ſonne of God ?

Eſpenc. a learned Papiſt thus confeſſeth : Quo die multa nimirum miſericordia opus erit omnibus Sanctis : In which day of the Lord all the Saints ſhall haue great neede of mercie : in 2.*Tim.p.*15. And againe he thus alleageth out of Auguſtines Sentences, collected by *Proſper. ſent.*234. Nemo fidelium, quamuis multum profecerit, dicat, ſufficit mihi : Let none of the Saints, though he haue well profited, ſay, it ſufficeth me : *p.*126. If no man hath ſufficient for himſelfe, how can hee ſupererogate to others.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER GOD BE to be ſerued for hope of reward, or feare of puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

66.Error. MEn ought to doe good in reſpect and for reward and recompence in heauen for their good workes : the Apoſtle ſaith of Moſes, Hebr. 11.26. He had reſpect to the recompence of reward, Rhemiſt.ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we denie, that we ought to make account of heauen to be giuen as a iuſt recompence deſerued by our workes : for life eternall, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is the free gift of God, Roman.6.23. Secondly, wee graunt that men in their well doing ought to haue reſpect to the reward, but not chiefly or principally : but the reſpect of Gods glorie and their owne dutie ought to moue them more.

In Pſal.52. Argum. Pſal.34.8. Taſte and ſee, how gracious the Lord is: We ought as dutifull children to yeeld obedience to the Lord, and delight in him, euen becauſe of that pleaſant taſte, comfort and ioy, which we feele in his goodnes toward vs. Auguſtine ſaith well, Deus non propterea ſe amari vult, quia dat aliquid praeter ſe, ſed quia dat ſe : God would not be beloued of vs, becauſe hee giueth or promiſeth any thing beſide himſelfe, but becauſe he giueth himſelfe.

Ambroſe : Propoſitum piae mentis mercedem non expetit, ſed pro mercede habet boni facti conſcientiam & iuſti operis effectum : The purpoſe of a godly minde doth deſire no rewarde, but in ſtead of a reward hath the conſcience of a good fact, and the effect of a righteous worke, *lib.*1.*de Abram.c.*8.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr ſaith : Euery Chriſtian man muſt keepe Gods commaundements by loue, and not by hope, to get for his ſeruice euerlaſting life, pag.1255. artic.10. Againe, they that for feare of hell, or the ioyes of heauen doe their dutie, doe a conſtrained ſeruice which God will not haue : ſuch are hyred men and waged ſeruants, not children, pag.1255.col.2.

The Papiſts.

67.Error. 2. EVen in right Chriſtian godly men there remaineth doubt, miſtruſt, feare of hell and damnation : and the feare of Gods iudgements cauſeth iuſt men to humble themſelues, leaſt they ſhould be damned. And ſo S.Paul ſaith, Worke out your ſaluation with feare and trembling, *Philip.*2.*Rhemiſt.*1.*Iohn.*4.*ſect.*6.

The Proteſtants.

In Pſal.127. Anſ. WE acknowledge a dutifull reuerence and feare of God alwaies remaining in the godly : but it is farre from that ſeruile and ſlauiſh feare, which is cauſed only by the remembrance of hell fire and eternall iudgement. Auguſtine doth thus reſemble the matter : The chaſte wife (ſaith he) and the adulterous do both feare their husbands : ſed caſta timet ne diſcedat vir ; adultera, ne veniat : But the chaſte wife is afraide leaſt her husband ſhould depart ; the adulterous is afraid leaſt he ſhould come. Such a feare as is in the chaſte wife, we grant to be in the children of God, but not the other.

2. We alſo confeſſe, that the horror of hell is profitable to make a way and entrance for the calling of worldly and hard hearted men, as the needle or briſtle (as Auguſtine ſaith) maketh a way for the thread : but in a man alreadie called, this feare is expelled by loue, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Ioh.4.18. For wee muſt be of thoſe that loue the appearing of Chriſt, 2.Timoth.4.8. not of that number which feare it, and wiſh it were prolonged.

Auguſt. Si poſſumus efficere, fratres, vt dies iudicij non veniret, puto, quia nec ſic erat, male viuendum : If wee could bring it about, that the day of iudgement ſhould not come at all, wee ought not for all that to liue ill. His meaning is,that wee ought not to liue well onely for feare of Gods iudgements.

*Origen tract.33.in Matth.*vpon theſe words,Matth.25.24. I knew thou waſt an hard man,and therfore was afraide: Nec eſt bonus huiuſmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: This feare is not good,neither deliuereth vs from vtter darknes.

Peter.Lombard. Inimicus eſt iuſtitiæ, qui pœnæ timore non peccat: He is an enemie to iuſtice, that ſinneth not for feare of puniſhment,lib.3.diſt.36.liter.c.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr: They are the people of Chriſt,which willingly doe heare and follow him,not for feare of the law, but onely entiſed and lead with a gracious libertie,and faithfull loue,not doing any thing,becauſe it is commaunded, but becauſe it is pleaſant and acceptable to them,though it were not commaunded,Fox pag.1253.col.2.

THE SECOND GENERALL QVEſtion of good workes.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE neceſſitie of workes.

The Papiſts.

68.Error.

THeir opinion is, that good workes are not onely neceſſarie to ſaluation, neceſſitate præſentiæ, becauſe they muſt neceſſarily be preſent,and we cannot be without them: but *neceſſitate efficientiæ,*they are neceſſarie,as efficient cauſes together with faith,of our ſaluation.

Argum. Phil.3.12.Worke out your ſaluation with feare, and trembling: 2.Cor.4.17.Our light affliction cauſeth vnto vs a more excellent waight of glorie: Ergo, our workes and ſufferings are the cauſe of ſaluation,Bellar.cap.7.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place we ſay,that the Apoſtle there ſaith none other thing, than his fellow Apoſtle Saint *Peter,*2.Epiſt.1.10.Make your election ſure: to worke out our ſaluation,and to make our election ſure by good workes,is all one,not that our ſaluation or election is thereby cauſed before God: but good workes doe ſerue to aſſure our owne conſcience of our ſaluation, and to perfit or finiſh it to our ſelues. And againe it followeth in the next verſe: *For it is God which worketh in you both the will and the deede,*verſ.13. So then man worketh,but it is God,that giueth him grace to worke: as Auguſtine ſaith, Quicquid vult bonum,quicquid poteſt,à domino eſt,quia ſine me,aiyt dominus,nihil poteſtis facere: What good ſo euer a man willeth,or doth, is of the Lord, for without me ſaith the Lord,you can doe nothing: *Hypognoſt.cont.Pelag.articul.*2.

2. Affliction is not the cauſe of ſaluation,for then the Apoſtle ſhould be contrarie to himſelfe, Rom.8.18. I count that the afflictions of this preſent time are not worthie the glorie,&c. But it is onely the way, that bringeth vs to Heauen, Matth.7.14. The gate is narrow, and the way ſtreite, that leadeth to life. And Bernard (well ſaith) Sunt via regni, non cauſa regnandi: Good workes are the way to the kingdome,not the cauſe of the kingdome.

The Proteſtants.

A Neceſſitie of good workes we graunt, as liuely teſtimonies of our faith, without the which there is neither faith nor life: Matth.7.19. Euery tree,that bringeth not forth good fruite is hewen downe,&c. And S. Iames ſaith,2.18. Shew me thy faith,out of thy workes: Bernard alſo writeth: Credis in Chriſtum? fac Chriſti opera,vt viuat fides tua: Dooſt thou beleeue in Chriſt? doe Chriſts workes, that thy faith may liue: *in Paſchal.ſer.*2. ſuch a neceſſitie of workes we graunt,but not as the cauſe or efficient of ſaluation.

Argum. Rom.3.28. A man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the law, Galath.2.20. *I liue by the faith of the ſonne of God,*chap.3.11. No man is iuſtified by the law, and the law is not of faith: Ergo, faith onely is neceſſarie to our iuſtification: works, as being of the law, are not herein ioyned with faith,for then the law were of faith: But they follow after as fruites of our iuſtification.

*Synod. Moguntin.cap.*8. Opera iuſtificatorum gratiæ Dei effectus ſunt,& mouente & adiuuante ſpiritu ſancto fiunt: The workes of thoſe that are iuſtified, are the effects or fruites of grace, and are wrought by the motion of the ſpirite. Men then are firſt iuſtified by grace,and after their iuſtification,good workes are wrought.

The Martyrs haue ſealed this truth: *Patrick Hamelton: No man is iuſtified by the deedes of the law, but by the faith of Ieſus,Fox.*pag.978. Catherine Hamelton put to death, for ſaying, I know perfectly,that no workes can ſaue me,but onely the workes of Chriſt my Lord and Sauiour.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE EFFICACIE OF workes, whether we are thereby iuſtified.

The Papiſts.

69.Error. THat a man by good workes is iuſtified, and made more iuſt, they thinke to be very manifeſt and plaine out of Scripture: wherein, as it ſhall appeare, they are greatly deceiued, and doe no leſſe deceiue others ſeduced by them.

*Argum.*1. Of all others,which may ſeeme to make for them,they moſt of al vrge that of Saint Iames 2.21. Was not Abraham our father iuſtified through works,verſ.25. Likewiſe was Rahab the harlot iuſtified through workes: Ergo, we are iuſtified by our workes, *Bellarm.cap.*18.

Anſw. S. Iames in ſaying we are iuſtified by workes, meaneth not that iuſtification whereby we are made iuſt before God,for then he ſhould be contrarie to S. Paul, who ſaith,we are iuſtified without works,Rom.3.28. But by being iuſtified he vnderſtandeth nothing elſe, but to be declared iuſt,as well before men,as in the ſight of God: which declaration is teſtified and ſhewed forth by our works proceeding of faith.

Bellarmine contrariwiſe laboureth to proue, that the word cannot be ſo taken here: for the Apoſtle ioyneth workes and faith together,verſ.22. The faith wrought with his workes,and through the workes the faith was made perfect: workes and faith doe then worke together; as one worketh, ſo doth the other,they iuſtifie both alike: but faith iuſtifieth not by way of declaration, but verilie, and in deede,Ergo.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not, becauſe faith worketh with workes,that therefore they worke both alike: it is one thing for faith to iuſtifie with workes,another to iuſtifie as workes: Secondly, as faith doth iuſtifie vs before God, ſo alſo it iuſtifieth before men, that is,faith ſerueth alſo for the declaration of our iuſtification,in that it cauſeth good workes,and theſe good workes doe teſtifie of faith,that it is liuely,and perfect, not a dead faith. Thirdly, that to iuſtifie is here taken onely for the declaration,or teſtification of our faith,it thus appeareth: firſt, that this word is ſo vſed in Scripture,it is plaine,Rom.3.4. that thou maieſt be iuſtified in thy words: that is knowne, or declared to be iuſt. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Iuſtificabuntur,id eſt, iuſti habebuntur, they ſhall be iuſtified, that is counted iuſt, as we alſo ſay, Sanctificetur nomen tuum,id eſt,ſanctum habeatur,let thy name be halowed,that is, acknowledged to be holy. Secondly,the Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith, verſ.18. Shew me thy faith out of thy workes,&c. he ſpeaketh onely of the outward ſhewing and teſtification of faith. Thirdly, if we take iuſtification properly,as S. Paul vſeth the word,then ſhould S. Iames be contrarie to S. Paul, who ſaith,we are iuſtified by faith without workes. De ſpiritu. & liter.cap.26.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt iuſtification, which is without workes; Saint Iames of the ſecond iuſtification,whereby a man is made more iuſt,and this is cauſed by good workes.

Contra. Firſt,we deny any ſuch difference of iuſtification: the Scripture ſpeaketh but of one iuſtification, Rom.8.30. Whome hee iuſtified, them alſo hee glorified: vnleſſe you will haue another iuſtification to come after our glorification: and verſe 7. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen: the iuſtification in remiſſion of ſinnes,doth make a man bleſſed: Ergo,it is the onely ſufficient iuſtification.

Secondly,if faith doe iuſtifie as it is a worke,by the merit and worthines thereof, as it is by our aduerſaries affirmed, and not inſtrumentally onely by apprehending Chriſt, then neither ſhall their firſt iuſtification be without workes, becauſe it is not without faith.

Thirdly, S.Paul and S. Iames ſpeake both of one and the ſelfe ſame iuſtification before God:for both of them alleage the ſame example of Abraham, both citing the ſame teſtimony of Scripture: Abraham beleeued God,and it was counted vnto him for righteouſnes: Wherefore they bringing in the ſame example, and vſing the ſame words, muſt needs apply them to the ſame end. Rabab alſo is brought in an example of the very firſt iuſtification, Rabab the harlot was iuſtified: ſhe was an harlot onely before her firſt iuſtification: ſo then it will follow, that euen the firſt iuſtification is by workes,if they will haue Saint Iames to vnderſtand iuſtification as Saint Paul doth.

*Argum.*2. Bellarmine for iuſtification by workes further oppoſeth theſe places of Scripture.

1 1. Rom.6.19. As you haue giuen your members, ſeruants to vncleaneneſſe, and iniquitie to commit iniquitie, ſo now giue your members ſeruants to iuſtice or righteouſneſſe to ſanctification: by ſanctification here iuſtification is ſignified,being oppoſed to iniquitie.

2 2. 2.Cor.7.1. Hauing theſe promiſes,let vs cleanſe our ſelues from all filthines of the fleſh and ſpirit, and grow vp vnto ſanctification in the feare of the Lord: we muſt grow vp euery day to more iuſtice and ſanctification.

3 3. 2.Cor.9.10. He will multiplie your ſeede, and increaſe the fruites of your iuſtice: by almes then our iuſtice is encreaſed.

4. Iohn 14.23. If any man loue me, he will keepe my word, and my father will loue him: this keeping of the commaundements doth procure the loue of God, and conſequently iuſtification. 4

5. Apocal, 22.11. He that is filthie, let him be filthie ſtill, he that is iuſt, iuſtificetur adhuc, let him be iuſtified ſtill. Ergo, by good works a man hath encreaſe of iuſtification. 5

1. Anſw. Firſt, ſanctification, ἁγιασμός, is the fruite of iuſtice or righteouſnes by faith: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.6.22. you haue your fruit vnto holines or ſanctification: this place onely ſheweth, that we muſt be the ſeruants of the iuſtice of faith, to bring forth fruits of ſanctification. Secondly, ἀνομία, iniquitie, is a generall name, both ſignifying the deprauation and vncleanneſſe of our nature, as here it is ioyned with it, as alſo it betokeneth actuall ſinne, for as Saint Iohn ſaith, ἁμαρτία is ἀνομία: ſinne is iniquitie or tranſgreſſion of the lawe, 1. Iohn 3.4. ſo that the word iniquitie or tranſgreſſion, may very well anſwere vnto iuſtice and ſanctification, the tree and the fruite. 1

2. We deny not, but that we muſt continually grow vp and encreaſe in the works of ſanctification, which the Apoſtle here affirmeth; but iuſtification is one thing, ſanctification another: we muſt firſt be iuſtified by faith in the promiſes of Chriſt; of the which promiſes alſo the Apoſtle here maketh mention; then followeth as an effect and fruite thereof, our ſanctification and holines with the workes thereof. 2

3. Firſt, by iuſtice here either the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth not the iuſtice of faith, wherewith we are iuſtified before God; but the iuſtice wrought in vs by faith, which they call inherent or ſecond iuſtice: as Matth.6.1. Doe not your iuſtice before men, to bee ſeene of them: but the inward iuſtice of faith cannot be ſeene of men: and verſe 2. by iuſtice, our Sauiour expoundeth almes. Secondly, or elſe, if we vnderſtand the true iuſtice of faith: the Apoſtle ſayth not, that iuſtice it ſelfe, but the fruites thereof are encreaſed, which we deny not. Thirdly, though the iuſtice of faith before God be not encreaſed, yet we may encreaſe in the aſſurance thereof vnto our ſelues. 3

4. Our Sauiour expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.21. I will loue him, and ſhew my ſelfe vnto him: this loue then of God in Chriſt, is not procured by good works, but onely ſhewed, manifeſted and aſſured, as S. Peter ſaith, 2. Pet.1.10. Make your calling and election ſure by good works. 4

5. Firſt, it is manifeſt by the oppoſition, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that iuſtice which is wrought in vs by faith, which they call the ſecond iuſtice: for he had ſaid before: ὁ ἀδικῶν, he that is vniuſt or iniurious, or as their owne tranſlation readeth, qui nocet, he that is hurtfull, let him be hurtfull ſtill: as this is vnderſtood not of originall, but externall iniuſtice; ſo the clauſe following, ὁ δίκαιος, he that is iuſt, let him be more iuſtified, muſt be referred to the encreaſe of iuſtice. Secondly, vnleſſe we will vnderſtand it of the aſſurance of iuſtification to our ſelues, wherein as I ſaide before we may encreaſe: but what is this to iuſtification by workes, whereof there is not one ſyllable mentioned. 5

The Proteſtants.

THat good workes, although they be notable teſtimonies of our faith, yet helpe not to iuſtifie vs before God: the Scripture thus witneſſeth.

Argum. 1. Rom.4.7. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen: our bleſſednes is not cauſed by our workes, but by the free remiſſion of our ſinnes in Chriſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt iuſtification, or the beginning of iuſtification.

Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh of that iuſtification, which bleſſedneſſe followeth, which is not the beginning, but the very perfection of our iuſtification: we ſee heauen is promiſed at the firſt remiſſion of our ſinnes, what need then any other iuſtification? As Auguſtine ſaith, Donando delicta fecit ſe debitorem coronæ, by forgiuing of our ſinnes, he hath made himſelfe a debtor of the crowne. 2. Againe, whereas man all his life long hath need of remiſſion of ſinnes, this iuſtification, whereby all our ſinnes are remitted, is not the beginning only, but the conſummation thereof, which extendeth it ſelfe thoroughout our whole life. Wherefore good workes are not giuen vs to be iuſtified thereby, but to be euident ſignes and witneſſes of our faith, to the glorie of God: as Bernard ſaith, Sicut corporis huius vitam ex corporis motu dignoſcimus, ſic fidei vitam ex operibus bonis: As we diſcerne the life of the body by the motion, ſo faith by good works: In Paſchal. ſerm. 2.

Argum. 2. Pſalm.143.2. Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant (ſaith the Prophet) for in thy 1 ſight ſhall none that liueth be iuſtified: Matth.6.12. Our Sauiour teacheth euery man, though neuer 2
ſo iuſt, to pray, forgiue vs our ſinnes, &c. Ergo, no man is iuſt by his workes.

Bellarm. 1. Dauid deſireth not to be iudged according to thoſe things, which he had of himſelfe, whereby he could not be iuſtified. 2. Or it is to be vnderſtoode of veniall ſinnes. 3. Or he ſaith, that in compariſon of God, who is perfectly iuſt, no man can be iuſtified, Bellarm. cap. 20. reſp. ad loc. 2. 1

Contra. 1. Dauid ſpeaketh of himſelfe as Gods ſeruant, and ſo in the ſtate of grace, not as vnder his naturall condition. 2. Doth he thinke that God hauing forgiuen vnto his ſeruants their 1 greater ſinnes, will enter into iudgement with them for ſmall offences, which he calleth veniall: therefore Dauid vnderſtandeth all ſinnes whatſoeuer: as in the like place is euident, Pſal.130.2. Si obſeruaueris iniquitates, quis ſuſtinebit? If thou marke iniquities, who ſhall abide it? 3. Hee ſaith not, in compariſon of God, but in the ſight of God: and what other iuſtification do we ſpeake of, but before God: before men, we denie not, but by good workes one may be iuſtified, that is, knowne or declared ſo to be. Againe, he ſpeaketh of ſuch a iuſtification, whereby Gods ſeruants ſhall be deliuered from iudgment: which is not to be made iuſt, as God is, or equall vnto him; for then euery man ſhould be iudged or condemned: for ſuch iuſtice the Angels haue not, much leſſe men.

2. Bellarm. That petition of the Lordes prayer is to be vnderſtood onely of veniall ſinnes, which are mixed with our good works, c.20.reſp.ad loc.5.

2. Contra. 1. The word is ὀφειλήματα, debts; we pray to haue all our debts forgiuen: but I truſt wee are more endangered and indebted to God, by great ſinnes then ſmall. 2. Saint Luke readeth, ἁμαρτίας, ſinnes: and S. Iohn defineth, ἁμαρτία, ſinne to be ἀνομία, tranſgreſſion: 1.Iohn 3.4. but great ſins are tranſgreſſions of the law, more then veniall: Ergo, they are not excluded. 3. If good workes are tempered with venial ſins, how can they, being imperfect, make vs iuſt, & perfect before God?

Concil. Arauſican.can.20. Multa in homine bona fiunt, quæ non facit homo, nulla vera bona facit homo, quæ Deus non præſtat, vt faciat homo: Many good things are wrought in man, without man; but man doth no good thinges, which God doth not firſt giue ſtrength to man to worke and doe them. A man then muſt firſt receiue grace of God to worke (which is giuen in his iuſtification) and then he worketh: ſo that good workes are the effect, not the cauſe of iuſtification. See the ſeale of the Martyrs to this doctrine, Part.1.of this Queſtion.

Decret.part.2.cauſ.3.qu.7.c.5. Gregor. vpon theſe words, Geneſ.4.4. The Lord had reſpect to Abel and his offring: firſt vnto Abel, then to his offring: Ex qua re patenter oſtenditur, quia non offerens à muneribus, ſed munera ab offerente placuerunt: By the which it is euident, that not the offerer by his gift, but the gift becauſe of the offerer pleaſed: Ergo, Abel was not iuſtified by his gift, but before his gift.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE IMPEDIMENTS of good workes.

FIRST, WHETHER THE WORKES OF the righteous be perfect.

The Papiſts.

70.Error. THeir opinion is, that a iuſt man in his good workes doth not ſinne ſo much as venially, Concil. Tridentin.ſeſſ.6.can.25. but that their workes are truely iuſt, without any ſpot or blemiſh of ſinne, Bellarm.cap.15.

*Argum.*1. Iob.1.22. In all this did not Iob ſinne, nor charge God fooliſhly: Pſal.7.6. Iudge me according to my righteouſneſſe: Dauid would not haue ſtood vpon his righteouſneſſe before God, if it had bin defiled with ſinne, Bellarm.cap.15.

*Anſw.*1. Iob is ſayd as yet not to ſinne, not that he was ſimply without ſinne, but in reſpect of his ſinne afterward committed with his mouth, in murmuring againſt God; he had not yet fallen into that great ſinne to charge God fooliſhly: for otherwiſe Iob confeſſeth himſelfe, that if he ſhould waſh himſelfe moſt cleane, his owne clothes ſhould defile him, Iob.9.30. that is, euen in his beſt workes, God could find ſufficient matter againſt him.

2. The Prophet Dauid doth not ſtand vpon his innocencie or righteouſneſſe before God: for elſewhere he ſaith, If thou markeſt what is done amiſſe, who ſhall be able to abide it? Pſal.133.2. and in thy ſight no man liuing ſhall be iuſtified, Pſal.143.2. But he cleereth himſelfe for his vpright and true dealing among men, as verſ.3. If I haue done this thing, &c. his enemies accuſed him wrongfully, and perſecuted him without a cauſe, Pſal.25.3.

*Argum.*2. Theſe places alſo are produced for the perfection of Workes.

1. Matth.6.22. If thy eye be ſingle, all thy bodie is light: Luke 11.36. If thy bodie be light, hauing no part darke: Ergo, in good workes there is no darkeneſſe at all.

2. 1.Corinth.3.12. If any build vpon this foundation, gold, ſiluer: Ergo, ſome workes are as precious and perfect as gold.

3. Iam.3.2. In many things we offend all: Ergo, in ſome thinges we offend not.

4. Pſalm.4.4. Tremble and ſinne not; Iſay.1.16,17. Ceaſe to do euill, learne to do well: to what end are we thus exhorted not to ſinne, if we cannot chooſe but ſinne in our good workes.

5. Act.10.35. He that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſſe, is accepted before him: but nothing can pleaſe God, but that, which is truely good.

6. In diuers places the Scripture calleth the works of the righteous, good works: as Matth.5. verſ.16. that men ſeeing your good workes,&c. Bellarm.lib.4 de iuſtificat.c.15.

1. Contra. 1. The ſimple eye, ſignifieth not perfection, but integritie and ſinglenes of heart, without guile or diſſimulation: as Auguſtine very well diſtinguiſheth betweene rectum corde & mundum corde: right in heart, and cleane in heart: rectus corde eſt, qui recto curſu, i. recta fide peruenire contendit, vbi habitat mundus corde: He is right in heart, which with a right courſe, that is a right faith, contendeth to come thither, where dwelleth the cleane in heart, de perfect.iuſtic.contr.Celeſtin. Secondly, the light hauing no darkneſſe, is Faith, which wholy lighteneth the body: as Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 13.10. He that is waſhed, is cleane euery whit: this maketh not for the perfection of workes. Thirdly, yet the light of faith, though conſidered in it ſelfe, it hath no darkeneſſe; yet in the ſight of God, and conferred with his light, is full of darkeneſſe: As Hierome well noteth vpon theſe wordes, 1.Iohn 1.5. God is light, and in him is no darkeneſſe: Oſtendit omnia aliorum lumina aliqua ſorde maculari: He ſheweth that all other lights are obſcured with ſome blemiſh.

2. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of teachers, and of ſound or corrupt doctrine, which he compareth to gold, ſiluer, or ſtubble, hay, &c. for he compareth himſelfe and other teachers to builders, verſ. 10. So then a man may teach pure and ſyncere doctrine, 2.Cor.2.17. We ſpeake of ſynceritie: though the Apoſtle denie himſelfe to be perfect in working, Philip.3.12. Not as though we were alreadie perfect. 2. This gold, ſiluer,&c. is ſo called not ſimplie, being layd to Gods touchſtone, but in reſpect of the hay, ſtubble,&c. So we denie not, but that good workes in reſpect of euill, are as gold. 3. S. Peter expoundeth faith to be that, which is more precious then gold, 1.Pet.1.7. This place therefore maketh nothing for the perfection of workes.

3. Firſt, In many things we offend all; ſaith the Apoſtle: whereupon it is well inferred, that in ſome things we offend not all, which is true: for euery man offendeth not in euery thing: but hereof it followeth not, that in ſome things no man offendeth. 2. The Apoſtle affirmeth the contrary, that he is a perfect man, that offendeth not in word: but no man is ſo perfect, and therefore in this point all offend in ſome meaſure: as Rom.3.4. Let God be true and euery man a lyar. 3. The word is πταίομεν, we fall or ſtumble: ſo that in his conſtruction, ſome thing there may be, wherein a righteous man doth not fall or ſtumble; that is, apparantly or notoriouſly tranſgreſſe, though he be not without fault.

4. Firſt, his meaning is, that we ſhould not be outragious or immoderate in our anger; as the Apoſtle expoundeth, Epheſ.4.26. Let not the Sunne goe downe vpon your wrath: not that we can be altogether free from corruption. 2. We are exhorted to ceaſe to do euill; that is, to abſtaine from the workes of the wicked: For as Hierome well ſaith, hominem poſſe eſſe aio ἀναμάρτητον, ſed non abſq; κακίᾳ vitio, I ſay, a man may be without ſinne, but not without fault, dial.2.contra.Pelag. 3. And as Auguſtine well ſaith, Præcipitur homini perfecta iuſtitia,&c. Perfect iuſtice is commanded, though it cannot be performed, non enim rectè curritur, ſi quò currendum eſt neſciatur,&c. A man cannot runne well, if he know not whither to runne: de perfect.iuſtic.contr.Celeſtin.

5. Good workes are acceptable to God, but through Chriſt: Such ſacrifices God is pleaſed with, but we muſt offer theſe ſacrifices by Chriſt, Hebr.13.15.16.

6. Our workes are called good, non ſecundum perfectam iuſtitiam, ſed hanc, quæ humanæ fragilitati competit, not after perfect iuſtice, but as is agreeable to our humane fragilitie, dialog.1.contra.Pelag.Hieron.

I cannot here omit a moſt excellent teſtimonie of Origen to this purpoſe: Etſi omnia fecerimus,&c. Although we haue done all things, that are commanded vs, yet haue we not done any good: (for God onely is good) for if the things were truely good, that we do, it would not haue beene written, that doing thoſe things, wee ſhould ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruants, Luke 17.10. Quantum ad comparationem cæterorum dicuntur bona, quæ agimus; quantum autem ad veritatem, bonum noſtrum non eſt bonum: In reſpect then of other things, the workes are called good, which we do; but in regard of the trueth, our good doing is not good: tract.8.in Matth.

The Proteſtants.

THe moſt righteous men in earth, haue not onely their infirmities, and are in danger to ſinne dayly, but euen their beſt and moſt holy works are blemiſhed with ſome infirmitie, and haue a ſmacke of ſinne.

*Argum.*1. Eccleſ.7.22. There is no iuſt man in the earth that doth good, and ſinneth not: that is, not at another time, as Bellarmine gloſeth, but euen at the ſame time, wherein he doth good, is not free from ſinne: for who can ſay, I am cleane from ſinne? Prou.20.9. the iuſt man cannot ſay, that at any time he is cleane from ſinne.

*Argum.*2. Iſay.64.6. All our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtayned clout: Ergo, the beſt workes which we do, are ſomewhat defiled with our owne corruptions.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. That the Prophet ſpeaketh of the wicked men, with whom God was angry, not of the righteous.

Contra, Yea,euen of the righteous which ſay,verſ.5.We ſhall be ſaued,and verſ.8.Thou art our father,and we are the worke of thy hands.The wicked cannot ſay thus.

Bellarm.2.The Prophet vnderſtandeth onely their ceremoniall righteouſnes, in bringing ſacrifices,obſeruing their new Moones,and ſuch like.

Contra. The Prophets words are generall: All our righteouſnes is ſtayned: all,that is,whether the righteouſnes of the morall or ceremoniall law.

Argum.3. Hierome vrgeth againſt the Pelagians,theſe texts of Scripture: Firſt,1.Pet.4.18.The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaued: Saluaretur autem facile,ſi nihil in ſe maculæ haberet: But he ſhould be eaſily ſaued,if he had no blot or blemiſh.

Secondly,Galath.5.17.Ye cannot doe the ſame things ye would: Ecce Apoſtolus omneſque credentes quod volunt implere non poſſunt: Behold,neither the Apoſtle,nor any beleeuer,can fulfill that which they would.

Thirdly,1.Ioh.1.5.God is light, and in him is no darknes: Quando dicit nullas tenebras in dei lumine reperiri,&c. When he ſaith no darknes is found in Gods light,he ſheweth that al other mens lights are ſtained.

Fourthly,Matth.9.13.I came not to call the righteous,but ſinners to repentance: Nullus enim ad perfectum iuſtus,ſed aliqua ex parte peccator: For no man is perfectly iuſt, but in ſome ſort a ſinner: Dial.2.aduer.Pelag.

Firſt,if the righteous then haue alwaies ſome ſtaine; ſecondly,if they cannot in any worke doe that they would; thirdly,if their light be alwaies mixed with darknes; fourthly,if they be not in any thing perfectly iuſt: then it followeth, that their beſt workes are blemiſhed, and imperfect.

Origen ſaith well: Vix eſt qui ita curetur,&c. As there is hardly any man ſo cured of his wound, but there remaineth ſome marke of it,ita anima, quæ peccati vulnus accepit,etiamſi curetur,habet tamen peccati cicatricem: ſo the ſoule, which receiued the wound of ſinne, though it be cured, hath ſome ſcarres of ſinne ſtill: Hom.8.in Leuitic.

Auguſtine vpon theſe words of Iob.29.14. I put on iuſtice as a robe, thus writeth: Veſtis iſta belli magis ſolet eſſe quam pacis, vbi adhuc expugnatur concupiſcentia, non vbi erit plena, ſine aliquo prorſus hoſte iuſtitia: This garment,that is a cloake or mantle,is rather for warre,than peace: for here we doe daily fight againſt concupiſcence,and there is no perfect righteouſnes without ſome enemie. But if ſo any worke of ours could be perfect without ſinne, righteouſneſſe might be without an enemie,which Auguſtine denieth.

Clementin.lib.5.tit.11.c.1.Vbi culpa non eſt,eam timere ſolent conſcientiæ timoratæ: Where no fault is,yet fearefull conſciences are afraide of it. If mens good workes were not ſubiect to fault and blame,what neede a righteous man to feare it?

Eſpenc.in 1.Timoth.5.7. Quis non quaſi in pulchro corpore, næuum aut verrucam habeat? Who hath not as in a beautifull bodie ſome ſpot or wart? In 2.Timoth.p.110. ex Chryſoſtom. Nemo poteſt ſic in omnibus malus eſſe, quin aliqua bona habeat; vel bonus, quin quædam peccata: No man can be ſo euill in all things,but he hath ſome good things; no man ſo good,but he hath ſome euill.

SECONDLY, WHETHER A RIGHTEOVS MAN may fall into any mortall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

72.Error. MOrtall ſinne(they ſay) cannot conſiſt together with the grace of God, and cannot be committed by a man continuing the ſonne of God: for he that is borne of God ſinneth not, ſayth the Apoſtle,that is,falleth into no mortall ſinne,Rhemiſt.1.Ioh.3.ſect.5.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt,vnderſtanding mortall ſinne, as they doe for euery ſinne, that deſerueth death,as adulterie,theft,murther,their expoſition is hereticall: for then Dauid ſhould not haue bin the ſonne of God,when he committed adulterie,and conſequently ſhould haue been none of the predeſtinate: but he that is once the ſonne of God,is alwaies to the end: For whom God loueth, he loueth to the end,Ioh.13.1.

Secondly,the Apoſtles meaning,when he ſaith,he that is borne of God ſinneth not, is no other but as Saint Paul ſaith,let not ſinne raigne,&c. Rom.6.12.that is,the children of God, though they fall into ſinne,continue not in it,neither delight therein,neither are wholy ouercome of it: for it is true of them,that they doe it not,but ſinne that dwelleth in them,Rom.7.20. Auguſtine ſayth, Quicunque in Dei prouidentiſſ.diſpoſitione prædeſtinati ſunt, non dico nondum renati,ſed etiam nondum nati,filij Dei ſunt & perire non poſſunt: Whoſoeuer in the moſt wiſe counſell of God are predeſtinate to ſaluation, not onely before they are regenerate and borne againe, but euen before they are borne, are the children of God, and cannot periſh: de corrept.grat.cap.9. Such therefore cannot finally periſh, and ceaſe to be the ſonnes of God, though they may fall into ſinne.

Hierome to this purpoſe vrgeth that place of the Pſalme againſt the Pelagians: Pſal. 32.5. when the Prophet had ſaid: I will confeſſe againſt my ſelfe my wickedneſſe: it followeth: Pro hoc, id eſt, impietate orabit ad te omnis ſanctus: ſi ſanctus eſt, quomodo orat pro iniquitate? ſi iniquitatem habet, qua ratione ſanctus appellatur? iuxta illum ſcilicet modum, qui in alio loco ſcribitur, ſepties cadit iuſtus & reſurgit: For this, that is, impietie, ſhall euery holy man pray, &c. If holy, how prayeth he for iniquitie? if he haue iniquitie, how is he holy? Surely as it is written in another place, The righteous falleth ſeauen times a day and riſeth againe, Dial. 2. ad Pelag. Ergo, an holy man may fall into impietie or iniquitie, though by Gods grace he may be recouered againe.

THE THIRD IMPEDIMENT OF GOOD WORKS, namely, of ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt: whether it be a ſinne irremiſſible.

The Papiſts.

ALL ſinnes are pardonable, ſo long as the committers of them be in caſe to repent: as they are, ſo long as they liue in this world: It is great blaſphemie therefore, which the Caluiniſts vtter, that Apoſtaſie, and certaine other ſinnes of the reprobate, cannot be forgiuen at all in this life: Rhemiſt. 1. Iohn. 1.5. ſect. 4. And therefore they ſay, that blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit is ſaid to be irremiſſible, becauſe it is hardly forgiuen: And they define ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt to be nothing elſe but finall impenitencie, Rhemiſt. Matth. 12.4. 73. Error.

Bellarmine better aduiſed, ſaith, that blaſphemie againſt the holy ſpirit is neither euery ſin committed after Baptiſme, as Origen thought, nor finall impenitencie, nor yet euery ſinne committed of malice, but defineth it to be a malicious hatred, and deteſtation of the knowne truth: but hee ſaith as the reſt, that it is not a ſinne ſimply irremiſſible, Bellarm. lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 15.

Argum. Ioh. 20.23. Whoſe ſinnes ſoeuer you remit, they are remitted, &c. Ergo, all ſinnes are remiſſible: Bellar. lib. 2. de pœnit. c. 15.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtles had not commiſſion to binde or looſe whom they would, but to binde all impenitent perſons, and to looſe all penitent ſinners; as Matth. 18.18. this authoritie of binding and looſing is giuen with a limitation, that if any man would not heare the Church, he ſhould be as a heathen; him they muſt binde, looſe him they cannot, whom they ſee impenitent. And therefore ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, becauſe it is alwaies ioyned with impenitencie, cannot be looſed.

2. Secondly, Bellarmine ſpendeth many words in vaine, to proue nullum eſſe peccatum, &c. that there is no ſinne, which is not taken away by true repentance: none of vs euer denied it: yea we doubt not to ſay with Ambroſe: Arbitror, quod etiam Iudas potuiſſet tanta dei miſeratione non excludi à venia, ſi pœnitentiam non apud Iudæos, ſed apud Chriſtum egiſſet: I think, that Iudas might haue bin not excluded from forgiuenes by the great mercie of God, if hee had done repentance not before the Iewes, but with Chriſt, lib. 2. de pœnitent. c. 4. He ſhould then haue prooued, that repentance may be ioyned with ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt: but ſeeing all, which commit that ſinne are hardened in their hearts, and ſo finally impenitent, they cannot be forgiuen: for they which repent not ſhall periſh, Luk. 13.3.

The Proteſtants.

THis queſtion of ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, though it come here ſomewhat out of place, (for it belongeth properly to the 18. Controuerſie, where the other queſtions are handled concerning ſinne) yet I thought it better to touch a matter ſo waightie briefly by the way, then altogether to let it be omitted: We haue therefore to deale both with the Rhemiſts, who doe not rightly deſcribe this ſinne, and then with Bellarmine, that together with the reſt affirmeth this ſin to be remiſſible, though not ordinarily and commonly.

Firſt then, againſt the Rhemiſts we ſhew, that ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt is not finall impenitencie: euery one indeede that ſo ſinneth, is finally impenitent, becauſe he ſhall neuer haue the grace to repent: But our Sauiour Chriſt meaneth ſome ſpeciall ſinne, in calling it blaſphemie againſt the holie Ghoſt: for many a wicked man may dye impenitently, and yet not blaſpheme.

And againe, if finall impenitencie were this ſin, then could it not be committed before death: But ſeeing our Sauiour chargeth the Phariſies then liuing, with blaſphemie, and S. Iohn ſpeaking of the ſinnes of the liuing, which are ſeene, ſaith, there is a ſin vnto death: If thou ſee thy brother ſinne, &c. 1. Ioh. 5.16. But if a man could not commit this ſin before he die, he could not be ſeene to ſinne.

Auguſtine better defineth this ſinne: Cum quis aduerſus gratiam ipſam, qua reconciliatus eſt Deo, inuidentiæ facibus agitatur: When a man maliciouſly doth oppugne that grace whereby hee was reconciled to God: lib. 1. de ſerm. in mont. 41. But moſt perfectly is this ſinne deſcribed, Hebr. 10.

verſ.29. where there are ſet downe three circumſtances that make this ſinne: firſt, the perſon; he muſt be ſuch an one as hath been lightened with grace, and been in outward appearance ſanctified: therefore Iewes, Turkes, or Infidels, cannot commit this ſinne; becauſe their mindes were neuer illuminate by the truth. Secondly, his affection muſt be conſidered, which is moſt deadly and hatefull in the higheſt degree: blaſpheming the ſpirit, and deſpiting the ſame, crucifying and perſecuting Chriſt againe as it were, Heb.6.6. Wherfore, they which offend of ignorance, as Saint Paul before his conuerſion, or infirmitie and weaknes, as Saint Peter did when he denied Chriſt; or which fall not into horrible blaſphemies, are not guiltie of this ſinne. Thirdly, it is the truth which they hate and deteſt, which ſometime they loued, and were thereby ſanctified, not denying ſome part thereof, as the heretikes doe, but making a general Apoſtaſie from the whole profeſſion of the faith, they count the blood of the teſtament as an vnholie thing. Blaſphemie then againſt the holie Ghoſt, is an horrible hatred and deteſtation of the truth, and grace of Gods ſpirit, whereby he that now blaſphemeth, was before illuminate.

Secondly, againſt Bellarmine we ſhew, that this ſinne not onely eaſily ſhall not be forgiuen, but
1 not at all, as our Sauiour ſaith, Neither in this world, nor the world to come, Matth.12.verſ.32. And it
2 is impoſſible for them to be renewed by repentance, Heb.6.verſ.6. From hence wee gather theſe arguments: No ſinne without repentance can be forgiuen, Luk.13.3. Vnleſſe ye repent, ye ſhall periſh: But ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt is vtterly voide of repentance, neither can he that committeth it be renewed by repentance, it is impoſſible ſaith the Apoſtle: Ergo.

That ſinne, for the which there remaineth no ſacrifice, is not remiſſible: for our ſinnes cannot otherwiſe be forgiuen vs, than by the ſacrifice of Chriſts death: But ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, 3 which is a willing or wilfull backſliding after the knowledge of the trueth, cannot be done away by any ſacrifice, Heb.10.26. Ergo.

4 There is no hope of forgiuenes for that ſinne, for the which it is not lawfull to pray: for ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, which is a ſinne vnto death, it is not lawfull to pray, 1.Ioh.5.16. Ergo. Wherefore it is a great blaſphemie in the Papiſts ſo contrarie to the Scripture to affirme, that blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit may be forgiuen.

1 1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt is ſaid not to be remitted in this world nor the next: quia ordinariè & vt plurimùm, becauſe ordinarily, and for the moſt part it is not forgiuen: lib.2.de pœnit.c.16.reſp.ad arg.1.

1. Contra. Firſt, S. Marke ſaith: Non habet remiſſionem in æternum: He that blaſphemeth the holy Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgiuen for euer, Mark.3.29. If neuer, how then dare he contradict the Scripture? Yes, he ſhall be forgiuen, though hardly: if he be forgiuen at all, then the Euangeliſt ſayth not true, he ſhall neuer, &c. Secondly, as other blaſphemies are forgiuen, ſo this blaſphemie is not forgiuen: but other blaſphemies and ſinnes are alſo hardly forgiuen; 1.Pet.4.18. The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaued: Ergo, this ſinne is not forgiuen, no not hardly. Thirdly, thus Cyprian expoundeth, Non poſſe in Eccleſia remitti ei, qui in deum deliquerit, &c. He cannot be forgiuen in the Church, which ſinneth againſt God: and then hee citeth this place, Matth.12.32. lib.3. ad Quirinum cap.28.

Origen: Quibus (qui, i. in ſpiritum ſanctum, blaſphemant) neque in præſenti, neque in futuro ſeculo remittetur: Whom (that ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt) it ſhall not be forgiuen, neither in this world nor the next.

Cauſ.33.diſt.1.c.59.gloſſ. Blaſphemiam in ſpiritum dominus neque in hoc ſeculo, nec futuro remittendam aſſeruit: Blaſphemie againſt the holie Ghoſt the Lord ſaid ſhall neither in this world be forgiuen, nor in the world to come, &c. that is neuer, or not at all.

2 2. Bellarmine to the ſecond and third place maketh the ſame anſwer, that he that is once lightened, that is baptized, if hee fall away, cannot be renewed againe by the baptiſme of repentance: and for ſuch there is no more ſacrifice, that is, no ſecond baptiſme to be expected: Bellar.ibid.

2. Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle, Hebr.6.1.2. maketh repentance from dead workes, and the doctrine of Baptiſmes two diuers things: therefore by repentance Baptiſme is not inſinuated. Secondly, the meaning of the Apoſtle is, that ſuch an one cannot at all repent, and ſo cannot be renewed by repentance: the reaſon is taken from the greatnes of ſinne, becauſe he doth crucifie againe the ſonne of God, and make a mocke of him, verſ.6. and therefore is neere to curſing, verſ.8. Thirdly, Ambroſe ſaith in Luc.22. Caſſa erat proditoris pœnitentia, qui peccauit in ſpiritum ſanctum: The traytors repentance was in vaine (meaning Iudas) which ſinned againſt the holie Ghoſt, &c. ſignifying, that ſuch an one cannot haue true repentance. Likewiſe Hierome: Nihil ita repugnat deo quam cor impœnitens; ſolum crimen eſt, quod veniam conſequi non poteſt; ſolum deſperationis crimen, quod mederi non poteſt: Nothing doth ſo much reſiſt againſt God, as an impenitent heart; it is the only crime, which cannot obtaine pardon; only the crime of deſperation cannot be healed: obiurgat. Sabinian. The Apoſtles meaning then is, that they which ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt, hauing no grace to repent, cannot at all be forgiuen.

3. Firſt, in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, there remaineth no ſacrifice for this, nor any meanes at all of forgiuenes: but a fearefull looking for of iudgement and violent fire, Hebr.10.27. ſo that the Apoſtle excludeth all meanes and hope of comfort and remiſſion. Secondly, verſ.28. he dyeth without mercie that deſpiſeth Moſes law: but he that blaſphemeth the ſpirit, is worthie of greater puniſhment, verſ.29. therefore he alſo ſine vlla miſeratione moritur, dieth without mercie; and where there is no mercie, there is no forgiuenes. Thirdly, *Peter Lombard.lib.2.diſt.*43.b. rehearſeth thus out of Auguſtine: Hoc ſolum peccatum veniam mereri non poteſt: This ſinne onely againſt the holie Ghoſt can finde no mercie. And out of Hierome: Taliter peccans dignè pœnitere non poteſt: He that thus ſinneth, cannot worthily repent, &c. Ergo, there is no hope at all of mercie for ſuch, nor no ſacrifice for remiſſion of their ſinne.

4. Bellar. The Apoſtle doth not forbid vs to pray for ſuch, but onely ſheweth, that wee are not ſo eaſily heard, nor cannot pray with ſuch aſſurance: otherwiſe he had ſaid before, 1.Iohn.5.15. we know that he heareth whatſoeuer we aske: Bellar.ibid.reſp.ad 4.loc.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.14. This is the aſſurance, that we haue in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth vs: but to pray for a ſinne irremiſſible, is to pray againſt his will. Secondly, the Apoſtle hauing before giuen a direct precept to pray for a brother, ſinning not vnto death, afterward giueth a flat exception, of this ſinne vnto death, I ſay not that thou ſhouldeſt pray for it. Now that which is excepted out of the precept, is it not denied, or forbidden? as Ioh.13.verſ.18. our Sauiour ſaith, I ſpeake not of you all: he doth manifeſtly except and exclude Iudas: ſo here to pray for a ſinne vnto death, being excepted from the generall precept before, is euidently forbidden and denied. Thirdly, the end of our prayer for ſinners, is, that God would giue them life, that ſinne not vnto death: but life cannot be granted for a ſinne vnto death, (for how is it a ſinne vnto death if it may finde life?) Ergo, there is no prayer for ſuch, where the end of the prayer cannot be hoped for. Fourthly, thus Ambroſe expoundeth: Non poteſt ibi exoratio eſſe veniæ, vbi ſacrilegij eſt plenitudo: There can bee no entreatie for pardon, where there is a fulnes of ſacrilege. Hierome, as he is cited by Pet.Lombard. Rectè dicit Ioannes, non pro eo oret quis, &c. Saint Iohn ſaith well, let not any man pray for him: *lib.*3.*diſt.*43.b. He maketh this exception of the Apoſtle a flat prohibition.

So I conclude this place, with that ſentence of Hierome: Genus eſt lepræ, quod omnino mundari non poteſt, &c. There is a kinde of leproſie, which cannot be cleanſed at all, and therefore ſuch a man was bid to goe out of the campe. This is that ſinne, which is committed againſt the holie Ghoſt, that is of blaſphemie, which, as our Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, ſhall not be forgiuen, neither in this nor the next world: de diuerſ.generib.lepr.

We haue alſo the teſtimonie of holie Martyrs: Maſter *Tyndall; Sinne againſt the holie Ghoſt is, when men of a ſet malice doe perſecute the truth, and of a grounded hate againſt the law of God, by reaſon of a full conſent they haue to ſinne, and to walke in their old wayes of ignorance, whereunto being now paſt all repentance, they haue vtterly yeelded themſelues, to follow with full luſt, without bridle or ſnaffle, &c. Fox.*pag.1080.col.2.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DIGNITIE and worthines of good works, that is, of merits.

THE FIRST PART, WHICH BE THE good works of Chriſtians.

The Papiſts.

THey doe not onely call them good workes, which are commanded of God, but which are alſo inioyned by the Church and the gouernours thereof; and that euen by ſuch workes men are iuſtified, *Concil.Trident.ſeſſ.6.cap.*10.*Tapper.ex Tileman.loc.*11.*err.*1. 74.Error.

The Proteſtants.

SAint Paul defineth good workes otherwiſe, namely, thoſe which God hath ordained, that we ſhould walke in them, Epheſ.2.10. They are not the precepts of men, but the commaundements of God in his word, the doing whereof hath the name of good workes. As for the traditions and iniunctions of men not warranted by Gods worde, they are ſo farre from being commended or commanded, that our Sauiour calleth the doing thereof, but a Worſhipping of God in vaine, Mark.7.7.

Auguſtine vpon thoſe wordes, in the 103.Pſalme, verſ.18. The louing kindnes of the Lorde is vpon thoſe that keepe his couenant, and thinke vpon his commaundements to doe them, ſaith thus: Vide vt præcepta teneas: ſed quomodo teneas? non memoria, ſed vita: Memoria retinentibus mandata eius, non vt reddant ea, ſed vt faciant ea: See that thou keepe Gods commaundements: but how? not in thy memorie, but in thy life; not to ſay them by rote, but to doe them: Ergo, they are Gods commaundements, which we muſt thinke of to doe them; for vnto ſuch the bleſſing is promiſed, not to the obſeruers of mens precepts or traditions.

Origen vpon thoſe words, Cantic. 1. 14. Specioſa es proxima: Thou art faire my loue, or neighbour: Incipis eſſe ſpecioſa, quod proxima mihi es: Thou beginneſt to be faire, becauſe thou art neere vnto me: Hom. 2. in Cantic. The neerenes then to God maketh vs beautifull and faire in good workes.

Eſpenc. out of Theodoret, thus expoundeth that 1. Timoth. 6. 18. ἀγαθοεργεῖν, to doe well, that is, Credere Deo, & quæcunque fidei conueniunt facere: To beleeue in God, and to doe all things agreeable to faith: in 1. Tim. p. 171. Good workes then are thoſe which God hath appointed, and are according to faith.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THERE be any good workes without faith.

The Papiſts.

75. Error. THough they dare not altogether iuſtifie the workes of the Heathen and Infidels, yet they doe excuſe them, and doe blame vs for ſaying, that Infidels doe ſinne in honouring their parents, in fighting for their countrey, and ſuch like. They therefore doe diſcharge the Heathen of ſinne, in theſe workes of theirs, Rhemiſt. Rom. 14. ſect. 4.

The Proteſtants.

THeſe workes are not ſinne in themſelues, but in Infidels they are, becauſe they proceede of Infidelitie.

Arg. It is the rule of the Goſpell, that a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit, Mat. 7. 18. But all Infidels are corrupt trees, being without faith: Ergo, they can bring forth no good fruit.

The Pelagians thought to haue poſed Auguſtine with the ſame queſtion, which the Papiſts propound to vs. Was it ſinne in the Heathen (ſay they) to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth, Non per ſeipſum factum peccatum eſt, ſed de tali opere non in domino gloriari, ſolus impius negat eſſe peccatum: The fact of it ſelfe is not ſinne, but in doing any ſuch thing not to reioyce in the Lord, none but wicked men will denie it to be ſinne. I may therefore ſay vnto theſe patrones of Ethnicke vertues, as Bernard in the like caſe: Dum multum ſudat quomodo Platonem faciat Chriſtianum ſe probat Ethnicum: While he laboureth to make Plato a Chriſtian, hee ſheweth himſelfe an Ethnicke: Epiſtol. 191.

Hierom. dialog. 3. aduerſ. Pelagian. vpon theſe words, Ioh. 15. 5. I am the vine, ye the braunches, &c. Rami illicò contabeſcunt: As the boughs doe preſently wither, if they be pulled from the ſtock: ſo all mans ſtrength doth decay, if he be forſaken of God, &c. Like as then the braunch without the vine bringeth forth no fruite: ſo neither can a man without faith doe any thing, that is good.

Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Gregor. Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum eſt boni operis ædificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there can be no good worke builded vpon.

Peter. Lombard. lib. 2. diſt. 41. a. Quæ ſine fide fiunt, bona non ſunt: The things done without faith, are not good.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE VSE and office of good workes.

THey make a threefolde vſe of good workes, as they call them: firſt, by them the merits of Chriſt, they ſay, are applyed vnto vs. Secondly, they doe purge our ſinnes. Thirdly, they are meritorious.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, WHETHER bona opera be applicatoria.

The Papiſts.

76. Error. BY any worke proceeding of faith and charitie, the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied to vs, Soto, ex Tileman. loc. 11. err. 21. Men by their ſuffrings and other workes, may applie to themſelues the generall medicine of Chriſts merits and ſatisfaction, Rhemiſt. annot. 1. Coloſſ. ſect. 4.

The Proteſtants.

IT is the propertie of faith onely, to apprehend, and applie vnto vs the benefits of Chriſts paſſion, and all other his merits.

Argum. Rom. 10. 7, 8. We need not (ſaith the Apoſtle) to aſcend to heauen, or deſcend into the deepe, to bring Chriſt from thence: it is the word of faith, which we preach. By ſaith then we do ſcale the heauens, and behold Chriſt: it is not the doctrine of workes, but the word of faith that performeth this.

And therefore the Apoſtle defineth faith, to be the ground of things hoped for, and the euidence of things not ſeene,Hebr.11.1.This definition cannot agree vnto works,or vnto any other thing but faith : for then it were no good definition,nor yet deſcription : *Ergo,*faith only is the euidence of things inuiſible : and therefore onely applieth Chriſts precious merits, which are things beleeued and not ſeene.

Auguſtine thus alſo deſcribeth faith : Rerum abſentium præſens eſt fides ; rerum,quæ foris ſunt, intus eſt fides ; rerum,quæ non videntur,videtur fides: Faith maketh things abſent,preſent; things without vs,to be within vs; things not ſeene,to be ſeene: *Ergo,*faith only hath this applicatorie power, to applie Chriſts merits not preſent,nor ſeene,and to make them as our owne.

Ambroſ.in 2.*Cor.*3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens, vt quia quæ non vidit, credit,de conditione erui mereatur : The law of the ſpirit giueth libertie,requiring onely faith, which becauſe it beleeueth thoſe things it ſeeth not,is thought worthie to be deliuered. This then is that which in faith is auaileable,becauſe it beleeueth,that which is not ſeene, which is only proper and peculiar to faith, and not to workes.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, VVHEther bona opera be expiatoria.

The Papiſts.

THe workes of charitie and mercie,as almes deedes,and ſuch like,haue force to extinguiſh our ſins,as Saint Peter ſaith,Charitie doth couer a multitude of ſins,*Epiſt.*1.4.8.Rhemiſt.ibid. 78.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. THe Apoſtle ſpeaketh of mutuall charitie amongſt our ſelues, whoſe propertie is to couer a multitude of our neighbours offences, as Salomon ſayth, Prou. 10.11. Hatred ſtirreth vp contentions, but loue couereth treſpaſſes : what is this to the extinguiſhing of our ſinnes before God ?

Arg. It is an abominable and blaſphemous opinion,that any man by his works ſhould be able to redeeme his ſinnes: for the Scripture ſaith,that by *himſelfe Chriſt hath purged our ſinnes,*Heb.1.3. If he haue wholy done it by himſelfe,he hath not giuen this power and force of redemption to any other meanes.

If they vnderſtand by the force of extinguiſhing ſinnes, the meanes onely of applying Chriſts merits : in that ſenſe,faith only is ſaid to ſaue vs,Epheſ.2.8.

Auguſtine : Si merita noſtra aliquid facerent, ad damnationem noſtram veniret, ſed non venit ad inſpectionem meritorum, ſed remiſſionem peccatorum : If our merits were auaileable to any purpoſe, God ſhould come to our condemnation : but he commeth not to behold our merits, but to forgiue vs our ſinnes : *Ergo,*by our merits our ſinnes are not forgiuen.

Ambroſe : Peccatum aut donatur, aut deletur, aut tegitur ; donatur per gratiam, deletur per ſanguinem crucis,tegitur per charitatem : Sinne is either pardoned,extinguiſhed, or blotted, couered; it is pardoned by grace,blotted or waſhed away by Chriſts blood, couered by charitie : *apolog. Dauid. cap.*13.So then though before men by loue and charitie offences may be couered, yet before God by grace onely and faith in Chriſts blood, are they blotted and extinguiſhed. And that is Ambroſe meaning,that before God ſinnes are not couered by charitie,but by faith,it is euident by his owne words : Remittere,tegere,non imputare,vna ratio,vnus eſt ſenſus : To remit,to couer,not to impute,haue all one ſenſe : in 4.ad Roman. But hee had ſaid before, that ſinnes are pardoned and ſo remitted by grace : *Ergo,*by grace and faith they are alſo couered.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, VVHETHER our workes be meritorious.

The Papiſts.

GOd giueth as well euerlaſting life and glorie to men, for and according to their workes, as hee giueth damnation for the contrarie works, *Rhemiſt. Roman.*2.*ſect.*2. And men by their workes, proceeding of grace, doe deſerue or merit heauen,and the more or leſſe ioy in the ſame, 1.*Cor.*3.*ſect.*2. 79.Error.

*Argum.*1. *He will render to euery man according to his workes,*Rom.2.6. Euery man ſhall receiue his reward according to his labour. Here we ſee the kingdome of heauen is a retribution, hyre, wages for workes : Ergo, our workes are the value,price, worth and merite of the ſame : Rhemiſt.

Anſw. Our labours and workes are a meaſure of the reward, according the which God doth mete out and render vnto his Saints of the heauenly rewarde : but they are no meritorious or deſeruing cauſe thereof. The reward is of mercie,not of deſert ; of grace,not of merite: for life eternall is the meere *gift of God through Ieſus Chriſt,*Rom.6.23. But the wages of ſinne is death. Where the Apoſtle doth ſet a manifeſt difference betweene the reward of the righteous, and the iuſt recompence of the wicked: for life eternall is the free and gracious gift of God, not deſerued: but eternall damnation is the due debt of ſinne. Wherefore the Papiſts doe bid open battell to the Apoſtle, in ſaying, that the one is as due by debt as the other.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul ſaith, 2. Timoth. 4. 8. That there is a crowne of righteouſneſſe layd vp for him, which God the iuſt Iudge ſhall giue him: Ergo, the crowne is giuen not of mercie, but of iuſtice, as a wages and iuſt recompence to the Apoſtle.

Anſw. God rendreth heauen as a iuſt Iudge, not to the merite and worthines of our workes, but to the merite and worthineſſe of Chriſt, and as due to vs by his promiſe made to vs in Chriſt. The reward therefore of heauen is of the mercie of God, who hath freely promiſed it vs in Chriſt. It is of his iuſtice, in that he is faithfull and iuſt in keeping of his promiſe made to vs: So that it is a debt, not in reſpect of any deſert in vs, but in regard of his owne promiſe; As Auguſtine ſaith: Debitorem ipſe ſe Dominus fecit, non accipiendo, ſed promittendo: Non ei dicitur redde, quod accepiſti, ſed redde quod promiſiſti: God hath made himſelfe a debtor, by promiſing, not by receiuing any thing at our hands: We ſay not to him, render that thou haſt receiued, but giue that which thou haſt promiſed: *In Pſalm.*83.

Alexander Seton Preacher and Martyr thus witneſſeth: If you aske if good workes ſhall be rewarded, I ſay yea, and with no leſſe then eternall glorie: but for no merite they deſerue, but onely becauſe God hath promiſed, not for the merite of the worke, but for his promiſe ſake, and he will not breake his promiſe: *Fox.*pag. 1206.

*Argum.*3. Further, theſe places are produced for the proofe of merites.

1. Life euerlaſting is in Scripture called merces, a recompence or reward, therefore good workes doe properlie merite, Matth. 5. 12. Reioyce and be glad, great is your rewarde in heauen. Matth. 20. 8. Call the labourers, and giue them their hire.

2. Good workes are rendred as the cauſe, why eternall life is rendred, Matth. 25. 34. Come ye bleſſed inherite the kingdome. for when I was hungred ye gaue me meate, &c. verſ. 21. Thou haſt been faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler ouer much, enter into thy Maſters ioy.

3. Life eternall is promiſed to good workes: Matth. 19. 17. If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commaundements. 1. Tim. 4. 8. Godlines hath the promiſe both of this life and the next: ſo then, as he that promiſeth, is endebted by promiſe; ſo he that worketh, and fulfilleth the condition meriteth.

4. The Scripture counteth men worthie: Luk. 10. 7. The labourer is worthie of his wages. 2. Theſ. 1. 5. That ye may be counted worthie of the kingdome of God, for which ye ſuffer: Apocal. 3. 4. They ſhall walke with me in white, for they are worthie.

5. God is no accepter of perſons: Rom. 2. 11. There is no reſpect of perſons with God. Galat. 2. 6. Therefore he giueth vnto euery man according to their workes: Bellarm.lib.5.de iuſtif.c.3.

1. Anſw. Firſt Auguſtine ſaith, Quicquid promiſit indignis promiſit, vt non quaſi operibus merces promitteretur, ſed gratia gratis daretur: Whatſoeuer God hath promiſed, he hath promiſed to theſe that are vnworthie, that it ſhould not be promiſed as a reward vnto works, but as grace freely giuen: *Præfat. in Pſalm.*109. The argument then followeth not, there is a reward, Ergo merite: For the reward may be counted of fauour as well as of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Secondly, S. Ambroſe inferreth the cleane contrarie concluſion: Cum hi qui in multo labore ſudarunt, &c. Seeing they, which were in all the labour receiued no more then the laſt, Intelligant donum ſe gratiæ non operum accepiſſe mercedem: Let them know that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of their workes, Ambr. lib.1. de vocat. gent. c.3.

2. Good workes are alleaged not as the cauſe or reaſon of life, but as the way and order thereunto: S. Ambroſe ſheweth the reaſon, Habet vitam æternam fides, quia fundamentum eſt bonum, habent & bona facta, quibus vir iuſtus & dictis & rebus probatur: Faith hath life eternall, as a good foundation, and good workes alſo, whereby a righteous man is proued in word and deede: Officior. lib.2.c.2. Good workes then are recompenſed as teſtimonies and proofes of our faith.

3. Promiſe and merite or worke cannot ſtand together, but promiſe is the obiect of faith: Rom. 4. 16. It is by faith, that the promiſe might be ſure, and that which is of faith is not of debt: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom. 4. 3. To him that worketh, the wages is counted of debt; to him that worketh not, faith is counted, &c. And Ambroſe, Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito: Let vs hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, *lib.2. de pœniten.c.*8. Wherefore it followeth not, God promiſeth life with a condition, Ergo, by the condition performed wee doe merite: ſeeing that the rewarde dependeth vpon the promiſe which is apprehended by faith, and ſo is not of merite.

4. Firſt, he that laboureth in the Goſpell, is worthie of his wages before men, but it followeth not that is ſo before God. Secondly, the text is: That ye may be counted worthie: and verſ. 11. That God may make you worthie: we are not then verilie worthie, but as it pleaſeth God in Chriſt to account vs worthie. Ambroſe ſaith well, Quantum ad cæterorum comparationem pertinet, hi digni ſunt, quantum ad rem ipſam omnes indigni ſunt: In reſpect of others they are worthie, but indeede in reſpect of the thing, they are all vnworthie, in 2. *Timoth.c.*1.

5. God is no accepter of perſons, to admit vnto life thoſe that haue not laboured in his name, and to refuſe others with their righteous workes: but he giueth vnto euery one according to their workes, but not for, or becauſe of their workes: their workes as liuely teſtimonies of their faith, are a rule and meaſure of their reward, but no cauſe: men ſhall be both knowne here and iudged there by their workes, as the tree is diſcerned and iudged by the fruite. Auguſtine very well vpon theſe words, Matth.7.2. With what meaſure yee mete, ſhall be meaſured to you againe,&c. Eſt apud te menſura veniæ dandæ, inuenies apud me menſuram veniæ accipiendæ,&c. There is with thee a meaſure in giuing leaue or pardon, thou ſhalt finde with mee a meaſure of receiuing pardon: in Pſalm. 140. Our workes then are a meaſure, whereby it ſhall be meaſured againe to vs, but no merite or deſert. Gregorie ſaith, Reddendum eſt vnicuique ſecundum opera, ſed aliud eſt ſecundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It ſhall be rendred to euery man according to his works: but it is one thing according, another to render for works, *in Pſalm.*142.

*Argum.*4. Now whereas diuers Fathers are alleaged for merites, as Ignatius epiſtol. ad Roman. Vt Deum poſſim promereri: That I may merite God: *Hilar.c.*8. in Matth. De noſtro eſt beata illa æternitas promerenda: We muſt merite heauen of our owne. *Ambroſ.lib.*1. *de offic.c.*15. Euidens eſt meritorum aut præmia aut ſupplicia manere poſt mortem: It is euident, that either reward or puniſhment of our merites do remaine after death: *Bellarm.c.*4.

Our generall anſwere to theſe and the like places of the Fathers is this: Firſt, that this word promereri, to merite, ſometime ſignifieth nothing elſe but to pleaſe or be acceptable: as Heb.13.16. with ſuch ſacrifice, promeretur Deus, God is merited, as the vulgar latine readeth; the worde is εὐαρεστεῖται, is pleaſed: and ſo the vulgar text tranſlateth, Hebr.11.6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: and in this ſenſe Ignatius is to be vnderſtoode.

Secondly, promereri ſignifieth as much as ſatagere, for a man to endeuour or put forward himſelfe, or to doe ſeruice; as the Latine phraſe is vſed, mereri ſub aliquo, to ſerue vnder one: ſo Hilarie is to be interpreted: for otherwiſe, heauen is not merited, de noſtro, of our owne. And as it followeth, præſtandum aliquid eſt ex proprio, ſomewhat muſt be performed of our owne: but he that meriteth, muſt not doe ſomewhat, but the whole: it ſignifieth therefore ſeruice rather and diligent endeuour, than deſert properly.

Thirdly, ſometime meritum, merit is taken abſolutely, for opus, worke: as Auguſtine ſo taketh it, *Tract.*3. in Ioann. Deus coronat dona ſua, non merita tua: (.i.opera) God crowneth his gifts, not thy merits, that is workes: for if they be properly merits, they ſhould be crowned. So then, merit noteth the ſubſtance of the worke, and not the qualitie: and thus the word alſo may haue a tolerable ſenſe.

Fourthly, the fathers vſe the word merit, properly referring it vnto ẏ efficacie of Chriſts death, and the merit thereof: *Auguſtine ſerm.*13. *ſerm.*14. Per meritum eius cui nihil facere potes, reſurget,&c. The bodie ſhall riſe by his merit, to whom thou canſt doe nothing &c. that is, by the merit of Chriſt. In this ſenſe Bernard: Meum meritum miſeratio domini, non ſum inops meriti, quamdiu ille miſerationum non eſt: My merit is Gods mercie, I am not without merit as long as he is not without mercie: *Cantic.*61. Gods mercie in Chriſt, or Chriſts merit by Gods mercie is our merit.

Fiftly, mereo, ſignifieth abſolutely to get, to compaſſe, obtaine: as Plaut. Meruit illa virum dote: She got or obtained an husband, with her dowrie. Thus *Auguſt.ſerm. de tempor.*252. Nullis pracedentib. meritis per gratiam dei meruimus fieri templum dei: Without any merits going before by grace we merited (that is obtained) to be the temple of God,&c. otherwiſe the grace of God properly is not merited. And how can we merit without merit, as here it is ſaid? And Ambroſe ſaith: Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem, ſolam fidem poſcens,&c. The law of the ſpirit giueth libertie requiring only faith, that becauſe it beleeueth, that which it ſeeth not, de conditione erui mereatur, it may deſerue to be deliuered: that is obtaine, in 2. *Cor.*3. for otherwiſe faith meriteth not: As Ambroſe againe, Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito,&c. Let vs hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, *lib.*2. *de pœniten.c.*8. But if it were by the merit of faith, it ſhould be of debt. And Auguſtine: Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed pro gratia, fides enim gratia: Thou ſhalt not receiue life eternall for merit, but for grace, for faith is grace: *Tract.*3. in Ioann. Ergo, there is no merit of faith properly. If the fathers be vnderſtood in any of theſe ſenſes, when they ſpeake of merit, though the phraſe be not proper, it is tolerable: otherwiſe if they be conſtrued to aſcribe the kingdome of heauen any way to mans merit, they ſpeake contrarie to themſelues, as after in our arguments followeth to be ſhewed.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe a neceſſarie vſe of good workes: As firſt, they doe ſerue as notable meanes and inſtruments to ſet forth Gods glorie by, Matth.5.16. Secondly, by them alſo our faith is ſhewed, publiſhed and made known, for the good example of others, Iam.2.18. Thirdly, our own conſcience alſo is thereby quieted, and our election daily made more ſure vnto vs: we doe grow and increaſe in the certaintie and aſſurance thereof, 2.Pet.1.10. But we acknowledge no power, force, or efficacie at all in them to deſerue and merite any thing at the hands of God, neither doth the Scripture in any place ſo ſpeake.

In Pſal.18. expoſit.2.

In Matth. ſerm.8.

*Argum.*1. If man conſider his deſerts, he ſhall finde, that he is worthie of nothing but death: To vs (ſaith the Prophet) belongeth ſhame, Dan.9.9. There is nothing elſe by debt due vnto vs: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Nihil præceſſerat in meritis noſtris, niſi vnde damnari deberemus: Nothing goeth before in our merites, but that whereby we ought iuſtly to be condemned. And againe, Omne peccatum noſtræ eſt negligentiæ, omnis virtus & ſanctitas eſt Dei indulgentiæ: All euill and ſinne in vs, is of our owne negligence; all goodnes and holines, of the free mercie of God. Si miſericordiæ Domini multæ, multus ego in meritis: If the mercies of God be many, my merites are many. Gods mercies are our merites: our due debts are nothing elſe but puniſhment for ſinne.

Homil.8.

*Argum.*2. Betweene the deſert or merite, and the wages or recompence, there ought alwaies to be ſome proportion: a like ſtipend for a like labour: But heauen without compariſon exceedeth the worthines of our workes: Ergo, it is not giuen as a debt, but as a free gift: therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that the afflictions that are preſent, are not worthie of the glorie that ſhall be reuealed, Rom. 8.18. Auguſtine ſaith, Quàm paruo conſtat regnum cœlorum? duobus minutis emit vidua regnum cœlorum: How little doth the kingdome of God ſtand vs in? a certaine widow for two mites bought the Kingdome of heauen. Shall we thinke that the widowes caſting in of two mites deſerued the kingdome of heauen? Farre be it from vs ſo to thinke: it is then a gift of fauour and mercie, not wages of debt.

*Argum.*3. Theſe places of Scripture do plentifully teſtifie againſt merits, aſcribing all to the mercie of God.

1. Pſal.103.4. Which crowneth thee in mercie and compaſſion.

2. Dan.c.9.18. We do not preſent our ſupplications before thee, for our owne righteouſneſſe, but for thy great mercies.

3. Luke 17.10. When yee haue done all, ſay ye are vnprofitable ſeruants.

4. Rom.6.23. The wages of ſinne is death, but life eternall is the grace of God through Chriſt: Life eternall then is not ſo the wages of good workes; as eternall death is of euill.

5. Rom.8.verſ.18. The afflictions of this preſent time, are not worthie of the glory, which ſhall be reuealed.

6. Rom.3.27. Your reioycing is excluded by the law of faith: Ergo, workes merite not, for then we might reioyce in them.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the Crowne is ſaid to be of mercie; becauſe the merites, which deſerue the crowne, are giuen vnto vs of mercy. Secondly, or Gods mercie is ſeene in pardoning our veniall ſinnes, while he giueth the crowne to our good workes. *Bellarm.c.5.reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

1. Contra. Firſt, this is like the anſwere of the Pelagians, that graunted, that free will was of grace, becauſe it was Gods grace and gift in giuing freewill to man at the firſt; as here he ſaith it is Gods mercie in giuing vs merites: But as Auguſtine anſwereth to that cauill, epiſt.95. Gratia iſto ſenſu ſumpta non legitur apud Apoſtolos: Wee reade not of grace taken in that ſenſe with the Apoſtles, &c. ſo neither do we reade of mercie ſo taken. 2. The Prophet ſaith in the ſame verſe, which redeemeth thy life; and before, which forgiueth thy ſinne: they may ſay as well, that Gods mercie is ſeene in giuing men power to redeeme themſelues and their ſinnes, as in giuing them power to merite. 3. If man meriteth the crowne, and Gods mercie forgiueth onely veniall ſinnes, then man doth more then God: for, to get the crowne, is more, then to wipe away veniall and ſmall ſinnes: and if a man may merit the crowne, how is it, that by his merites he alſo cannot extinguiſh his veniall ſinnes? there is no coherence in this broken ſtuffe. 4. Mercie and merit, grace and worke cannot ſtand together, Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, it is not counted of fauour, but of debt: but this fellow correcteth the Apoſtle, and ſaith; Yes, it is of fauour and mercie that they merite, and ſo challenge as of debt. Auguſtine well ſaith, Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed pro gratia; fides enim gratia eſt, & vita æterna eſt gratia pro gratia: Thou ſhalt not receiue life eternall for merite, but for grace; for faith is a gift or grace, and life eternall is grace for grace, tract.3.in Ioan. But this conſequent were not good, if the ſame thing were both grace and merite.

2. Anſw. Daniel in that place doth not deſire the crowne of life, but onely deliuerance from captiuitie, whereunto their ſinnes had brought them, *ibid.reſp.ad loc.*2.

Contra. 1. If Daniel aſcribeth not a temporall deliuerance to his merite, but Gods mercie; how much leſſe can our eternall and ſpirituall deliuerance be deſerued. 2. Daniel vtterly excludeth himſelfe from all merite, in confeſſing with the reſt, Dan.9.5. We haue ſinned, and committed iniquitie: as Hierome ſaith, in 7.ad Roman. Daniel, quem iuſtum fuiſſe nouimus, quaſi de ſe dicit cum alijs, peccauimus: Daniel, whom we know to haue been iuſt, doth confeſſe as of himſelfe with others, we haue ſinned, &c. If a righteous and iuſt man be a ſinner, what place is there for merit? ſinners muſt clayme mercie, not chalenge merite : as the Publicane, Luke 18. Lorde be mercifull to a mee ſinner.

3. Firſt, we are vnprofitable ſeruants of our ſelues, but by grace made profitable. 1.

Secondly, we are ſaid to be vnprofitable in reſpect of God, becauſe the profite of our workes redoundeth not to him. 2.

Thirdly, we are taught ſo to ſay for humilities ſake, though indeed we are not vnprofitable. 3.

Fourthly, or the meaning is, that for all our ſeruice, wee can demaund no reward, ſeeing that God without reward might bind vs to do all we do, but that gratuito pacto, he dealeth with vs more graciouſly and liberally by his free couenant, in reſpect whereof wee may ſay with the Apoſtle, There is a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid vp in ſtore for me. Bellarm. ad loc, 3. 4.

Contra. 1. By grace indeed we are made profitable, becauſe it is not in vaine in vs, but not profitable to merite or deſerue any thing; but profitable, in that we are not vnfruitfull: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Tit. 3.8.14. 2. Our Sauiour ſpeaketh here of ſeruants, and there of ſuch as are in the ſtate of grace; for before grace, we are not obedient ſeruants, but ſtubborne enemies: So Ambroſe ſaith, vpon this place; Agnoſce te ſeruum plurimis obſequijs defœneratum, neq; te iactes ſi bene feciſti, quod facere debuiſti: Acknowledge thy ſelfe a ſeruant diuerſly bound, neyther boaſt, if thou haue well done, that which thou oughteſt to do, in 17. Luc. But we cannot do any thing well of our ſelues, but by grace: Ergo, euen hauing receiued grace, we are in this ſenſe vnprofitable ſeruants. 1.

Contra. Firſt, it is true, that God in himſelfe is not by our ſinnes hindred, or by our righteouſneſſe furthered or profited, Iob. 35.6. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? if thou be righteous, what giueſt thou vnto him? and therefore good workes properly are ſaid to be profitable to men, Tit. 3.8. And, though before men Gods glory be ſet forth by the ſeruice of the Saints, yet the profite, vſe and benefite thereof extendeth vnto themſelues. 2. Wherefore, euen in reſpect of our ſelues we are ſaid to be vnprofitable ſeruants: becauſe by our ſeruice we deſerue no thankes at Gods hands, Luke 17. verſ. 9. Doth he thanke that ſeruant? and thus Ambroſe expoundeth; Sicut tu ſeruo tuo gratias non agis, &c. nec in te patitur Dominus vnius vſum eſſe operis, vel laboris, &c. As thou doeſt not giue thy ſeruant thankes, &c. ſo the Lorde doth not ſuffer thee to haue vſe of any one woorke or labour, becauſe as long as wee liue, wee muſt alwayes worke; in 17. Luc. The vſe then and profite of our ſeruice, wherein wee are ſaid to be vnprofitable, is referred to our ſelues. 3. Bernard ſhall here anſwere for vs, writing vpon theſe words, When yee haue done all that is commanded, ſay yee are vnprofitable ſeruants: Sed hoc inquies propter humilitatem monuit eſſe dicendum: planè propter humilitatem, nunquid contra veritatem: You will ſay, we are taught thus to ſpeake for humilitie: indeed for humilitie, but not againſt the veritie? ſerm. de triplic. cuſtod. 4. He anſwereth well, that wee cannot challenge the crowne and reward by our workes, but, ex gratuito pacto, of Gods gracious couenant: which is none other thing, then we our ſelues affirme: the crowne of righteouſneſſe, whereof S. Paul ſpeaketh, dependeth not vpon the merite of our workes, but of Gods gracious promiſe: and ſo Bernard expoundeth the Apoſtle, 2. Timoth. 4.8. There is laid vp for me a crown of iuſtice, &c. Eſt ergo, quam Paulus expectat, corona iuſtitiæ, ſed iuſtitiæ Dei non ſuæ, iuſtum eſt enim vt reddat quod debet, debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: & hæc eſt iuſtitia Dei, de qua præſumit Apoſtolus, promiſſio Dei: There is then a crowne of righteouſnes, which the Apoſtle doth expect, but of the righteouſneſſe of God, not his owne: for it is iuſt that God ſhould render that he oweth, and he oweth what he promiſed: this is the Iuſtice of God, whereof the Apoſtle preſumeth, euen his promiſe, lib. de liber. arbitr. 2

4. Bellarm. Eternall life is ſaid to be the grace of God; becauſe our merites whereby eternall life is procured, are of grace: for otherwiſe eternall life is as well the ſtipend of iuſtice, as death is the ſtipend of ſinne: Bellarm. reſp. ad loc. 4. 4

Contra. 1. This is a moſt corrupt gloſſe, by grace to expound workes: for the Apoſtle maketh a disiunction and oppoſition betweene works and grace, Rom. 11.6. If of grace then not of workes, for then grace were no more grace. And if it be anſwered, he meaneth workes of nature, not of grace: the Apoſtle ſaith againe, Tit. 3.5. Not by the workes of righteouſneſſe, but by his mercie he ſaued vs: Here euen works of iuſtice and grace are oppoſed to mercie and grace: wherefore grace and workes being ſo diuers, the one cannot be contained in the other.

Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith, Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed pro gratia, &c. Thou ſhalt not haue heauen by merite, but by grace: tract. 2. in Ioan. This were no good disiunction, if merite could be conteined in grace. And againe he ſaith, Deus videtur vitam æternam tanquam debitam reddere, ſed fidei debitam: God ſeemeth to giue eternall life as due; but due vnto faith, which is the grace of God, &c. ibid. Due, not to the merite of faith, but the grace and gift of faith. Thus better doth he vnderſtand the Apoſtle, that life eternall is the gift of God, then this corrupt gloſſer.

Thirdly, Bernard ſaith, Merita omnia Dei dona ſunt, & ita homo magis propter ipſa Deo debitor eſt, quam Deus homini: All our merites are Gods gifts, and ſo a man rather for them is a debter to God, then God to man, de annunt. Mar. ſerm. 1. Therefore our good workes cannot merite of God, ſeeing he meriteth of vs, becauſe he giueth vs grace to bring forth good workes.

5. Our afflictions indeed are not worthie in themſelues of heauen, becauſe they are but ſhort, and the reward is eternall: but yet, as Chriſts paſſions being but ſhort, for the worthineſſe of his perſon, were æquiualent to euerlaſting puniſhment, ſo our afflictions for the worthineſſe of charitie, are worthie of euerlaſting glory: as the Apoſtle ſayth, 2.Cor.4.17. Our light affliction doth worke vnto vs an eternall waight of glorie: Bellarm.c.3.argum.6.

Contra. 1. It is not farre from blaſphemie to aſcribe the like force to charitie in making our temporarie works æquiualent to the eternall reward, as to the dignitie of Chriſts perſon in the execution of his paſſion to be worthie to ſatisfie for euerlaſting puniſhment.

Secondly, the Apoſtle in ſaying, Our affliction worketh, &c. expoundeth himſelfe in the 18.verſ. While we looke not on the things that are ſeene, but on the things which are not ſeene: which is the office of faith: affliction then as it ſheweth our faith, is ſaid to worke, not as the cauſe, but as the way and meane: and the Apoſtle ſaith no otherwiſe then Saint Peter, 1.Pet.1.7. That the triall of your faith, may be found vnto your praiſe, &c, Affliction then worketh, as the triall of our faith: and it worketh no otherwiſe, but becauſe it ſhal be found, and God wil not forget the ſeruice of our loue. Thirdly, otherwiſe the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that the afflictions are not worthie, &c. that is, not at all worthie of ſo great a reward: So Ambroſe expoundeth, Quid poſſumus dignum facere præmijs cœleſtibus? what can we do worthie of the heauenly reward? what merit can man bring, that this mortall ſhould put on immortalitie? Indignæ ſunt huius temporis paſſiones ad ſuperuenturam gloriam: the paſſions of this life are vnworthie the glorie to come, *ſerm.20, in Pſal.*119. So alſo Gregorie; Beatæ vitæ nullus poteſt æquari labor, nulla opera, paſſiones nullæ: To bleſſed life, no labour, worke, ſuffring can be equall, *in Pſal.*142. Bernard; Quid ſunt merita omnia ad tantam gloriam? What are all our merites to ſo great glory? ſerm.1.de annunt.Mar.

6. Bellarm. Faith doth indeed exclude their reioycing, that glorie in themſelues and their owne ſtrength, but not that reioycing whereby we reioyce in our workes and merites by grace, reſponſ. ad loc.7.

Contra. 1. Faith excludeth all reioycing euen in good workes wrought by grace: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that reioycing is excluded by the law of faith, and not by the law of workes: if faith then exclude reioycing, we muſt reioyce in nothing but faith. 2. Rom.4.2. The Apoſtle ſayth, If Abraham were iuſtified by workes, he hath wherein to reioyce, but not with God: he ſpeaketh of Abraham as a faithfull man, and of his workes, as good workes; euen at that time when he beleeued, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe; as it followeth in the next verſe. 3. Bernard alſo ſaith, Perfecta & ſecura gloriatio eſt, cùm veremur omnia opera noſtra, ſicut teſtatur Iob de ſeipſo; omnes iuſtitias noſtras non aliud eſſe quam pannum menſtruatæ: then our reioycing is perfect, when we feare all our workes, as Iob teſtifieth: all our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtayned clout, ſerm.de triplic. gradu. A man then is not to reioyce in any of his workes, no not in his righteouſneſſe. 4. S. Paul further ſaith, Epheſ.2.9. Not of workes, leaſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelfe: hee muſt not boaſt of workes: and what workes, the Apoſtle ſheweth in the next verſ.10. We are his workemanſhip created in Ieſus Chriſt to good workes: Ergo, we muſt not boaſt nor reioyce no not in good workes. And thus notwithſtanding all theſe cauils, I truſt it euidently appeareth by theſe Scriptures alleaged, that our workes are no way meritorious of life euerlaſting.

*Argum.*4. S. Paul ſaith, Faith is counted to him for righteouſneſſe, that worketh not, Rom.4.5. If it be of grace, it is no more of workes, for then grace were no more grace: If of worke, then not of grace; for then worke were no more worke, Rom.11.9. Wee ſee that the righteouſneſſe of faith or of grace, and the righteouſneſſe of workes, cannot ſtand together, nor be matched one with the other.

Our aduerſaries haue here two euaſions: Firſt they graunt, that the beginning of our iuſtification, which they call the firſt iuſtification, is meerely of Gods grace, neither can we haue any acceptable workes before we are iuſtified: but in the ſecond iuſtification, which is the increaſe of the former iuſtice, a man may merite by good workes, Rhemiſt.Rom.2.3.

Anſ. This is but a late and new deuice of the firſt and ſecond iuſtification: as afterward we wil ſhew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth vs, that not onely the beginning of our righteouſneſſe, but the finiſhing and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Chriſt, Epheſ.2.5.6. When wee were dead in our ſinnes, he hath quickened vs together in Chriſt, by whoſe grace yee are ſaued, and hath rayſed vs vp, and made vs ſit together in heauenly places: We ſee that this ſaluation by grace bringeth vs vp to heauen: Ergo, both the firſt and ſecond iuſtification are of grace, for they can bring vs no further then to heauen.

Rhemiſt. 2. Workes done of nature without, or before faith, cannot merite: but works done by Gods grace may, and are ioyned with it as cauſes of ſaluation.

Anſw. Not onely the workes of nature, but euen of grace alſo are excluded: Wee are ſaued (ſaith the Apoſtle) by grace through faith, not of workes: And then hee ſheweth what workes, namely good workes, ſuch as the Lord hath ordayned for vs to walke in, Epheſ.2.9,10. Ergo, works

workes alſo of grace,wrought in vs by the ſpirit of God,are ſhut out from being any cauſes of our ſaluation. I conclude with Auguſtine,vpon thoſe words of the Pſalme,Let the Lord alway be magnified: Peccator es? magnificetur,vt vocet: confiteris? magnificetur, vt ignoſcat: iam iuſte viuis? magnificetur,vt regat: perſeueras vſque ad finem? magnificetur,vt te glorificet: Art thou a ſinner? Let God be magnified in calling thee: doeſt thou confeſſe thy ſinnes? let him be magnified in forgiuing them: doeſt thou liue well? let him be magnified in directing thee: doeſt thou continue to the end? let him be magnified in glorifying thee. God is as much to be praiſed for all things wrought after our calling and conuerſion, as for mercie ſhewed before: All then is wholy to be aſcribed to Gods grace and mercie: nothing is left for our merite or deſert.

Bernard hath of this matter an excellent ſpeech: Si à Deo voluntas eſt,& meritum; Deus igitur author eſt meriti qui voluntatem applicat operi,& opus explicat voluntati: Alioqui, ſi propriè appellentur ea, quæ dicimus noſtra merita, ſpei quædam ſunt ſeminaria,occultæ prædeſtinationis indicia, futuræ fælicitatis præſagia; via regni,non cauſa regnandi; denique quos iuſtificauit,non quos iuſtos inuenit, magnificauit: If our will bee of God, then alſo our meriting: for God is the author of the merite, in applying our will to the work,and fitting the work to our will: otherwiſe to ſpeake properly,our merites ſo called,are but the ſeedeplat of our hope, the ſignes of predeſtination, and the forerunners of our happines, the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe thereof: laſtly, whom God hath iuſtified, not whom he found iuſt,he glorifieth. What more euident teſtimonie can we haue againſt meriting of heauen? Bernard retaineth the name,but denieth the thing. De liber. arbitr.

*Concil. Arauſican.can.*18. Debetur merces bonis operibus ſi fiant,ſed gratia,quæ non debetur,præcedit, vt fiant: A reward is due to good workes, if they be done;but grace,which is not due nor of debt, goeth before,that they may be done. All therefore is to be aſcribed to grace.

Now whereas we doe alleage many teſtimonies of the Fathers againſt merites:Bellarmine would ſhift vs of with this anſwere, that they ſpeake of man, qualis eſt ſine gratia Dei, as he is without grace, that he cannot merite by his owne ſtrength: I will therefore ſhew out of the Fathers, that euen a man in the ſtate of grace cannot merite.

*Ambroſe de vocat.gent.lib.*1.*c.*5.Nulla tam præclara opera exiſtere, quibus hoc,quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis indicium debeatur. There are no ſuch excellent workes, to the which, that which is freely giuen, ſhould by way of retribution be owing,&c. if to no excellent workes, then not to the workes of grace of man is God endebted.

*Auguſtine cont.Pelag.artic.*3. De meritis in hoc ſeculo Chriſtianus extolli non debet, quia nemo hîc ſine peccato eſt, quicquid ergo in hac vita conſecutus fuerit, donum eſt, non meritum,&c. A Chriſtian muſt not be lifted vp for his merites in this world, becauſe no man here is without ſinne,whatſoeuer he hath in this life is a gift, not a merite,&c. he ſpeaketh of Chriſtians that are vnder grace.

Bernard,Quærant alij meritum,nos gratiam inuenire ſtudeamus; Maria non prætendit meritum ſed gratiam quærit: Let other men ſeeke for merite, let vs ſtudie to finde grace: Marie pretendeth not merite,but ſeeketh grace,&c. Serm.in natiu. Mar. Marie was in the ſtate of grace,and yet depended not vpon any merite.

The holy Martyrs haue moſt confidently ſealed this trueth: Alexander Seton Martyr: They that preach that workes doe merite,doe make workes the tree,which are but the fruite of iuſtice, wrought by him that is already a iuſt man: Chriſt was promiſed to be our onely iuſtifier: God ſayd to Abraham, In thy ſeede ſhall all people be bleſſed; he ſaid not in thy ſeedes,or in the workes of thy ſeedes,but in thy ſeede,that is Chriſt. Againe,the ſame holy Martyr and Preacher thus witneſſeth moſt confidently: *He that can ſhew me in any Scripture,that workes doe merite, or be any meanes to our iuſtification: for the firſt Scripture, I will, without any further iudgement, loſe both mine eares; for the ſecond,my tongue; for the third, my necke: Fox.*pag.1206. Yea this holy Martyr,though no Scripture were ſhewed him,neither ſhall euer be ſhewed,yet he moſt conſtantly gaue his life in the defence of this truth. But in defence of popiſh merites,I haue not heard of any that hath aduentured ſo farre.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, CONCERNING the name of merite.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmine* would beare vs in hand,that the name of merite is either conteined in Scripture,or collected from the ſame: *Lib.*5.*de iuſtif.c.*2. 80.Error.

Argum. The places of Scripture,which he pretendeth for proofe hereof are theſe.

1. Eccleſiaſt.16.12. He iudgeth a man according to the merite of his workes.
2. Heb.13.16. With ſuch ſacrifices,promeretur Deus, God is merited.
3. The Scripture maketh mention of dignitie or worthines, which is the ſame that Merite is: 2.Theſſ.1.5. That ye may be counted worthie of the kingdome of God: Apocal.3.4.They ſhall walke with me in white,for they are worthie.

4. There is often alſo mention found in Scripture of reward: Matth. 5. 12. Your reward is great in heauen. 1. Corinth. 3. 8. Euery man ſhall receiue his wages according to his labour. And in diuers other places; as Geneſ. 15. 1. The Lorde ſaith to Abraham, I am thine exceeding great reward: But where there is a reward, there merit goeth before.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. FIrſt, the Greeke text readeth onely κατὰ ἔργα, according to their workes, not the merit of their workes. Secondly, and in the ſame place he ſaith, As his mercie is great, ſo is his puniſhment: ſo that mens good workes are rewarded not of merit, but of mercie. Thirdly, neither is it all one to ſay, according to their workes, and after the merit of their workes, as he might haue learned out of Gregorie alleaged before: Aliud eſt ſecundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It is one thing to render according, and another to render for workes, in Pſal. 142. Fourthly, if wee had no other anſwere, the authoritie of this booke bindeth vs not, being no part of the Canonicall Scripture.

2. The word is εὐαρεστεῖται, God is pleaſed: as Hebr. 11. 6. the ſame word is vſed: Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: We graunt that God is well pleaſed with good workes, as proceeding from our faith in Chriſt: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 15. Let vs by him offer the ſacrifice of praiſe. By faith then in Chriſt God is pleaſed with our ſacrifice: what is this to merit?

3. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith: That you may be counted worthie: Digni habeamini. This worthines then is onely by imputation of Chriſts worthines. Secondly, they are worthie to haue white robes: becauſe their robes are made white in the blood of the Lambe, Apoc. 7. 14. and the Lambe onely is found to be worthie, Apoc. 8. 4. 9. The worthines of the Saints is none other, but the worthines of the Lambe, accounted theirs by faith: for if they be worthie, then is not the Lambe onely worthie.

4. Firſt, the reward is counted of fauour as well as of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Pſal. 103. 4 Which crowneth thee in mercie. Secondly, ſeeing God himſelfe is our rewarde, how is it poſſible, that man can merit God? Auguſtine ſaith, Filium hominis non meruiſſe vt dei filius eſſet: That the ſonne of man merited not to be the ſonne of God: de correpţ. & grat. c. 11. Euen ſo neither can man merit to haue God. Thirdly, further S. Ambroſe writing vpon that parable, Matth. 20. where the laſt hired labourers receiued as much as the firſt, that did endure the heate of the day, concludeth thus: Vt intelligant donum ſe gratiæ, non operum accepiſſe mercedem: That they may vnderſtand that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of their labour: de vocat. Gent lib. 1. c. 3. Thus we ſee, that out of the Scripture there can be no ſhew made for the vſe of this word merit, being aſcribed to the workes of men.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE diſtinction of merits.

The Papiſts.

81. Error. THey make two kindes of merit: Meritum de congruo, merit of congruitie: ſuch are the preparatiue workes before iuſtification, as were the prayers and almes deedes of Cornelius, Act. 10. which though they be not ſimply meritorious, ex debito iuſtitiæ, by the due debt of iuſtice, yet they deſerue at Gods hands of congruitie, becauſe he doth graciouſly accept them, Act. 10. ſect. 5. The other kinde, they call Meritum de condigno, merit of condignitie, when the reward is iuſtly due by debt: ſuch are the workes done in the ſecond iuſtification, which are truly meritorious, and worthie of heauen, Gabriel. Biel. Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. ſect. 3. Ex Tileman. loc. 11. err. 22.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we vtterly denie any ſuch merit of condignitie: for Saint Paul ſaith, That the afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie to come, Rom. 8. 18. Condignitie then is wholy remoued and taken away.

Secondy, a reward of congruitie in ſome ſort wee graunt, but neither for any thing done before faith or iuſtification: for it is impoſſible without faith to pleaſe God, or doe any thing acceptable vnto him, Heb. 6. 6. Neither is it of congruitie for the merit of our workes: but it is (congruum) it is agreeable to the mercie and iuſtice of God in reſpect of his promiſe graciouſly made in Chriſt, to reward the faithfull obedience of his ſeruants: ſo then the congruitie is on Gods behalfe, not in reſpect of our workes.

We are iuſtified, ſaith the Apoſtle, gratis per gratiam, freely by grace, Rom. 3. 24. Ergo, there is no merit either of congruitie or condignitie, ſeeing all is done freely.

In Pſal. 5. 5. Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ille latro attulerat de fauce ad iudicium, de iudicio ad crucem, de cruce in Paradiſum? I pray you what merit did the theefe bring with him from the priſon to iudgement, from the iudgement place to the croſſe, from the croſſe to Paradiſe? Here was neither merit of congruitie, nor condignitie.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE MANNER of meriting.

The Papiſts.

OVr works (they ſay) are pleaſing and acceptable vnto God, euen after the ſame manner, that 82.Error. Chriſt and his works were, *Tapper.ex Teleman.loc.*11.*err.*14. Chriſts paines of their owne nature, compared to his glorie, were not any whit comparable, yet they were meritorious and worthie of heauen, not for the greatnes of them, but for the worthines of his perſon: So our workes, not of their owne nature, but as they are of grace, are meritorious of the ioyes of heauen, *Rhemiſt. Rom.*8.18.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, it is a great blaſphemie, to ſay, that Chriſts paſſions in themſelues deſerued not that glorie, which he hath purchaſed for vs: neither that there was any compariſon betweene them: for then, how could he haue fully ſatisfied the wrath of God? Chriſt hath payed the raunſome for our ſinnes: We are redeemed with his precious blood, as of a lambe vnſpotted, 1.Pet.1.19. His blood was the price of our redemption: therefore of it ſelfe meritorious. It was not in reſpect of Chriſt, of grace; but of merit in him: Vnto vs his redemption is of grace, Rom.3.24. Wherefore his paſſion being the paſſion of the Sonne of God, was a ful ſatisfaction, and worthie deſert of that glorie, which he hath purchaſed for vs.

Secondly, it is another great blaſphemie to match and compare in the way and manner of meriting, Chriſts workes and ours together. For firſt, there is no merit at all in vs vnto ſaluation: we haue no merits but Chriſts, and are ſaued onely by faith in him, not by workes, Epheſ.2.8. Secondly, by your owne confeſſion, our works are not of their nature meritorious, but of grace: but Chriſts works were of themſelues full of merit, without any externall helpe, or acceſſion of grace: for in himſelfe did all fulnes dwell, Coloſſ.1.19.

Auguſtine very well ſheweth the great difference in the way of meriting betweene Chriſt and vs, thus writing: Quantum intereſt, cum duo ſint in carcere, inter reum & viſitatorem eius: illum cauſa Tract.2.in Epiſt.Iohan. premit, illum humanitas adduxit: ſic in iſta mortalitate nos reatu tenebamur, Chriſtus miſericordia deſcendit: Looke what difference there is, when two are in priſon together, betweene the priſoner, and his friend that commeth to viſite him; the one is there of neceſſitie, the other commeth of good will: ſuch difference there is betweene Chriſt and vs: for when wee were detained in the priſon of this mortalitie, for the guilt of our ſinnes, Chriſt came in mercie to viſite vs. How can there now be any proportionable or like way of meriting, in the guiltie priſoner, and the innocent and friendly viſiter?

THE SIXT PART, OF THE QVALITIE and condition of merits.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmine* ſaith, that the good workes of the righteous, are properly and verily meritorious of 83.Error. eternall life, euen, ex condigno, of condignitie, or worthines, in the higheſt degree: *Bellar.c.*16. and that non ſolum ratione pacti, ſed operis, in reſpect of the worke, as well as of the couenant or promiſe.

Argum. 2.Timot.4.8. Saint Paul ſaith, that God the iuſt iudge ſhall giue him a crowne of glorie: but it is the part of iuſtice to giue vnto euery man as he hath deſerued: the Apoſtle therefore worthilie deſerued this crowne: it was of iuſtice, not of mercie: Bellarm.ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. THis crowne laid vp for the Apoſtle, was both of mercie, in that the Lord graciouſly promiſed it: Iam.1.12. He ſhall receiue the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to all, that loue him. It was alſo of iuſtice: Iuſtum eſt (ſaith Bernard) vt reddat, quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: It is right and iuſt, that God ſhould pay what he oweth: now he oweth that which he hath promiſed. All therefore was of Gods mercie toward the Apoſtle, not of his deſert. Gods iuſtice in keeping his promiſe, reſpecteth not any deſert in man, but dependeth vpon the conſtancie and truth of his word in himſelfe.

Argum. Saint Paul ſaith, Rom.8.18. That the afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie, &c. Ergo, there is no ſuch condignitie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that in their owne nature they are not worthie, but as they proceed from the grace of God, they are, *cap.*18.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place of no other ſuffrings, but thoſe which are wrought by grace in the children of God: as verſ.17. Suffer with Chriſt, that ye may be glorified with him.

Therefore the Apoſtle excludeth euen ſuch ſuffrings, as are wrought by the ſpirit. 2. Grace or fauour, and deſert cannot ſtand together: Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, the wages is not counted of fauour, but by debt. Wherefore if heauen be merited, it is of debt, grace and fauour is excluded: therefore to ſay, that workes are meritorious by grace, and that their worthines and condignitie is partly of grace accepting, and partly of the worke deſeruing, is to affirme contrarie things, and to match things of diuers and vnlike nature together.

Herein alſo hee may be ouerthrowne by his owne poſitions: Firſt, he ſaith that God doth reward, ſupra condignum, aboue the worthines or condignitie of our workes, cap.19. then it will follow, that there is no ſuch condignitie, becauſe the reward exceedeth their worthines: but betweene the wages and the worke, there ſhould be an equalitie. Againe, heauen is the greateſt reward that can be, and therefore if God doe giue a reward beyond their deſert, heauen is not deſerued, for a better reward than heauen there cannot be.

Secondly, Bellarmine confeſſeth, that neither the grace of iuſtification, cap.21. nor the gift of perſeuerance to the end, or a mans reparation after his fall, can be merited, ex condigno, of condignitie: much leſſe can the kingdome of heauen be ſo merited, which is a more excellent thing, than any of the other: our glorification farre exceedeth in excellencie our iuſtification and perſeuerance: if the leſſe then cannot be ſo merited, neither can the greater.

The author of the Sermons de tempor. ſer.210. Cum dies iudicij aduenerit, etſi coronam non meremur accipere, vel ad peccatorum indulgentiam mereamur peruenire, &c. When the day of iudgement ſhall come, if wee deſerue not to receiue the crowne, let vs deſerue to attaine at the leaſt to pardon of our ſinnes, &c. Ergo, it is more to merit the crowne, than to merit forgiuenes: but this cannot be merited by their owne confeſſion: Ergo, not the other.

We haue witneſſe of a Synode of their owne: Senonenſ. ſynod. decr. de fide. 16. Faciet tandem miſericordia dei vnicuiq; locum iuxta meritum operum ſuorum, non abſoluta condignitate quidem, (neque enim condignæ ſunt paſſiones, &c. Rom.8.18.) ſed gratuita magis & liberali repromiſſione, &c. At the length the mercie of God ſhall make a place to euery one according to the merit of their workes, not by an abſolute condignitie, (for the afflictions of this life are not condigne, &c. Rom.8.18.) but rather by a gracious and liberall promiſe, &c. Ergo, our workes are not properly ex condigno, meritorious.

Diuers alſo of the Schoolemen are of the ſame opinion, that good workes, ex condigno, of condignitie, are not meritorious of life eternall: Sic Thom. Waldenſ. tom.3. de Sacramental. c.7. Durand. in 2. ſenten. diſt.27. qu.2. Gregor. in 1. ſentent. diſt.17. qu.1. artic.2.

THE SEVENTH PART, WHETHER ANY confidence is to be repoſed in merits.

The Papiſts.

84. Error. FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith, that the truſt which the righteous haue in God, ariſeth not onely of faith, but ſpringeth alſo from their merits: lib.5. de iuſtificat. cap.7.

1. Argum. 1. Timoth.3.13. They that haue miniſtred well, get themſelues a good degree, and great libertie or confidence in the faith: Confidence or truſt is then wrought in vs by our faithfull ſeruice.

2. Rom.5.4. Patience bringeth forth experience, experience hope.

3. Hebr.10.32.35. Ye endured a great fight of afflictions, caſt not therefore away your confidence.

4. If our heart condemne vs not, wee haue boldnes toward God: Ergo, our confidence ariſeth vpon our workes: Bellar. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. WE denie not, but that by a ſanctified life, and good workes, we may grow vp to the aſſurance of our election, yet not by the merit or worthines of the workes, but as they haue relation vnto faith, whereof they are liuely ſignes: for to ſpeake properly, it is faith whereby we haue peace toward God, Roman.5.1. And in this place the Apoſtle ſaith, They haue confidence in the faith, which is in Chriſt: Their confidence is grounded vpon faith, vnto the aſſurance whereof they are conducted and guided by their faithfull ſeruice.

2. All theſe depend vpon the ſecond verſe: By whom we haue acceſſe through faith vnto this grace, &c. and not ſo onely, but we reioyce in tribulations. All theſe then are rehearſed, as fruites iſſuing from our faith, reioycing in tribulation, experience, hope. Againe, hope maketh not aſhamed, verſ.5. becauſe the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts: but this loue of Chriſt wee know no otherwiſe than by faith: Epheſ.3.17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: then it followeth, verſ.19. and that ye may know the loue of Chriſt, &c.

3. This confidence ſpringeth of faith, verſ.32. After ye had receiued light, ye endured a great fight: and therefore verſ.22. it is called πληροφορία πίστεως, the aſſurance of faith.

4. The peace of conſcience worketh confidence, and faith bringeth this peace of conſcience, Rom.5.1. And in this place, verſ.19. Let vs not loue in word,&c. thereby wee know we are in the truth, and ſhall before him aſſure our harts: The being in the truth, which is faith, is the ground of this aſſurance; the way whereby to know it, is by loue. Theſe places will hold no water for them.

Arg. That works of themſelues giue vs no aſſurance, but as they haue their actiuitie from faith, Saint Peter teacheth vs, 2. Epiſt.1.10. Giue diligence to make your calling ſure in doing theſe things: and what things he meaneth, it is before ſhewed, verſ.5. Ioyne to your faith, vertue; with vertue, knowledge: workes then breede no aſſurance or confidence, but as they are ioyned with faith, and iſſue out from the ſame. Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith, wee haue peace toward God: Peace and confidence iſſueth from iuſtification by faith: Hebr.10.verſ.22. The aſſurance of faith. Faith then giueth aſſurance.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmine* againe ſaith, that our confidence ariſeth not onely from good workes, but that our confidence and truſt may be repoſed alſo in our merits: ſo that in his opinion, it hath both the beginning from thence, and againe hath recourſe thither. And thus merits (falſely ſo called) ſhall be both the efficient cauſe of our confidence, as alſo the matter or obiect thereof, wherein it ſhould reſt and be repoſed. 85. Error.

1. Argum. 1.Timoth.4.7. I haue fought a good fight, I haue finiſhed my courſe,&c. henceforth is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſnes &c. Saint Pauls confidence and aſſurance of life eternall, is grounded vpon his meritorious workes. Bellarm.

2. Nehem.5.verſ.19. Remember me O Lord in thy goodnes, according to that I haue done for this people.

3. Pſal.18.20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſnes.

4. Iſay.38.3. Hezekiah thus praieth: Remember me O Lord, how I haue walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heurt, and haue done that, which is good in thy ſight: Ergo, we may repoſe confidence in our workes.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. SAint Pauls confidence is not builded vpon his owne works, but vpon the righteouſneſſe and ſurenes of Gods promiſes: which God the righteous Iudge (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſhall giue me at that day: As Bernard ſaith: Eſt ergo, quam Paulus expectat corona iuſtitiæ, ſed iuſtitiæ dei non ſuæ: hæc eſt iuſtitia, de qua præſumit Apoſtolus, promiſſio dei: It is the crowne of righteouſnes, which the Apoſtle looketh for, but not of his owne, but Gods righteouſnes: the promiſe of God is the righteouſnes, whereof the Apoſtle preſumeth: de liber. arbitr. Saint Pauls confidence then is in the promiſe of God, not in his owne merits.

2. Nehemiah ſaith, Remember me in thy mercie. And chap.13.22. Remember me O Lord concerning this, and pardon me for thy great mercie: verſ.31. Remember me in thy goodneſſe. His confidence wee ſee is not in his workes, but in Gods mercie.

3. Firſt, Dauid ſpeaketh not of his righteouſnes toward God, but of his innocencie againſt Saul: and who doubteth, but that the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, and the innocencie of a iuſt cauſe doth make vs bold and confident againſt our enemies? But the queſtion is of confidence toward God: in which reſpect Dauid ſaith, verſ.2. The Lord is my rocke, in him will I truſt. He doth not truſt in his owne innocencie.

4. It was Hezekiah his truth (that is faith) wherein he walked, and the perfitnes of his heart, which is cauſed by faith (for by faith God purifieth our hearts, Act.15.9.) that made him confident: which his confidence of faith, was indeede ſealed vnto him, and confirmed by his godlie life.

Argum. Saint Paul vtterly diſclaimeth, and renounceth his owne workes: hee counteth all things but loſſe and dung in reſpect of Chriſt, that he might be found in him, not hauing his owne righteouſnes, but that which is through faith in Chriſt, Philip.3.8.9. Paul therefore truſteth not to his workes, he will put no confidence in dung. Againe hee ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby iuſtified, 1.Cor.4.4. Therefore he hath no confident opinion in himſelfe: but his confidence is ſtayed vpon the loue of God in Chriſt Ieſus.

Bernard well ſaith: Diſcamus de noſtra omnino induſtria, magis autem de noſtris diffidere meritis: Let vs learne to diſtruſt our owne induſtrie, or rather our merits; in feſt. Paul ſerm. 2.

Prætendat alter meritum, mihi adhærere deo bonum, ponere in domino ſpem meam: Let another pretend merite, it is good for me to cleaue to God, and in the Lorde to put my truſt: *in Pſalm.*90. *ſerm.*9.

OF GOOD WORKS IN PARTICVLAR, DEVIded into three parts,of prayer,faſting, almes deedes.

THe ſeuerall queſtions are theſe : Firſt,of the fruits of prayer. Secondly, of the condition and qualitie of prayer. Thirdly,of the order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE FRVITS.

SVch fruites of prayer,as wee learne out of the word of God, wee moſt willingly acknowledge. Firſt,it comforteth the ſoule being in heauines : If any be afflicted,let him pray,Iam.2.13. Secondly,it obtaineth wiſedome for vs,and all ſpiritual grace,Iam.1.5. Thirdly,by prayer the good creatures of God are ſanctified to our vſe,1.Tim.4 5. Fourthly,by prayer are wee preſerued from all ſpirituall danger,Luk.22.31.32. I haue prayed for thee Peter,&c. And other ſuch fruits and vſes prayer hath : But theſe fruites following we doe refuſe.

The Papiſts.

86.Error. B*Ellarmine* maketh theſe two fruits of prayer : that it is ſatisfactorie,and meritorious.

*Argum.*1. For the firſt he reaſoneth thus : Euery good laborious worke is ſatisfactorie : prayer is a laborious worke : *Ergo.lib.*1.*cap.*3.

Anſw. 1. Though one man may ſatisfie and recompence another, yet no worke of ours can worke any ſatisfaction before God : but Chriſt onely by his death, hath made ſatisfaction for vs all : All things are ſet at peace, through the blood of his croſſe, Coloſſ.1.20. 2. Againe, whereas they muſt be good workes,whereby God ſhould be ſatisfied,ſeeing God is the giuer of euery good gift and worke,and all our good workes proceed from him,he thus ſhould be ſatisfied with his owne, which were no ſatisfaction. 3. Further,prayer is no laborious work to the ſpirituall man,though it be to the fleſh : for in the inner man there is a ſpirituall delight in all good things,Rom.7.22. 4. And what if it were laborious ? as though God delighted in the puniſhment, ſorrow,and trauell of his children,as the Idolatrous Prieſts of Baal conceiued of their Idoll, that by launcing of their fleſh,they ſhould be the ſooner regarded and heard.

*Argum.*2. That prayer alſo is meritorious, he would thereby proue it, becauſe God is ſaid to reward them openly,that pray ſecretly : Matth.6.6. his reaſon is this, reward is of merite, prayer is rewarded : Ergo, it is of merite.

Anſw. The propoſition is not true,for reward may as well be of fauour, as of deſert : He that giueth but a cup of cold water,ſhall not loſe his reward. Matth.10.42. Heauen is not merited by ſo ſmall a gift: this reward then is of mercie: wherefore this place ſheweth, that prayer is not in vaine, but is accepted of God,that it is meritorious it proueth not.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, prayer is not ſatisfactorie : no imperfect thing can ſatisfie before God, but our prayers are imperfect,Rom.8.26. We know not what to pray as we ought : Ergo. Againe, that onely ſatiſfieth God,whereby his wrath is once for euer appeaſed ; neither need that ſatisfaction often to be repeated: the reaſon is,becauſe if God be once ſatisfied, he is not mutable, he ſo continueth. But prayer muſt often be repeated, Onely Chriſt hath once for euer,&c. Heb.10.14. he hath once for all appeaſed the wrath of God , which ſatisfaction cannot be repeated : Ergo, the death of Chriſt is onely ſatisfactorie: prayer is not. Auguſtine ſpeaking of Peters repentance, which was tempered (no doubt) with prayer, ſaith: Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I reade of Peters teares, but of no ſatisfaction: *de tempor. ſerm.*117. See more of this,*controu.*14.*queſt.*7.*part.*4.

Secondly,prayer is not meritorious, nor any other religious acte done by vs : where merite or deſert is,there ſomewhat is performed to him, at whoſe hands we deſerue : But by our workes, prayer,almes deedes,or whatſoeuer, we profite not the Lord : as Iob.35.7. If thou be righteous, what giueſt thou vnto him,or what receiueth he at thy hand? verſ.8. Thy wickedneſſe may hurt a man, as thou art, and thy righteouſneſſe may profite the Sonne of man: Ergo, prayer doth not merite at Gods hand.

Againe, we muſt not pray,as the heathen did, Matth.6.7. but they thought to be heard for the merite of their long prayers: Ergo, it becommeth not Chriſtians to pray with any opinion of merit to be heard. Further,that cannot merit at anothers hand,the benefit wherof wholy redoundeth to our ſelues: But prayer is wholy for our benefite; we doe pray for ſuch things, as we neede, Matth. 6.8. therefore it cannot merite before God. We haue alſo a direct place in Scripture againſt the merite of prayer: Daniel 9.18. We doe not preſent our prayers before thee for our owne righteouſneſſe, but for thy great mercies.

Bernard ſaith well: Conſiderare debet is, qui orat, in ſeipſo duo: vt pro ſuis meritis nihil ſe accepturum putet, ſed de Dei miſericordia impetraturum: He that prayeth muſt conſider two things in himſelfe, that he thinke not to receiue any thing for his owne merites, but onely for the mercie of God. In Pſalm.91.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE CONditions required in Prayer.

THere be diuers conditions and qualities, which muſt alwaies concurre in a faithfull prayer: Firſt, that we pray in charitie, without wrath, 1.Tim.2.8. Secondly, we muſt pray with the deuotion and intention of the heart: God will be worſhipped in ſpirit, Ioh.4.24. Thirdly, we muſt perſeuere and continue in prayer: 1.Theſſ.5.17. Pray continually. Fourthly, we ſhould pray onely for things neceſſarie, Matth.6.32. Your heauenly father knoweth, you haue neede of all theſe things: Theſe and ſuch other conditions preſcribed in the word of God, we holde to be neceſſary in praier: but theſe following we refuſe.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, Bellarmine affirmeth, that it is not requiſite to pray with faith, whereby we beleeue and are perſwaded, that God will heare vs: but it ſufficeth onely in generall to beleeue, that God is moſt mightie and moſt mercifull, both able and willing, to grant our prayer, if there be no defect in vs. 88.Error.

*Argum.*1. Dauid, when he prayed for the life of his childe, was not aſſured, that God would heare him: for he ſaith, Who can tell, whether God will haue mercie on mee, that the childe may liue? 2.Sam.22. Bellarm.cap.9.

2. So Saint Paul prayed doubtfully, that the pricke of the fleſh might be taken from him: for he prayed of faith, and yet beleeued not, that he ſhould obtaine that he prayed for, for then it ſhould haue been a falſe faith, ſeeing he obtained not his requeſt: ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. INdeede, when we pray for temporall things, we haue no warrant otherwiſe to receiue them, then as God ſeeth them to be good for vs: but for ſpirituall bleſſings, we may pray reſolutely with all aſſurance and confidence to be heard in Gods good time: As Dauid, though here praying for the temporall life of his ſonne, be not ſure to obtaine; yet when he prayeth for ſome ſpirituall grace, as for the forgiueneſſe of his ſinne, Pſalm.6.1. he is aſſured, that his prayer is receiued, verſ.9. The Lord hath heard my petition, he will receiue my prayer. This difference betweene the requeſt of things ſpirituall, and temporall, Auguſtine well noteth: Sanitatem quis petit, cum agrotat; & tamen fortè adhuc ei agrotare vtile eſt, poteſt fieri vt hîc non exaudiaris: at verò cum illud petis, vt det tibi Deus vitam aternam, ſecurus eſto, accipies, &c. A man asketh health when he is ſicke, and is not heard, for it may bee good for him yet to be ſicke; but when thou prayeſt for eternall life, be ſecure and out of doubt for this matter, thou ſhalt haue it, but the time is not yet. In Pſalm.59.

2. S. Paul alſo prayed inſtantly, euen thrice, and therefore he prayed with faith, not doubting: for though in that particular he was not aſſured to be heard, yet he doubted not but that God would graunt to him that which was needfull; and therein he was heard: for the Lord ſaid, My grace is ſufficient for thee: So our Sauiour prayed for the paſſing away of the cuppe of death, therein he was not heard; yet he was heard in generall, in that he ſubmitteth his humane will to his Fathers will, and was heard in that which he feared, Hebr.5.7. Shall we therefore inferre, that Chriſt prayed doubtfully?

Argum. That we ought to pray confidently with a liuely faith, nothing doubting, but that God will graunt vs all things needfull which we aske in Chriſt, the Scripture euidently teſtifieth: 1.Tim.2.8. We muſt pray without doubting: let him aske in faith and wauer not: Iames 1.6. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke: Iames 5.15. This confidence in our prayers, ſpringeth, as we ſee, from faith, not from an vncertaine and doubtfull hope, as the Ieſuite, ſeemeth to affirme.

Chriſt alſo ſaith, Whatſoeuer ye ſhall aske the father in my name, he will giue it you: Iohn 16.23. here is the ground of our confidence in prayer, the promiſe of God in Chriſt Ieſus, th[illegible]efore all doubting muſt be remoued.

Chryſoſtome ſaith well, Si dixeris, niſi accepero non recedam, prorſus accipies: If thou ſaiſt, I will not goe away till I haue receiued that I aske, thou ſhalt ſurely receiue it: Homil.24.in Matth.

Eſpenceus vpon theſe words: Iacob.1.6. Let him aske in faith doubting nothing: inferreth, Perſuaſos nos eſſe oportet, exauditum diuinitus iri: We muſt be perſwaded, that we ſhall be heard in heauen: in 1.Tim.p.42.

The Papiſts.

SEcondly, Bellarmine ſaith, that he that prayeth, muſt not be in any deadly ſinne, but come with an actuall and inherent righteouſneſſe: for God heareth not ſinners, vnleſſe it be extraordina- 89.Error.

rily ſometime, or when they begin to repent them of their ſinne, whereof notwithſtanding they haue no certaintie, *cap.*9.

Argum. Pſalm.66.18. If I regard wickedneſſe in my heart, the Lord will not heare me: Ergo, the prayer of wicked men is not heard.

Iſay 1.15. Though ye make many prayers, I will not heare, for your hands are full of blood.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. WE grant, that they which delight and continue in their ſinne, are not heard of God, Prou.15.8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: yet it followeth not, but that the ſinner, which repenteth him of his ſinne, though his conſcience be not yet fully cleared, may pray vnto God aright, and be very ſure that his prayer is heard.

Argum. This is proued by Dauids experience: Pſalm.32.5. I acknowledged my ſinne before thee, neither did I hide mine iniquitie, &c. and thou forgaueſt the puniſhment of my ſinne: the prayer therefore of penitent ſinners is infallibly heard, which Bellarmine denyeth. We haue not onely the examples of holy men, but the promiſe alſo of God, for the hearing of ſinners prayers: as it appeareth by Salomons prayer made at the dedication of the temple, with the which God was pleaſed: a part of which prayer is this, that if they, which haue ſinned, returne and pray vnto God, and confeſſe their ſinnes: Then heare thou in heauen, ſaith Salomon, 1.King.8.49. God was pleaſed with this prayer of Salomon, and euery part thereof.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si peccatores Deus non exaudiret, fruſtra publicanus oculos in terram demittens, & pectus ſuum percutiens diceret, Deus propitius eſto mihi peccatori: If God did not heare ſinners, in vaine ſhould the Publicane caſting his eyes down vnto the ground, and knocking vpon his breaſt, haue ſaid, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner. Tractat.44. in Iohann.

Bellarmine aunſwereth, that ſinners are heard praying for any ſpirituall or temporall gift, when they are in the way to repentance, as the Publicane was: but then they are heard, Non ex iuſtitia, ſed ex miſericordia: Not of iuſtice as worthie, but of Gods mercie: neither are they heard certainly or infalliblie.

*Contra.*1. Neither is the moſt righteous man heard for his righteouſneſſe, as Daniel was a righteous man: yet he prayeth thus, Dan.9.18. We preſent not our ſupplications before thee for our owne righteouſneſſe, but thy great mercies. 2. The Publicane was heard certainely being a ſinner, ſo are all other praying in faith, as our Sauiour ſaith, Mark.11.24. Whatſoeuer ye deſire, when ye pray, beleeue that ye ſhall receiue it, and it ſhall be done vnto you.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE ORDER and manner of Prayer.

IT hath theſe ſeuerall parts: firſt, of the time and number of canonicall houres: ſecondly, of the matter of prayer: thirdly, the maner: fourthly, of the perſons.

THE FIRST PART, OF CANONICALL houres.

The Papiſts.

90.Error. THey haue their nocturne houres, and diurne or day houres appoynted for prayer: In the night, the third, ſixt, ninth, and twelfth houre, which were called the foure watches of the night: In the day they obſerue the prime, the firſt houre, the third, the ſixt, the ninth, and the twelfth: and they haue their complin immediatly after the euening or twylight.

Argum. Theſe canonicall houres the Ieſuite would warrant by the example of Dauid, who prayſed God ſeuen times a day, Pſalm.119. Dauid alſo kept his nocturnes: At midnight will I riſe vp, and praiſe thee, Pſalm.119. Thou ſhalt heare my voice in the morning, Pſalm.5. In theſe houres alſo the greateſt myſteries of our redemption were wrought by our Sauiour Chriſt: as in the veſpertine, or twelfth houre he inſtituted the Sacrament, at complin he was taken, in the prime led to Pilate, in the third houre condemned, in the ſixt crucified, in the ninth he gaue vp the Ghoſt: theſe houres therefore are conſecrate by Chriſts example vnto prayer: *Bellarm.cap.*13.

The Proteſtants.

*Anſw.*1. FIrſt, we denie not, but that at all times and houres both of the day and night, it is lawfull to pray, ſo oft as we are aright diſpoſed thereunto, as the Prophet Dauid did.

Secondly, further we alſo grant, a politike vſe in the Church of ſet houres for prayer, both publikely in the Church, and priuately in families, for order and decencie ſake; ſo it be done without any ſuperſtitious opinion of the houre and neceſſarie limitation of our prayers thereunto: and in this ſenſe we refuſe not the counſell of the author of the Epiſtle ad Demetriad. which goeth vnder Hieromes name: Quanquam nullam prorſus horam à ſpirituali profectu vacuam eſſe conueniat, &c. Although though it be not conuenient, that any houre ſhould be void of ſpirituall exerciſe, yet there ſhould be ſome determinate and appointed number of houres, quò plenius Deo vaces, & qui te ad ſummam animi intentionem quaſi lege quadam contineat: in the which you ſhould more fully be vacant for God, and which as by a law ſhould bind you to a greater intention of the minde: I thinke the morning the fitteſt time for this, and the greater part of the day, vſq; ad horam tertiam, till the third houre, or three a clocke, &c. Here are three reaſons giuen of ſet houres, which wee miſlike not. 1. That we may ſet al other buſineſſe aſide, and be vacant onely for God. 2. That the houre comming, we may prepare our ſelues more zealouſly to pray. 3. That the morning be choſen, as the fitteſt time of the day: But of the veſpertine and complin and prime, here is no mention.

3. Yet it followeth not, that our prayer ſhould be tied and limited vnto certaine houres. Neither hath Dauid any ſuch meaning, in ſaying, ſeuen times a day, he meaneth, that often times in a day he prayſed God: Verſ.97. He meditated in the law of God continually: And Pſalm.55.17. theſe ſeuen times, he reduceth to three times, Euening, morning, and at noone will I pray: he kept therefore no certaine time. Further, if they ſtand ſo ſtrictly vpon Dauids example, why do they not keepe their nocturne houres? as Dauid ſaith, he roſe at midnight, and his eyes preuented the night watches: Pſalm.119. Their nocturne watches are too painfull for them.

Secondly, concerning the example of Chriſt, wee ſay that not onely theſe houres, but euery houre of the day and night was conſecrated with ſome vertuous act of his: that, as Leo ſaith of feſtiuall dayes, that if we ſhould keepe all dayes holy, wherein Chriſt did any notable thing, Omnia tempora, continuatis erunt deputanda feſtis: All times ſhould be feſtiuall: ſo if all houres ſhould be obſerued for prayer, wherein Chriſt wrought any part of our redemption; then we ſhould do nothing elſe but pray. See our reaſons againſt their popiſh nocturnes and canonicall houres: Controu.6.quæſt.6 part.3. & controu.9.quæſt.8.appendix. ad 4. partem. Leo 1.epiſt.4. cap.4.

S. Ambroſe ſaith notably vpon theſe words, I preuented the morning light, Pſal.119.verſ.144. Qui ergo Dominum deprecatur, non velut præſcripta præcipuè tempora præſtoletur, &c. ſed ſemper in corde ſit Chriſtus, ſemper in ore ſit Chriſtus: He that prayeth to the Lord, let him not ſtay as it were, for the preſcript times; but let Chriſt be alwayes in his heart, alwayes in his mouth, *ſerm.19.in Pſal.*119.

They are not themſelues agreed concerning the time of their canonicall houres; as for completorium, the complin, Rabanus holdeth, that it ſhould be celebrate hora vndecima in the eleuenth houre, that is the houre before Sunne ſet, the laſt but one; lib.2.de inſtit. Cleric.c.8. Smaragdus Abbas ſaith horam duodecimam, that the twelfe, that is the laſt houre of the day, belongeth to Complin: comment.ad cap.16.regul.S.Benedic. The reſt do generally hold, that Complin is in the beginning of the night.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER of diuine ſeruice and prayer.

91.Error. IN the matter of their ſeruice wee take exception againſt two partes of their leiturgie chiefly: firſt, wee miſlike the reading of the fabulous ſtories of their ſaints liues in ſtead of the Scriptures, which onely ought to bee read in the Church, as it may thus appeare; Nehem.8. Ezra did reade from morning to midday onely in the booke of the law: The Iewes did reade the Prophets onely in their Synagogues vpon the Sabboth day: Act.13.27. and Moſes, Act.15.21. And Chriſt ſendeth vs no whither but to the Scriptures: Search the Scriptures, Iohn 5.

See the conſent of antiquitie: *Concil.Laodicen.can.*59. Non oportet libros extra canonem legere. Carthag.3.can.47. Placuit vt præter Scripturas canonicas nihil in Eccleſia legatur ſub nomine diuinarum Scripturarum: It was decreed, that nothing beſide the canonicall Scriptures, ſhould be read for Scripture in the Church.

Gelaſius alſo thus decreed of this matter: Geſta ſanctorum Martyrum, ſecundum antiquam conſuetudinem, ſingulari cautela, in Eccleſia Romana non leguntur, quia & eorum qui conſcripſerunt, nomina ignorantur, & multa ſuperflua, aut minus apta ſcripta putantur: The deedes of the Martyrs, we haue prouided, not to be read any more in the Romane Church, as afore time; becauſe their names are not knowne that writ them, and there is much ſuperfluous and vnfit matter there written: decret. de Apocryphis. Yet for all this, the Ieſuite, would beare vs downe, that it is a commendable vſe of the Church, to reade ſuch ſtories ſtill: *Bellarm.cap.*14.

92.Error. Secondly, 1. we condemne that idolatrous and blaſphemous ſong, called (Salue Regina) endited to the honour of the Virgine Marie; but to the diſhonour of Chriſt.

2. They call her in this ſong, matrem miſericordiæ, the mother of mercie: which is a title proper vnto God, to be called the father of mercie, 2.Cor.1.3.

3. They call her our life: but Chriſt onely is the way, the trueth and the life, Iohn 14.6.

4. Another title is (dulcedo) our ſweetnes, or comfort: but the Lord our God, onely is the God of all comfort. 2.Cor.1.3.

5. This ſong calleth Marie our hope: But the Scripture holdeth them accurſed that make man their confidence, Ierem.17.5.

6. They pray vnto Mary in this ſong, Vt poſt hoc exilium Ieſum oſtendat, that ſhee would ſhew vnto vs Ieſus after this life: contrary to the Scripture; for God the father bringeth vs to Chriſt, Iohn 6.44. and it is the office of Chriſt to ſhew himſelfe to vs, Ioh.4.21. It is great Idolatrie then to aſcribe this office proper vnto God, to any other: yet notwithſtanding all theſe blaſphemies, this ſong is defended by the Ieſuite: cap.15.

Bellarmines anſwere is here moſt abſurd.

1. Marie is called or ſaluted by the name of Queene; as all other Saints are, Matth.5.3. *Bleſſed are the poore in Spirit, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen, lib.1.de bon.operib.c.*15.and ſhe more ſingularly is called a Queene, being the mother of the King of kings.

Contra, 1. If Marie be no otherwiſe a Queene then all other Saints are, as it is ſaid, Apocal.1.6. He hath made vs Kings and Prieſts; then euery faithfull woman in earth is a Queene as wel as ſhe. 2. Why do you then robbe other Saints of this title, and giue it onely to her, if it be common to the reſt? 3. We are all indeed Kings and Prieſts, but vnto God, that is, ſpiritually, by faith, we are not made kings one to another. 4. As Marie was the mother of the King of kings, ſo was ſhe the mother of God; if the firſt make her a Queene, the ſecond muſt make her a Goddeſſe: and ſeeing Chriſt was a King, while he liued in the fleſh, and is noted to haue beene obedient to his parents, Luke 2.51. hee ſhould haue done his mother wrong, in not giuing vnto her the name of Queene, which was due vnto her.

2. She is called the Mother of mercie, becauſe ſhe was the mother of Chriſt, by whom we obtaine mercie: and for that ſhe prayeth dayly for mercie for vs, and obtayneth, ibid.

Contra. 1. Chriſt alſo is called the Sonne of Dauid, and the ſonne of Adam, Luk.3.18. Say alſo, that Adam and Dauid were likewiſe Fathers of mercie. 2. Marie obtaineth no mercie for vs: he only is our aduocate for mercie, that is the propitiation for our ſinnes, 1.Iohn 2.2. 3. Marie, while ſhe liued, had need of mercie herſelfe; acknowledging Chriſt to be her Sauiour, Luk.2. verſe 47.

3. She is called life, becauſe ſhe was the mother of Chriſt our life, and by him made the mother of all that liue ſpiritually; as Eua was the mother of all liuing the naturall life, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. It is a great blaſphemie to ſay that Marie is ſo the mother of the ſpiritual life, as Eua was of the naturall: what is this els, but to make Marie the Sauiour of the world? 2. The prerogatiue to be Chriſts mother ſpiritually, Chriſt giueth to all faithfull beleeuers and followers, Matthew 12.50. Will you ſay alſo that euery faithfull woman that ſpiritually beareth Chriſt, is life. 3. Ieruſalem, which is from aboue, is the mother of vs all: Galath.4.26. The Church of God is the mother of the ſpirituall life: haue we then two mothers? 4. Chriſt ſaith, I am the way and the life, Iohn 14.6. If Marie be the life, make her alſo the way.

4. Shee is called the ſweetneſſe, becauſe of the innumerable benefites wherewith ſhe continually comforteth the afflicted, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſal.38. Taſte and ſee how ſweete the Lord is, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him: will you haue alſo the Virgine Marie truſted in, or ſo truſted in, as that they are not bleſſed, that truſt not in her? 2. Chriſt ſaith, Ioh.14.16. I wil pray the Father, & he ſhal giue you another comforter: Doth he meane his mother ſhall be this comforter? or will you make two comforters, whereas Chriſt will ſend but another beſide himſelfe? how then is the Virgine Marie become a comforter of the afflicted? 3. S. Paul ſaith, God, which comforteth the abiect, comforted vs, 2.Cor.7.6. Is not God ſufficient to comfort the afflicted, but yee muſt alſo make the Virgine Marie a comforter? miſerable comforters are ye, that driue vs to ſuch comforts.

5. We may truſt in men, ſo that we chiefely truſt in God: as Chriſt ſaith of the Iewes, There is one which accuſeth you, euen Moſes in whom ye truſt, Iohn 4.45. and thus alſo may we truſt in the virgine Marie, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. By truſting in Moſes, our Sauiour vnderſtandeth Moſes law or Moſes writings: as to beleeue Moſes, is to beleeue Moſes writinges: Iohn 5.46.47. And where it is ſaide, Act.15.20. Moſes hath in euery citie them that preach him: is it to be vnderſtood of Moſes perſon, or Moſes doctrine? And thus the Iewes themſelues ſhew how they truſted in Moſes, Iohn 9.29. Wee are Moſes diſciples, we know that God ſpake by Moſes: their truſt then was in his doctrine. 2. But, that God onely is to be truſted in, the Prophet teacheth, Pſal.73.25. Whom haue I in heauen, but thee? S. Ambroſe well ſaith, writing vpon theſe wordes, 1.Cor.3. What is Paul, what is Apollos, but your Miniſters? Vt quia miniſtri ſunt, ſpes in his non ſit, ſed in Domino cuius miniſtri ſunt: Becauſe they are miniſters, let not truſt be in them, but in the Lord, whoſe Miniſters they are.

6. Like as S. Paul ſaith to Timothie, 1.Tim.4.16. Take heede vnto learning, and thou ſhalt both ſaue thy ſelfe and them that heare thee: and S. Iames 5.20. He that hath conuerted a ſinner, &c. ſhall ſaue a ſoule from death: as men may ſaue others by preaching, prayer, conuerting; ſo the Virgins prayer is ſayde to ſhewe vs Chriſt by her interceſſion, Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. 1. If Marie do but ſhew you Chriſt by her mediation, then other Saints, whom yee make your mediators, do as much; yet you do not pray in theſe tearmes vnto them. 2. Men as inſtrumentall meanes by their preaching and prayers are ſaid to ſaue others, becauſe theſe are duties preſcribed, and commanded in the word: as Preaching, 1. Timoth. 4. 16. Take heed vnto doctrine: Prayer, Iam. 5. 16. Pray one for another: but where hath Marie any ſuch office committed to her to ſhew vs Chriſt, or to be a Mediator to that end? 3. Chriſt ſaith, I will ſhew mine owne ſelfe vnto him: Iohn 14. 21. what need we then a Mediator to him, to ſhew himſelfe? Yea, and he himſelfe is our Mediator herein: Father I will, that they, which thou haſt giuen me, be with me, &c. that they may behold my glory, Iohn 17. 24. Do ye thinke that Chriſt is not a ſufficient Mediator of himſelfe, but that you muſt ioyne another with him? Thus we ſee, notwithſtanding all theſe ſhifts, and miſtie conceites, that they cannot bring any good defence or excuſe for this their idolatrous ſong of (Salue Regina.)

Now let vs ſee what teſtimonie wee haue from themſelues: Eſpenc. thus rehearſeth out of Algerus de Sacrament. lib. 3. c. 13. Multi aliqua erroris verba per imperitiam precatores effundunt, &c. in quibus multa reperiuntur contra catholicam fidem: Many in their prayers vnskilfully do vtter erronious wordes, &c. wherein many things are contayned, contrarie to the Catholike faith, digreſ. lib. 1. c. 11.

2. Nicolaus Clamengius thus complayned in his time: Qualiter hac tempeſtate legatur ſacer diuinæ legis Canon, &c. How in theſe dayes the diuine law is read, is manifeſt: vix ſola librorum capita inchoantur, &c. ſcarcely the titles of the bookes are read: I know a Cathedrall Church in this Kingdome, wherein, when the actes of the Saints are rehearſed, from the beginning to the ende, when as they come to the reading of Scripture, Lector ſingulis lectionibus vix quatuor lineas explet: the reader hardly endeth foure lines: ex citation. Eſpenc. ibid. This was another fault in the popiſh leiturgie, that they excluded the reading of Scripture.

3. Lodouicus Viues lib. 2. de corrupt. actib. giueth this teſtimonie of their legend: Quàm indigna diuis & hominibus ſanctorum hiſtoria, quam neſcio cur auream Legendam appellent, cùm ſcripta ſit ab homine ferrei oris, plumbei cordis: quid fœdius dici poteſt illo libro? &c. How vnworthie a ſtorie both for God and men, which I ſee no reaſon, they ſhould call a golden legend, ſeeing it was made by a man of iron lips, and a leaden heart: what can be ſaid to be more filthie then that booke? &c. Yet out of this booke the greateſt part of the leſſons vpon the Saints dayes were taken: Thus their leiturgie was filled with lies and fables.

4. Lindanus lib. 3, de interpret. ſcriptur. c. 3. reporteth theſe words of Agobertus Biſhop of Lions, Antiphonarium correximus, amputatis, quæ ſuperflua, leuia, falſa, blaſphema, ridicula, phantaſtica multa videbantur: We haue corrected the Antiphonary, cutting off many things that ſeemed ſuperfluous, light, falſe, blaſphemous, ridiculous, phantaſticall, &c. Is not here a goodly beadrowle of the vertues and ſingular qualities of their holy leiturgie? and theſe are the complaints of their owne ſide: and therefore we can iudge no leſſe, but that their popiſh prayers and ſongs are ridiculous, blaſphemous, ſuperſtitious, &c.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MANner of their Church-ſeruice.

COncerning their Church muſicke, and the ſinging of their ſeruice, we haue ſhewed our opinion before, where we entreated of the Canon of the Maſſe: We do not condemne the commendable vſe of ſinging in the Church, which ſerueth to many good purpoſes, but wee onely would haue the abuſe remoued: the chiefe faultes committed in popiſh Church muſicke are theſe.

1. The yrkeſome length and tediouſneſſe thereof, produced with their multiplicitie of vnedifying ſongs and leſſons: which abuſe hath beene much complayned of in time paſt: opuſcul. tripartit. lib. 3. cap. 1. In multis Eccleſijs faciunt lectiones adeo prolixas in matutinis, quòd ferè nullus audiat totas matutinas, & ſiqui remanent ibi, dormiunt: In many Churches they make their leſſons ſo long at morning ſeruice, that few tary the whole; and they that ſtay, fall aſleepe.

2. Their ſongs are ſet forth in an vnedifying tongue, contrary to Saint Pauls rule, 1. Cor. 14. But of this matter we haue alreadie entreated at large, Controu. 1. appendic. ad tertiam queſtionem: ſo that we need not to handle it againe here.

3. They ſing that, which is not to be ſung, as the leſſons and lectures out of Scriptures, and prayers, which are to be ſaid, and not ſung: as Hierome ſaith; Non decet orantem canere: hee that prayeth muſt not ſing: præfation. lib. 2. in Habacuke.

The Apoſtle alſo diſtinguiſheth prayer and ſinging, Is any afflicted? let him pray: is any merry? let him ſing, Iam. 5. 13.

Concil. Bracarenſ.1.30. Placuit, vt nihil veteris Teſtamenti poeticè compoſitum in Eccleſia pſallatur: That no part of the olde Teſtament ſhould be ſung in verſe. The decree is againſt the ſinging of leſſons. Other corruptions and imperfections in their ſinging ſeruice, we haue noted before, in the treatiſe of the canon of the Maſſe, whither we referre the Reader.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE PERSONS THAT are bound to the Canonicall houres.

The Papiſts.

93. Error. THis duetie, ſaith Bellarmine, belongeth onely to Monkes, and thoſe which are of the Clergie.

Argum. 1.Chron.15.16. Dauid ſpake to the chiefe of the Leuites to appoint certaine of their brethren to ſing with inſtruments of Muſicke. As the Leuites were bound in the time of the lawe, to ſing the ſongs of the Church, ſo onely are the Monkes and Clergie now.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, the argument followeth not, becauſe the Leuites then were deputed to the office of ſinging, that therefore the Clergie is onely bound to doe it now: for that legall diſtinction betweene the Prieſts and the people, is now taken away: And Chriſt hath made vs all Kings and Prieſts now, Apocal.1.6. to offer vp the ſpirituall ſacrifice of praiſe and thankeſgiuing. Secondly, the Leuites did not onely ſing the ſongs of the Church, but they as more skilfull men, were appoynted to moderate the voyce of the people, who did ſing together with the Leuites, 1.Chron.15.28. All Iſrael (not the Leuites onely) brought vp the Arke with the ſound of inſtruments, chap.16.36. Let all the people ſay ſo be it, and praiſe the Lord. Thirdly, your Monkes either are, or ought to be no Prieſts, but lay men; and are not therefore of the Leuiticall order, and yet you permit them to ſing Pſalmes: why may not other lay men doe the like? Fourthly, we graunt that all things ſhould be done in the Church in order: and therefore that it is the office of the Miniſter to moderate the aſſemblies of the people in their Chriſtian exerciſes of giuing of thankes, and prayer: But notwithſtanding the people may ioyne with their Paſtor, both with voyce and conſent of heart, in the common Pſalmes and prayer, ſo that all things be done decently, and in order.

Argum. The People in Dauids time did vſe to praiſe God together with the Leuites, 1.Chro. 16.36. In Nehemiah his time, at the dedication of the Temple, the people praiſed God together with the Leuites, chap.12.31. I appoynted two great companies to giue thankes, and the one went on the right hand of the wall, &c. And in theſe companies were the people, verſ.38. halfe of the people was vpon the wall. The Ieſuite alſo brought in Dauids example, who praiſed God ſeuen times a day, for the warrant of his canonicall houres: But Dauid was neither Monke nor Prieſt: wherefore the office of praiſe and thankeſgiuing belongeth not onely to ſuch.

THE SECOND PART OF FASTING, the particulars whereof follow.

The Papiſts.

94. Error. FIrſt, they hold that the holy time of Lent, as they doe fondly call it, as though any time in their ſenſe were holier than another, is an Apoſtolike tradition, warranted by the example of Moſes, Elias, and our Sauiour Chriſt, that faſted 40. dayes, Rhemiſt. Matth.4.ſect.2. Bellarm.lib.2.de bon. opereb.cap.14.

Bellarmine further ſheweth ſeauen cauſes of the inſtitution of Lent.

1. That Chriſtians may ſolemnely repent for the ſinnes of the whole yeere.
2. That they may be prepared to receiue the Communion at Eaſter.
3. To fulfill that ſaying of Chriſt, Matth.9.15. When the Bridegrome ſhall be taken away, then ſhall they faſt.
4. That they may be prepared to celebrate the feaſt of Chriſts paſſion and reſurrection.
5. That they might faſt and pray, for ſuch as were newly conuerted to the faith, which were baptized at Eaſter.
6. That wee might conſecrate by faſting vnto God the tenth part of our life, for 36. dayes are the tenth of the yeere.
7. That hereby wee ſhould imitate Chriſt, ſo neere as wee can, that faſted 40. dayes and 40. nights: Bellarm.cap.16.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. FIrſt, ſhall it then ſuffice a man once in the yeere to repent for his ſins? Is not the Lords prayer daily to be ſayd, wherein wee pray for remiſſion of ſinnes, which cannot be obtained without repentance? Secondly, or was it Lent, when Peter exhorted the people to publike repentance, Act.2.38. Repent and be baptized. Thirdly, Quid enim quod differas, vt plura peccata committas? Why ſhould you deferre your repentance, to commit more ſinnes, ſaith *Ambroſe de pœnit. lib.2.c.*11. This therefore could be no cauſe of the inſtitution of Lent.

2. In the Primitiue Church they receiued the Communion often, euen euery Lords day at the leaſt: Act.20.7. The firſt day of the weeke, (which is the Lordes day) they came together to eate bread. Saint Ambroſe: Accipe quotidie, quod tibi quotidie proſit: qui non meretur quotidie accipere, non meretur poſt annum accipere: Receiue that daily, which thou haſt vſe of daily: hee that is not fit to receiue daily, is not fit after a yeere: *de ſacram lib.*5.*c.*4. If Lent were inſtituted vpon this occaſion, it was no Apoſtolicall inſtitution: for then the Communion was miniſtred often, and not onely at Eaſter.

3. Firſt, that ſaying of Chriſt was ſpoken onely to his Apoſtles, that enioyed his carnall preſence. Secondly, if it be largely taken, then the Montaniſts did come neerer to the ſenſe, that obſerued the Lenton faſt ſtraight after Chriſts aſcenſion. Thirdly, or if they will expound the taking away of the Bridegrome, of Chriſts death, by this reaſon they ſhould not faſt before the celebration of the paſſion, but after.

4. Firſt, by this reaſon, we muſt haue a Lent alſo before the Natiuitie, and another before Pentecoſt, ſeeing theſe alſo are great feaſts, and a preparation ought to goe before. Secondly, this proueth Lent not to be Apoſtolicall, ſeeing the feaſt of Eaſter was not then vniformely obſerued, nor many yeeres after. Thirdly, the Sabboth was as great a feſtiuall as any beſide, being immediatly inſtituted of God: yet one day of preparation ſufficed for that.

5. Firſt, we haue now no Catechumeni, or Conuerts from Paganiſme: therfore by this reaſon, the Lenton obſeruation ſhould ceaſe, hauing no vſe that way. Secondly, neither did the Apoſtles deferre the baptiſme of Conuerts til Eaſter, but baptized them, as occaſion ſerued: Act.2.38. S Peter ſaith at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Repent and be baptized, &c. Wherefore this reaſon ſheweth, that Lent was not Apoſtolicall.

6. Firſt, if 36. daies be the tenth of the yere, why do you obſerue 40. daies for the Lenton faſt? Secondly, theſe fellowes will ſet God to ſchoole, that hee ſhould rather haue taken the tenth day for the Sabboth, than the ſeauenth; ſo ſtrict they are in tithing of dayes. Thirdly, not the tenth day, but euery day of our life ought to be conſecrate to God; as Ambroſe ſaith of Iob: Sanctus Iob quotidie pro filÿs offerebat ſacrificium: Holy Iob euery day offered ſacrifice for his ſonnes: *de ſacram. lib.*5.*c.*4.

7. Firſt, *Ambroſe ſerm.*23. Quadrageſima quadraginta duos dies habet, &c. Lent hath 42. dayes according to Moſes 42. manſions: *ſerm.*34. He deriueth this obſeruation from Noahs flood, quia tot dierum ſpatio pluuiæ defluxerunt: becauſe ſo many dayes the raine was in falling, &c. If this bee ſo, then is it not grounded vpon the imitation of Chriſt. Secondly, Moſes faſted 40. dayes, and Elias; yet none in the old law did inſtitute a faſt vpon this example: neither are wee to ground the like vpon Chriſts miraculous abſtinence now. Thirdly, that faſting of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the holie Prophets was miraculous, and no more to be imitated, than Chriſts walking on the ſea, or raiſing of the dead, as Auguſtine ſaith: Non tibi dicit, non eris diſcipulus meus, &c. Hee ſaith not, thou ſhalt not be my diſciple, vnleſſe thou walke vpon the ſea, or raiſe the dead, but learne of me, becauſe I am humble and meeke. Againe he ſaith, Non ergo, quia Chriſtus ſtatim poſt baptiſma ieiunauit, tanquam regulam obſeruationis tradidiſſe credendus eſt, ſed plane illo exemplo docuit ieiunandum eſſe, quando forte acriore luctamine cum tentatione confligitur: In that Chriſt faſted after his Baptiſme, it is not to be thought, that he gaue vs a rule to obſerue, but taught vs by his example, that then wee muſt faſt, when we are more ſtrongly tempted.

Præfat.in Pſal.30.

George Marſh holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Let the faſting of Chriſt while hee was tempted in the wilderneſſe, be vnto vs an example of ſober liuing, not for the ſpace of fortie daies, (as the Papiſts doe fondly fanſie of their owne braine) but as long as we are in the wilderneſſe of this wretched life.

Further, that the obſeruation of Lent was no Apoſtolike tradition, it appeareth, becauſe it was not vniformely kept of the Church a long time after them: for as Ireneus witneſſeth, ſome faſted one day, ſome two dayes, ſome fortie houres day and night: but if it had been neceſſarily inioyned and preſcribed by the Apoſtles, ſuch varietie of cuſtome could not haue ſprong vp; at the leaſt, not haue been ſuffered in the Church. Againe, Epiphanius ſaith, that the Wedneſdayes faſt was an Apoſtolike tradition; as likewiſe to obſerue the feaſt of the ſixe daies of Eaſter, with bread, ſalt, and water: which obſeruations are not kept amongſt the Papiſts themſelues, yet haue they as good teſtimonie of antiquitie to be Apoſtolike traditions, as the Lent faſt. Thirdly, in Auguſtines time, there was no neceſſarie enforcement for euery man to keepe Lent: Si aliquis (ſaith he) ieiunare non poteſt, eleemoſyna ſine ieiunio bona eſt: If any man be not able to faſt, almes without faſting is good and profitable. Wherefore ſeeing the Lent faſt was then voluntarie, it is euident that it was not an Apoſtolike preſcription, which ſhould haue bound all men neceſſarily.

Serm.de tempor.62.

That Lent is no Apoſtolicall tradition, it further appeareth, both becauſe of the vncertaine preſcript of the time, as alſo the diuerſitie of the manner in keeping the ſtrict time of Lent.

As touching the firſt, it was decreed : Concil. Aurelianenſ.4.can.2. Vt quadrageſima æqualiter ab omnibus teneatur, non quinquageſima, aut ſexageſima : That fortie dayes ſhould be obſerued for Lent, not fiftie, or threeſcore. Agathenſ.can.12. Vt omnes in quadrageſima exceptis diebus dominicis ieiunent : That euery man ſhould faſt fortie daies, excepting the Lords dayes. Gregorie the firſt, Quadrageſimali ieiunio 4. dies addidit, to the fortie dayes faſt added foure dayes more. Par.3.diſt.5.c.16. Teleſphorus Biſhop of Rome decreed, Vt 7. hebdomadas plenas ante paſcha omnes clerici à carne ieiunent : That Clergie men ſhould faſt ſeuen whole weekes before Eaſter, that is 49. dayes. Diſt.4.c.4. Concil. Triburienſ.can.58. They which had committed murther, were inioyned thrice in a yeere to faſt fortie dayes, before Eaſter, before S. Iohn Baptiſts day, and before the Natiuitie. And thus wee ſee ſome faſted fortie dayes, ſome fortie ſauing the ſixe Lords dayes, ſome 44. ſome 49. ſome. 120. dayes, that is three Lents.

Further, thus it is extant in their own decrees: Diſtinct.4.c.6. Gregor. Sacerdotes à quinquageſima propoſitum ieiunandi ſuſcipiant: The Prieſts muſt begin to faſt from the 50. day: contr. par.3.diſt.3.c.6. Quadrageſ. non quinquageſ. teneatur.

Diſtinct.76.c.8. Quadrageſimæ ieiunijs contriſtaremur : Wee muſt ſorrow with the faſt of fortie dayes. Ambroſ ſerm.23. Quadrageſima quadraginta duos dies habet : Lent hath 42. dayes.

Diſt.76.c.10. Poſt paſcha, &c. After the Paſch to Pentecoſt, they that will may faſt : quia Antonius, Paulus, & cæteri patres his diebus in eremo leguntur abſtinuiſſe, neque ſoluiſſe abſtinentiam, niſi tantum die dominico : Becauſe Antonie, Paul, and other fathers are read to haue faſted theſe dayes, neither to haue looſed their faſt, but onely vpon the Lordes day, &c. Here is another Lenton faſt from the Paſch to Pentecoſt tolerated.

Par.3.diſt.5.c.16. Gregor. Sex dies dominici de abſtinentia ſubtracti, &c. Sixe Lords dayes are taken from the faſt, and ſo there remaine but 36. and to fill vp the number of fortie dayes, he borroweth foure dayes from the weeke before.

Ibid.c.25. Quadrageſimam abſtinentia celebramus, cùm bene viuimus, &c. We keep the Lenton faſt, when we liue well : ex Auguſtin. By this decree there ſeemeth to be no neceſſitie of the Lenton faſt at all. And this difference we finde for the time of Lent.

The like diuerſitie is to be ſeene in the manner of the obſeruation : Liberius decreed, that the husband all Lent long ſhould abſent himſelfe from his wife. Concil. Triburienſ.can.35. That no Iudge ſhould keepe aſſiſes in Lent time : Yet the contrarie is practiſed euen among the Papiſts : Toletan.10.cap.1. Quadrageſima nihil conuenit, de ſanctorum ſolemnitatibus celebrari : That no Saints dayes ſhould be kept in Lent: Yet the Annuntiation falleth in Lent, which they make a feſtiuall of our Ladie. Nicolaus 1. de bellis, can.4. That all Lent time they muſt abſtaine from warre. Salegunſtad.cap.19. Vt dum pœnitens quadrageſimam ieiunet, non migret à loco ad locum : That while the penitent man keepeth his Lent, he ſhould not trauell from place to place.

Beſide : Cod. lib.3. tit.12. leg.6. Tempore quadrageſimæ criminales cauſæ non agitandæ : In Lent time criminall cauſes muſt not be handled.

Cauſ.22.qu.5.c.17. Non iurandum à ſeptuageſima : From Septuageſima Sunday till Eaſter no man muſt ſweare.

Cauſ.33.qu.4.c.3. Diebus ieiuniorum nullus coniungatur vxori : No man muſt in the faſting dayes haue companie with his wife.

C.8. Non nuptias celebrare : It is not lawfull to celebrate mariage.

C.9. Nec natalitia martyrum : Nor the Saints dayes.

C.11. Nec conuiuia facere: Nor to make feaſts in Lent.

Part.3.diſt.1.c.50. Non niſi veſpertina hora ieiunium ſoluant: The faſt muſt not be looſed till the euening.

Thus by thoſe vncertainties it may appeare, that the Lenton faſt is an húmane inuention, rather than an Apoſtolicall inſtitution : for then it ſhould haue remained alwaies the ſame, without any addition, or alteration : the contrarie whereof we haue ſeene.

The Papiſts.

95. Error. 2. A Second abuſe in their faſting, is to appoynt preſcript times, neceſſarily to faſt in, as in Lent, on Friday, Saturday, and vpon Ember dayes, which are preſcribed for the foure ſolemne times of giuing orders : And this alſo they ſay, is an Apoſtolike tradition, Act.13.3. They faſted and prayed, and layd their hands vpon them, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellar. lib.2. de bon. operib. in particul. cap.17.18.

2. Bellarmine alſo groundeth the foure quarters faſts vpon the example of the Iewes, Zach.8. verſ.19. that faſted the fourth, fift, ſeuenth, and tenth moneths : but Chriſtians ſhould not be inferiour to them in faſting.

3. Likewiſe, Act.27.9. where Saint Luke ſaith, ſayling was now ieopardous, becauſe the faſt was paſſed: Bellarmine would haue this vnderſtood not of the faſt of the Iewes, but of the ſolemne faſt of the Chriſtians in the tenth moneth: *Bellarm.c.*19.

4. Other faſts alſo he vrgeth, as the faſt of Aduent, the faſt in Rogation weeke, the Vigill faſts, or on Saints eeues, as very ancient, and commendable, and fit ſtill to be retained, *cap.*20.21.22.

The Proteſtants.

*Anſ.*1. FOr prayer and faſting to be vſed at ſuch times as Miniſters are ordained, we doubt not but it is an Apoſtolike tradition, becauſe we finde it written in the Acts of the Apoſtles: but it was faſting from all meate and drinke, which the Apoſtles vſed, not abſtinence from fleſh onely, as vpon your Imber dayes. Neither doe you obſerue thoſe dayes of faſt for any ſuch purpoſe: for your Imber dayes are kept amongſt you, though there be no orders giuen in the whole dioces.

2. It is not fit that Chriſtians ſhould imitate the ſuperſtitious faſts of the Iewes: ſuch as theſe were not commaunded of God, but inuented and taken vp by themſelues: as the Prophet Zacharie reproueth them, Zach.7.5 When ye faſted and mourned in the fift and ſeuenth moneth; did ye faſt vnto me? 2. Againe, thoſe faſts were taken vp among the Iewes vpon ſpeciall occaſions: the faſt of the fourth moneth, becauſe then the citie was broken vp, Iere.52.6.7. of the fift, when the temple was deſtroyed, Ierem.52.12. of the ſeuenth, when Gedaliah was ſlaine, Ierem.41.1. of the tenth, when the citie began to be beſieged, Iere.52.4. But ſeeing that the Chriſtians haue no ſuch occaſions, as theſe were to the Iewes, they haue no reaſon to keepe the like faſts. 3. Origen to this point ſaith well: Paulus dicit,&c. Paul ſaith, if thou wilt obſerue any one of the obſeruations of the law, thou art ſubiect to the whole lawe: Qui ergo obſeruat ieiunia, aſcendat ter in anno ad Ieruſalem: Hee therefore that will obſerue their faſts, let him goe vp thrice a yeere to Ieruſalem: Hom.9.in Leuitic.

3. Saint Luke deſcribeth the ſolemne faſt of the Iewes, which was about October, when as ſayling began to be ieopardous; as both Chryſoſtome and Oecumenius do interprete it: And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, that Saint Luke wrote an hiſtorie for the Chriſtians, not for the Iewes: it is true, but yet he diſtinguiſheth the times by the feaſts of the Iewes: as Act.20. hee nameth Pentecoſt: yea hee refuſeth not by way of deſcription to vſe the Heathen names, as of Caſtor and Pollux, Acts 28.11. which was the badge of a ſhip.

4. As touching theſe ſet times of faſt, there hath been great diuerſitie and vncertaintie in the Church, whereby it appeareth to be a meere humane conſtitution.

Concerning the foure ſolemne faſts of the yeere: firſt, at the firſt there were but three; Calixtus made them foure, *diſt.76.c.*1. Secondly, they were appoynted to be celebrated; the firſt weeke of March, the ſecond of Iune, the third weeke of September, the fourth weeke of December: *ex Synod.Moguntin.diſt.*76.*c.*2. Thirdly, after this another rule was made, Synod.Salegunſtad. that if the Calends of March fell out vpon Friday, Saturday, Sunday, the quarter faſt ſhould be kept the ſecond weeke of March: and ſo vpon the like occaſion, the third weeke of Iune, the fourth weeke of September, &c. Fourthly, Vrbanus concil.Placentin. taketh a new order, that the firſt time ſhould be in the beginning of Lent, the ſecond in Pentecoſt weeke, *diſt.76.c.*4. Fiftly, *Eliberin.c.*23. Ieiunia per ſingulos menſes placuit celebrari, exceptis diebus Iulij, Auguſti, ob eorundem infirmitatem,&c. Faſts muſt be kept euery moneth, except Iuly, Auguſt, which are but faint moneths. Sixtly, *Concil. Gerundenſ.c.*2. Sequenti die poſt Pentecoſten, & calendis Nouembris per triduum ieiunetur: Let them faſt the day after Pentecoſt, and in the Calends of Nouember for three dayes ſpace. Seuenthly, *Turonn.c.*18. Poſt quinquageſimam Monachi tota hebdomada ieiunent, poſtea vſque ad calendas Auguſti ter in Septimana,&c. After Pentecoſt the Monkes muſt faſt a whole weeke; and then till the Calends of Auguſt thrice in a weeke; September whole; in Nouember thrice in a weeke; in December till the Natiuitie euery day. Eightly, *Matiſconenſ.*1.9. A feria S.Martini vſque ad natalem, ſecunda, quarta, & ſexta ieiunent: From S.Martins day (which is the 11. of Nouember) vntill the Natiuitie, let them faſt, Monday, Wedneſday, Friday.

If all theſe times be laid together, we ſhould doe nothing elſe but faſt all the yeere long: Thus it falleth out, that when men leaue the ſimplicitie of trueth, and certaine direction of the word to follow their owne inuentions, they erre infinitely, and wander they know not whither.

5. Preſcript and ſet times of ciuill abſtinence frō ſome meats, for the benefit of the Commonwealth, as your Lent and Imber dayes, are ſtill retained in England, and no otherwiſe, wee condemne not: But to appoynt ordinarie times of neceſſarie and religious faſting, without ſpeciall cauſe, was of the ancient Church accounted hereſie in *Montanus, Euſeb.lib.5.cap.*18.

This alſo was the practiſe of the Church of God in the old Teſtament, vpon ſpeciall occaſion, not at ſet and ordinarie times, to inioyne publike faſting, as the Prophet ſaith, Blow the Trumpet in Sion, ſanctifie a faſt, call a ſolemne aſſemblie, Ioel 2.15. which ſheweth that their publike faſts were not vſuall and ordinarie, but eſpecially ſanctified, and ſolemnely proclaimed.

6 As for the fixed and ſet faſting dayes in the weeke, in Auguſtines time, onely the Churches of Rome kept the Saturdayes faſt, all the Eaſt Churches, and many of the Weſt obſerued it not. And whereas ſome alleaged, that Peter faſted vpon Saturday, being the next day, which was the Lords day, to encounter with Simon Magus, Auguſtine ſaith, it was opinio plurimorum, the opinion of many, quam tamen falſam eſſe perhibent plerique Romani: yet many of the Romanes hold it but for a fable. And ſo he generally concludeth, concerning preſcript dayes of faſting: Quibus diebus non oporteat ieiunare, & quibus oporteat, præcepto Domini vel Apoſtolorum non inuenio definitum: Vpon what dayes we ought to faſt, vpon what dayes not, I finde it not defined by any precept giuen by our Lord or any of the Apoſtles, Epiſtol.86.

Concil. Colonienſ. part.9. cap.4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci, modò id vel charitas, vel neceſſitas ſuadeat, adhibito tamen vtriuſque medici ſi præſto ſint, aut ſaltem alterius, i. animæ conſilio: The Church giueth libertie to eate all things at all times, where charitie, or neceſſitie requireth, with the counſell of both Phiſitions, or at the leaſt of the phiſition of the ſoule: Ergo, preſcript times of faſt by this Councell are not allowed, where all things at all times are lawfull to be eaten.

7. And concerning the Saturdayes faſt, it is directly forbidden in yͤ ſixe general Trullane Councel. can.55. Si quis inuentus fuerit in ſancto dominico vel ſabbato ieiunans, ſi Clericus deponatur: If any man faſt the Lordes day, or the Sabboth day, if hee be a Clergie man, let him be depoſed; if a lay man, let him be put from the Communion.

Likewiſe, can. Apoſtol.65. Ieiunans diem dominicum aut Sabbatum, vno tantum dempto, deponitor: He that faſteth th Lords day, or Saturday, one day onely excepted, let him be depoſed.

How dare then Innocentius contradict the Apoſtles Canons, thus decreeing, epiſt.1.c.4. Sexta feria & ſabbato perpetuo ieiunandum eſſe: Friday and Saturday muſt be kept continually faſt.

Honor.3. doth alſo contradict this decree: That if the day of the Natiuitie fall vpon Friday, it ſhould not be kept faſt: decr. Greg. lib.3. tit.46. c.3. how then doth Innocentius decree ſtand, perpetuo ieiunandum, that we muſt faſt Friday for euer?

8. It is euident, that this preſcription of faſting dayes is contrarie to the doctrine of the Apoſtle: Galat.4.10. Ye obſerue dayes, moneths, times, yeeres: ſo they faſt certaine dayes euery weeke: and certaine moneths euery quarter, and certaine times euery yeere, as in Lent: and they obſerue alſo for yeeres the yeere of Iubile.

Origen well ſaith, Hom.9. in Leuitic. Si vis ieiunare ſecundum Chriſtum, omne tibi tempus aptum eſt totius anni: If thou wilt faſt according to Chriſt, all the time of the whole yeere is fit, &c. And Hom.10. in Leuitic. Eſt certe libertas Chriſtiana per omne tempus ieiunandi non obſeruantiæ ſuperſtitione, ſed virtute continentiæ: It is Chriſtian libertie to faſt at any time, not of a ſuperſtitious obſeruation, but of a vertuous continencie.

Hierome alſo: Vtinam omni tempore ieiunare poſſimus, &c. I would we might faſt at all times, as the Apoſtles did in Pentecoſt, and vpon the Lords day: diſt.76. c.11. This ſuperſtitious addicting of times and dayes to faſt, miſliked theſe fathers.

The holy Martyrs haue witneſſed this truth: Thomas Loſeby, Henry Ramſey, Thomas Thirtell, and others, put to death, for ſaying, that the appoynting of dayes for faſting, and abſtaining from fleſh vpon faſting dayes, and eſpecially in the time of Lent, is not allowable by Gods word, but is hypocriſie, and that men ought to haue libertie at all times to eate all kindes of meate: Fox pag.1975.

The Papiſts.

3. A Third abuſe in popiſh faſting, is the difference that they make betweene meates and drinkes: as the forbidding of fleſh-eating vpon faſting dayes for more holines, and the eating of egges, butter, and cheeſe in Lent: as it was decreed at Lucerna in Heluetia, anno 1524. Fox.pag.867. Abſtinence alſo from ſome meates vpon certaine daies for religion, is warranted by the Rhemiſts; as God prohibited Adam the eating of ſome fruites in Paradiſe for obedience, and in the law for ſignification, Annot.1.Timoth.4.ſect.6.

Bellarmine being here charged, that the Papiſts differ very little from the old Heretikes the Tatianes and Manichees, which condemned the eating of fleſh as vncleane in it ſelfe; would thus excuſe the matter.

Firſt, they condemne not fleſh abſolutely, becauſe out of Lent they allow it. Secondly, and in Lent to thoſe that are ſicke. Thirdly, and though ſome Monkes, as of Bennets order and the Cathuſians doe altogether abſtaine from fleſh, no man is compelled to be of that order; neither doe they iudge or condemne others that eate fleſh, Bellar.cap.4.

Anſw. Firſt, that which the Manichees counted alwaies vncleane, the Papiſts in times prohibited hold to be vncleane: what elſe moued B. Stokeſlie to cauſe poore Frebarnes pigge to be buried in Finsburie field, for the which his wife longed? See afterward Err.99. they are therfore halfe Manichees. Secondly, neither did the Manichees compell any to be of their ſect, and as Auguſtine ſaith, Eſcarum vſum diſcipulis permittunt: They allowed their diſciples to eate fleſh: cont. Adimant. cap.15. as the Carthuſian Monkes allow others. Thirdly, this ſheweth they count fleſh vncleane, becauſe they vſe other delicate meates with wine and ſpices, which doe more prouoke luſt, than fleſh doth: as Auguſtine writeth of ſome: Ipſa vaſa, in quibus cocta carnes, &c. They feare as vncleane the veſſels wherein fleſh is ſod, but they feare not the immoderate filling of their bellie. Serm.57.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, now Antichriſt ſheweth himſelfe in his colours, making it as lawfull for him, to forbid the vſe of ſome meates for religion, now vnder the Goſpell, when God hath made them all lawfull and free, as God himſelfe might forbid the vſe of ſome, for obedience in Paradiſe, or ſignification in the Law. Secondly, Saint Paul calleth it the doctrine of diuels, to commaund to abſtaine from meates, 1.Timoth.4.3. Again, Let no man condemne you in meate and drinke, Coloſ.2. verſ.16. The Rhemiſts anſwere, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in the firſt place againſt thoſe heretikes, that condemned meates as euill by creation, ſuch were the Manichees: and in the ſecond, againſt the Iudaicall obſeruation of meates. But they onely prohibit the vſe of ſome meates for the chaſtiſing of the bodie.

Anſw. Firſt, not onely the Manichees and other heretikes preferred ſome meates before other, as more holie, but euen the Papiſts alſo in the preſcript times of their faſts doe commaund to abſtaine from meates for pietie and religion: and therefore they are counted moſt holie amongſt them that neuer eate fleſh. And Durand teſtifieth, that fiſh in interdict dayes, is rather vſed than fleſh, becauſe fleſh and not fiſh was accurſed in the dayes of Noah. Durand.lib.6. de alijs ieiunijs. Yea they commaund abſtinence from meates vnder paine of damnation: what is this elſe, but with the old heretikes to condemne the creatures of God themſelues? Secondly, the popiſh prohibition of meates, is no leſſe ſuperſtitious, than was the Iewes: For they prohibited ſuch meates alſo, as by the law were counted vncleane, as to eate beaſts that died alone, or were torne with beaſts, or ſtrangled, or touched any vncleane beaſt, as likewiſe they inioyned penance to them, that did eate or drinke, where a dogge or cat had lapped, or a mouſe had been drowned, and ſuch like, *Fulk. annot. 1. Timoth.*4. ſect.6.

Thus Pope Zacharie giuing inſtructions to Boniface, forbiddeth him to eate, Ciconias, & Lepores, Storkes, and Hares or Conies: and as touching Lardum, Larde or Porke, he giueth counſell, that it ſhould not be eaten, priuſquam ſuper fumo ſiccetur, aut igne coquatur, before it be dried in the ſmoke, or boyled with fire.

So Synod. Trullan. can.67. Damnamus eos, qui cuiuſcunque animalis ſanguinem aliqua arte condiunt, & ſic comedunt: We condemne thoſe, that doe dreſſe the blood of any beaſt by arte, and ſo eate it. A graue decree for a Councell to forbid the eating of puddings. Vormatienſ. can.65. Si porci cadauer manducauerint, carnes eorum comedere non licet, vſque dum macerantur per annum: If ſwine chaunce to eate a carion, their fleſh muſt not be eaten, till they haue been dried a yeere.

I pray you how farre are they now from the ſuperſtition of the Iewes? Nay they goe beyond them: for the legall difference of meates for ſignification, was inſtituted of God for thoſe times: but this ſuperſtitious diſtinction of meates vnder the Goſpell, which giueth vs the free vſe of all the creatures of God, which are ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1.Tim.4.5. is brought in by Antichriſt, who is an enemie vnto God.

3. Neither doe they abſtaine from fleſh and other meates for chaſtiſing of the fleſh: for they permit the vſe of all other meates vpon their faſting dayes, that may prouoke luſt, fleſh only excepted, as the eating of ſpices, and other daintie and delicate confections, the drinking of wine, and all kinde of fiſh. De moribus Manich. lib.2. cap.13. Euen like as Auguſtine reporteth of the Manichees, that would drinke no wine, nor eate fleſh: but in ſtead of wine, they had Pomorum nonnullorum expreſſos ſuccos vini ſpeciem ſatis imitantes, atque id etiam ſuauitate vincentes: The ſweete liquor of pleaſant fruites like to wine in colour, but excelling it in ſweetnes: and for fleſh they had their ſtraunge and exquiſite fruits, with great varietie of diſhes, ſeaſoned and ſtrawed with pepper. This was the Manichees faſt: and this is the popiſh cuſtome in their faſtings at this day.

Hereof Hierome thus complained: ad Neopotian. Audio quoſdam aquam non bibere, nec veſci pane, ſed ſorbitiunculas delicatas non calice ſorbere, ſed concha: I heare how ſome will drinke no water, nor eate bread, but yet drinke not out of a cup, but in a ſhell more delicate ſuppings.

Decret.30.c.13. Siquis carnem manducantem ex fide cum religione: If any man condemne one eating of fleſh in faith, with religion, let him be accurſed, &c. But the Papiſts condemne one eating fleſh in Lent. Ergo.

Decret. diſtinct.41.c.1. Fieri poteſt, vt ſine aliquo vitio cupiditatis ſapiens precioſiſſimo cibo vtatur, &c. It may ſo fall out, that a wiſe or godly man may vſe a moſt precious meate, without any vicious luſt, and affect ſinne in eating courſe herbes, &c. Sanius quiſque maluerit piſce veſci more domini, quam lenticula, &c. A man were better to eate fiſh as Chriſt did, than Lentiles with Eſau, &c.

Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo, can.35. Ille magis parſimoniæ ſeruire cenſendus eſt, qui ſibi non ſolum quarundam rerum perceptiones, ſed delectationes corporis penitus interdicit: Hee is thought to be more giuen to parſimonie, which doth not only refraine from receiuing ſome things, but euen from the pleaſures of the bodie. Concil.Colonienſ.part.9.cap.5. Admonendus eſt populus, cùm ieiunandum erit non minus prolixa & ſumptuoſa illa piſcium fercula, quàm carnium vitanda; bellaria item illa, magis, quàm carnes inflammantia: The people muſt be admoniſhed, that when they faſt, they ought no leſſe to refraine from the long and ſumptuous ſeruices of fiſh, as from the fleſh diſhes, and from thoſe iunkets, that do inflame no leſſe than fleſh. But our aduerſaries are farre off from keeping theſe rules in their faſts.

George Marſh Martyr, thus witneſſeth: In this poynt doth our ſuperſtition exceede the ſuperſtition of the Iewes, when we abſtaine from one thing, and fill our bellies with another: Fox pag.1570.

Laurence Staple perſecuted becauſe he vſed to eate egges on Friday, and thought it was no great offence vnto God. pag.1043.

Now if our aduerſaries forbeare ſome meates for chaſtiſement of the bodie, why might it not be as lawfull to eate butter, and egges, in the time of Lent, as vpon other faſting daies: but that they make difference of the times, as one being holier than another, and ſo alſo a difference of meates, ſome being more agreeable to holie times, than other?

Wherefore to conclude this point: ciuill abſtinence from fleſh, as for policie ſake, and the better maintenance of the Common-wealth, that there ſhould be a vent for fiſh, as well as for fleſh, and that euery man might liue of his trade and calling: as alſo for the health of the bodie, to abſtaine from hurtfull meates: as likewiſe to keepe a temperate and ſober diet, and to take heede of ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe: theſe kindes of abſtinence, in making difference of meates, we miſlike not: but for pietie or religions ſake to diſtinguiſh them, it is to too great ſuperſtition.

Our arguments further out of Scripture againſt the difference of meates, are theſe.

1. Matth.15.11. That which goeth into the mouth, defileth not the man.

2. 1.Corinth.10.25. Whatſoeuer is ſold in the ſhambles, eate yee, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake.

3. Coloſſ.2.20. If ye be dead with Chriſt from the ordinances of the world, why are ye burthened with traditions, touch not, taſte not, handle not?

4. 1.Timoth.4.3. Forbidding to marrie and commanding to abſtayne from meates, the Apoſtle calleth the doctrine of diuels: Ergo, a difference of meates for religion or conſcience ſake is ſuperſtitious.

1. Bellarm. Meates properly defile not the ſoule, but by reaſon of the concupiſcence ioyned with them; as in gluttonie, drunkenneſſe and diſobedience.

Contra. 1. In gluttonie, drunkennes, the concupiſcence commeth from within that defileth, namely the vnſatiable greedineſſe of the fleſh: otherwiſe it is not the quantitie or qualitie of the meate which entreth that defileth. 2. Likewiſe diſobedience proceedeth from the heart, comprehended vnder euill thoughts, Matth.15.19. Out of the heart proceed euill thoughts: but diſobedience to ſuperſtitious and vnlawfull precepts is no ſinne; ſuch as are theſe in commanding abſtinence from meates for religion.

2. Yet S. Paul forbiddeth fleſh offered to idols to be eaten, if it offend the conſcience of our weake brother, 1.Cor.10.29. much leſſe would he haue the Church-faſt broken, to the great offence of others, *Bellarm.c.*8.

Contra. 1. Not the breaking of ſuperſtitious lawes, but the obſeruing rather doth miniſter offence: ſtill he beggeth the thing in queſtion; that the ſuperſtitious inhibiting of eating of fleſh is a lawfull conſtitution of the Church. 2. If then fleſh may be ſafely eaten at all times, but where our brothers conſcience is offended, it is not ſimply vnlawfull: neyther do wee denie, but that in this Chriſtian libertie, reſpect is to be had to our brothers weakneſſe: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Corinth.10.29. Why ſhould our libertie be condemned of anothers conſcience? 3. Hereupon we inferre that there ought to be no other reſtraint of eating of fleſh for religion, but the conſcience of him that may be offended.

3. 4. In both theſe places the Apoſtle condemneth thoſe, which did forbid fleſh, as vncleane of it ſelfe, as though by the very handling thereof they were defiled, *Bellarm.ibid.reſponſ.ad.*3.5.

Contra. 1. In the firſt place the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch, as with a ſhew of holineſſe refuſed to taſte meate: but there is no ſhew of holines, but it is meere prophaneneſſe abſolutely to condemne meates, and a plaine doctrine of diuels, 1.Tim h.4.1, therefore the Papiſts that place holineſſe in not touching or taſting of fleſh, and would not ſeeme ſimply to condemne them, are here ſignified. 2. In the ſecond place the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all that forbid meates for any doctrine or religion: whenas they make it vnlawfull, to receiue them with thankeſgiuing, and refuſe them. 1. But thus do the Papiſts forbid meates for religion and doctrine, ſo that the creature of God is refuſed: Ergo, 2. The Apoſtle maketh but two impedimentes of not receiuing and eating meates: Want of faith and knowledge; Want of thankeſgiuing: but with them it is not lawfull for beleeuers, and ſuch as giue thankes, to receiue Gods creatures: therefore they are theſe forbidders. 3. Againe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the laſt times, and of ſuch as ſhould make a generall Apoſtaſie from the faith: this doth moſt fitly agree to the now preſent popiſh Church: the old heretikes the Tatianes and Manichees, were aboue a thouſand yeeres agoe, and neuer any heretikes ſwarued more vniuerſally in the whole body of religion from the faith, then they do.

Origen ſhall conclude, Abſtinere à cibis, quos Deus creauit ad percipiendum cum gratiarum actione, acceptum eſſe non poteſt Deo: To abſtayne from meats, which God hath created to be receiued with thankeſgiuing, cannot be acceptable to God: homil.9. in Leuitic.

Auguſtine: Non propter porcum, ſed propter pomum mortem primus homo inuenit; & Eſau primatus ſuos propter gallinam non propter lenticulam perdidit: The firſt man found death, not for eating fleſh, but fruite: Eſau loſt his birthright, not for capons, but for corne: tract.73. in Ioan. Ergo, there is no difference to be made of meates for religion.

The Papiſts.

FOurthly, their religious kind of faſting they hold not to be a general abſtinence from all meats and drinkes, but onely from ſome certaine kindes, as from fleſh, and wine, as Timothie refrained from drinking of wine, and in ſtead thereof vſed water, 1.Timoth.5.verſ.23.Rhemiſt. 97. Error.

Daniel for 3. weekes ſpace abſtayned from fleſh and wine, Dan.10.3. Bellarm.c.5.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, for chaſtiſing of the body, it is lawfull to abſtaine either wholy for a time, or in reſpect of the quantitie or qualitie of the meates, which may more prouoke carnall luſtes, not in the prohibition of the whole kind, as the Papiſts do of all fleſh, be it neuer ſo groſſe or ſmall in quantitie. Likewiſe it is lawfull for chaſtiſing of a mans body to abſtaine from any kinde, as of wine, fruites, ſpices, fleſh, ſo that the vſe of them be not forbidden, as though in the very abſtinence there were religion, Fulke. ibid. Daniel abſtayned from pleaſant and laſciuious meate to be the better prepared for that heauenly viſion; Timothie refrayned the drinking of wine, to keepe his body in ſubiection: but neyther of them placed any religion herein; for hee afterward by the aduiſe of the Apoſtle did drinke wine: and ſo Auguſtine in the like caſe ſaith, Quanto honeſtius eſt, vt qui &c. How much more honeſt a thing is it, that he which for the infirmitie of his ſtomacke cannot drinke water, ſhould vſe wine moderately, Serm.157.

Secondly, but the true and properly religious faſte of Chriſtians, is a generall abſtinence from all meates and drinkes, during the time of ſuch faſting: Eſther 4.16. Nehem.9.4. Where the maner of their faſt is deſcribed: how the law was read vnto them foure times in the day, and as oft did they worſhip the Lord and confeſſe their ſinnes. It was the cuſtome of the Church alſo in Auguſtines time, in the dayes of faſte, not to abſtayne onely from fleſh, or ſome certaine kinde of meat, as the Papiſts vſe, but altogether to continue faſting till the eeuen. Rogo vos (fratres) (ſaith he) vt in iſto ſacratiſſimo tempore, exceptis diebus dominicis, nullus prandere præſumat: I pray you, brethren, that in this holy time, none of you preſume to dine at all, except it be vpon the Lords dayes. De tempor. ſerm.66.

So likewiſe was it concluded, Concil. Aurelianenſ.4.can.2.quadrageſima ab omnibus æqualiter teneatur: ſed neque per ſabbata abſque infirmitate quiſpiam ſoluat quadrageſimale ieiunium, niſi tantum die dominico prandeat: Let the Lent or 40. dayes faſt be kept indifferently of all, and let no man, no not vpon the ſaturdayes vnleſſe for infirmities ſake breake his lenton faſt, vnleſſe he take his dinner vpon the Lords dayes onely. Their faſt then vpon other dayes, was continued from morning till night, without taking their dinner: Ergo, they that will keepe a true religious faſt, if they are able, ought for the time wholly to abſtayne.

Bellarmine here ſeemeth to conſent with vs, propounding this propoſition to proue, vnicam in ieiunio refectionem, &c. That there ſhould be but one refreſhing in a faſt, & that to be ſupper, cap.2. this he taketh vpon him to confirme by Scripture, as Iudg.20.26. They faſted all that day till the Euening: 2.Sam.3.31. Dauid would eate no bread till the Sunne went downe: he alleageth alſo to the ſame purpoſe diuers teſtimonies of the fathers: thus farre he agreeth with vs, but afterward he turneth cat in pan (as we ſay) and alloweth the contrarie practiſe in the popiſh Church, that vſe to take their dinner in their faſtes: But Auguſtine flatly reproueth this abuſe; Vidiſti alium indicto publico ieiunio velle prandere, eum dilectione admone: Thou ſeeſt another, that a publike faſt being inioyned, will take his dinner; admoniſh him in loue, de tempor. ſerm.102.

George Marſh holy Martyr: We neuer reade that the Iewes euer tooke it for a faſt to abſtayne from fleſh, and to eate fiſh, or white meate, Fox.pag.1570.col.2.

The Papiſts.

FIftly, they erre, in affirming faſting to be a meritorious worke, Rhemiſt. 1.Corinth.15.verſ.32. and immediatly and properly a part of Gods ſeruice, Bellarm.lib.2, de bon.oper:b.c.11.

Bellarmine thus reaſoneth out of Scripture:

1. Luc.2.3. Anna ſerued the Lord with faſting and prayer night and day.
2. Rom.12.1. I beſeech you brethren, giue your body a liuing ſacrifice acceptable to God, &c. which is your reaſonable ſeruice of him. Faſting then, by the which the body is mortified, and made a ſacrifice, is a ſeruice acceptable to God.
3. 1.Sam.7.6. The people faſted and prayed, and God was pleaſed: 1.Reg.21. Ahab by his faſting ſures of the bodie. Concil.Colonienſ.part.9.cap.5. Admonendus eſt populus, cùm ieiunandum erit non minus prolixa & ſumptuoſa illa piſcium fercula, quàm carnium vitanda; bellaria item illa, magis, quàm carnes inflammantia: The people muſt be admoniſhed, that when they faſt, they ought no leſſe to refraine from the long and ſumptuous ſeruices of fiſh, as from the fleſh diſhes, and from thoſe iunkets, that do inflame no leſſe than fleſh. But our aduerſaries are farre off from keeping theſe rules in their faſts.

George Marſh Martyr, thus witneſſeth: In this poynt doth our ſuperſtition exceede the ſuperſtition of the Iewes, when we abſtaine from one thing, and fill our bellies with another: Fox pag.1570.

Laurence Staple perſecuted becauſe he vſed to eate egges on Friday, and thought it was no great offence vnto God. pag.1043.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, for chaſtiſing of the body, it is lawfull to abſtaine either wholy for a time, or in reſpect of the quantitie or qualitie of the meates, which may more prouoke carnall luſtes, not in the prohibition of the whole kind, as the Papiſts do of all fleſh, be it neuer ſo groſſe or ſmall in quantitie. Likewiſe it is lawfull for chaſtiſing of a mans body to abſtaine from any kinde, as of wine, fruites, ſpices, fleſh, ſo that the vſe of them be not forbidden, as though in the very abſtinence there were religion, Fulke. ibid. Daniel abſtayned from pleaſant and laſciuious meate to be the better prepared for that heauenly viſion; Timothie refrayned the drinking of wine, to keepe his body in ſubiection: but neyther of them placed any religion herein; for hee afterward by the aduiſe of the Apoſtle did drinke wine: and ſo Auguſtine in the like caſe ſaith, Quanto honeſtius eſt, vt qui &c. How much more honeſt a thing is it, that he which for the infirmitie of his ſtomacke cannot drinke water, ſhould vſe wine moderately, Serm. 157.

Secondly, but the true and properly religious faſte of Chriſtians, is a generall abſtinence from all meates and drinkes, during the time of ſuch faſting: Eſther 4.16. Nehem. 9.4. Where the maner of their faſt is deſcribed: how the law was read vnto them foure times in the day, and as oft did they worſhip the Lord and confeſſe their ſinnes. It was the cuſtome of the Church alſo in Auguſtines time, in the dayes of faſte, not to abſtayne onely from fleſh, or ſome certaine kinde of meat, as the Papiſts vſe, but altogether to continue faſting till the eeuen. Rogo vos (fratres) (ſaith he) vt in iſto ſacratiſſimo tempore, exceptis diebus dominicis, nullus prandere præſumat: I pray you, brethren, that in this holy time, none of you preſume to dine at all, except it be vpon the Lords dayes. De tempor. ſerm. 66.

So likewiſe was it concluded, Concil. Aurelianenſ. 4. can. 2. quadrageſima ab omnibus æqualiter teneatur: ſed neque per ſabbata abſque infirmitate quiſpiam ſoluat quadrageſimale ieiunium, niſi tantum die dominico prandeat: Let the Lent or 40. dayes faſt be kept indifferently of all, and let no man, no not vpon the ſaturdayes vnleſſe for infirmities ſake breake his lenton faſt, vnleſſe he take his dinner vpon the Lords dayes onely. Their faſt then vpon other dayes, was continued from morning till night, without taking their dinner: Ergo, they that will keepe a true religious faſt, if they are able, ought for the time wholly to abſtayne.

Bellarmine here ſeemeth to conſent with vs, propounding this propoſition to proue, vnicam in ieiunio refectionem, &c. That there ſhould be but one refreſhing in a faſt, & that to be ſupper, cap. 2. this he taketh vpon him to confirme by Scripture, as Iudg. 20.26. They faſted all that day till the Euening: 2. Sam. 3.31. Dauid would eate no bread till the Sunne went downe: he alleageth alſo to the ſame purpoſe diuers teſtimonies of the fathers: thus farre he agreeth with vs, but afterward he turneth cat in pan (as we ſay) and alloweth the contrarie practiſe in the popiſh Church, that vſe to take their dinner in their faſtes: But Auguſtine flatly reproueth this abuſe; Vidiſti alium indicto publico ieiunio velle prandere, eum dilectione admone: Thou ſeeſt another, that a publike faſt being inioyned, will take his dinner; admoniſh him in loue, de tempor. ſerm. 102.

George Marſh holy Martyr: We neuer reade that the Iewes euer tooke it for a faſt to abſtayne from fleſh, and to eate fiſh, or white meate, Fox. pag. 1570. col. 2.

The Papiſts.

FIftly, they erre, in affirming faſting to be a meritorious worke, Rhemiſt. 1. Corinth. 15. verſ. 32. and immediatly and properly a part of Gods ſeruice, Bellarm. lib. 2, de bon. oper. ib. c. 11.

Bellarmine thus reaſoneth out of Scripture:

1. Luc. 2.3. Anna ſerued the Lord with faſting and prayer night and day.

2. Rom. 12.1. I beſeech you brethren, giue your body a liuing ſacrifice acceptable to God, &c. which is your reaſonable ſeruice of him. Faſting then, by the which the body is mortified, and made a ſacrifice, is a ſeruice acceptable to God.

3. 1. Sam. 7.6. The people faſted and prayed, and God was pleaſed: 1. Reg. 21. Ahab by his faſting did mittigate Gods wrath : the Niniuites by their faſting appeaſed Gods wrath : Ergo, faſting is ſatisfactorie and meritorious, *Bellarm.cap.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, we doubt not, but that faſting is a worke acceptable to God, being referred to the right end, as to chaſtiſe and humble the bodie, 1.Cor.9.27. and to make our prayers more feruent, 1.Cor.7.5. But otherwiſe there is no holines or vertue in faſting of it ſelfe; neither is it by the worke wrought of any merite or worthineſſe : For our prayers, which are a more principall worke, then faſting is, yet of themſelues by any worthineſſe in them, are not regarded of God: for Salomon ſaith, When thou heareſt, haue mercie, 1.King.8.30. It is of the Lords mercie, that our prayers are heard, not of any worthineſſe in them.

Now for our further anſwere in particular : 1. Anna her ſeruing of God, conſiſted chiefly in her prayer, vpon the which her faſting waited as an handmaid, to make it more feruent.

2. We denie not, but that faſting is a very good meane to helpe to mortifie the fleſh, and to make it ſeruiceable to God, and ſo an exerciſe by faith acceptable to God : but it followeth not, that immediatly and properly it is a part of Gods ſeruice, which conſiſteth in the inward worſhip: the Apoſtle ſaith, bodily exerciſe profiteth little, 1.Timoth.4.8. that is, of it ſelfe without faith and godlineſſe, it is not auayleable.

3. Firſt, beſide the faſting of the people, they ſhedde teares in ſuch abundance, that they are ſaid to haue drawen water : they alſo confeſſed their ſinnes: their prayers and teares made their faſting acceptable : but they were ſo farre from ſatisfying God, that for all this they were afraid, and deſired Saul to crie vnto God for them.

As concerning Ahab, how could he ſatisfie or merite, being a man ſold to worke wickedneſſe, 1.King.21.25. and ſo without faith? his temporall repentance was rewarded with a temporall reward : this was of Gods mercie, not of his merite.

It was not the act of faſting in the Niniuites, but their true repentance ioyned with it, that pleaſed God, Ionas 3.10. God ſaw their workes, that they turned from their euill wayes, &c. Neyther did their repentance ſatisfie : for they were fearefull and doubtfull, verſ.9. Who can tell if God will turne? it was therefore Gods acceptance, they haue no confidence in their repentance.

The Proteſtants.

OVr contrarie arguments, that faſting is not a worke meritorious or ſatisfactorie, nor properly the ſeruice of God, out of the Scripture are theſe.

*Argum.*1. Iſay 58.5. Is this ſuch a faſt, that I haue choſen, that a man ſhould afflict his ſoule for a day? &c.

2. Ioel 2.13. Rent your hearts, and not your cloathes : it is not then the affliction of the fleſh, but the contrition of the heart that God requireth.

3. 1.Tim.4.7,8. Exerciſe thy ſelfe to godlines, for bodilie exerciſe profiteth little, godlines is profitable to all things.

4. Luk.18.12. The Phariſee alleaging his faſting is not iuſtified.

5. Coloſſ.2.23. S.Paul calleth the religion, which is in not ſparing the bodie, ἐθελοθρησκείαν, a voluntarie worſhip, deuiſed of man.

1. Bellarmin. The Lord doth not ſimplie reiect faſting, but onely ſuch a faſt, as is not ioyned with pietie and iuſtice: *c.*12.*reſp.ad.*1.

Contra. You haue anſwered well : for if faſting without godlines and iuſtice profite not, then is it not in it ſelfe meritorious, neither hath any force, but by the faith and true contrition of the heart : iuſtice it ſelfe, and true contrition, which giue ſtrength to faſting, are not meritorious, much leſſe is faſting it ſelfe.

2. The renting of the garments is not ſimplie forbidden, but when it is not accompanied with the contrition of the heart, Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. Neither doe we ſay that faſting is forbidden ſimplie, but that in it ſelfe it is the leſſe principall, and without the deuotion of the heart not at all accepted, and therefore it hath no merite, hauing no life, nor force of it ſelfe. Contrition of the heart meriteth not: for Dauid ſacrificing a contrite heart vnto God, Pſalm.51.17. yet prayeth for mercie, verſ.1. Ergo, much leſſe doth faſting merite, which is quickened by the deuotion of the heart.

3. By bodilie exerciſe either may be vnderſtoode faſting without almes or mercie, or the exerciſe of the bodie: ſuch as champions vſed in their fight : which was vnprofitable to attaine any thing in the next life, Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. By godlines cannot properlie almes be vnderſtoode, or any other externall or bodilie action : for the Apoſtle oppoſeth godlines to bodily exerciſe : but that which is contrarie or oppoſite to bodily, is ſpirituall. 2. Yet admitting this expoſition, faſting cannot be meritorious, ſeeing it hath no power without almes, which neither are themſelues meritorious: with ſuch ſacrifice indeede the Apoſtle ſaith, God is pleaſed, Hebr.13.16. but offered vnto God through Chriſt, verſ.15. 3. What need had S.Paul to giue Timothie warning to take heede of bodilie exerciſe, being ſo weake, and full of infirmities, that he giueth him counſell afterward to drinke wine? 1. Tim.5.23. by bodilie exerciſe then, he vnderſtandeth all externall ſeruices, and outward ceremonies, not tending to edifying by faith, 1.Tim.1.4. which alſo include ſuperſtitious phariſaicall faſting.

4. The Phariſee was not iuſtified becauſe he thought to be iuſtified by his faſting, but becauſe he boaſted of his workes and deſpiſed others, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. The Phariſee is not onely reiected for his diſdaine and contempt to the poore Publicane: but for his hypocriſie in ſetting forth his owne righteouſneſſe, which notwithſtanding he thanketh God for after a ſort. Firſt, the occaſion of the Parable doth inſinuate ſo much, verſ.9. He ſpake this Parable vnto certaine that truſted in themſelues, that they were iuſt and deſpiſed others: they truſted to be iuſt toward God by their workes, and alſo deſpiſed their brethren: here are two faultes, both which the Phariſee was infected with. Secondly, this appeareth by the contrarie in the Publicane, who pleadeth for mercie, as the other ſtoode vpon merite. Thirdly, ſo Ambroſe expoundeth, Verecundia prætulit Publicanum, qui ne oculos audebat leuare ad cœlum: Modeſtie preferred the Publicane, who durſt not lift vp his eyes to heauen: Offic.1.c.18. The Publicanes humilitie was toward God, in not preſuming to lift vp his eyes to heauen; therefore the Phariſees pride was toward God in boaſting of his workes.

5. 1. Will worſhip is not oppoſed to that which is not written, but to that which is not grounded vpon reaſon: for though it be not commaunded, if it be reaſonable, it is no Will worſhip. 2. The Apoſtle reproueth them for their immoderate faſting, not yeelding neceſſarie things to the fleſh. 3. They did abſteine of a ſuperſtitious opinion, in abhorring fleſh as euill and vncleane in it ſelfe, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.22. Which are after the doctrines, and commandements of men: ſo that it is a Will worſhip which is after mans, and not Gods commaundement: therefore all worſhip not preſcribed in the word, is Will worſhip: and this Will worſhip had a ſhew of wiſdome, and ſo of reaſon, yet was a voluntarie ſeruice.

Secondly, this is not the chiefe thing that is reprehended, the not ſparing of the fleſh (for herein, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, conſiſted their ſhew of wiſdome) but for that they followed the doctrines of men, and neglected the commaundement of God, concerning the internall worſhip; and the not ſparing of the fleſh, is expounded, the not ſatisfying of the fleſh, which of it ſelfe is not ſo euill a thing: beſide many of their Monkes and Heremites haue offended this way, in pinching and pining their bodies, by their immoderate faſting to death.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of thoſe, which of Iewiſh ſuperſtition, rather then heathen prophanenes abſtained from meate. Firſt, there had bin no ſhew of wiſdome, in condemning the creatures of God ſimplie. Secondly, he calleth them στοιχεῖα, the elements of the world, verſ.20. which the Apoſtle expoundeth to be the ceremonies of the Iewes, Galath.4.9. 3.verſ.17. they were ſuch ceremonies, as were ſhadowes of Chriſt: but theſe were the Iewiſh, not heathen obſeruances. Thirdly, he ſaith, verſe 20. δογματίζεσθε, ye are burdened with traditions: which traditions, δόγματα, he ſaith were faſtened to Chriſts Croſſe, verſ.14. which were the traditions of the lawe, not of the Gentiles.

Auguſtine ſaith very well, Si volumus bene ieiunare à cibis, ante omnia ieiunemus & à vitys. Quid prodeſt. pallidum eſſe ieiunijs, ſi odio & inuidia liueſcas? What doth it helpe to faſt from meate, if we faſt not from ſinne? What auaileth it to be pale and wan with faſting, if thou fretteſt with hatred and enuie? Ergo, the externall or outward acte of faſting of it ſelfe is little or nothing worth. De tempor. Serm.64.

Synod. Moguntin.cap.47. Non exiſtiment Chriſtiani ſola carnis abſtinentia ſe Deo gratos eſſe, cum meminerint primos homines, qui carnem nondum guſtauerant, ob vitæ nequitiam diluuio deletos: ſed cum abſtinentia carnis, cæterorum ciborum moderationem & perpetuam ſobrietatem coniungant: Let not Chriſtians thinke, that they are accepted of God, onely for their abſtinence from fleſh, when they may remember, that the men of the olde world, that taſted no fleſh, were for the wickedneſſe of their life deſtroyed in the flood: but let them ioyne with their abſtinence from fleſh, the moderate vſe of other meates, and the perpetuall ſobrietie of their life.

This truth the Martyrs haue ſealed, that our faſting, nor yet any thing elſe that we doe meriteth at Gods hand. George Marſh Martyr, holdeth it to be Iewiſh to thinke, that we doe God great pleaſure when we faſt, pag.1570. In this faith died Iohn Warne, that we obtaine nothing at Gods hands through our workes, pag.1581.col.1.

S. Hierome ſaith, Caue ne ſi ieiunare cœperis, te putes eſſe iam ſanctam: hæc enim virtus adiumentum eſt, non perfectio ſanitatis: prouidendum eſt ne cum licita contemnas, hoc tibi illicitorum ſecuritatem faciat: Take heede, when thou beginneſt to faſt, that you thinke not your ſelfe to be holy: this vertue is a helpe, it is not the perfection of health: take heede, leaſt in contemning things lawfull, you be ſecure in vſing vnlawfull: ad Celantiam: Ergo, faſting is not meritorious.

The Papiſts.

99.Error. SIxtly, and laſtly, they grieuouſly offend in their faſtings, in laying ſo ſtreight and hard a yoke vpon mens ſhoulders, as charging them vnder paine of damnation to keepe their faſting daies, making it deadly ſinne, yea, hereſie to tranſgreſſe them, as one Lawrence Staple was troubled and Fox p 1043. perſecuted, Anno 1531. becauſe in Lent hauing no fiſh, he did eate egges, butter and cheeſe: Nay they were ſo cruell, that hardly they ſuffered women in childebed to haue any fleſh in their houſes, as Anno 1532. Two young girles were conſtrained to abiure, becauſe they were found vpon Saint Peters euen eating broath made of mutton, their mother lying in childebed. How was poore Frebarne toſſed to and fro, and brought into great danger, becauſe a Pigge was found in his houſe in Lent time, for the which his wife longed?

Argum. That Eccleſiaſtical lawes enioyning faſts for religion do ſimply binde in conſcience, Bellarmine would thus proue out of Scripture.

1. Ierem.35.14. The Rechabites are commended for keeping the inſtitution of Ionadab their father, not to drinke wine.

2. Heſter.9.22. Mordecai inſtituteth a new faſt to be obſerued for euer.

3. Zachar.8.19. There is mention made of foure faſts; of the fourth, fift, ſeuenth, tenth moneths, which were not commaunded of God.

4. Act.15.29. Abſtinence from ſtrangled and from blood is enioyned by the Apoſtles to be obſerued of all the Church, *Bellar.c.*7.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the inſtitution of Ionadab was according to the law of the Nazarites, preſcribed Numb.6. that were to drinke no wine nor ſtrong drinke by Gods precept, and therefore it did binde the Rechabites in conſcience: but now there is no ſuch lawe of abſtinence giuen by Chriſt vnder the Goſpell, and therefore the argument followeth not. Secondly, neither did the Rechabites hold themſelues ſo bound in conſcience, but that by neceſſitie they might be diſpenſed with: for one of their fathers precepts was, to dwell in tents, verſ.10. yet becauſe the hoſt of the Aſſyrians was in the land, for that time, they came and dwelt in the citie.

2. Firſt, we reade of a feaſt inſtituted yeerely to be celebrated by Mordecai, not of a faſt. Secondly, yet we doubt not but that the Magiſtrates may enioyne a publike religious faſt, as Heſter did, chap.4.16. which is not a prohibition from fleſh meate, but a generall reſtraint of all meate, not for ſet and ſtinted times, but vpon extraordinarie occaſion. This maketh nothing for their eccleſiaſticall iniunctions, for the perpetuall reſtraint of ſome kinde of meate onely.

3. Firſt, thoſe faſts mentioned in Zacharie are reproued by the Prophet, Zach.7.5. Did ye faſt vnto me? Secondly, Zach.8.19. He ſaith onely that the faſts ſhall be turned to ioy and gladnes: which is no approbation of them, but onely a declaration and promiſe, that the like calamities ſhall not fall vpon them, as before, by occaſion whereof they tooke vp thoſe faſts: ſuch were the ſacking of the citie, and deſtruction of the temple. Thirdly, in their faſts they abſtained wholy from al meate, weeping and ſeparating themſelues, Zachar.7.3. and their eating and drinking is oppoſed to their faſting, verſ.6. what is this to popiſh faſting, which is not a totall abſtinence, but from ſome kinde onely?

4. Firſt, Eccleſiaſticall gouernours haue not like authoritie now to make lawes to binde the conſcience, as the Apoſtles had. Secondly, they did not inhibite things ſtrangled for any religion in the abſtainer, but for the conſcience of others, namely the Iewes that might be offended: which we hold to be the only religious reſtraint of not eating. Thirdly, this conſtitution of the Apoſtles was but to endure for a time: how doth this then warrant a perpetuall yoke of abſtinence for religion to be layd vpon the Church?

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, no poſitiue law not grounded vpon Scripture, can ſo binde any man, that in the breaking thereof hee ſhall ſinne deadly, and of this ſort is the faſt of Lent and other dayes for religion, which were ordained without warrant of Scripture: Lambert ad articul. 17.*pag.*1110. Ciuill and politike lawes for the reſtraint of fleſh at certaine ſeaſons, made by the godly and wiſe Magiſtrate for the benefit of the Common-wealth, not for any religion, are in conſcience to be obeyed ſo far forth, as we by the law of God are bound in conſcience to obey the Magiſtrate in al lawful things: but ſimply they do not binde the conſcience in reſpect of the thing commaunded. Seeing the reſt of the Sabboth being commanded of God, might yet vpon neceſſarie cauſe be broken, how much greater liberty ought the people to haue had in the obſeruation of theſe daies which were only inioyned by men? yet was it counted an heynous ſin, to eate fleſh vpon a day interdict, and a ſmall offence or none to violate the reſt of the Sabboth?

Secondly, S. Paul could ſee no ſuch neceſſitie of faſting and abſtinence, when he willeth Timothie to drinke wine, and no longer water, for his infirmitie ſake, 1.Tim.5.23. But if there were religion in faſting and abſtinence, it ought not to be intermitted for bodily health.

Further, the Apoſtle calleth theſe the precepts and commaundements of men, Touch not, taſte not, handle not ; which things periſh with the vſing, Coloſſ.2.21. they concerne not the conſcience: but Gods precepts in religious matters doe not periſh with the vſing : but in the keeping or breaking thereof, the conſcience is either accuſed, or excuſed.

Saint Iames alſo ſaith, Iam.4.12. There is but one lawgiuer, that is able to ſaue and to deſtroy: Ergo, men haue no power to make lawes to binde mens conſciences, either to ſaue them by keeping thereof, or deſtroy them by breaking.

*Canon. Apoſtol.*68. Si quis impediatur imbecillitate corporis, non tenetur ieiunare quadrageſimam: If any be hindred by the weaknes of their bodie, they are not bound to keepe the Lenton faſt. Colonienſ.part.9.cap.4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci, modò id vel charitas, vel neceſſitas ſuadeat: The Church giueth libertie at all times, to eate all manner things, if charitie or neceſſitie require. Synod. Moguntin.cap.47. Tempora ieiunandi, prout ſalubritati corporum & animarum expedire videbatur, ab eccleſia ordinata: The times of faſt were ordained by the Church, as it was thought meete for the health of bodie and ſoule. Men therefore are not bound to faſt, if thereby their health be empayred : for no man euer hated his owne fleſh, as S.Paul ſaith.

In Auguſtines time there was no ſuch ſtrict neceſſitie of faſting : Qui ieiunare non præualet, in domo ſua præparet, quod accipiat: He that is not able to faſt, let him prepare in his houſe for his owne eating. And againe, Si poſſibilitas non fuerit ieiunandi, ſufficiat eleemoſyna ſine ieiunio: If a man haue not poſſibilitie to faſt, in ſtead of faſting, it ſhall ſuffice to giue almes : *ſerm. de tempor.*62. What is become now of your Lent and Imber dayes, which you preſcribe as neceſſarie to bee kept of all?

THE THIRD PART, OF Almes deedes.

THe difference betweene our aduerſaries and vs is chiefly in theſe two poynts : firſt, concerning the fruits and benefits, that come by giuing of almes. Secondly, of the manner.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE fruits of Almes deedes.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith that almes deedes are meritorious ; they doe merit eternall life. 100.Error.

Argum. Matth.25. Receiue the kingdome prepared for you: for when I was hungrie you gaue mee meate, &c. Bellarm.cap.4.lib.3.de bonis operib.in particular.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, this place prooueth not that almes deedes merite heauen : but it rather ſheweth, that Chriſt in mercie crowneth the charitable workes of his children : heauen is giuen though not for their good workes, yet according to their good workes : this kingdome was prepared for them before the beginning of the world, verſ.34. before they had yet done any almes deedes : therefore they could not merit that which was prepared for them, and giuen them, before they had done any good thing.

Argum. Rom.6.23. Life eternall is the gift of God through Chriſt: If it be a franke gift, then is it not merited. No man can merit by doing that which was his dutie to doe : Luk.17. Doth the maſter thanke his ſeruant, becauſe he did that, which was commaunded vnto him, I trow not? If the maſter be not bound to thanke his ſeruant, becauſe hee did no more than his dutie, much leſſe is the Lorde bound to reward vs. But all our almes deedes, and whatſoeuer elſe, that wee doe, are but of dutie. Ergo.

Auguſtine ſaith : Ne putetis fratres, quia facienda ſunt quotidie adulteria, & quotidianis eleemoſynis mundanda ſunt, ad illa ſcelera maiora non ſufficiunt eleemoſyna vt illa mundent: Thinke not brethren, that ye may commit adulterie daily, and by daily almes be cleanſed. Almes are not ſufficient to purge thoſe great ſinnes, de 10.*Chord.cap.*11. If almes are not auaileable to purge our ſinnes, much leſſe to purchaſe heauen for vs.

The Papiſts.

ALmes deeds are a diſpoſition vnto the grace of iuſtification proceeding from Gods motion, and by his ſpeciall helpe. 101.Error.

*Argum.*1. Prou.15.28. By mercie and faith ſinnes are purged.

2. Luk.11.41. Giue almes, and all things are cleane vnto you.

3. Luk.19.8. When Zacheus had ſaid, halfe of my goods I giue to the poore, Chriſt ſaith vnto him, This day is ſaluation come to thy houſe.

4. Act.10.4. The Angell ſaith to Cornelius, Thine almes and thy prayers are come vp into remembrance

The Papiſts.

99.Error. SIxtly,and laſtly,they grieuouſly offend in their faſtings, in laying ſo ſtreight and hard a yoke vpon mens ſhoulders,as charging them vnder paine of damnation to keepe their faſting daies, making it deadly ſinne,yea, hereſie to tranſgreſſe them, as one Lawrence Staple was troubled and Fox p 1043. perſecuted, Anno 1531. becauſe in Lent hauing no fiſh,he did eate egges,butter and cheeſe: Nay they were ſo cruell,that hardly they ſuffered women in childebed to haue any fleſh in their houſes, as Anno 1532. Secondly,neither did the Rechabites hold themſelues ſo bound in conſcience,but that by neceſſitie they might be diſpenſed with: for one of their fathers precepts was, to dwell in tents, verſ.10. yet becauſe the hoſt of the Aſſyrians was in the land,for that time, they came and dwelt in the citie.

2. Firſt,we reade of a feaſt inſtituted yeerely to be celebrated by Mordecai, not of a faſt. Secondly,yet we doubt not but that the Magiſtrates may enioyne a publike religious faſt, as Heſter did,chap.4.16.which is not a prohibition from fleſh meate, but a generall reſtraint of all meate, not for ſet and ſtinted times,but vpon extraordinarie occaſion.This maketh nothing for their eccleſiaſticall iniunctions,for the perpetuall reſtraint of ſome kinde of meate onely.

3. Firſt,thoſe faſts mentioned in Zacharie are reproued by the Prophet, Zach.7.5. Did ye faſt vnto me? Secondly,Zach.8.19. He ſaith onely that the faſts ſhall be turned to ioy and gladnes: which is no approbation of them,but onely a declaration and promiſe, that the like calamities ſhall not fall vpon them,as before,by occaſion whereof they tooke vp thoſe faſts: ſuch were the ſacking of the citie,and deſtruction of the temple. Thirdly,in their faſts they abſtained wholy from al meate, weeping and ſeparating themſelues, Zachar.7.3.and their eating and drinking is oppoſed to their faſting, verſ.6. what is this to popiſh faſting, which is not a totall abſtinence,but from ſome kinde onely?

4. Firſt,Eccleſiaſticall gouernours haue not like authoritie now to make lawes to binde the conſcience,as the Apoſtles had. Secondly,they did not inhibite things ſtrangled for any religion in the abſtainer,but for the conſcience of others,namely the Iewes that might be offended: which we hold to be the only religious reſtraint of not eating. Thirdly,this conſtitution of the Apoſtles was but to endure for a time: how doth this then warrant a perpetuall yoke of abſtinence for religion to be layd vpon the Church?

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt,no poſitiue law not grounded vpon Scripture, can ſo binde any man, that in the breaking thereof hee ſhall ſinne deadly, and of this ſort is the faſt of Lent and other dayes for religion, which were ordained without warrant of Scripture: *Lambert ad articul.*17.*pag.*1110. Ciuill and politike lawes for the reſtraint of fleſh at certaine ſeaſons,made by the godly and wiſe Magiſtrate for the benefit of the Common-wealth,not for any religion,are in conſcience to be obeyed ſo far forth,as we by the law of God are bound in conſcience to obey the Magiſtrate in al lawful things: but ſimply they do not binde the conſcience in reſpect of the thing commaunded. Seeing the reſt of the Sabboth being commanded of God,might yet vpon neceſſarie cauſe be broken, how much greater liberty ought the people to haue had in the obſeruation of theſe daies which were only inioyned by men? yet was it counted an heynous ſin, to eate fleſh vpon a day interdict,and a ſmall offence or none to violate the reſt of the Sabboth?

Secondly,S.Paul could ſee no ſuch neceſſitie of faſting and abſtinence, when he willeth Timothie to drinke wine,and no longer water,for his infirmitie ſake, 1.Tim.5.23. But if there were religion in faſting and abſtinence,it ought not to be intermitted for bodily health.

Further,the Apoſtle calleth theſe the precepts and commaundements of men, Touch not, taſte *not,handle not ; which things periſh with the vſing,*Coloſſ.2.21.they concerne not the conſcience: but Gods precepts in religious matters doe not periſh with the vſing : but in the keeping or breaking thereof,the conſcience is either accuſed,or excuſed.

Saint Iames alſo ſaith, Iam.4.12. There is but one lawgiuer, that is able to ſaue and to deſtroy : Ergo, men haue no power to make lawes to binde mens conſciences, either to ſaue them by keeping thereof, or deſtroy them by breaking.

*Canon. Apoſtol.*68. Si quis impediatur imbecillitate corporis, non tenetur ieiunare quadrageſimam : If any be hindred by the weaknes of their bodie,they are not bound to keepe the Lenton faſt. Colonienſ.part.9.cap.4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci,modò id vel charitas,vel neceſſitas ſuadeat : The Church giueth libertie at all times,to eate all manner things,if charitie or neceſſitie require. Synod. Moguntin.cap.47. Tempora ieiunandi, prout ſalubritati corporum & animarum expedire videbatur, ab eccleſia ordinata : The times of faſt were ordained by the Church,as it was thought meete for the health of bodie and ſoule. Men therefore are not bound to faſt,if thereby their health be empayred : for no man euer hated his owne fleſh,as S.Paul ſaith.

In Auguſtines time there was no ſuch ſtrict neceſſitie of faſting : Qui ieiunare non prævalet, in domo ſua præparet,quod accipiat : He that is not able to faſt,let him prepare in his houſe for his owne eating. And againe, Si poſſibilitas non fuerit ieiunandi, ſufficiat eleemoſyna ſine ieiunio : If a man haue not poſſibilitie to faſt, in ſtead of faſting,it ſhall ſuffice to giue almes : *ſerm. de tempor.*62. What is become now of your Lent and Imber dayes, which you preſcribe as neceſſarie to bee kept of all?

THE THIRD PART, OF Almes deedes.

THe difference betweene our aduerſaries and vs is chiefly in theſe two poynts : firſt, concerning the fruits and benefits,that come by giuing of almes. Secondly,of the manner.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE fruits of Almes deedes.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt,Bellarmine ſaith that almes deedes are meritorious ; they doe merit eternall life. 100.Error.

Argum. Matth.25. Receiue the kingdome prepared for you : for when I was hungrie you gaue mee meate,&c. Bellarm.cap.4.lib.3.de bonis operib.in particular.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt,this place prooueth not that almes deedes merite heauen : but it rather ſheweth,that Chriſt in mercie crowneth the charitable workes of his children : heauen is giuen though not for their good workes,yet according to their good workes : this kingdome was prepared for them before the beginning of the world, verſ.34. before they had yet done any almes deedes : therefore they could not merit that which was prepared for them,and giuen them,before they had done any good thing.

Argum. Rom.6.23. Life eternall is the gift of God through Chriſt : If it be a franke gift,then is it not merited. No man can merit by doing that which was his dutie to doe : Luk.17. Doth the maſter thanke his ſeruant,becauſe he did that,which was commaunded vnto him, I trow not ? If the maſter be not bound to thanke his ſeruant, becauſe hee did no more than his dutie,much leſſe is the Lorde bound to reward vs. But all our almes deedes,and whatſoeuer elſe, that wee doe,are but of dutie.Ergo.

Auguſtine ſaith : Ne putetis fratres, quia facienda ſunt quotidie adulteria, & quotidianis eleemoſynis mundanda ſunt,ad illa ſcelera maiora non ſufficiunt eleemoſynæ vt illa mundent : Thinke not brethren, that ye may commit adulterie daily,and by daily almes be cleanſed, Almes are not ſufficient to purge thoſe great ſinnes,de 10.*Chord.cap.*11. If almes are not auaileable to purge our ſinnes,much leſſe to purchaſe heauen for vs.

The Papiſts.

ALmes deeds are a diſpoſition vnto the grace of iuſtification proceeding from Gods motion, and by his ſpeciall helpe. 101.Error.

*Argum.*1. Prou.15.28. By mercie and faith ſinnes are purged.

2. Luk.11.41. Giue almes,and all things are cleane vnto you.

3. Luk.19.8. When Zacheus had ſaid, halfe of my goods I giue to the poore, Chriſt ſaith vnto him, This day is ſaluation come to thy houſe.

4. Act.10.4. The Angell ſaith to Cornelius, Thine almes and thy prayers are come vp into remem- brance before God: ſend therefore to Ioppa, and call for one Simon. Cornelius by his almes obtaineth faith: Bellarm. lib. 3. de bon. operib. cap. 4. 5.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, there is no ſuch text in the Hebrue, nor yet in the old Latine copie: as may appeare by the annotations in the margent of the vulgar Latine vpon this place: yet admit the reading: it is faith working by almes that purgeth ſinnes, and not almes it ſelfe.

2. Our Sauiour is to be expounded by the verſe going before, Luk. 11. 39. Ye make cleane the outſide of the cup, &c. but the inward part is full of rauening, &c. Our Sauiour then teacheth them how to make the inſide of the platter cleane alſo from couetouſnes by the contrarie vertue of liberalitie: he ſpeaketh not of cleanſing the heart before God, but how to cleanſe their outward acts before men, and to make amends by their almes for their greedie rauening. In like ſort Daniel aduiſed the King to breake off his ſinne of mercileſſe crueltie by almes and charitie, Dan. 4. 24. So then couetouſneſſe is cleanſed or broken off by almes and mercie, as drunkenneſſe and ſurfetting by abſtinence. This expoſition Bellarmine himſelfe miſliketh not, cap. 3. obiect. 1. Againe, Origen expoundeth it thus: Like as Chriſt ſaith here, giue almes of that which is within, τὰ ἐνόντα, ſo Mat. 23. 26. he ſaith, cleanſe firſt the inſide of the platter: that is (ſaith he) the heart: Qui facit eleemoſynam vt gloriam ab hominibus conſequatur, &c. He that giueth almes to get the glorie of men, doth cleanſe the outſide of the cup, &c. & quicquid boni fecerit homo non ex conſcientia munda, &c. And whatſoeuer a man doth not of a good conſcience before God, he cleanſeth the outſide of the cup, but inwardly he is full of euil, Hom. 25. in Matth. So in this ſenſe our Sauiour ſheweth in what manner the Phariſees ſhould giue almes, with a cleere and ſincere conſcience, and ſo the heart being cleane, all their outward acts ſhould be cleane. This place then maketh nothing for iuſtification by almes before God.

3. Firſt, Chriſt ſignifieth, that ſaluation was come to the whole houſe and familie of Zacheus, becauſe he himſelfe was alreadie the childe of Abraham. Secondly, for before this Chriſt had looked vpon Zacheus as he looked vpon Peter, and called him firſt and inſpired him with grace. So Hierome well interpreteth: Chriſtus Zachæum latentem in arbore, quaſi in peccatorum tenebris obumbratum ſollicitè vt ouem perditam requirit aſpectu, & venire cunctantem vocat: Chriſt doth carefully ſeeke Zacheus as a loſt ſheepe with his ſight, lying hid in the tree as in the darknes of ſinners, and foreſlowing to come hee calleth him: de duob. filijs. Zacheus almes then was a fruit of his calling alreadie begun, not a preparation to his calling.

4. Neither was Cornelius without faith: for he feared God, and prayed continually, Act. 10. 2. But prayer is a fruit of faith; Iam. 5. 15. The prayer of faith: From this faith proceeded his almes, which faith was afterward encreaſed and confirmed by the preaching of Peter.

Argum. But that almes being without faith, are no diſpoſition or preparation to iuſtification is euident: firſt, Hebr. 11. 6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Secondly, Hebr. 13. 15. By Chriſt we muſt offer vp our ſacrifices, by the which God is pleaſed. Thirdly, Tit. 1. 15. Vnto the pure all things are pure: And our hearts are purified by faith, Act. 15. 9. Wherefore almes are impure, if the heart be not firſt purified and cleanſed by faith. Fourthly, Rom. 3. 24. We are iuſtified freely by grace: Gratis per gratiam: If gratis, freely, then our workes as almes deedes are no preparation, motiue or inſinuation thereunto, for then it ſhould not be freely.

And whereas Bellarmine ſpeaketh of almes hauing Gods ſpeciall helpe, this is no other but the helpe of grace and faith, that is, Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance; as Saint Paul ſaith, Our abilitie or ſufficiencie euen to thinke that is good, is of God; Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Plenè & veraciter confitenda eſt gratia dei, de cuius hoc primum munere eſt, vt auxilium ipſius ſentiatur: Fully and truly the grace of God muſt be confeſſed, of whoſe gift this is firſt, that his helpe is felt or perceiued: Ambroſ. epiſtol. 84.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. can. 25. Hoc ſalubriter profitemur & credimus, quod in omni opere bono non nos incipimus, &c. This we ſafely profeſſe and beleeue, that in euery good worke we doe not begin, and afterward are helped by Gods mercie: ſed ipſe nobis nullis præcedentibus meritis fidem & amorem ſui priùs inſpirat, vt quæ ſibi ſunt placita, implere poſſimus: But he without any merits of ours before going inſpireth faith and loue, that we may fulfill thoſe things which pleaſe him, &c. Ergo, faith is firſt inſpired before we can doe any thing that pleaſeth God.

Decr. part. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Gregor. Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum eſt boni operis ædificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there can no good worke be in the habitation: Ergo, almes goe not before iuſtification, becauſe the building is not before the foundation.

The Papiſts.

102. Error. THirdly, almes deedes are a ſufficient ſatisfaction for our ſinnes before God.

Argum. Toby 4. Almes doe deliuer from death, Bellar. cap. 4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, the authoritie of this booke, being not Canonicall, bindeth vs not. Secondly, almes deliuer from death, and ſuffer not to goe into darknes: that is, thereby we finde fauour among men, and are preſerued from daunger: So Toby expoundeth himſelfe: Thou laieſt vp a good ſtore for thy ſelfe againſt the day of neceſſitie, verſ.9. that is other men, which were before by him relieued, ſhall now in the time of his neceſſitie ſuccour him: and not ſuffer him to periſh in penurie and darkenes. So alſo Eccleſiaſticus, lay vp thy almes, They ſhall keepe thee from affliction, chap.29.12. They ſhall keepe a mans fauour, verſ.13. They ſhall fight for thee againſt thine enemie, better then the ſhield of a ſtrong man: This it is then to be deliuered from death, and darkenes, namely from outward perill and danger among men: if theſe Apocryphall bookes doe yet aſcribe more vnto almes deeds, as making them auailable to redeeme our ſinnes, which is contrarie to the Scripture, we doe refuſe them.

Argum. Pſalm.49.7. A man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot giue his ranſome to God, verſ.8. So precious is the redemption of their ſoules: All ſoules are of alike price, and are redeemed alike, a man cannot any way redeeme another mans ſoule, and ſo conſequently not his own: almes deedes therefore haue no force to redeeme the ſoule: they are of too great a price.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Fateor, quia peccaui, &c. ſed pœnitentia mea non ſufficit ad ſatisfactionem; ſed certum eſt, quod miſericordia tua ſuperat omnem offenſionem: I confeſſe I haue ſinned, but my repentance ſufficeth not to make ſatisfaction, but thy mercy exceedeth all my offences, lib. meditation.cap.39.tom.9. If repentance worke no ſatisfaction, much leſſe almes deedes, which are farre inferior vnto it.

This alſo is the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs, that there is no ſatisfaction for ſinne, in our owne workes. Iohn Warne Martyr, I doe beleeue, that my ſinnes are forgiuen onely through Ieſus Chriſt, of whom I profeſſe, that I haue my whole and full ſaluation, which commeth not thorough our workes, but freely by grace: ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that thorough the blood of his croſſe, he hath reconciled all things in heauen and in earth, Coloſſ.1.Fox.p.1581.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE MANner in diſtributing of Almes.

THat almes ought to be giuen, firſt cheerefully, the Scripture teacheth vs, God loueth a cheerefull giuer, 2.Cor.9. Againe readily without any delay: Say not to thy neighbour goe and come to morrow, if it be in thy power to giue him now, Prou.3. Further, we muſt giue bountifully, when occaſion ſerueth, and other mens neceſſitie requireth, 1.Cor.8.3. to their power, and beyond their power they were willing, 2.Cor.8.3. Theſe and other ſuch conditions are to be obſerued in chriſtian almes, but we deny this that followeth.

The Papiſts.

ALmes muſt be done, intentione placendi Deo, with an intention to pleaſe God thereby. 103. Error.

Argum. Matth.6.2. Our Sauiour Chriſt reproueth the Phariſees, becauſe they gaue almes to haue praiſe of men: but we muſt giue our almes in ſecret, that God may reward vs, verſ.5. As they ſeeke the praiſe of men, ſo we muſt ſeeke the praiſe of God: Bellarm.cap.13.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. OVr Sauiour Chriſt biddeth vs not in this place in giuing our almes to propound, and ſet before vs the praiſe and reward of God: but onely to take heede of the praiſe of men, and to ſhunne the ſame by giuing in ſecret: the praiſe or reward at Gods hand followeth vpon this ſimplicitie and ſinglenes of heart in giuing of almes: but we muſt doe well for conſcience ſake, not onely for hope of reward: although we graunt that our almes deedes are well pleaſing and acceptable vnto God through Chriſt: Hebr.13.16. With ſuch ſacrifice God is pleaſed: Yet we ought to doe them of duetie, without any other reſpect.

Argum. If Magiſtrates muſt be obeyed for conſcience ſake, Rom.13.5. not for feare of puniſhment or hope of reward: if ſeruants muſt yeeld obedience to their maſters in ſinglenes of hart and with good will, Epheſ.6.6. much more for very conſcience ſake muſt we ſerue the Lord: if they muſt be obeyed for the Lords ſake, much more the Lord for his owne ſake. But now if in giuing almes we reſpect the reward at Gods hands, then doe we it not of conſcience, nor for the Lords ſake, but for the rewards ſake.

Auguſtine ſaith: Da de quo dederat tibi Deus: ipſe te diuitem fecit, ergo illi redde, quod ſuum eſt: Giue of that, which God gaue to thee: he made thee rich; therefore render to him his owne: *Homil.*47. We are bound therefore of dutie to giue, which is ſufficient to moue vs, without reſpect to the reward.

Bernard alſo ſaith notably: Cauſa diligendi Deum Deus eſt, modus ſine modo diligere: non ſine præmio diligitur Deus, et ſi abſque præmij intuitu diligendus: God himſelfe is the cauſe why wee loue God: hee is not beloued without a reward, yet is hee to bee loued without reſpect had to the reward.

Lib.de diligend deo.

The Papiſts.

104. Error. LAſtly, the Rhemiſts charge vs very vntruely, to be enemies to good workes: and moſt ſlaunderouſly affirme of vs, that we condemne them as vncleane, ſinful, hypocritical; in c.2. to the Romans, *ſect.*3. and it is the generall accuſation of the Papiſts againſt vs, that we preaching onely faith, haue deſtroyed good workes, and ſlaked mens charitie and deuotion thereunto.

The Proteſtants.

THis is an vncharitable ſclaunder, and a moſt falſe accuſation, that the doctrine of faith is a deſtruction of manners: or that we, preaching iuſtification onely by faith, do hinder good workes: for firſt, for the doctrine it ſelfe, though we affirme, that faith onely iuſtifieth; yet we alſo vrge good workes as neceſſarie fruites, and liuely teſtimonies of our faith. Secondly, concerning our ſelues; we do continually call vpon the people to ſhew their faith, by their workes: wee ſay with S. Paul, that they, which haue beleeued in God, might be carefull to ſhew forth good workes, Tit.3.8. and let ours alſo learne to ſhew forth good workes for neceſſarie vſes, that they be not vnfruitfull. verſe 14. Yet the ſame Apoſtle aſcribeth iuſtification to faith onely without workes, Rom.3.28. We alſo ſay with Hierome, Inter Chriſtianum & Gentilem non fides tantum debet ſed vita diſtinguere; & diuerſam religionem per diuerſa opera monſtrare: Betweene a Chriſtian and a Gentile, not faith onely, but our life muſt make a difference; and wee muſt ſhew a diuers religion, by diuers and differing workes, Hieron. ad Celantiam. Thirdly, that it may appeare to all the world, how ſhameleſſe theſe men are in forging vntrue reportes of vs, I will by particular inſtance of ſome ſpeciall charitable workes, done vnder the Goſpell, and eſpecially within theſe fourtie yeeres of the happy raigne of our bleſſed Soueraigne, briefly ſhew, that the doctrine of faith hath not beene among vs vnfruitfull.

And to begin with the raigne of K. Edward of bleſſed memorie: what worke can they ſhew done in the time of ſuperſtition, equall to that excellent foundation of that good Ioſias of three hoſpitals in London, erected for the poore, namely, Chriſts hoſpitall, S. Thomas hoſpital, and Bridewell? the firſt for poore and friendleſſe children, to bring them vp and inſtruct them: the ſecond for the maymed and impotent poore, to heale and refreſh them: the third for valiant and ſturdie vagrants, to diſcipline and correct them.

But of all other times (thanks be giuen vnto God) this ſpace of fourtie yeeres profeſſion of the Goſpell, vnder the leading and direction of our happie Deborah, hath excelled: I cannot rehearſe the hundreth part of ſuch fruites as the Goſpel hath brought forth in this land: I would they were come to my knowledge, that I might make ſome memoriall of them: I will onely teſtifie that I know, and giue an inſtance of that place, which I in affection loue, and in dutie owe deuotion vnto, namely, the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge: wherein the charitable beneuolence, bountifull liberalitie, large expenſes, beſtowed 1. in the founding and erecting of Colledges: 2. augmenting ſome already erected, with larger reuenues: 3. the adorning and beautifying of the buildings, within the compaſſe of theſe 40. yeeres, may compare with any time of the like or longer continuance in any age.

Firſt, there haue been of late within leſſe then twentie yeeres by many, two famous Colledges rayſed out of the ground: the one called Emmanuel Colledge, founded by the right honourable Sir Gualter Mildmay, conſiſting of a Maſter and twelue fellowes, 34. ſchollers, and 10. poore ſchollers: whereof 7. fellowſhips were giuen by the founder, by Sir Robart Iermin 1. Sir Francis Haſtings 1. M. Skinner 1. M. Taylor 1. M. Fuller 1.

The other erected by the honorable Counteſſe of Suſſex, called Sidney-Colledge, conſiſting of a Maſter and 10. fellowes, and diuers ſchollerſhips mainteined by the gift of the founder: and ſince encreaſed by a fellowſhip of Sir Iohn Harts gift of London.

Secondly, theſe Colledges haue beene augmented and encreaſed in reuenues.

To Peter-houſe, ſixe Bibleclarkeſhips giuen by the honorable Lord Eward North: three by M. Wilſhaw: one by the moſt reuerend the L. Archbiſhop of Canturburie that now is: three Bibleclarkes and one Fellow by D. Pearne late Maſter of the Houſe: two fellowſhips and foure bibleclarkſhips by the vertuous and charitable Lady Marie Ramſey of London.

Clare Hall by the gift of Edward Leeds ſometime Maſter of the houſe maintaineth 20. Scholars.

Pembroke Hall hath beſide the foundation one fellow, and two ſchollerſhips, and a Greeke Reader, by the liberalitie of Archbiſhop Grindall: one ſchollerſhip by the gift of Iane Cox wife of the late reuerend Biſhop of Elie of good memorie: ſeuen ſchollerſhips giuen by Thomas Wats: one ſchollerſhip by M. Marſhall.

Bennet Colledge hath 2. fellowſhips and 15. ſchollerſhips added to the foundation, by Matthew Parker Archbiſhop of Canturburie, beſide a goodly Library, and diuers rich pieces of plate, giuen vnto them by the ſaid right reuerend Prelate.

Trinitie Hall is encreaſed to 6. ſchollerſhips, beſide the foundation, by the liberalitie of Matthew Parker, Gabriel Dunne, Henry Haruie, Humfrey Buſbie.

Caius Colledge maintaineth by D. Caius liberalitie, three fellowſhips, twentie ſchollerſhips: by Ioane Traues of London widow, foure ſchollerſhips: by Humfrey Busbie one: by Matthew Parker one ſchollerſhip, by Richard Williſon, one fellowſhip, by the liberal gift of Iodoca Franklin, twelue ſchollerſhips and ſixe fellowſhips.

Queenes Colledge by Sir Thomas Smiths, gift enioyeth two fellowſhips, with a Geometrie and Arithmetike Reader.

Chriſts Colledge that ſacred Celle of Theologie, hath one fellowſhip, & three ſchollerſhips founded by B. King Edward: by Sir Gualter Mildmay it enioyeth a yeerly penſion of twentie pounds, wherby a Preacher is maintained, and a Greeke Reader, to each of them foure pounds being allowed, the reſidue is for the maintenance of ſixe ſchollers. To this ſocietie Maſter Bunting a right Worſhipfull and Chriſtian Gentleman hath lately aſſured fortie markes by the yeere: whereof fifteene pound is allotted for three ſchollers, fiue pound for a preacher, and fiue pound for the maintenance of common fires; the reſt to be diſtributed at the diſcretion of the houſe.

In Saint Iohns Colledge ſix ſchollerſhips founded by the right Honourable Ladie Mildred Burghley, three ſchollerſhips by Sir Henry Billingſley of London, one ſchollerſhip by Miſtres Francis Iermin: thirtie pound by the yeere giuen by the thrice Honourable Sir William Cicill late Lord Treaſurer, and the moſt worthie Chancellor of that Vniuerſitie.

Magdalen Colledge hath beene encreaſed with three fellowſhips, and ſix ſchollerſhips by Sir Chriſtopher Wray his gift late Lord chiefe Iuſtice: with one ſchollerſhip, by Edmund Grindall the late moſt Reuerend Archbiſhop of Canterbury: with three ſchollerſhips by Maſter Robarts of Norffolke: and by the bountifull gift of Maſter Spenlaſſe of Lincolne, it receiueth fortie pounds yeerely.

Trinitie Colledge hath encreaſe of 75. pound of yeerely reuenue by Thomas Allin, and of ſeuen pound ten ſhillings, by Miſtres Francis Iermin.

In the third place for the coſt and charge of building: Emanuel Colledge was builded with no leſſe ſumme then of 2750. pound.

The building of Sidney Colledge coſt 2600. pound.

The tranſlating of the edifices of Trinitie Colledge is valued at the charge of 4000. pound beſtowed by the liberality of the moſt Reuerend the now Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; the right Honourable the Earle of Eſſex now their louing Chancellor; Maſter Vincent Skinner; Doctor Neuill the Maſter of the ſaid houſe; Doctor Barrow; and at the commendable and worthy charges of the ſaid houſe.

The beautifull enlarging of Saint Iohns Colledge will ſurmount to the ſumme of 3700. pound, at the charge of a moſt Honourable perſonage, that deſireth not yet to be knowen or ſeene in this charitable worke: whoſe noble liberalitie is ſo much the more worthie of eternall memorie, which ſeeketh to approue it ſelfe rather by ſecret charitie vnto God, then by outward oſtentation to the world.

Other Colledges alſo haue beene much enlarged and beautified in their buildings; as Caius Colledge, Magdalens, Bennet Colledge, Peter houſe; the particular ſummes whereof came not to my hands; the charge of theſe together could not be ſo little as 2000. pound, beſide Queenes Colledge, where the Maſters lodging hath beene lately very much enlarged and beautified, partly at the charge of Doctor Tyndall Maſter there, Deane of Ely, and of the houſe, to the ſumme foure or fiue hundred pounds: So that I account, that in the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge there hath been beſtowed in the edifices & buildings of the Colledges not ſo little as 15000. pound: The encreaſe of the yeerly reuenue will ariſe, if it be laid together, to twelue or thirteene hundred pound or thereabout: So that within the ſpace of theſe fortie yeeres, the whole acceſſion and encreaſe in the buildings and reuenues of the Colledges in Cambridge, will draw verie neare to fortie thouſand pounds. I thinke for ſo much time, we may compare with the like ſpace of yeeres in any age whatſoeuer: I ſpeake of the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge. And I doubt not, but the like might be ſaid for our famous ſiſter the Vniuerſitie of Oxford: but neither had I readie any ſuch particular direction, or could preſently procure it, for this, as for the other: and I thinke, though thoſe worthie foundations haue had moſt bountifull benefactors, yet they were without the compaſſe of this time, wherein I giue inſtance. Yet I cannot here omit to make mention of ſome worthie coſte beſtowed in that excellent Vniuerſitie now in the time of the Goſpell: as in the enlarging of Martine Colledge, with a goodlie peece of newe building by the prouident care of the preſident there, and liberall charge of the houſe.

And now of late I am certainly enformed of the bountiful diſpoſition of diuers honourable and worſhipfull perſons in adorning and augmenting the Vniuerſitie librarie there: to the finiſhing of which worke there hath beene giuen by the right Honourable Earle of Eſſex an hundred and fiftie pound; by the Lord Vicount Mountague an hundred pound; by Sir Robert Sidney an hundred pound; by M. Bodlie of London beſtowed in repayring of the ſaid librarie fiue hundred pound, beſide by the ſaid worſhipfull and well diſpoſed Citizen an hundred markes by the yeere is intended for the maintenance and keeping of the ſaid library.

Other godly workes done in that Vniuerſitie, I am forced to omit, becauſe I know them not. Neither doe I profeſſe in this place to ſet downe all other worthie works and foundations of hoſpitals, almes houſes, free ſchooles, which haue beene erected ſince the time of the goſpell in this land; whereof I much deſire that I might haue attayned to any certaine knowledge, that they might alſo haue beene remembred: I haue onely heard of a goodly hoſpitall erected by the late Lord Cobham at Cobham in Kent: of another at Greenwich by Maſter Lambert: one at Weſtminſter by the Ladie Dakers: one at Algnam in Hartfordſhire by Maſter Plat: a free ſchoole founded by Sir Iohn Hart. Neither can I heere conceale ẏ worthie foundation of an hoſpital, with a free ſchoole at Croydon, raiſed from the ground by one, rayſed vp of God for the good of many, a moſt reuerend prelate before named; which ſaid hoſpitall is founded for the reliefe and maintenance of thirtie poore folke or aboue, with a warden and ouerſeer: to the which is annexed a free ſchoole, with a Maſter and an Vſher: the reuenue laid to the houſe, and intended to be laid, is eſtimate at two hundred pound yeerely: the edifice of the hoſpitall with the chappell built in moſt comely manner, is thought to haue coſt not ſo little, as two thouſand pound: for this ſo chriſtian and acceptable a worke done to the honour of Chriſt, and the reliefe of his poore members, we are much to thanke God, that hath ſtirred vp the heart of ſo reuerend a perſon, to adorne his honourable profeſſion with ſuch a charitable act.

And further, the Citie of London hath abounded to Gods glorie with ſuch examples: Sir Thomas Greſham beſide the erection of an hoſpitall, hath founded a Colledge of Readers, wherof three are of Diuinitie, Law, Phiſicke; and foure other for the liberall ſciences; to each of them is allowed yeerely fiftie pound, with a moſt beautifull houſe appointed to that vſe.

By the Merchant Taylors alſo was built, & ſo by them maintayned, an hoſpitall in Eaſt Smithfield: another by Maſter Cure ſometime the Queenes Sadler in Southwarke: By Maſter Smith the Queenes Embroderer another at Lambert hill: By Maſter Balthaſar the Queenes Comfitmaker likewiſe an hoſpitall euen now erected at Totnam by London.

Many other hoſpitals, almes houſes, free ſchooles, haue beene in euery corner of this land built to Gods glory, ſince the flouriſhing of the Goſpell and Chriſtes truth amongſt vs: all which, if they were numbred together, a whole booke would not containe the names of them; thoſe, which I for want of knowledge haue omitted, are before God remembred.

It hath beene alſo credibly told me, that one Maſter Sutton of Cambridgeſhire, whom God hath bleſſed with a great meaſure of ſubſtance, is purpoſed to erect a goodly foundation for an hoſpitall, and to endowe the ſame with more then a thouſand pound by the yeere: whoſe heart as God hath moued to ſo godly a worke; ſo I wiſh vnto him all ſtrength & good direction for the accompliſhing thereof: that if it would pleaſe him by the worthie example of that Honourable man Sir Gualter Mildmay, to ſee his charitable purpoſe effected in ſome good ſort, while he liueth, & to employ part thereof for the maintenance of learning in the Vniuerſitie adioyning, or where elſe it pleaſeth him, I thinke nothing could be wanting in ſo Chriſtian an enterpriſe: who by this means ſhall both ſhew himſelfe a faithfull ſteward of his Maſters goods, and be a worthie example to all other rich men.

Theſe and many other ſuch charitable workes doe gliſter as pearles, and the workers thereof, doe ſhine as ſtarres amongſt vs: their religious actes are as the pomegranates in Aarons prieſtly garment, and themſelues as the tinkling bels hanging thereon, doe ſound abroad the praiſes of the Goſpell. Thoſe godly benefactors, whom I for want of knowledge haue not remembred, are before God regiſtred: and they which are not here mentioned in the lines of this leafe, their names are written in the booke of life. And this I truſt may ſerue for a full and ſufficient anſwere to the Rhemiſts vniuſt accuſation, that we condemne good workes: though we abound not in fruite, as we ſhould, yet (God be thanked) we are not fruitleſſe: and ſo I conclude with that ſaying of Hierome, Veneratio Dei non proficit ad ſalutem, niſi præcepta creatoris impleueris: The veneration of God doth not profite, where the obſeruation of his precepts doth not preuaile, Hieron, Fabiolæ tom. 4. And heere an end of this Centurie.

THE TWENTIETH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE.

WE haue now,through Gods gracious aſſiſtance,entreated of al thoſe queſtions, wherein wee diſſent from our aduerſaries , both as touching all the offices of Chriſt,his Propheticall office,kingdome and Prieſthood : as likewiſe concerning the benefits purchaſed by the death of Chriſt,the benefits of our redemption,and ſaluation. Now,in the laſt place we are to proſecute ſuch matters in queſtion betweene vs,as doe concerne the natures of Chriſt : and this treatiſe containeth three Controuerſies. Firſt, of the humane nature of Chriſt. Secondly,of his diuine nature. Thirdly,of them both conſidered together.

THE FIRST PART OF THIS CONTROuerſie,concerning the humane nature of Chriſt.

THis part is diuided into theſe queſtions. Firſt,of the vbiquitie of the humanitie of Chriſt. Secondly,whether he encreaſed in wiſedome. Thirdly,whether he ſuffered in ſoule. Fourthly, whether he deſcended into hell. Fiftly,concerning the place of hell.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE VBIQVITIE of the bodie of Chriſt,whether his humanitie be euery where.

The Papiſts.

1.Error.

THey doe ſeeme in wordes mightily to impugne this opinion of the Vbiquitaries, as they are called,which doe erroniouſly hold, that the humanitie of Chriſt is euery where, as his Deitie is,and that the proprieties of one nature are really imparted vnto the other : whereupon it followeth,that the humanitie of Chriſt is euery where,becauſe it is verily vnited,and made one perſon with the Godhead in Chriſt. This opinion the Papiſts would be thought to deteſt & abhorre : and Bellarmine beſtoweth great paines by ſundrie arguments to confute it : as by diuers places of ſcripture,Matth.28.He is riſen, he is not here,verſ.6. Ieſus ſaid, Lazarus is dead,and I am glad for your ſakes,that I was not there,Ioh.11.4. Ergo, Chriſt, as he is man, is not euery where. Againe, the opinion of the Vbiquitaries doth ouerthrow the article of Chriſts aſcenſion : for if Chriſts bodie be euery where,as they hold,he can neither aſcend nor deſcend : Bellar.de Incarnat.verbi.lib.3. cap.11.12.

The Proteſtants.

IT is true Catholike and ſound doctrine,that the humane and diuine nature are truly vnited in Chriſt,and doe make but one perſon, or hypoſtaſis, neither by confuſion of the natures,nor conuerſion of one into the other, but by vnitie of perſon : for as the bodie and ſoule make one man,ſo God and man is one Chriſt. And the better to vnderſtand this myſterie, wee muſt ſet downe theſe three poſitions.

1. Though the two natures in Chriſt be ſo vnited,that they make but one perſon, yet neither the natures are confounded,nor yet the proprieties : but as Chriſt is both God and man, ſo there is in him a double power,will,and vnderſtanding,one humane and created;the other diuine and vncreated.

2. By reaſon of this vnion, all the excellent graces of the ſpirit in the higheſt degree, and aboue meaſure,are giuen and beſtowed vpon the humanitie of Chriſt,Ioh.3.34.but ſuch notwithſtanding,as deſtroy not his humane nature, but are qualities created, as his humanitie alſo was created.

3. There is alſo a mutuall communication of the proprieties of both natures each to other, though not really in reſpect of the natures : So we ſay in Concreto, in the concrete,that is, taking the whole perſon of Chriſt, that Chriſtus homo, that is, the man Chriſt is omnipotent, is euery where:and *Chriſtus Deus,*that is,Chriſt being God,dyed for vs,was buried,roſe againe:but in the abſtract it is great blaſphemie to ſay; that the Godhead of Chriſt dyed, was buried, or roſe againe, or that the humanitie of Chriſt is omnipotent, or in euery place.

The Vbiquitaries now hold, that there is a reall communication of the proprieties of both natures: and therefore doubt not to ſay, that the fleſh and bodie of Chriſt is euery where in all places at once. The Papiſts in outward ſhew are enemies to that opinion: but in deede, and in truth, as it ſhall now appeare, they are not farre off from being in the ſame error.

Firſt, the ſame arguments which they vrge againſt the Vbiquitaries, doe returne vpon themſelues: for although they will not ſay, that Chriſts bodie is euery where, yet they hold that it may be in a thouſand places at once, yea and more to, if the Sacrament be at once in ſo many places celebrated: for Chriſts bodie is really and verily in the Sacrament. But thoſe places alleaged, He is riſen, he is not here, and the reſt, doe proue that Chriſt can be but in one place at once. This their opinion alſo is againſt the article of Chriſts aſcenſion, and abiding in heauen till the day of iudgement: for if the ſame bodie wherein Chriſt ſitteth in heauen, be in the Sacrament; either when he is preſent in earth, he is abſent in heauen, contrarie to the ſcripture, Act.3.21. which ſaith, The heauens muſt containe him till that all things be reſtored: or elſe, if he be in both places at once, they muſt needes make his bodie infinite, and ſo deſtroy the nature of his humanitie, which can be but in one place. If they ſay it is another bodie and fleſh, which Chriſt by his diuine power maketh to be preſent in the Sacrament, that were much more abſurd: for then Chriſt ſhould haue many bodies, and other fleſh than that which was borne of the Virgin Mary. We ſee then they are not farre off from the opinion of the Vbiquitaries.

Secondly, the Rhemiſts doe approue that argument, whereby Hierome proueth that the Saints may euery where be preſent at their bodies and monuments: They follow the Lambe, whither ſoeuer he goeth, Apocal.14.4. but the Lambe is in euery place: therefore they that be with the Lambe Chriſt, be preſent euery where. Whereupon it followeth, that the Lambe Chriſt in humanitie muſt be euery where: for how can he be preſent elſe in innumerable places at once, where any reliques or monuments of Saints are? Neither can they excuſe this vbiquitarie preſence of the humanitie of Chriſt and the ſoules of Saints, by their agilitie and celeritie: becauſe they can quickly paſſe from one place to another: for if they muſt be preſent at their monuments, whenſoeuer they are called vpon, they muſt of neceſſitie be often in many places at once: for in one and the ſame inſtant, men may reſort to their monuments which are in diuers places farre aſunder. Thus they are driuen not onely to graunt an vbiquitie or omnipreſence of the humanitie of Chriſt, but euen of Saints alſo: which thoſe whom they call Vbiquitaries would neuer graunt.

Thirdly, the bodie of Chriſt is viſible and palpable now in heauen, and hath a place according to the quantitie of his bodie: Bellarmine confeſſeth as much, cap.12. But that bodie which is in the Sacrament hath none of theſe properties, it is neither ſeene, nor felt, neither hath a place according to the quantitie of a bodie, for they cloſe it vp in ſmall round cakes. Wherefore deſtroying theſe properties of the humanitie of Chriſt, they may as well, and doe in effect, take away the other, namely, the being of Chriſts bodie in one place: for it is as proper to the bodie of Chriſt to be ſeene and felt, as to be in one place at once.

Fourthly, Bellarmine graunteth, being vrged with that argument, that Chriſts ſoule was in Paradiſe after his paſſion, and therefore not in hell: hee confeſſeth, that it was not impoſſible that Chriſts ſoule ſhould be in two places at once, lib.4.de Chriſti anima, cap.15. Yea he ſaith, that Chriſt may, if he will, turne all the world into bread, and the bread ſo made conuert into his fleſh; and ſo his bodie may be as well in euery place of the world, as now it is in the Euchariſt, lib.3.de incarnat.cap.11. What great oddes now, I pray you, is there betweene the opinion of the Vbiquitaries and of the Papiſts? but that they ſay, that the bodie of Chriſt is euery where ordinarily by the power of the Godhead: the other ſay, his fleſh is in many places at once by a myracle. The one ſaith, Chriſts bodie actually is in euery place: the other ſaith, it is actually in many places at once, and may be in all places, if Chriſt will: which is true in reſpect of his omnipotent will, if Chriſt would deſtroy his bodie: but we are ſure Chriſts will cannot be contrarie to it ſelfe, to deſtroy his owne bodie. We confeſſe then with Hierome: Stultum eſt illius potentiam vnius corpuſculi paruitate finiri, quem non capit cœlum, & tamen qui vbique erat in filio hominis totus erat: in omnibus locis verſabatur, cum Thoma in India, &c. It is a fooliſh thing, that the power of Chriſt ſhould be determined in the ſmalnes of a little bodie, whom the heauen is not able to receiue: and yet he that was euery where, was all and whole in the ſonne of man: in all places hee was conuerſant, with Thomas in India, Peter at Rome, with Andrew in Achaia, Paul in Illyricum, &c. tom.4. Marcell. All this wee acknowledge to be true of Chriſt as hee is God, according to his owne promiſe made to his Diſciples, I am with you to the end of the world, Matth.28.20. But to imagine Chriſts bodie to be in all places, or many places at once, is to limit his power and preſence within the compaſſe of his bodie, which Hierome here ſaith is a fooliſh matter. The Maſter alſo of the Sentences ſaith well: Chriſtus ſtus vbique totus eſt, ſed non totum; totum ad naturam refertur, totus ad hypoſtaſin: Whole Chriſt is euerie where, but not wholly: whole is referred to his perſon, whollie to his natures. *lib.*3. diſtinct. 23.liter.c.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER OVR SAuiour Chriſt did verily encreaſe in knowledge and wiſedome, as he was man.

The Papiſts.

CHriſt, they ſay, in the very firſt creation of his ſoule, and from his conception, was endued 2.Error. with the fulnes of all wiſedome, grace, and knowledge; neither can he be ſaid properly to haue encreaſed in any of theſe gifts.

1. Chriſt was annoynted from his mothers wombe; and then the ſpirit of God was vpon him: for the Angels that appeared to the ſhepheards cal him Chriſt, Luk.2.11. And Iohn ſaith, The word was made fleſh, full of grace and truth, 1.verſ.11. Therfore euen then he had receiued all aboundance of grace and knowledge, *Bellarm.de Chriſti anima.lib.*4.2.

*Anſ.*1. We grant, that our Sauiour was the Ieſus and the Chriſt euen from his Natiuitie: not that then he actually ſtraightwaies entred into thoſe offices, or receiued plenarie power of all the graces of the ſpirit in his humanitie, but becauſe he was euen from his mothers wombe conſecrated and appointed thereunto: for it no more followeth, becauſe he is called Chriſt, that he then had his actuall annoynting fully, then that, becauſe he was called Ieſus from his Natiuitie, he had actually performed our redemption. The full annoynting of the ſpirit was fulfilled in his Baptiſme, when the holy Ghoſt came downe in the likenes of a Doue: and then beginning to preach, in his firſt ſermon at Nazareth, he ſhewed the accompliſhment of the prophecie of Eſay, The ſpirit of the Lord is vpon me, &c. Luk.4.18.

2. Neither doe the words of Iohn import ſo much, as they gather. The word was made fleſh, and dwelt amongſt vs, full of grace and trueth: which is not to be vnderſtood onely of the very firſt aſſuming of the fleſh, but of the dwelling of the word in the fleſh amongſt vs, and ſo appeared to be full of grace and trueth. As it followeth, Iohn 1.16. Of his fulnes haue we receiued grace for grace: this receiuing of the fulnes of Chriſt, was not performed in his infancie, but afterward by his holy doctrine and preaching, and the Apoſtle ſaith, That when he aſcended vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, and gaue gifts vnto men, Epheſ.4.8. We denie not but that this fulnes of grace was in Chriſt in his firſt incarnation, yet after encreaſed and made more full in his humane nature.

*Argum.*2. Chriſt was the Sonne of God in his verie incarnation, and euen then was the humanitie perfectly vnited to the Godhead: therefore immediately vpon this vnion and coniunction of both natures in one perſon, muſt needs follow the fulneſſe of grace in the humane nature. Againe, Adam was created in perfect wiſedome, therefore much more the ſecond Adam. *Bellar.cap.*4.

*Anſw.*1. If preſently vpon the vniting of the two natures together, it had beene neceſſarie that the humane nature of Chriſt ſhould haue receiued whatſoeuer by the preſence of the diuine nature was to be conferred vpon it, then Chriſt ſtraightwaies muſt alſo both in bodie and ſoule haue beene glorified: for it cannot be denied, but that as the bodie of Chriſt after the reſurrection receiued more glory then before; ſo alſo his ſoule being the other part of his humanitie, was more glorified. By this it is euident, that the humanitie receiued not at once the fulnes of all grace and glory, in the firſt vniting of the Godhead.

2. Adam was created perfect in bodie and ſoule: and if Chriſt therefore ought to haue his fulnes of the gifts of the ſoule in his natiuitie as Adam had his in the creation, why ought he not alſo to haue had a perfect bodie, as Adam was created withall? Wherefore as it was no diſhonour to Chriſt to growe vp in ſtature of bodie, ſo neyther was it to encreaſe in the giftes of the minde.

Againe we confeſſe, that Chriſts ſoule in his perfect growth was farre more excellent then Adams in his perfection of creation. 3. In the firſt inſtant of his conception we doubt not alſo, but it exceeded in heauenly grace all the ſoules that euer came into the bodie by natiuitie; yea and Adams ſoule likewiſe, if it had beene ſent into the like bodie. 4. and the like equiualent perfection being admitted in Chriſts ſoule, proportionable to their ſtate: yet as Adams ſoule ſhould haue encreaſed, if he had not fallen; ſo Chriſts ſoule being moſt perfect in that infantile eſtate might and did receiue a greater fulnes.

*Argum.*3. Firſt, Chriſt created his owne ſoule. Secondly, he himſelfe by his diuine power infuſed knowledge and grace into it: therefore at the firſt he gaue vnto it the very fulnes and perfection of knowledge. Thirdly, Chriſt is the head of men and Angels, therefore he had a moſt wiſe ſoule, it is not fit that the head ſhould be leſſe wiſe then the members. *Bellarm.c.*4.

Anſw. 1. We denie not but that Chriſt, if it had pleaſed him, could haue created himſelfe, a moſt perfect ſoule that ſhould not haue receiued afterward any acceſſion of knowledge : but it pleaſed him to be herein like vnto vs, that as he grew vp in ſtature of bodie, ſo likewiſe to encreaſe in the inward graces. 2. As he created himſelfe a ſoule; ſo likwiſe he made his owne body; as he infuſed grace to his ſoule; ſo he did giue life to his fleſh : yet it followeth not,that Chriſt did or was to make at the firſt incarnation a perfect bodie to himſelfe. 3. We acknowledge notwithſtanding the ſoule of Chriſt in his growth and perfection to haue beene moſt wiſe,and exceeding the wiſedome of the ſoules of any of his members : for God gaue not him the ſpirit by meaſure. Iohn. 3.34. as others haue.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt was euen from his birth and firſt conception perfect God, and perfect man; we do aſſuredly beleeue, and that in the very incarnation, the diuine and humane nature were vnited together. Alſo we grant,that the Lord Chriſt might haue created to himſelfe a ſoule full of all wiſedome and knowledge, as he might haue made himſelfe a perfect bodie : but ſeeing it pleaſed him to be borne of a woman, and firſt to dwell in the bodie of an infant, we doubt not to ſay, as the Scripture teacheth vs, that he alſo encreaſed in wiſedome.

1. He was in all things like to his brethren,only ſin excepted,Heb.2.17.4.15 Ergo, he grew vp and encreaſed in knowledge,according to the manner of men,which may be done without ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth, he was like vs in all things which concerned the perfection of nature, and the worke of redemption : for if he ſhould haue beene like vs in all things ; then could he not haue beene borne of a virgin,nor free from the rebellion of the fleſh. Bellarm.c.5.

Contra. 1. He did not take vpon him the perfection onely, but the imperfections alſo of our nature, ſuch as he might receiue without ſinne, as in the bodie hunger, thirſt, wearines; in the ſoule, ſorrow,feare,&c. 2. It was requiſite euen to the worke of our redemption, that he ſhould be like vs in euery reſpect both in ſoule and bodie without ſinne : That he might be mercifull, and a faithfull high Prieſt in things concerning God: Hebr. 2.17. 3. From this ſimilitude of Chriſt with vs, ſinne is excepted, Hebr.4.15. and ſo both the cauſe of ſinne which is originall corruption, and therefore Chriſt was to be borne of a virgin, and the effects of ſinne, as is the rebellion of the fleſh ; which could not any way be faſtened vpon Chriſt being free from ſinne.

2. The Scripture ſaith plainely, which cannot lye, that Ieſus grew vp and encreaſed in wiſedome and ſtature, Luk.2.52. And leaſt they ſhould anſwere, that this encreaſing was onely in the opinion of men, it followeth, And in fauour with God and men : he encreaſed in wiſedome, ſtature and fauour, not onely in ſhew before men, but in truth before God : and as verily and indeed he grew vp in ſtature, ſo alſo in wiſedome.

3. Chriſt teſtifieth of himſelfe, that neither the Angels nor the Sonne of man, as he is man, knoweth of the day or houre of his comming to iudgement, but the father onely, Mark.13.31. Ergo, Chriſt as he was man had not at once all fulnes of knowledge. Bellarmine thus expoundeth this place, Filius dicitur neſcire, quia non ſciebat ad dicendum alijs: The ſonne is ſaid not to know becauſe he knew it, not to reueale it to others, but to keepe it ſecret to himſelfe.

Anſw. Firſt, then by the ſame reaſon, the Angels doe know it alſo : but that they are charged not to declare it to men : for the text ſaith, that neither the Angels, nor the Sonne of man knoweth the time. Secondly, in this ſenſe alſo the father might be ſaid not to know it : for neither hath he reuealed it to any. Laſtly, although we doe affirme according to the Scripture, that the childe Ieſus did increaſe in the gifts of the minde, as he did in the ſtature of his bodie; yet we do put great difference betweene him, and all other children that euer came into the world : for as his conception and birth were not after the common manner; (for he was conceiued by the holy Ghoſt, and brought forth without trauell and labour : as Auguſtine ſaith, Nec concipiendo libidinem ; nec pariendo perpreſſa eſt dolorem : In conceiuing ſhe felt no carnall deſire ; in bearing ſhe ſuffered no paine :) ſo likewiſe, the holy and bleſſed babe, in the conſtitution both of bodie and ſoule excelled the common condition of all other infants : for as he was void of original ſinne, ſo he was without the effects and fruits thereof, which do ſhew themſelues in children : for neither ſuffered he the like pangs and infirmities in bodie , being in his infancy, as other children do, that are vexed and tormented in bodie : neither was he ſubiect to the vnreaſonable and brutiſh motions of the minde, which are in children. Therefore Auguſtine ſaith, Hanc ignorantiam & animi infirmitatem, quam videmus in paruulis, nullo modo fuerim in Chriſto paruulo ſuſpicatus: This kind of ignorance & infirmitie of minde, which is in children, I cannot thinke to haue beene in the babe Chriſt. And what ignorance and infirmitie he meaneth, afterward he expreſſeth, Cum motibus irrationabilibus perturbantur, nulla ratione, nullo imperio cohibentur: When their brutiſh & vnreaſonable motions come vpon them, they are ruled neither by reaſon, nor any other gouernment. Theſe infirmities both in body and ſoule we deny to haue been in Chriſt : and yet we doubt not to cõclude, that, as Chriſt grew in ſtature of body; as Auguſtine ſaith, Mutationes ætatũ perpeti voluit ab ipſa exorſus infantia : He paſſed through through the ages of mans life, beginning with his infancie: So likewiſe, as the Scripture ſaith, hee encreaſed in wiſedome, Luk.2.52.

De 5.Hæreſ. cap.5.

De peccat. merit.& remiſ.29.

Ibid.

The teſtimonie of Cyrill is here moſt notable, De incarnat. Domini cap.12. Deus verbum humanitatem ſuam more ſuo proficere permittebat: & quaſi paulatim diuinitatis ſuæ voluit gloriam declarare, & cum corporis ætate ſua extendere: corporale quidem augmentum, & profectus gratiæ & ſapientiæ humanitatis magis menſuræ conueniat: ipſum Deum verbum per ſuam naturam perfectiſſimum confitemur, non egenum profectus ſapientiæ vel gratiæ: God the word ſuffered his humanitie to grow, and by little and little, as the age of his bodie encreaſed, ſo it pleaſed him to ſhew forth his diuine power: the growth of the bodie, and his encreaſe in grace and wiſedome belong to his humane nature: as he was God he was moſt perfect, and needed no encreaſe. Hence we gather this argument: As Chriſt encreaſed in bodie, ſo in gifts of the minde, but he verily did grow in bodie. Ergo.

Saint Ambroſe: Senſu hominis profecit, ſicut ſcriptum eſt, & Ieſus proficiebat ætate & ſapientia, profectus ætatis, profectus ſapientiæ; ſed humanæ, ætas non diuinitatis, ſed corporis eſt: Ergo ſi proficiebat ætate hominis, proficiebat ſapientia hominis: ſapientia autem ſenſu proficit, quia à ſenſu ſapientia: ſenſus ergo proficiebat humanus, ſenſum ergo ſuſcepit humanum: He encreaſed in the ſenſe or vnderſtanding of man, as it is written, Ieſus encreaſed in age and wiſedome: the encreaſe of age, is the encreaſe of wiſedome, but humane; for age is not of the diuinitie, but of the bodie: therefore if he encreaſed in the age of man, he encreaſed in the wiſedome of man: but wiſedome encreaſeth by ſenſe, for wiſedome is of the ſenſe: wherefore humane ſenſe encreaſed in him, and he tooke vpon him humane ſenſe: lib. de incarnat. c.7. Ambroſe thinketh, that Chriſt verily encreaſed in wiſedome, not in the opinion of men only, as the Maſter doth gloſſe vpon him: lib.3. diſt.13. liter. E. His reaſons are theſe: firſt, hee exempteth nothing from encreaſing but his diuine nature, then all the reſt encreaſed. Secondly, as hee enſcreaſed in ſtature of bodie, ſo likewiſe in wiſedome. Thirdly, his wiſedome encreaſed as his ſenſe and experience encreaſed; which was verily and in deede, not in opinion onely.

Hierome: Virginitat. laus. Dominus noſter, qui nobis viuendi exemplum reliquit, proficiebat non ætate tantum corporea, ſed ſapientia & gratia, &c. Our Lorde, who left vs an example of liuing, did encreaſe not onely in his bodily age, but in wiſedome and grace, before God and men, &c. Here alſo are three reaſons: firſt, Chriſt encreaſed to giue vs an example: but wee muſt not encreaſe onely in opinion. Secondly, hee encreaſed not onely in bodie, but in ſoule: Ergo, hee encreaſed in ſoule. Thirdly, before God and men: but there is no encreaſing before God in opinion onely.

Origen alſo vpon theſe words, Ieſus encreaſed in wiſedome & ſtature, Luk.2.52. Quis eſt hominum? &c. There is no man, but doth encreaſe in ſtature, this is no great matter to be written of Chriſt: therefore vnderſtand ætate animæ proficiebat, hee encreaſed in the ſtature of his ſoule: whereupon the Apoſtle vnderſtanding this ſtature to be vnderſtoode of the inward man, writeth: Vntill we all meet together to a perfect man, to the meaſure of the age of the fulnes of Chriſt, Epheſ.4.13. Hom.12. Leuitic. He doubteth not to affirme, that we muſt encreaſe and grow in the inward man, as Chriſt did: Ergo, he did verily and in truth encreaſe.

AN APPENDIX, OF THE MANNER of Chriſts birth.

The Papiſts.

THey ſay, Chriſt came out of his mothers wombe, the clauſure not ſtirred: as he paſſed thorow the doores when he came in to his diſciples, the doores being ſhut, Ioh.20.19. and as hee paſſed thorow the ſtone, ariſing out of the Sepulchre, Rhemiſt. annot. Iohn 10. ſect.2. Bellarm. de Eccleſ. lib.4. cap.9. 3.Erro

The Proteſtants.

1. IT can neuer be prooued, that Chriſts bodie came either thorow the wood of the doores, or thorow the ſtone of the Sepulchre, or clauſure of his mothers wombe. And concerning the laſt, the Scripture is euident to the contrarie, where it is ſaid, that our Sauiour Chriſt was preſented to the Lord, according as it is written: Euery male that firſt openeth the matrix, &c. Luk.2.29.

2. Wee graunt, that both the birth of Chriſt, his riſing out of the graue, his comming in, the doores being ſhut, was ſtraunge and miraculous, becauſe one ſubſtance gaue place to another for a time, and after the paſſing of his bodie, the place remained whole and ſhut as before: but not in the very inſtant of paſſing. The red ſea gaue place to the Iſraelites while they paſſed, and cloſed together againe: ſo did the priſon doores open miraculouſly to the Apoſtles, Act.5.19. An incredulous Iew ſeeing the eare of Malchus ſo ſoone healed, would not haue thought that Peters ſword went betweene it and his head, as we are ſure it did: So we ſay concerning the birth of Chriſt, that the place gaue way while hee paſſed, and cloſed vp afterward againe as before. Auguſtine bringeth in Chriſt, thus ſpeaking: Ego viam meo itineri præparaui: and a little after, tranſitu meo il- lius non eſt corrupta virginitas: I made a way for my ſelfe out of the wombe: neither by my paſſage was her virginitie loſt. Chriſt had a way out of his mothers wombe: but if the clauſure had not giuen place, there had been no way made. Againe he ſaith, Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, nuſquam erunt, & quia nuſquam erunt, nec erunt: Take away ſpace of place from bodies, and they ſhall be no where; and if they be no where, then are they not at all. But the Papiſts in ſaying that Chriſt went thorow the very ſubſtance and corpulence of things, doe take away from his bodie his proper place: for two ſubſtances cannot be in one place, and therefore they deſtroy the nature of his bodie.

Gaij decret. Iacuit in ſepulchro, & reuoluto lapide monumenti tertia die caro reſurrexit: He lay in the graue, and the third day, the ſtone being rolled away, his fleſh roſe againe. This decree ſaith, that Chriſts bodie went not thorow the ſtone, but the ſtone was firſt remoued.

But this matter I haue entreated of at large before, Controuerſ. 13. err. 17. argum. Pap. 2. whither I referre the reader.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule.

First, before I come to the handling of this queſtion in the ſeuerall parts thereof, I will lay open the ſlaunderous and malicious accuſations, which the Papiſts charge this opinion with, and eſpecially one Frier Fenardentius, that hath directly of this argument written againſt Maſter Caluine, that worthie Miniſter of Chriſt of bleſſed memorie. And againſt this Frier, together with Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts, I purpoſe to deale ex profeſſo, in this queſtion. If any other from amongſt our ſelues haue therein written ſomewhat diuerſly from the common opinion, I leaue them to their owne beſt thoughts: and being deſirous to maintaine peace, and not to encreaſe domeſticall contentions, I ſay with Hierome writing to Auguſtine: Non audeo ſcribere contra Epiſcopum communionis meæ.

Error ſeu falſ. 4.

Firſt, then he chargeth Caluine and others, as though they ſhould denie Chriſts prayer and requeſt in the garden to be holie, iuſt, righteous: Feuard. de Chriſto patiente. p. 415. p. 418. Firſt, Maſter Caluine himſelfe confeſſeth, Affectus in Chriſto vitio caruiſſe: That Chriſts affections were without fault, being framed to the obedience of God: in cap. 11. Ioann. verſ. 33. And Chriſt tooke vpon him mans affections, but without any diſorder. Secondly, where M. Caluine then is alleaged to ſay, Chriſtũ votum correxiſſe, that Chriſt did correct his vow, which he brake into through griefe; and, inconſiderate effluxiſſe, and that it came from him inconſiderately: in cap. 12. Ioann. verſ. 27. though this ſpeech ſeeme ſomewhat hard, yet hee is to be expounded by himſelfe, and not his wordes to bee ſo much preſſed, as his meaning to be accepted: for Caluine is farre, from charging Chriſt, with any imperfection or corruption in his deſire: but doth interprete himſelfe, that Chriſt prayed, ex ſenſu carnis, from the ſenſe of his humane nature, and of a meere humane deſire, which may without ſinne wiſh to eſcape griefe and trouble, conditionally ſo it may ſtand with Gods will, as here our Sauiour prayeth. Thirdly, Maſter Beza may very well explicate Maſter Caluines meaning: whoſe words and ſenſe cannot be miſliked, where he ſaith, that theſe words of our Sauiour, Yet not my will, &c. are not a correction, but the explication of the condition: neither doth this ſhew a repugnancie or contrarietie of Chriſts humane will, and Gods, but onely a diuerſitie: Bez. annot. in 26. Mat. v. 39. As Damaſcene well ſaith, οὐκ ἐναντιότητι γνώμης, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν ἰδιότητι τῆς φυσεων: Chriſt prayed not with a contrarie will, but proper to his humane nature: lib. 3. de fide. cap. 14.

Secondly, Caluine is charged to ſay, that Chriſt had forgotten, that he was ſent to be the redeemer of the worlde, and that he refuſed to accompliſh the worke of our redemption: Feuard. p. 423. 426.

Maſter Caluines words are theſe, that Chriſt through the vehemencie of his agonie remembred not, or thought not vpon the heauenly decree: Vt non reputaret in ipſo momento, &c. That he did not thinke in that moment, that he was ſent, hac lege, with this condition to be the Sauiour of the world: in cap. 26. Matth. c. 39. And againe in the ſame place: Mediatoris officio defungi, quantum in ſe eſt, renuit: He refuſeth, as much as in lieth, or in his humane nature to doe the office of a Mediatour.

Firſt, I here ſay with Auguſtine, if Maſter Caluine ſhould ſeeme to any ſomewhat to exceede in termes: Nunquam errari tutius exiſtimo, quam cum amore nimio veritatis & reiectione falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man cannot erre more ſafely, than in the too much loue of the truth, and reiecting of falſehood.

Secondly, Maſter Caluine is very farre himſelfe from charging Chriſt with any ſuch forgetfulnes or vnwillingnes: for thus he ſaith: Quia non deſtitit mundi eſſe ſeruator, &c. Becauſe hee neuer ceaſed to be the Sauiour of the world, he was alwaies endued with an heauenly power to the fulfilling of his office: neither can it be, that he ſhould forget thoſe, which doe commend their ſaluation vnto him: in Luc. 23. 43. how then could he be forgetfull of himſelfe, and his own office?

Thirdly, Maſter Caluine further expoundeth himſelfe in theſe very words: firſt, he ſaith, In ipſo momento, in that very moment onely, and, quantum in ſe eſt, in reſpect of his humane nature, Chriſt prayed, that the cup might paſſe, his humane nature now fullie ſhewing it ſelfe: ſo that this paſſion in Chriſt proceeded onely from his humane infirmitie; and it was but for a moment, Chriſt in that very inſtant remembring himſelfe: Ioh. 12. 27. What ſhall I ſay? Father ſaue me from this houre, but therefore came I into this houre.

Fourthly, Saint Auguſtine ſaith as much: Hæc humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & priuatum orans: This was his humane will, praying now for ſomewhat proper and priuate to himſelfe, par. 1. in Pſal. 32. If it were priuate that he prayed, then it was beſide the publike office of the Mediatorſhip. And againe, Pſal. 93. Oſtendit hominis voluntatem, et ſi in illa voluntate permaneret iam prauum cor oſtendere videretur: He ſhewed the will of a man, and if he had continued in that will, his heart had not been aright. So then Auguſtine affirmeth, that for a moment Chriſts humane will deſired ſomething priuate: Caluine ſaith no more.

Damaſcene alſo ſaith, that Chriſts humane will, τῆς φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειρασθεῖσα, being firſt tempted of his naturall infirmitie, νευρωθεῖσα, was afterward ſtrengthened by his diuine will, and receiued courage againſt death: lib. 3. de fid. c. 18. Wherefore Feuardent. ſheweth his Frierly cauilling ſpirit, in wreſting that as ſpoken of Chriſt abſolutely as he was the Mediatour, which onely brake foorth from his humane infirmitie, yet without ſinne; and maketh that to be as a ſetled diſpoſition in Chriſt, which was but a momentanie paſſion.

Thirdly, he chargeth Caluine, as though hee ſhould ſay, that the bodily death of Chriſt profited nothing: and therefore he taketh vpon him to prooue, that the bodily death of Chriſt did much further the ſaluation of mankinde: which no man is ſo impious to denie. Error ſeu falſ. 6.

Firſt, theſe are Caluines words: Nihil actum erat, ſi corporea tantum morte defunctus fuiſſet: Nothing had been done, if Chriſt had onely performed a bodily death: lib. 2. Inſtitut. c. 16. ſ. 10. He denieth not the profitable and neceſſarie vſe of the bodily death; but ſaith it was not auaileable alone without the ſoule. The Frier himſelfe ſaith in effect as much: Dial. 5. p. 452. Tales fuerunt pœnæ, quas non tantum ſecundum corpus, &c. Such were the paines which Chriſt onely ſuffered not for vs according to his bodie, which without the ſoule is altogether impaſſible, but in the ſoule alſo.

Secondly, Damaſcene ſaith, ἡ ψυχὴ παθητὴ οὖσα συμπάσχει τῷ σώματι, The ſoule being paſſible, doth ſuffer together with the bodie, lib. 3. de. fid. cap. 26. If then the bodie without the ſoule is impaſſible, and the ſoule doth ſuffer with the body, why is Caluine blamed for ſaying, that Chriſts bodily death onely had not been auaileable?

Thirdly, Maſter Caluine himſelfe euery where magnifieth the bodily death of Chriſt: as he is alleaged by Feuard. Quiſquis nutritiam ſibi eſſe cupit Chriſti carnem, &c. Hee that deſireth the fleſh of Chriſt to be his nouriſher, muſt conſider the ſame offered vpon the croſſe, as the price of our reconciliation: in Luc. c. 22. verſ. 16. How then is hee not aſhamed to charge him with ſo notorious a lye, as though he held the bodily death of Chriſt altogether vnprofitable?

Fourthly, Feuardentius ſlaundereth Caluine, as though hee ſhould ſay, Chriſtum omnia reprobis & damnatis debita ſupplicia pertuliſſe: That Chriſt did beare all the puniſhments due vnto the reprobate: p. 443. And thereupon inferreth, that whereas theſe foure are the puniſhments of the reprobate: 1. That they ſhall for euer want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall for euer be perplexed with the horror of a guiltie conſcience. 3. By their owne fault, they are depriued of all the gifts of the ſpirit. 4. Inſtead of vertues, they are defiled with all wickedneſſe: p. 446. 447. He would by Caluines ſentence force all theſe vpon Chriſt. Error ſeu falſ. 7.

Contra. 1. Though in ſome ſenſe Chriſt may be ſaid to haue ſuffered the paines of the damned, though not all, nor in that manner, as they ſuffer them; yet, becauſe the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, I could wiſh, for feare of offence, that ſuch phraſes had been forborne: that neither the aduerſarie ſhould haue catched any aduantage thereby, nor the weake conſcience taken offence.

2. That Chriſt notwithſtanding did beare ſome puniſhments due vnto the reprobate, as deſertion for a while and dereliction, the Scriptures (we ſee) doe warrant it.

3. Whereas Caluine ſaith: Vt dependeret omnes, quæ ab illis expetendæ erant pœnas, &c. that hee might pay all puniſhments to be required of them: Inſtitut. lib. 2. c. 16. ſect. 10. he meaneth, as Auguſtine in the like caſe expoundeth the word (omnis, omnia) not ſingula generum, but genera ſingulorum, not euery paine in particular, but in generall: as by all puniſhments, the kinds of all puniſhments are vnderſtood, that is in the bodie, and ſoule, though not euery particular puniſhment in the bodie and ſoule.

4. Caluine himſelfe excepteth the manner: Excepto, quod doloribus mortis, &c. It muſt be excepted, that Chriſt could not be held in the ſorrowes of death, as the reprobate are: ibid. The puniſhment then, which Chriſt did beare, and the reprobate ſuffer, differ in the perpetuitie: wherefore the Frier impudently doth obiect the two firſt puniſhments produced, which doe include a continuance and perpetuitie for euer.

5. Caluine according to the Scriptures profeſſeth, that Chriſt in all his actions & puniſhments was immaculate and without ſinne: ſuch puniſhments then of the reprobate, as are not ſuffered without ſinne, of the which ſort are the two laſt rehearſed, Chriſt by the ſentence of Caluine is to be freed: ſo then none of thoſe foure puniſhments can be faſtened vpon Chriſt in Caluines iudgement: ſo that the Frier is ſent away here with a flea in his eare.

Error ſeu falſ.8. Fiftly, he obiecteth, that Caluine ſhould affirme, that Chriſt doubted of his eternall ſaluation: Theſe are Caluines words, Inſtitut.lib.2.c.16.ſect.12. Some will crie out againſt me, as though I did great iniurie to Chriſt: Quia minimè conſentaneum fuerit eum de animæ ſalute timere: Becauſe it is not conuenient, that he ſhould feare the ſaluation of his ſoule: Fenard.p.458.

Firſt, Maſter Caluine is flat of a contrarie iudgement, that Chriſt neuer doubted his ſaluation, neither did his faith faile: in eius diro cruciatu illæſa fuit eius fides: in his greateſt perplexitie his faith was not violated: fixa ſtetit fides eius in corde, his faith ſtood firme in his heart: in c.27.Mat.ver.46. He might be aſhamed therefore to preſſe Caluines words againſt his owne meaning.

Secondly, timere, to feare, is not dubitare, to doubt: for feare may proceede from the infirmitie of nature without ſinne, but doubtfulnes ſpringeth of diffidence or diſtruſt. And here Damaſcene helpeth vs with a very good diſtinction of feare: There is δειλία φυσικὴ, a naturall feare; and a feare, ἐξ ἀπιστίας, that proceedeth of diffidence or diſtruſt: the firſt was in Chriſt; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.5.7. He was heard in that he feared; but not the ſecond: Damaſ.de fid.lib.3.c.23.

Thirdly, why doth not the Frier open his throte againſt Ambroſe, who doubteth not to ſay of Chriſt: Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne tu ſi cæperis dubitare deſperes: His doubting doth ſtrengthen vs, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpayre: de incarn.c.4.

Error ſeu falſ.9. Sixtly, another lye wherewith the Frier ſlaundereth Caluine is this, that he ſhould ſay, that Chriſt was, reipſa peccator, a ſinner indeed: non tantum noſtrorum, ſed propriorum peccatorum reum, not guiltie onely of our ſinnes, but of his owne. p.462.

Firſt, Caluine onely ſaith: Oportuit eum ſiſti ad dei tribunal, vt cunctorum noſtrorum maleficiorum reum: He was to ſtand before Gods iudgement ſeate, as guiltie of all our ſinnes. Hee tooke vpon him our perſon, and vndertooke our ſinnes; as the Prophet ſaith, Iſay.53.6. God hath layd vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: And the Apoſtle ſaith, He was made ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that wee ſhould be made righteouſnes in him. As we are ſinners in our ſelues, yet made righteous by imputation of his righteouſnes: ſo Chriſt being righteous in himſelfe, was a ſinner for vs, and in our perſon by imputation of our ſinnes. This is neither hereſie nor blaſphemie.

Secondly, Damaſcene hath a diſtinction to this purpoſe: that there is οἰκείωσις φυσικὴ, ϗ σχετικὴ, an appropriation naturall and perſonall; the naturall appropriations in Chriſt are ſuch, as he receiued together with our nature: the perſonall, which agreed not to him, but as he tooke vpon him our perſon, as to be forſaken, to be accurſed, lib.3.de fid.c.25. ſo Chriſt in our perſon ſtood as guiltie before God.

Error ſeu falſ.10. Seuenthly, he challengeth Caluine to ſay, Quod Chriſtum Deus exhorreret, deteſtaretur, &c. That God hated, deteſted and abhorred Chriſt: Fenard. pag.468. Caluine ſaith not ſo, but thus; Species Chriſto obiecta eſt, quaſi Deo aduerſo, &c. It ſo ſeemed vnto Chriſt (for that moment) as though God were his aduerſarie, in c.26.Matth. Now it is one thing for God to be an enemie indeed, another to be felt and feared for a time as an enemie: Iob complayneth in the bitterneſſe of his ſoule of God, He counteth me as one of his enemies, Iob.19.11. Though Iob ſo feared, yet neither was God his enemie, nor he as one of Gods enemies, yet beloued of God: ſo Chriſt was alwayes the beloued ſonne of God, yet in that inſtant, the puniſhment of our ſinnes lying vpon him, hee felt the wrath of God as of an enemie. 2. This is agreeable to the Apoſtle, who ſayth, that Chriſt vpon the croſſe hath ſlaine hatred in himſelfe, Epheſ.2.16. but otherwiſe, how hath he ſlaine it, but by bearing it for vs. 3. Beda ſaith, 3.ad Galat. Quid mirum ſi maledictum eſt Deo, quod odit Deus, &c. No maruell, if that be curſed of God, which God hateth: Chriſt then vndergoing the curſe and malediction, did beare alſo the hatred. 4. Here then theſe conſiderations are neceſſarie, 1. that Chriſt was not wholy or finally accurſed, hated or forſaken of God, but ex parte, in part, and for a time: 2. that it was rather in Chriſts ſenſe and feeling, then in Gods reiecting of him. 3. that Chriſt in himſelfe was alwayes beloued and bleſſed of God: he ſtood onely accurſed for vs by reaſon of our ſinnes laid vpon him: as Auguſtin ſaith, Benedictus in iuſtitia ſua; maledictus ob peccata noſtra: Bleſſed in his innocencie, curſed for our iniquitie, lib.14.contr.Fauſt.ad c.12.

Error ſeu falſ.11. Eightly, he belyeth Caluin to ſay, Patrem reipſa filium ſuum, cùm pateretur, deſeruiſſe: That the father did truely and indeed forſake his ſonne, when he ſuffered, pag.472.

Caluine ſo ſaith not: his wordes are theſe, Alienationem Dei mente concepit, ſicut ſenſus dictabat: He conceiued in his minde, that he was alienated from God, according to his preſent ſenſe and feeling: in c.27.Matth.verſ.46. Nec verò fictè conqueritur ſe à patre derelictum: Neither doth he fainedly complaine that he was forſaken of God, Inſtit.lib.2.c.16.ſect.12. It is one thing to be indeed forſaken finally and totally of God; another, ſo to thinke and conceiue for the time: Dauid ſaid in his haſte, I am caſt out of thy ſight, Pſalm.31.22. Yet was hee not caſt wholly out: for it followeth, Yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer: So Beda witneſſeth in 15. Marc. Vt homo loquitur meos circumferens metus, quod in periculis poſiti à Deo nos deſeri putamus: Hee ſpeaketh as a man bearing about in himſelfe our feare; becauſe being in danger, wee thinke we are forſaken: The ſame ſaith Caluin, and no otherwiſe, that Chriſt truely complayned in his owne ſenſe, that he was forſaken of God; yet God in his eternall purpoſe neuer did forſake him.

Error ſeu falſ.12.

In the ninth place, the Frier obiecteth, that Caluine ſhould affirme, that Chriſt deſpayred: pagin.480. Caluines wordes are theſe: Abſurdum videtur elapſam Chriſto deſperationis vocem &c. It may ſeeme abſurd, that a voyce or word of deſperation fell from Chriſt, the anſwere is eaſie, that this deſperation proceeded from the ſenſe of the fleſh, *in cap. Matth.*27.

Firſt, Frier Feuardentius needed not to haue taken ſuch exception againſt Caluine for theſe words, ſeeing his fellow Frier Ferus hath the like: nay, he ſayth more, Non ſolum ſupplicium à nobis meritum, verum etiam deſperationem noſtram in ſe tranſtulit: Chriſt did not onely take vpon himſelfe our deſerued puniſhment, but alſo our deſperation: And againe, Vt deſperationem deſperatione, mortem morte, infernum inferno vinceret: That he might ouercome deſperation with deſperation, death by death, hell with hell, *lib.4. in Matth.*27.

Secondly, he reporteth M. Caluines words otherwiſe then they are: for thus he writeth: Sed abſurdum videtur Chriſto elapſam eſſe deſperationis vocem: ſolutio facilis eſt, quanquam ſenſus carnis exitium apprehenderet, fixam tamen ſtetiſſe fidem illius in corde, qua Deum præſentem intuitus eſt, de cuius abſentia conqueritur: It ſeemeth abſurd, that a voice of deſperation ſhould fall from Chriſt: the ſolution is eaſie; although the ſenſe of the fleſh did apprehend deſtruction, yet faith was fixed in his heart, whereby hee did behold God as preſent, of whoſe abſence hee complaineth. And againe, Diſcrimen notauimus inter naturæ ſenſum, & fidei notitiam, &c. We haue noted a difference betweene the ſenſe of nature and the notice of faith: ſo that nothing hindreth, but that Chriſt both in his mind might conceiue an alienation of God, according to his common ſenſe, and yet together by faith, did hold or receyue God to be mercifull: Thus wee ſee, how maliciouſly this Frier clippeth and culleth, changeth and turneth Caluines wordes, contrary to his owne minde: he is farre from aſcribing deſpayre vnto Chriſt; but onely affirmeth that he was tempted of the infirmitie of his fleſh: Cum deſperatione luctatus eſt, non tamen victus, neque enim qui deſperati ſunt poſſunt Deum appellare ſuum: he did wraſtle with deſpaire, but was not ouercome; for they that are deſperate cannot call God, their God, *in Matth.*24.*v.*46.

Damaſcene affirmeth as much, that Chriſt was tempted of his naturall infirmitie, but ſtrengthened by the diuine will: and theſe were, φυσικῆς δειλίας τὰ ῥήματα, the words of his naturall feare or infirmitie, *lib.3. de fid.c.*18. And though from vs ſuch words cannot proceede without ſinne, yet we muſt ſo thinke of the integritie of Chriſts nature, that he had the very force and fulneſſe of humane affections, yet without corruption, though we be not able to iudge of it: as Auguſtine ſaith, that we cannot iudge de moribus ſanctorum, of the manners of the Saintes by our ſelues, Sicut de ciborum ſuauitate febrientes iudicare non ſinimus, wee do not ſuffer thoſe that are ſicke of feuers, to iudge of the taſte or ſweetneſſe of meate: *contr. Fauſt. lib.*22.*c.*48. If we muſt not meaſure the acts of the Saints by our owne, how much more vnable is the corruption of our fleſh to comprehend the perfection of Chriſts humane nature: So then it is euident, that this is but a frierly tricke, and a lowde lie, that either Caluine or any other Proteſtant beſide chargeth Chriſt with deſpayre.

Error ſeu falſ.13.

In the tenth place this doctrine is charged with a great abſurditie, or rather blaſphemie, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer the death of the ſoule or the ſecond death: *Feuard.*p.453.lin.3. which is contrary to the Scriptures: which euery where teſtifie of Chriſt, 1. that he is life, & gaue life to the world, Ioh 1.3. how then could he die the death of the ſoule? *Feuard.*297.*l.*19. 2. It is alſo contrary to reaſon: for ſeeing as the departure of the ſoule is the death of the bodie; ſo the departure of God is the death of the ſoule: as Auguſtine ſaith, *de verb. Apoſtol. ſerm.*30. Chriſt being perſonally vnited to God, could not die the death of the ſoule, *Feuard.pag.*474.*lin.*19. Thirdly, the fathers make but two deaths of the ſoule: the firſt is ſinne in this life, the other damnation in the next, but neither of theſe agree to Chriſt. Auguſtine ſaith, *Epiſtol.*99. Certè anima Chriſti, nullo mortificata peccato, vel damnatione punita eſt, &c. Surely the ſoule of Chriſt was neyther mortified with ſinne, nor puniſhed with damnation; for which two cauſes the death of the ſoule is vnderſtood: and Fulgentius ſaith, Anima Chriſti inferni doloribus non torquebatur: Chriſtes ſoule was not tormented in hell, *Feuard.pag.*357.*lin.*26.

1. Contra. Firſt, we willingly giue conſent to theſe Scriptures, reaſons, and fathers, that Chriſt cannot be ſaid in any ſuch ſenſe to die the death of the ſoule, either by ſinne or damnation, eyther by a voluntary or neceſſary ſeparation from God: therefore all that labour may be ſpared, to accumulate reaſons, or multiplie teſtimonies of fathers, to free Chriſt from ſuch death of the ſoule, which without blaſphemie cannot be affirmed of Chriſt.

Secondly, though the concluſion be granted, yet the premiſſes are too weake to enforce it: firſt, it followeth not, Chriſt is life in his ſoule: Ergo his ſoule died not: as it is no conſequent, Chriſts bodie giueth life, Ergo, it died not: the contrarie rather is inferred, that Chriſts fleſh by dying, gaue life to the world, Iohn 6.51. Secondly, it is no good argument, Chriſts ſoule was neuer ſeparated, but perſonally vnited vnto the word, Ergo, it died not: for his bodie was alwaies perſonally vnited to the ſoule ὑποστατικῶς, though not τοπικῶς, as Damaſcene ſaith, *cap.*27. Hypoſtaticallie, though not locallie: ſo likewiſe was the bodie alwaies perſonally vnited to the Godhead, euen then, when it lay in the graue, yet the bodie dyed.

Thirdly, neither doe we much preſſe or vrge this phraſe of ſpeech, that Chriſt dyed the death of the ſoule. Firſt, becauſe we finde it not ſo euidently vſed in Scripture. Secondly, and we haue other phraſes as fit to expreſſe the ſufferings of Chriſt in ſoule. Thirdly, and for that it may giue occaſion of ſtumbling to the weake, and of gaineſaying and exception to the contrarie minded.

Laſtly, yet notwithſtanding, becauſe ſome in defence of this trueth haue ſo ſpoken and written, I will briefly ſhew in what tolerable ſenſe Chriſt is affirmed to die in the ſoule: and that there is another death of the ſoule, then either by ſinne or damnation.

Firſt, as the bodie is not ſaid onely to dye, when the ſoule departeth from it, but when it is preſſed with dangerous and deepe afflictions, which threaten death: ſo in like ſenſe the ſoule may be ſaid after a ſort to die, not only, when it is finally ſeparated from God, but perplexed and troubled with the horror and feeling of Gods wrath and indignation. The firſt is proued by S. Paul, 1. Cor. 15.31. He there ſaith, I dye daily: that is in reſpect of his great afflictions and perſecutions, that threatned death: otherwiſe the bodie by the ſeparation of the ſoule dieth but once, and not daily: Thus Chriſt then in ſome ſort is affirmed to die in ſoule, not in any ſeparation made betweene his ſoule and God, but in the feeling and fearing of Gods indignation, which in the reprobate is the forerunner of their finall ſeparation.

Secondly, whereas the Lord threatneth Adam thus: In the day that thou eateſt thereof, morte moriemini, ye ſhall die the death: Geneſ. 2.17. This muſt be vnderſtoode of the death of the ſoule: as Felix. epiſtol. ad Petrum Antiochen. expoundeth it: Adam quo die comedit ex ligno in ipſo ſecundum animam mortuus, nam ipſius corporis mors poſt 930. annos contigit: Adam the ſame day he did eate of the tree, died according to this ſoule; for the death of his bodie followed 930. yeares after: and this death of the ſoule which Adam incurred, was not his ſinne, but cauſed by it, for his diſobedience in eating was puniſhed by this death: this death of his ſoule was a puniſhment of the firſt death by ſinne: And S. Ambroſe well noteth this difference betweene, morte mori, and vita mori: vita moritur, qui viuit corpore, ſed actu moritur ſuo, He in liuing dieth, that liueth in bodie; but dieth in his acte or worke: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Tim. 5.6. *She that liueth in pleaſure, is dead, while ſhe liueth: but to die the death, is to die both in bodie and ſoule: de paradiſ. c.*9. Neither was this death of the ſoule, whereinto Adam fell actuall condemnation for euer; for Adam was not condemned but ſaued by faith in Chriſt: Ergo, by this death of the ſoule, a third kinde is ſignified, namely, the feare or debt, horror or danger of the proper death of the ſoule, which is condemnation.

Thirdly, this threatning of Adam, Thou ſhalt die the death, was truly performed in Chriſt: but if this death to Adam threatned be the death of the ſoule, and not of the bodie, as I haue proued, becauſe Adams bodie died not in that day, &c. how could the death of Adams ſoule be truely performed in Chriſts bodie? ſo that this maketh a ſtrong argument, to proue a kinde of dying in ſoule in Chriſt: that death which was to Adam threatned, Chriſt ſuffered: I thinke this will be confeſſed; that it was truely performed in Chriſt, but not in his bodie, Ergo in his ſoule: And ſo it followeth in the epiſtle of Felix before alleaged: Itaque Deus donum dimidiatum non fecit, ſed totum ſimul Adam ex virginis vtero ſumpſit, vt etiam perditum totum ſaluum faceret: God gaue not halfe a gift, but he tooke whole Adam of the virgins wombe to ſaue the whole, that was loſt: the reaſon thus ſtandeth: to redeeme the whole, Chriſt muſt die in the whole, for he tooke the whole to redeeme the whole; if it had not been needfull to die or ſuffer in the whole, he needed not to haue taken the whole: but Chriſt redeemed the whole, Ergo, he died in the whole. Thus then it appeareth, how both without feare of ſinne or damnation, a kinde of death may be affirmed to haue been ſuffered by Chriſt in his ſoule: which phraſe of ſpeech notwithſtanding vpon the reaſons before alleaged, I wiſh rather to be more ſparingly vſed, if not altogether forborne and diſcontinued.

Thus haue I ſhewed what vntrue accuſations this holy truth of the ſufferings of Chriſt is charged with, and how it is againe diſcharged: for we neither affirme; 1. that Chriſts prayers in the Garden were vniuſt or vnholy, but ſober, temperate, godly, onely ſhewing his humane deſire to eſcape death, yet conformable to his fathers will. 2. Or that Chriſt was forgetfull of his office. 3. Or that his bodily death profited not. 4. Or that Chriſt ſuffered all the puniſhments of the damned and reprobate. 5. Or that Chriſt doubted of his ſaluation. 6. Or that he was verilie, and in deed a ſinner. 7. Or that God in deed hated, and deteſted Chriſt. 8. Nor yet that Chriſt was indeed forſaken of God. 9. Nor that Chriſt deſpaired. 10. Nor that he ſuffered the true and proper death of the ſoule. Theſe ten ſeuerall chalenges, whereby they practiſe to make this doctrine odious, I haue anſwered: and all thoſe blaſphemies, which they would faſten vpon vs, and Chriſts holy cauſe, we wipe them off, as Paul did the Viper, without any hurt to our cauſe, no more than the Viper did to the Apoſtles hand.

Wherefore, that the trueth may appeare to the ſight of all men of vnderſtanding, I will ſpeake of euery thing diſtinctly, and deuide this queſtion of Chriſts inward ſufferings into theſe conſiderations following.

1. Whether the bodily paſſion of Chriſt were ſufficient for the redemption of the world.
2. Of the feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt, and the cauſe thereof.
3. Whether he ſuffered properly and immediatly in ſoule.
4. Whether he ſuffered the ſorrowes and paines of hell.

And to this queſtion is adioyned as an appendix, whether hell fire and torment be onely corporall.

5. Whether Chriſt ſtoode before God, as guiltie of our ſinnes in our perſon.
6. Whether in Chriſt there were any horror or perplexitie of conſcience for the ſinne of the world, which he bare.
7. Whether Chriſt in Gods iuſtice ought to haue dyed for vs as our ſuretie.

Hereunto is added as an appendix, whether Chriſts blood were giuen to the diuell as a price for our redemption.

8. Whether Chriſt felt the wrath of God in his ſoule.
9. Whether he truely complained as forſaken of God.
10. Whether he did beare the curſe of God in his ſoule.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE BODILIE death of Chriſt were ſufficient for mans redemption.

The Papiſts.

14. Error.

THis is ſo affirmed by the Rhemiſts: *Annot.Mat.*27.*ſect.*3.*Bellar.c.*8.*de Chriſti anim.arg.*1.*Fenar. dialog.*5.*de Chriſto patiente.p.*439. The leaſt droppe of blood, the leaſt teare, the leaſt grone in Chriſt had been ſufficient in reſpect of the dignitie of the ſufferer: *Fenard.p.*450. they reaſon thus.

*Argum.*1. The Scriptures euery where aſcribe our whole redemption to the death, and blood of Chriſt: Epheſ.1.7. We haue redemption thorough his blood. Coloſſ.1.20. He hath ſet at peace thorough the blood of his croſſe,&c. Hebr.9.12. Chriſt by his owne blood entred once into the holy place: and euery where the Scripture ſetteth forth the death and blood of Chriſt: Ergo, that onely was ſufficient, without any other ſuffering: *Bellarm.ibid.argum.*1. *Fenard.p.*441.

*Anſw.*1. If theſe places be litterally preſſed, for the ſufficiencie of Chriſts blood only, then all his 1. ſufferings before in his life, his hunger, thirſt, buffetings, reproches, ſlaunders were ſuperfluous. Secondly, then his fleſh alſo ſhould be excluded, which is not his blood: for his fleſh is our meate, his blood our drinke, Iohn 6.55. Thirdly, and ſeeing Chriſt ſhed not onely blood vpon the croſſe but water: as S. Iohn ſaith, he came by water and blood, 1.Iohn 5.6. if blood be ſtrictly taken, then the water was ſpilt in vaine out of his ſide: wherefore by the blood of Chriſt by a figuratiue ſpeech, the reſt of his painefull ſufferings both in bodie and ſoule are inſinuated.

2. For if blood be taken ſimplie, we ſhall finde, that it was no part of his death, for his ſide was pearced after he had giuen vp the Ghoſt, yea after he had ſaid, it is finiſhed, that is the worke of our redemption: Iohn 19.verſ.30.34. And ſo S. Ambroſe ſaith, Poſt mortem, percuſſus eſt non ante, vt exitus eius voluntarius non neceſſarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his departure might ſeeme voluntarie, not neceſſarie. In deede his croſſe was embrued with his blood before, which the nayles forced from his hands and feete, and the thornes from his temples, and the whipping before from his ſide: but that blood which iſſued forth with water, which S. Iohn eſpecially noteth, came out of his ſide after the ſurrendring of his ſpirit: which was the moſt notable part of his bodilie ſufferings. as Origene ſaith: Petra niſi fuiſſet percuſſa non dabat aquas; ſic percuſſus Chriſtus in cruce noui teſtamenti fontes produxit: Vnleſſe the rocke had been ſmitten, it had yeelded no water, and Chriſt being ſtricken, brought forth the fountaines or ſtreames of the new Teſtament: *Hom.*11. in Exod.

3. Neither is this vnuſuall in Scripture: by one part to expreſſe the whole: as when the word is ſaid to be made fleſh, Iohn 1.14. the ſoule is vnderſtoode: for Chriſt tooke not a ſoule without a bodie. Likewiſe Hebr.10.5. A bodie thou haſt ordained: certainely a bodie with a ſoule alſo: and he tooke the ſeede of Abraham, Hebr.2.16. that is both humane fleſh and ſoule: and he was made of the ſeede of Dauid according to the fleſh, Rom.1.3. The Apoſtle hereby expreſſeth the whole humane nature of Chriſt: In like manner in the death of Chriſts bodie, ſuffering of his fleſh, ſhedding of his blood, euen the paſſions of his ſoule are comprehended.

4. Wherefore, as in theſe places alleaged, we reade the blood of Chriſt, or the blood of the croſſe,ſo other where in more generall tearmes the Apoſtles call it the dying of Chriſt,1.Cor.4 10. the ſufferings of Chriſt, 1.Pet.4.13.

5. S. Ambroſe giueth this reaſon,why the ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified by the blood : Caro ſaluatoris pro ſalute corporis, ſanguis pro anima noſtra effuſus eſt: ſanguis enim pro anima, ſicut præfiguratum eſt in Moſe.in 1.*Cor.*11. The fleſh of our Sauiour for the ſauing of the bodie, his blood was ſhed for our ſoule : for the blood is the life or the ſoule,as was prefigured in Moſes : for ſo it is written, the blood is the life,Geneſ.9.4. Leuit.17.14.

6. Firſt, that the blood of Chriſt in Scripture is ſaid to redeeme,cleanſe,ſanctifie vs, &c. it is euident: but by blood,we muſt vnderſtand the other ſufferings and partes of Chriſt,as I haue ſhewed before : if blood alone ſufficed,what did Chriſts fleſh ? what did the water,whereby Chriſt came, and not onely by blood, 1.Iohn 5.8. or Chriſts ſpirite, which he ſurrendred vnto God, are they excluded? Secondly, Chriſts blood we confeſſe in Gods omnipotencie to haue been ſufficient to redeeme vs, though but one droppe had been ſhed; but it ſo ſtoode not with the decree and purpoſe of God : wherefore from his power to his will, from his omnipotencie to his ordinance,from that he can doe, to that which he will doe,the argument followeth not.

7. Neither is an vnregenerate ſoule onely called by the name of fleſh in Scripture, as Bellarmine imagineth,*lib.*5.*de ſtat.peccat.c.*7.2. For of Adam and Eue it is ſaid, before ſinne entred, or the ſoule was vnregenerate, or corrupted, they two ſhall be one fleſh, Geneſ.2.24. which ſignifieth not onely a coniunction of bodie,which is in wicked couples,but an vnitie of ſoule and affection: and where S. Paul ſaith, We are members of his bodie, of his fleſh, and of his bones, Epheſ.5.30. ſpeaketh the Apoſtle of the vnregenerate parte ? Likewiſe, where the Scripture ſaith : Videbit omnis caro ſalutare Dei: All fleſh ſhall ſee the ſaluation of God, Luk.3.6. S. Auguſtine proueth by this place, that the ſoule is comprehended vnder the name of fleſh, *lib.*83.*qu.c.*80. And it is euident, that the regenerate and faithfull are here vnderſtoode : for the vnbeleeuers and vnfaithfull cannot ſee the ſaluation of God. Ambroſe alſo thus expoundeth theſe words of Chriſt, the ſpirite is readie,the fleſh is weake : Vt in ſpiritu Deum,in carne hominem ſignificaret: To ſignifie God in the ſpirit, and man in the fleſh : in 8.ad Rom. Chriſts whole humanitie then is ſignified by fleſh.

8. It is euident,that by Chriſts fleſh, in Scripture his whole humanitie, and ſo conſequently his ſoule is expreſſed. Firſt,the Apoſtle thus teſtifieth,Rom.1.3. Chriſt was made of the ſeede of Dauid according to the fleſh, and declared mightilie to be the ſonne of God, touching the ſpirit of ſanctification,&c. Here whole Chriſt is deſcribed vnto vs as God and man : the ſoule then of Chriſt is comprehended vnder the name of fleſh,or elſe it is excluded, and ſo the Apoſtle ſhould ſet before vs an vnperfect Chriſt. Secondly,likewiſe Heb.2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood he alſo himſelfe tooke part with them : tooke he part with them in the fleſh onely, and not in the ſoule alſo? Thirdly,where it is ſaid, The word was made fleſh, the ſoule is not onely here by conſequence implied, but properly in the ſignification included. Firſt, the Apollinariſt heretikes confeſſed humane fleſh in Chriſt,and denied him an humane ſoule,ſupplying it by his diuine ſpirite;they therefore tooke this conſequent not to be neceſſarie ; wherefore it is more ſafe to affirme here an incluſiue ſignification, then an excluſiue implication onely of the ſoule, becauſe of the hereſie of the Apollinariſts, as we reade of one Euſtathius, a Monothelite heretike, condemned in the Councell, *Chalcedon. act.*1. who affirmed: Hominem non aſſumpſit Chriſtus, ſed carnem aſſumpſit,&c. Chriſt tooke not man,but tooke onely fleſh.

2. Saint Paul doth very well expound the Euangeliſts meaning,when he ſaith, Chriſt being in the forme of God,&c.tooke vpon him the forme of a ſeruant,&c and was found in ſhape as a man, Phil.2.7. This is that which the Euangeliſt ſaith, The word was made fleſh,that is man,and dwelt among vs.

3. Thus the Fathers expound by fleſh in this place the whole humane nature : *Cyrill. de incarnat.Vingenit.c.*23. Carnem accipiens ex muliere exijt homo idem ſimul & deus: Chriſt taking fleſh of the woman,came forth man,and the ſame alſo God. Athanaſ.in 9.can.Epheſin.ſynod. Confitemur vnum Chriſtum filium dei ſecundum ſpiritum, filium hominis ſecundum carnem : Wee confeſſe one Chriſt the ſonne of God in the ſpirit,the ſonne of man after the fleſh. *Ambroſ.in Pſal.*119. vpon theſe words: Particeps ſum omnium timentium te : I am partaker with all thoſe that feare thee : Chriſtus habet participes carnis,quia carnem ſuſcepit,&c. Chriſt hath vs partakers of his fleſh,becauſe hee tooke fleſh; partakers of Baptiſme,becauſe he was baptized,&c. In all theſe places by the fleſh the Fathers vnderſtand the whole humanitie of Chriſt.

*Argum.*2. The true ſacrifice for ſinne was ſhadowed and foreſhewed by the ſacrifices of the Law : but thoſe ſacrifices onely foreſhewed a bodily and bloodie ſacrifice : Ergo, the true ſacrifice for ſinne was made by the bodie and blood of the Redeemer. So reaſoneth *Bellarm.argum.*3.*Feuardent.p.*439.*artic.*9.

1. Anſw. Firſt,the propoſition if it be generall is falſe : for all the true ſacrifice for ſinne and euery part thereof was not,neither could be ſhadowed forth by the ſacrifices : they onely ſignified the viſible part,which they were apt to expreſſe: the inuiſible part by the viſible ſacrifices of beaſts could not be deſcribed: as the blood of the propitiatorie ſacrifice muſt be the blood of the ſonne of God: this the ſacrifices could not point at, nor yet the inuiſible ſuffrings of the ſoule. If the propoſition be not general, then the argument concludeth not conſiſting al of particulars. 2. We graunt alſo the concluſion, if it be but particular, not of the whole true ſacrifice, but of a part: for we confeſſe that the blood of Chriſt was a part of the true ſacrifice, but not the whole: chuſe then, which you will: if the propoſition be generall, we denie it; if particular, it concludeth not.

2. Secondly, we denie the aſſumption: 1. For in the ſacrifices of the Law there may be found ſomewhat, which may repreſent the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule: as Leuitic. 16. 8. there were two hee goates preſented vnto the Lord, the one of them was ſacrificed, the other ſent into the wilderneſſe, verſ. 21. The ſcape goate may ſignifie Chriſts ſoule, which died not vpon the croſſe as his bodie did. 2. Againe, the holocauſts or burnt offrings which were wholy conſumed and burnt vpon the altar, may betoken the whole and abſolute offring of Chriſt in ſoule and bodie.

Thirdly, though the ſcape or liue goate were not ſacrificed to death, yet was he preſented before the Lord, verſ. 8. reconciliation was made by him, verſ. 10. the iniquities of the people layd vpon him, verſ. 21. So although Chriſts ſoule died not, as his bodie, yet was it in the proper ſuffrings thereof a meane of reconciliation together with the bodie.

4. What though ſome of the Fathers expound the ſcape goate to bee the wicked of the the people? yet all are not of that minde, neither the ſame alwaies hold that ſenſe. 1. Origen thus expoundeth, Hom. 9. Leuitic. Si ira aſcendit in cor tuum, ſi inuidia &c. paratus eſto, vt abijcias in eremum: If anger riſe into thy heart, if enuie, caſt it forth, and ſend it as the ſcape goate into the deſert, &c. Hee expoundeth the ſcape goate not to bee wicked men, but carnall affections in good men. 2. It is manifeſt that the ſcape goate was a figure of Chriſt: for as the ſinnes of the people were put vpon the head of the goate, verſ. 21. ſo God did lay vpon Chriſt the ſins of vs al, Iſai. 53. 6. and the prieſt by this ſcape goate did make reconciliation: wherefore it is but wreſted to ſignifie the wicked: wee muſt take heede that the Fathers fanſies leade vs not from the euident ſenſe of Scripture. 3. Origen himſelfe that is alleaged applieth the ſcape goate vnto the croſſe of Chriſt, Hom. 9. in Leuitic. In eo quòd dicitur, quia affixit cruci ſuæ poteſtates, ſortem in eis apopompæi compleuit, & tanquam homo paratus abduxit in eremum: In that it is ſaid, he faſtened the powers to his croſſe, &c. he fulfilled in them the lot of the ſcape goate, and as a man readie or prepared carried them into the wilderneſſe. Thus Origen referreth the accompliſhment of that figure of the ſcape goate to the croſſe of Chriſt: who in reſpect of his bodie, that died, was not that homo paratus, that readie meſſenger: Ergo, in reſpect of his ſoule.

Fiftly, in what ſenſe the ſacrifice of the croſſe is called an holocauſt, Saint Cyprian ſheweth ſerm. de paſſion. Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, &c. God without that holocauſt might haue forgiuen ſo great ſinne, &c. And elſewhere he giueth the reaſon, why he calleth it an holocauſt: Chriſtus totum effudit ſpiritum in cruce vt nos reſpiraremus, quicquid erat humoris aquei reliquum expreſſit vt nos ablueremur, quicquid reſederat in corde ſanguinis emiſit, vt nos confirmaremur: Chriſt did ſhed forth his whole ſpirit vpon the croſſe, that wee might be refreſhed, the water that was left in his bodie he ſent forth, that we might be waſhed: the reſidue of his blood came forth, that we might be cleanſed. Thus Chriſt then made an holocauſt or whole ſacrifice of himſelf, both in his ſpirit and in his blood.

Argum. 3. The Sacraments of the Goſpell doe ſet forth vnto vs the memoriall of Chriſts paſſion: but they repreſent not the ſuffrings of Chriſts ſoule, but onely the paſſion of his bodie: Ergo, his bodily paſſions were ſufficient, Bellar. cap. 8. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima, argum. 3. Fenardent. p. 440. artic. 11.

Anſw. Firſt, for the propoſition, if Chriſts paſſion be taken for the effect of Chriſts croſſe in the remiſſion of ſinnes, it is true, that the ſame is ſealed vnto vs and ſet forth in the Sacraments: but if by Chriſts paſſion all the neceſſarie parts, circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts croſſe be implied, the propoſition wanteth his due waight: for therein is not repreſented the Godhead of Chriſt, which was the onely vpholder of his croſſe: nay, all the viſible parts of the croſſe are not expreſſed in the Euchariſt; as the water, which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide. 2. The viſible parts then of Chriſts croſſe are repreſented by the elements, and in theſe viſible parts ſpirituall graces and effects: the inuiſible power of his Godhead and the ſpirituall ſuffrings of his ſoule cannot ſo well by terrene elements be deſcribed.

Secondly, for the aſſumption: 1. it is not true that the bodie and blood of Chriſt onely are repreſented in the Euchariſt: for the bodie and blood of Chriſt is not ſet before vs as dead fleſh or blood without a ſoule: for Chriſt dyeth now no more, Rom. 6. 9. If then the life and ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified together with his bodie and blood, why not the ſuffrings alſo of the ſoule? 2. Saint Ambroſe (whom I alleaged before) ſheweth how the ſoule is reſembled by the blood: Sanguis pro anima, ſicut transfiguratum eſt in Moſe: The blood is taken for the ſoule, as it was prefigured in Moſes: in 11. 1. ad Corinth. 3. And therefore it is called calix ſanguinis, the cup of his blood: and by the cup is ſignified not onely the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, but his ſoule ſorrowes: as when he prayed to his father, that the cup might paſſe, he did not meane onely his bodily death, but his ſpirituall agonie alſo.

3. Thirdly, the argument may be returned thus: In Baptiſme is ſealed vnto vs the true propitiation for our ſinnes: in Baptiſme is ſealed onely the blood of Chriſt ſhed for vs ſignified by water: Ergo, the blood of Chriſt onely without his fleſh or bodie is the true propitiation. What other anſwere can here be made, than the ſame which was giuen before, that either all the circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts paſſion are not ſet forth in Baptiſme, but the effects onely, or that by one part of the croſſe the reſt are expreſſed?

*Argum.*4. The Rhemiſts ſeeme to frame an argument from the nature of a teſtament: Chriſts death (ſay they) *was neceſſarie for the full confirmation, ratification and accompliſhment of the new teſtament: Annot. in Hebr.9.verſ.*20. where if their meaning be, that Chriſts death was neceſſarie to the confirmation of the teſtament, and that without it could not be ratified, wee willingly yeeld: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, a teſtament is confirmed when men are dead, Hebr.9.17. But if they will further preſſe this ſimilitude, and reaſon thus: A mans death is ſufficient to confirme his teſtament, without any other ſuffrings in ſoule, therefore Chriſts bodily death was ſufficient to confirme his teſtament: we doe then further anſwere as followeth.

Anſw. Firſt, ſimilitudes muſt not be forced to agree in euery point, as in this example there is great difference betweene the teſtaments of men, and the teſtament of Chriſt: firſt, the reaſon why mens teſtaments ſtand is giuen in the lawe, Quia aliud velle non poſſunt: Becauſe they can now will no more; *Conſtantin. Cod. lib.*1.*tit.*5.*l.*1. but Chriſt is able to will ſtill. Secondly, it is a rule in law, that Scripta voluntas diſpoſitiuè valet, non enuntiatiuè: A written will is of force in diſpoſing, but not in affirming, *Diocletian. Cod lib.*3.*tit.*38.*leg.*10. that is, whatſoeuer is affirmed in a will, is not alwaies receiued; but whatſoeuer is bequeathed or diſpoſed, ſtandeth: but it were blaſphemie to ſay, that Chriſts teſtament doth not hold affirmatiuely. Thirdly, by the law a will ſtandeth not, ſi liberos prætererit in tabulis, if a man doe paſſe by his ſonnes in his will, and bequeath them nothing, *Cod. lib.*6.*tit.*12.*leg.*1. Alexander. yet Chriſt in his teſtament reiected the Iewes, and receiued the Gentiles: yet who will ſay, that his will herein ſtandeth not? Fourthly, if any man did contra leges teſtari, aut iuri publico derogare, did make a will contrarie to the publike lawes, it was of no force, *Diocletian. Cod. lib.*6.*tit.*23.*leg.*13. But Chriſts teſtament did derogate and abrogate the ceremoniall lawes of Moſes, yet notwithſtanding remaineth in force. Fiftly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the will of men is of no force, as long as hee that made it is aliue, Hebr.9.17. but Chriſt now liueth, and henceforth dieth no more, Rom.6.9. yet his teſtament is in force, though much be preſumed in the world againſt it; as Auguſtine ſaith: *Mortuus ſine ſenſu iacet, & valent verba ipſius; ſedet Chriſtus in cœlo, & contradicitur teſtamento eius: in Pſal.*21. A man lieth dead without ſenſe, and his laſt words ſtand; Chriſt ſitteth in heauen, and yet his teſtament is contradicted. Sixtly, in ſome caſes by the Ciuill law a will vnwritten preuailed againſt a will written: *Cod. lib.*3.*tit.*36.*leg.*5. Alexander. If a man in his teſtament did bequeath or award his ſeruant to bonds, and afterward change his mind, licet non ſcripſerit, valebit, although hee wrote it not, it ſhall ſtand: but nothing that is vnwritten ought to be receiued againſt the written teſtament of Chriſt. In theſe and many ſuch other points Chriſts teſtament and mans teſtaments doe differ: they therefore muſt be made to agree onely, wherein the Apoſtle compareth them, that as touching the death of the bodie, it is neceſſarie for the confirmation both of mens teſtament and Chriſts: but as concerning the ſpirituall paine of the ſoule the reaſon is not alike, there is no cauſe or neceſſitie thereof toward the conſtitution of a mans will, as there was in Chriſt toward the finiſhing of the ſacrifice of the new teſtament.

Secondly, the Apoſtle concludeth, that no death, but of the bodie, is neceſſarie for the confirmation of a teſtament: which we graunt, and further acknowledge that Chriſt onely died properly in his bodie: the proper death of the ſoule (which is either by ſinne or damnation, in the finall ſeparation of Gods fauour) Chriſt died not: ſuch a death and damnation of the ſoule who is ſo blaſphemous to attribute to Chriſt? in confuting that, which no man denieth, labour may well be ſpared. And therefore as Hierome ſaith, Non poſſum te exiſtimare victorem, niſi aduerſarium videro vulneratum: He cannot haue the victorie, that doth not wound the aduerſarie, Apolog. ad Pammach. Therefore theſe darts, which they caſt in the ayre, *Feuard.p.*453. pierce not our cauſe, neither can thoſe ſtrokes wound the bodie, that touch it not.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle by this ſimilitude onely inferreth, that without the death of the bodie a teſtament is not ratified: as verſ.18. neither was the firſt ordained without blood: So without Chriſts death the new teſtament could not be confirmed: doth it therefore follow that nothing elſe is required? Many things beſide the bodily death muſt concurre to make a mans teſtament: firſt, he muſt be ſanæ mentis, of a ſound and perfect minde; and therefore a mad man, except hee haue dilucida interualla, ſome intermiſſion of his fits, cannot make a will, Cod. lib. 6.*tit.*22.*leg.*9. Secondly, Pupillus non poteſt teſtari: A pupill, that is vnder the gouernment of others, cannot make a will:

*ibid.tit.*21.*leg.*18.Iuſtinian. Thirdly, Filiusfamilias non poteſt: A ſonne that is vnder his father can not: *ibid.tit.*22.*leg.*11. Fourthly, Si teſtes non fuerint in conſpectu teſtatoris,&c. If the witneſſes be not in the ſight of the teſtator, the will is not good, *Cod.lib.6.tit.*23.*leg.*9.Diocletian. Fiftly, Si compulſus ſit teſtari,&c. If a man be compelled to make a will, it is not good, *lib.6.tit.*34.*leg.*1. Sixtly, Mutus non poteſt, niſi ſciat ſcribere: A dumbe man by the Ciuill law cannot make a will, vnleſſe he can write, *lib.6.tit.*22.*leg.*10.Iuſtinian. Theſe conditions and many beſide, are required as neceſſarie for the conſtitution of wils: ſo that the death of the bodie is not onely ſufficient to adde ſtrength to a will, though without it, it ſtandeth not in force. In like manner without the death of Chriſts bodie the new teſtament was not ratified, and yet not onely by it: the innocencie of Chriſts birth, the righteouſnes of his life, his obedience in his ſuffrings vpon the croſſe muſt concurre with his death to eſtabliſh the new teſtament. Wherefore the argument followeth not, the new teſtament was confirmed by Chriſts bodily death: Ergo, hee ſuffred not the terrors of ſoule.

Fourthly, if this reaſon conclude any thing, it taketh away all compaſſion, ſorrow, and affection in the ſoule of Chriſt, (which they themſelues graunt, *Feuard.p.*452.*lin.*25.) as well as the terrors of conſcience: for if the bodily death be ſufficient for the eſtabliſhment of the teſtament, then the ſoule neede not any way to bee affected at all. So then they may here ſay as Hierome, though not in the like caſe: Noſtra contra nos dimicat armatura: Our owne weapons doe fight againſt vs: ad Ioann.Hieroſolymitan.

*Arg.*5. Chriſt was more effectuall to ſaue vs, than Adam to condemne vs, *Feuard.p.*383.*cauſ.*4. & 454.lin 20. But Adams fleſh by the which ſinne entred, was ſufficient to deſtroy vs: Ergo, ſo muſt Chriſts fleſh be to redeeme vs.

2. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.5.19. As by one mans diſobedience many are made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: This obedience of Chriſt was in his death, Feuard. ibid. Ergo, by the obedience of Chriſt to death we are made righteous.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the aſſumption is falſe, if it be vnderſtood ſo, that Adams fleſh onely infected his poſteritie: firſt, it would follow hereupon, that the fleſh is the ſeate of ſin, which is a popiſh error, and maintained by *Bellarm.de ſtat.peccat.lib.5.c.7.vid.ſupra contr.*18.*qu.*4.*par.*5. Diſeaſes and other outward infirmities are the infection of the bodie, but ſinne is properly the infection of the ſoule: for ſeeing ſinne is a ſpirituall euill, and the fleſh but a terrene and earthie veſſell, how can it be, that ſinne ſhould be propagated onely by the fleſh?

2. The Scriptures are contrarie: Geneſ.5.3. Adam begat a childe in his owne likenes after his owne image: was this image in the bodie onely, and not in the ſoule alſo? whereby is vnderſtood, that Adam begot a ſonne in the like ſinfull and corruptible ſtate, Ioh.1.13. Which are borne not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man,&c. Where is the fleſhly will, whereof men are borne, but in the ſoule? Iohn.3.6. That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh, that which is borne of the ſpirit is ſpirit: By fleſh here is ſignified the vnregenerate part both of the ſoule and bodie: whatſoeuer then is fleſhly and carnall in vs, whether in ſoule or bodie, is borne of the fleſh: and ſo ſinne propagated by them both.

3. Obiect. Then it will follow, that the ſoules of men, as well as their bodies are deriued from their parents, if originall infection be propagated by both.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine thus writing to S. Hierome of this very matter: Illa de animarum nouarum creatione ſententia ſi hanc fidem fundatiſſimam non oppugnat, (i. de originali peccato) ſit & mea; ſi oppugnat, non ſit & tua: This ſentence of the creation of new ſoules, if it do not impugne this grounded faith, (that is, of originall ſin,) let it be my opinion alſo, if it do, let it not be yours neither: So I ſay, that if it did neceſſarily follow, if ſoules be created of God; that pollution ſhould come onely by the fleſh, I had rather leaue that vncertaintie, then go againſt a certaine truth: for what were this els, but to extenuate originall ſinne, and in effect to make it no ſinne at all; ſeeing it is the ſoule, not the fleſh, that ſinneth: as the Prophet ſaith, Ezech.18.20. The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die.

Secondly, neyther is it neceſſary to graunt, that ſoules ſhould be deriued from the parents, if ſin be propagated both by the bodie and the ſoule: S. Auguſtine ſheweth how, *lib.3.de liber.arbitr.c.*20. Quod ſi ſigillatim in ſingulis fiunt animæ, conuenientiſſ.eſt, vt malum meritum prioris eſſet natura ſequentis, vt bonum meritum ſequentis natura eſt prioris: Though that euery ſoule ſhould ſeuerally be made in the bodie, yet it is moſt conuenient, that the euill merite of the firſt man ſhould be the nature of the ſecond, as the good merit (that is vertue) of the ſecond is the nature of the firſt: that is, like as the image of grace renewed in Adams poſteritie, is the ſame that Adams nature was before his fall: ſo the euilneſſe in Adam corrupted, is become the nature of his corrupt poſteritie.

The Maſter of the ſentences is not here to be refuſed: Ipſius carnalis concupiſcentiæ cauſa non eſt in anima ſola, nec in carne ſola, ex vtroq; enim fit,&c. The cauſe of carnall concupiſcence is not in the ſoule alone, nor in the fleſh alone, but is made of them both, *lib.3.diſtinct.*17.b.

Like as a fountaine ſpringing vp in a clay ground, preſently receiueth of the nature of the ground: this clay water is neyther of the fountaine, for there is no clay, nor of the earth alone, for there is no water, but ioyntly from them both: ſo is the ſoule corrupted at the very firſt coniunction with the bodie: the ſinne is not in the ſoule, which is created pure, nor in the fleſh, which is not capable of ſinne, but it ſpringeth forth of the coniunction, and commixtion of them both.

4. How is it like, that Adams fleſh ſhould only infect his poſteritie; ſeeing it was not the fleſh, that firſt infected himſelfe? as Magiſter ſententiar. thus reporteth out of Auguſtine, lib.2.diſt.32. liter.E. Non fuit corruptio corporis, quæ aggrauat animam, cauſa primi peccati, ſed pœna; nec caro corruptibilis animam peccatricem fecit, ſed peccatrix anima carnem corruptibilem fecit: The corruption of the fleſh, which preſſeth downe the ſoule, was not the cauſe of the firſt ſinne, but the puniſhment: neyther the corruptible fleſh made the ſoule ſinfull, but the ſinfull ſoule made the fleſh ſubiect to corruption. Sinne then entred into Adam by his ſoule firſt, and then his fleſh: and ſo doth it enter vpon his poſteritie.

Secondly, 1. though the croſſe and paſſion of Chriſt did chiefly ſhew the obedience of Chriſt; For he learned obedience by the thinges which he ſuffered, Hebrewes 5.8. yet his obedience to his Father was ſeene through his whole life: as Iohn 4.34. My meate is, that I may do the will of him that ſent me. 2. Chriſts obedience is ſet againſt Adams diſobedience: As then Adams diſobedience ſignifieth the whole maſſe of corruption in him; ſo Chriſts obedience betokeneth all his iuſtice and righteouſnes. 3. So the Apoſtle expoundeth it himſelfe, Rom. 5.18. calling it the iuſtifying of Chriſt. 4. And though his obedience in his death were onely inſinuated, where was this obedience, was it not in his will, when he ſaith, Not my will, but thine be done? and he ſubmitteth himſelfe to drinke of the cup, not onely to taſte of the bodily death, but to endure all ſorrowes beſide, that ſhould be laid vpon him.

S. Ambroſe euidently declareth his mind of this matter, de vocat. Gentium lib.1.c.3, inde (ex hominis præuaricatione) Multiplex corporis animiq; corruptio, inde ignorantia, difficultas, &c. From mans tranſgreſſion proceedeth the manifold corruption of ſoule and body, as ignorance, hardnes of vnderſtanding, curæ inutiles, ſacrilegi errores, &c. vaine cares, ſacrilegious errors: if ignorance, error be propagated from Adam, then is not this propagation onely by the fleſh, which is not ſubiect to ignorance, error; but the ſoule onely: Origen alſo thus witneſſeth, hom.8.in Leuitic. Audi Dauidem dicentem, in iniquitatibus conceptus ſum, oſtendens, quod quæcunq; anima in carne naſcitur, iniquitatis & peccati ſorde polluitur: Heare Dauid ſaying, I was conceaued in iniquitie, ſhewing that any ſoule whatſoeuer is borne in the fleſh is polluted with the filthines of iniquitie and ſinne. The ſoule then in the very firſt birth is polluted, and ſo the corruption is ſpread as well by the ſoule as the body.

Argum.6. The leaſt teare, the leaſt groane, the leaſt drop of blood in Chriſt had been ſufficient, becauſe of the excellencie of the perſon of the ſufferer: how much more his whole painfull paſſion in his bodie? Feuardent.pag.450.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not; the Sonne of God was able with his blood onely to redeeme vs, Ergo, he thought good ſo to do: he had been able without his blood, or death at all, in his omnipotent power to haue ſaued vs; but it ſeemed not good vnto him ſo to do.

Secondly, if Chriſts blood onely did it, then were theſe ſorrowes of his ſoule, which you confeſſe he felt, ſuperfluous: if they were not in vaine, his teares, his heauineſſe, his groanes; then his blood onely without theſe redeemed vs not.

Thirdly, Bernard reporteth this to haue been the Error of one Abaillardus, epiſt.191. Cur redemit nos per ſanguinem, cùm potuit per ſermonem? Why did hee redeeme vs by his blood, when hee might haue done it by his word? Bernard anſwereth, Quid prodeſt, quod nos inſtituit, ſi non reſtituit? What had it auayled vs, if he had giuen vs inſtitution, but not reſtitution? In like ſort is it now vrged; what needed Chriſt to redeeme vs by his ſoule, ſeeing he did it in his bodie? we may alſo anſwere, Quid prodeſt ſi nos reſtituit, ſi non plenè reſtituit? What had it auayled vs, if hee reſtored vs, but fully had not reſtored vs?

Fourthly, we graunt, that Chriſt in reſpect of his great power, might haue redeemed vs not only without his ſuffrings in ſoule, but in bodie alſo: as M. Caluin ſaith, Potuit nos Deus verbo, aut nutu redimere: God might haue redeemed vs with his word, yea, with a becke: in 15.Ioan.verſ.13. But this was not agreeable to Gods iuſtice; who had otherwiſe determined, that his Sonne ſhould pay by his ſuffring the full price of our redemption: and therefore the Prophet Eſay ſaith, 53.10. The will of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. And here Origen hath a very good diſtinction, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia, quod ad iuſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible; in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are iuſt: in Matth.tract.35. So in reſpect of Gods power, Chriſt needed not to haue ſuffered, but in his bodie: but in regard of his iuſtice, it was not poſſible, but that Chriſt in himſelfe ſhould beare the whole and entire puniſhment due vnto our ſinnes.

Laſtly, whereas the fathers doe moſt worthily amplifie the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, and the death of his fleſh, denying that he dyed in ſoule, and to this purpoſe they may eaſily be produced: Our anſwere is this: 1. That concerning the death of the ſoule, we willingly condeſcend, that it is not to be admitted in Chriſt. 2. If the fathers vrge the blood of the Croſſe, and the offring of Chriſts fleſh, they muſt be vnderſtood according to the phraſe of the Scripture, which by one part ſetteth forth the reſt: and Chriſts blood is eſpecially mentioned, becauſe it was the moſt viſible and conſpicuous part of his paſſion. 3. Yet not one of the fathers can be brought forth, which denieth Chriſts ſuffering in ſoule. 4. Nay, they do witneſſe and teſtifie for the ſame: as Cyril ſaith, Neceſſe erat cum ſuo corpore adunatam ei animam dolere, vt dum timebat paſſiones ſubditam ceruicem Deo ſubmitteret: It was neceſſarie that his ſoule ſhould be grieued with the bodie, that while he feared his paſſions, he ſhould ſubmit his necke vnto God, de incarnat. vnigen. c.7. If Chriſts blood ſtrictly taken had ſufficed, the griefe of the ſoule had not beene neceſſarie. And if it be anſwered, that hee meaneth the griefe of the ſoule, ariſing from the ſuffring of the body: I ſay further, 1. that if it were ſo, yet this griefe is ſomewhat els beſide his blood, which was before affirmed to be ſufficient: a ſufficiencie is without the neceſſitie of other things: but hee ſaith there was a neceſſitie of the griefe of the minde: Ergo, without it there was not a ſufficiencie. 2. He meaneth a deeper griefe, feare and ſuffring, then ariſing from the ſuffring of the bodie: he feared his paſſions; but the paſſion of his bodily death he feared not; that had beene great weakeneſſe: and he was heard in that he feared, Heb.5.7. but in reſpect of his bodily death, that it might paſſe, hee was not heard: therefore it was a greater griefe and feare that perplexed his minde.

The Proteſtants.

THat the bodily death of Chriſt was not the whole ſuffring and ſacrifice of his Croſſe, neither in reſpect of Gods iuſtice the whole and full price of our redemption; though in reſpect of Gods power, leſſe might haue ſufficed; thus we ſhew it:

Argum.*1. That which Chriſt tooke, he offered: Chriſt tooke not the body or fleſh of man only: Ergo, he offered not his body onely.

Anſw. If any thing be here denied, it will be the propoſition, which is further thus confirmed.

Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, hee tooke part with them, that he might deſtroy thorough death, &c. and that he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death were all their life long ſubiect to bondage: from this place I reaſon thus: that which Chriſt by his death deliuered vs from, he tooke part with vs in: but hee deliuered vs not onely from the death of the bodie, but from the feare and bondage of the ſoule: Ergo, herein hee tooke part with vs.

Secondly, they are S. Ambroſe words, Hoc obtulit Chriſtus, quod induit: Chriſt offered that, which he tooke or put on, de incarnat. c.7. Ergo, he offered not his fleſh onely, becauſe he tooke it not alone.

Thirdly, he giueth this reaſon in the ſame place: Quæ erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi vt caro, quæ peccauerat per ſe redimeretur: What cauſe was there of his incarnation, but that the fleſh, that had ſinned, ſhould be redeemed by it ſelfe? The reaſon ſtandeth thus: 1. That which Chriſt tooke of mans nature, he tooke to redeeme by ſuffring in it: but Chriſt tooke not onely the fleſh of man, but his ſoule: Ergo, he redeemed mans ſoule, by ſuffring in it. 2. That part of man, which had ſinned, muſt be redeemed by it ſelfe: not mans fleſh onely, but his ſoule alſo had ſinned: Ergo, not the fleſh onely, but the ſoule muſt be by it ſelfe redeemed.

Argum.*2. The ſecond reaſon I take out of Cyprian; and it is framed thus: That which Chriſt offered vpon the Croſſe, he ſuffered in: Chriſt offered not his body onely: Ergo, he ſuffered not in body onely.

Firſt, the propoſition or firſt part is proued by the Apoſtle, Heb.9.25,26. Not that he ſhould offer himſelfe often, &c. for then he muſt haue often ſuffered: So then there is no offering of Chriſt without ſuffring: and therefore he is ſaid to haue offered a ſacrifice for ſinnes, Heb.10.12. But a ſacrifice is not offered without ſuffring: for the ſacrifice was firſt killed, and then offered.

Secondly, S. Cyprian proueth the aſſumption, as I haue alleaged him before, lib. de duplic. Martyr. who applieth that place of Iohn, 1. Epiſt.5.8. There are three that beare record in earth; the ſpirit, water and blood; vnto the oblation of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe: Triplex à Chriſto teſtimonium accepimus, &c. We haue receiued a threefold teſtimonie from Chriſt; of the ſpirit, water, and blood: Totum effudit ſpiritum, &c. He did ſend forth his whole ſpirit, that we might be refreſhed; the water, that we might be waſhed; the blood that was left, that we might be confirmed: So there was nothing in Chriſt, that was not powred out vpon the Croſſe; his ſoule firſt and ſpirit, then all the moiſture and blood left in his body: Chriſt then offered not his bodie onely vpon the Croſſe: for he further ſaid, Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirite: Ergo, he ſuffered not onely in body.

Argum.*3. That which Chriſt tooke of our nature, hee ſanctified in himſelfe, Hebr.2.11. Hee that ſanctifieth, and they which are ſanctified, are all of one: Our reaſon then ſtandeth thus: that which Chriſt ſanctified in himſelfe, hee ſanctified by ſuffring in it: So ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb.2.10. that Chriſt was conſecrate through afflictions: and by the ſame meanes did Chriſt ſanctifie himſelfe, whereby we are ſanctified: Ioh.17.19. For their ſakes doe I ſanctifie my ſelfe, that they alſo may be ſanctified: But we are ſanctified by Chriſts oblatiõ vpon the croſſe, Heb.10.14. With one offring hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified. The propoſition then is true, that Chriſt was ſanctified by his ſuffring and offring vpon the croſſe, but both his bodie and ſoule was ſanctified: Ergo, hee ſuffered not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and ſoule. This reaſon and euery part thereof is grounded vpon Scripture.

*Argum.*4. Chriſt offered the true ſacrifice of himſelfe in the true tabernacle: his bodie alone is not, but bodie and ſoule both are this true tabernacle: Ergo, hee offered himſelfe a ſacrifice not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and ſoule.

Firſt, the propoſition is affirmed by the Apoſtle, Hebr.8.2. that Chriſt is a miniſter of the true tabernacle, that is, by the offring of himſelfe who is both the Prieſt, the ſacrifice and tabernacle.

Secondly, the aſſumption is thus prooued: firſt, his humane nature is called the true tabernacle, becauſe it is not to bee ſhifted or chaunged, as the old tabernacle was, but to remaine for euer: and in this ſenſe though the fleſh of Chriſt was the true tabernacle, becauſe it was incorruptible, yet his ſoule more properly: for his fleſh was layd aſide, and put off by death, but his ſoule remained with him ſtill: herein then it was the true tabernacle indeede, being eternall and immortall. Secondly, Heb.9.11. It is called a tabernacle not made with hands, which God pight & not man, Heb.8.3. This more properly agreeth to his ſoule: for though his fleſh was borne of a virgin, and ſo brought forth without the helpe or hands of man, in reſpect of the common birth; yet receiued he his fleſh of his mother, ouerſhadowed by the holie Ghoſt: but his ſoule was immediatly and wholy ſent from God, and ſo this tabernacle was not at all pight by man. Thirdly, that is the true temple and tabernacle, wherein the holie Ghoſt dwelled bodily, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Col.2.9. In him dwelleth the fulnes of the Godhead bodily: but the Godhead dwelt not only in Chriſts bodie, but in his ſoule: Ergo, both made this holie temple, and true tabernacle. Fourthly, to this purpoſe Auguſtine thus reſembleth the holy ſoule of Chriſt, he calleth it vas vnguenti, the veſſell of the holy oyntment, of the ſpirit; & tanquam ferrum ignitum; and as an yron red hot, in euery part thereof receiueth the fire: ſo was the fulnes of the Godhead in the ſoule of Chriſt, *de Trinitat. vnitat. cap.*3. It followeth then, that ſeeing not the body and fleſh of Chriſt onely make the true tabernacle, but his ſoule alſo, and that in the true tabernacle the true ſacrifice of atonement was offered, that Chriſt offered not this ſacrifice in his bodie onely.

*Argum.*5. If the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt had been ſufficient, then his other ſuffrings in his ſoule had been ſuperfluous; as the heauineſſe of his ſoule, where he ſaith, My ſoule is heauie vnto death, Matth.26.38. his ſighs and grones, Ioh.11.38. his feare, Heb.5.7. But theſe and the like paſſions in Chriſt, were not ſuperfluous: for the Prophet ſaith, Iſay.53.11. He ſhall ſee of the trauaile of his ſoule: Ergo, his bodily ſuffrings were not alone ſufficient.

*Argum.*6. We will reaſon ex confeſſis: It is graunted by the reſt, that Chriſt alſo beſide his bodily ſuffrings had inwarde feare and griefe: *Bellarm. cap.*8. *reſponſ. ad argum.*3. Vt redemptio eſſet copioſa, voluit etiam pœnam mœroris, & timoris ſubire: That the redemption might be the more full, Chriſt would vndergoe the paine of griefe and feare. Feuardentius thus confeſſeth, *p.*455. Tantam concepit de his triſtitiam, &c. Chriſt conceiued ſuch ſorrow and griefe for the ſinnes of the world, vt omnem verè reſipiſcentis animæ pœnitentiam exuperauerit, &c. that he exceeded the griefe and ſorrow of a ſoule truly penitent. Againe, Tanta animi pœnitudine dolet, vt par ei nemò vnquam fuerit: He was ſo much grieued in his ſoule, as that no man was euer equall to him. Theſe ſorrowes in Chriſts ſoule, were neither bodily, nor yet procured by his bodily paines, being occaſioned by the ſinnes of the world: This being then their owne confeſſion, how can they aſcribe our redemption wholy to the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, vnleſſe they will make thoſe other afflictions of Chriſt either fained, or ſuperfluous, which farre be it from any Chriſtian heart to thinke?

*Argum.*7. The Fathers iudgement againſt the ſole bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, I haue alleaged before: as *Cyrill. reſp. ad argum.*7. *Ambroſe argum.*1. *Cypriane argum.*2. and ſo I will conclude this place with another ſentence of Cyprian: Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, ſed facilitas veniæ laxaret habenas peccatis effrænibus, quæ etiam Chriſti vix cohibent paſſiones, &c. God could haue forgiuen vs our great ſinne without this holocauſt, or whole burnt offring: but then the facilitie of pardon would haue let looſe the raines vnto vnruly ſins, which are hardly reſtrained by the paſſions of Chriſt. Out of this ſentence I obſerue firſt, that Cyprian calleth Chriſts ſacrifice an holocauſt, an whole ſuffring, which could not be of one part onely, but of both: for that is not whole, which wanteth a part. Secondly, he granteth, that God in his infinit power could haue found out forgiuenes of ſins by ſome other meane, but it pleaſed him otherwiſe: that by the manifold paſſions, which were layd vpon Chriſt for our ſinne, wee ſhould be brideled from committing the ſame. And ſo we conclude;

1. If what Chriſt tooke of the nature of man, he offered vpon the croſſe;
2. If Chriſt ſuffered in all that, which he offered;
3. If that by his ſuffrings he ſanctified the whole nature of man;
4. If in the true tabernacle of bodie and ſoule he offered the ſacrifice;
5. If all other grieues and ſorrowes, which Chriſt endured in his ſoule ſhould be ſuperfluous;
6. Seeing it is confeſſed by the aduerſarie part, that Chriſt had greater ſorrowe in his ſoule, than euer any man had;
7. The Fathers likewiſe ſet forth the holocauſt or whole offring of Chriſt: Then it doth neceſſarily followe, that Chriſts ſuffrings and ſmart in his fleſh onely wrought not our redemption; which though in themſelues, in reſpect of Gods great power, had been ſufficient, yet it ſo ſtoode with Gods iuſtice and euerlaſting purpoſe, that his ſonne in his owne perſon, ſhould make a full ſatisfaction both in his bodie and ſoule for our ſinnes.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE FEARE AND aſtoniſhment of Chriſt, and the cauſe thereof, that it proceeded from the very feare and feeling of Gods wrath, which Chriſt did beare and endure for our ſinnes.

THE OBIECTIONS AND CONTRARIE arguments anſwered.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, their opinion is, that the feare and agonie of Chriſt proceeded not from any feeling of Gods wrath or indignation, but humani ſenſus mortem exhorreſcentis affectum, &c. effundebat: But he onely ſhewed the affection of humane ſenſe fearing death, Feuard.p.430. ſic Bellarm.cap.8. reſp.ad argum.6. They reaſon thus: 15. Error.

Argum.1. There are other cauſes of Chriſts heauines, feare, and agonie: Firſt, the reiection of the Iewes. Secondly, the diſperſion of the Apoſtles, Bellarm reſp.ad argum.8. Thirdly, the lamentation for mans ſinne: Omnem verè reſipiſcentis animæ pœnitentiam exuperauit: He went beyond or exceeded the greateſt repentance of the ſoule that may be, Feuard.pag 455. Fourthly, the ſeueritie, and iuſtice of God vpon him the Redeemer of the world, Feuard.p.456. lin.13. Fiftly, hee feared death in his humane ſenſe, Feuard.p.430. Ergo, Chriſts feare and agonie ariſing of theſe cauſes, can not be aſſigned to any other.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: theſe were the cauſes of Chriſts agonie: Ergo, the other was not: for they may all ſtand well together: that the conſideration of theſe forenamed cauſes might moue Chriſt; and yet the feeling of Gods heauie wrath and diſpleaſure for ſin moue and trouble him much more.

Secondly, that Chriſt was heauie for the reiection of the Iewes, and diſperſion of his Apoſtles, 1 though it be graunted for reuerence to the Fathers; Hilarie, Ambroſe, Hierome, that ſo thinke; yet 2 it concludeth not againſt vs: firſt, at other times thoſe thoughts for the Iewes, and his Apoſtles troubled Chriſt; as Matth.23.verſ.37. he prophecieth with griefe of the deſolation of Ieruſalem: Ioh.17.11. he had commended his Apoſtles to the protection and keeping of his father: ſo that though they ſhould be diſperſed by his death, yet hee knew they ſhould be gathered together againe and ſtrengthened: as he ſaith of Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not, Luc.22. verſ.32. Chriſt therefore for that matter was ſetled. Secondly, but now it is euident, that Chriſt is properly touched with ſome inward obiect: in that he prayeth the cup might paſſe from himſelfe: how could either the reiection of the Iewes, or the diſperſion of his Apoſtles be this cup? Thirdly, he prayeth that that houre might paſſe from him, Mark.14.35. but neither the reiection of the Iewes, nor the diſperſion of his Apoſtles fell out in that houre or inſtant. Fourthly, Chriſt was heard in that he feared, Heb.5.7. but he was not heard in this, that the Iewes ſhould not be reiected, nor his Apoſtles diſperſed: Ergo, this was not that hee feared. Fiftly, though the Fathers conceit here be admitted, it concludeth not againſt vs: for none of them affirme, that Chriſt onely was troubled for theſe cauſes pretended.

Thirdly, Chriſts ſorrow and lamentation for ſinne by way of compaſſion or commiſeration, cau- 3 ſed not this agonie: firſt, for ſo he wept at other times for the ſinne of the citie, Luk.19.41. he wept onely drops of water, not drops of blood, as now: but if it had been the ſame cauſe, it would haue then brought forth the ſame effect. Secondly, Chriſt ſpeaketh here of an houre, to the which this griefe was peculiar: but to ſorrow in compaſſion, was at all houres and times in Chriſt, and ought to be alwaies in Chriſts members. Thirdly, if Chriſt onely had ſorrowed for the ſinnes of other in compaſſion,what needed he to haue been comforted by the Angell? Luk.22.43. the obiect therefore of this griefe was inward. He ſorrowed not now by way of compaſſion,but hee ſorrowed for ſinne by way of appropriation: our ſinnes were now as appropriated to his perſon, and this godly ſorrow for ſinne,among other effects in the ſoule,hath feare and puniſhment,2.Cor.7.11.then conſequently in the ſoule of Chriſt, there was feare and chaſtiſement for our ſins now his by imputation,which is the ſame thing we affirme.

Fourthly: firſt,if the preſence of the Maieſtie of God were the cauſe of Chriſts feare and agonie in his prayer, why did not the like agonie fall vpon him,at other times,when hee preſented himſelfe before the Maieſtie of God in prayer? Secondly, and Chriſt being innocent, iuſt and perfect,what cauſe had he to tremble in the preſence of God in reſpect of himſelfe, ſeeing that the Saints his members haue ſuch confidence to ſtand forth boldly in Gods preſence? Iſay.8.18. Behold,(ſaith the Prophet)here am I,and the children which thou haſt giuen me. Thirdly, Chriſt feared then and trembled before God as a Iudge,readie to execute wrath againſt ſinne:Gods wrath then is cauſe of this agonie,which is the very poynt by vs maintained.

Fiftly,if Chriſt feared his bodily death and corporall affliction aboue his ſtrength,hee feared more than Saint Paul, 1.Cor.10.13, God is faithfull, which will not ſuffer you to be tempted aboue that you are able. If Chriſt feared the ſeparation of the ſoule from the bodie by death,hee ſhould haue ſhewed himſelfe weaker than his members. Auguſtine ſaith,Paulus ſeruus exultat,cupio diſſolui,&c. Chriſtus imperator triſtis eſt: Paul the ſeruant deſireth to be diſſolued,and to be with Chriſt;and is Chriſt the captaine heauie? in Pſal.93. And as for the ſeparation of the humanitie from the diuine nature,if any man ſay Chriſt feared it, hee is in a great error: for the bodie ſtill lying in the graue was hypoſtatically vnited to the Godhead, as Damaſcene ſoundly ſaith, ἡ θεότης ἀχώριστος ἀμφοτέρων διέμεινε: The diuinitie remained inſeparable from them both: de fid lib.3.c.27. Hee neuer feared therefore the diſſolution of the vnitie of his perſon.

Argum.2. If the ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath was the cauſe of Chriſts agonie, they muſt ceaſe with the agonie;for the cauſe remaining the effect alſo muſt continue: but his agonie ended in the garden, his helliſh ſorrowes (you ſay) endured vpon the croſſe: Ergo, they were not the cauſe. And if the things which Chriſt afterward ſuffered, as his whipping, piercing of his hands and feete,and death it ſelfe did not amaze or aſtoniſh Chriſt; how much leſſe did the feare and griefe thereof perplexe him in the garden,which were but ſimplicia prælndia, but forerunners only,of his ſuffrings that followed: Feuard.p.424.conf.4.

Anſw. Firſt,Chriſts feare in the garden proceeded not from the expectation of his bodily ſuffrings that followed,but as they were accompanied with the wrath of God: that which then hee feared and trembled at,he afterward felt in his ſoule, namely the wrath of God: and vpon the croſſe he was no leſſe perplexed,but indeede more vehemently touched in ſoule,when hee cryed out he was forſaken,than before in the garden. And as Chryſoſtome well ſaith, Chriſtus pluribus in morte vexatus doloribus,quam omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt,expirauit: Chriſt being vexed with more ſorrowes in his death, than all tragicall writers can deſcribe, gaue vp his ſpirit: Hom.31.in Matth.

Secondly, for further anſwere to the argument: firſt, the propoſition followeth not, that the cauſe ſhould ceaſe, when the effect ceaſeth; the cauſe indeede leaueth working, when the effect ſtayeth;but it hath ſtill a being: Like as in the bodie vexed with tertian or quartan feuers, there is an intermiſſion of the fits for a time, yet the ſame cauſe ſtill liueth and raigneth in the bodie, which when it beginneth to worke againe, the fits are renued; ſo is it in the vexation and agitation of the minde. Secondly, 1.for the aſſumption,we ſay that there was in Chriſt an intermiſſion of that inward perplexitie and vexation of his ſoule, that ſore fit and agonie being paſt, which was afterward reuiued vpon the croſſe. 2. The grieues and comforts of the ſoule doe ebbe and flow,compared in this behalfe to the waues of the ſea, Pſal.42.4. when one is lift vp by the waue he ſeeth the comfortable light; when he is caſt downe,he beholdeth nothing but darknes. 3. This was Iobs caſe: firſt in griefe he complaineth,Iob.19.11.he counteth me as one of his enemies: then againe he receiueth ſtrength,verſ.25.I know my redeemer liueth: after this his ſoule is caſt downe againe; Iob.30.21.Thou turneſt thy ſelfe cruelly againſt me. 4. Auguſtine very fitly thus reſembleth this matter,writing vpon theſe words of the Pſalme 10.Palpebræ dei: The eye-lids of God do examine the ſonnes of men: Interdum clauſis dei oculis exercentur vt quærant; interdum apertis illuminantur vt gaudeant: Sometime they are exerciſed or troubled,when God ſhutteth his eyes, that they may ſeeke; ſometime they are illuminate with his open eyes,that they may reioyce. As is then the ſhutting and opening of the eyes;ſo ſometimes the ſoule is obſcured with griefe,ſometimes lightened with ioy. In Chriſt then as the agonie ceaſed, ſo there was an intermiſſion of the inward terror that cauſed it.

Argum.3. Chriſts anſwere to Caiphas,his prayer for his enemies,his promiſe to the theefe vpon the croſſe,his commending of his ſpirit to God, doe ſhew that Chriſt was not all this while aſtoniſhed:

niſhed: ſic Bellar.lib.4.de Chriſti anima cap.8.argum.2.& Feuardent.p.425.6. Thus they conclude, that Chriſt was not amazed or aſtoniſhed at all with the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Anſw. Firſt, there is none that affirmeth, that this amazing or aſtoniſhment of Chriſt continued ſo long together, from the beginning of his agonie to the end of his paſſion. Maſter Caluine ſaith onely, In ipſo momento non reputabat: In that moment he did not bethinke himſelfe, in 26.Mat. verſ.39. S.Peter giueth a reaſon, Act.2.24. that it was impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſorrowes of hell, as their vulgar Latine readeth.

Secondly, the anſweres then of Chriſt at his examination, condemnation, ſuffering, doe ſhewe that hee was not then as a man amazed or aſtoniſhed: for in the beginning of his agonie in the garden he was afrighted and perplexed; but this his aſtoniſhment continued not in that meaſure, he eftſoones recouered himſelfe: As Origen writeth, Non ſcriptum eſt, quia pauit, vel triſtatus eſt, ſed cæpit pauere: pij guſtant tantum dolorem, impij guſtant tantum fidem, Hebr.6.5. It is not written, that he was afraid or ſorrowfull, but began to be afraid: the godly onely taſte griefe, the vngodly onely haue a taſte of faith: in Matth.tract.35.

Thirdly, neither neede it ſeeme ſtraunge, that our Sauiour ſo ſoone correcteth, or rather directeth his naturall infirmitie, ſaying, not my will, &c. for as Auguſt. ſaith, Si in illa voluntate permaneret, vtiq; prauum cor oſtendere videretur: If Chriſt had continued in his firſt will or deſire, he had ſhewed an heart not aright, in Pſal.93. Therefore it became Chriſt forthwith to ſubmit his naturall infirmitie to Gods will and pleaſure, being free from all ſinne and diſobedience. Alſo Damaſcene confeſſeth, that Chriſts will was firſt τῆς φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειραθεῖσαν, tempted of his naturall infirmitie, and by and by ſtrengthened by the diuine will.

Fourthly, the children of God are often ſoone recouered from the gulfe of griefe: as Iob in the ſame place, chap.19.11.25. as I euen now alleaged, is an example of comfort, and diſcomfort. Dauid with the ſame breath ſaith, I am caſt out of thy ſight: And againe, Thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer, when I cryed vnto thee, Pſal.31.22. If the members of Chriſt ſo ſoone ouercame theſe brunts of griefe; it is no marueile if Chriſt were thought not altogether rid, yet eaſed of it and refreſhed. Yet notwithſtanding, if it be graunted that this perplexitie of Chriſt did hang vpon him ſtill in ſome meaſure, from the beginning of his agonie vntill his death, as Origen ſeemeth to thinke: Non ſemper, ſed vſque ad tempus mortis in me eſt, vt cum mortuus fuero peccato, moriar & vniuerſæ triſtitiæ: This heauines is not alwaies in me, but vnto yͤ time of death, that when I am dead to ſin, I ſhall be dead to al ſorrow, Hom.35.in Matth. All this being admitted, yet Chriſt might both pray in faith, and confidently commend his ſoule vnto God, and make wiſe anſweres vnto his perſecutors: Firſt, his faith failed not in his agonie, though his carnall ſenſe were afrighted and aſtoniſhed, and therefore hee might and did effectually pray. Secondly, the vehement fittes of his agonie were ſometime ſlaked and intermitted, and as the terme of the law is, though in another kinde, as men naturally diſquieted in their minde, may haue dilucida interualla, lightſome ſeaſons, when they come to themſelues, Cod.lib.6.tit.22.leg.9. So Chriſt in this ſupernaturall aſtoniſhment, had ſome ſpaces of intermiſſion. Thirdly, this agonie and combat which he had with the wrath of God, did not make him the more vnfit in his cariage to men; but that he might and did exhort his Apoſtles, reproue and refute his aduerſaries: like as Iob, though he complained of the terrors of God in his ſoule, Iob.6.4. yet knew well how to anſwere the deceitfull and comfortleſſe obiections and oppoſitions of his friends; ſo Chriſt in this agonie hauing to doe with God, not with men, though toward God he were aſtoniſhed in his ſenſe, his faith ſtill remaining ſound, yet toward men he was notwithſtanding moſt readie and expert in his heauenly anſweres and oracles.

Argum.4. Firſt, Chriſts prayers were meritorious: Precibus & meritis patrem nobis cæleſtem propitium reddidit: By his prayers and merits he made his father well pleaſed with vs. But what merit could there be in his prayer if he were aſtoniſhed? Feuard.p.421.conf.12.lin.4. 1

Secondly, Quæ conſtantia, &c. What conſtancie, what fortitude of minde, if through feare and aſtoniſhment Chriſts memorie failed? Feuard.p.423.conf.2.lin.7. 2

But Chriſt ſhewed in his agonie, faith, conſtancie, fortitude, obedience: Ergo, he was not aſtoniſhed.

Thirdly, if Chriſt feared his fathers wrath, then hee doubted: ſo Feuardentius inferreth vpon Caluines wordes, that becauſe hee ſaith, Chriſtum timere, that Chriſt did feare, therefore hee doubted, p.458. 3

Fourthly, Saint Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that we ſhould follow his ſteppes, 1.Pet.2.21. but it were hard for vs, if Chriſt were aſtoniſhed with feare, and ſo beſide himſelfe, therein to imitate him: this place of the Apoſtle is vrged by the Frier, p.361.conf.4. lin.4. 4

Anſw. Firſt, 1. if Chriſt had continued ſtill amazed and afrighted, and not eftſoone recouered himſelfe, the firſt argument might haue ſome colour, but the ſhortnes of that brunt nothing hindered his meritorious working. 2. It was a meanes rather to encreaſe his merite, in that he 1 yeelded not to this naturall feare and infirmitie, but in wreſtling againſt it, and ſubduing his humane will to Gods will, his obedience became meritorious. 3. Yet I further boldly ſay, that euen this feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt being without ſinne, and all other his naturall infirmities, of hunger, thirſt, wearineſſe in the bodie, feare, griefe, with the like in his ſoule, were meritorious: as Hierome well ſaith, Manifeſtum ei eſſe poterit, qui Euangelia ſollicita mente perlegerit, quomodo & cibus & potus eius & deambulatio, & vniuerſa quæ geſſit in corpore ſalutem hominum procurarint: It may be manifeſt to him that carefully readeth the Goſpell, how that Chriſts meate and drinke, his walking and all which he did in his bodie, did procure our ſaluation, tom.4.de fil.prodig. 4. Chriſt amazed, aſtoniſhed, merited not indeed for himſelfe, neyther did he at any other time els: but for vs euen then and there he merited.

Secondly, 1. there was no diſtempered humor in Chriſt; but euen in his agonie, his heart was ſetled, his faith firme and fixed, without any diſtruſt, or deſpaire. 2. It is vntrue, that there can be no faith, obedience, conſtancie, fortitude, while a man is in a traunce or aſtoniſhed; for Peter ſhewed both, Act.10. when hee fell into a traunce: Firſt his faith, verſ.14. I haue neuer eaten any thing vncleane: his obedience, verſ.15. in that he reſted notwithſtanding in the anſwere of God, ſubmitting himſelfe thereunto. 3. Chriſt continued not in this aſtoniſhment long, but preſently plunged out of it: and therefore all his prayer while, he was not in this traunce; but as on the one ſide he was aſſaulted in his humane ſenſe with feare and griefe; ſo he recouered himſelfe by his faith, and encountred with that brunt of ſorrow: ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that Ieſus for the ioy that was ſet before him, endured the Croſſe: Heb.12.2. And Cypriane thus witneſſeth, Sanguineo ſudore madefiens, noſtræ naturæ in ſe expreſſit imbecillitatem, ne nos in deſperationem caderemus, ſi quum omnia mortem præſentem intentant, horrorem naturæ ſenſerimus, &c. Chriſt dropping with his bloodie ſweate, did expreſſe the imbecillitie of our nature, leaſt we ſhould fall into deſpaire, if we feele the horror of nature, when all thinges threaten preſent deſtruction, de duplic.Martyr. Chriſt then felt our ſorrowes, but fainted not, he was diſtreſſed, but deſpaired not, vexed, but not vanquiſhed.

Thirdly, the argument followeth not, neither is it true, that feare is more intollerable in Chriſt then doubting. 1. Damaſcene vſeth a good diſtinction of feare, lib.3.de fide c.23. that there is δειλία φυσικὴ, and παρὰ φύσιν, a naturall feare, ſuch as this was in Chriſt to decline death; and a feare vnnaturall, which proceedeth from diffidence or diſtruſt, which was not in Chriſt: all feare hath not diſtruſt, but all doubting is ioyned with diſtruſt and diffidence; therefore there may be feare naturall, where neyther ſinne is nor diſtruſt. 2. The Scriptures teſtifie of Chriſt, that hee began to be afraid, Marke 14.33. ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, but doubtfulneſſe or diſtruſt is no where mentioned to haue bin in Chriſt: therefore the one was in Chriſt, and not the other. 3. Origen ſaith, Proprium eſt omnis hominis primum quidem nolle pati aliquid doloris: It is proper to euery man, firſt not to be willing to ſuffer any griefe, &c. In Matth.Tract.35. Chryſoſtom. Neque nolle mori carnem reprehenſio: Neither is it to be reprehended, if the fleſh be vnwilling to die: Ex Epiſtol. Agathon. ad Conſtantin: Thus theſe Fathers doubt not to aſcribe vnto Chriſt a naturall feare, and deſire to eſcape ſorrow, without ſinne or doubtfulnes.

Fourthly, whereas the reaſon is thus framed: Chriſt in his ſufferings is to be imitated of vs; but in his aſtoniſhment and amazednes, he is not to be imitated, or in that he was beſide himſelfe: Ergo, he was not in any of his ſufferings ſo aſtoniſhed or beſide himſelfe.

*Anſw.*1. It is deuiſed onely by them, not affirmed by vs, that Chriſt, in his agonie, was beſide himſelfe, which is nothing elſe, but to be madde: we affirme onely according to the Scripture, that Chriſt began to bee amazed, and with feare to bee aſtoniſhed: Mark. 14.36. So the word ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι there vſed, ſignifieth. 2. Chriſt is not to be imitated in all parts of his ſuffering, neither can be: for who is able to beare ſuch a heauie burthen of Gods wrath and diſpleaſure, as he did, which cauſed him to be aſtoniſhed? Chriſt is to be imitated, wherein he may be imitated of vs, as he himſelfe ſaith, Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke: ſo Auguſtine ſaith, In Pſalm.90.præfat. In quo imitaturi ſumus Chriſtum, nunquid hoc à nobis exigit, vt talia miracula, qualia ipſe fecit, faciamus, &c. Wherein are wee to imitate Chriſt, doth hee require of vs to doe ſuch miracles as hee did? &c. hee ſaith, Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke. If Chriſt be not to be imitated in his miracles, then not in this his aſtoniſhment: for ſo to be aſtoniſhed as he was, and not faile in faith, was a great miracle. 3. Yet we haue here in Chriſt, that which is worthy & fit to be imitated of vs, namely his ſubmiſſion and obedience: that though his naturall deſire caried him one way, yet he ſubdued it to the will of God, ſaying, not my will, but thy will be done: as Auguſtine ſaith: Statim fac, quod ideo fecit, vt te doceret, non quod ego volo, &c. Doe ſtraightway as he did, to the end to teach thee, not that I will, &c.

*Argum.*5. Hilarie may be obiected, as he is alleaged by the Maſter of Sentences, Lib.3.diſt.15. tit.9. Nec fieri poteſt, vt timor eius ſignificetur in verbis, cuius fiducia continuatur in factis: It cannot be, that his feare ſhould be ſignified in word, whoſe fiduce is continued in fact, Lib.10.de trinitat. Hilarie ſeemeth to exempt Chriſt from all feare and infirmitie, in his bloodie ſweate and agonie; rather aſcribing the drops of blood to his power and diuine omnipotencie, then to his naturall infirmitie.

*Anſw.*1. Peter Lombard in the ſame place bringeth in this anſwere, Neceſſitas timendi non fuit in Chriſto? There was not the like cauſe and neceſſitie of feare and griefe in Chriſt, which is in vs, and ſo he ſaith Hilarie is to be vnderſtoode, not denying feare to be in Chriſt, but the like cauſe of feare.

*Anſ.*2. It is true, that it was not infirmitie in Chriſt, but power to ſtand out in this agonie, and to ſtriue againſt it, euen vnto blood, but yet the beginning of it proceeded of feare: Damaſcene ſaith, that our naturall paſſions were in Chriſt, κατὰ φύσιν, ὑπὲρ φύσιν: according to nature, and aboue, or beyond nature: according to nature, in that he had them; but aboue nature, in that he gouerned and moderated them: *Lib.*3.*de fide.c.*20. So Hilarie ſaith, Non ſecundum naturæ conſuetudinem geſſit,&c. He did it not after the cuſtome of nature: for he did gouerne and execute them aboue nature. 3. But otherwiſe, that his naturall feare and infirmitie gaue beginning to this agonie: Ambroſe teſtifieth: Audi vtramque vocem & carnis infirmæ, & ſpiritus prompti pater, ſi poſſibile, tranſeat calix, hæc carnis eſt vox; non quod ego volo, habes deuotionem ſpiritus: Heare both voices, both of weake fleſh, and of the readie ſpirit: Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſſe, this is the voyce of fleſh; not that I will, here is the deuotion of the ſpirit, *lib.*4. in Luc.

THE TRVTH CONFIRMED.

The Proteſtants.

CHriſt thorough the very feare and feeling, ſight and ſenſe of Gods heauie wrath and diſpleaſure againſt our ſinne layed vpon him, was in an exceeding great agonie, and therein his humane nature for a while was ſo amazed and aſtoniſhed, that in that moment, he wiſhed to ſhunne the cuppe prepared for him for the worke of our redemption; yet ſo, that he preſently conformeth his will and deſire, to the will and pleaſure of God.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt when he prayed in the daies of his fleſh, With ſtrong cries and teares, was heard in that he feared, but he was not heard nor deliuered from his bodily death, Ergo, it was not that which he feared: and ſo conſequently it was the heauie wrath of God in his ſoule, which he feared.

*Anſw.*1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt was heard in that which he deſired, namely, that the will of God might be done in his death, or that he might be deliuered from death by his reſurrection: *reſp.ad argum.*6.

2. It may alſo be anſwered, that Chriſt was heard in that he feared, and deliuered from his feare: he felt not then that which he feared: ſo then if he feared Gods wrath, he was deliuered from it before he felt it: Feuard. to this effect, *p.*464.*con.*4.*lin.*11.

3. It will be anſwered, that εὐλαβεία, muſt be expounded, not feare, but reuerence: and ſo Bellarmine affirmeth, that Chryſoſtome, Theophylact, Oecumenius doe ſo interpret this place, that Chriſt was heard, pro ſua reuerentia, for his reuerence to his Father, Bellarm.ibid.

*Anſw.*1. Bellarmine confeſſeth, that this prayer of Chriſt, which the Apoſtle ſaith, he made with ſtrong cries and teares, is the ſame which the Euangeliſts make mention of, when Chriſt was in his agonie in the garden: Bellarm ibid. Firſt, but that prayer proceeded from griefe and feare: for his words ſhew his griefe, My ſoule is heauie to death; his geſture, in ſweating drops of blood declareth his feare: yet Chriſt neither grieued at, neither feared the ſucceſſe of his paſſion, that Gods will ſhould not bee done in it, or his releaſe from death by his reſurrection: Ergo, in theſe things, at this time, and in this Prayer, hee was not heard. Secondly, the ſumme of his requeſt is, that the cuppe might paſſe, which petition hee limiteth in deede with ſubiection to Gods will; but the paſſing of the cuppe, cannot bee referred to the reſurrection: neither is the paſſing of the cuppe, the performing of Gods will in the not paſſing of the cuppe: this were to expound one contrarie by another. Thirdly, that thing againſt which Chriſt prayeth, made him heauie, but neither the redemption of man by his death, nor the hope of the reſurrection could make him heauie, but rather ioyous, as the Apoſtle ſaith, He endured the croſſe for the ioy ſet before him: Hebr.12.2. Theſe were not then the ſubiect of his petition at this time, though I deny not, but Chriſt continually did pray, both for the finiſhing of our redemption, and the perfecting of the ſame by his reſurrection: Wherefore ſeeing Chriſt was deliuered from his feare, but not from death, therefore death he feared not: as Hierome ſaith, Erubeſcant, qui putant ſaluatorem mortem timuiſſe, & paſſionis pauore dixiſſe,&c. Let them bluſh at it, that thinke our Sauiour feared death, and thorough this feare ſaid, *My ſoule is heauie,&c. In Matth.*26.

Secondly, that fearing is a kinde of inward feeling in the ſoule, 1. the Scripture confeſſeth, 1.John 4.18. Feare hath puniſhment, κόλασιν: there can be no payne or puniſhment without feeling: Luk.22.44. conſtitutus ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ, being ſet or pitched in an agonie: an agonie is not without feeling.

ling. 2. This is that which Bernard ſaith, that Chriſt had in his life, actionem paſſiuam, an action paſſiue; and in his death, paſſionem actiuam, a paſſion actiue: ſo was this paſſion of feare actiue, working a ſenſe and feeling in Chriſts ſoule. 3. But feare goeth before griefe, and the ſame thing is not felt which is feared, eſpecially where there is a deliuerance from the thing feared. Anſw. 1. Neither do wee ſay that Chriſt felt the ſame meaſure of Gods wrath, which hee feared: for Chriſt might feare to be left comfortleſſe and to be forſaken of Gods helpe in that combate: from this feare he was deliuered, for hee was ſupported and vphelde in this terrible aſſault, that hee did not ſincke downe in it. 2. So S. Paul prayed, that the meſſenger of Sathan, the pricke of his fleſh, might be taken from him, which he obtayned not, but a ſupplie of grace was giuen him, whereby he ſhould ſtand faſt in that tentation, 2.Cor.12. as S. Paul was heard, not by remouing of the temptation, but by giuing of grace to ouercome it: ſo Chriſt was aſſiſted with the preſence of Gods power, the abſence whereof he feared, and from this feare hee was heard and deliuered, but not from all ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule.

Thirdly, concerning the vſe of the word εὐλαβεία. 1. We denie not, but that both in Scripture and prophane authors, the word is taken for a religious warineſſe, and reuerence. 2. In like manner, it muſt be graunted, that it is alſo vſed to ſignifie feare, both in Scripture, and eccleſiaſticall and prophane writers: firſt, in the Scripture, Act. 23.10. εὐλαβηθεὶς, timens; the Tribune feared leſt Paul ſhould haue beene pulled aſunder, &c. Heb. 11.7. Noe fearing, prepared the Arke: what or for whom the Tribune feared, it skilleth not; we onely ſhew the vſe of the word, that it cannot be here tranſlated reuerence, but feare: We graunt alſo that Noah his feare was ioyned with faith, but Chriſts much more; a feare it was notwithſtanding, though not diſtruſtfull.

3. Nazianzene reckoneth εὐλαβεῖς, feare, among the infirmities of Chriſt, orat.2.de filio: And Theodoret alſo followeth the ſame ſenſe vpon this place.

4. And for prophane writers, Plutarch.in Pericle teſtifieth that εὐλαβεῖτο, hee feared the people, when hee ſpake vnto them. Sophocles ſaith, εὐλαβοῦμαι πεσεῖν, I am afraid to fall. 5. The circumſtance of the place alloweth this ſenſe: for both before mention is made of his teares, and prayers, and verſ. 8. he learned obedience by the thinges which he ſuffered: which do argue his feare rather then reuerence. 6. The vulgar Latine in the two places before alleaged tranſlateth the word εὐλαβηθεὶς, timens, fearing, and our vulgar tranſlation allowed with priuiledge readeth in this place, hee was heard in that he feared: the firſt ought to moue the Papiſts; the other ſhould preuaile with Proteſtants, who are not ſuddenly to depart from the receiued tranſlation.

Argum. 2. If the feare of the death of the bodie had ſo aſtoniſhed Chriſt, and caſt him into ſuch an agony, he ſhould haue ſhewed himſelfe weaker then many of his members, the Martyrs, that went boldly without feare to their death: Ergo, it was not the feare of bodily death, that troubled him.

Anſw. 1. This is the difference betweene the feare of death in Chriſt, and others: they do feare of neceſſitie, but Chriſt timuit, quia voluit, feared willingly: and therefore at other times, when he thought vpon his Paſſion, as at the inſtitution of his laſt Supper, he feared not, becauſe then he would not: but now in the garden he beginneth to feare, quia voluit, becauſe he would ſo do, Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.3.

2. If Martyrs feare not death, it is becauſe God giueth them greater comfort, this benefite they receiue from Chriſt, Bellarm.ibid.

3. Chriſtus, vt copioſa eſſet redemptio, &c. Chriſt to make our redemption more full, would alſo take vpon him our feare, Bellarm.ibid. Chriſt then had greater cauſe to feare, in reſpect of his perſon and office being appointed to be our redeemer.

Contra. 1. Firſt, in ſome ſenſe it is true, that all Chriſts affections were voluntarie, in reſpect of his voluntary aſſuming of our fleſh: as Auguſtine ſaith, Hos humanæ infirmitatis affectus ſicut ipſam carnem & mortem non humanæ conditionis neceſſitate, ſed miſerationis voluntate ſuſcepit: Theſe affections of humane infirmitie like as fleſh it ſelfe and death, Chriſt tooke, not by neceſſitie of humane condition, but by the willingnes of his compaſſion, in Pſal.87. but after Chriſt was incarnate, as it was neceſſary he ſhould haue our fleſh; ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould haue the infirmities and affections thereof without ſinne: but as Peter Lombard ſaith, Hanc neceſſitatem habuit, non ex neceſſitate conditionis, &c. Chriſt had this neceſſitie of retayning our affections, not of the neceſſitie of his condition, but willingly: it was now then a neceſſitie in Chriſt, which at the firſt was voluntary, lib.3.diſt.16.liter.a.

2. Another difference betweene Chriſts affections and ours is this, in vs they are violent, and immoderate; in Chriſt they were ſo temperate and ordered, that he alwayes ſubmitted them to the will of his Father: ſo that not the hauing of them, but the moderating of them was voluntarie in Chriſt: So Hierome ſaith, Verè contriſtatus eſt, ſed non paſſio eius dominatur animæ: He truely ſorrowed, but the paſſion did not rule ouer his ſoule, in Matth.26.

3. Otherwiſe the affections of Chriſts ſoule were as neceſſarie, as the infirmities of his bodie, as hunger, thirſt, ſleepe: els Chriſt ſhould not haue been like vs in all things, if he had not beene ſubiect to the ſame infirmities without ſinne: and this were to make Chriſts agonie to be in ſhew onely, what needed he to pray againſt this cuppe, to ſweat drops of blood, to be comforted of the Angel, if he had been acceſſarie to his owne griefe, and might of himſelfe as man haue auoided them?

2 Secondly, as Chriſt gaue power to his members to die boldly, ſo much more had he power himſelfe to be emboldned againſt the feare of death. 2. Whereas the Martyrs were armed with his example of patience againſt death; now ſhould they haue been diſarmed with his example of feare and weakeneſſe, if he had feared onely the death of the body.

3 Thirdly, 1. Chriſt had no greater cauſe in himſelfe to feare bodily death, nor ſo great as others haue, becauſe he was without ſinne, and ſo death to him was without ſting; for the ſting of death is ſinne: but no man els, though neuer ſo perfect is without ſinne. 2. In reſpect of vs and our redemption, as Chriſt had greater cauſe, &c. ſo had he greater ſtrength to beare it.

4 Fourthly, the fathers haue allowed and approued this argument, Theodoret vpon that place Hebr.5.7. If bleſſed Paul feared not death, but deſired to be diſſolued, &c. how did God the word feare death? Auguſt. in Pſal.93. Nullo modo formidaret Chriſtus, quod non formidauit Paulus, cupio diſſolui, &c. Melior enim eſſet ſeruus quàm Dominus: Chriſt in no wiſe would feare that which Paul feared not; I deſire to be diſſolued, &c. for then the ſeruant ſhould be better then the Maſter.

*Argum.*3. Our third argument is taken from the prayer of Chriſt in the garden, Matthew 26.39. O my Father, if it bee poſſible, let this cuppe paſſe from mee; neuertheleſſe not as I will, but as thou wilt.

1 Firſt, here Chriſt prayeth for a thing, in reſpect of Gods decree not poſſible, that the cuppe might paſſe from him: and therefore afterward he ſaith, verſ.42. If this cuppe cannot paſſe away from me, &c.

2. Secondly, he prayeth for that, which was not granted, that the cuppe of death and ſorrow prepared for him might paſſe.

3. Thirdly, he prayeth in his humane and naturall deſire ſomewhat diuerſlie from Gods will; yet with ſubmiſſion of his will vnto the will of God: what elſe could cauſe Chriſt in this manner to pray againſt his cuppe and croſſe, but the exceeding feare and feeling of Gods heauie wrath, and irefull indignation, wherewith he was ſo amazed at the firſt and aſtoniſhed, that in his humane weakenes he was caried (his diuinitie now hiding and repreſſing it ſelfe) to deſire the paſſing of that cuppe, which he was to drinke of, for the redemption of mankinde.

1 Anſw. Firſt Feuardentius anſwereth, that it was not impoſſible with God to ſaue his ſonne from death, and to redeeme the world without his death or croſſe; for Chriſt ſaith, Mark.14.36. All things are poſſible to thee. And Hebr.5.7. the Apoſtle ſaith, *He offered prayers to him, that was able to ſaue him from death p.*418.

Secondly, againe he ſaith, Chriſtum rem impoſſibilem, &c. That Chriſt did not aske a thing impoſſible: Vel abſolutæ voluntati repugnantem, or repugnant to Gods abſolute will: *Feuardent. ibid. confutat.*2. So then, hee ſeemeth thus to take this clauſe, If it bee poſſible, that is, agreeable to thy will.

Contra. Firſt, we deny not, but in reſpect of Gods abſolute power, it had been poſſible for Chriſt not to haue died, and man ſome other way to haue been ſaued; and ſo the places alleaged are to be vnderſtoode: but in reſpect of Gods iuſtice, which could not otherwiſe be appeaſed, then by the death of his Sonne, it was not poſſible: thus the Scripture ſpeaketh, Act.4.12. There is giuen no other name vnder heauen, whereby we muſt be ſaued: Reuel.5.3. No man in heauen was able to open the booke but the Lambe. Saint Ambroſe bringeth in this diſtinction of things impoſſible: Aliud ſecundum naturam: Some things are impoſſible in nature, but ſo nothing is impoſſible to God, Matth.19.26. Aliud per definitionem immutabilis conſilij: Some things are impoſſible in reſpect of the decree of Gods immutable counſell, as Hebr.6.18. It is impoſſible that God ſhould lie, *lib.*4.*de fide.c.*3. and in this ſenſe it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould not dye, becauſe God had ſo determined: and Origene vpon this place, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia; quod ad iuſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are iuſt: *In Matth. tract.*35.

Secondly, that the poſſibilitie expreſſed in the firſt clauſe of Chriſts prayer, hath no reference to Gods will, it thus appeareth: firſt, Chriſt ſaith in generall, all things are poſſible vnto thee, Mar.14. verſ.36. but if no more be poſſible to God, than he will; then it would follow, that he can doe no more than he doth, or will doe, which is a great error. Secondly, if this were the meaning, if it be poſſible, that is, ſtand with thy will, what needed that limitation, or explanation following, yet not my will, ſeeing he had expreſſed ſo much before? Thirdly, in reſpect of Gods will, it was impoſſible the cup ſhould paſſe: as our Sauiour ſaith, verſ.43. If this cup cannot paſſe away from me, but that I muſt drinke it, thy will be done: how could the ſame thing be both poſſible & impoſſible in regard of Gods will? Fourthly, Chriſt was not ignorant of the will of God, and therfore knew well enough that it was not poſſible, neither ſtood with Gods will, that the cup ſhould paſſe: this clauſe therfore, if it be paſſible, cannot be referred to the will of God, but rather to his power.

2 Secondly, it is replied, that Chriſt obtained that he asked: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr. 5.7. he was heard. Secondly, our Sauiour ſaith to his father, Iohn. 11.42. *Thou heareſt me alwaies: Feuard. p.464. con.*4. Thirdly, Origen thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods euerlaſting wrath did paſſe both from Chriſt and vs, and ſo in that behalfe he obtained that he deſired: Orig. in hunc locum.

1 Contr. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, he was heard in or frō his feare: Chriſt in his humane infirmitie (his diuine power for the time withdrawing it ſelfe) feared a greater meaſure of Gods wrath, leaſt he ſhould haue been left alone in it; from this feare hee was heard and deliuered. So then the cup of Gods wrath paſſed not from him, as in the beginning of his prayer his humane will tempted (as Damaſcene ſaith) of his naturall infirmitie deſired, but from the manner and meaſure thereof which he feared.

2 Secondly, Chriſt was indeede alwaies heard of God, ſo was he in this place: for though hee was in that moment ſtirred in his humane deſire to wiſh the eſcaping of that cuppe (for it is a naturall inſtinct, and not in it ſelfe ſinfull, to wiſh to decline euery thing that is hurtfull) yet he limiteth this deſire, and ſquareth his will to his fathers: ſo that this was the ſumme of his prayer, that howſoeuer his humane deſire wiſhed to eſcape that cup, yet he was contented Gods will might ſtand; and ſo it did, and thus Chriſt was heard: though not in the ſudden wiſh of humane infirmitie, yet in the aduiſed requeſt of his filiall conformitie.

3 Thirdly, Origen indeede hath ſuch a conceit: Expediebat omnibus, vt tranſiret calix ab eo, propterea quòd biberat eum ſaluator: It was expedient for all men, that the cup ſhould paſſe from Chriſt, becauſe hee dranke of it: ſo hee thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods euerlaſting wrath paſſed from Chriſt and vs, by his drinking of it. This is contrarie to the Scripture: If this cup cannot paſſe, but that I muſt drinke of it, thy will be done, Matth. 26.42. Chriſts meaning was then, that the cup might ſo paſſe, that he might not drinke of it: how then could it paſſe by his drinking and taſting of it? Secondly, Chriſt feared not eternall vengeance after death, and ſo euerlaſting deſtruction, it were not farre from blaſphemie ſo to affirme: but he was heard in that which he feared: Ergo, herein he was not heard, neither did he deſire the cup to paſſe in that ſenſe, in the appeaſing of Gods euerlaſting wrath, which was indeede an effect of Chriſts croſſe, but not of that part of his prayer in the garden, for the paſſing of the cup: though in the explanation, limitation and condition of his prayer I doubt not but that effect is comprehended.

Obiect. If Chriſt neither feared the death of the bodie, nor euerlaſting death; what then did he feare?

Anſw. I ſay with Cyprian: Metus ille infirmitatis humanæ communem exprimebat affectum, vt difficultas extremi exitus timeretur: That feare of humane infirmitie did expreſſe a common affection, that the difficultie of the laſt end ſhould be feared, ſerm. de paſſion. So then Chriſt feared not the end of his life, but the difficultie thereof, that is, the bitternes of his fathers wrath, and the anguiſh of ſoule, that was ioyned with death. To this purpoſe the ordinarie gloſſe vpon the third to the Galathians: Inſipiens honorificentia, Chriſtum à maledicto, quod morti coniunctum eſt, ſeparat: It is a fooliſh honoring of Chriſt to exempt him from the curſe, which was ioyned with death, &c. So then it was Gods wrath and curſe, which did concurre with Chriſts bodily death, which did ſo afflict and perplexe his ſoule.

Fourthly, that Chriſt in his humane deſire wiſhed for ſomewhat, that was not graunted; Chryſoſtome teſtifieth: Neque nolle mori carnem reprehenſio eſt, quia hoc naturæ eſt, ipſe autem, quæ naturæ ſunt, omnia ſine peccato oſtendit: Neither is it reprehenſible to feare death, becauſe it is of nature, but Chriſt ſhewed all that is of nature without ſinne: Ex epiſt. Agathon. ad Conſtantin. Chriſt then in Chryſoſtomes iudgement would in his humane deſire haue eſcaped death (though it was not that onely or chiefely which he feared, but as the ſenſe of Gods wrath for ſinne concurred with it) yet did he not eſcape death. Athanaſ. is alſo cited in the ſame place: Humana voluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat paſſionem, diuina prompta erat: His humane will becauſe of the infirmitie of the fleſh refuſed the paſſion, his diuine will was readie.

Thirdly, it is replied that Chriſt prayed not contrary to Gods knowne will: Firſt, Chriſt prayed in faith, and was moſt aſſured his prayer ſhould take effect, *Feuar. p.464. conf.4. lin.*13. Therefore not againſt the knowne will of God. Secondly, he prayed the ſame prayer thrice, which had been a voluntarie ſpurning againſt Gods will, if he had prayed againſt it. Thirdly, he taught his Apoſtles to pray aright, and reproued the ſonnes of Zebedee. You know not what ye aske: much more doth he pray himſelfe aright: Feuard. p. 421. *conf.*11. Fourthly, if he prayed directly contrarie to the will of God, he had ſinned: but his prayers were iuſt and pure: *Feuar. p.*419. *conf.*7.

Contra. Firſt this replie is altogether impertinent: Firſt, we ſay not, that Chriſts will or prayer was contrarie to Gods will, but diuers onely from it. Secondly, his whole prayer was not contrarie, or diuers or different, but onely the ſhort motion in the beginning of his prayer was ſomewhat diuers. Thirdly, though Gods will were knowne vnto Chriſt, yet in this moment, wherein he ſtoode amazed and aſtoniſhed, ſeeing his diuine power and knowledge, by the which Gods will was reuealed vnto him, did now withdrawe and repreſſe it ſelfe, how could it otherwiſe be, but that this knowledge and reuelation of Gods will, was for the time as ſuſpended alſo, and not obiected to Chriſts humane ſenſe, being now fully poſſeſſed of this agonie?

Secondly, for anſwere to the arguments. Firſt, notwithſtanding the diuerſitie of deſire in Chriſts humane will, yet he prayed in faith, in that he ſubmitted his will in all obedience to his Fathers. Secondly, he might repeate the ſame requeſt of his naturall deſire thrice, becauſe ſo long his agonie continued, without any repugnance to Gods will, ſtill remembring the ſame condition, in ſubmitting his naturall deſire to his fathers heauenly will. Thirdly, the prayer of the ſonnes of Zebedee was raſh and ignorant, becauſe it was not conditionall nor limited, but humorous and diſordered; failing both in the occaſion, which was ambitious; and the manner, which was peremptorie and abſolute: but Chriſt prayed from the feeling and neceſſitie of his humane infirmitie, and with the moſt obedient condition of his fathers will: and therefore his prayer ſo begun, and ſo ended and limited, was neither raſh nor ignorant. Fourthly, firſt he prayed not contrarie to Gods will, but a diuers thing hee asked, yet with a ſubordination to Gods will. Secondly, it is not ſinne for the natural affection to deſire to decline that which is hurtfull or contrarie vnto life: as Origen ſaith, whom I alleaged before: Proprium eſt omnis hominis fidelis primũ nolle pati aliquid doloris,&c. It is proper euen to euery faithfull man, to be vnwilling to ſuffer any trouble, Tract.*35.*in Matth. So it was no more ſinne in Chriſt in his humane ſenſe to deſire to ſhun griefe and trouble, than it was for him, being hungrie, to couet to eate of the fruit of the figge tree, where was no fruit but leaues, Mark.11.13. Thirdly, but it will be obiected, that Chriſt knew Gods will to the contrarie, and therefore ſhould haue ſinned in making any ſuch requeſt.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine: Si in illa voluntate permaneret,&c. If Chriſt ſhould haue ſtaied in that minde or wil, then his heart might haue ſeemed not to be aright, in Pſal.*93. Wherefore the preſent moderation of his humane deſire, and the ſubmiſſion of it to Gods will, doe free our Sauiour from all corruption. Secondly, ſome doe giue this ſolution: Non ideo petiit, vt impetraret,&c. He did not therefore aske to obtaine, for hee knew God would not doe it: ſed vt membris formam praberet, but to giue his members an example how to ſubmit their will and deſire to Gods: ſic Magiſter.lib.*3.*diſt.*17.*liter.c. Thirdly, I anſwere, that in this very moment Chriſts humane infirmitie being aſtoniſhed with this vehement obiect of griefe, and al amazed, did not turne it ſelfe to conſider of Gods ſecret will and decree herein: Like as Moſes and Paul knew very well, that they were both Gods elect ones, and could not finally periſh: yet in the exceſſe of their zeale, beſide this their knowledge, they wiſh one to be raſed out of the booke of life; the other to be anathema, that is, accurſed for the people of Gods ſake, Exod.32.33. Rom.9.3. Did Saint Paul ſinne againſt his owne knowledge, who hauing firſt ſaid, that nothing could ſeparate him from the loue of God in Chriſt, Rom.8.38. preſently in his great zeale wiſheth to be ſeparated from Chriſt? If this were no ſinne in the member, how could it be in the head? Further, wee muſt conſider now of Chriſt as a perfect man (his Godhead now not ſhewing it ſelfe) and that, as Damaſcene ſaith, hee tooke vpon him ἀγνοοῦσαν φύσιν, a nature of it ſelfe ignorant, but that it was by the conioyning of the diuine nature enriched with the knowledge of future thinges, lib.*3.*de fide.c.*21. Whereupon our Sauiour doubteth not to confeſſe himſelfe, as hee is man, ignorant of Gods ſecret will, Mark.13.32. what inconuenience then is it to graunt, that Chriſt as man (the light of his diuine knowledge for a time withholding the beames thereof) being plunged in this agonie in his humane ſenſe, did either preſently not know or not remember his fathers ſecret determination concerning his drinking of this cup?

Thirdly, that Chriſt prayed at the firſt for ſomewhat not obtained, and that he deſired and willed a diuers thing from his fathers will in that inſtant: the fathers doe thus teſtifie: Auguſt. Hac humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & priuatum orans: This was his humane will praying for ſomewhat proper and priuate, in Pſal.*32.*part.*1. *Hieronym.in Marc.*14. *Hîc oſtendit humanam voluntatem, quæ propter infirmitatem carnis recuſat paſſionem, & diuinam, quæ prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationem: Here hee ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmitie of the fleſh, refuſeth the paſſion, and a diuine will, which is readie to performe the diſpenſation. Origen tract.*35.*in Matth. Hæc voluntas, quam dicit, non ſicut ego volo,&c. This will, which hee ſaith, not as I will, is not according to his diuine and impaſſible ſubſtance, but his humane, and infirme. Chryſoſt. ex epiſtol. Agath.ad Conſtantin. Si in diuinitate dictum eſt, aliqua eſt contradictio; ſi de carne, nullum eſt ſcandalum: If it be ſaid of his diuinitie, there is ſome contradiction; if of his fleſh, (not as I will, &c.) there is no offence. Theſe fathers tooke this as a pregnant place to prooue two wils in Chriſt, his diuine and humane, againſt the Monothelite heretikes: if Chriſt had then two wils, hee had two deſires, and one diuers from the other: it is euident then, that Chriſt in his humane deſire wiſhed ſomewhat diuerſly from his diuine, yet without ſinne, becauſe he eftſoones ſubmitted his humane affection to the diuine diſpoſition.

*Argum.*4. That Chriſt was exceedingly amazed and aſtoniſhed being in his agonie, the ſcripture euidently teſtifieth: he began ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι ϗ ἀδημονεῖν, to be aſtoniſhed with feare, and to faint or fall away in his ſoule: for ſo the words ſignifie: what elſe could be the cauſe thereof, than the preſent ſenſe, which he had in his ſoule, of the wrath and indignation of God againſt ſinne? what elſe cauſed him to pray ſo earneſtly, to ſweate drops of blood, to be all amazed, to neede to be comforted of the Angell? the feare of bodily death could not doe it, Chriſt was not ſo weake and infirme: if it were not the ſenſe of bodily daunger, it was the feeling of ſpirituall griefe and terror of ſoule, which procured it.

Anſw. Firſt, the expiation of the ſinnes of the world before God, whoſe iuſtice was to be ſatiſfied, and the contemplation and beholding of the ſame in the ſoule of Chriſt, cauſed this great heauines in Chriſt, and in ſuch meaſure, vt par ei nunquam fuerit, that no man was euer like him, *Feuardent.p.*455.*lin.*37. So then the preſence of Gods Maieſtie, and the pitifull beholding of mans miſerie, did thus aſtoniſh him.

Secondly, the conſtant continuing of the ſame prayer three ſeuerall times, with intermiſſion of time, *Feuard.p.*486.*conf.*8.*lin.*11. and admonition to his Diſciples, prooueth he had not forgotten himſelfe, *Feuard.p.*425.*conf.*5.*lin.*8.

Thirdly, this religious aſtoniſhment, though it might for the preſent ſuſpend all other thoughts in our Sauiour, yet is there no neede it ſhould depriue him of vnderſtanding, ſenſe and memorie, *Feuard p.*425.*conf.*6.*lin.*4.

Contra. Firſt, 1. If the pietie of Chriſt, or preſence of Gods Maieſtie had thus aſtoniſhed Chriſt, why was hee not at other times aſtoniſhed, when he came into Gods preſence? as Ioh.17.13. hee ſaith in his prayer, now I come vnto thee: and pietie there was alwaies in Chriſt: if the ſame cauſe, why not the ſame effect? 2. What cauſe had Chriſt to feare the Maieſtie of God in himſelfe, being the dearely beloued ſonne of God, moſt iuſt, righteous, holie, but onely as our pledge and ſuretie, preſenting himſelfe in our perſon, to anſwere our debts? 3. And if commiſeration of humane miſerie, had ſtriken into him this aſtoniſhment, it muſt 1. follow, that either he was without commiſeration at other times, which were blaſphemie to ſay; or that his commiſeration wrought not in him this proper effect, namely aſtoniſhment, which were great raſhnes to auouch. 2. When Chriſt wept ouer Ieruſalem, foreſeeing their vtter deſolation for euer, why did not this commiſeration then alſo aſtoniſh him? 3. And where Chriſt prayeth to be deliuered from that houre, Mark.14.35. will they tye Chriſts pietie and charitie, which they ſay was now the cauſe of this aſtoniſhment, onely to this houre? Wherefore theſe were not the cauſes now: for at other times they could not haue wanted the ſame effects.

Secondly, 1. his repeating of his prayer thrice, his admoniſhing of his Apoſtles, doe prooue that he had not forgotten himſelfe, we graunt; neither doe we ſo affirme, as it is vnderſtood; that Chriſt had cleane forgotten and was as beſide himſelfe: he was not ſo amazed or aſtoniſhed, but that he had ſome intermiſſion and breathing time, and comforts mixed with his tentations: neither yet ſo confounded, as that hee either forgot pietie in his obedience to God, or charitie and pitie in warning his Diſciples. 2. The repeating of his prayer thrice for the paſſing of the cup, his praying to be deliuered from that houre, the comforting of the Angell, doe ſhew a continuance of the agonie and aſtoniſhment: and the text ſaith, he was γενόμενος, conſtitutus, ſet or ſetled in an agonie, Luk.22.44. you muſt then either graunt no agonie or aſtoniſhment at all, or elſe continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Euangeliſts doe.

Thirdly, there is no neede, notwithſtanding Chriſt were amazed and perplexed with the feare of Gods iudgements, and ſo caſt into a moſt vehement agonie, that hee ſhould be depriued of ſenſe, vnderſtanding, or memorie: 1. If his memorie in one point were not extinguiſhed, but ouerruled or ouercaſt with the vehement ſenſe of his preſent agonie, muſt he therefore be wrapped in a totall confuſion or obliuion? 2. In the middeſt of theſe ſtormes hee had ſome comfortable blaſts; and though death and hell were before his ſenſe, yet he was quickened and reuiued in his ſpirit. 3. Moſes and Paul rauiſhed with zeale, wiſhed they might be caſtawaies; yet at other times their ſaluation was manifeſtly reuealed vnto them: ſhall we conclude therefore that they wanted ſenſe, vnderſtanding, memorie? Thus (I truſt) are thoſe obiections anſwered.

*Argum.*5. Laſtly, I will produce the teſtimonie of the Fathers, that Chriſt was not thus aſtoniſhed for feare of the death of the bodie: *Hilarie lib.*10.de Trinitat. Anne timuit mori, qui armatis obuius prodit, &c. pungendæ carnis metu triſtis eſt, cuius attactu caro poſt cædem ſanatur: Did hee feare to die, which came againſt the armed troupes? was he ſorrowfull for the pricking of his fleſh, who by his touch healed the eare that was ſmitten off? *Auguſtin.in Pſal.*93. Non timebat mori Chriſtus tertio die reſurrecturus: Christ did not feare to die, being to riſe againe the third day. And againe, *in Pſal.*100. Non verè ille timebat mortem, qui poteſtatem habuit ponendi animam,&c. Hee could not verily feare death,that had power to lay downe his ſoule,and to take it vp againe.

Againe, Hilarie ſaith, Triſtis eſt anima mea vſque mortem, nunquid ait triſtis eſt anima propter mortem? aliud eſt vſque, aliud propter id metuere: My ſoule is heauie vnto death; doth hee ſay my ſoule is heauie for or becauſe of death? it is one thing to feare till death, another becauſe of death: *c.*31.in Matth.

Ambroſe: Non propter mortem, ſed vſque ad mortem: quia eum conditio corporalis affectus, non formido mortis offendit: Not becauſe of death,but vnto death, for the condition of his corporall or natural affection,not the feare of deadly affliction doth offend him,*in Luc.*12. And our countrie man Beda vſeth the very ſame words,in 14.Mark.

Some other of the Fathers affirme, that Chriſt non timuit infernum chaos, & torrentes flammas, that Chriſt feared not the infernall gulfe, or the ſcorching flames, *Hilarie lib.*10.*de Trinitat. Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.*7.

We willingly graunt that Chriſt feared not hell fire,nor euerlaſting deſtruction: thoſe authorities preſſe not vs, but rather helpe our cauſe: for if Chriſt neither feared temporall, nor euerlaſting death,as theſe Fathers witneſſe,and the Apoſtle ſaith he feared,Hebr.5.7.what then remaineth,but that he feared the cup of Gods wrath mixed with death? And as Cyprian ſaith before cited, Difficultatem extremi exitus: The difficultie or hardnes of his laſt paſſage, that is, in reſpect of Gods wrath tempered with it.

This then is the ſumme: firſt,that ſeeing Chriſt was ſaued frō that he feared,yet was he not ſaued from death; ſecondly,ſo he ſhould haue been weaker than many Martyrs,that were not afraid of the death of the bodie; thirdly, ſeeing he was ſo aſtoniſhed being in his agonie, that hee prayed for the paſſing of the cuppe,which was neither paſſible,nor graunted; fourthly,and was ſo aſtoniſhed with feare,that his ſoule fainted within, his bodie did ſweate blood without; fiftly, ſeeing the Fathers confeſſe,that this agonie proceeded not from any feare of bodily ſuffrings: it followeth that the feare and feeling of his fathers wrath thus troubled his ſoule. And thus much of this ſecond part or argument,of the cauſe of Chriſts agonie and aſtoniſhment in the garden.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST SVFfered properly and immediatly in ſoule.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

The Papiſts.

THeir opinion is,that Chriſt did not ſuffer in ſoule properly,but either, ex corporis coniunctione & condolentia: his griefe proceeded from the coniunction and fellow-feeling with the bodie, *Feuardent.p.*454. or elſe from the commiſeration and compaſſion that he had for the ſinnes of his myſticall bodie: for the which, tanta totius cordis pœnitudine dolet, vt par ei nemo vnquam fuerit: He did ſo grieue throughout in his heart, that no man was euer like vnto him, *p.*455. So hee concludeth, pœnas peccatis debitas in corpore portaſſe,&c. igitur non in anima, that he bare the puniſhment due to our ſins in his bodie,and not in his ſoule,*p.*448. To the like purpoſe Bellarm. Defixit mentem in omnia tormenta impendentia: Hee fixed his ſoule to beholde all the torments readie at hand, *lib.*4.*de Chriſti anima.cap.*8.*reſp.ad argum.*3. otherwiſe hee confeſſeth no ſuffring in Chriſts ſoule. Let vs ſee their arguments. 16.Error.

Argum. Feuard. thus reaſoneth: Firſt, 1.Pet.2.24. He bare our ſinnes in his bodie on the tree. Secondly, Saint Paul ſaith, God forbid that I ſhould reioyce but in the croſſe of the Lord Ieſus, Galat.6.14. And 1.Cor.2.2. I eſteemed not to know any thing among you, ſauing Ieſus Chriſt and him crucified: but his ſoule was not crucified. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſaid, It is finiſhed, Ioh.19.30. Ergo, if all his ſuffrings were finiſhed vpon the croſſe, there remained nothing to be ſuffered afterward, *Feuard.p.*448.8. 450.12. 1 2 3

Anſw. First,this place maketh rather againſt them: for the Apoſtle ſaith directly, he bare our ſinnes: the fleſh properly is not ſaid to beare ſinne, but the ſoule. Secondly,neither can ſinne be here taken for the puniſhment of ſinne onely, but for ſinne it ſelfe: for Saint Peter expoundeth the Hebrue (נשא naſah) vſed by the Prophet Iſay.53.4.as the Septuagint do,by the Greeke, φέρω, ἀνήνεγκω, which ſignifieth to beare: ſo Matthew ſaith ἔλαβε, he tooke our ſinnes and infirmities, Matth 8.17. as the Hebrue word is vſed, 1.Sam.17.34. and Saint Iohn, 1.Ioh.3.5. vt tolleret, ἄρῃ, that he might take away ſinnes: in which ſenſe alſo the Hebrue is taken Amos 6.10. Wherefore if Chriſt ſo bare our ſins, as Peter ſaith,that he tooke them vpon him,as Matthew expoundeth,and tooke them alſo away, as Saint Iohn inferreth; then he did not onely beare the puniſhment,but the ſinne alſo: for hee did not take away,nor take vpon him the puniſhment onely,but the ſinne alſo. Thirdly, neither can the word ἁμαρτία, ſinne, vſed by Saint Peter, ſignifie properly the puniſhment of ſinne: for S. Iohn 1 ſaith, that ἁμαρτία, is ἀνομία: that ſin is tranſgreſſion,&c. 1.Ioh.3.4. and the Septuagint vſe both theſe words,expounding the one by the other: Iſay.53.5. He was wounded for our ſinnes,and broken for our iniquities: ſinne therefore doth no more betoken the paine of ſinne, than tranſgreſſion, ἀνομία. Fourthly,the Prophet ſaith, He hath taken our infirmities or ſinnes,and carried our ſorrowes, Iſay.53.4. the puniſhment or effect of ſinne, the ſecond clauſe of the ſentence expoundeth by ſorrowes or diſeaſes: ſo that vnleſſe we will make a ſuperfluous repetition of the ſame thing,in the firſt clauſe, ſinne it ſelfe,the cauſe of theſe ſorrowes,muſt be contained: and the phraſe alſo giueth this ſenſe: for our ſinnes ἔλαβε, he tooke, our ſorrowes and diſeaſes, ἐβάστασεν, baiulauit, hee did carrie or beare, as Saint Matthew expoundeth. Fiftly,Saint Peter himſelfe ioyneth together, the obedience,and ſprinkling of the blood of Ieſus, 1.Pet.1.2. the one in his ſoule, the other in his bodie: and therefore it is farre from the Apoſtle to exclude the merit of Chriſts ſoule by his obedience and ſuffring. Sixtly, it will be obiected,that the Apoſtle ſaith, he bare our ſinnes in his bodie vpon the tree,and with his ſtripes μώλωπι, we are healed: which ſignifie the ſtripes of his bodie.

1 Anſw. Firſt,we graunt he bare our ſinnes vpon the tree of the croſſe, for that was the very altar where this ſacrifice was offered, the field where this battell was fought, and the very theater where Chriſt was to play the redeemers part. 2. and in his bodie, for his ſoule was not out of 1. his bodie,when he ſuffered: 2. and the bodie was the inſtrument of the ſoule: 3. and the viſible part of his ſuffrings,and therefore namely expreſſed: 4. or elſe by a Synecdoche in the bodie the other part is ſignified: as where the Scripture ſaith, a bodie thou haſt giuen me, Hebr.10.5. he receiued not a bodie without a ſoule: 5. otherwiſe, when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh diſtinctly hee expreſſeth both parts: Hebr.10.10. By the which will wee are ſanctified by the offring of the bodie of Ieſus: we are ſanctified both by the obedient will of Chriſt in his ſoule,and by the offring of his bodie.

2. The worde ſignifieth properly, liuorem, the blewnes or ſcarres remaining after ſtripes and wounds,Prou.20.30. wherein a figure muſt be admitted; by one part the whole being expreſſed: otherwiſe if Chriſts ſcarres and ſtripes of his fleſh only healed vs,then his blood and death ſhould be excluded: And it is no vnuſual thing in Scripture,to attribute wounds and ſtripes to the ſoule; as Luk.2.35. A ſword ſhall pierce thy ſoule: And 1.Cor.8.12. τύπτοντες, beating or wounding their conſcience: there is no reaſon to the contrarie, but that ſtripes may be taken in the ſame ſenſe here. Thus Saint Ambroſe: Sicut mors eius mortem abſtulit; liuor eius vulnera noſtra ſanauit: ita mœror eius, mœrorem noſtrum aboleuit: As his death tooke away ours, his ſtripes healed our wounds: ſo his griefe aboliſhed ours, *lib.2.de fid.c.*3.

2 Secondly, 1. By the croſſe of Chriſt all Chriſts ſuffrings whatſoeuer are ſignified: 1.Cor.1.17. leſt the croſſe of Chriſt ſhould be of none effect: all the effectuall ſuffrings of Chriſt are contained in the croſſe. Saint Peter ſo vnderſtandeth Chriſts ſuffrings, 1.Pet.2.21. *Chriſt ſuffered for vs.&c.*23. when he was reuiled, reuiled not againe,&c. but all his reuilings were not incident to his croſſe properly. 2. Yea in Chriſt crucified wee vnderſtand not onely his bodie launced and whipped,but his ſoule alſo with ſorrow pierced: and S. Paul muſt be ſo vnderſtood: whereby (ſaith he) the world is crucified vnto me,and I vnto the world: Saint Paul was not crucified and mortified in bodie onely to the world,but in ſoule and affection: ſo was alſo Chriſt crucified. 3. Saint Ambroſe affirmeth the ſame, lib.5.in Luc. Mens mea in Chriſto crucifixa eſt: My minde and ſoule was crucified in Chriſt: He ſaith not by Chriſt onely, that is, by the power of his croſſe our ſoule is crucified, but in Chriſts perſon our humane ſoule,which he tooke together with our bodie,was crucified: as the ſame Ambroſe ſaith *in Luc.*22. Suſcepit animam meam, ſuſcepit corpus meum: He tooke my ſoule, he tooke my bodie.

3 Thirdly, 1. This place vrgeth not vs: for we affirme not, that Chriſt ſuffered any thing in ſoule after his death, all his ſuffrings in ſoule and bodie were performed vpon the croſſe. 2. It rather maketh againſt them: for ſeeing it was needfull that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for vs both in bodie and ſoule; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hee tooke away the handwriting of ordinances that was againſt vs, which was contrarie to vs,and faſtened to the croſſe, Coloſſ.2.14. If hee faſtened to the croſſe whatſoeuer decree was againſt vs and contrarie to vs, then the decree againſt our ſoules,as well as againſt our bodies: then it will followe,that if Chriſt faſtened not to his croſſe this decree againſt our ſoules, which muſt be by ſuffring in his ſoule, then hee was to ſuffer ſomewhat afterward. Let the Frier take heede of his owne net,our foote is not entangled in it.

1 *Argum.*2. Firſt,Geneſ.3.15. The ſeede of the woman ſhall breake thy head,but thou ſhalt bruſe his heele: Feuardentius expoundeth this,by that place Ioh.1.14. The word was made fleſh: So his meaning ſeemeth to be this, that that part onely, which was of the ſeede of the woman, namely the fleſh of Chriſt,was onely bruſed of the Serpent, *Feuardent.p.*276.*conf.*8.*lin.*17.21.

2 Secondly,none of the Prophets did write ſo of Chriſt,that he ſhould ſuffer the anger of God in his ſoule, *Feuard.p.*440.*lin.*3.469.*conf.*1.*lin.*8. So he thinketh, that the Prophets and Patriarkes beleeued the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt onely,and by that faith were ſaued.

3 Thirdly,Hebr.10.12. With one offring hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified: with one offring,that is,of his bodie and blood,not with two offrings,of bodie and ſoule, Fenardent.* *p.*449.*conf.*10.*lin.*6.

1 Anſw. Firſt, 1. Similitudes and allegories doe not conclude certainly in euery point, but wherein the compariſon ſtandeth: as here the ſimilitude is taken from the nature of Serpents, that being trode vpon,doe bite and ſting the foote againe of him that preſſeth them: this ſimilitude holdeth ſtrongly for the victorie of Sathan, to the which end this promiſe is made to our parents: but if we applie it to other purpoſes,we ſhall ſtraine it too farre.

2. Some by Chriſts heele doe vnderſtand his members; as *Origen hom.*4. *in Pſal.*36. Ille noſtrum obſeruat calcaneum,cui vtique nunquam oportet nos nudam præbere plantam, ſed ſemper eſſe debemus calceati pedes in præparatione Euangelij: He doth obſerue our heele, to whom wee muſt not offer our ſelues barefoote,but ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpell of peace, &c. This I take to be the proper meaning of Chriſts heele.

3. Saint Hierome alſo giueth a good expoſition of this place: *Tradition.in Geneſ.tom.*4. Quia noſtri greſſus præpediuntur à colubro, dominus conteret Satanam ſub pedibus: Becauſe our goings are hindred by the Serpent,the Lord ſhall tread downe Sathan vnder our feete,&c. By our footſteps may be vnderſtood our ſinnes and infirmities which giue aduantage to the tentation of Sathan: and this expoſition is agreeable alſo to the Scripture, Pſalm.49.5. Why ſhould I feare, when, iniquitas calcaneorum circundabit me, the iniquitie of my heeles dooth compaſſe mee? And Iob.13.26.27. he calleth peccata adoleſcentiæ veſtigia pedum, the ſinnes of his youth the print of his heeles.In the firſt place the ſame Hebrue word in vſed,is the next the ſame ſenſe of the word is retained.

4. This place alſo may be expounded by the like, Pſal.89.51. Probro afficiunt veſtigia: They ſlaunder the footſteps of thine annoynted. Whereby is ſignified the continuall practiſe of Sathan and his miniſters, to ſlaunder the profeſſion of the Goſpell of Chriſt, whereby Chriſt is knowne and diſcerned in the world,as by the prints of his feete: All theſe expoſitions are ſound, and conſonant to the Scripture,and not much varying the one from the other: whether of theſe we take,this place maketh nothing for the collection enforced.

5. Or if we doe applie it to Chriſts perſon,why may not his whole humanitie be here comprehended,which is the inferiour part to his Godhead: and ſo this place may be expounded by that Exod.33.23. where Moſes ſaw poſteriora dei, the backe parts of God: Origen ſaith, Nouiſſima pars hominis pes: A mans foote is his laſt or hinder part, in 17.Matth. and ſo expoundeth this of Chriſts being in the fleſh, when Moſes ſaw him in the Mount. And Auguſtine likewiſe: Anteriora facies maieſtatis, qua deo æqualis, poſteriora vocantur, quia apparuit in poſtremo ſeculo: His foreparts are his face of maieſtie,wherein hee is equall to God: his backe parts,becauſe hee appeared in the end of the world, *lib.*2.*de Trinitat.c.*17. So then by Chriſts heele or back parts, his whole humanitie may be implied,which is but as his backe and meaner parts,in reſpect of his diuine Maieſtie.

6. And this ſenſe the text it ſelfe giueth,and the force of the ſimilitude: for like as that part is bitten of the Serpent,wherewith he is troden vpon; ſo Sathan aſſailed that part in Chriſt, wherewith he was ouercome: but he ouercame him not onely with his fleſh,but with the iuſtice and innocencie of his ſoule: as Chriſt ſaith, Ioh.14.30. The prince of this world commeth, and hath nought in me. And as Auguſtine ſaith: Chriſtus iuſtitia vicit diabolum non potentia: Chriſt ouercame the diuell with his iuſtice,not by his power, *lib.*13.*de Trinitat.cap.*17. And againe, Nec Chriſtus ei aliquid extorſit violento dominatu, ſed ſuperauit lege iuſtitiæ: Neither did Chriſt wreſt any thing from him by violent ſubduing,but ouercame him by the law of iuſtice, *de liber.arbit.lib.*3.*cap.*10. Wherefore as Chriſt by the innocencie of his ſoule,together with his holie and obedient fleſh ſubdued Sathan: ſo he ſeeketh to bite and vexe him in the ſame. Whether this text then,be vnderſtood of Chriſt or his members,or both,the argument propounded concludeth not.

2 Secondly,the Fathers of the law and the Prophets beleeued not onely the bodily death,but the ſpirituall and ſoule ſuffrings of Chriſt: as David prophecying of Chriſt, ſaith, Pſal.18.5. The ſorrowes of hell compaſſed me: but the Prophet Iſay of all other ſaith moſt plainly, Iſay.53.10. He ſhall make his ſoule an offring for ſinne: verſ.11. He ſhall ſee of the trauell of his ſoule,and ſhall be ſatisfied: and therefore as Auguſtine ſaith: Eadem fides & in illis,qui nondum nomine, ſed reipſa fuerunt Chriſtiani,& in iſtis,qui non ſolum ſunt, ſed vocantur: Moſes veteris teſtamenti miniſter, hæres noui: The ſame faith was in them,which not yet in name,but indeede were Chriſtians, and in theſe,which not only be, but are ſo called: Moſes was a miniſter of the old teſtament, but an heire of the new,&c. *contr.*2. *epiſtol.Pelag.*3.1.

3 Thirdly, 1. Chriſts ſacrifice conſiſting both of bodie and ſoule is but one entire ſacrifice: as in the holocauſt and burnt offring of the lawe there were diuers parts of the ſacrifice,yet but one whole ſacrifice. 2. Where the Apoſtle exhorteth that wee ſhould offer vp our bodies, θυσίαν ζῶσαν, a liuing ſacrifice,Rom.12.1. doth he meane our bodie without a ſoule? yet hee calleth it a ſacrifice, one,not many. 3. Whereas it is obiected, that the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, what one ſacrifice he meaneth, namely of his bodie, Hebr.10.10. verſ.19. By the blood of Ieſus wee may be bold to enter: verſ.20. He hath prepared a way by his fleſh. I anſwere: firſt, Chriſts bodie, fleſh and blood, are not all one, his fleſh and blood are diuers parts of his bodie: then as by theſe ſeuerall parts named by themſelues we vnderſtand the reſt; by blood, his bodie and fleſh; by fleſh, his blood and bodie: ſo what letteth, but that in theſe ſpeeches all other neceſſarie parts of his ſuffring may be comprehended? Secondly, the Apoſtle doth chiefly ſtand vpon the externall part of Chriſts ſuffring, as the offring of his bodie, ſhedding of his blood, becauſe it did more fitly anſwere to the blood of buls and goates, and the ſacrifice of beaſts, whereof the Apoſtle entreateth, chap.9.10. Thirdly, the Apoſtle alſo ſpeaketh in more general termes: Chriſt offered himſelfe, Heb.9.24. Chriſt was offered, verſ.28. If Chriſt, if himſelfe, how Chriſt without a ſoule, how himſelfe without a ſoule? If Chriſt then being both God and man, is but one, as Leo ſaith, Vnus atque idem in vtraque forma Chriſtus: One and the ſame Chriſt in both formes and natures, *epiſtol.*81. ſo likewiſe his bodie and ſoule being parts of the ſame nature, doe make but one ſacrifice.

*Argum.*3. 1. Chriſt neither taſted nor ſuffered the death of the ſoule, as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod anima fuit mortificatus Ieſus, quis audeat dicere cum mors animæ non ſit niſi peccatum? Who dare ſay that Chriſt was mortified in his ſoule, ſeeing the death of the ſoule is nothing but ſinne? therefore hee was mortified in the fleſh, quia ſecundum ſolam carnem mortuus, becauſe hee dyed onely in the fleſh, *epiſt.*99.

2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.1.7. *Wee haue redemption through his blood, euen forgiuenes of ſinnes: Feuard.p.*442.*conf.*15.*lin.*11. 1.Ioh.1.7. *The blood of Ieſus Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne, Feuard. p.*441.*conf.*13.*lin.*5. If the ſhedding of the blood of Chriſt be the iuſt and full redemption of all ſinnes, what neede the ſuffrings of his ſoule?

3. Chriſt ſuffered wrongfully, 1.Pet.3.18. *He ſuffered the iuſt for the vniuſt, Feuard.*448. But hee could not ſuffer the death of the ſoule wrongfully, becauſe it is Gods immediate action: Ergo, he dyed not in ſoule.

4. All Chriſts ſuffrings were voluntarie: Ioh.10.18. *No man taketh away my life, I lay it downe of my ſelfe, Feuard.p.*448.*conf.*10.*lin.*8. but the death of the ſoule hee did not willingly ſuffer, becauſe it is an alienation from God, which cannot be without ſinne.

5. Chriſt is the Lambe that was ſlaine, Apocal.5.9. *Feuard.p.*441.*conf.*13.*lin.*15. but his ſoule was not killed of the Iewes: Ergo, he was not crucified in ſoule, neither dyed any other death, beſide the death of the bodie, *Feuard.p.*440.*lin.*4.

6. The Prophet ſaith, The ſame ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall dye, Ezech.18.20. God in ſpirituall puniſhments, doth not puniſh one for another, *Bellarm.lib.2.de amiſſ.grat.c.*8.*arg.*5. therefore Chriſt was not ſpiritually puniſhed in his ſoule for vs.

1 Anſw. 1. We moſt willingly confeſſe, that Chriſt in Auguſtines ſenſe dyed not the death of the ſoule: we approue that ſentence of his: Mors domini noſtri non fuit animæ, ſed in carne ſola: mors noſtra non in carne ſola, ſed in anima; in anima propter peccatum, in carne propter pœnam peccati: ille vero, quia peccatum non fecit, nec habuit in anima, non eſt mortuus niſi in carne tantum: igitur ſimpla eius mors profuit duplæ noſtræ, &c. The death of our Lord was not in his ſoule, but in his fleſh only; our death is not in our fleſh onely, but in our ſoule alſo; in our ſoule becauſe of ſinne, in our fleſh for the puniſhment of ſinne: but he becauſe he did no ſinne, neither had any in his ſoule, died but in his fleſh onely, therefore his ſimple death was profitable to our double death, &c. *ſerm.*181.*c.*5. 2. But it followeth not, Chriſt dyed not in ſoule, Ergo, he ſuffered not in ſoule: or he dyed not this death of the ſoule by ſinne, or damnation; Ergo, hee cannot be ſaid any waies to haue dyed in ſoule. But I will forbeare to vſe this phraſe of Chriſts dying in ſoule, though it may haue a tolerable ſenſe, as I haue ſhewed before, reſp.ad 10.calumniam. Yet Auguſtine ſeemeth to me not to denie a ſenſe of death in Chriſts ſoule, his wordes are theſe: firſt, hauing affirmed Chriſtum non meruiſſe vt ignem gehennæ pateretur, quia hæc mors non conditionis eſt, ſed criminis: That Chriſt deſerued not the fire of hell, for this death is criminall, not conditionall. He then propoundeth this obiection: Sed inquies, mortem dei filius & in anima non pertulit, nec in maieſtate ſenſit: You will ſay, the ſonne of God, did he not ſuffer and feele death in the maieſtie of his ſoule? & ſenſit & pertulit, ſed participatione morbi alieni non proprietate vulneris ſui: He did both feele and beare it, but by the partaking of anothers diſeaſe, not by the propertie of any wound or infirmitie in himſelfe, *act.cum Felician.cap.*18. But whatſoeuer Auguſtines iudgement was herein, we ſimply denie the argument: for it followeth not, Chriſt dyed not in ſoule: Ergo, he ſuffered not in ſoule.

2 Secondly, 1. I haue ſhewed before how the Apoſtle is to bee vnderſtoode, when hee maketh mention of the blood of Chriſt: *part.*1.*reſp.ad argum.*1. that by one part the reſt are ſignified: for if blood be taken ſtrictly, then Chriſts fleſh is excluded, and beſide his blood, there iſſued out alſo water: all theſe were neceſſarie parts of Chriſts paſſion: the Apoſtle then ſo ſpeaketh of one part, as he doth not except or ſeclude the reſt. 2. It is vſuall in Scripture, by the fleſh, to comprehend the whole man not vnregenerate only, but regenerate: as Ambroſe interpreteth theſe words of Chriſt, The ſpirit is readie, the fleſh is weake, Matth.26.41. Vt in ſpiritu deum, in homine carnem ſignificaret: That he might ſignifie God in the ſpirit, man in the fleſh. But for more full anſwere I referre the reader to their place before remembred.

3 Thirdly, 1. concerning the death of the ſoule, which could not without iniurie be inflicted vpon Chriſt, I anſwere, that this queſtion is altogether impertinent, and the argument ſuperfluous: for we affirme not any ſuch death in the ſoule of Chriſt. 2. Yet we are bold to auouch, that God was the author of the afflictions of Chriſts ſoule: So the Prophet ſaith, Iſay.53.4. He was plagued and ſmitten of God: Act.2.23. He was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God. Yea euen the terrors and inward afflictions of Gods children proceede from God: Iob.6.4. The arrowes of God are in me, and the terrors of God fight againſt me. 3. Yet God is not vniuſt, neither iniurious, in giuing vnto his ſonne this cup to drinke: 1. Becauſe Chriſt willingly offered himſelfe to vndertake this puniſhment for vs: Pſal.40.7. Then ſaid I, Loe I come, I deſire to doe thy will O God. 2. Becauſe God layd vpon him the iniquitie of vs all, Iſay.53.6. he being the ſuretie for our ſinnes, was in iuſtice to ſatisfie the debt. 3. Becauſe God herein intended the redemption of mankinde, not hauing a pleaſure in the death of his ſonne; as Origen well ſaith of the tentation of Iob: Non delectabatur, vt Iob torqueretur, ſed vt diabolus vinceretur: God was not delighted, that Iob ſhould be tormented, but that Sathan ſhould be conquered, in 2.cap.Iob. 4. The ſame obiection may be made as well concerning Chriſts ſuffrings in bodie, for God alſo was the author of them: as where the Prophet ſaith, Smite the ſhepheard Zach.13.7. yet the Euangeliſt ſaith in Gods perſon, I will ſmite the ſhepheard, Matth.26.31. Euangeliſta auſus eſt Prophetæ verba ad dei transferre perſonam: The Euangeliſt is bold to referre the Prophets words to the perſon of God, Hieron.ad Pammach. Whether God were the author mediatly or immediatly in reſpect of iuſtice, there is no difference: the Iudge that decreeth vniuſt thinges, and the writer or executor thereof are alike guiltie of iniuſtice. Iſay.10.1. Woe vnto them that decree wicked things, and write grieuous things: wherefore if the ſuffrings of Chriſt in ſoule were vniuſt in reſpect of Gods decree, his ſuffrings in bodie ſhould be ſo likewiſe; which we confeſſe notwithſtanding in reſpect of the malice of Sathan, and the Iewes which procured them, and the innocencie of Chriſts perſon to haue bin moſt wrongfull and iniurious.

4 Fourthly, 1. ſuch a death of the ſoule, as bringeth with it a ſeparation from God, Chriſt neither ſuffered willingly, nor vnwillingly: we denie any ſuch death of ſoule to haue beene in Chriſt; and therefore all the obiections, which preſſe this abſurditie, are altogether impertinent. 2. Concerning ſuch paſſions in ſoule as we affirme Chriſt to haue endured, we anſwere as of the ſuffrings in his bodie; that he did beare them both willingly: for though in his humane and naturall deſire without ſinne, he wiſhed the paſſing of the cuppe, yet conforming his will vnto Gods, he was obedient and willing: this the Scripture teſtifieth, that Chriſt prayed, that the cuppe might paſſe, which ſheweth a will in him to haue eſcaped it: but yet he ſubmitteth himſelfe to his Fathers pleaſure: not as I will, but as thou wilt, Mat.26.39. Thus the fathers do note 2. wils to haue bin in Chriſt when he made this requeſt. Athanaſ. Humana voluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat paſſionem, diuina prompta erat: The humane wil for the infirmity of the fleſh, refuſed the paſſion; the diuine wil was ready: ex epiſt. Agathon.ad Conſt. Origen: Cæpit trepidare, & mæſtus eſſe non quia trepidauit deitas ſed quia carnis infirmitatem oſtendit: He began to feare and to be ſad, not that his deity trembled, but becauſe he ſhewed the infirmity of his fleſh: lib.3.in Iob. The Latine fathers ſpeake more diſtinctly: Hieron. in 14. Marc. Hic oſtendit humanã voluntatẽ quæ propter infirmitatẽ carnis recuſat paſſionem, & diuinã, quæ prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationẽ: Here he ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmitie of the fleſh refuſeth the paſſion; and a diuine, which was ready to fulfil the diſpenſation. Ambroſ. Scias vitã in voluntate eſſe hominis, quia mortem timemus; paſſionem autem Chriſti in voluntate diuina, vt pateretur pro nobis: Know, that life is in the deſire and wil of man, becauſe we feare death; but the paſſiō of Chriſt in the diuine wil, that he might ſuffer for vs, lib.2.de fid.c.3. Thus we ſee, that although Chriſt would not die in his humane infirmity, yet he was moſt willing in his obedient conformity. Peter Lombard.lib.3.diſt.17.b. vſeth to this purpoſe a good diſtinction, which ſafely may be receiued: that as there is in man duplex affectus, rationis & ſenſus; a double affection, or deſire of ſenſe and reaſon; ſo likewiſe was there in Chriſt, vt mentis affectu vellet mori: He was willing to die in the affection of his mind, ſenſualitatis affectu nollet; but in his ſenſual affection vnwilling, as he ſheweth out of Auguſtine in the example of Peter, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Ioh 21.18. When thou art old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, & another ſhal gird thee & lead thee whither thou woldeſt not: whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth, Ad illam moleſtiam nolens venit, ſed volens eam vicit: Peter came vnwillingly to this trouble, but he willingly ouercame it: and this affection not to be willing to die, is ſo naturall, vt eum Petro nec ſenectus abſtulerit: that it left not Peter in his old age: the like affection and deſire he ſheweth to haue beene in Chriſt, when he ſaid, Let this cup paſſe, &c.

Fiftly, 1. the argument followeth not, the Iewes crucified not Chriſts ſoule: Ergo, he was not crucified, or did not ſuffer in ſoule: for the Iewes onely crucified the externall fleſh of Chriſt: but God gaue him the cup of inward ſorrow to drinke: and therefore he prayeth his Father, that the cup might paſſe, hee prayeth to him to remoue it, that had prepared it; Rom.8.32. God is ſaid to haue giuen his owne ſonne to death. Auguſtine: Ille quanti te æſtimat vide, qui proprio filio non pepercit: See how much he eſteemed thee, who ſpared not his owne Sonne: *in Pſal.*143. 2. This argument may be retorted: for if Chriſt ſuffered no more, then the Iewes inflicted vpon him; then he ſuffered nothing at all in ſoule, neyther by compaſſion nor commiſeration, which is on the contrary part aſſirmed.

6. Sixtly, 1. the Prophet ſpeaketh not only of ſpirituall, but of corporal puniſhments, that this is the perpetuall rule of Gods iuſtice, that one ſhall not be puniſhed any way for anothers ſinnes: for ſo was the Prouerbe among the Iewes; Our fathers haue eaten ſowre grapes, and our teeth are ſet on edge, Ezech.18.2. They complaine not of ſpirituall and eternall puniſhment, but of thoſe outward calamities, which they ſuffered: ſo then, neyther are children puniſhed temporally for their parents ſinnes, vnleſſe they continue in the ſame; for then God will viſite the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them, that hate him, as it is in the ſecond commaundement; if both the fathers and children be alike hateres of God: So Auguſtine ſaith, Malorum imitatio facit, vt non ſolum ſua, ſed eorum quos imitantur, merita ſortiantur: The imitating of the euill, cauſeth that they onely are not partakers of their owne, but of their deſerts, whom they imitate, *in Pſal.*108. Good children of wicked parents, if they be chaſticed, it is not a iudgement for their fathers ſins, to puniſh them, but Gods louing correction to admoniſh them. In this ſenſe then, Chriſt who needed not by any correction to be admoniſhed, ſhould not for vs, no not corporally haue beene puniſhed.

2. The ſame ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall die: this rule alſo holdeth in Chriſt, for his ſoule died not: the ſuffrings of ſoule we admit, but not euerlaſting death, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh: for that death of the ſoule which followeth the ſinne of the ſoule, is euerlaſting death; but Chriſts ſoule as it was free from ſinne, ſo was it from euerlaſting death, or the feare thereof. Thus Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Mortibus corporum legimus quoſdam mortuos propter non ſua, ſed aliena peccata, vbi magis eſt in dolore cordis plaga viuentium, quàm in reſolutione carnis pœna morientium: animarum verò morte alius pro alio non plectitur: By the death of the body we reade that ſome haue died, not for their owne but others ſinnes, where it was rather a plague of the liuing in the griefe of their heart, then a puniſhment of the dead in the reſolution of their fleſh, but in the death of the ſoule none dieth for another: *cont. aduerſ. leg. lib.*1.*c.*16. This death of the ſoule then Chriſt died not.

3. The Prophet alſo ſaith, The ſonne ſhall not beare the iniquitie of his father, &c. but euery man ſhall beare his owne iniquitie: who ſeeth not, that the Prophet maketh exception of the perſon of the Mediator: for the Scripture teſtifieth of him, that he bare our iniquities, Iſay.53.11. therefore as he bare our ſinnes in himſelfe, ſo alſo in Gods iuſtice, he was to beare the puniſhment for the ſame: then according to this rule, the ſame ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall dye: ſo becauſe man had ſinned, the man Chriſt taking vpon him the ſinnes of mankind, was puniſhed: thus Origen writeth according to the Scriptures; Chriſtus ſine dubio, pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt without doubt, for ſinne, which he tooke of vs, becauſe he bare our ſins, did offer vp in ſacrifice his vndefiled fleſh, *hom.*3.in Leuitic. As Chriſt then tooke vpon him our ſinnes; ſo he alſo anſwered the puniſhment.

*Argum.*4. The Scripture ſheweth euidently, that our ſoules are redeemed by Chriſtes blood, 1.Iohn 1.7. *The blood of Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne: Feuard.p.*441.*conf.*13.*lin.*5. the ſoule is cleanſed as well as the bodie, Heb.9.14. *The blood of Chriſt doth purge our conſcience from dead works. Feuard.pag.*442.*conf.*16.*lin.*8. the conſcience is a member of the ſoule, Reuel.5.9. Thou haſt redeemed vs by thy blood, ſay the bleſſed Saints in heauen, whoſe bodies remaine in the earth: *Feuard. p.*441.*conf.*13.*lin.*13.

Anſw. 1. All this being admitted, that our ſoules are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, we feare not the conſequent, as preſently followeth to be ſhewed; the places of Scripture alleaged directly proue the ſame; ſauing that the collection out of the laſt place may be excepted againſt: for thoſe 24. Elders do not deſcribe the ſtate of the Saints in heauen, but repreſent the Church militant on earth, whoſe conuerſation notwithſtanding is in heauen: this firſt the text giueth, 1. verſ. 10. We ſhall raigne on the earth, that is, by their faith and vertue, it is not ſaid in heauen. 2. They are ſaid to be Kings and Prieſts; which chap.1. verſ.16. is expounded of the liuing. 3. And indeed the office of our ſpirituall Prieſthood in preſenting our prayers vnto God, is more fit and proper for this life, then for the next; in the which, though wee denie not, but the Saints doe ſing continually to the prayſe of God, as the Angels do, Apocal.4.8. and do make their requeſts vnto God, for the accompliſhing of his Kingdome, Apocal.6:10. yet the prayer of fayth, which is the ſpeciall obiect of our ſpirituall Prieſthood, Iam.5.15. is onely incident to this life, for the which faith onely ſerueth. 3. And indeed verſ.9. they ſeeme to ſpeake of the whole number of the elect, redeemed out of euery kinred and people.

The fathers alſo thus expound this place, of the faithfull in earth: Beda vpon the 10.verſ. Here is more plainely declared, that the beaſtes and Elders are the Church, which is redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and gathered of the nations. Alſo hee ſheweth in what heauen they are, ſaying: They ſhall raigne vpon the earth. Haymo ſaith, all the Elect are Kings, becauſe they ſuffer not the tyrannie of vices to riſe vp in themſelues,&c. while they do this by the law of vertue, they raigne as it were vpon the earth.

2. We graunt, that our ſoules are redeemed by Chriſts blood, but it doth not follow, that they are not redeemed by his ſoule alſo, and therefore that his ſuffring in ſoule ſhould be ſuperfluous: for by the ſame reaſon you might conclude againſt Chriſts fleſh: our ſoules and bodies are redeemed by Chriſts blood: Ergo, not by his fleſh: and ye may as well inferre out of theſe and ſuch like places, that Chriſt had no ſoule, as that hee ſuffered not in ſoule, becauſe the Apoſtles ſtill make mention of blood.

3. Cyrill ſaith, Carnem ſuam in redemptionis pretium pro omnium carne dependit; & animam ſuam ſimiliter pro omnium anima in redemptionis pretium conſtituit: Chriſt yeelded his fleſh the price of redemption for our fleſh, and his ſoule the price of redemption for our ſoule, de rect. fid. ad Theodoſ. Cyrill ſpeaketh not of the ſympathie of the ſoule of Chriſt, with his ſuffring fleſh, for all this is but caro pro carne, his fleſh giuen for our fleſh: but he inſinuateth ſuch proper paſſions of the ſoule, as are the price of redemption for our ſoules: he ſpeaketh of the price of redemption in the ſoule, and in the fleſh, not of one and the ſame price, and therefore not of one kind of paſſions: though in effect and in the whole all is but one price and one redemption, yet there are diuers partes and members of it.

4. We ſay then, that though in the vſe and application of Chriſts ſacrifice we ſpeake diſtinctly, that Chriſts ſoule was giuen for our ſoule, his fleſh for our fleſh, as Cyrill ſaith; thereby to ſet forth the proportion of Gods iuſtice, which muſt be ſatisfied with the price both of body & ſoule, for the redemption of our body and ſoule: yet we do not ſeuer nor deuide the power and vertue of Chriſts ſacrifice, but aſcribe the redemption of our bodie and ſoule ioyntly and equally to the ſacrifice of his body and ſoule. After the like maner in the Euchariſt, by way of application we ſeuerally and diſtinctly receiue the ſignes and pledges of Chriſts body and blood, namely the conſecrated bread and wine, the vertue notwithſtanding whereof is one and the ſame.

THE CONTRARIE PART CONFIRMED, THAT Chriſt ſuffered properly and immediatly in his ſoule, and not by way of compaſſion or fellow-feeling onely with his body.

Argum. 1. That which Chriſt aſſumed or tooke of our nature, he aſſumed to this end, to ſuffer in it, and by ſuffering to ſaue and redeeme it.

But he tooke the whole nature of man, both bodie and ſoule: Ergo, he ſuffered in both: it will be here anſwered, that his ſoule ſuffered but by way of compaſſion and ſympathie onely with his bodie, Bellarm. Feuard. vbi ſupra.

Contra. This naturall or compaſſionate ſuffering of Chriſts ſoule, did not properly make to that part of our redemption, which was to be performed by his ſoule, neither was abſolutely neceſſarie to make Chriſts fleſh to haue life and ſenſe: ſeeing the deitie of Chriſt could haue giuen life, ſenſe and feeling to the fleſh, in ſtead of a ſoule: as Felicianus the Arrian obiected to Auguſtine, Cur filij Dei habitus inſtar animæ communis animam eius non animaret: Why might not the habite or forme of the ſonne of God, inſteed of a common ſoule animate or quicken his fleſh? Cont. Felician. c. 13.

1. It is not here affirmed, that the compaſſion of the ſoule with the bodie, did not properly belong to our redemption ſimplie, but to that redemption which was to be wrought by the ſoule.

2. And by way of ſuppoſition, becauſe it was not abſolutely neceſſarie, that the ſoule ſhould be giuen to the bodie onely, to giue life and ſenſe vnto it: becauſe as the Arrians obiected Chriſts deitie, might haue been inſteede of the ſoule: and we ſee that there may be ſenſe and feeling in the bodie, without a reaſonable ſoule: the motion and feeling belongeth to the ſenſitiue facultie, not to the intellectuall part: And to this purpoſe Iodocus Clitouæus, a writer of their own vſeth this diſtinction, that, Anima non fuit medium neceſſitatis, ſed congruitatis vniens deitatem cum carne: That Chriſts ſoule was not a meane of neceſſitie, but only of congruitie, to vnite the Godhead with the fleſh: Enarrat. in lib. 3. de fid. Damaſc. c. 27.

I will further confirme and ratifie our argument thus. Firſt, the aſſumption is euident, and need no proofe, that Chriſt tooke vpon him both our ſoule and bodie: the Apoſtle ſaith, In all things it became him to be like vnto vs, Hebr. 2. 17. Therefore hee had both bodie and ſoule, as we haue. Secondly, concerning the propoſition, That what Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke it, by ſuffering in it properly, and immediatly to redeeme vs: firſt, it is confirmed by Scripture, Hebr. 2. 14. Chriſt tooke part with them, that he might deſtroy through death, him that had power of death,&c. verſ. 15. That he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death, were all their life time ſubiect to bondage: hence I reaſon thus, that, wherein Chriſt deliuered vs, he tooke part with vs in, he deliuered vs from feare of death: Ergo, he did therein communicate with vs: but this feare was the proper and immediate paſſion of the ſoule, namely the feare of death, and Gods anger. And the text giueth this ſenſe: becauſe the feare of this death kept them in bondage: but the feare onely of the bodily death doth not bring vs into ſuch bondage: ſo is it expounded in the ſong of Zacharie, Luk. 1.74. That we being deliuered from the hand of our enemies ſhould ſerue him without feare: this then is a ſpirituall feare, from the which Chriſt did deliuer vs: Ergo, he did communicate with vs in this feare: for the Apoſtle ſaith: In that, wherein he ſuffered and was tempted, he is able to ſuccour vs, verſ. 18.

Obiect. If Chriſt could deliuer vs from nothing, which he ſuffered not, then he doth not deliuer vs from eternall death, which he ſuffered not.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of Chriſts diuine power, and abſolute abilitie, but of the poſſibilitie of his condition: that wherein he ſuffered, he is able to ſuccour vs by the feeling of our infirmities, wherewith he was touched, and by the experience which he had in his owne fleſh: ſo the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, Hebr. 4.5. We haue not a prieſt that could not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Secondly, though Chriſt neither felt nor feared euerlaſting death, yet he both felt and feared his Fathers wrath and diſpleaſure that cauſeth it: and ſo he was not altogether without experience and feeling of our infirmities in that behalfe.

Obiect. If the feare that Chriſt deliuered vs from, be the feare of euerlaſting damnation: this Chriſt neuer feared: and therefore he did not therein partake with vs.

Anſw. It is not neceſſarie, that Chriſt ſhould partake with vs in euery part and ſpeciall kinde of our infirmities, and in the ſame manner: but it was ſufficient that he taſted of them in ſuch meaſure and degree, as became the dignitie of his perſon, and condition, being without ſinne: and ſo we affirme, that though he feared not euerlaſting death actually in himſelfe, yet he feared and felt the wrath of God, which ſtriketh into vs a feare of damnation.

4. The Fathers alſo doe thus ſtrengthen our argument. Auguſt. Si totus homo periit, totus ſaluatore indiguit, totum ergo hominem ſuſcepit Chriſtus, &c. Si animam non ſuſcepiſſet, anima pœnæ addicta ſine ſpe veniæ maneret: If whole man periſhed, whole man needed a Sauiour, Chriſt therefore tooke whole man, bodie and ſoule: if he had not taken our ſoule, the ſoule ſhould remaine addict to puniſhment without hope of pardon, cont. Felician. c. 13. By the ſame reaſon Chriſt muſt alſo ſuffer properlie in ſoule, becauſe not by taking our ſoule, but by ſatisfying in his ſoule, our ſoule is deliuered.

Damaſcene: πάντα τοίνυν πάθη ἀνέλαβε, ἵνα πάντα ἁγιάσῃ: He tooke all our paſſions or affections, to ſanctifie them all in himſelfe: but Chriſt was ſanctified and conſecrate by his death, Hebr. 5.9. and ſo doth hee conſecrate vs, Hebr. 10. 14. With one offering hath hee conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified: Ergo, by his offering of our ſoule, and ſuffering in our ſoule, hath he conſecrated our ſoule and affections.

Ambroſe: Suſcepit affectum meum, vt emendaret: He tooke my affection to amend it, &c. Now he hath amended it, in that he conſecrated it by his offring, Heb. 10.14. Illud pro nobis ſuſcepit, quod in nobis amplius periclitabatur: He hath taken that for vs, which was moſt in danger in vs, &c. that is, our ſoule, as he expoundeth it, de incarnat. c. 7. But Chriſt hath not otherwiſe deliuered vs from the danger, but by entring into the danger for vs: this danger of the ſoule is the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Argum. 2. Whereby Adam, and wee euer ſince do moſt properly commit ſinne, by the ſame hath Chriſt the ſecond Adam made ſatisfaction properly for our ſinne: but Adam and wee all do properly commit ſinne in our ſoules, our bodies being but the inſtruments: Ergo, Chriſt by and in his ſoule hath properly made ſatisfaction.

Firſt, 1. the propoſition is confirmed by the Apoſtle, Rom. 5.19. As by one mans diſobedience we are made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one, many ſhall be made righteous: Chriſt then ſatisfied for vs by the ſame wherein Adam diſobeyed, and Chriſt obeyed, that is in his ſoule: for obedience belongeth to the ſoule, as Agatho epiſt. ad Conſtantin. vpon theſe wordes, Philip. 2.8. He became obedient vnto death: Quis non intelligat obedientiam humanæ competere voluntati: Who doth not vnderſtand, that obedience doth belong to the humane will?

2r It will be obiected, that Chriſt ſatisfied onely by his bodily death, Feuard. p. 400. lin. 4. and therfore not by his ſoule, becauſe it dieth not: I anſwere, al Chriſts painful labors in his life, his hunger, faſting, tentations, whippings, mockings, were meritorious and ſatisfactory for our ſins: without death indeed the ſatisfactory ſacrifice was not accompliſhed, but not only by the very paſſion of death; for then the reſt ſhould haue beene ſuperfluous: and this to be the Apoſtles meaning, appeareth by the verſe following, verſ. 16. Where a teſtament is, there muſt be the death, &c. He ſheweth onely a neceſſitie of death, that without death the Sacrifice was not perfected.

3. That there is a kind of dying in the ſoule, whē it is pierced with griefe, beſide the death of the ſoule either by ſin or damnation, is not diſagreeing to the ſcriptures: Simeon ſaith to Mary, Luk. 2.

verſ.35. A ſword ſhall pierce through thy ſoule: As then the bodie dieth, being pierced with a ſword; ſo the ſoule may be ſaid to die or languiſh, when it is pierced with griefe: what elſe is crucifying, but dying? but the ſoule is ſaid to be crucified, as S. Paul ſaith, Galath.6.14. I am crucified to the world, when as yet his bodie was aliue: So Ambroſe doubteth not to ſay, Mens mea in Chriſto crucifixa eſt: My ſoule was crucified in Chriſt, lib.5.in Luc. that is, Chriſt in his ſoule was crucified: which he calleth our ſoule, becauſe he did aſſume our ſoule and bodie: as elſewhere he ſaith, Mea eſt voluntas, quam ſuam dixit, mea eſt triſtitia quam meo ſuſcepit affectu: it is my will, which he calleth his, it is my heauineſſe, which he tooke with my affections, *lib.2.de fid.c.*3. Yet was it properly and perſonally Chriſts ſoule and will, but ours by communitie of nature.

Secondly, for the aſſumption, 1. howſoeuer it be admitted, that the bodie is the inſtrument of 2 the ſoule, both in ſinning and ſuffring, yet the concluſion is this; that becauſe ſinne is committed in the ſoule principally and properly, therefore the ſatisfaction muſt be made in the ſoule principally and properly: if this concluſion be graunted, we haue that we would: for the bodily paines affecting the ſoule, are not the proper paſſions of the ſoule; neither is the ſoule ſaid to ſuffer properly, when the bodie ſuffreth, but by way of compaſſion and conſent. 2. Wee graunt, that in the proper and immediate ſuffrings of the ſoule, the bodie alſo is affected: as when Chriſt was in his agonie in the garden, his whole bodie was therewith ſtirred and moued, that it did ſweat drops of blood: but it is one thing, when the griefe beginneth immediatly in the ſoule, and ſo affecteth the bodie, and when the paine is firſt inflicted vpon the bodie, and ſo worketh vpon the ſoule: there the ſoule ſuffreth properly and principally, of which ſuffrings wee ſpeake; here neither properly nor principally, which is not the thing in queſtion. 3. It is not the reaſonable ſoule, that is affected with the bodie; for it is a ground in Philoſophie, (that the ſoule ſuffreth not) but onely the ſenſitiue part: but the griefe that we ſpeake of, which is ſatisfactorie for ſinne, muſt be in the very reaſonable ſoule, where ſinne taketh beginning: and ſo Ambroſe ſaith, vpon theſe wordes of Chriſt, My ſoule is heauie to death: Ad rationabilis aſſumptionem animæ, & naturæ humanæ refertur affectum: It is referred to the aſſumption of the reaſonable ſoule, and humane affection, de incarnat.cap.7.

2. We confeſſe, that in the tranſgreſſion, both Adams ſoule and bodie did properly ſinne: yet not in euery act of the tranſgreſſion: for Adam committed ſome ſins, wherein the bodie was no inſtrument; as namely pride and infidelitie: as Ambroſe ſaith, Non Euam cibus flexerat, non mandatorum deſtituerat obliuio, ſed promiſſi honoris ambitio illecebroſa decepit: The meat did not turne Eue, nor the obliuion of the commandements did not ouertake her, but the ambitious deſire of the honor, which was promiſed, deceiued her, lib.4.in Luc. Againe, Peccatum Adæ non longè eſt ab idololatria, præuaricatus eſt, ſe hominem putans Deum: The ſin of Adam was not far from Idolatrie, he ſinned, thinking that he being man, might be God: in 13.Luc. Theſe ſins of pride and infidelitie began in the ſoule, and had their determination there: in the committing of thoſe ſinnes, the bodie had no part: indeed with the eare they heard the ſuggeſtion of Sathan, but it was no ſinne, till in their mind they had conſented vnto it: wherefore ſeeing the firſt ſinne committed was properly and wholly in the ſoule, for the ſame the ſoule muſt properly and wholy ſatisfie.

3. Then, becauſe ſinne tooke beginning from Adams ſoule, the ſatisfaction alſo muſt begin in Chriſts ſoule: as Ambroſe ſaith, Incipio in Chriſto vincere, vnde in Adam victus ſum: I beginne there to win in Chriſt, where in Adam I was ouercome, lib.4.in Luc. then it followeth, that the ſuffrings of Chriſts ſoule tooke beginning there, and were not deriued by ſympathie from the ſtripes and payne of the bodie. We infer then that therefore Chriſts ſoule had proper and immediate ſufferings, beſide thoſe which proceeded from the ſympathie with the bodie, and all Chriſts ſuffrings were ſatisfactorie: Ergo Chriſt, did ſatisfie for our ſinnes properly and immediatly in his ſoule.

*Argum.*3. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, 53.10. Hee ſhall make his ſoule an offring for ſinne: Ergo, Chriſt offered his ſoule, as well as his bodie. Againe, our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Matth.26.38. My ſoule is very heauie vnto death. It was not the bodily death, which Chriſt feared; for then he ſhould haue beene weaker then many Martyrs: therefore his ſoule was verily and properly ſtricken with heauineſſe, not with the beholding of the bodily torments onely.

Anſw. 1. It will be here anſwered, that ſoule in the Prophet is taken for life; as Iohn 10.17. I lay downe my ſoule, that is life, *Feuard. p.*440.*conf.*10.*lin.*8.

2. Chriſt, though he feare death, is not weaker then the Martyrs: for they are ridde from feare, becauſe God doth miniſter greater comfort vnto them: Sed Chriſtus timuit, quia voluit, Chriſt did not feare of neceſſitie, but willingly, for it was in his power not to haue feared: And ſo Auguſtine ſaith, Eum non infirmitate, ſed poteſtate turbatum: That Chriſt was troubled not through infirmities but by his omnipotencie and power, *Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.*3.*lib.*4.*c.*8.

Contra. 1. That, anima, ſoule is taken for life we graunt; as Pſal.16.10. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule, or life in graue, &c. And Iob.33.22. His ſoule draweth to the graue, and his life to the buriers, yet by this place of the Prophet it muſt be vnderſtood properly for ſoule: 1. as it may appeare by the next verſ.11. He ſhall ſee of the trauaile of his ſoule, and be ſatisfied. Here the ſoule muſt bee vnderſtood properly, and the trauaile of Chriſts ſoule is not the inſtruction of his life, but his ſuffring vpon the croſſe, as it followeth, he ſhall beare their iniquities: this was the trauaile of his ſoule vpon the croſſe in bearing our iniquities. Againe, he ſhall be ſatisfied, which was fulfilled, when hee ſaid, conſummatum eſt, it is finiſhed; before his death he was not ſatisfied, but longed continually for the finiſhing of our redemption vpon the croſſe: Luk.12.50. I muſt be baptized with a baptiſme, and how am I grieued, till it be ended? 2. The Prophet alſo maketh immediate mention of Chriſts knowledge: verſ.11. By his knowledge he ſhall iuſtifie many: but knowledge is an adiunct properly of the ſoule, not of the life. 3. Verſ.11. He ſhall beare their iniquities: verſ.12. He bare the ſinnes of many: this was not onely in his bodie, but in his ſoule; as Saint Peter expoundeth, He himſelfe bare our ſinnes in his bodie, 1.Pet.2.24. that is, his ſoule bare our ſinnes in his bodie.

2 1. Whereas Auguſtine ſaith, He was not troubled through infirmitie: hee expoundeth that place 11.33. Chriſt ἐτάραξεν ἑαυτὸν, troubled or ſtirred himſelfe when hee came to Lazarus graue, that is, was moued in compaſſion toward him: there is great difference betweene that trouble of Chriſts ſoule, and this heauines; there he ſtirred himſelfe to compaſſion, here hee is ſtirred of God; that paſſion proceeded of his pitie and loue vnto man, this is cauſed by the feare and expectation of Gods wrath. There are paſſions ordinarie and naturall, as of loue, pitie, which the heart raiſeth, and againe alayeth; there are paſſions extraordinarie and beyond nature, as when God caſteth darts and terrors into the ſoule, Iob.6.4. and theſe the heart hath no power of: wherefore Auguſtines ſentence cannot be applied to this agonie of Chriſt.

2. Or it is true which Auguſtine ſaith, euen of theſe extraordinarie paſſions of Chriſt, which ſhewed not his humane infirmitie onely, but his diuine power, in that he ſubdued theſe paſſions of his humane nature, and ſubiected them to the will of his father: ſo that as Damaſcene well ſaith, *lib.3. de fid.c.*20. Our affections were in Chriſt two wayes, κατὰ φύσιν, ὑπὲρ φύσιν, according to nature, and aboue nature: naturally he deſired the cup might paſſe; ſupernaturally hee was contented with his fathers will.

3. That Chriſt procured this ſorrow to himſelfe, is to make him acceſſarie to his owne death: his humane will was to haue the cup paſſe; how then is it true, timuit, quia voluit, he feared, becauſe he was willing to feare? he feared, becauſe it was proper to our humane nature to feare, which he tooke, as Auguſtine himſelfe ſaith: Ex quo homo, ex hoc & infirmus; ex quo infirmus, ex hoc & orans: As he was man, he was weake; as he was weake, he prayed, Pſal.29. enarrat.2. And if he had not feared and been perplexed indeeede, what neede the Angell to haue been ſent to comfort him? Luk.22.43. Wherefore as Ambroſe well ſaith: Scias vitam eſſe in voluntate hominis, quia timebat pati, paſſionem in voluntate diuina, &c. Know that life was in his humane deſire, becauſe hee feared to ſuffer, but death in the heauenly will to ſuffer for vs, *lib.2. de fid.c.*3. Wherefore notwithſtanding any thing alleaged by Bellarmine, there yet appeareth no difference betweene the feare of Chriſt and his members, nor any prerogatiue in the head aboue the members, if Chriſt had feared onelie the death of the bodie. See before for a more full anſwere, part.2. argum.2. replicat. ad Bellar.

*Argum.*4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Philip.2.7. Chriſtus ἐκένωσε, exinaniuit, Chriſt did emptie or euacuate himſelfe: And as Tertullian expoundeth contra Marcion. lib.5. exhauſit, he drew out himſelfe, or was exhauſt: which is agreeable to the propheſie of Daniel.9.26. Meſſias ſhall haue nothing. Hence wee conclude, that if Chriſt were exhauſt vpon the croſſe, if nothing was left him, that hee ſuffred in body and ſoule, that there was no part within or without free from the croſſe, but all was emptied and powred out for our redemption.

Againe, Heb.9.14. Chriſt through the eternall ſpirit offered himſelfe to God: whatſoeuer was in Chriſt, did either offer, or was offered, his eternall ſpirit onely did offer: Ergo, his whole humane nature both bodie and ſoule was offered. Thus Origen witneſſeth in theſe wordes, Vide quomodo verus pontifex Ieſus Chriſtus adſumpto batillo carnis humanæ, & ſuppoſito igni altaris, anima ſine dubio illa magnifica, cum qua natus eſt in carne, adiecto etiam incenſo, qui eſt ſpiritus immaculatus, medius inter viuos & mortuos ſtetit, &c. See how our true prieſt Ieſus Chriſt taking the cenſor of his humane fleſh, putting to the fire of the altar, that is, his magnificent ſoule, wherewith he was borne in the fleſh, and adding incenſe, that is, an immaculate ſpirit, ſtoode in the middeſt betweene the liuing and the dead, Hom.9. in Leuitic. He maketh Chriſts ſoule a part of the ſacrifice.

*Argum.*5. Chriſts loue vnto man in ſuffring for him, was in higheſt degree and greateſt meaſure, that could be: as the Lord ſaith, Iſay.5.4. What could I haue done any more for my vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? But if Chriſt had giuen his bodie onely, and not his ſoule for vs, hee had not done for vs all hee could, and ſo his loue ſhould greatly be empayred, and diminiſhed: Ergo, hee gaue his ſoule alſo together with his bodie to be the full price of our redemption.

1. It will be anſwered, that Chriſt ſaith, Iohn.15.13. Greater loue hath no man than this, when one layeth downe his life for his friends, Bellarm. lib.1. de baptiſ. cap.6. And the Apoſtle ſaith, God commended his loue toward vs, that when we were ſinners, Chriſt dyed for vs, Rom.5.7. Bellarm. lib.4. de Chriſt. anima, *ma,cap.*8.*argum.*1. Chriſts loue is ſet forth in his death : A greater loue there cannot be than this : *Ergo,*his ſoule ſuffered not,for that ſhould haue been a greater loue.

2. Chriſt was the more beloued of God,for giuing his life for vs : Ioh.10. *Therefore doth my father loue me, Feuard.p.*470.*conf.*3. Then conſequently hee did not loſe his fathers loue,in giuing his ſoule for vs,and bearing his fathers wrath.

1 Contra. 1. If that ſentence of Chriſt be applied ſtrictly to himſelfe,this ſenſe cannot hold : for firſt Chriſt dyed for his enemies,Rom.5.10.therefore this is not ſimply the greateſt loue for a man to dye for his friends : it is a greater loue for one to dye for his enemies. Againe, Moſes wiſhed to be raſed out of the booke of life, Exod.34. Paul to be accurſed for the Iewes ſake, Rom.9.3. As Hierome ſaith, Pro charitate Chriſti nolit habere Chriſtum : For the loue of Chriſt hee will not haue Chriſt, *Algaſ.qu.*9. This was a greater loue,than to lay downe the bodily life onely : but a greater loue could not be in the members than in Chriſt.

2. The text then muſt firſt be vnderſtood of that kinde of loue, which was knowne and practiſed among men : ſome man might giue his life for his friend ; but it was not to be found among men,for one to dye for his enemies ; nay the Apoſtle ſaith,*doubtleſſe one will ſcarce dye for a righteous man,*Rom.5.7.much leſſe for a wicked man : but this loue Chriſt hath farre exceeded, in that hee dyed for vs being ſinners,and his enemies,as the Apoſtle there ſheweth. Secondly,by *anima,*ψυχὴ, life or ſoule in this place, if it be applied to Chriſt, it is not neceſſarie to vnderſtand the bodily life onely,but the whole ſtate of man : as where Matthew ſaith,chap.16.26. What would it profit a man to winne the whole world,and loſe (animam) his ſoule or life ? Saint Luke hath , If hee loſe himſelfe, Luk.9.25.ſo that a mans ſoule or life,is taken for himſelfe, that is the whole man. So, where Saint Iohn ſaith,that *Chriſt layd downe his life for vs,*1.Ioh.3.16. Saint Paul writeth thus,*he hath loued vs, and giuen himſelfe for vs,*Epheſ.5.2. Thirdly, what reaſon is there,that anima, properly ſignifying the ſoule, ſhould be taken for the bodie? which interpretation of the word, Bellarmine refuſeth and condemneth as coacted : Act.2.27. *Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in graue,Bellarm.lib.*4.*de Chriſt. anim.c.*12.*loc.*4.

3. 1. S.Paul ſaith, that Gods loue is commended herein,that hee dyed for vs, that is,as Saint Iohn ſaith, Herein wee haue perceiued loue, that Chriſt dyed for vs, 1.Ioh.3.16. And chap.4.9. In this ἐφανερώθη,appeared, or was made manifeſt Gods loue toward vs : So that indeede by Chriſts bodily death, being conſpicuous and viſible (his other ſuffrings being inuiſible and not apparant) the loue of Chriſt was made manifeſt. 2. By the death of Chriſt all other concurrents and adiuncts of his croſſe are ſignified,his ſtripes,rebukes,blood,ſorrow,griefe,and whatſoeuer concurred either in his bodie or ſoule appertaining to,or accompanying his death : for by all theſe the loue of Chriſt was expreſſed.

2 Secondly, 1. neither doe we affirme,that Chriſt loſt his fathers loue or fauour, by entring into that agonie : Iob, when hee complained in the anguiſh of his ſoule, that God was his enemie, Iob.30.21. and Dauid when he ſayd, *I am caſt out of thy ſight,*Pſal.31.22. had they then loſt Gods fauour? 2. Nay,this trauaile and labour of Chriſts ſoule was moſt acceptable vnto God, Iſay.53. verſ.12. Therefore I will giue him a portion with the great, becauſe hee hath powred out his ſoule vnto death,&c. and bare the ſinnes of many.

Thirdly,we ſee then notwithſtanding theſe doubts and obiections, that the force of this argument remaineth inuiolable ; that the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule together with his body,doth more fully and amply commend and ſet forth vnto vs the loue of God,ſeeing now,as the Prophet ſaith, he could not doe any thing more for vs, which he had not done : So I conclude with that ſaying of *Ambroſe, in Luc.c.*22. Minus contulerat,ſi meum non ſuſcepiſſet affectum, debuit dolorem ſuſcipere,vt triſtitiam vinceret,non excluderet : He had beſtowed but little,if he had not taken mine affection : hee ought to take my ſorrow,to ouercome my heauines,and not to exclude it:

Beſide the teſtimonies of the Fathers,diſperſedly alleaged before in our ſeuerall arguments and anſweres,theſe alſo doe witneſſe with vs for the ſuffring of Chriſt both in ſoule and bodie.

Ambroſe : Chriſtus ex nobis ſuſcepit,quod proprium offerret pro nobis,vt nos redimeret: Chriſt hath taken of vs,which he ſhould offer as proper for vs, to redeeme vs,*de incarnat.cap.*6. Againe, Quicquid induit,obtulit : Whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke of vs,he offered,*de incarnat.c.*6. *Ergo,*he offered bodie and ſoule,for he tooke both.

*Concil.Hiſpalenſ.*2.*c.*13.vpon theſe words, My ſoule is heauie : Anima paſſionibus obnoxia, diuinitas libera : His ſoule was ſubiect to paſſions,his diuinitie was free,&c. If nothing were free but his diuine nature,then his ſoule was ſubiect to the proper and immediate paſſions thereof.

Hierome : Perſpicuum eſt, ſicut corpus flagellatum,ita animã verè doluiſſe,ne ex parte veritas ex parte mendacium credatur in Chriſto : It is euident, that as his bodie was whipped,ſo his ſoule was verily and truly grieued,leſt ſome part of Chriſts ſuffering ſhould be true,ſome part falſe, in 53.*cap.Iſaiæ: Ergo,*Chriſts ſoule as properly and truly ſuffered as his bodie:the ſoule had her proper griefe,as the bodie had whipping : the whipping then of the bodie was not the proper griefe of the ſoule.

Fulgentius: Totus homo ſemetipſum tradidit,& totus homo ſemetipſum obtulit: Whole Chriſt gaue himſelfe,and whole Chriſt offered himſelfe : *ad Thraſimund.lib.*3. Ergo, he offered his ſoule, not onely to ſuffer by way of compaſſion with his bodie,as it may be anſwered : but he offered it as a ſacrifice,and ſuffered all paſſions whatſoeuer incident to the ſoule,as the ſame author expoundeth himſelfe : Quia totum hominem Deus ille ſuſcepit,ideo totius hominis in ſe paſſiones in veritate monſtrauit,& animam quidem rationalem habens quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit, & pertulit,&c. Becauſe this God tooke whole man,therefore he ſhewed in truth in himſelfe, the paſſions of whole man;and hauing a reaſonable ſoule,what infirmitie ſoeuer of the ſoule without ſinne,he tooke and bare: *ad Thraſimund.lib.*3. If Chriſt then did take and beare all the paſſions of the ſoule without ſinne, then the proper and immediate griefe and anguiſh thereof,and not the compaſſion onely with the bodie.

To theſe places may be added the teſtimonies of the Fathers before alleaged : as of Ambroſe. reſponſ.ad 1. *argum. part.*1.*art.6.& part.*2.Of *Auguſtine,argum.*1.*art.*4.Of Damaſcene and Ambroſe againe ibid. Of *Origene argum.*4.

Now then to conclude: 1. If whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke to this end, to ſuffer in it properly and abſolutely. *Argum.*1. If wherein Adam properly ſinned, Chriſt properly muſt make ſatisfaction, *Argum.*2. if Chriſt was heauie in ſoule,verily and in deed,and gaue his ſoule for our ſinne, *Argum.*3. if he exinanited and emptied himſelfe, and offered his whole humanitie, *Argum.*4. if Chriſts loue ſhould be thereby obſcured and empayred, if he with held to giue his ſoule for vs; *Argum.*5. many of the Fathers alſo affirming the ſame, that Chriſt was crucified in his ſoule, that hee gaue his ſoule a price of redemption for our ſoule : who can then doubt of this, but that Chriſt verily,properly,immediately, ſuffered in his ſoule in all the proper paſſions thereof,as he endured paines and torments in his fleſh ?

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER CHRIST SVFfered in his ſoule vpon the Croſſe the torments of Hell.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

Art.17. THe Rhemiſts call it blaſphemie, that Chriſt in his ſoule ſuffered the paines of hell vpon the Croſſe: annot.in 2. *act.ſect.*11. Bellarmine alſo denieth: Chriſtum pertuliſſe dolores inferni: That Chriſt did beare the ſorrowes of hell, lib. 4. *de Chriſti anima.c.*8.*reſp. ad argum.*5. Feuardentius agreeth with them, Chriſto non fuiſſe certamen cum inferni doloribus: That Chriſt in his death, had no combate with the ſorrowes of hell.p.448.8.

*Obiect.*1. The bodilie ſufferings and paſſions of Chriſt,were ſufficiently meritorious,and efficiently ſatisfactorie for our redemption; therefore ſuch infernall ſufferings are ſuperfluous: Feuardentius to this effect, p.448.8. and to this purpoſe they doe amplifie Chriſts bodilie paines in this manner : he had a moſt pure, tender,delicate bodie, and a moſt quicke, liuely, and feeling ſoule, ſo that the hurts and wounds, which ſeeme but light vnto vs, were moſt grieuous and ſharpe to him : to adde then any other ſufferings to theſe,were to diminiſh and empayre the glorie of them, *Feuard.p.*453.

*Anſw.*1. We doe alſo magnifie and extoll the holy and painfull ſufferings of Chriſt as much as they, and doe glorie in them;and with the Apoſtle doe reioyce in the croſſe of Chriſt, Galath. 6.16. And we meditate vpon the grieuous torments, which Chriſt endured for vs in his fleſh : as Auguſtine doth thus excellently deſcribe them : Intuere dulcem natum toto corpore extenſum, cerne manus innoxias pio manantes ſanguine, candet nudatum pectus, rubet cruentum latus, tenſa arent viſcera, decora languent lumina,regia pallent ora,procera rigent brachia, crura pendent marmorea,&c. Behold the ſweete ſonne ſtrayned in his whole bodie, ſee his holy hands ſtreaming with blood , his white naked breaſt appeareth,his ſide is red with blood,his bowels are pent with ſtraining, his beautifull eyes doe languiſh,his princely countenance waxeth pale, his comely armes are ſtiffe, his marble legges hang downe: *lib.meditat.c.*6.

2. As we doe beholde the manner of his ſuffering, and the greatnes of his paine, ſo we acknowledge the price,merite,and efficacie thereof: we doubt not to ſay with S. Ambroſe:Chriſtus ille Naboth,qui vineam ſanguine defendit : Chriſt is that Naboth, that defended his vineyard with his blood: Adhort. ad virginem: with S. Hierome,Flammea illa romphea cuſtos paradiſi in Chriſti ſanguine extincta eſt : That fierie blade,the keeper of Paradiſe,is extinct in Chriſts blood, Epitaph. Nepotian. with Bernard: Chriſtus perfoſſo latere,tanquam conſciſſo ſacco precium effudit redemptionis : Chriſts ſide being opened,as out of a treaſure bagge,iſſued the price of our redemption : but this extolling of the ſufferings of his bodie,is no derogation to the holy conflicts of his ſoule : neither doth the argument follow: Chriſt ſuffered in bodie, Ergo, his ſoule ſufferings were ſuperfluous.

3. We graunt,that the leaſt paine of Chriſts bodie , and the leaſt droppe of blood had been ſufficient, in reſpect of Gods power and the dignitie of Chriſts perſon, to haue redeemed vs: as it is in your owne law confeſſed: extrau. commun. lib. 5. *tit.*9.*c.*2. *Clemens.*6. Gutta ſanguinis modica propter vnionem ad verbum pro redemptione totius humani generis ſuffeciſſet: The leaſt drop of Chriſts blood for the vnion of Chriſt to the word, had ſufficed for the redemption of whole mankind, &c. As then the leaſt drop of blood had been ſufficient, if God had ſo purpoſed, yet was not therefore the great ſtreame of blood, that came from him ſuperfluous: ſo neither doth the ſhedding of his blood with other paines in his fleſh, being in themſelues of great ſufficiencie, exclude the neceſſitie of his ſorrowes in ſoule: for it pleaſed God by the death of his Sonne, not to ſhew ſo much his abſolute power whereby he could haue ſaued vs without his death, but his vnſpeakeable loue in giuing his Sonne for vs, Rom. 8.32. and the fulnes of our redemption, in that Chriſt left nothing vndone, that could be done for vs, Iſay. 5.4. So that Chriſt now hauing paied the full price of our redemption, both in his bodie and ſoule, we may boldly ſay with the Prophet: Apud eum copioſa redemptio: With him is plentie of redemption, or a plentifull redemption, Pſalm. 130.7.

*Obiect.*2. In hell theſe things are to be conſidered: firſt, inward and outward darkenes: ſecondly, lake of fire and brimſtone: thirdly, fire vnquenchable. Feuard.*444.*conf.*2. Fourthly, the worme and pricke of conſcience: fiftly, malediction: ſixtly, deſperation: Feuard.*446.*conf.*5. Seuenthly, ſecond death and deſtruction of bodie and ſoule for euer: Feuard.p.*453.*lin.*3. But Chriſt felt none of theſe puniſhments: Ergo he ſuffered not the torments of hell.

*Anſw.*1. In this queſtion of Chriſts ſuffering hell ſorrowes, that wee may walke ſafely and without offence, this firſt muſt be premiſed, that theſe ſufferings and ſorrowes be no otherwiſe attributed to Chriſt, then as they may ſtand with the dignitie and worthines of his perſon, the holines of his nature, and the performance of the office and worke of our redemption: firſt then for the ſoule of Chriſt to ſuffer in the locall place of hell, to remaine in the darkenes thereof, and to be tormented with ẏ materiall flames there, & eternally to be damned, was not for the dignitie of his perſon, to whom for his excellencie and worthines, both the place, manner and time of thoſe torments were diſpenſed with. Secondly, finall reiection, and deſperation, with the worme of conſcience for his own ſinne, agreeth not with the holines of his nature, who was the immaculate lambe, and therefore we doe not aſcribe them to him. Thirdly, deſtruction of bodie and ſoule, ſecond death; could not fall vpon Chriſt; for this were to haue deſtroyed the worke of our redemption, if he had been ſubiect to deſtruction.

2. For the worme of conſcience, though Chriſt in himſelfe being moſt holy and harmeleſſe, was free from it, yet as bearing our perſon, and taking vpon him our iniquities, he was not exempted, no not from our griefe and ſorrow for ſinne: ſo the Prophet ſaith, he was a man full of ſorrowes, Iſay 53.3. And he was ſmitten and plagued of God, verſ.4. Hierome alſo doubteth not to applie theſe words, Pſalm. 59.5. My faultes are not hid from thee, vnto Chriſt: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille, qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit, & peccata noſtra portauit, quanto magis nos debemus vitia noſtra confiteri: This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if he that did no ſinne, ſorrowed for vs, and bare our ſinnes, how much more ought we to confeſſe our ſinnes, &c. he affirmeth Chriſt to haue ſorrowed for our ſinnes, as confeſſing them to be his owne.

3. Firſt, reiection with deſperation, and finall malediction could not be faſtened vpon Chriſts ſoule: yet the Scripture teſtifieth, that he was forſaken of God for the preſent in his ſenſe and feeling, ſo complaining vpon the croſſe, and that he was made a curſe for vs, Galath. 3.13. Chriſt then was, as the Scripture ſaith, forſaken, that is, reiected of God and accurſed. Secondly, but here diuers neceſſarie conſiderations muſt be had: firſt, that Chriſt in the holines of his owne nature was neuer accurſed, or reiected, but alwaies beloued of God: but as now our perſon was appropriated to him, and as he ſtood a pledge and ſuretie for vs to pay our debt, ſo he was for the time reiected and accurſed. And to this purpoſe Damaſcene hath a good diſtinction, which I haue before remembred: that there are δύο οἰκειώσεις, two kindes of appropriations in Chriſt, φυσικὴ ϗ οὐσιώδης, one naturall and ſubſtantiall, the other προσωπικὴ ϗ σχετικὴ, perſonall or habituall: to the firſt belong all the properties of the humane nature, which Chriſt verilie tooke with his fleſh: of the ſecond ſort are thoſe, which are attributed to Chriſt, as bearing our perſon, in which reſpect he aſſumed to himſelfe our dereliction and malediction. Damaſcen.lib.*3.*de fid.c.25. Secondly, as Ambroſe hath a diſtinction of election: that ſome are elected, Non de præſcientia, ſed de præſenti iuſtitia, Not of Gods preſcience, but of their preſent iuſtice, Ambr.in 8. *ad Rom. So likewiſe we may ſay of Chriſts reiection, that he was neuer reiected in Gods preſcience, but according to the preſent ſenſe and feeling which was in his ſoule. Thirdly, thus then the contrarie arguments may be anſwered: firſt that this reiection of Chriſt, neither enforceth deſperation, ſeeing Chriſt was ſupported by the innocencie of his owne ſoule, nor yet a ſeparation from the vnitie of the Godhead, ſeeing this reiection was not finall: ſo that as Chriſts bodie was without life in the graue, yet not hypoſtatically ſeparated from the Godhead, ſo his ſoule was a while without feeling of Gods fauour; yet ſtill vnited in perſon to the Godhead. Secondly, Chriſt thus being made a curſe for vs, was not therefore Fulgentius: Totus homo ſemetipſum tradidit,& totus homo ſemetipſum obtulit: Whole Chriſt gaue himſelfe, and whole Chriſt offered himſelfe : *ad Thraſimund.lib.*3. Ergo, he offered his ſoule, not onely to ſuffer by way of compaſſion with his bodie, as it may be anſwered : but he offered it as a ſacrifice, and ſuffered all paſſions whatſoeuer incident to the ſoule, as the ſame author expoundeth himſelfe : Quia totum hominem Deus ille ſuſcepit, ideo totius hominis in ſe paſſiones in veritate monſtrauit,& animam quidem rationalem habens quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit, & pertulit,&c. Becauſe this God tooke whole man, therefore he ſhewed in truth in himſelfe, the paſſions of whole man; and hauing a reaſonable ſoule, what infirmitie ſoeuer of the ſoule without ſinne, he tooke and bare: *ad Thraſimund.lib.*3. If Chriſt then did take and beare all the paſſions of the ſoule without ſinne, then the proper and immediate griefe and anguiſh thereof, and not the compaſſion onely with the bodie.

To theſe places may be added the teſtimonies of the Fathers before alleaged : as of Ambroſe. reſponſ.ad 1. argum. part. 1. *art.6.& part.*2. Of *Auguſtine, argum.*1. *art.*4. Of Damaſcene and Ambroſe againe ibid. Of *Origene argum.*4.

Now then to conclude: 1. If whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke to this end, to ſuffer in it properly and abſolutely. *Argum.*1. If wherein Adam properly ſinned, Chriſt properly muſt make ſatisfaction, *Argum.*2. if Chriſt was heauie in ſoule, verily and in deed, and gaue his ſoule for our ſinne, *Argum.*3. if he exinanited and emptied himſelfe, and offered his whole humanitie, *Argum.*4. if Chriſts loue ſhould be thereby obſcured and empayred, if he with held to giue his ſoule for vs; *Argum.*5. many of the Fathers alſo affirming the ſame, that Chriſt was crucified in his ſoule, that hee gaue his ſoule a price of redemption for our ſoule : who can then doubt of this, but that Chriſt verily, properly, immediately, ſuffered in his ſoule in all the proper paſſions thereof, as he endured paines and torments in his fleſh?

Obiect. 2. In hell theſe things are to be conſidered: firſt, inward and outward darkenes: ſecondly, lake of fire and brimſtone: thirdly, fire vnquenchable. Feuard. 444. conf. 2. Fourthly, the worme and pricke of conſcience: fiftly, malediction: ſixtly, deſperation: Feuard. 446. conf. 5. Seuenthly, ſecond death and deſtruction of bodie and ſoule for euer: Feuard. p. 453. lin. 3. But Chriſt felt none of theſe puniſhments: Ergo he ſuffered not the torments of hell.

Anſw. 1. In this queſtion of Chriſts ſuffering hell ſorrowes, that wee may walke ſafely and without offence, this firſt muſt be premiſed, that theſe ſufferings and ſorrowes be no otherwiſe attributed to Chriſt, then as they may ſtand with the dignitie and worthines of his perſon, the holines of his nature, and the performance of the office and worke of our redemption: firſt then for the ſoule of Chriſt to ſuffer in the locall place of hell, to remaine in the darkenes thereof, and to be tormented with ẏ materiall flames there, & eternally to be damned, was not for the dignitie of his perſon, to whom for his excellencie and worthines, both the place, manner and time of thoſe torments were diſpenſed with. Secondly, finall reiection, and deſperation, with the worme of conſcience for his own ſinne, agreeth not with the holines of his nature, who was the immaculate lambe, and therefore we doe not aſcribe them to him. Thirdly, deſtruction of bodie and ſoule, ſecond death, could not fall vpon Chriſt; for this were to haue deſtroyed the worke of our redemption, if he had been ſubiect to deſtruction.

2. For the worme of conſcience, though Chriſt in himſelfe being moſt holy and harmeleſſe, was free from it, yet as bearing our perſon, and taking vpon him our iniquities, he was not exempted, no not from our griefe and ſorrow for ſinne: ſo the Prophet ſaith, he was a man full of ſorrowes, Iſay 53. 3. And he was ſmitten and plagued of God, verſ. 4. Hierome alſo doubteth not to applie theſe words, Pſalm. 59. 5. My faultes are not hid from thee, vnto Chriſt: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille, qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit, & peccata noſtra portauit, quanto magis nos debemus vitia noſtra confiteri: This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if he that did no ſinne, ſorrowed for vs, and bare our ſinnes, how much more ought we to confeſſe our ſinnes, &c. he affirmeth Chriſt to haue ſorrowed for our ſinnes, as confeſſing them to be his owne.

3. Firſt, reiection with deſperation, and finall malediction could not be faſtened vpon Chriſts ſoule: yet the Scripture teſtifieth, that he was forſaken of God for the preſent in his ſenſe and feeling, ſo complaining vpon the croſſe, and that he was made a curſe for vs, Galath. 3. 13. Chriſt then was, as the Scripture ſaith, forſaken, that is, reiected of God and accurſed. Secondly, but here diuers neceſſarie conſiderations muſt be had: firſt, that Chriſt in the holines of his owne nature was neuer accurſed, or reiected, but alwaies beloued of God: but as now our perſon was appropriated to him, and as he ſtood a pledge and ſuretie for vs to pay our debt, ſo he was for the time reiected and accurſed. And to this purpoſe Damaſcene hath a good diſtinction, which I haue before remembred: that there are δύο οἰκειώσεις, two kindes of appropriations in Chriſt, φυσικὴ ϗ οὐσιώδης, one naturall and ſubſtantiall, the other προσωπικὴ ϗ σχετικὴ, perſonall or habituall: to the firſt belong all the properties of the humane nature, which Chriſt verilie tooke with his fleſh: of the ſecond ſort are thoſe, which are attributed to Chriſt, as bearing our perſon, in which reſpect he aſſumed to himſelfe our dereliction and malediction. Damaſcen. lib. 3. de fid. c. 25. Secondly, as Ambroſe hath a diſtinction of election: that ſome are elected, Non de præſcientia, ſed de præſenti iuſtitia, Not of Gods preſcience, but of their preſent iuſtice, Ambr. in 8. ad Rom. So likewiſe we may ſay of Chriſts reiection, that he was neuer reiected in Gods preſcience, but according to the preſent ſenſe and feeling which was in his ſoule. Thirdly, thus then the contrarie arguments may be anſwered: firſt that this reiection of Chriſt, neither enforceth deſperation, ſeeing Chriſt was ſupported by the innocencie of his owne ſoule, nor yet a ſeparation from the vnitie of the Godhead, ſeeing this reiection was not finall: ſo that as Chriſts bodie was without life in the graue, yet not hypoſtatically ſeparated from the Godhead, ſo his ſoule was a while without feeling of Gods fauour; yet ſtill vnited in perſon to the Godhead. Secondly, Chriſt thus being made a curſe for vs, was not therefore made vnable to bleſſe vs; but the Apoſtle inferreth a contrarie concluſion, that Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for vs: becauſe he was accurſed for vs, we are bleſſed thorough him.

4. Concerning hell flames: firſt, in that they are not eternall in Chriſt, the worthines of his perſon obtained: for his temporall enduring of hell ſorrowes was as effectuall and meritorious, as if they had been perpetuall.

Obiect. And why I pray you may not the dignitie of his perſon diſpenſe with the ſufferings of the ſoule altogether, and that his bodily torments onely might be accepted? Feuard. p. 450. con. 13. lin. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, the dignitie of his perſon did beare him out in that, which was not meete for him to ſuffer, nor fit in reſpect of our redemption: for if he ſhould haue ſuffered eternally, our redemption could not haue been accompliſhed: but for him to ſuffer in ſoule as he did in bodie, was neither derogatory to his perſon, nor preiudiciall to his worke. Secondly, by the ſame reaſon by the dignitie of his perſon he ſhould be exempted alſo from his bodily ſufferings, and ſo ſuffer nothing at all: ſo then the dignitie of his perſon was ſo farre forth diſpenſed with, as yet Gods iuſtice and equitie in the full redemption of man muſt be ſatisfied.

Secondly, 1. For hell flames, though we deny not, but they ſhall be materiall, though after a ſpirituall manner to worke vpon the immortall and neuer dying bodies of the damned; yet it muſt needs be confeſſed, that all the flames and fire of hell are not corporall and materiall: As that fire was not wherein the rich man was tormented, as Auguſtine ſaith, to this effect, Talis flamma fuit, qualis aqua guttula, &c. It was ſuch a flame, as the drop of water, as the finger, &c. lib. 21. de ciuitat. c. 10. 2. That Chriſt felt in his ſoule the fierie flames of Gods wrath, which may be called the flames of hell, it need not ſeeme ſtrange, ſeeing the Scripture reſembleth the wrath of God vnto fire, Pſalm. 89. verſ. 46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? and as Chriſt baptized with the ſpirite and fire, Matth. 3. 12. ſo it was fit he himſelfe ſhould be ſo baptized firſt, Luke 12. 50. S. Ambroſe to this purpoſe applieth that place, Iſay 6. 7. where the prophets lippes were purged with a coale from the altar: Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit peccata noſtra: Chriſt as a coale in his fleſh burned vp our ſinnes. And againe, Sicut habes in Zacharia, nonne hic titio eiectus ab igni, & ille erat Ieſus indutus veſtimento ſordido: As you haue in Zacharie, is not this a firebrand taken out of the fire? and this was Ieſus clothed with filthie rayment, Lib. 1. de ſpirit. c. 9. Thus Chriſt was firſt as a brand himſelfe, touched or ſcorched with the fire of his Fathers wrath, and then as the coale from the altar he alſo purgeth vs.

Thus then we feare not to confeſſe with the Scriptures and fathers, that Chriſt bearing our ſins in himſelfe vpon the croſſe, did feele himſelfe during that combate, as reiected and forſaken of God, and accurſed for vs, and the flames of his Fathers wrath burning within him: ſo that to the honor of Chriſts paſſion wee confeſſe, that our bleſſed redeemer refuſed no part of our puniſhment, but endured the very paines of hell ſo farre, as they tended not neither to the derogation of his perſon, deprauation of his nature, deſtruction of dis office.

Thus alſo is Feuardentius further anſwered, who maketh theſe foure the puniſhments of the reprobate. 1. They ſhall for euer want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall euer bee perplexed with the horror of a guiltie conſcience. 3. They are depriued of all the gifts of the ſpirite. 4. In ſtead of vertues, they are defiled with wickedneſſe, pag. 446. Of theſe foure, the firſt is a diſhonor to Chriſts glorious perſon, wherein he is perpetually vnited to God, and ſo cannot euer want the viſion of God: the ſecond ſhould be an hinderance to the worke of our redemption: for he could not ſaue vs from our ſinnes, if he were guiltie of his owne: the two laſt cannot be committed nor had without ſinne, and therefore are a diſgrace to the holineſſe of his nature: wherefore none of theſe puniſhments, without blaſphemie, can bee layd vpon Chriſt.

Obiect. 3. Firſt, none in this life are in the true paines of hell: Ergo, neither Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 8. argum. 3.

2. Hell paines are not meritorious, but Chriſts paſſions and ſuffrings are meritorious: Ergo, he ſuffered not the paines of hell; Feuard. pag. 421. conf. 12. lin. 3. 4.

3. Hell paynes are euerlaſting, there is fire that neuer goeth out or is extinguiſhed, Feuardent. pag. 444. conf. 2. lin. 9. Ergo, Chriſt was not in thoſe flames.

4. Chriſt was mightier then hell, he looſed the ſorrowes of hell: Ergo, he was not tormented in hell, Feuard. pag. 475. lin. 3. ex Fulgent.

5. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 8. 17. If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be glorified with him: we by partaking with Chriſt in the like paſſions, ſhall attaine to be fellowes with him in his kingdome, Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum: Muſt wee ſuffer then the paines of hell, before we can attaine heauen?

6. S. Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing vs an example to follow his ſteppes: this place is vrged by Feuard. pag. 361. 5. If Chriſt then muſt be imitated of vs in all things, then in his hell ſufferings.

7. Chriſtus eſt purior cunctis angelicis choris: Chriſt is purer then all the companie of Angels, *Feuard.pag.*454.*lin.*12. if Chriſt were not free from hell, how can they be; ſeeing he was perſonaliter vnitus, perſonally vnited to the Godhead, *pag.*474.*lin.*20. as the Angels are not: and if the elect members of Chriſt are ſure they ſhall not fall from their election, and ſo conſequently not come into hell, much more Chriſt, &c. *Feuard. p.*483.*conf.*3.

8. There is no goodneſſe, charitie, vertue in hell, therefore Chriſt full of all grace and vertue, could not be there, *Feuard. p.*447.conf.6.

1 Anſw. 1. The argument followeth not, men in this life cannot feele the true paynes of hell, Ergo, not Chriſt: for who but Chriſt did beare the iniquities of men? as the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.6. Fecit in eum concurrere peccata omnium: God made all our ſinnes to runne together as in an heape vpon him: who then but Chriſt could feele and ſuffer the true puniſhment of ſinne in this life? 2. The true paines, though not the full paynes of hell may be felt in this life; as likewiſe the true, though not the full ioyes of heauen: firſt, for the ioyes of heauen, the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.2.6. Hee hath made vs ſit together in the heauenly places in Chriſt Ieſus: What is this els, but euen while we liue, by faith to poſſeſſe the very ioyes of heauen? So Paul, not yet out of his body, was taken vp into Paradiſe, 2.Corin.12.4. whereof Hierome thus writeth: Paulo in tertium cœlum patuit aſcenſus, quem neq; ignea illa romphæa ab aditu Paradiſi potuit excludere: A way was open for Paul to aſcend into Paradiſe, whom the fierie blade could not ſhut out, ad Marcellam. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Tu ſi vis, cœlum eris; ſi vis eſſe cœlum, purga de corde tuo terram: Thou mayeſt be heauen, if thou wilt purge earth out of thy heart, and thou ſhalt be heauen, in pſal.96. Wherefore euen a man while he liueth, may feele the true ioyes of heauen.

If the ſoule may in this life haue a taſte of the true ioyes of heauen, then conſequently it may be perplexed with the true ſorrowes of hell, though not in that manner nor meaſure: for if horrible deſperation, and a comfortleſſe conſcience of ſinne belong to the true paynes of hell, what did Cain want of the feeling of hell torments, when he ſaid, His ſinne was greater then could be forgiuen, Gen.4.13? Auguſtine ſaith, Iudicis tribunal in mente tua, ſedet ibi Deus, adeſt accuſator conſcientia, tortor timor: The Iudges tribunall ſeat is in thy ſoule, God ſitteth there as Iudge, thy conſcience is the accuſer, feare is the tormentor: *in pſal.*57. If then in the ſoule there be a Iudge; an Accuſer; a Tormentor; there is alſo a true taſte of the torments of hell.

2 2. 1. The leaſt paines, which Chriſt ſuffered for vs, and the leaſt labour and trauaile, which he endured, were meritorious; his hunger, thirſt, faſting, wearines, whippings, buffetings, were in reſpect of the worthines of his perſon meritorious, much more the ſuffrings of his ſoule. 2. Hell torments in themſelues are not meritorious, nor yet the ſhedding of mans blood; yet in Chriſt, becauſe of the holines of his perſon, both the one and the other were full of merit: As Bernard well anſwered to the like obiection: Nunquid mors innocentis filij tantū placuit deo? Did the death of his innocent ſonne ſo much pleaſe God? Non mors, ſed voluntas placuit ſponte morientis: non requiſiuit deus ſanguinem innocentis filij, ſed acceptauit oblatum, non ſanguinem ſitiens, ſed ſalutem, quia ſalus erat in ſanguine: Not the death, but the will of him, that dyed of his owne accord, was acceptable: God required not the blood of his innocent ſonne, but accepted it being offered; not thirſting for blood, but for mans ſaluation, which was in his blood, *epiſt.*191. As then theſe three things, the perſon of Chriſt being the ſonne of God, his obedience in being willing, his end and intention to ſaue mankinde, made his blood acceptable and meritorious: ſo alſo in the foreſaid reſpects his ſoule merited by the ſuffrings and paſſions thereof. 3. Neither by theſe ſuffrings was the vnion to the Godhead ſeparated, but the fruition only a while ſuſpended. 4. And it is not thankworthie, ſimply to wiſh to be ſeparated from God, but with a charitable affection to wiſh ſuch a ſeparation, was no doubt acceptable in Paul: who, as Hierome ſaith, Pro charitate Chriſti nolui habere Chriſtum: For the loue of Chriſt would not haue Chriſt: but in Chriſt it was truly meritorious.

3 3. 1. The paines of hell, which Chriſt ſuffered, though they were not infinite in time, yet were they of an infinite price and value, for the dignitie of the perſon that ſuffered them, his abundant charitie whereby he ſuffered them, the great vtilitie for the which he ſuffered them, namely the ſaluation of man. 2. Otherwiſe infinitely in time Chriſt was not to ſuffer: as Ambroſe well ſaith vpon theſe words, Rom.5.6. Chriſt dyed, ſecundum tempus, in time, or according to time: Tempora in mundo ſunt, vbi oritur & occidit ſol huic ergo tempori; mortuus eſt; vbi autem tempus non eſt, ibi non ſolum viuus, ſed victor repertus eſt: Times are in the world, where the Sunne riſeth, and ſetteth, vnto this time he dyed: but where there is no time, there hee was found not onely liuing, but conquering: in 5.ad Roman.

4 4. 1. Chriſt was not bound of Sathan, though hee encountred with Sathan; neither was hee weaker than hell, becauſe he entred into hell, but mightier, becauſe hee ouercame hell: and as hee deſtroyed death by his death, Heb.2.14. ſo hee vanquiſhed hell by his hell, which hee ſuffered in ſoule. 2. Chriſt did by his death enter into the ſtrong mans houſe to ſpoyle his goods, Matth 10.29. And as Ruffinus ſaith in the ſymbole, which goeth vnder his name: Chriſtus non damno aliquo patitur, made vnable to bleſſe vs; but the Apoſtle inferreth a contrarie concluſion, that Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for vs: becauſe he was accurſed for vs, we are bleſſed thorough him.

4. Concerning hell flames: firſt, in that they are not eternall in Chriſt, the worthines of his perſon obtained: for his temporall enduring of hell ſorrowes was as effectuall and meritorious, as if they had been perpetuall.

Obiect. And why I pray you may not the dignitie of his perſon diſpenſe with the ſufferings of the ſoule altogether, and that his bodily torments onely might be accepted? Feuard. p. 450. con. 13. lin. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, the dignitie of his perſon did beare him out in that, which was not meete for him to ſuffer, nor fit in reſpect of our redemption: for if he ſhould haue ſuffered eternally, our redemption could not haue been accompliſhed: but for him to ſuffer in ſoule as he did in bodie, was neither derogatory to his perſon, nor preiudiciall to his worke. Secondly, by the ſame reaſon by the dignitie of his perſon he ſhould be exempted alſo from his bodily ſufferings, and ſo ſuffer nothing at all: ſo then the dignitie of his perſon was ſo farre forth diſpenſed with, as yet Gods iuſtice and equitie in the full redemption of man muſt be ſatisfied.

Secondly, 1. For hell flames, though we deny not, but they ſhall be materiall, though after a ſpirituall manner to worke vpon the immortall and neuer dying bodies of the damned; yet it muſt needs be confeſſed, that all the flames and fire of hell are not corporall and materiall: As that fire was not wherein the rich man was tormented, as Auguſtine ſaith, to this effect, Talis flamma fuit, qualis aqua guttula, &c. It was ſuch a flame, as the drop of water, as the finger, &c. lib. 21. de ciuitat. c. 10. 2. That Chriſt felt in his ſoule the fierie flames of Gods wrath, which may be called the flames of hell, it need not ſeeme ſtrange, ſeeing the Scripture reſembleth the wrath of God vnto fire, Pſalm. 89. verſ. 46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? and as Chriſt baptized with the ſpirite and fire, Matth. 3. 12. ſo it was fit he himſelfe ſhould be ſo baptized firſt, Luke 12. 50. S. Ambroſe to this purpoſe applieth that place, Iſay 6. 7. where the prophets lippes were purged with a coale from the altar: Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit peccata noſtra: Chriſt as a coale in his fleſh burned vp our ſinnes. And againe, Sicut habes in Zacharia, nonne hic titio eiectus ab igni, & ille erat Ieſus indutus veſtimento ſordido: As you haue in Zacharie, is not this a firebrand taken out of the fire? and this was Ieſus clothed with filthie rayment, Lib. 1. de ſpirit. c. 9. Thus Chriſt was firſt as a brand himſelfe, touched or ſcorched with the fire of his Fathers wrath, and then as the coale from the altar he alſo purgeth vs.

Thus then we feare not to confeſſe with the Scriptures and fathers, that Chriſt bearing our ſins in himſelfe vpon the croſſe, did feele himſelfe during that combate, as reiected and forſaken of God, and accurſed for vs, and the flames of his Fathers wrath burning within him: ſo that to the honor of Chriſts paſſion wee confeſſe, that our bleſſed redeemer refuſed no part of our puniſhment, but endured the very paines of hell ſo farre, as they tended not neither to the derogation of his perſon, deprauation of his nature, deſtruction of dis office.

Thus alſo is Feuardentius further anſwered, who maketh theſe foure the puniſhments of the reprobate. 1. They ſhall for euer want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall euer bee perplexed with the horror of a guiltie conſcience. 3. They are depriued of all the gifts of the ſpirite. 4. In ſtead of vertues, they are defiled with wickedneſſe, pag. 446. Of theſe foure, the firſt is a diſhonor to Chriſts glorious perſon, wherein he is perpetually vnited to God, and ſo cannot euer want the viſion of God: the ſecond ſhould be an hinderance to the worke of our redemption: for he could not ſaue vs from our ſinnes, if he were guiltie of his owne: the two laſt cannot be committed nor had without ſinne, and therefore are a diſgrace to the holineſſe of his nature: wherefore none of theſe puniſhments, without blaſphemie, can bee layd vpon Chriſt.

Obiect. 3. Firſt, none in this life are in the true paines of hell: Ergo, neither Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 8. argum. 3.

2. Hell paines are not meritorious, but Chriſts paſſions and ſuffrings are meritorious: Ergo, he ſuffered not the paines of hell; Feuard. pag. 421. conf. 12. lin. 3. 4.

3. Hell paynes are euerlaſting, there is fire that neuer goeth out or is extinguiſhed, Feuardent. pag. 444. conf. 2. lin. 9. Ergo, Chriſt was not in thoſe flames.

4. Chriſt was mightier then hell, he looſed the ſorrowes of hell: Ergo, he was not tormented in hell, Feuard. pag. 475. lin. 3. ex Fulgent.

5. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 8. 17. If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be glorified with him: we by partaking with Chriſt in the like paſſions, ſhall attaine to be fellowes with him in his kingdome, Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum: Muſt wee ſuffer then the paines of hell, before we can attaine heauen?

6. S. Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing vs an example to follow his ſteppes: this place is vrged by Feuard. pag. 361. 5. If Chriſt then muſt be imitated of vs in all things, then in his hell ſufferings.

7. Chriſtus eſt purior cunctis angelicis choris: Chriſt is purer then all the companie of Angels, *Feuard. pag.*454.*lin.*12. if Chriſt were not free from hell, how can they be; ſeeing he was perſonaliter vnitus, perſonally vnited to the Godhead, *pag.*474.*lin.*20. as the Angels are not: and if the elect members of Chriſt are ſure they ſhall not fall from their election, and ſo conſequently not come into hell, much more Chriſt, &c. *Feuard. p.*483.*conf.*3.

8. There is no goodneſſe, charitie, vertue in hell, therefore Chriſt full of all grace and vertue, could not be there, *Feuard. p.*447.*conf.*6.

Anſw. 1. The argument followeth not, men in this life cannot feele the true paynes of hell, Ergo, not Chriſt: for who but Chriſt did beare the iniquities of men? as the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.6. Fecit in eum concurrere peccata omnium: God made all our ſinnes to runne together as in an heape vpon him: who then but Chriſt could feele and ſuffer the true puniſhment of ſinne in this life? 1
2. The true paines, though not the full paynes of hell may be felt in this life; as likewiſe the true, though not the full ioyes of heauen: firſt, for the ioyes of heauen, the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.2.6. Hee hath made vs ſit together in the heauenly places in Chriſt Ieſus: What is this els, but euen while we liue, by faith to poſſeſſe the very ioyes of heauen? So Paul, not yet out of his body, was taken vp into Paradiſe, 2.Corin.12.4. whereof Hierome thus writeth: Paulo in tertium cœlum patuit aſcenſus, quem neq; ignea illa romphæa ab aditu Paradiſi potuit excludere: A way was open for Paul to aſcend into Paradiſe, whom the fierie blade could not ſhut out, ad Marcellam. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Tu ſi vis, cœlum eris; ſi vis eſſe cœlum, purga de corde tuo terram: Thou mayeſt be heauen, if thou wilt purge earth out of thy heart, and thou ſhalt be heauen, *in pſal.*96. Wherefore euen a man while he liueth, may feele the true ioyes of heauen.

If the ſoule may in this life haue a taſte of the true ioyes of heauen, then conſequently it may be perplexed with the true ſorrowes of hell, though not in that manner nor meaſure: for if horrible deſperation, and a comfortleſſe conſcience of ſinne belong to the true paynes of hell, what did Cain want of the feeling of hell torments, when he ſaid, His ſinne was greater then could be forgiuen, Gen.4.13? Auguſtine ſaith, Iudicis tribunal in mente tua, ſedet ibi Deus, adeſt accuſator conſcientia, tortor timor: The Iudges tribunall ſeat is in thy ſoule, God ſitteth there as Iudge, thy conſcience is the accuſer, feare is the tormentor: *in pſal.*57. If then in the ſoule there be a Iudge; an Accuſer; a Tormentor; there is alſo a true taſte of the torments of hell.

2. 1. The leaſt paines, which Chriſt ſuffered for vs, and the leaſt labour and trauaile, which 2

As then theſe three things, the perſon of Chriſt being the ſonne of God, his obedience in being willing, his end and intention to ſaue mankinde, made his blood acceptable and meritorious: ſo alſo in the foreſaid reſpects his ſoule merited by the ſuffrings and paſſions thereof. 3. weaker than hell, becauſe he entred into hell, but mightier, becauſe hee ouercame hell: and as hee deſtroyed death by his death, Heb.2.14. ſo hee vanquiſhed hell by his hell, which hee ſuffered in ſoule. 2. Chriſt did by his death enter into the ſtrong mans houſe to ſpoyle his goods, Matth 10.29. And as Ruffinus ſaith in the ſymbole, which goeth vnder his name: Chriſtus non damno aliquo patitur, tur, ſed vt rex carcerem ingreſſus, vt ſoluat catenas in carcere fuiſſe dicitur, ſed non ea conditione, qua cateri; illi vt pœnas ſoluerent, hic vt pœnas abſolueret: Chriſt ſuffereth not to any loſſe, but as a King entring into priſon to looſe the chaines, is ſaid to haue been in priſon, but not with that condition, that others are; they are there to pay debt, hee to releaſe them of paine and debt, &c. So Chriſt by entring into death and hell for vs, hath releaſed vs of our paine, and payed our debt, though not as they, which are condemned to hell.

5 5. Bernard well noteth three things in Chriſts death: In Chriſti paſſione tria ſpecialiter conuenit intueri, opus, modum, cauſam: It behoueth vs ſpecially to conſider in Chriſts paſſion the worke, the manner, the cauſe, ſerm. de paſſion. In the cauſe he was innocent, in the manner patient, in the worke excellent: in his innocencie and humilitie wee muſt ſuffer as hee did, that is, not to ſuffer as euill doers, but for righteouſnes ſake, Matth. 5. 10. We muſt ſuffer patiently, as he did, who being reuiled, reuiled not againe, 1. Pet. 2. 23. but in the worke of redemption, for the which hee ſuffered in bodie and ſoule, wee cannot ſuffer as he did; vnleſſe you will make men redeemers of ſoules: nay, who can endure the like bodily ſuffrings as hee did in euery reſpect? wherefore in this behalfe wee are not required by the Apoſtle to ſuffer with Chriſt, neither is it poſſible.

6 6. 1. The ſame anſwere may ſerue for the next obiection: for the Apoſtle in the ſame place ſheweth wherein Chriſt is an example to vs, in his innocencie, there was no guile in his mouth, 1. Pet. chap. 2. 23. in his patience, he reuiled not againe, verſ. 23. 2. To the ſame effect the ſame Apoſtle exhorteth vs to bee partakers of Chriſts ſuffrings, that is, not to ſuffer as euill doers, 1. Pet. 4. 15. 3. Saint Auguſtine ſheweth well wherein Chriſt is to be imitated: Non dixit Chriſtus, diſcite à me mundum fabricare, aut mortuos ſuſcitare, ſed diſcite, quia mitis ſum: Chriſt ſaid not, learne of me to make the world, or to raiſe the dead; but learne of me, becauſe I am meeke, de bon. coniugal. cap. 37. To redeeme the world, is no leſſe a worke than to make the world: and therefore vnleſſe Chriſt had bid vs to learne of him to redeeme the world, how doth it belong to vs to imitate his meritorious and ſatisfactorie ſuffrings both in bodie and ſoule? 4. Yet wee haue ſomewhat alſo euen in Chriſts ſoule-ſuffrings to imitate: that as hee being plunged as it were in the depth of hell, and in the floods of ſorrowes, yet was not ſwallowed vp of the gulfe of deſpayre, but ſtill truſted vnto God, ſaying, My God, my God: ſo wee likewiſe ſhould be confident in our trouble of minde. And to this poynt alſo Auguſtine ſaith well: Chriſtus exemplum ſanis ad permanendum, infirmis ad conualeſcendum, morituris ad non timendum, mortuis ad reſurgendum: Chriſt is an example to the whole to continue, to the weake to grow in ſtrength, to the dying not to feare, to the dead to riſe againe, de Trinitat. 7. 2.

7 7. 1. It followeth not, Chriſt is vnited into one perſon with God, therefore hee did not ſuffer the paines of hell: for by the ſame reaſon he ſhould not haue ſuffered in bodie: the vnion of his perſon could haue preſerued him from the one ſuffring and the other, and no man compelled him to vndertake this difficult worke, but his owne vnſpeakeable loue vnto mankinde: ſo hee ſayth, Ioh. 10. 17. Therefore doth my father loue me, becauſe I lay downe my life: verſ. 18. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it downe of my ſelfe: If the ſonne of God had been conſtrained to ſuffer, and for himſelfe, then both men and Angels might feare; but as Bernard (before alleaged) ſaith: Voluntas ſponte morientis, placuit deo: The willingnes of him that dyed, pleaſed God: who offered himſelfe to bee the redeemer of the world: Pſal. 40. 7. Then ſaid I, loe I come.

2. We neede not maruaile, that the ſonne of God doth beare for vs the brunt of hell, who was able to ſubdue it; we might rather haue muſed and maruailed, if either men or Angels had entred into the combat, who muſt needes haue yeelded vnto it. Auguſtine here well ſaith: Mirum eſſe non debet à deo factum miraculum, mirum eſſet ſi homo feciſſet, magis gaudere quam mirari debemus, quia dominus noſter homo factus eſt, quam quod diuina inter homines fecit; plus eſt enim ad ſalutem noſtram, quod factus eſt propter homines, quam quod fecit inter homines: It neede not ſeeme ſtraunge to vs, that God did a miracle, it were ſtraunge if man had done it, we ſhould rather reioyce and not marueile, becauſe our Lord was made man, than that amongſt men he did diuine things; it is more to our ſaluation, that he was made for men, than that he did make ſuch things among men, Tract. in Ioh. 17. Wee neede not then aske the queſtion, how Chriſt ſuffered the paines of hell, and did other great works for vs, but rather reioyce, that God became man for our ſakes to doe ſuch things for vs.

3. The Saints of God neede not feare hell, becauſe Chriſt felt it, but they by his hell ſorrowes are deliuered from hell: let them rather looke to this daunger, that would make vs beleeue, that the hell ſorrowes of the ſoule haue not yet by ſuffring them, been ſatisfied for: for ſeeing they muſt be endured, and you ſay Chriſt hath not endured them for vs, this will rather ſtrike into the mind a feare of hell, that theſe ſorrowes remaine yet to be ſuffered, than the meditation of Chriſts hell in his ſoule, whereby our ſoules are deliuered. Wherefore the Saints neede not feare hell flames, becauſe they were kindled in Chriſts ſoule, but to be bold againſt them, becauſe Chriſt in his ſoule hath quenched them: ſo that now, as the Apoſtle ſaith, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, Rom. 8. 1. And as Saint Ambroſe well ſaith: Ille fleuit, ne tu homo diu fleres; lachryma illa nos lauant,fletus illi nos abluunt,dubitatio illa nos firmat,ne ſi tu caperis dubitare,deſperes: He wept, that thou O man ſhouldeſt not long weepe: thoſe teares waſh vs,thoſe weepings cleanſe vs,his doubting doth ſtrengthen vs, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt,ſhouldeſt deſpayre,lib.2.de fid. cap.4. By Chriſts ſuffrings then both in bodie and ſoule we are deliuered from the like.

4. And in that Angels are freed from hell flames, it is the fauour of the Creator,and in ſome ſort alſo the benefit of the redeemer of the world : ſome Angels fell by their ſinne, for whom the lake of fire is prepared,the reſt doe ſtand by grace : for as we vtterly reiect the erronious conceit of Origen vpon theſe words,Coloſſ.1.20.To ſet at peace,through the blood of his croſſe,the things that are in earth,and the things in heauen: who thinketh that Chriſt, pro cœleſtibus hoſtia oblatus eſt, was offered a ſacrifice for the celeſtiall ſpirits in heauen, Hom.1. in Leuitic. neither doth Auguſtine fully touch the poynt,applying the redemption of man to the Angels in theſe three reſpects: firſt, becauſe we,which were like to the Angels are reconciled to God : ſecondly, Quia eorum ruinæ reſarciuntur,&c. becauſe their ruines and decayes are made vp, with the reſtitution of the godly: thirdly, Quia illi nobis redeunt in gratiam: becauſe the Angels are become our friends by the redemption, Enchirid.cap.64. So wee doubt not to ſay, though the Angels are not redeemed as we are by Chriſts death , for hee tooke not the nature of Angels,Hebr.2.17.yet the benefit thereof for the ſuretie and preſeruation of their ſtate extendeth vnto them. As Ambroſe well ſaith : Aliter eget miſericordia angelus,aliter homo; angelica natura eget miſericordia, ne poſſet errare, & auerſa à ſe dei gratia labatur in vitium; homo propter contractorum ſeriem peccatorum miſericordiam dei quærit: The Angel needeth mercie one way,man another ; the angelicall nature needeth mercie,leaſt it may erre,and,if Gods grace turne from them,fall into ſinne;man ſeeketh for mercie for ſinnes alreadie contracted, ſerm.8.in Pſal.119. Likewiſe Bernard: Qui hominibus ſubuenit in tali neceſſitate ſeruauit angelos à tali neceſſitate,&c. He that helped man in ſuch neceſſitie, ſaued the Angels from the like neceſſitie; hee that in his loue to men made them ſuch, that they ſhould not continue ſuch,by the like loue hath giuen to the Angels not to be ſuch,lib.de diligend.deo. In that the elect Angels then are ſure to be preſerued from hell, they are therein beholding to the bountifull redeemer,who as he hath deliuered vs from thence;ſo he preſerueth and keepeth them from comming thither.

8. 1. In the local place of the damned,which is properly called hell,there is neither holines, 8 vertue,goodneſſe ; but thither we ſend not the ſoule of Chriſt : who notwithſtanding he felt the ſorrowes of hell in his ſoule, euen the very ſenſe of his fathers wrath againſt ſinne, yet his faith failed not,neither did he loſe his confidence,but in that inſtant,when he complained he was forſaken,he with full truſt and aſſurance ſaid, My God,my God. 2. Then as the ioyes of heauen may be truly,though not fully felt in this life,ſo may the paines of hell : and thus Chriſt in his ſoule while he liued felt them,without any decay or empayring of his holie vertues. Wherfore to vrge vs with the inconueniences,that accompanie the locall place of hell, and the very ſtate and condition of the damned,is too iniurious,ſeeing none doth,or hath ſo affirmed.

And further to explaine our meaning,as touching the ioyes of heauen and torments of hell in this life : firſt,a feare of hell which is euerlaſting deſtruction, or any griefe proceeding from that feare,we are farre off from imagining to haue been in Chriſt : yet this preſent hell which hee had in his ſoule,in labouring vnder the heauie burthen of our ſinnes and Gods wrath due to the ſame, we affirme that he felt it and feared it,as the Apoſtle ſaith, he was heard in that he feared, Hebr.5.7. Secondly,we denie alſo this diſiunction, that in this life all that is perceiued of heauen, is either the hope thereof,or the ioy ariſing vpon that hope : for then it would follow,that there is no ioy of heauen preſently had but in hope. An equalitie betweene the ioyes here felt,and eternall bliſſe to be afterward poſſeſſed,no man is ſo voide of ſenſe to affirme : and yet according to the Scripture we ſay,that we haue more ioy than in hope onely : our Sauiour ſaith,Ioh.14.23. If any man loue me,&c. my father will loue him, and wee will come vnto him, and dwell with him: where there is a dwelling,there is a preſent poſſeſſion : as Auguſtine then ſaith, Cœlum (inquit deus) mihi ſedes eſt, anima ergo iuſti cœlum eſt: Heauen (ſaith the Lorde) is my ſeate, the ſoule then of the righteous (where God dwelleth) is heauen, in Pſal.121. The Wiſeman ſaith, A good conſcience is a continuall feaſt, Prou.15.15.where a feaſt is,there is good cheare preſent, and not hope or expectation only. Thirdly,wherefore as the ioy of heauen may in ſome meaſure, not in hope onely, but in preſent feeling be perceiued in this life:ſo alſo there may be a liuely ſenſe of hell,as I haue ſhewed before, reſp.ad artic.1. of this third generall argument or obiection. And ſo Origen ſaith, anſwering to a queſtion,how God doth now ſhew vengeance vpon diuels: Super omnia tormentorum genera eſt, cum videant aliquem verbo dei operam dare, in hoc eorum flamma eſt, in iſto vruntur incendio: It is beyond all torments when they ſee any man occupied in Gods word, this is their flame, and in this fire they are burned, Hom.27.in Leuitic.

Obiect. Chriſt neuer did forget,that he was the Emmanuel, that God ſaid vnto him,thou art my beloued ſonne,that all which his father had,was his ; hee could not then be out of Gods fauour, *Feuard.p.*486.*conf.*7. and ſo conſequently not in hell, vnleſſe you will ſay the ioyes of heauen are in hell: and ſo Chriſt ſhould be both in heauen and hell at once.

Anſw. 1. In the locall place of heauen and hell it is not poſſible for any neither to be at once, nor yet at ſundrie times ſucceſſiuely: for there is no paſſing from heauen to hell, or from hell to heauen: Luk.16.26. They which would goe from hence to you cannot, &c. 2. Concerning the ſpirituall ſenſe of heauen and hell, though in one and the ſame inſtant they are not in the ſoule, yet many times in a very ſhort ſpace the one doth ſucceede the other: as Pſalm.31.22. the Prophet ſaith in his griefe of heart, I am caſt out of thy ſight; and yet he reuiueth againe immediatly, and ſaith, Yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer when I cryed. 3. Chriſt was neuer deſtitute of faith and hope of this ioy propoſed; but the ſenſe and feeling thereof was for a while ſuſpended in his ſoule, while he wreſtled with hell: for like as S. Paul by faith alwayes had his conuerſation in heauen, Philip.3.20. yet ſometime minded the neceſſarie things of this life; as Hierome ſaith, Putaſne Apoſtolum Paulum eo tempore, quo ſcribebat, penulam affer tecum, &c. de cœleſtibus cogitaſſe myſterijs, & non de his, quæ vſu communis vitæ neceſſaria ſunt; Doe you thinke the Apoſtle Paul at that time, when he wrote, Bring my cloake with thee, &c. did thinke of heauenly myſteries, and not of thoſe things, which were neceſſary for the vſe of the common life, *lib.*3.aduerſ.Pelagian. though by faith Pauls ſoule was in heauen, yet in his preſent ſenſe he intended worldly neceſſaries: ſo the ſoule of Chriſt being in the preſent ſenſe and feeling of hell ſorrowes, though his faith and hope languiſhed not, might haue ſome intermiſſion of the ioy conceiued; like as the ſoule liueth, when the body is aſleepe, yet worketh not, as when the body is awaked, to attend vpon the operation of the ſoule: So Auguſtine fitly compareth Chriſts ſuffring vpon the Croſſe to ſleepe, Dormienti Chriſto in cruce, facta eſt coniux Eccleſia de latere: While Chriſt ſlept on the croſſe, the Church his ſpouſe was made out of his ſide, Pſal.56. So though the preſent hope and feeling of this ioy ſlept as it were in Chriſt, yet was it not extinct: it was intermitted, not ſubuerted; ſuſpended, not excluded, ceaſing for a while in feeling, but not dying in being. And thus farre for the anſwere of theſe obiections.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED, THAT CHRIST in Soule ſuffered the paynes of hell.

BEfore I produce our arguments, I will firſt declare our opinion: Firſt, this holy trueth of Chriſts ſuffringes, is either ignorantly miſtaken, or elſe wittingly charged with ſome things that no man holdeth. 1. That we ſhould affirme, that Chriſt ſuffered in his ſoule the whole paynes of the damned in hell: and all the puniſhments due to the reprobate, *Feuard.p.*443. This we ſimply denie, and it is a great wrong to lay it vnto our charge: I haue anſwered this cauill before, in the beginning, *Err.*7. 2. It is ſuppoſed, as though wee ſhould ſend Chriſtes ſoule to the locall place of torment, and vpon this ſuppoſition we are vrged with the helliſh darkeneſſe, and fierie flames, and endleſſe torments, which are adiuncts to the locall place of the damned, not conſequents of the hell, which Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule, *Feuard.p.*444.*conf.*2. 3. It is conceiued, as though we ſhould enwrap Chriſts ſoule within thoſe paines of the damned, which are not endured without ſinne, as deſperation, indignation, finall reiection, *Feuard.pag.*446.*conf.*5. Farre be it from vs to haue any ſuch meaning.

Secondly, for the further declaration of our mind, we affirme hell paynes in Chriſts ſoule, with theſe three conditions: that there be neyther indignitie offered to his heauenly perſon; iniurie to his holy nature; nor impoſſibilitie to his glorious worke: all ſuch paynes of hell then, as Chriſt might haue ſuffered, his perſon not diſhonoured, his nature with ſinne not defiled, his worke of our redemption not hindered; we do conſtantly beleeue accordingly by our bleſſed Sauiour to haue been ſuſtained.

Thirdly, becauſe it is expected that leauing generall and ambiguous termes, we ſhould expreſſe in particular, what ſorrowes of hell our meaning is to aſcribe vnto Chriſts ſuffrings; I will alſo, for full ſatisfaction in that behalfe, deſcend to ſome ſpeciall points.

In hell then wee conſider: 1. the neceſſarie adiunctes: 2. the effects: 3. the puniſhment it ſelfe: The inſeparable adiuncts and neceſſary members of hell are theſe, 1. The place, which is infernall. 2. The time, perpetuall. 3. Darkeneſſe vnſpeakeable. 4. The miniſters and torments, the ſpirits and diuels irreconciliable. 2. The effects are chiefly theſe two: Firſt, the depriuation of all vertue, grace, godlineſſe: Secondly, the reall poſſeſſion of all vice, impietie, blaſphemie. All theſe we do remoue as farre off from the holy ſoule of Chriſt, as heauen is from hell; the Eaſt from the Weſt; darkenes from light. 3. The puniſhment of hell it ſelfe conſiſteth in theſe foure: firſt, there is an horrible ſight and guiltie conſcience of ſinne: as Origen ſaith, Quandam veluti ſcelerum hiſtoriam vident ante oculos ſuos expoſitam: They ſee as a certaine ſtorie of their ſinnes ſet before their eyes: this is the worme that dyeth not, Mark.9.44. Secondly, they feele the moſt iuſt wrath of God lying vpon them for their ſinne; hereof is their weeping, Matth.8.12. Thirdly, there is cruell indignation in them, horrible outcries, blaſphemie, fretting, for the horrible torments, which they ſuffer: hence proceedeth the gnaſhing of their teeth, Matth.8.12. Fourthly, they lie tormented in endleſſe payne, without all hope or comfort: and this is the fire, that neuer goeth out, Mark.9.44. So then theſe foure; a fearefull impreſſion of ſinnes, comfortleſſe dereliction, horrible indignation, endleſſe deſperation; that is, the worme not dying, weeping, gnaſhing of teeth, the fire neuer going out; do make vp the iuſt meaſure of the torments of hell: The two laſt of theſe, impatient indignation, violent deſperation Chriſt muſt needes be freed from, who both patiently endured his Fathers correction, and confidently expected his deliuerance, and reſtitution: the other two were in Chriſt, though not as in the reprobate; impreſſion of ſinnes, not his owne, but ours laid vpon him, and griefe for the ſame; and dereliction or reiection for the time of his feeling. Firſt, the adiuncts of hell Chriſt is freed from for the dignitie of his perſon: it was not fit, that the Sonne of God, the heire of heauen, ſhould be ſhut vp in hell, or that he ſhould euer be tormented, who is neuer from Gods preſence ſequeſtred, or that the light of the world ſhould be cloſed vp in darkeneſſe: or he that bindeth the ſpirits, to be bound of them. Secondly, the effects or rather defects of hell, the neceſſitie of the worke of Chriſt doth exempt him from: for if hee had beene eyther voyd of grace, or poſſeſſed with vice, he could not haue beene the redeemer of the world: for the want of vertue, he could not haue redeemed others; for the preſence of ſinne, he ſhould haue beene redeemed himſelfe. Thirdly, from fretting indignation, and fearefull deſperation, the pietie and ſanctitie of his nature doth preſerue him: who being without ſinne, could neyther by indignation diſpleaſe his father, nor by deſperation deſtroy himſelfe.

Fourthly, thus then we doubt not to deliuer our opinion, that our bleſſed Sauiour, as in himſelfe he bare all the ſinnes of the elect; ſo he alſo ſuffered the whole puniſhment of body and ſoule due vnto vs for the ſame, which we ſhould haue endured if hee had not ſatisfied for it: and ſo conſequently we affirme, that he felt the anguiſh of ſoule, and horror of Gods wrath, and ſo in ſoule entred into the torments of hell for vs, ſuſtained them and vanquiſhed them.

Thus that reuerend Paſtor and Miniſter of Chriſt, in honor of Chriſts paſſion hath written, Cum iram Dei ſibi propoſitam videret, quatenus ad eius tribunal totius mundi peccatis oneratus ſe ſiſtebat, neceſſe illi fuit, profundam mortis abyſſum exhorreſcere: When he ſaw the wrath of God ſet before him, preſenting himſelfe before Gods tribunall, loaden with the ſinnes of the whole world; it was neceſſarie for him to feare the deepe bottomleſſe pitte of death: Caluin. in Matth.26.v.39. And againe: Cum ſpecies Chriſto obiecta eſt, quaſi Deo aduerſo iam eſſet exitio deuotus, horrore correptus eſt, quo centies cuncti mortales fuiſſent abſorpti, ipſe autem mirifica ſpiritus virtute victor euaſit: Such an obiect being offered to Chriſts view, as though, God being ſet againſt him, he were appoynted to deſtruction, he was with horror affrighted, which was able an hundred times to haue ſwallowed vp all mortall creatures, but he by the wonderfull power of his ſpirite eſcaped with victory, Caluin. in Matth.27.v.46.

To the like effect, that excellent learned man, hath maintayned the trueth in the name of the whole Church of England, in his anſwere to the Rhemiſts: What diſhonour was it to our Sauiour Chriſt, to ſuffer that, which was neceſſarie for our redemption, namely, that torment of hell, which we had deſerued, and which the iuſtice of God required, that he ſhould endure for our redemption: or rather, what is more to the honour of Chriſt, then that he vouchſafed to deſcend into hell for vs, and to abide that bitter paine, which we had deſerued to ſuffer eternally: and what may rather be called hell, then the anguiſh of ſoule, which he ſuffered, when he being yet God, complained, that hee was forſaken of God? Fulk. in 2. Act. ſect.11. This is deliuered by this worthie diuine, as the opinion of the Catholike Church of God, and the true teachers thereof: as may appeare in the title to the booke. Therefore accordingly we confidently affirme, that Chriſt in ſoule deſcended into hell for vs, and endured the bitter paines and torments thereof, which we had deſerued and ſhould otherwiſe haue payed, if he in his owne perſon had not ſatisfied for them.

Fiftly, to remoue certaine doubts which may here ariſe, becauſe it is obiected, that the ſoule ſufferings of Chriſt ſhould haue diſſolued the vnion of his perſon, Feuar. p.474. lin.21.

1. As the ſenſe of damnation and ſeparation in Dauid, when he complained he was forſaken of God, Pſalm.22.1. And caſt out of his ſight, Pſalm.31.22. did not extinguiſh grace or faith in Dauid; much leſſe did they in Chriſt. 2. And we doe diſtinguiſh in Chriſt, Inter ſenſum naturæ & fidei notitiam, Betweene the preſent ſenſe of his nature, and the knowledge of faith: as that learned interpreter ſaith, Caluin. in 27. Matth. v.46. That Chriſts faith and hope fayled not, though in his naturall ſenſe and feeling he was perplexed. 3. His ſoule tormented with ſorrow, was no more ſeparated from the Godhead, then his bodie yeelding to death.

2. Deeper in deſpaire and ſinfull aſſaultes wee confeſſe others to haue been then Chriſt: but ſuch a ſpectacle of all fearefull and vnſpeakable torments in bodie and ſoule endured without ſinne neuer was, as Chriſt: we muſt not ſo extenuate Chriſts ſufferings, which were a ſatisfaction for all mens ſinnes, as to make other mens temptations equall to them. This were a great iniurie to his paſſion, and notable vnthankfulnes in vs to make ſo light account of them.

1. Chriſt ſuffered that hell,which we ſhould,which was more than the paines of hell metaphorically taken. 2. And hell paines were due vnto vs otherwiſe, then by contemplation of them; we ſhould not haue knowne or pittied them in others, but felt them in our ſelues: and Chriſt by way of pittie and pietie prayed for them that crucified him: Father forgiue them, they know not what they doe, Luke 23.34. But when he complaineth, My God,my God,why haſt thou forſaken me, here is more then contemplation,or commiſeration of others;for he ſpeaketh of himſelfe, and from his own feeling. Thirdly,if 1. Chriſt ſuſtained Gods wrath, as you ſay, then he felt the aſſaults of ſorrow in his ſoule,there was more then an offer or attempt onely: 2. When Sathan tempted Chriſt in the deſert, he did not conquer him by repelling him at the firſt, but by fighting with him, and entring into the liſtes as it were with him,he ſubdued him. 3. And the Apoſtle ſaith, He ſuffered when he was tempted,Hebr.2.18. He was not onely aſſaulted with temptation in his ſoule, but encountred with; not tempted onely but ſuffered: yet we graunt, that ſome temptations Chriſt wreſtled with, and repelled at the firſt, not faſtening at all vpon him, ſuch as were accompanied with ſinne: Cum deſperatione luctatus eſt: As he wreſtled with deſperation, but was not ouercome: *Caluin.in Matth.*27.*v.*46. But ſuch ſorrowes of ſoule which he ſuſtained without ſinne,he was not onely aſſaulted,but for the time poſſeſſed with, as the Prophet ſaith: he was, Vir dolorum, a man of ſorrowes, and had experience of our infirmities: and as the Septuagint doe well tranſlate it: ἄνθρωπος ἐν πληγῇ ὢν, καὶ εἰδὼς φέρειν: A man ſet in the plague, and knowing how to beare,&c. Chriſt then had in his ſoule actuall experience of our ſorrowes. 5. Neither doe we ſay that Chriſt ſuffered the ſame paines,which the damned doe, for they ſuffer them not without ſinne and deſperation, nor in the ſame manner, for they ſuffer them eternally: but with theſe two exceptions of iniquitie and eternitie, we ſay that Chriſt endured more in his ſoule, then euer any ſoule in the world did or could doe.

Sixtly, though we miſlike not Caluines ſenſe, where he ſaith, Chriſtus diros in anima cruciatus damnati & perditi hominis pertulit: Chriſt ſuffered in his ſoule the horrible torments of a damned and forlorne man: *Inſtitut.lib.*2.*c.*16.*ſect.*10. yet we will forbeare to vſe this phraſe, becauſe the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, and leaſt the weake might take offence at it: yet the Scripture vſeth words equiualent vnto them,for what elſe, is derelictus, deſertus, forſaken,then damnatus,perditus, for the time to be forlorne and as damned? But this we confidently deliuer as agreeable to the Scriptures,that ſinne and perpetuitie ſet apart, Chriſt more ſharpely and vehemently felt Gods wrath then any man euer did or ſhall, yea,we except not the very reprobate and damned. Firſt, becauſe the Scripture ſaith,that God laid vpon him the ſinnes of vs all, Iſay 53.6. then all the ſinnes of the world concurring together, muſt needs bring with them a greater horror, than the ſinnes of one man. Secondly, Chriſt was more able to beare this burthen, then all men in the worlde, though their ſtrength were ioyned together: ſo that he alone was able to treade the winepreſſe of Gods wrath,Iſay 63.3. Thirdly, Chriſts hell ſorrowes were meritorious,and fully ſatisfactory for our euerlaſting puniſhment,and therefore in greatnes were to exceede all other, as being anſwerable to Gods iuſtice: but no mans ſufferings beſide haue merite or ſatisfaction.

Seuenthly,that it may appeare,how Chriſt ſuſtained the wrath of God,felt the ſorrowes of hell, and was as forſaken of God, yet without ſinne; there are foure conſiderations neceſſarie to be remembred,as the Fathers haue obſerued them.

1. Chriſt is now ſet before vs as a meere man,his diuine power repreſſing and withdrawing it ſelfe: as Ambroſe ſaith, when Chriſt had cried out, that he was forſaken, Euidens manifeſtatio conteſtantis Dei ſeceſſionem diuinitatis & corporis: An euident manifeſtation of God conteſting the departure of the diuinitie and his bodie: *In Luk.*22. he meaneth not a ſeparation of the vnion of the Godhead,but an intermiſſion onely of the operation.

2. Chriſt muſt be conſidered, as now hauing taken our perſon vpon him, who in himſelfe was holy,harmeleſſe,innocent,yet now for vs preſented vnto God as a pledge for our ſinnes: as Ambroſe ſaith,Pro me & in me doluit,qui pro ſe nihil habuit,quod doleret: For me and in me he ſorrowed, that had nothing to ſorrow for in himſelfe, *lib.*2.*de fid.c.*3.

3. We muſt make a difference betweene the aſſurance of faith in Chriſt, and the ſenſe of his humane nature: who at the ſame time when he complayned in his humane ſenſe, yet was firme and ſtable in faith:as may appeare in that he ſaid, My God,my God;which ſheweth his confidence: So Ambroſe againe ſaith,Senſu hominis dixi animam meam eſſe turbatam;ſenſu hominis eſuriui;ſenſu hominis rogaui: In the humane ſenſe and feeling I ſaid, My ſoule is troubled, in humane ſenſe I was hungrie, I prayed,&c.*de incarnat.c.*7.

4. We muſt not meaſure Chriſts actions according to our owne affections: to imagine, that becauſe we in temptation are diſtempered,that Chriſt therefore in this agonie could not be ſetled: as Auguſtine fitly vſeth this reſemblance: Quemadmodum ſolet accidere, vt quando tranſeuntes nubes bes per obſcura noctis intuemur, earum caligine ſic acies noſtra turbetur, vt in contrarium nobis ſydera currere videantur, &c. Like as it falleth out, when wee ſee the clowdes gliding in the ayre in a darke night, they doe obſcure our ſight, that we thinke the ſtarres goe a contrarie way, de diuerſ. ſerm. 15. So the darknes of our mindes, and corruption of our nature is the cauſe, that wee iudge amiſſe of Chriſts holie actions, meaſuring them by our ſelues. Theſe foreſaid reſpects then being obſerued, and Chriſt in this maner conſidered, there can follow no inconuenience, in attributing to Chriſts ſoule the ſorrowes of hell. But I haue haue ſtayed too long in the explanation of our opinion: the arguments now follow.

Argum. 1. Pſal. 18.5. The ſorrowes of hell, circumdederunt me, did compaſſe me round about. Pſal. 88.3. My ſoule is filled with euils, and my life draweth neere to hell. Pſal. 86.3. Thou haſt deliuered my ſoule from the neathermoſt hell. In theſe places the Prophet ſpeaketh in the perſon of Chriſt: and the Papiſts doe admit, that the Hebrue ſheol, is here taken for hell properly and not for the graue: therefore againſt them and in their ſenſe theſe places do ſtrongly conclude for the hel-ſorrowes or ſuffrings of Chriſt.

1. For the further ſtrengthening of this argument, firſt wee doe not ſay, that Chriſts ſoule was oppreſſed or vanquiſhed of hell, but yet it was more than attempted or aſſaulted onely: for hee ſaith, thou haſt deliuered my ſoule from hell, Pſal. 86.13. therefore before hee was in the ſorrowes of hell, out of the which he was deliuered, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 124.7. Our ſoule is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fouler, the ſnare is broken and wee are deliuered. If the bird had not been in the ſnare, what neede the ſnare to be broken to deliuer the bird?

2. Firſt, in theſe Pſalmes there are euident propheſies of Chriſt: as Pſal. 18.43. Thou haſt made me head of the heathen, a people whom I haue not knowne ſhall ſerue me: verſ. 50. Great deliuerances hee giueth to the King, and ſheweth mercie to Dauid and his ſeede for euer: this euerlaſting ſeed of Dauid is to be referred to Chriſt. Secondly, but becauſe it may be obiected, that although ſome places are vnderſtood of Chriſt, yet it followeth not that theſe ſhould: I anſwere, that the very place alleaged, Pſal. 88.3. is by the Fathers applied to Chriſt: as that in the next verſe, Liber inter mortuos, free among the dead, Auguſtine applieth to Chriſt, epiſt. 99. And S. Ambr. Liber inter mortuos, qui mortis vincula neſciuit, non captus ab inferis, ſed qui operatus ſit in inferno: Free among the dead, which knew not the bands of death, he was not captiued of hell, but wrought in hell, lib. 3. de fid. c. 3. Hee knew not the bands of death, to be held of them, or ſo to be bound as his vertue be hindered. I alleage this teſtimonie onely to ſhew, that the Fathers vnderſtoode this text of Chriſt, not medling here with their opinion of Chriſts locall deſcent to deliuer the Patriarkes.

3. Firſt, neither can this place be vnderſtood of the locall place of hell: for he ſaith, Pſal. 88.3. My ſoule is filled with euils: verſ. 15. Thy terrors haue I ſuffered from my youth: but the Fathers, that hold a locall deſcent of Chriſts ſoule into hell, doe cleere him of all ſuffring there: as Auguſtine writeth to this effect, In dolore ibi conſtitutos liberaſſe non dubito, dolores ipſe non perpeſſus, &c. I doubt not but hee deliuered others which were in griefe, but hee himſelfe ſuffered no griefe, epiſt. 99. Wherefore if neither the locall place of hell be here vnderſtood, nor yet the material graue, which is no place for the ſoule; it remaineth, that this pit, graue, darknes, depth, hell (for all theſe names it hath) be referred to the ſorrowes of Chriſts ſoule: as Ambroſe againe expoundeth the third verſe: Anima mea repleta malis, anima mea vtique, non diuinitas: My ſoule is filled with euils, my ſoule, not my diuinitie, lib. 3. de fid. c. 3.

Argum. 2. Another place, which I vrge againſt the Papiſts, is Act. 2.24. where wee reade thus, as their vulgar Latine text tranſlateth: Solutis doloribus inferni: The ſorrowes of hell being looſed, for it was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of it: the Greeke hath the ſorrowes of death, but I preſſe them with their owne and onely authentike tranſlation, the ſorrowes of hell being looſed: but Chriſt felt not the ſorrowes of hell after death: Ergo, he felt them in his ſoule, while he liued.

1 Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt looſed the ſorrowes of hell, not becauſe he was held or caught of them, but leſt hee might be caught: like as the ſnare of the hunter may be ſayd to be broke, leſt it might catch or entangle, not becauſe it hath alreadie taken.

2 2. Chriſt is ſayd to haue looſed the ſorrowes or bands of hell, wherewith others were held, and not himſelfe, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima, c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 5.

Contra. 1. The firſt expoſition is contrary to the text that followeth, verſ. 27. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell: If Chriſts ſoule be not left or forſaken in hell, yet it followeth it was in hell. 2. The word, κρατεῖσθαι, to be holden, betokeneth properly, a faſt or ſure holding, as Matth. 7.8. Ye hold faſt the tradition of the elders: ſo that the meaning is not, it was impoſſible hee ſhould be caught, but not held, bound or detained. 3. The phraſe of the Scripture is otherwiſe, Pſal. 124.7. Our ſoule is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fouler, the ſnare is broken and wee are deliuered; the eſcaping is out of the ſnare, as the bird is firſt taken, and then deliuered. 4. Origen alſo ſo expoundeth vpon theſe words, Cantic. 2.10. Ariſe my loue: Surrexi à mortuis fractis mortis ianuis & inferni vinculis diſſolutis: I roſe from the dead the gates of death being broken, and the bands of hell looſed, &c. The bands of hell were looſed, as the gates or barres of death broken: but the gates of death were broken, not before Chriſt entred into death, but after he had yeelded to death: ſo then were the bands of hell looſed after they had faſtened vpon Chriſt.

2. 1. The ſecond expoſition is contrarie to the very words: it was impoſſible for him (he ſaith not for other) but for himſelfe to bee held of them. 2. In the next verſe, 25. the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe ſaying, Dauid ſaith concerning him, &c. he ſpeaketh of Chriſts perſon, and not of any other. 3. The Apoſtle giueth this as a reaſon, why God raiſed vp Chriſt, looſing the ſorrowes or bands of death: for him then the bands were broken, who was raiſed vp againe: but Chriſt was only raiſed vp againe.

Argum. 3. That the whole puniſhment of bodie and ſoule which was due vnto vs, Chriſt our redeemer was to ſuffer and ſatisfie for in his owne perſon. But the torments and terrors of hell, and the vehement ſenſe of Gods wrath, are that puniſhment which did belong to the ſoule: Ergo, Chriſt did ſuffer the terrors of hell.

Anſ. If Chriſt ſuffered the whole puniſhment of hell due vnto vs: then *darknes, Feuard p.*444. *conf.*2. *lin.*10. damnation, malediction, deſperation. 446. *conf.*5. ſecond death and deſtruction for euer. *p.*453. *lin.*3.

Contra. 1. The whole puniſhment implieth the whole kinde or ſubſtance of the puniſhment, not all the circumſtances, and the very ſame manner: the whole puniſhment then is the whole kinde of puniſhment that is in bodie and ſoule which Chriſt ought to haue ſuffered, though not in the ſame manner and circumſtance: neither for the place of hell, locally, nor for the time eternally, nor for the manner, ſinfully. The firſt of theſe excludeth vtter darknes, which is an inſeparable adiunct of the place of hell; the ſecond freeth Chriſt from eternall damnation; the third doth cleere him from deſperation, which cannot be committed without ſin. 2. And in making theſe exceptions doe we otherwiſe ſpeake, than the Scripture doth, which ſaith, Heb. 2. 17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren: will you here take the Apoſtle ſhort, and inferre, he was therefore like vs in ſinne? therefore giue vs leaue to expound our meaning, as the Apoſtle doth, Heb. 4. 15. He was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. So then like as, when wee ſay, Chriſt tooke our whole nature, which is a true Catholike ſaying, and vſed of the Fathers: Totum hominem deus ille ſuſcepit: God tooke whole man, Fulgent. ad Thraſimund. lib. 3. we meane not, that he tooke our ſinfull nature: ſo in this ſaying, Chriſt was to ſuffer our whole puniſhment, all ſuch puniſhments as cannot be ſuffered without ſinne, as deſperation, finall reprobation, are manifeſtly excepted.

3. If you will allow vs this exception of ſinne in Chriſts ſatisfactorie ſacrifice, I truſt you will diſpenſe alſo with the perpetuitie, which includeth an impoſſibilitie: for the Apoſtle ſaith, it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſorrowes of death, Act. 2. 24. and the reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt was without ſinne, and therefore could not for euer be held in deaths bondage: If then where there is no iniquitie, there can be of puniſhment no perpetuitie, you muſt alſo yeeld vs this ſecond exception of perpetuitie, becauſe of Chriſts holines and pietie.

4. For the third exception of the place of hell: firſt, the holines of Chriſts perſon doth exempt him, becauſe it is prepared onely for the diuell and his angels, and the euerlaſtingly accurſed, Matth. 25. 41. Secondly, if Chriſt by his innocencie is freed from the perpetuitie, ſo is hee alſo from the very place and obſcuritie, becauſe they that are there neuer come from thence, Luk. 16. 26. Thirdly, it is alſo a queſtion worth the asking, where the ſite of hell ſhould bee; whether the place make hell, or rather the wrath and abſence of God doth not cauſe it; and whether the diuels be not in hell? S. Peter ſaith, they are caſt downe to hell, and kept in chaynes of darknes, 2. Pet. 2. 4. and Saint Paul calleth the diuell, the prince that ruleth in the ayre, Epheſ. 2. 2. the ayre then is the diuels hell. So Bernard ſaith, In pœnam ſuam diabolus locum in aëre iſto medium inter cœlum & terram ſortitus eſt, &c. The diuell for his puniſhment is allotted to haue his place in the ayre in the midſt betweene heauen and earth, in Cantic. ſerm. 54. And Auguſtine before him thus expoundeth S. Peter: Mali angeli carceribus caliginis in diem iudicij, vt Petrus ayt, ſeruantur, & iam pœnaliter hunc infernum .i. caliginoſum aerem tanquam carcerem acceperunt: The euill angels are reſerued in chaynes of darknes for the day of iudgement, as S. Peter ſaith, and euen now haue their priſon, penally, this infernall and darke ayre, de natur. bon. cap. 32. Yet neither Auguſtine, nor wee doe thinke, but that the diuels are appointed to a further puniſhment at the day of iudgement: ſo the Apoſtle expreſſeth 2. Pet. 2. 4. So the diuell himſelfe feareth and expecteth: Luk. 8. 31. The ſpirits deſire, not to be ſent into the deepe. Thus much Auguſtine confeſſeth: Diabolo alia mors præparatur in æterno igne tartari: Another death is prepared for the diuell in euerlaſting fire, lib. 4. de Trinitat. c. 13. Yet thus much wee haue gained, that, ſeeing this ayre is the diuels preſent hell, hell may bee in this world: and therefore it is neither impoſſible, nor improbable, that the croſſe was Chriſts hell.

5. Like as Chriſt then is ſaid to beare all our iniquities, Iſay. 53. 11. (all is not there expreſſed: but who doubteth, that he bare all and not onely ſome) ſo is hee truly ſaid to beare all our puniſhment: but he bare our ſinnes without ſinne, neither was hee to beare them for euer, nor to carrie them downe to hell with him; in all which manner we ſhould haue borne them, but to faſten them onely to his croſſe, Coloſſ.2.11. ſo giue vs leaue to ſay, he did beare all our puniſhment, though not as we ſhould haue borne it, that is, ſinfully, eternally and helliſhly; but to finiſh all vpon the croſſe, and in ſuch ſort, as Gods iuſtice was ſatisfied, his perſon not diſgraced, nor his holines defiled, and yet mans ſaluation fully perfited.

6. And leſt this phraſe of ſpeech, that Chriſt ſuffered whatſoeuer wee ſhould haue ſuffered, might be thought onely now to be taken vp; Saint Hierome long before hath ſo ſpoken and written: Factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, vt nos liberaret à maledicto, quod enim nos pro noſtris debebamus ſceleribus ſuſtinere, ille pro nobis paſſus eſt, &c. He was made a curſe for vs, to deliuer vs from the curſe: for that, which we ought to haue ſuſtained for our ſinnes, he ſuffered for vs, in Iſai.cap.53. And it followeth: Ex quo perſpicuum eſt ſicut corpus flagellatum, &c. ita animam verè doluiſſe: By the which it is manifeſt, as his bodie was whipped, ſo his ſoule was truly grieued, &c. But it will be here ſaid vnto vs, that Hierome ſaith not, Chriſt ſuffered all, that was due to our ſinnes.

Anſw. 1. As though an indefinite propoſition is not for the moſt part equiualent to an vniuerſall, though it haue not the note of vniuerſalitie: as when we ſay, men are mortall, it is euident, that we meane all: but it is not ſo properly ſaid, men are good, wiſe, &c. becauſe theſe ſpeeches are particular, all are not ſo. Yea the Scripture ſo vſeth to ſpeake, Iohn.1.29. Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world; I hope all ſinne be vnderſtood: for there is no ſinne for the which Chriſt dyed not: Mark.16.16. He that beleeueth, &c. I hope the meaning be, omnis qui credit, euery one that beleeueth, though the note be not expreſſed.

2. Saint Hieromes meaning is plaine, that Chriſt ſuffered all: for he was made that by ſuffring, which we are deliuered from, as his firſt wordes doe import; but wee are deliuered from the curſe both of bodie and ſoule: Ergo. 2. He ſheweth in the latter part of the ſentence, that hee meaneth all both the whipping of the bodie, and true griefe of the ſoule: and ſo I hope this teſtimonie is cleered.

*Argum.*4. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, he carried our ſorrowes, Iſay.53.4. that is, all: Ergo, he did beare the ſorrowes of hell.

For the further explication of our meaning, and ſtrengthening of this argument: firſt, though the Prophet doe not put to the ſigne all, yet Matthew doth, that beſt knew the Prophets meaning, Matth.18.16. He healed all that were ſicke, that it might be fulfilled, &c. hee tooke our infirmities and bare our ſickneſſes: If Chriſt fulfilled the Prophet in healing all ſickneſſes, then the Prophet ſpake of all. And againe, Matth.4.23. He healed euery diſeaſe, and euery ſickneſſe: not ſome, but all.

2. Chriſt indeede bare theſe ſorrowes for vs, but they were his ſorrowes, not ours; as the words following doe well declare, he was wounded, &c. were not the wounds of his bodie his? ſo were the ſorrowes. 2. If they were our ſorrowes, not his, then our owne ſorrowes redeeme vs, which I thinke is no good doctrine. 3. Ambroſe in deede ſaith, Doles domine Ieſu non tua ſed mea vulnera; quid mirum quod pro omnibus doluit, qui pro vno fleuit, &c. Thou lamenteſt Lord Ieſus not thy wounds, but mine (that is ſinnes) no maruaile if he grieued for all, that wept for one, lib. 2. de fid. c.3. The occaſion of Chriſts griefe was the wound of our ſinnes: but the griefe was his owne: as the griefe was his owne when he ſorrowed for Iudas, ſo was it, when he grieued for all. And againe in the ſame place he ſaith, Mœror eius mœrorem noſtrum aboleuit: His griefe did aboliſh ours: He maketh a manifeſt difference betweene Chriſts griefe and ours: therefore Chriſts griefe in propertie was not ours, &c.

3. Whereas Feuardentius by theſe ſorrowes vnderſtandeth onely the infirmities of the bodie, as hunger, thirſt, wearines, &c. p.415.lin.1. I anſwere, 1. The Septuagint tranſlate, τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν φέρει, He bare our ſinnes. 2. If he refuſe the Septuagint, let him take Hieromes expoſition, Si ille qui peccatum non fecit pro nobis doluit & peccata noſtra portauit, &c. If he, which did no ſinne, grieued for vs, and bare our ſinnes, how much more we, lib.2.aduer.Pelag. 3. If Hierome content him not, Peters interpretation cannot bee refuſed, who following the Septuagint in the ſame words and ſenſe ſaith, He bare our ſinnes in his bodie, &c. 1.Pet.2.24. But he will ſay, what is this to the purpoſe? Yes very much, for if the Apoſtle interpreteth ſinnes, where the Prophet ſaith ſorrowes, what are they elſe but the ſorrowes of Chriſts ſoule for our ſinnes? 4. If by ſorrowes we vnderſtand infirmities, I hope the infirmities of the ſoule ſhall haue place here, as well as the infirmities of our bodies, ſeeing Chriſt tooke all our infirmities, as Matthew expoundeth: and ſo ſaith Fulgentius, Animam rationalem habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit & pertulit: Chriſt hauing a reaſonable ſoule, did take alſo and beare without ſinne, whatſoeuer infirmitie of the ſoule: lib.3.ad Thraſimund. If then he bare all the infirmities of the ſoule, then the internall ſorrow and ſoule ſufferings for ſinne.

*Argum.*5. I will adde ſome teſtimonies of the fathers: Origene maketh Chriſts hell vpon the croſſe: Vnumquodque peccatorum, ob quæ Chriſtus iturus ad inferos, portæ ſunt inferorum: Euery ſinne, for the which Chriſt was to goe into hell, are the gates of hell, Tract.1. in Matth. But I truſt no man will ſay that Chriſt after his death went into hell, to ſuffer for our ſinnes. Againe, Ille dominabatur in nobis donec daretur ei pro nobis redemptio anima Ieſu, decepto videlicet, & exiſtimanti, quaſi poſſet dominari eius, & non videnti, quod non poterit ſuſtinere in tenendo eam tormentis: data autem anima eius in redemptionem pro multis non manſit apud eum, cui fuerat data; propter hoc dicit propheta, quoniam non derelinques animam meam in inferno: The diuell had rule ouer vs, till the ſoule of Chriſt was giuen him for our redemption; he being deceiued, and thinking that he might alſo beare rule ouer it, and not perceiuing, that he could not endure to holde it long in torment: but Chriſts ſoule being giuen to be a redemption for many, did not ſtay with him, to whom it was giuen; and for this the Prophet ſaith, Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell, Tract.12. in Matth. Here Origene affirmeth, that Chriſts ſoule was tormented in hell, which was not after his death: Ergo, it was while he liued: the reſt that Origene ſaith, that Chriſts ſoule was giuen as a price of our redemption to the diuell, and by him tormented, ſeemeth ſomewhat hard, and to that end I alleage him not, but onely to proue the hell torments of Chriſts ſoule, which is here affirmed.

S. Ambroſe thus witneſſeth: Quæ erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi vt caro, quæ peccauerat, per ſe redimeretur: quod peccauerat igitur, hoc redemptum eſt: non eſt ergo immolata diuinitas Chriſti, quia non peccauerat diuinitas Chriſti: hoc obtulit Chriſtus quod induit; induit autem, quod non habuit: What other cauſe was there of Chriſts incarnation, but that the fleſh, which had ſinned, might be redeemed by it ſelfe; therefore Chriſts deitie was not ſacrificed, becauſe it had not ſinned: Chriſt offered that which he tooke, he tooke that which he had not: de incarnat. c. 6. Though he giue an inſtance onely of the fleſh, yet his reaſons doe alſo holde for the ſoule. Firſt, that which was to be redeemed, was redeemed by it ſelfe, the fleſh by the fleſh: Ergo, the ſoule by the ſoule. Secondly, whatſoeuer had ſinned, was to be ſacrificed: Ergo, the ſoule alſo which properly ſinneth, the diuine nature onely is excepted. Thirdly, whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke that hee had not before, was offered: but he tooke a ſoule as well as fleſh. Ergo.

Bernard: Non derelinques animam meam in inferno: infernus quidem & carcer animæ, rea conſcientia eſt: Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell: the hell and priſon of the ſoule is a guiltie conſcience, in aſſumpt. ſerm.4. He maketh the griefe of Chriſts ſoule his hell. Againe, Sunt gradus in aſcendendo & deſcendendo; in deſcendendo primus gradus à cœlo vſque ad carnem, ſecundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quouſque deſcendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat iam certè dicere rex noſter, quid vltrà debui facere & non feci? There are degrees in aſcending, and deſcending: the firſt degree in Chriſts deſcending was from heauen to the fleſh; the ſecond to the croſſe, the third to death: behold how farre hee deſcended, could hee deſcend any more? ſurely our King might haue ſayd, what could I haue done more, and I did it not? ſerm. paru. 18. He maketh the whole deſcenſion of Chriſt to be finiſhed before and in his death: therfore in his ſentence Chriſts ſoule deſcended into hell vpon the croſſe, or not at all.

But it will be obiected againe out of Bernard, where he ſaith: Semel ille deſcendit (i. ad inferos) non ſanguis, ſed anima, cum corpus penderet exanime ſuper terram: Hee once deſcended to hell, not his blood, but his ſoule, while his bodie did hang without life vpon the earth, Cantic. 75. I anſwere: firſt, this word (exanime) doth not alwaies ſignifie dead, but aſtonied, or halfe dead, as we ſay, exanimatus metu, aſtonied or halfe dead for feare: ſo Chriſts bodie might be ſaid to be as dead, in that long ſilence vpon the croſſe, his body being as exanimated with the grieuous tortures of his ſoule: I had rather ſo take Bernard, than to make him ſpeake contraries. Secondly, he ſaith again, Qui traduxit aëreas poteſtates & affixit cruci ſuæ, claret quia ſuper infernales officinas poteſtatem accepit: Which did traduce the ayrie powers and faſtened them to his croſſe, it is cleere that he receiued power ouer the infernall regions, &c. in die aſcenſ. ſerm.2. If Chriſt then did triumph and conquer the infernall powers and regions vpon the croſſe, what other cauſe can be aſſigned of his deſcenſion, vnleſſe we will ſay, he went thither to deliuer the Patriarkes? but Auguſtine thinketh, that Abraham and the Prophets were in ſinu Abrahæ, in the boſome of Abraham, and not in hell, epiſt.99. Thirdly, and if it be graunted that Bernard being carried away with the error of that time, to think that Chriſt went downe locally to hell to deliuer the Patriarkes, yet hee may very well hold the ſpirituall deſcending of Chriſt to hell by the ſuffrings of his ſoule, as I haue ſhewed: ſeeing the locall deſcenſion was not to ſuffer, but to conquer.

To theſe teſtimonies may be adioyned thoſe which are diſperſedly alleaged before: as firſt, of Ambroſe, argum.1. artic.4. ſecondly, Origen argum.2. artic.1. thirdly, Fulgentius argum.3. artic.1. fourthly, Auguſt. argum.3. artic.4. fiftly, Hierome argum.3. artic.6. ſixtly, Ambroſ. argum.4. artic.2. Athanaſius alſo is an euident witneſſe for vs: who hauing made mention of Adams double puniſhment, and the ſentence giuen againſt his bodie, that it ſhould returne to duſt, and againſt his ſoule, thou ſhalt dye the death; proceedeth further thus: Ac proinde opus fuit illo ipſo iudice, qui hoc decretum tulerat, vt ipſe per ſe ſententiam ſolueret ſub ſpecie condemnati, incondemnatum ſe, ſyncerumque à peccatis oſtendens, vt hominem deo reconciliaret, hominemque totum in libertatem vindicaret: And therfore fore it was needfull that the ſame Iudge, which made the decree, ſhould by himſelfe diſſolue the ſentence vnder the ſhew of a man condemned, ſhewing himſelfe vncondemned and ſincere from ſinne, to reconcile man vnto God, and reſtore whole man to libertie, de incarnat.Chriſti. If Chriſt, ſub ſpecie condemnati, vnder the ſhew of a man condemned, muſt reſtore whole man to libertie, and diſſolue the whole ſentence giuen both againſt mans bodie and ſoule: but hee could not preſent himſelfe as a man condemned in ſoule, in the locall place of hell, (for there hee ſuffered not) it followeth then that he ſhewed himſelfe as a man condemned in ſoule vpon the croſſe.

Obiect. It will be anſwered, that Athanaſius ſaith not he was condemned in ſoule, and that wee doe wreſt him againſt his minde, ſeeing he manifeſtly affirmeth Chriſts locall deſcenſion.

Cont. 1. That muſt be Athanaſius meaning, that he was as a man condemned in ſoule: for there he was as a man for vs condemned, where in himſelfe he was vncondemned and free from ſinne: but Chriſts innocencie was in his ſoule, therefore there was the condemnation chiefly.

2. He by himſelfe looſed the ſentence to reſtore whole man: as by himſelfe he looſed the ſentence for the bodie by being condemned and ſuffring in the bodie; ſo by himſelfe to looſe the ſentence againſt the ſoule, he muſt ſuffer alſo and be as condemned in ſoule.

3. We graunt Athanaſius doth hold the locall deſcenſion otherwhere; that nothing hindreth the ſenſe here: for that deſcenſion was not to ſuffer, but to conquer: but this deſcenſion and ſuffering is of a man in ſhew condemned: for like as the bodie of Chriſt ſuffered vpon the croſſe, yet afterward triumphed ouer death in the reſurrection; ſo he might think, that Chriſts ſoule though ſuffering vpon the croſſe, might notwithſtanding afterwarde make a more full conqueſt of hell.

The concluſion of all is this, that ſeeing the Prophet Dauid before ſpake of Chriſt, that the ſorrowes of hell did compaſſe him about, argum.1. and that Chriſt looſed the ſorrowes of hell, wherewith hee could not be held, argum.2. and it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould ſuſtaine the whole puniſhment of bodie and ſoule due vnto vs, argum.3. ſeeing alſo Chriſt bare all our ſorrowes, argum.4. and the Fathers herein together witneſſe with the Scriptures: it remaineth that Chriſt entred in ſoule into hell, and ſuſtained the very ſorrowes thereof for vs vpon his croſſe.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE FIRE of hell, whether it be materiall and corporall.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

Artic.18.

B*Ellarmine* vſeth this as a ſpeciall argument, againſt Chriſts ſuffering in ſoule the ſorrowes of hell, becauſe that hell is not in this life, neither can the flames thereof be kindled here, Bellar. lib.4.c.8.argum.5. And againe, he taketh vpon him to prooue that hell fire is corporall; and ſo hee imagineth his Purgatorie fire to be, which only worketh vpon ſoules, lib.2.de Purgat.c.11. So that he ſeemeth thus to thinke, that hell fire, which ſhall torment mens ſoules and bodies, is corporall onely and materiall: and that the ſenſe of Gods wrath is no part of the ſorrowes of hell, lib.4.de Chriſt.anim.c.8.argum.5.

Obiect.1. He reaſoneth thus from the Scripture: In euery place the puniſhment of the wicked is ſaid to be fire, and that the Lord ſhall iudge them, and puniſh them with fire, which muſt be taken properly, where no abſurditie followeth: and therefore the fire of hell is corporall, lib.2.de Purgat.c.11.

Anſw. 1. Some places of Scripture doe deſcribe the manner of Gods comming to iudgement, which ſhall be with fire conſuming the heauens, the earth and the mountaines: which we denie not, but that the world at the day of iudgement being a materiall ſubſtance, ſhall be conſumed with materiall and corporall fire: as Hierome ſaith, Igneus dominus totus adueniet: The Lorde ſhall come all fierie, de ſanct.diuin.legis. And Ambroſe: Teneamus hic poſiti humilitatem, vt cum vnuſquiſq; noſtrum venerit ad iudicium dei, ad illos ignes, quos tranſituri ſumus, dicat, vide humilitatem meam: Let vs hold faſt humilitie, that when euery one commeth to iudgement, to thoſe fires, which we muſt paſſe thorow, hee may ſay, behold my humilitie, ſerm.20.in Pſal.119. All this wee graunt: but it followeth not, becauſe the fire of that day ſhall be materiall, burning but for a time, and conſuming things corporall, that therefore hell fire tormenting ſpirits as well as bodies, ſhall onely be corporall.

2. Other places make mention of hell fire, but whether it is corporall or ſpirituall they ſhew not: the mentioning of brimſtone together with fire, Reuel.21.8. doth no more prooue it to bee corporall, than, where the Prophet deſcribing hell ſaith, the burning thereof is fire and much wood, Iſay.30.33. we may imagine that hell fire is kindled with wood. 2. The Prophet ſheweth in the ſame place what this brimſtone is, The breath of the Lord like a riuer of brimſtone doth kindle it.

3. Wee graunt a corporall and materiall fire in hell, but not onely, neither are all hell flames corporall, but as Bernard ſaith: In carne cruciabuntur per ignem, in ſpiritu per conſcientiæ vermem: They ſhall in their fleſh be tormented with fire, in the ſpirit by the worme of conſcience, Meditat.c.4.

*Obiect.*2. Here diuers Fathers alſo are alleaged to prooue the fire of hell to be corporall and materiall; as *Gregorie, Auguſtine: Bellarm.lib.*2.*de purg.cap.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, Gregorie in flat termes calleth it ignem incorporeum, incorporall fire: but it is anſwered that Gregorie is falſified: incorporeum, incorporall, being put for corporeum, corporall: for he ſaith afterward, that this fire doth corporaliter vrere, burne corporally. And Bellarmine doth further anſwere, that it is, mendum ſcriptorum, the fault of the writer, *lib.*2.*de purgat.c.*11.

Contra. 1. If Bellarmines copie, and our copies, and conſequently all bookes of Gregorie, haue incorporall, how is it like to be the writer or Printers fault? it is ſtraunge that there ſhould bee no true corrected copie of Gregorie. 2. We may rather ſay, that corporaliter comming after, is crept in for incorporaliter, incorporally. 3. If Bellarmine alleage Gregorie for purgatorie fire, how can it ſerue for hell fire, ſeeing the one they imagine to be temporall, the other is eternall? 4. Admitting Gregorie to be corrupted, yet he is farre from affirming all hell fire and flames to bee corporall.

3. 1. Auguſtine, as he is alleaged by Bellarmine, *lib.*21.*de ciuitat.dei cap.*10. doth ſhew indeede how incorporall ſpirits after a maruellous manner may be afflicted with the paine of corporall fire: but hee is farre from thinking, that there is no paine or fire in hell but materiall and corporall; nay he concludeth the contrarie, and thinketh it bee more likely, that the bodie ſhould bee afflicted with fire, the ſoule with a kinde of ſorrow as it were a worme,&c. ſo that by no meane any man thinke the bodies in hell to be ſuch, that they ſhall not be touched with the paine of fire. 2. Auguſtine himſelfe thinketh elſewhere, that the ſoules of Lazarus and the rich man, were not in loco corporeo, in any corporall place, *de Geneſ.lib.*8.*c.*5. and that the fire wherein the rich man was tormented, was no more corporall, than his tongue or finger, *lib.*21. *de ciuit.dei c.*10. and he reſolutely concludeth, Subſtantiam inferorum non eſſe corporalem, ſed ſpiritualem: That the ſubſtance of hell is not corporall, but ſpirituall, *lib.*12.*de Geneſ.c.*32. And he prooueth, that there is an hell by this experiment, becauſe many being terrified in their dreames, metuunt ne rurſus dormiant, are afraid to ſleepe againe, ibid. But this ſheweth hell to be rather a ſpirituall paine, than a corporall. Wherefore Auguſtine is farre from limiting hell to a corporall fire or paine, making the chiefe part and ſubſtance thereof ſpirituall.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THAT THE FLAMES OF HELL FIRE ARE not onely materiall and corporall.

THat as the bodies of the damned and reprobate ſhall be tormented in hell; ſo it is not vnlike but they ſhall burne euen with a materiall fire vnquenchable, it is very probable: though it be not fit that we ſhould too curiouſly ſearch into theſe ſecrets, which the faithfull ſhall neuer haue experience of. Auguſtine ſaith well: Melius eſt dubitare de occultis, quam litigare de incertis: It is better to doubt of vnknowne things, than to ſtriue for vncertaine. It is ſufficient for vs to know that hell fire is prepared for the diuell and his angels, and the damned companie. And I doubt not to ſay with Ruffinus: Siquis negat diabolum æternis ignibus mancipandum, partem cum ipſo æterni ignis accipiet, vt ſentiat, quod negauit: If any man denie that the diuell ſhall be ſubiected to euerlaſting fire, he ſhall receiue part of euerlaſting fire with him, that he may feele that, which hee denied,&c. But what manner of fire this ſhall be, it is not ſo euident: yet we are moſt ſure, that as hell paine ſhall worke vpon the ſoule, ſo there is a ſpirituall fire and torment, wherewith the ſame ſhall be afflicted: which if it be proued, then one of the chiefeſt arguments faileth them, which is vrged againſt the hell ſorrowes, which Chriſt felt in his ſoule vpon the croſſe.

*Argum.*1. Saint Iames ſaith, that the tongue is a fire, which ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature, and is inflamed or ſet on fire of hell, Iam.3.6. Such as is the fire, ſuch is the flame, the euilnes of the tongue is a fire-brand, or flame of hell fire; it is not a corporall or materiall flame; no more is that fire of hell, wherewith it is inflamed.

Againe, our Sauiour thus deſcribeth hell: Where the worme dyeth not, and the fire goeth not out, Mark.9.44. Beſide fire, there is the perpetuall gnawing worme of the conſcience. So Bernard well expoundeth: Duo mala ſunt vermis & ignis, altero roditur conſcientia, altero concremantur corpora: There are two euils, the worme and fire; with the one the conſcience is bitten; with the other, bodies are burned, *par.ſerm.*16.

*Argum.*2. The rich man is ſayd to bee in hell torments, and to bee tormented in the flame, Luk.16.23.24. but this was no materiall fire, no more than his finger was materiall, or the drop of water,which he craued : ſo much Auguſtine confeſſeth,*lib.*21.*de ciuitat.dei.c.*10. And that this was a ſtorie done,and not a ſimilitude borrowed,S.Chryſoſtome teſtifieth : Parabolæ ſunt, vbi exemplum ponitur,tacentur nomina: Thoſe be parables, when the example is ſet downe, and the names concealed,&c. But in this place, ſi verus eſt Abraham,verus eſt Lazarus, as there is a true Abraham; ſo there is a true Lazarus,&c.Hence then I conclude,that there is a fire of hell,not materiall.

*Argum.*3. The euerlaſting fire of hell is prepared for the diuell and his angels,Matth.25.41. The diuels are ſpirits,and cannot properly be tormented with corporall fire: Ergo,their proper puniſhment is ſpirituall.

Though it be graunted,as Auguſtine ſeemeth to inſinuate,*lib.*21.*de ciuitat.cap.*10.that incorporall ſpirits may be afflicted with corporall fire, after a miraculous and extraordinarie manner, as the ſoule is afflicted with the torments of the bodie, yet the force of this argument holdeth : for we ſpeake of the proper puniſhment of diuels : 1. The ſoule though it ſuffer by way of ſympathie with the bodie,yet it hath a proper griefe beſide of it owne. 2. Diuels can haue no ſuch affliction by way of ſympathie,ſeeing they haue no bodies to ſuffer by. 3. That God is able by his omnipotent power to make ſpirits feele the paine of fire,we graunt ; but becauſe hee can doe it, therefore he doth and will,is but a ſillie kind of reaſoning. 4. It is as vſuall for the body to ſuffer with and from the ſoule, as for the ſoule to be affected and afflicted with the bodie : the care and griefe of the ſoule doth ſooner weaken the bodie, than the ſickneſſe of the bodie doth diſtreſſe the ſoule : may not we as well reaſon from Gods power;that he is able to make a corporall ſubſtance,to feele an incorporall paine, and therefore euen the bodies of the damned ſhall be tormented with an incorporall fire in hell? 5. But that the diuels haue a ſpirituall puniſhment beſide the corporall fire of hell (to yeeld ſo much for this time) it is thus euident ; becauſe the diuels are now in torment. S.Peter ſaith,they are in hell,and kept in chaines of darknes,2.Pet.2.4.but in hell they cannot be without paine : but in fire they are not ; for they are princes of the ayre,as S.Paul ſayth,Epheſ.2.2. there is their place; as Bernard ſaith, Elige tibi locũ in aëre non ad ſedendũ, ſed ad volandũ,vt qui tentaſti concutere ſtatum æternitatis pœnam ſentias propriæ fluctuationis : Chuſe thy place in the ayre,not to ſit,but to flit,that as thou diddeſt trie to ſhake eternitie,ſo thou maiſt be now puniſhed with mutabilitie: de 12.gradib. The diuell then is in the ayre, and now in torment : but in the ayre is no fire, Ergo,hee is in torment without materiall fire. Origen ſpeaketh to the ſame purpoſe,cited vpon an other occaſion before : that when the diuell ſeeth a man giuen to ſtudie the word of God, in hoc eorum flamma eſt, in iſto vruntur incendio, here is their flame, and in this fire are they ſcorched, &c. The fire of enuie then and malice,without any materiall flame, doth ſcorch the euill ſpirits.

I omit here Origens reaſons againſt the corporall fire of hell: firſt,becauſe hell is full of darknes, and the propertie of corporall fire is to lighten or illuminate : but ſo ſhall not that fire in hell: Neſcio, ſi ille ignis,qui in futuro ſeculo incendit,habeat & aliquid,quod illuminet : I cannot tell(ſaith he) whether that fire,which ſhall burne in the next world,haue any thing to giue light with,*Hom.*13. Exod. Secondly,he vſeth a better reaſon than this,grounded vpon Saint Pauls words, The things which are ſeene are temporall, 2.Cor.4.18. Neceſſe eſt ergo ſi viſibilis ſit ignis vt ſit temporalis : It is neceſſarie therefore, if fire be viſible,that it be but temporall,*Tract.*34.in Matth. So hee concludeth hell fire to be inuiſible ; if it be inuiſible,then alſo incorporall : for it is the propertie of corporall fire to be viſible. But I vrge not Origens reaſons,I onely produce them : neither doe I relie vpon his iudgement in this point, ſeeing Hierome noteth this to be one of Origens errors : Gehennæ tormenta non ponit in ſupplicijs, ſed in conſcientia peccatorum : He doth not place hell torments in puniſhment, but in the conſcience of ſinne, Hieron.ad Auitum. But neither of them is to bee excluded.

I conclude then with S.Ambroſe: Ibi erit ſtridor dentium,ſtridor dentium prodit indignantis affectum, eò quòd ſerò vnumquenque pœniteat,&c. There ſhall bee gnaſhing of teeth, gnaſhing of teeth bewrayeth an angrie affection,becauſe they repent too late,&c.in 12.Luc. Likewiſe Auguſtine,who reckoneth theſe among the puniſhments of hell : Vermis conſcientiæ, ignitæ lachrymæ, dolor ſine remedio,abſentia Chriſti,quæ ſola omnibus pœnis intolerabilior: The worme of conſcience, fierie teares, remedileſſe griefe, the abſence of Chriſt more intolerable, than all griefe beſide, *de triplic. habitac.*2.2. Ergo,in hell,beſide corporall fire,there is ſpirituall torment.

THE FIFT PART, WHETHER CHRIST APpeared before Gods tribunall, as guiltie of our ſinnes.

F*Euardentius*,that cauilling Frier,hauing nothing to obiect againſt this poſition of Caluin; Oportuit Chriſtum ſiſti ad dei tribunal,vt cunctorum noſtrorum maleficiorum reum : It was behoouefull that Chriſt ſhould ſtand before Gods tribunall as guiltie of all our ſins, *Inſtitut.lib.*2.*c.*16.*ſer.*12. He inuerteth,or rather peruerteth the queſtion,and propoundeth to himſelfe to proue,that Chriſt was not reipſa peccator, was not indeede a ſinner : confuting that,which no man affirmeth. Artic.19.

Argum. Iohn.1.29.Chriſt is the lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world: Ergo, he is no ſinner; for then he could not take away ſinne. Hebr.4.15. he was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. Hebru.7.26. *ſuch an high prieſt it became vs to haue, which is holy, harmeleſſe, vndefiled. Feuarden.*p.463.

To this ende Bernard is alleadged: electe puer,&c. holy child, what haſt thou committed worthie of ſo great confuſion? truely nothing: Ego homo perditus, totius perditionis tuæ cauſa extiti: I O man of perdition, was the cauſe of thy perdition. &c. *ſerm. de paſſion.*p.465.

Anſw. Firſt, I anſwere the Frier, as Auguſtine did Petilian the Donatiſt, who impudently charged him with a cleane contrarie matter: Quemadmodum ſi mihi diceres, quod ego Petilianus ſum, non inuenirem, quomodo te refellerem, niſi aut iocantem riderem, aut vt inſanientem dolerem: hoc mihi nunc faciendum eſſe video, ſed quia te iocari non credo, vides quid reſtat: Like as if you ſhould ſay to me, that I am Petilian, I could not finde how to refute you, but eyther to laugh at your folly, or to grieue for your phrenſie; ſo I muſt do at this time, but becauſe the Frier ieſteth not, but is in good earneſt, you know what remaineth: *cont. Petelian.*2.38. Thus dealeth the Frier with Caluine, charging him with that he neuer held, as if he ſhould ſay to him, that he was Feuardentius not Caluine, Auguſtine would haue iudged this eyther to be fooliſhnes or madnes in him.

2 I ſay with Hierom, Poſſum omnes propoſitionum riuulos vno veritatis ſole ſiccare, I can drie vp all thoſe allegations with the ſunne of truth: for we confeſſe Chriſt to be the vnſpotted lambe, to haue beene tempted without ſinne, to be an holy and vndefiled prieſt: far be it from vs to think or ſpeake otherwiſe of Chriſt; he himſelfe ſaith: The prince of this world commeth and hath nought in me: Iohn.14.30. and we confeſſe with Auguſtine, Iſte eſt agnus qui in altari crucis hoſtia viua deo patri pro nobis in odorem ſuauitatis oblatus eſt: This is the lambe, which was offered on the altar of the croſſe a liuing ſacrifice vnto God his father for vs to be a ſauour of ſweetnes. *ſerm. de tempor.*150. But all this being confeſſed and granted, that Chriſt in himſelfe was the vnſpotted and vndefiled lambe, it followeth not, but that for vs and in our perſon he taking vpon him our ſinnes, ſtoode as guiltie thereof before God.

THE QVESTION RESOLVED.

CHriſt was in himſelfe moſt holy, moſt pure, moſt innocent, hereunto we moſt willingly ſubſcribe: yet notwithſtanding, he tooke vpon him the burthen of our ſins, and made our debt his owne, and ſo as our ſuretie preſented himſelfe as indebted for vs, and in our perſon guiltie of our ſinnes: this the Frier denieth, p.467.10. But we proue it thus:

Argum. 1. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, He ſhall beare their iniquities, Eſay.53.11. How otherwiſe could he beare them, but by laying them vpon himſelfe?

Anſw. By ſinne the prophet vnderſtandeth the puniſhment for ſin, which Chriſt vndertooke. p.467.10. Feuarden.

Contra. 1. Saint Peter otherwiſe expoundeth the prophet, 1.Pet.2.24. who in his bodie bare our ſinnes, that we being deliuered from ſinne ſhould liue in righteouſnes: as he ſaith we are deliuered from ſinne, ſo Chriſt bare our ſinne but we are deliuered not onely from the puniſhment of ſinne, but from ſinne it ſelfe to liue in righteouſnes, Ergo.

2. The prophet alſo expoundeth himſelfe: God hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: verſ.6. here iniquitie is taken for ſinne it ſelfe, as the forepart of the verſe ſheweth, we like ſheepe are gone aſtray, &c. and then it followeth, he hath laid vpon him, &c. He ſpeaketh not of our ſmart, but of our fault, not of the terrors of our life, but the errors.

3. Thus Hierom alſo expoundeth the prophet: vpon theſe words, Pſal.69.5. My faults are not hid from thee: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit & peccata noſtra portauit, &c. This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if he, which did no ſinne, grieued for vs, and did beare our ſinnes, how much more we: lib. 2. aduerſ. Pelagian. Heere Hierome ſaith that Chriſt ſo bare our ſinnes, as he did no ſinne himſelfe, and in ſuch ſort, that he counteth our ſinnes his.

Argum. 2. 2.Cor.5.21. He made him to be ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that we might bee the righteouſnes of God in him: the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, that is, our ſinne was imputed vnto him.

Anſw. By ſinne here is vnderſtood the ſacrifice for ſinne, or the puniſhment for ſinne, Feuard. p.467. ſo Auguſtine and Ambroſe expound it.

Contra. 1. Ambroſe indeed ſo expoundeth, but he excludeth not the other ſenſe, but ſaith hee was offered both a ſacrifice for ſinne, and as a ſinner himſelfe: Chriſtus quoniam oblatus eſt pro peccatis, non immerito peccatum factus dicitur: Chriſt becauſe he was offered for ſinne, is ſaid not amiſſe to be made ſinne, &c. And againe, Chriſtus quaſi peccator occiſus eſt, vt peccatores iuſtificarentur apud deum: Chriſt was ſlaine as a ſinner, that ſinners might be iuſtified before God: in 2.Cor.c.5.

2. The text it ſelfe giueth this ſenſe, that ſinne is to be taken properly, he is made ſinne, as hee knew no ſinne: but he knew not ſinne properly, not the puniſhment of ſinne: Ergo, he was made ſin, not the puniſhment onely. Againe, as we are made righteouſnes before God, ſo is he made ſinne; but his righteouſnes is verely imputed to vs: Ergo, our ſinnes are imputed to him: ſo then as we are ſinners in our ſelues, yet righteous by the imputatiō of his righteouſnes; ſo he being moſt righteous in himſelfe is made ſinne by the imputation of our ſinnes.

3. Hierom alſo thus expoundeth: Deus qui eum dicitur feciſſe maledictū, ipſe pro nobis eum fecit peccatum: God which is ſaid to haue made him a curſe for vs, hath made him alſo ſinne for vs: in 3. ad Galat. As the Apoſtle then ſaith, he was made a curſe for vs; Galat. 3.13. ſo was he made ſinne: but he was not onely made a ſacrifice or a puniſhment for our curſe, but the curſe it ſelfe. Ergo, ſo was he made ſinne.

Wee doe not then ſay, that Chriſt was polluted, or defiled with our ſinnes, but onely reputed and taken for vs and in our perſon as a ſinner: and thus in charitie we are to vnderſtand them, that haue ſomewhat here exceeded in termes, and not ſo to wreſt and turne their words, as though they did meane to blemiſh Chriſt with the leaſt touch of ſinne: for as Hierome well ſaith: Quid prodeſt vulneribus tuis, ſi ego fuero vulneratus, &c. What ſhal it help your wounds to ſee others wounded? apolog. 3. aduerſ. Ruffin. ſo it is no defenſe or excuſe of ones error, to ſee an other to erre. I find that in the councell of Baſil. ſeſſ. 22. this aſſertion of one Auguſtine Archbiſhop of Nazareth was condemned, who ſhould ſay, Chriſtus quotidie peccat, & ex quo fuit Chriſtus quotidie peccauit: That Chriſt daily ſinneth, and euer ſince Chriſt was he ſinned daily: quam aſſertionem piæ fidelium aures ſine horrore audire nequeunt: Which aſſertion godly eares cannot heare without trembling, &c. although this Archbiſhop might haue ſome tolerable ſenſe in this ſentence, yet becauſe the ſpeech was vnuſuall and offenſiue, it was miſliked: ſo, though Chriſt were in our perſon preſented vnto God as guiltie of our ſinnes by imputation, yet we wiſh that all hard and vnwonted phraſes of ſpeech be carefully auoided, as to ſay Chriſt was the greateſt adulterer, blaſphemer, &c. becauſe all the ſinne of the elect were laid vpon his backe: it is ſufficient for vs to ſay with the Apoſtle in generall, that Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, and not to deſcend to particulars.

So then I conclude this place with that ſaying of Saint Hierome: Ieſus filius Ioſedech quod interpretatur iuſtus domini, ſacerdos magnus deſcribitur veſtibus ſordidis, qui peccata noſtra non fecit, & tamen peccata noſtra portauit, &c. diciturq; ei poſt pugnam & victoriam, auferte veſtem ſordidam ab eo; ecce abſtuli à te iniquitatem, &c. Ieſus the ſonne of Ioſedech, which is interpreted the Lords iuſt one the high prieſt is deſcribed with filthie garments, which did no ſinne, and yet bare our ſinne: and it is ſaid vnto him after the fight and victory, take away the filthy garments from him; behold I haue taken away thy ſinne, &c. thus Hierome expoundeth that place, Zach. 3.4. where we ſee that our ſinnes which were as the filthy garments put vpon Chriſt, are called his ſinnes.

Likewiſe where the prophet Iſay ſaith, vidimus eum & non habuit ſpeciem & decorem: We ſawe him, and he had neither forme nor beautie. Eſay. 53.2. thoſe words Auguſtine expoundeth thus: Ecce pulcher ille & ſpecioſus præ filijs hominum veniebat ad fœdam, vt faceret pulchram; dicā & hoc, quia in ſcripturis inuenio, ipſe fœdus factus eſt, &c. Behold he that was the fayreſt among the ſons of men came to her that was filthy to make her faire: yea I will ſay further, becauſe I finde it in ſcripture, hee himſelfe was made filthie, &c. in Pſal. 103. part. 1. What elſe was this filthines which Chriſt tooke, but the imputation of our ſins? for otherwiſe the iniuries which were offered to his bodie made him more beautifull, in that they commended his patience, inſomuch that the Centurion confeſſed he was a iuſt and a good man, Luke. 23.50. And though the ſouldiers mocked him, when they cloathed him with purple, and ſet a crowne of thornes vpon his head, and bowed vnto him, yet they did ignorantly honour, whom they in their heart deſpiſed: and ſo Cyprian expoundeth that place, Cantic. 3.11. Come forth ye daughters of Ieruſalem, and ſee the crowne whereweth his mother crowned him, of the crowne of thornes, which Ieruſalem Chriſts mother after the fleſh ſet vpon him. Cyprian in ſymbol. So likewiſe Saint Ambroſe: Illis licet defuit boni operis affectus, deo tamen ſuus non defuit honor, quia ſalutatur vt rex, coronatur vt victor, vt deus & dominus adoratur: Though they in ſo doing had no deuotion, yet God wanteth not his honour, for he is ſaluted as a King, crowned as a conqueror, worſhipped as God, in 22. Luc.

Laſtly, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 8.3. De peccato damnauit peccatum in carne: Through ſinne he condemned ſinne in the fleſh; Origene thus interpreteth: Chriſtus ſine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat quia peccata noſtra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt out of doubt for ſinne, which he tooke of vs, becauſe he bare our ſinnes, did offer his fleſh an vndefiled ſacrifice. Hom. 3. in Leuit. And againe, Per peccatum ſuum. i. carnem in crucem actam in qua noſtra peccata ſuſceperat, nos credentes liberauit à peccato: By his ſinne, that is his fleſh put to the croſſe, wherein he had taken our ſinnes, he deliuereth vs beleeuers from ſinne: Ibid. From this ſentence of Origene I gather, 1. that Chriſts fleſh is called ſinne, not becauſe it was a ſacrifice for ſinne, or was puniſhed for ſinne, but becauſe it tooke ſinne. 2. that we are deliuered from that ſinne, which Chriſt tooke, which was not the puniſhment of ſinne, but ſinne indeed. 3. that notwithſtanding the bearing of our ſinnes in his fleſh, yet it was an vndefiled ſacrifice vnto God.

The ſumme of all this: that ſeeing all our iniquities were laid vpon Chriſt, *Argum.*1. ſeeing he was made ſinne for vs, *Argum.*2. he was clothed with our filthie rayments, *Argum.*3. he became deformed and without beautie for vs, *Agum.*4. he by his ſinne, that is his fleſh, wherein he bare our ſinne condemned our ſinne, *Argum.*5. we doubt not to affirme and verely beleeue to our endleſſe comfort, that Chriſt was reputed before God, as guiltie of all our ſinnes, which he willingly vndertooke, and ſo ſatisfied for them for euer.

THE SIXT PART, WHETHER CHRIST WERE GRIEued and perplexed in his conſcience and ſoule for the ſinnes of the elect, which were laide vpon him.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED:

F*euardentius* cannot in any caſe endure this, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer or feele any thing in his conſcience: *Non in conſcientia ſua patiendo, p.*449.10. but onely admitteth an exceſſiue griefe in Chriſt, by way of contemplation in beholding the ſorrowes of the world: as hauing reckoned vp in particular a great number of ſinnes, he concludeth thus: Hac & alia totius mundi ſcelera illico expianda ſibi animo amplectens, &c. tanta totius cordis animique pœnitudine dolet vt par ei nemo vnquam fuerit: theſe and other ſinnes of the whole world Chriſt beholding in his mind to be by him expiated, is grieued with ſuch penſiueneſſe of minde, as no man was euer like to him, p.455. So then by way of compaſſion and contemplation he doth acknowledge Chriſt to haue beene grieued and not otherwiſe.

Argum. Speciall reaſons and arguments for this their opinion they haue none, but ſuch as haue beene before obiected in generall againſt the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule: as Heb.10.13. With one offring hath he conſecrated for euer, them that are ſanctified: Coloſſ.2.20. Pacifying by the blood of his croſſe, &c. Perfite reconciliation was wrought by the blood of his croſſe, and by one oblation, not many: Ergo, no ſuch griefe or perplexitie was neceſſarie, *Feuarden.p.449.conſ.*10.

*Anſw.*1. Though Chriſt ſuffered both in bodie and ſoule, yet was it but one ſacrifice, which the Apoſtle calleth the ſacrifice of himſelfe, Hebr.9.26. for the ſoule and bodie made but one Chriſt, yet this ſacrifice had diuers partes: as Hebr.10.10. it is called the offering of his bodie, verſ.19. his blood is mentioned, verſ.20. he ſpeaketh of his fleſh; will ye make as many ſacrifices, as were parts of Chriſts ſufferings?

2. If ye vrge blood ſtrictly, and aſcribe all vnto the blood and nothing elſe, how will ye reconcile the Apoſtle in the ſame place, Coloſſ.1.22. In the bodie of his fleſh thorough death: the blood is not his bodie, nor his fleſh. 2. The Apoſtle aſcribeth our reconciliation to his death: but his blood was ſhed after his death, as may appeare, Iohn 19. Chriſt giueth vp the ghoſt, verſ.30. and afterward his ſide is pierced, verſ.34. This is well noted by S. Ambroſe, Poſt mortem percuſſus eſt non ante, vt exitus eius voluntarius non neceſſarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his death might ſeeme voluntarie, *In Luc.c.*22. Wherefore ye are forced againſt your wils, by one part of the croſſe to vnderſtand the reſt, vnleſſe you will exclude Chriſts blood. 3. If any man ſay, though Chriſts ſide were pierced after his death, yet he ſhedde much blood before, when he was whipped, and pricked with thornes, and nayled to the croſſe.

Anſw. Though we extenuate not the leaſt drops of Chriſts blood: yet the blood which iſſued with water out of his ſide, is eſpecially obſerued by the Apoſtle, 1.Iohn 5.6. And Bernard ſaith, Perfoſſo latere in cruce veluti conſciſſo ſacco pecuniam quæ latebat in pretium noſtræ redemptionis effudit: His ſide being launced vpon the croſſe, as if the treaſure bagge had beene opened, the money was powred out, that payed our price, *in natal. Dom. ſerm.*2. 4. And where the Apoſtle ſaith, Ieſus came by water and blood, 1.Iohn 5.6. if blood be ſtrictly vrged, then the water is excluded, which was alſo a neceſſary part of the ſacrifice: Chriſtus venit non in aqua ſolum, ſed in aqua & ſanguine: Moſes in aqua ſolum venit, vnde & nomen habet, ſed non redemit: Chriſt came not in water onely, but in water and blood; Moſes came in water onely, whereof he hath his name, but he redeemed vs not, Bernard.ibid.

3. Some will ſay, we yeeld you that all Chriſts bodily ſufferings may figuratiuely be expreſſed by ſome one part or other, as by blood, fleſh, &c. but it were improper thereby to ſignifie the ſoule ſuffrings. Anſw. Yet it is not vnuſuall, by fleſh to vnderſtand the ſoule alſo, and ſo conſequently by the ſuffrings of the one to inſinuate the paſſions of the other: as Auguſtine ſheweth againſt the Apollinariſts, Videbit omnis caro, &c. All fleſh ſhall ſee the ſaluation of God: where fleſh is taken for the whole man, yea for the man regenerate, for carnall men cannot ſee the ſaluation of God:

*lib.qu.*83.*qu.*80. And again,ſeeing it is euident in Scripture,that Chriſt had anguiſh in ſoule,when he ſaith,*My ſoule is heauie vnto death:*they muſt comprehend this alſo vnder the blood of the croſſe, or els it is excluded : But Bernard for that excellently ſaith, Totum propter nos agebatur, vt non modo paſſio corporis, ſed cordis affectio pro nobis faceret : all was done for vs,that not only the paſſion of his body, but the affection of his heart ſhould make to our ſaluation,*in die S. Andreæ ſerm.*1.

4. By the croſſe alſo of Chriſt, not the materiall tree onely, whereon he ſuffered, or the viſible torments which hee endured, but the whole myſterie of our redemption, which by his chaſtiſements was puniſhed, is expreſſed : as S.Paul ſaith, he will not reioyce but in the croſſe of Chriſt, whereby he was crucified to the world, Galath.6.14. It was not the materiall croſſe, whereby Paul was crucified,but the ſpiritual force and efficacie of Chriſts ſacrifice: So in the ſame place verſ.12. he ſpeaketh of ſuffering perſecution for the croſſe of Chriſt,that is,the Goſpel and faith of Chriſt: So alſo Auguſtine taketh the croſſe : Nemo poteſt tranſire mare huius ſeculi,niſi cruce Chriſti portatus; No man can paſſe through the ſea of this world,vnleſſe he be borne vp by the croſſe of Chriſt,&c. and afterward he expoundeth himſelfe,Crede in crucifixum, & poteris peruenire: Beleeue in him,that was crucified,and thou maiſt go through,*in Pſa.*143. Thus then I truſt it is euident,that neither the blood,nor the wood of Chriſts croſſe do aboliſh or diminiſh the bleſſed ſuffrings of Chriſt in his ſoule.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

CHriſt in himſelfe being holy, innocent, vndefiled, was touched with no conſcience of ſinne; as Auguſtine well ſaith, Inter iudicem iuſtum, & conſcientiam tuam, noli timere niſi cauſam tuam: Betweene the Iuſt iudge and thy conſcience, feare nothing but thy cauſe, *in Pſal.*37. yet we do beleeue to our great comfort, that as Chriſt in great compaſſion toward vs, did aſſume and appropriate our ſinnes to himſelfe, making them as it were his owne ; ſo he alſo in his ſoule and conſcience did trauaile with exceeding griefe and ſorrow for our ſinnes, as for his owne.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.2.17. It became him in all thinges to be made like vnto his brethren: and Hebr.4.15. He was tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne : if Chriſt then had experience of all our tentations and ſorrowes, but without ſinne ; then of the trouble alſo and perplexitie of conſcience, which is in vs,but in him without ſinne:ſo Fulgentius ſaith; Rationalem animam habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit & pertulit, vt dum humanæ animæ paſſiones in anima, quam accepit, vinceret, noſtras quoq; animas ab infirmitatibus liberaret : Hauing a reaſonable ſoule, whatſoeuer infirmitie of the ſoule without ſinne hee tooke and bare,that while hee ouercame the paſſions of mans ſoule in his ſoule which he tooke, he might alſo deliuer our ſoules from infirmities, *ad Thraſimund.lib.*3. Damaſcene to the like effect : τὰ πάθη ὑπομείνας τὴν κατὰ αὐτῶν νίκην βραβεύων: hee endured our grieues, preparing for vs the victorie ouer them, *de fid. orthodox. lib.*3. *c.*24. What aſſurance then ſhould we haue, not to be ſwallowed vp of griefe,when we are touched with conſcience of ſin, but that Chriſt in himſelfe ouercame theſe our tentations ? And ſeeing S. Peter ſaith, that he bare our ſinnes, 1.Pet.2.24. and the Prophet ſaith, that God layd vpon him the iniquities of vs all, Iſay.53.6. how could our ſinnes be diuorced and ſeparated from their ſorrowes? if Chriſt then truely bare our ſinnes, he ſuſtayned alſo the griefe of conſcience for them,which is the inſeparable companion of our ſinnes. Therefore as Origen ſaith, Quoniam ſemel aſſumpſerat hominem, vtitur omnibus quæ ſunt in homine: Becauſe he once tooke vpon him man, he vſeth all, that is in man: *homil.*13.in Matth. and S. Ambroſe : Minus mihi contulerat, niſi meum ſuſcepiſſet affectum: ergo pro me doluit, qui nihil habuit, quod pro ſe doleret : ſuſcepit triſtitiam meam , vt mihi ſuam lætitiam largiretur, debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, vt vinceret triſtitiam, non excluderet : Hee had done little for me, if he had not taken mine affection; therefore he was grieued for me, who had nothing to be grieued for in himſelfe: he tooke my ſorrow,to giue me his ioy: he was to take my ſorrow to extenuate my griefe, not to exclude it : in 22.Luc. S. Ambroſe giueth three notable reaſons of our griefe in Chriſt : 1. becauſe if he had not taken all our affections, he had not done for vs what he could. 2. He tooke griefe to giue vs ioy,but ioy of conſcience he giueth vs: Ergo,he had griefe of conſcience. 3. No ſorrow in vs is ouercome, which was excluded from Chriſt,therefore if he had not the contrition and trouble of ſpirite, we haue no hope to ſubdue it.

*Argum.*2. That heauines and griefe of ſoule, which Chriſt had vpon the croſſe, and before in his agonie;at other times he had not : for the ſame griefe would haue wrought the ſame effects, as to cauſe him to ſweate drops of blood,and to complaine of his forſaking : but Chriſt before did ſorrow in compaſſion and commiſeration,as when he wept ouer Ieruſalem : yea and Origen ſaith, that euen now our ſinnes are a griefe to Chriſt ; Saluator meus luget etiam nunc peccata mea, ſaluator meus lætari non poteſt, dum ego in iniquitate permaneo : eſt tam diu in mœrore, donec ego perſiſto in errore : My Sauiour doth euen now mourne for my ſinne : my Sauiour cannot reioyce, while I of ſinne make choyce : he is in ſorrow,as long as I am in ſinne, *Hom.*7.in Leuitic. Which is agreeable to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Grieue not the ſpirit, Epheſ.4.30. But Chriſts ſorrow vpon the croſſe, was not that wherewith he was touched before,and in ſome ſort ſince : Ergo, it was not a ſorrowe onely in compaſſion or commiſeration.

*Argum.*3. The Fathers are here very plentifull, beſide theſe teſtimonies alleaged : Firſt, *Hierome,*Pſal.69.5. Tu noſti inſipientiam, dominus & ſaluator noſter ſub perſona aſſumpti hominis loquitur : Lord thou knoweſt my fooliſhnes; our Lorde and Sauiour ſpeaketh in the perſon of man,whom he tooke. If Chriſt doe confeſſe our ſinnes as his owne, then his heart could not be without the griefe of them : as Auguſtine ſaith,Quot habes in corde compunctiones facinorum,tot habe illic punctiones confeſſionum : As many compunctions of ſinne as are in the heart,ſo many confeſſions there ſhould be.*in Pſal.*74.

2. Ambroſe ſeemeth to make this the cauſe of Chriſts long ſilence vpon the croſſe : Illo ſilentio paſſionis ſuæ clamorem omnem in poſterum impiæ vocis aboleuit : By the ſilence of his croſſe he aboliſhed all clamors and complaints of the voyce of ſinners, *ſerm.*14.*in Pſal.*119. As hee in ſilence mourned for our ſinnes,and felt the burthen,ſo hath he ſtayed for euer the deſperate outcryes and complaints of his members for their ſinnes.

3. Origen: Chriſtus ſacerdos eſt, qui comedit peccata populi : audi ſcripturam, deus noſter ignis conſumens: quid conſumit deus ignis, nunquid ligna aut ſtipulam? conſumit deus ignis humana peccata, ipſe peccata noſtra ſuſcepit,& in ſeipſo tanquam ignis ea comedit & abſumit : Chriſt is the prieſt,which doth eate the ſinnes of the people : heare the Scripture, our God is a conſuming fire : what doth God the fire conſume,wood,or ſtubble? God the fire doth conſume mens ſinnes; he tooke our ſinnes, and in himſelfe as a fire did deuoure and conſume them,*Hom.*5.*in Leuitic.*6. So Ambroſe againe ſaith,Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit noſtra peccata : Chriſt was as that coale (taken from the altar, Iſai.6.) which in his fleſh,burned, or conſumed our ſinnes,*lib.*1.*de ſpirit.c.*9. And what this inward fire is, the Prophet Dauid ſheweth, Pſal.39.3. My heart was hot within me, and while I muſed,the fire kindled. The inward griefe and trouble of ſoule in Chriſt was this fire,wherewith our ſinnes are conſumed.

If then our Sauiour Chriſt was tempted like vnto vs in all ſorts,ſinne onely excepted,*arg.*1. if together with our ſinne he bare the ſorrowes of ſinne,*argum.*2. if at other times hee ſorrowed in compaſſion, and commiſeration, but vpon the croſſe more, *arg.*3. if the Fathers affirme,that Chriſt hath taken our ſorrowe to giue vs ioy,that he hath in himſelfe as a fire conſumed our ſins, *arg.*4. there remaineth no doubt, but that Chriſt verily in his ſoule was troubled and perplexed with ſorrow for our ſinnes.

THE SEVENTH PART, THAT CHRIST BY HIS death did fully ſatisfie the iuſtice of God,and appeaſed his wrath in paying the raunſome for our ſinnes,which he tooke vpon him,together with the puniſhment thereof,in which reſpect he is truly ſaid to haue dyed iuſtly,and as a debtor to the law of Gods iuſtice for vs.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

Art.21. OBiect.1. Ezech.18.20. The ſame ſoule that ſinneth,ſhall dye : from this place Bellarmine inferreth, Iniquum eſſe,&c. That it is vniuſt that one man ſhould be puniſhed for another, *tom.*3.*p.*152.*d. Ergo,*it was not iuſt that Chriſt,though our ſuretie,ſhould be put to death for vs.

2. Chriſt dyed for vs of loue, and moſt willingly without conſtraint hee layd downe his life for vs : *No man taketh it away from me,*Iohn.10.*Feuard.p.*427.*lin.*6. That which Chriſt then did of loue,he was not forced vnto by law.

3. Chriſt muſt not be conſidered onely as a faithfull ſeruant, but as coequall vnto God,&c. ſuch an one was our Mediatour,*Feuard.p.*378.*conf.*3.*lin.*13.24. If Chriſt then as a ſeruant or ſuretie were bound by the law to dye,how could he be our Mediatour?

4. Chriſts ſatisfaction, was pluſquam ſufficiens, more than ſufficient, *Feuard.p.*382.*conf.*3.*lin.*7. therefore he was not bound vnto it by law.

Anſw. 1. Where the debt is but of money,the ſuretie indeede, neither by Gods law nor mans, is compelled to giue life or ſoule : but where the debt is of bodie and ſoule, it cannot otherwiſe be payed in the law of iuſtice,but by giuing bodie and ſoule. 2. In ſome caſes by the lawe of God the ſuretie gaue life for life; as the Prophet ſheweth to Ahab by this parable : A man was taken in battell,and committed to another to keepe,vnder this condition, If he be loſt,thy life ſhall goe for his life,or elſe thou ſhalt pay a talent of ſiluer : a price of equall value to his life, that went away : but in the application of this parable, the Prophet leaueth out the *talent,*becauſe God can not be waged with money, and ſaith vnto Ahab preciſely, thy life ſhall goe for his life, 1.King.20. verſ.39.42.

3. Firſt, as the Prophet ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth, ſhall dye: ſo he ſaith, euery man ſhall beare his iniquitie: hee may as well conclude, that Chriſt did not beare our ſinnes, as that hee was not puniſhed for vs in iuſtice. Secondly, as the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall be vpon him, ſo the righteouſnes of the righteous ſhall be vpon him: If he will conclude from hence, that our wickedneſſe did not lye vpon Chriſt, hee muſt exclude the righteous alſo from the righteouſnes of Chriſt. I may ſay here with Hierome: De præſenti compede vtcunque erue pedem: You muſt eftſoones deliuer your ſelfe of theſe doubts, and your feete from theſe fetters. Fourthly, yea, you will ſay, this is ſoone done; for it is not inferred from hence, that Chriſt did not beare our ſinnes and dye for the ſame, but not in iuſtice, as indebted, or bound vnto it. I anſwere, as it was iuſt with God to iuſtifie vs that are of the faith of Ieſus, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.3.26. ſo is it iuſt that Chriſt ſhould be condemned for our ſinnes: it is as much of iuſtice, that our ſinnes imputed to him, ſhould cauſe his death, as for his righteouſnes imputed to vs to bring vs to life. So Origen ſaith, Chriſtus ſine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiã: Chriſt out of doubt for ſinne, which he tooke of vs, becauſe he bare our ſinnes, offered his fleſh an vndefiled ſacrifice, Hom.3.in Leuitic. If then the bearing of our ſinnes cauſed the ſacrifice of Chriſts fleſh, how was it not iuſt? if it were not iuſt, it was no cauſe.

2. Firſt, who doubteth but that both Gods loue and Chriſts loue vnſpeakeable appeareth in his death: as Auguſtine well ſaith; Angelus virga tetigit Petram & exijt ignis, ſic crux tetigit Chriſtum, & de Petra, quæ erat Chriſtus ignis exijt charitatis: The Angel touched the rocke with a rod, and fire came forth: *Iud.*13.19. ſo the croſſe touched Chriſt, and out of the rocke, which was Chriſt, the flame of charity iſſued forth, *Ser.de temp.*108. but the argument followeth not, Chriſt died of loue, Ergo, not in iuſtice, for loue firſt cauſed him to ſubmit himſelfe to the lawe: and iuſtice to pay our debt. 2. Like as the ſuretie firſt of loue and good will to his neighbour ſtriketh hands for him, and giueth his word: but then his word being once paſt, he is bound by law to pay the debt, and he cannot ſhift it, Then he is taken with the words of his owne mouth, Prou.6.1.2. So Chriſt firſt of loue vndertooke for vs, but this office of loue being once vndertaken, it is now performed and executed of debt. 3. This may be further manifeſted by this inſtance: ſinne in our firſt parents was voluntarie, but now in their poſteritie it is neceſſarie: he might haue not ſinned if he would, but hauing once ſinned, he could not abſtaine though he would: he brought himſelfe & his poſteritie voluntarilie into neceſſarie bondage: as S. Peter ſaith, Of whatſoeuer a man is ouercome, to the ſame he is in bondage, 2.Pet.2.19. So Auguſtine: Illi ſine peccato data eſt libera voluntas, quam fecit ſeruire peccato, horum cum fuerat voluntas ſerua peccati liberata eſt per Chriſtum: To Adam was giuen free will, which he made the ſeruant of ſinne, but in vs our will being the ſeruant of ſinne is freed by Chriſt: de corrept. grat. c. 12. We ſee then how that which in the election is voluntarie, is in the execution neceſſarie.

3. But a fitter example we cannot take, then from Chriſt himſelfe: for the firſt aſſuming of the humane nature to the Godhead was of grace; as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod Chriſtus eſt vnigenitus, æqualis patri, non eſt gratia, ſed natura; quod autem in vnitatem perſonæ vnigenti aſſumptus eſt homo, gratia eſt, non natura, confitente euangelio, & gratia Dei erat cum illo: That Chriſt is the onely begotten ſonne, equall to his father, it is not grace but nature; but that man is taken into the vnitie of perſon of the onely begotten, it is grace, not nature, the Goſpell confeſſing, the grace of God was with him: *Tract. in Ioan.*73. But though the aſſuming of the humane nature was of grace, yet the vnion of the diuine and humane nature is not by grace, as it was concluded, Concil. Conſtantin. 5.c.4. Si quis dicit ſecundum gratiam factam vnitionem verbi ad hominem, anathema: If any man ſay that the vnion of the word with man, is of grace, let him be accurſed: the firſt aſſumption of mans nature was of grace, but the coniunction is not of grace, but by vnitie of perſon: the worſhip now giuen vnto the humanitie of Chriſt, is not giuen him of fauour and grace, but due vnto him becauſe of his perſon, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.1.6. when he bringeth in his firſt begotten ſon into the world he ſaith, let al the Angels of God worſhip him. In like manner, Chriſts aſſuming vpon him to pay our debt was of grace and voluntarie, but now the performing thereof is of debt, and neceſſarie. So then as the exalting of the humane nature in Chriſt, was in the firſt ſuſception of benignitie, but now in the perſonall vnion and coniunction, is of dignitie: ſo in the humbling of himſelfe to dye for vs, he firſt ſhewed his free beneuolence, and then ſubmitted himſelfe to iuſtice and patience.

3. 1. That one may be both a ſurety and a mediator, the example of Iudah ſheweth: who firſt was a mediator to his father, to intreat him to let Beniamin goe with them, ſaying, ſend the boy with me, that we may riſe and go, that we may liue and not die: Gen.43.8. then he ſaith, verſ.9. I will be ſuretie for him, of mine hand ſhalt thou require him.

2. Who can be a more effectuall mediator, then he that hath payed the debt, of whoſe faithfulneſſe the creditor hath alreadie experience: as Paul to Philemon is a moſt efficient mediator for Oneſimus, becauſe he was a ſufficient ſuretie: If he hath hurt thee, or oweth thee ought, put it vpon mine accounts, I Paule haue written with mine owne hand, I will recompence thee: Philem. verſ. 18. Then the Apoſtle boldly maketh his requeſt, verſ. 20. yea brother let me obtaine this pleaſure of thee in the Lord. So the mediation of Chriſt is not empayred by his ſuretiſhip, but grounded vpon it, his propitiation for our ſinnes is the ſtrength of his aduocation: 1 Iohn. 2. 2. We haue an aduocate with the father, and he is the reconciliation for our ſinnes.

3. Though other ſureties could not be mediators, it is otherwiſe with Chriſt, who is both God and man: as man, he is a ſuretie and ſuffered for vs; as God and man he is our mediator, and ſufficeth for vs: his ſuffering and ſatisfaction doth onely concerne his manhood: the Godhead did not ſatisfie, but was ſatisfied: therefore as he is a ſufferer and ſatisfactor for vs, ſo he is not properly a midiator: to the which office both the nature of his humanitie, and power of his diuinitie is required: as Bernard well ſaith; ſicut mediator &c. as our mediator hath ioyned togither in one perſon his humanitie and diuinitie; ſo euery one of his workes muſt of neceſſitie appertaine to one or other nature, &c. Ad hanc ſcilicet miſeria, ad illā pertinet potentia: quicquid ergo miſeria paſſus eſt, ex homine contraxit; quicquid potenter operatus eſt, à patre habuit: To his humane nature belongeth his miſerie; to his diuine, his power and dignity: what he ſuffered in miſerie, he had of man; what he wrought powerfully, he receiued of his father: ſerm. de verb. ſapient.

4. 1. The argument followeth not, he paid more then we did owe, Ergo, he paid not that which we did owe: rather the contrarie followeth, he paid more, Ergo, he paide the leſſe: if a ſurety in his great abundance will pay twentie thouſand, where the debt is but of tenne thouſand, is not the debt anſwered? He that giueth more then meaſure, preſſed downe, ſhaken together, running ouer, Luke. 6. 38. doth he not giue meaſure? 2. Chriſt in reſpect of the efficacie 1. of his croſſe, and 2. dignitie of his perſon, and 3. innocencie of nature, paied more then the lawe required: For 1. he onely did not redeeme vs, but hath endued vs with righteouſnes, and ſo as the Apoſtle ſaith, grace ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν, hath ſuperabounded, Rom. 5. 20. 2. Neither could the law haue required the ſonne of God to haue ſuffered for vs: and therefore as the Apoſtle ſaith, Herein appeared the loue of God toward vs, becauſe he ſent his onely begotten ſonne, 1. Iohn. 4. 9. And he was not indebted any thing to the law in reſpect of his owne innocency: for as Saint Peter ſaith, he did not ſinne, neyther was there any guile found in his mouth: and ſo Auguſtine ſaith, Venit ille ſine debito, quia ſine vllo peccato, & quæ non rapuerat exoluens nos à ſempiterno debito liberauit: He came without debt, becauſe without ſinne, and paying that he neuer tooke, hath freed vs from our euerlaſting debt. de diuerſ. ſer. 8. Wherfore in reſpect of the manner and qualitie of Chriſts ſufferings he paid more then was owing, but for the ſubſtance of the debt, which was the whole puniſhment of bodie and ſoule, he paied the ſame which the law required. And if Chriſts ſatisfaction were more then ſufficient; if he ſuffered more then was requiſite: with what face can the Frier denie that he ſuffered not in ſoule, which was neceſſary to our redemption: There cannot be an exceeding where any thing is wanting.

And concerning the fathers which may be obiected, I anſwere, that they do obſerue diuers ends and vſes of Chriſts death, and alleage ſundrie cauſes thereof: as Auguſtine ſheweth theſe, 1. Gods loue appeareth. 2. the priuiledge of humane fleſh, ſeeing our nature is coupled with the diuinity. 3. the grace of God without our merits. 4. we learne humilitie and obedience by Chriſts death. 5. and the reward of obedience, lib 13. de trinitat. c. 17. And againe: Potuit reuera angelum armare contra diabolum, &c. God could haue armed an Angell againſt the diuell: Verum decuit Chriſtum hoc munus obire: But it was meete that Chriſt ſhould vndergoe this buſines, 1. leaſt iniurie might be offered to God, if man ſhould be redeemed by an other, then by whom he was created. 2. ſeeing Sathan did make himſelfe a God in earth: Eum venire oportuit, It behooued him to come, which ſhould worthily be worſhipped of euery creature. 3. The iniurie was offered to the ſecond perſon in the trinitie: Nam Satanas proxime poſt deum patrem ſe adorari voluit: For Sathan next to God the father would be worſhipped: ex veter. teſtam. qu. 113.

Cyprian alſo rendereth an other reaſon: Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, ſed veniæ facilitas laxaret habenas peccatis effrænibus, quæ etiam vix Chriſti cohibent paſſiones: God without this holocauſt could haue pardoned ſo great ſinne, but the facilitie or eaſines of pardon would haue giuen libertie to the raynes of ſinne, which Chriſts paſſions doe ſcarcely reſtraine: ſerm. de paſſion. Theſe fathers thus ayming and geſſing at the cauſes of Chriſts death, denie not, but it was neceſſary for Chriſt to die to pay our debt, and conſequently that it was iuſt ſo to be: as Auguſtine before ſaith: Decuit Chriſtum, & oportuit venire: It became Chriſt, & it behooued him to come. And again he ſaith to this effect: though God might haue taken man otherwhere, then from Adams ſtocke to be the mediator: Sed hominem per eum liberari oportuit, qui eſſet in genere, licet non in crimine: Yet man ought to be deliuered by him, which was of the poſteritie, though not in the ſame iniquitie. de trinit. lib. 13. c. 17. whence commeth this oportet, it ought to be, or why muſt Adam be deliuered by Adams ſeed, but that iuſtice ſo required, that man ſhould ſuffer for mans offence?

Obiect. But it may be thus further obiected : If Chriſt dyed according to the iuſtice of the law, then the Iewes, together with Pilate and the high Prieſts, did but that which was iuſt; and ſo ſhould be freed from the guilt of Chriſts blood.

Anſw. 1. Auguſtine doth very well reſolue this queſtion: Facta eſt traditio à patre, facta eſt à filio, facta eſt à Iuda; vna res facta eſt : quid ergo diſcernit inter eos? quia hoc fecit filius & pater in charitate, Iudas in perditione : Chriſt was deliuered by his father, by himſelfe, by Iudas : there is one act : how are they diſcerned ? becauſe the father and ſonne did this in charitie, Iudas in enuie : in Epiſtol. 1. Ioann.

Likewiſe Origen to the ſame effect : Deus tradidit Chriſtum propter miſericordiam in genus humanum, &c. Iudas propter auaritiam, ſacerdotes propter inuidiam, diabolus propter timorem : God deliuered Chriſt in mercie to man, Iudas of couetouſnes, the prieſts for enuie, the diuell for feare, Tract. 35. in Matth. Wherefore though Chriſt were deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God, and in reſpect thereof his death was iuſt and profitable : yet the inſtruments for the execution being malicious are not excuſable, but their act againſt Chriſt was moſt vniuſt and damnable.

2. The Iewes are ſo farre from excuſe, that euen Pilate, who ſeemed to haue ſome reuerence of Chriſts perſon, and openly waſhed his hands, was not innocent. There is greater queſtion made of Pilats wife, which ſuffered many things in her dreame of Chriſt, and acknowledged Chriſt to be a iuſt man, and ſent word to Pilate to haue nothing to doe with him, Matth. 27. 19. Some do thinke, that the diuell, being in a great doubt what to doe, as hee ſet the Iewes a worke on the one ſide to put Chriſt to death, ſo hee cauſed a dreame to fall vpon Pilats wife, thereby to hinder Chriſts death: thus thinketh Rabanus in gloſſ. ordinar. Lyra, with others. But I rather approue Chryſoſtomes iudgement and Theophilacts vpon that place, who think, that this dreame was Gods work: Factum eſt ſomnium non vt Chriſtus abſolueretur, ſed vt ſeruaretur vxor : This dreame was wrought, not that Chriſt ſhould be deliuered, but Pilats wife ſaued. Likewiſe Auguſtine : In natiuitate mundi vxor ducit virum ad mortem : in paſſione Chriſti vxor prouocat ad ſalutem : In the creation or natiuitie of the world, the woman bringeth her husband to death : in the paſſion of Chriſt the wife doth prouoke the man to ſaluation, de tempor. ſer. 121.

Howſoeuer it was with Pilats wife, who had a good perſwaſion of Chriſt, and was guiltleſſe of his death : yet Pilate could no way be innocent; he waſhed his hands in hypocriſie, but his heart was full of crueltie; as Cyprian well ſaith: Non excuſas, ſed accuſas, cauſam tibi facis cum Iudæis communem; illi ſe proditione, tu parricido te condemnas; illi lingua, tu ferro occidis : Thou doeſt not excuſe but accuſe, thou art in the ſame cauſe with the Iewes; they by treacherie condemne themſelues, thou by murther and crueltie; they kill him with their tongues, thou with the ſword, ſer. de paſſion. So Ambroſe : Pilatus ipſe iniquitatis ſuæ teſtis, qui ore abſoluit, corde condemnat; lauerit licet manus, tamen facta non diluit : Pilate is a witneſſe of his owne iniquitie, which doth commend Chriſt with his mouth, and condemne him in his heart; hee dooth waſh his hands, but cleanſeth not his deedes, ſerm. 49.

Wherefore if Pilate, who made ſome ſemblance of loue and reuerence toward Chriſt, was yet guiltie of his blood, how much more worthie of condemnation were the Iewes, that with will, word and workes did perſecute him to death, and killed the Lord of life, Act. 3. 15. And as Origen well ſaith : Quantum putas erroris fuit, ipſam principalem omnem vitam ream mortis pronuntiare ? How great an error was it, to pronounce the chiefe and principall life worthie of death? Tract. 35. in Matth.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

1. THat Chriſt in himſelfe was moſt holie, innocent and iuſt, and in that behalfe moſt wrongfully and vndeſeruedly put to death of the Iewes, wee hold it blaſphemie not to acknowledge it : the Scriptures doe teſtifie, that the Iewes denied the holie and iuſt one, and killed the Lorde of life, Act. 3. 14. 15. And Auguſtine ſaith : Dominus mortem pro nobis indebitam reddidit, vt debita nobis non noceret : The Lorde did pay for vs an vndue death, that due death might not hurt vs, lib. 4. de Trinitat. cap. 13.

2. Again, we moſt thankfully acknowledge in the death of Chriſt the moſt vnſpeakeable loue of Chriſt, 1. Ioh. 3. 16. Herein haue wee perceiued loue, that he layd downe his life for vs : which loue of Chriſt Auguſtine thus deſcribeth : Diuina charitas in Chriſto ad ignoſcendum, inter opprobria ſecura, inter odia benefica, inter iras placida, inter inſidias innocens, &c. There was a diuine charitie of Chriſt in forgiuing, ſtedfaſt among taunts, bounteous againſt hatred, calme againſt rage, innocent though wronged, ſerm. 39. de tempor.

3. Our bleſſed Sauiour alſo moſt willingly offered himſelfe vpon the croſſe for vs, and was obedient to the will of his father: Heb. 5. 8. Though he were the ſonne, yet learned he obedience. So Bernard ſaith, Non mors filij, ſed voluntas placuit ſponte morientis: Not the dying of his ſonne pleaſed God, but that he was willing, epiſt. 191.

4. All this being confeſſed, that Chriſt was in himſelfe innocent, toward vs louing and beneficent, in his death willing and patient: yet ſeeing he as our ſuretie payd our debts, it was iuſt before God, that as he in himſelfe bare our ſinnes, ſo he alſo ſhould pay the price and diſcharge the debt, and ſo anſwere his fathers iuſtice.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, Rom. 3.25.26. God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be a reconciliation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſnes by the forgiuenes of ſinnes which are paſſed, &c. to ſhew at this time his righteouſnes, that he might be iuſt, and a iuſtifier of him, which is in the faith of Ieſus: From hence I reaſon thus; imputation of ſinne is vnto condemnation, as imputation of righteouſnes is vnto iuſtification: but it is iuſt with God to iuſtifie vs by the righteouſnes of Chriſt, therefore it was iuſt before God, that Chriſt for our ſins ſhould be condemned to death. Bernard thus giueth witneſſe hereto: Iuſtum eſt, vt reddat deus quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: It is iuſt, that God ſhould render that which he oweth; and he oweth what hee promiſed, lib. de liber. arbitr. So then as it is iuſt with God to performe ſaluation vnto vs in Chriſt which he hath promiſed: ſo it was iuſt with Chriſt to pay that debt which he vndertooke to be performed.

Argum. 2. God decreeth no vniuſt thing: but hee decreed the death of Chriſt; as Saint Peter ſaith, he was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2.23. God did not onely foreknow it, but decree and determine it: by the determinate counſell, ſaith the Apoſtle, ὡρισμένῃ βουλῇ: and therefore God is ſayd to ſend his ſonne to dye for vs, 1. Ioh. 4.16. God then was the author of his ſonnes death, but he is not the author of euill things or vniuſt: therfore Chriſts death in reſpect of Gods decree was not vniuſt. Auguſtine ſaith well: Deus aliud fecit & ordinauit; aliud non fecit, ſed ordinauit: God did or decreed ſomewhat to bee done, and diſpoſed and ordered it; ſomething hee doth not, but yet diſpoſeth and ordreth, in Pſal. 7. As in this caſe, the malice of the Iewes God decreed not, but he diſpoſed of their malice to a good end: but the death of Chriſt he both decreed and diſpoſed. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Peccatores in malis præſcitos tantum non prædeſtinatos, &c. Sinners are only foreſeene in their euil actions, not predeſtinate, contr. Pelag. Hypognoſtic. artic. 6. But Chriſt was not onely foreſeene to dye, but was predeſtinate thereto: Ergo, it was not euill.

Argum. 3. If Gods iuſtice be fully ſatisfied, and his wrath deſeruedly appeaſed by the death of Chriſt, it followeth that Chriſt died iuſtly: But the firſt is euident, becauſe Chriſt hath by his croſſe ſlaine the hatred betweene God and vs, Epheſ. 2.16. and before he dyed for vs, we were the children of wrath, Epheſ. 2.3. Ergo, Chriſt dyed in reſpect of our ſinnes to anſwere Gods iuſtice iuſtly.

The propoſition, which is onely doubted, is thus proued: firſt, nothing can ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, but that which is iuſt: if Chriſts death then were not iuſt before God, Gods iuſtice could not bee ſatisfied by it. Secondly, neither can any thing pleaſe God, or appeaſe his wrath by way of ſatiſfaction, but that which is iuſt: Chriſt death pleaſed God, it was a ſacrifice of a ſweete ſmelling ſauour vnto God, Epheſ. 5.2. Thirdly, Saint Paul ſaith, Rom. 8.3. God ſpared not his owne ſonne: not to ſpare is of iuſtice, to ſpare is of loue and mercie: it was mercie to vs, but iuſtice in Chriſt, that he dyed for the redemption of our ſinnes. Fourthly, Bernard ſaith, Non potuit expiari Adæ peccatum, niſi Chriſti morte: Adams ſin could not be expiated, but by the death of Chriſt, epiſt. 191. It could not be otherwiſe done, becauſe Gods iuſtice could not otherwiſe be ſatisfied: expiation then by death and blood belongeth to Gods iuſtice.

Argum. 4. None are forſaken of God, or ſtand accurſed by the law iniuſtly: for God is iuſt, and the law is iuſt, holie, good, Rom. 7.12. But Chriſt was as forſaken of God in part in the inſtant of his paſſion: as he himſelfe complaineth, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Mat. 27.46. he was alſo by the law made a curſe for vs, Galath. 3.13. Ergo, Chriſt in reſpect of our ſinnes, in the ſight of God ſuffered iuſtly. Beda witneſſeth with vs: Quid mirum ſi maledictum eſt deo, quod deus odit, niſi enim deus odiſſet peccatum & mortem noſtram non ad eam ſuſcipiendam & delendam filium ſuum mitteret: What marueile if that be accurſed of God, which God hateth? for vnleſſe God had hated ſinne and death, he would not haue ſent his ſonne to take it, and aboliſh it, in 3. ad Galath. Chriſt then ſtood as accurſed before God, becauſe he tooke vpon him that which God hateth, namely our ſinne, and death the fruit of ſinne.

Argum. 5. Theſe three, vtilitie, neceſſitie, equitie, are inſeparable companions: that onely is profitable, which is good and iuſt: Theſe things are good and profitable, 1. Timoth. 4.8. but Chriſts death was profitable; as Caiphas propheſied, συμφέρει. It is expedient, profitable for vs that one man dye for the people, and the whole nation periſh not, Iohn 11.50. Chriſts death then is both neceſſarie and profitable, and therefore both good and iuſt.

Obiect. The afflictions of the Saints are profitable to themſelues to correct them, to others for their example, yet are they not iuſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is iuſt with God to recompence tribulation, to them that trouble you, 2.Theſſ.1.6.If they which afflict Gods children are puniſhed iuſtly, then they did trouble them vniuſtly.

Anſw. The afflictions of the Saints,in reſpect of their perſecutors, are vniuſt: as the Prophet Dauid ſaith,Pſal.119.161.They haue perſecuted me without a cauſe: yet hee confeſſeth in reſpect of himſelfe toward GOD, that his afflictions were iuſt and good: verſ.71.It is good for me, that I haue been afflicted,that I may learne thy ſtatutes: verſ.75.I know that thy iudgements are right,and that thou haſt afflicted me iuſtly,or in truth: So Chriſts death, in reſpect of the malice of his enemies and his owne innocencie,was vniuſt,as the theefe confeſſed,Luk.23.41.We are righteouſly here,but this man hath done nothing amiſſe. But as Chriſt was our ſuretie and bare our ſinnes,ſo it was iuſt that he ſhould ſuſtaine the puniſhment of them.

Againe,that which is neceſſarie is iuſt: for that which is neceſſarie is good: Luk.10.42. One thing is neceſſarie,Mary hath choſen the beſt part. So then,neceſſarium is optimum, the neceſſarie thing is the beſt thing: and that which is good is iuſt: as Rom.7.12.the law is ſaid to be δικαία,ἀγαθὴ, iuſt and good. Chriſts death is neceſſarie,Hebr.2.17.ὤφειλε, debuit, he ought to be like vs in all things, &c.that he might be a faithfull high Prieſt: and verſ.10.ἔπρεπε, it became him: that which is neceſſarie and comely is iuſt: Chriſts death was expedient,comely,neceſſarie: Ergo,iuſt.

For the neceſſitie and expediencie of Chriſts death the Fathers doe thus teſtifie: Ambroſ.Triſtis eſt,quia mori neceſſe eſt: He is ſad,becauſe it was neceſſarie he ſhould dye,in 22.cap.Luc. But in another place: Intellige non ex neceſſitate, ſed voluntariam Chriſti paſſionem: Vnderſtand that Chriſts paſſion was voluntarie, not of neceſſitie,lib.4.*in Luc.*So then Chriſts death was neceſſarie, and it was not: it was not neceſſarie,that is,violent or compulſorie in reſpect of Chriſts obedience and willingnes; it was neceſſarie in reſpect of Gods determination.

Againe,he ſaith,Quæ alia erat cauſa incarnationis,niſi vt caro,quæ peccauerat per ſe redimeretur,quod peccauerat ergo,redemptum eſt: What other cauſe was there of Chriſts incarnation,but that the fleſh which had ſinned,ſhould be redeemed by it ſelfe,that which ſinned therefore was redeemed,de incarnat.cap.6. But this is the iuſtice of God, that the ſame that ſinned,ſhould be by it ſelfe redeemed.

Auguſtine thus ſheweth the expediencie and neceſſitie of Chriſts death: Sicut Elias inclinauit ſe vt ſuſcitaret puerum,ſic Chriſtus humiliauit ſe factus obediens vſque ad crucem,quia paruuli eramus, paruulum ſe fecit, & os quodammodo ſuper os poſuit: As Elias bowed himſelfe to raiſe the childe, ſo Chriſt humbled himſelfe being obedient to the croſſe, and becauſe wee were little ones, hee made himſelfe a little one,and as it were layd his mouth vpon ours,*de tempor.*206.

Likewiſe vpon theſe wordes, Pſalm.51.4.That thou maiſt ouercome, when thou art iudged: Non eſt iudicatus deus pater, non eſt iudicatus ſpiritus ſanctus, non inuenimus niſi ſolum filium in iſta carne iudicatum,vicit non ſolum de Pilato,ſed de Iudæis,de diabolo,&c. The father was not iudged,nor the holy ſpirit, wee finde none iudged but the ſonne onely in the fleſh: hee ouercame not onely Pilate, but the Iewes and the diuell,&c.*ſerm.de temp.*49.It was neceſſarie then,that Chriſt ſhould be iudged by death,that he might, in being iudged, ouercome.

Bernard ſaith excellently: Verbum dei,vt ad nos veniret, propria benignitas inuitauit,miſericordia traxit,veritas,quæ ſe venturum prædixerat,compulit: The word of God to come vnto vs inuited his owne benignitie,hee was moued by his mercie, compelled by his veritie, whereby he foretold his comming,&c.die Pentecoſt.ſerm.2. and this is his equitie: So then in Chriſts death there is both neceſſitie and equitie.

Origen ſhall conclude, who thus writeth vpon theſe words of Chriſt,Father if it be poſſible let this cup paſſe,Matth.26.39. Quod ad potentiam dei omnia poſſibilia, quod ad iuſtitiam poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things that are iuſt are onely poſſible,in Matth. tract.35. Therfore it was not poſſible for the cup to paſſe from Chriſt,becauſe it was not iuſt.

The ſumme is this: that if it be iuſt with God to iuſtifie vs by the imputation of Chriſts iuſtice, arg.1. if God decree no vniuſt thing, but he decreed Chriſts death,arg.2. if by Chriſts death Gods iuſtice be ſatisfied,his wrath iuſtly appeaſed,arg 3.if Chriſt were as forſaken of God in his death in part for our ſins,and accurſed by the law,but the law accurſeth none iniuſtly,arg.4. if that which bringeth true vtilitie, and is ioyned with neceſſitie, cannot bee without equitie;but in Chriſts death were both vtilitie and neceſſitie,arg.5. Then we conclude that Chriſts death, as he was our ſuretie,and tooke vpon him our ſinnes,could not in the decree and counſell of God be vniuſt. If Chriſt then ſuffered according to Gods iuſtice, and dyed to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, how could his death be vniuſt?

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, THAT CHRISTS blood was not giuen as a price of our redemption to the diuell.

THE QVESTION EXPLANED.

Art.22. WE graunt, that God by the price of Chriſts blood deliuered vs from the power of Sathan: but the price was not giuen to Sathan, but payed vnto God: Sathan was but the miniſter of Gods iuſtice, and as it were the Iaylor and tormentor that kept vs in feare: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt through death deſtroyed him that had power of death, that is the diuell, Hebr.2.14. hee had power of death no otherwiſe, than as Gods miniſter and executioner: by Chriſts death then we were deliuered from Sathans kingdome; and hee was vanquiſhed vpon the croſſe of Chriſt: as Origen ſaith, Principatus traducti & triumphati in ligno: The principalities were traduced and triumphed vpon the croſſe, Tract.3.in Matth. So he expoundeth Saint Paul, Coloſſ.2.15. and Cyprian witneſſeth: Vbi ventum eſt ad ſanguinem, deiectum eſt Satanæ regnum: When they came to blood, Sathans kingdome was deſtroyed, de duplic.martyr. So then Sathan was not as compounded with, but confounded by Chriſts blood; not entreated, but defeated; not hired with wages, but required againſt his will, to let his priſoners goe: Chriſt gaue nothing to him, but tooke from him, he waged him not, but wreſtled with him; he rendred nothing to him, but rent the captiues from him.

Ruffinus thus inferreth: Non damno aliquo patitur Chriſtus, ſed vt rex carcerem ingreſſus, vt ſoluat catenas, &c. Chriſt ſuffered not to any loſſe, but as a King entreth the iayle to looſe the chaynes: ſymbol.Ruffin. If Chriſt be the King, and death the priſon, and conſequently Sathan hauing power of death the iaylor, how can the King giue a raunſome to the iaylor?

Auguſtine thus witneſſeth: Neſcit diabolus quanta bona de illo fiunt, etiam cum ſæuit, ſæuiens intrauit cor Iudæ, ſæuiens tradidit Chriſtum, ſæuiens crucifixit, &c. The diuell knoweth not to what good his rage turneth, he raging entred into the heart of Iudas, raging hee deliuered vp Chriſt, and in his rage crucified him: and Chriſt being crucified the world was redeemed, *in Pſal.*130. If Sathan receiued a price to content him, how doth hee rage againſt Chriſt to torment him? if he deliuered him, then was he not deliuered as a price to him.

Saint Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth: Serpens primus crucifigitur recte, vt quia primus apud deum peccauerat diabolus, primus crucis ſententia feriretur: The Serpent is firſt crucified vpon the croſſe, and good reaſon, that becauſe the diuell was the firſt that had ſinned before God, hee ſhould firſt bee ſtriken with the ſentence of the croſſe, *Ambr.ſerm.*55. If Sathan were crucified by the croſſe, hee was not ſatisfied; if he were ſurprized by Chriſts blood, then was it not prized to him; if he were as ſold himſelfe thereby into captiuitie, how could we be bought from him and his captiuitie? it could not bee both a compenſation of our debt vnto him, and an obligation more ſurely to binde him: if Chriſts death were his confuſion, he did not then accept it as a condition.

If any of the Fathers haue ſomewhat written diuerſly from this, which is alleaged, as I denie not but ſome of them, as both Auguſtine and Ambroſe do ſpeake to ſuch effect, that Chriſts blood was accounted as a price to the diuel for our deliuerãce, they muſt not be ſo vnderſtood, as though either God couenanted, or Sathan was contented for that price to let vs goe: but that Chriſts blood, was in regard of the efficacie thereof as a price; that we thereby were as fully and effectually deliuered, as if wee had beene out of Sathans hand, by a great price giuen vnto him, redeemed. Otherwiſe if we take the Fathers in thus writing to ſpeake properly, we ſhall make them each to other, and to themſelues alſo contrarie.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THat Chriſt by his death and the price of his blood hath deliuered vs from the power of darknes and hell it is our holie faith, according to the Scriptures, Coloſſ.1.13. This price was paid vnto God to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, it was not giuen vnto Sathan: for God is the iudge, Sathan is the iaylor, to whom the iudge did deliuer vs becauſe of our ſins, Luk.12.38. the debt, wherein we ſtood bound, was vnto our Lorde and maſter, and hee in iuſtice deliuered vs to the iaylor, till wee ſhould pay all that was due, Matth.18.34. Chriſt came and payd our debt vnto God, not to the diuell: the debt being payd, the iaylor hath no longer charge nor power to keepe vs in priſon.

*Argum.*1. The price of our redemption was payd to our creditor to whom we were indebted: the diuell is not our creditor; the Lord abſolutely denieth it, Quis eſt creditor meus, cui vendidi vos? Who is the creditor to whom I haue ſold you? Iſai.50.1. None is our creditor but God, and to him onely wee are indebted, who onely is able to releaſe vs of our debt, as we are taught to pray, Matth.6.

Matth. 6. 12. Forgiue vs our debts, ὀφειλήματα, therefore the price of our debts was onely payed to God.

2. The price which was tendred and offered for our redemption was giuen to him, to whom the ſacrifice of Chriſts blood was offered: for the Apoſtle maketh προσφορὰν, and θυσίαν, an offering tender or oblation and a ſacrifice to bee all one, Epheſ. 5. 2. But Chriſt did giue himſelfe a ſacrifice, of ſweete ſauour to God, ibid. God forbid, that any man ſhould thinke, that Chriſts blood was ſacrificed to the diuell: Ergo, it was not offered nor giuen as a gift or price to the diuell.

3. Our Sauiour Chriſt is compared to a victorious man, that bindeth the ſtrong man, which is the diuell, and entreth by force into his houſe, and ſpoyleth him of his goods, that is, deliuereth them, whom Sathan held as his owne proper goods as captiues in priſon, Matth. 12. 29. Chriſt entred by force, then not by a price; by aſſaulting, not by aſſenting; by warre, not by wages; by fettering the ſtrong man, not by feeing him; by looſing our bands, not by giuing any thing into Sathans hands: as Auguſtine to this purpoſe is alleaged fitly by the Maſter of Sentences, lib. 3. diſt. 19. liter. a. Vnde nos diabolus tenebat, deletum eſt ſanguine redemptoris; non enim tenebat nos, niſi vinculis peccatorum noſtrorum; iſtæ erant catenæ captiuorum: venit ille, alligauit fortem vinculis paſſionis ſuæ, intrauit in domum eius, i. in corda eorum, vbi ipſe habitabat, & vaſa eius, i. nos eripuit: That wherewith the diuell held vs, was taken away by the death of Chriſt, hee came and bound the ſtrong man with the bands of his death, and entred into his houſe, that is, our hearts, where hee dwelt, and tooke away his veſſels or goods, that is, our ſelues, &c. Here is no price offered to Sathan, but a force inferred; not any thing giuen to him, but all taken from him: Vpon this ground he concludeth thus: Chriſtus ſe in ara crucis, non diabolo, ſed deo trinitati obtulit: Chriſt in the altar of the croſſe did offer himſelfe, not to the diuell, but to God the Trinitie: diſt. 20. liter. c.

Origen ſaith: Diabolus tradidit Chriſtum per timorem, ne auelleretur (genus humanum) de manu eius per doctrinam ipſius: The diuell deliuered Chriſt for feare, leſt mankinde ſhould be pulled from his hand by his doctrine, Tract. 35. Matth. The diuell then expected no pay for mans libertie, but deuiſeth by Chriſts death to keepe him ſtill in captiuitie.

Auguſt. in this behalfe maketh Sampſon a figure of Chriſt: Sampſon aduerſarios ſuos moriens oppreſſit, ſic Chriſti paſſio interfectio facta eſt perſequentium: Sampſon dying killeth his enemies: ſo Chriſts paſſion was the deſtruction of his perſecutors, ſerm. 107. And as the Philiſtims made themſelues ſport in Sampſons miſerie, which turned to their captiuitie: ſo ſaith Auguſtine, Diabolus trophæo ſuo victus eſt, exultauit, quando mortuus eſt Chriſtus, & ipſa morte Chriſti victus eſt: The diuell was ouercome in his owne policie: hee vaunted himſelfe, when Chriſt dyed, but hee was vanquiſhed by his death, ſerm. 174. So then as Sampſon gaue no price to his enemies to be excluded, but vſed a practiſe whereby they were all concluded; he did not promiſe them any thing to content them, but preuailed by prayer in his death to confound them: ſo Chriſt gaue not his blood to Sathan to taſte for his delight, but to waſte his kingdome by our deliuerie; not to pay him wages for vs, but to ſtay his raging againſt vs.

Againe, the author of the Sermons de ſanctis, vnder Auguſtines name, ſerm. 18. compareth Chriſt to Tobias fiſh: Cuius iecore per paſſionem aſſato, fugatus eſt diabolus: By whoſe fleſh and liuer as broyled vpon the croſſe, the diuell was chaſed away. Chriſts blood then was giuen no more a price to the diuell, than that fiſhes liuer (if wee admit the ſtorie for veritie, though not for authoritie) to the vncleane ſpirit: but I will ground no argument vpon the Apocryphall ſtorie of Tobias, but onely ſhew the meaning of the Fathers.

Hierome doth more truly and fitly reſemble Chriſt to Ionas, death and the diuell to the whale: Dum aſſumpti corporis ſollicitaris illecebra, & auidis faucibus prædam putas, interiora tua adunco dente confoſſa ſunt, &c. O death, while thou art entiſed with the baite of his bodie, and thinkeſt to get a pray for thy greedie iawes, thy inward parts are pierced with the hooke, Epitaph. Nepotian. As Ionas was a pray, not a price to the fiſh to appeaſe the minde: ſo Chriſt, though Sathan prayed and raged vpon his bodie, was a price to God to aſſwage his wrath.

To conclude: if then wee are indebted onely to God, not to the diuell, arg. 1. if Chriſts bodie were only giuen in ſacrifice to God, arg. 2. if Chriſt by his death did forcibly bind the ſtrong man, arg. 3. then was not Sathan hired as with a price to let his priſoners goe, neither was Chriſts blood counted as a raunſome to him for our deliuerance.

THE EIGHT PART, THAT CHRIST IN HIS ſoule did truly feele his fathers wrath kindled againſt him for our ſinne.

Feuardentius denieth, that Chriſt had any ſenſe or feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule, or that God did ſhew himſelfe as angrie towards him for our ſinne, p. 469. Artic. 23.

Argum. 1. Chriſt was alwaies the beloued ſonne of God, Matth.3.17. God did not chaunge in turning his loue to hatred.

2. God loued him the more dearely for his obedience to death; he was not therefore angrie with him: Iohn. 10.17. *Therefore doth my father loue mee, becauſe I laye downe my life. pag.*470.

3 If ye ſay God loued him as his ſonne, yet hated him as our ſuretie, or became a ſeruant for vs; ye fall into Neſtorius hereſie, and ſo make two perſons of Chriſt one beloued, an other hated: if ye ſay, that God was not angrie indeed, but Chriſt ſo perſwaded; you will coyne a new hereſie, that Chriſt had a falſe opinion of his father: *Feuard.*p.471.

1 Anſw. 1. Gods temporall wrath vpon Chriſt doth not eyther chaunge or diſcontinue his euerlaſting loue: for with Chriſts perſon being holy, innocent, righteous, God was neuer offended: our ſinnes laid vpon Chriſt were the obiect and matter of Gods wrath: a father that doth loue his child dearely, yet may be angrie with his childs faults, and in his anger correct them. 2. Abraham loued Iſaac moſt dearely, Gen.22.2. God bid him take his onely ſonne Iſaac whom he loued: yet at Gods commaundement he ſtretched out his hand to haue killed him, verſ.10. Abraham in this inſtant loued the perſon of his ſonne: yet in his holy anger and rage, he would kill him: I thinke to kill is no fruit or effect of loue. If Abraham then at the ſame inſtant retayned a fatherly loue toward Iſaac, and yet in an holy & iuſt zeale would haue killed him, why ſhould it ſeem ſtraunge that God not chaunging his euerlaſting loue toward his ſonne, yet was angrie with our ſinnes which he ſuſtained? 3. Auguſtine well ſaith: Vſque adeo non omnis qui iraſcitur odit, vt aliquando magis odiſſe conuincatur qui non iraſcitur: Many time he that is angry is ſo farre from hating, or not louing, that he is found rather to hate, which is not angrie: *in Matth.ſer*16. He giueth an inſtance of a child which through his fathers lenitie runneth into apparant danger of his life. I proue by this ſimilitude, that as there may be wrath in a father without a deſtruction of loue; ſo Gods eternall loue did ſtand inuiolable toward Chriſt without any chaunge, though his wrath appeared in the inſtant of Chriſts death, not ſhewing any alteration in God, but a diuerſitie of diſpenſation in Chriſt, who now ſuſtayned our perſon.

2. The next obiection hath the ſame anſwere, ſauing that it ſeemeth to affirme that Chriſt by his obedience to death purchaſed a greater meaſure of loue to himſelfe, which is a great errour: 1. Becauſe the loue of God toward his ſonne being from euerlaſting, was alwaies the ſame, neither increaſing nor decreaſing: for this were otherwiſe to make God mutable and chaungeable, which the Apoſtle denieth, Iam.1.17. if Gods loue ſhould ſometime abate, and ſometime abound. 2. Chriſt did not merite any thing to himſelfe but all for vs: as Ambroſe well ſaith: Chriſtus non emerendæ gratiæ ſuæ cauſa, ſed noſtræ eruditionis gratia ieiunauit: Chriſt did not faſt to merit fauour or grace to him ſelfe, but onely for our erudition ſake. *lib.*3.*de fid.c.*2. The like may be ſaid of all other actions of Chriſt: Chriſt obtained not an amplification of his loue by his obedience, but a manifeſtation of it onely: Chriſtus hoc natus accepit, vt poſt crucem manifeſtaretur, quid à patre, dum generaretur, accepit; non enim tunc accepit; à patre, quando à creatura cœpit fieri: Chriſt in his birth receiued this, that after his death it might be manifeſted, what he receiued of his father in his generation: for he did not then firſt receiue it, when the creature began to worke it: Ambroſe.in 2. Philipp. Chriſts glory then, and Gods loue toward him was due vnto his humanitie in his verie firſt incarnation, by right of his Godhead, as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith. Iohn.17. Glorifie me with that glorie, which I had with thee before the world was: This glorie was manifeſted in time, which was due to Chriſts perſon before all time.

3. 1. Neither doth it follow, that we ſhould make two perſons in Chriſt, when we affirme that at the ſame inſtant God did both loue him with an eternall loue, and was angrie with him with a temporall wrath: Auguſtine will teach you how this may be: Moſes famulus dei quomodo oderat peccatores cum pro eis orabat, quomodo non oderat cum eos occidebat; ea namque perfectione ſic oderat iniquitatem, quam puniebat, vt diligeret humanitatem pro qua orabat: Moſes the ſeruant of God, how did he hate the ſinners, when he prayed for them; how did he not hate them, when he killed them: with ſuch perfection he hated iniquitie, which he puniſhed, that he loued their humanitie, for the which he prayed. in Pſal. 138. So God in Chriſt loued his holines and innocency, but was angrie with our ſinnes and iniquitie which were vpon him: Heere then are not two perſons, but one and the ſame perſon diuerſly conſidered. 2. This then is no Neſtorianiſme: take you heed of Manichiſme, that you make not Chriſt to haue done all things fantaſtically & in ſhew, while he ſweateth drops of bloud, complaineth that he was forſaken, as though God were throughly angry with him, and yet no ſuch matter. 3. Neither do we ſay that Chriſt was onely ſo perſwaded of his father, that he was angrie, but indeed he was ſo for the time, and he verely in his ſoule felt it ſo to be. Dauid was a man greatly beloued of God, whereof he hath his name, yet he truely complaineth of Gods wrath, Pſal.38.3. There is nothing ſound in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger: And how this may be, that God may be temporally offended with the elect, that are eternally beloued, Saint Paul ſheweth, Rom.11,28. Concerning the goſpell, they are enemies for your ſakes, but as touching the election they are beloued for the fathers ſake: as the Iewes were temporally reiected; yet eternally in Gods counſell elected; ſo it is in this caſe, as Saint Ambroſe well ſheweth: De præſenti Deus iuſtitia iudicat, non de præſcientia: God doth iudge according to preſent iuſtice, not according to preſcience: in 9. ad Roman. And he further declareth how ſome may be ſaid to be elected in reſpect of their preſent iuſtice which are not in Gods preſcience: and ſo of the contrarie, ſome may be for a time in Gods temporall wrath ſuſpended, to whom euerlaſtingly ſaluation is intended: ſo Chriſt was eternally elected and dilected or beloued of God, but in reſpect of our ſinnes hanging vpon him, he was for a time as forlorne and reiected.

4 Laſtly we muſt diſtinguiſh in Chriſt betweene the faith of his ſoule, and ſenſe of his fleſh: his faith alwaies apprehended Gods fauour euen in the midſt of his deepeſt torments, as he ſaith, I ſet God alwaies before me, Pſal.16.8. but in his preſent ſenſe he felt and perceiued the wrath of God: Our Sauiour himſelfe doth warrant this diſtinction: ſaying of himſelfe, The ſpirit is readie, the fleſh is weake. Matth.26.41. Vpon the which words S. Ambroſe thus writeth. Audi vtramque vocem & carnis infirmæ, & ſpiritus prompti (pater ſi poſſibile eſt tranſeat calix) hæc eſt carnis vox (ſed non quod ego volo) habes deuotionem ſpiritus: Heare each voice of a weake fleſh, and prompt ſpirit: father if it be poſſible let the cup paſſe, this is the voice of the fleſh, (but not as I will,) here is the deuotion of the ſpirit.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THat the wrath of God lay heauily vpon Chriſt as our ſuretie, and that as he bare all our ſins, ſo he truly felt in his ſoule the wrath of God kindled againſt the ſame: thus we doe make it manifeſt out of ſcripture.

Argum. 1. Iſay.53.4. We iudged him, as plagued, ſmitten of God, and humbled: but no man is plagued, or ſmitten but of God being angrie: Ergo.

Anſw. 1. This ſmiting is referred onely to the temporall death of Chriſt by Hierome and others. 2. This might be done without Gods anger: for as Abraham would haue ſacrificed his ſonne without hatred or anger, he loued him ſtill: ſo God did ſuffer his ſonne to be ſlaine without anger. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima. c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that the prophet ſpeaketh not of Chriſts bodily death: for he ſaid before in the beginning of the verſe, he bare our infirmities, that is as the Septuagint tranſlate ἁμαρτίας, ſins, whom Saint Peter followeth, 1.Pet.2.24. But whence proceedeth the plague due vnto ſinne, then from Gods wrath? Againe his bodily ſuffrings are more properly expreſſed in the next verſe: He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions.

2. Hierome doth ſo vnderſtand the prophet: Factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, vt nos à maledicto liberaret; quod nos pro noſtris debebamus ſceleribus ſuſtinere, ille pro nobis paſſus eſt: ex quo perſpicuum eſt, ſicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam verè doluiſſe: He was made a curſe for vs, to deliuer vs from the curſe: for what we ſhould haue ſuſtained for our ſinnes, he ſuffered for vs: whence it is manifeſt that as his bodie was whipped, ſo his ſoule was truly grieued, in Iſay. c. 53. It is therefore vntrue which Bellarmine heere affirmeth, that Hierome vnderſtandeth Chriſts bodily death onely.

3. Euen the death of the bodie alſo ſheweth the wrath of God againſt ſinne, as the Apoſtle ſaith: That death entred by ſinne. Rom.5.12. And the prophet teſtifieth thus: When thou with rebukes doſt chaſtice man for iniquitie, thou makeſt his beautie to conſume as a moth. Pſal.39.11. The mortalitie then of man doth proceed from the rebukes of God, and his rebukes declare his wrath: Chriſt then euen in his bodily death alſo had experience of his fathers wrath againſt ſinne: though we grant, that death in Chriſts death is vanquiſhed, and the ſting thereof extinguiſhed, 1.Cor.15.56.57. And as Ambroſe wel ſaith: Chriſtus habet oleum lætitiæ, qui facit exultare morituros, mœſtæ fœtorē mortis aboleuit: Chriſt hath the oyle of gladnes aboue his fellowes, which cauſeth men readie to die to reioyce, and hath aboliſhed the ſtinch, and extinguiſhed the ſting of death. lib. 1. de ſpirit. c. 8.

4. Abraham alwaies loued his ſonne Iſaac, yet (I thinke) he could not kill him in loue: the Apoſtle ſaith, No man euer hated his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it: Ephes.5.29. To loue then is to nouriſh and cheriſh: Abraham in ſacrificing his ſonne did not cheriſh him, in that very act then he loued him not: ſo a father notwithſtanding he loueth his child, may in his iuſt anger correct him: as Auguſtine ſaith, Quanto melius eſt, ſi iraſceris & corrigis, quam ſi non iraſcendo perire permittas: How much better is it, if you be angrie and correct your ſonne, then by not being angrie to ſuffer him to periſh. ſerm. 16. in Matth. Like as then Abrahams holy rage againſt his ſonne, which was but in part and for a moment doth not aboliſh the perpetuall and totall loue to his childe: ſo by this example wee ſee howe

Chriſt was eternally and totally beloued of God, yet for a while and in part taſted of Gods wrath.

*Argum.*2. Iſay 53.5. The chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him: or παιδεία, the diſcipline of our peace, as the Septuagint reade: Chriſt then was to beare that diſcipline and chaſtiſement, which appertained to vs, and whereby our peace is purchaſed: but Gods wrath was not otherwiſe appeaſed, but by ſatisfying it; he did not otherwiſe ſatisfie it, then by ſuffring it, Hebr.5.8. He learned obedience by the things, which he ſuffered: Ergo, he ſuffered and endured Gods wrath for vs.

Anſw. If the whole chaſtiſement due vnto vs, was layd vpon Chriſt: then he muſt haue beene puniſhed eternally in hell, for that was due vnto vs: if Chriſts temporall puniſhment did ſatisfie for our eternall in regard of the worthineſſe of his perſon; by the ſame reaſon his bodily ſuffrings may ſuffice and ſatisfie for the death of our ſoules, *Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.*2.

*Contra.*1. Chriſt was to ſuffer the whole puniſhment due vnto ſinne, ſo farre as it became the dignitie of his perſon, and the neceſſitie of the worke: but if he had ſuffered eternally, neither could the worke of our redemption haue been accompliſhed, and his perſon ſhould haue endured that, which him not beſeemed: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.2.10. It became him to be conſecrated through afflictions: and Auguſtine to the like effect, Decuit eum, it became him to vndertake this worke, *qu.*113.ex veter.Teſtament. Chriſt then was onely to paſſe through thoſe afflictions, which became him.

2. It followeth not, becauſe Chriſt is exempted from that puniſhment which became not his perſon, that therefore he ſhould be freed from thoſe ſuffrings alſo, which are no derogation vnto him: we attribute ſo much to the dignitie of Chriſt, as that we aboliſh not the equitie of God: ſo farre with Chriſts perſon it muſt be diſperſed, as that yet Gods iuſtice be ſatisfied: to ſuffer in ſoule, Gods iuſtice required, neyther was Chriſts perſon thereby diſhonoured; therefore thoſe ſuffrings he was to endure for vs: as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Ought not Chriſt to haue ſuffred theſe things, and ſo to enter into his glory, Luke 24.25? Auguſtine well ſaith, Potuerat Dominus noſter hoſtem humani generis ſola maieſtate proſternere, ſine incarnationis humilitate, ſine certamine paſſionis, ſed homo, &c. non violentia liberandus fuit, ſed miſericordia redimendus, iuſto igitur ordine, &c. The Lord could haue ſubdued the enemie of mankind onely with his maieſtie, without either the humilitie of his incarnation, or difficultie of his paſſion: but man was not by violence to be deliuered, but by mercy and indulgence to be redeemed, therefore in iuſt order, &c. *ſerm.*156. It was meet then and iuſt, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer as he did for vs.

*Argum.*3. Hebr.4.15. Chriſt was in all thinges tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne: as Chriſts members are tempted, ſo was he, but his members do feele in their ſoules the terrors of conſcience, and, haue experience of Gods wrath: as Iob complaineth, Iob 6.4. The arrowes of God are in me, and the terrors of the almightie fight againſt me: and Pſalme 89.46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? much more then did Chriſt feele the burthen of his fathers wrath, bearing all the ſinnes of the elect in himſelfe.

Anſw. If Chriſt muſt be tempted in all things like to vs, then he muſt haue beene burned, beheaded, torne in pieces: he ſhould haue beene ſubiect to diſeaſes, as the gowte, the dropſie, the palſey, for all theſe are incident to his members, *Feuard.p.*445.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of temptations, which are for the moſt part ſpirituall, not of bodily paſſions, therefore this anſwere is impertinent. 2. Yet becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere Heb.2.17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren: that is, both as touching his bodie and his ſoule: I anſwere againe: 1. that this clauſe in all things, is not to be vnderſtood of euery particular paſſion, but of the generall kind: not that Chriſt ſuffered euery particular maladie of the bodie, for that had beene impoſſible, but euery kind of griefe, both of bodie and ſoule. 2. It is abſurd to obiect ſo many kindes of death, ſeeing it was impoſſible for Chriſt to haue dyed often, Hebr.9.25.28. 3. Neyther was it comely for Chriſt to ſuffer all, that we do, in that manner and meaſure: whereof the Apoſtle maketh manifeſt exception: it became him, &c. in ſuffringes not comely Chriſt was not to be like vs. 4. Againe, ſinne is excepted, and in ſinne alſo the cauſe, and effectes thereof are comprehended: ſo then Chriſt could not be like vnto vs in our conception, which is the beginning and cauſe of ſinne; nor yet in our ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, which are the proper and immediate fruites and effects of ſinne: as it is in the Pſalme, There is no reſt in my bones, becauſe of my ſinne. Pſal.38.3.

3. The Apoſtle alſo giueth a reaſon, why it became Chriſt to bee like vs in his ſuffrings and temptations: He is able thereby to ſuccour them, that are tempted, in that he ſuffered and was tempted, Hebr.2.18. Where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of Chriſts abſolute power, whereby he is able without experience had of our temptations, to ſuccour vs, but of his humane compaſſion, whereby he is able by his owne feeling to haue pitie of vs: and, though he ſuffered not in bodie euery particular griefe as we do, as our diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, yet by the experience which he had in other of our infirmities, he hath a feeling alſo of thoſe, and therein in his pitifull compaſſion is able to helpe: wherefore, that Chriſt might be able alſo to ſuccour vs in his owne feeling, when wee are vexed in ſoule with terror of conſcience, and the ſenſe of Gods wrath, it became him in his owne ſoule to feele the like. And ſo I conclude with S. Ambroſe; Qui corpus ſuſcepit, omnia debuit ſubire quæ corporis ſunt, vt eſuriret, ſitiret, angeretur, &c. He that tooke a bodie, muſt vndergoe all thinges belonging to the bodie, as to be hungrie, thirſtie, to be grieued: in 12.cap.Luc. As he here ſaith of Chriſts bodie, ſo likewiſe of his ſoule: Minus mihi contulerat, ſi non meum ſuſcepiſſet affectum, &c. He had done little for me, if he had not taken mine affection: and againe, Debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, vt vinceret triſtitiam non excluderet: He was to take my ſorrow to ouercome it, not to exclude it: in Luc.22. By this ſentence then, thoſe ſorrowes of ours, which Chriſt excluded from himſelfe, are not yet vanquiſhed nor ouercome.

Bernard ſaith, Vt quos viuificauit mors tua, tua nihilominus trepidatio robuſtos, mœſtitia lætos, turbatio quietos redderet: That thoſe whom thy death quickened, thy trembling might ſtrengthen, thy heauineſſe might cheare, thy troubles might quiet: in die.S.Andr.ſerm.1. Our peace then and quietneſſe of ſoule is purchaſed by the like trouble and terror in Chriſts ſoule.

Auguſtine alſo in this behalfe maketh Noah a figure of Chriſts paſſion, who was drunken and vncouered in his tent: ſo Chriſt ſaith he, Calice paſſionis adeo factus eſt ebrius, vt ipſo tegmine corporis nudaretur, &c. So Chriſt was drunken as it were with the cuppe of his paſſion, that he was left naked of the couering of his bodie: ſerm.153. he expreſſeth but one effect of this ſpirituall drunkenneſſe; the Prophet ſheweth another, Ierem.23.9. I am like a drunken man, for the preſence of the Lord: It is then the wrathfull preſence of God, which is the cauſe as it were of the ſpirituall drunkenneſſe of the ſoule: when it taſteth ſo deepely of the cuppe of Gods wrath, that it is ſo rauiſhed and ouerwhelmed, like as the bodie, when it is intoxicate with ſtrong drinke.

Wherefore, if Chriſt were ſmitten and plagued of God for our ſinnes, argum.1. If the whole chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him, argum.2. If hee was tempted in all things like vs, argum.3. then it remaineth that out of all doubt, he felt the terrors of ſoule, and had experience of the wrath of God againſt our ſinne: for ſuch temptations are the members of Chriſt ſubiect vnto.

THE NINTH PART, THAT CHRIST DID TRVLY complaine vpon the Croſſe, that he was forſaken of God, and that he verily felt himſelfe in his ſoule for our ſinne, for the time, as reiected of God in part, though not totally or finally.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

FEuardentius thus obiecteth and reaſoneth. 1. If Chriſt were truly forſaken of God, it would follow that the hypoſtaticall vnion was diſſolued, and that Chriſt was perſonally ſeparated from God, for otherwiſe he could not be forſaken. Feuarden.p.473.confut.1. Artic.24.

2. The Centurion notwithſtanding Chriſt ſo complained and cried out, yet confeſſeth thus of him; this truly was the ſonne of God, he was a righteous man: Matth.27. Farre off was he, from imagining Chriſt to be forſaken of God. Feuarden.p.474.lin.17.

3 Chriſt was alwaies moſt holy, innocent, iuſt, and therefore acceptable vnto God, he was not then reiected or forſaken. Feuarden.p.475.confut.3.

4. Out of Fulgentius, Diuinitas Chriſti animam in inferno non deſeruit: Chriſts diuinitie did not leaue his ſoule in hell: Ergo, his ſoule was not forſaken. Feuarden.p.474.lin.32.

5. If Chriſt had beene verily forſaken, then he ſo crying out ſhould haue deſpaired, which were horrible blaſphemie to affirme. Bellarm.argum.6.Feuarden.p.485.conf.6.

6. Chriſt prayeth for them which crucified him, ſaying: Father forgiue them, they know not what they doe. Luk.23.34. How could Chriſt pray vnto God, or aſſure himſelfe to be heard, if he were forſaken. p.488.conf.12.

7. How could Chriſt promiſe Paradiſe to the theefe vpon the Croſſe, if he were himſelfe forſaken, and not ſure of Paradiſe: Feuard.p.448.lin.32.

Anſw. 1. If Chriſt had beene totally and eternally forſaken, the perſonall vnion muſt haue been diſſolued: but vpon this temporall and partiall reiection there followeth not a perſonall diſſolution or generall dereliction. 2. As the bodie of Chriſt being without life, was ſtill hypoſtatically vnited to the Godhead, ſo was the ſoule of Chriſt, though for a time without feeling of his fauour: the dereliction of the one doth no more diſſolue the hypoſtaticall vnion, then the death of the other: if life went from the bodie, and yet the deitie was not ſeparated in the perſonall conſociation, but onely ſuſpended in operation: ſo the feeling of Gods fauour, which is the life of the ſoule, might be intermitted in Chriſt, and yet the diuine vnion not interuerted. 3. Auguſtine doth well ſhew, how this may be : when he ſaith, that Paſſio Chriſti dulcis fuit diuinitatis ſomnus : The paſſion of Chriſt was the ſweet ſleepe of his diuinitie. lib de eſſent.diuin. Like as then in ſleepe the ſoule is not departed, though the operation thereof be deferred : ſo in Chriſts ſleepe vpon the croſſe, the Godhead was not ſeparated, though the working power thereof were for a time ſequeſtred.

2 2. 1. The Centurion being a Romane vnderſtood not the language, wherein Chriſt complained crying out, he was forſaken, ſeeing the Iewes themſelues miſtooke his words, ſaying, he called for Elias. Matth.27.47. 2. And the Euangeliſt euidently ſheweth, that not the hearing of thoſe words, but the ſeeing of the earthquake and other things, which were done drew that confeſſion from the Centurion, that Chriſt was the ſonne of God. Matth.27.54. 3. Who denieth but that notwithſtanding Chriſt truely complained he was forſaken, yet he was the ſonne of God ſtill: for the hypoſtaticall vnion was not hereby diſſolued, as I haue anſwered to the firſt obiection : for like as the ſoule of Chriſt being parted from his bodie, was ſeparated only from it τοπικῶς not ὑποστατικῶς, locally, not hypoſtatically : Damaſcene.lib.3. de Fid. c.27. The ſoule ceaſed working in the bodie, yet was not diuorced in the perſonal being from the bodie : ſo the filiall vnion was not diſſolued, though the effectuall feeling were for a while diſcontinued.

3 3. 1. It followeth not becauſe Chriſt was alwaies the beloued ſonne of God in himſelfe, that therefore he could not be forſaken for a time in reſpect of our ſinnes, which he as our ſuretie anſwered for : If they can tell me, how theſe two can ſtand together, that firſt God ſhould promiſe as concerning David, his ſeed ſhall endure for euer, Pſal.89.36. and yet the Church complaineth, *thou haſt reiected and abhorred, and beene angrie with thine annointed, Ibid. v.*38. then will I anſwere them how both theſe may be at once in Chriſt, dilection and dereliction : like as then the elect members of Chriſt may be forſaken not totally, or finally, but ex parte, in part, and for a time, and yet their election remaine firme ſtill; the ſame may be the caſe of our head, that he was ex parte derelictus, onely in part forſaken, and for a time, alwaies beloued for his owne innocency, but for vs and in our perſon, as our pledge and ſuretie deſerted.

2 Auguſtine very wel ſheweth, how one man may at the ſame time both loue & hate another: Hominem deus fecit, praeuaricatorem ſeipſe fecit; ama in illo, quod deus fecit, perſequere in illo, quod ipſe ſibi fecit : God made man, & he made himſelf a ſinner, loue that which God made, perſecute that which he made himſelfe. *in Pſal.*100. So Chriſt in reſpect of his holines and innocency the fruits & graces of the ſpirit, was beloued of God, but in regard of our ſins which were our owne works, now laide vpon Chriſt, as his owne, he was as forſaken: ſee more for a fuller anſwer to this argument. *part.*8. *reſp, ad obiect.*1. et. 3.

4 4. 1. Chriſt indeed was not forſaken finally neither his ſoule in hell, nor his body in the graue, and ſo is S. Peter to be vnderſtood. Act.2.27. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in the graue or hel: for like as Chriſts bodie was forſaken for a time in that it died, but not forſaken finally, becauſe it roſe from death: ſo his ſoule was forſaken in part while the terrors of God were in it, but not totally or generally, becauſe he ſubdued theſe ſorrowes of hell, wherewith he was compaſſed. 2. Saint Paul in the one ſenſe ſaith. 2. Cor.4.9. We are perſecuted, but not forſaken ; that is, vtterly or finally : Dauid in the other ſenſe complaineth, that he was forſaken, Pſal.22.1. that is in part, and for a time in his owne ſenſe and feeling: And ſo Auguſtine well ſaith : Vnuſquiſque pro peccatis neceſſario flagellatur, ſed ab eo, ſi Chriſtianus eſt, miſericordia dei non diſpergitur: Euery man is neceſſarily whipped for his ſinne, but he is not ſtripped of Gods mercy, if he be a Chriſtian, *in pſal.*88. *ſerm.*2. So there are two kinds of dereliction or forſaking, one is for a time and in part; ſo the elect may be, and Chriſt was vpon the croſſe forſaken: another which is totall, finall, and generall, and ſo neither Chriſt nor his members are forſaken.

5 5. 1. Neither doth it follow that Chriſt vttered words of deſperation, if he had felt himſelfe indeed in his ſoule forſaken: for we muſt diſtinguiſh between the faith of Chriſt, which was alwaies ſound and firme, and the ſenſe of his humane infirmity, which cauſed him to complaine; ſo that in the deepeſt bottome of the anguiſh of his ſoule he is vpheld and ſuſtained by his faith, ſaying, my God, my God : whereby he ſheweth his ſingular confidence and truſt in God, notwithſtanding the preſent ſenſe of his wrath.

2. Bellarm. 1. If Chriſt did ſuffer the puniſhment of the damned and of hell, as Caluine affirmeth, then he alſo deſpaired : for deſperation is an eſſentiall part of the paine of hell. 2. This ſpeech of Chriſt it was eyther deliberate and aduiſed, or indeliberate and vnaduiſed : if the firſt, then Chriſt verily deſpaired; if the ſecond, his paſſions were inordinate, which is not to be admitted.

3. Neither can it be imagined, that the firſt clauſe (my God, my God) ſhould be aduiſedly ſpoken, and the other (why haſt thou forſaken me) to be vnaduiſedly vttered; was Chriſt ſo weake and inconſtant, that he could not continue fower words in faith?

4. And if the firſt words, my God, my God, are a correction of the other, then the correction goeth before the error, which were abſurd. Bellarm.lib.4.de anim.c.8.arg.6.

Contra. 1. Such puniſhment of hell, as Chriſt might endure without ſinne, wee doubt not to aſcribe vnto him: but deſperation is a deteſtable ſinne, and therfore farre from Chriſt: the Apoſtle teacheth vs to make this exception, Heb.4.17. that Chriſt was tempted in all things as we are, ſinne onely excepted: wherefore this is a meere cauill to obiect that, which is by the Apoſtle directly excepted. And Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Solus Chriſtus ſine peccato, peccati pœnam ſubire dignatus eſt: Onely Chriſt without ſinne, vouchſafed to vndergoe the puniſhment of ſinne, *contr.2.epiſt.Pelag.*4.4. Therefore no puniſhment which is neceſſarily accompanied with ſinne, can bee faſtened vpon Chriſt.

2. The whole ſpeech of Chriſt was aduiſed and deliberate, and yet no deſpayre at all: in which deliberatiue ſpeech both he cryeth out in the feeling of his ſorrow, that it might appeare what he endured for vs, and hee alſo vttereth his faith and confidence, to teach vs by his example to be confident in our trouble. Damaſcene ſaith well for the firſt, μὴ ἐπιτιμήματι φύσεως,&c. ἀλλ᾽ ἀποδείξει ὑπάρξεως, that which was ſaid and done proceeded not from the fault or deprauation of nature, but for the demonſtration of his true exiſtencie and humanitie: lib.3.de fid.c.22. For the other Saint Ambroſe ſpeaketh: Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne tu ſi cœperis dubitare deſperes: His doubtfulnes doth ſtrengthen vs, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpayre, *lib.2.de fid.c.*4.

3. 1. Neither doth the faith of Chriſt conclude it ſelfe within theſe wordes onely, My God, my God, but is continued throughout the whole ſenſe and ſentence: for at the ſame time Chriſt both ſheweth his humane infirmitie, and his conſtant fidelitie, his exceeding great paſſion, and his excellent confeſſion: As Damaſcene ſaith: φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειρασθεῖσα, his will was firſt tempted of his naturall infirmitie; and againe, νευρωθεῖσα, it was corroborate and ſtrengthened by his diuine will, *lib.3.de fid. cap.*18. 2. Neither is this ſo ſtraunge a thing, for nature and faith to appeare at once: as the Prophet Dauid ſheweth in himſelfe, Pſal.31.22. I ſaid in my haſte, I am caſt out of thy ſight: here is Dauids infirmitie: yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer: here is his faith and ſtabilitie.

4. Neither doe we ſay, that one part of the ſentence is a correction of the other: but the whole ſheweth a ſingular moderation and direction by faith of Chriſts naturall affection in the middeſt of his deepeſt paſſion: So the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.5.8. that he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered. And Auguſtine witneſſeth: Vnde patefacit, quod & humanam habuit voluntatem, per quam obediit patri, & immaculatam ab omni peccato eandem voluntatem: Whereby he ſheweth, that he had both an humane will, by the which hee was obedient to his father, and the ſame will immaculate and free from all ſinne: ex epiſt. Agathon. ad Conſtantin.

6.7. Chriſt notwithſtanding this ſenſe of his dereliction, might and did both promiſe paradiſe to the theefe, whereof he doubted not, and pray in charitie for his perſecutors: for his faith, hope and charitie failed not in the deepeſt of his agonie: for though hee felt Gods wrath in his humane ſenſe and infirmitie, yet his faith was ſtedfaſt in all godly conſtancie: and ſo as Ambroſe ſaith of the like requeſt of Chriſt, when he prayed that the cup might paſſe, &c. that there was both vox carnis, & deuotio ſpiritus, the voyce of the fleſh, and the deuotion alſo of the ſpirit. In like manner in this place Chriſt ſheweth in the complaint his humane ſenſe, as alſo his godly confidence, Ambr.lib.4.in Luc.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THat our bleſſed Sauiour bearing our ſinnes in himſelfe vpon the croſſe, did verily feele Gods wrath in his ſoule, and truly complained in reſpect thereof, that he was forſaken of God: he himſelfe thus euidently teſtifieth.

Argum. Our Sauiour cryeth out and complaineth vpon the croſſe: My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Matth.27.46. Theſe words were vttered in truth, not in colour or ſhew: as Athanaſius ſaith: φύσει, καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, οὐ δοκήσει τὰ πάντα ἐγένετο, All things were done naturally and in truth, not in opinion, or ſhew: ad Apollinar. Ergo, Chriſt did feele himſelfe in his ſoule forſaken of God.

Anſ. 1. One anſwere is, that Chriſt ſpeaketh in our perſon, and not in his owne; to the which ſenſe ſome of the Fathers ſeeme to incline: as *Damaſcene lib.3.de fid.c.*24. he ſaith, he was forſaken, becauſe we were iuſtly forſaken for our ſinnes.

2. But the moſt common anſwere is this, that Chriſt was forſaken in reſpect of his bodie and fleſh, which was yeelded vp into the hands of the Iewes to kill and crucifie, and vſe at their pleaſure, and therefore Chriſt complaineth, that God would not deliuer him: ſic Bellarm.reſp.ad arg 4. as if Chriſt in effect had thus ſaid: My God, which diddeſt deliuer Noe from the flood, Abraham from Vr of the Chaldees, Iſaac from the ſword of his father, Iacob from the hand of his brother, Iſrael out of Ægypt, Ioſeph out of priſon, Dauid from Goliah, &c. why haſt thou left me without any helpe? *ſic Feuard.p.*477.

3. To this purpoſe the Frier alleageth diuers Fathers, as *Tertullian, Origen, Epiphanius, Cyrill, Hierome, Bernard, p.*479. whoſe teſtimonies ſhall be examined afterward.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that Chriſt ſpeaketh in his owne perſon, ſaying, Why haſt thou forſaken me? 2. As Origen ſaith, Non fas eſt credere mentiri Chriſtum dicentem, quare, &c. It is not ſafe to beleeue that Chriſt lyed when he ſaid, why haſt thou forſaken me? Tract. 35. in Matth. But if Chriſt had ſaid he was forſaken, and yet was not, it had been an vntruth. 3. As for Damaſcens ſentence, it is reiected by Iodocus Clictoueus in his enarrations vpon that place. 4. And yet Damaſcene may very well be interpreted otherwiſe: for he ſaith that Chriſt thus ſpake, ἡμέτερον οἰκειούμενος πρόσωπον, hauing put on, aſſumed, or inhabiting our perſon: which is as he expoundeth himſelfe, cap. 25. ἀναδεχόμενος, receiuing our perſon, that is, μεθ' ἡμῶν ταττόμενος, being ordained with vs, that is, made like vs: So then his meaning is, that Chriſt in our perſon, that is, in reſpect of his humanitie taken from vs, thus complained.

2 2. Neither can it be referred to the leauing of Chriſt in his bodily death and torments. 1. The ſenſe of theſe words muſt be deriued from the 22. Pſal. verſ. 1. where the Prophet complaineth not ſo much of any outward affliction, but that he was without ſpiritual comfort, Why art thou ſo farre from my health, and the voyce of my roring? And to the like effect he prayeth, Pſal. 51. 11. Caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thy holie ſpirit from me: verſ. 12. Reſtore me to the ioy of thy ſaluation. To be caſt away then, or forſaken, is to be left comfortleſſe of Gods ſpirit.

2. If Chriſt ſhould haue ſo cryed out, and, as the Prophet ſaith, rored, in reſpect of his bodily death, he ſhould haue ſhewed himſelfe weaker, than many of his members, who were chearefull in the middeſt of their torments, being inwardly comforted.

3. If this forſaking of Chriſt, were the leauing of him to the pleaſure of his perſecutors, it is likely that Chriſt would haue vttered this voyce in the beginning of his paſſion, being now alreadie nayled to the croſſe, for euen then had they wrought their will vpon him; but he ſo cryed not till three houres after: and at the ninth houre being readie to giue vp the ghoſt, and hauing wreſtled all this while in his ſoule with the terrors of hell, and hauing felt the abſence of Gods fauour within, as the world wanted the Sunne light without, then hee cryed out and complained, My God my God, &c.

4. Neither doth the Scripture vſe to call this a dereliction, or deſertion, when a man is left to his perſecutors: as Saint Paul ſaith, we are perſecuted, but not forſaken, 2. Cor. 4. 9.

5. In this complaint of Chriſt, the whole perſon of Chriſt conſiſting of both his natures is expreſſed, the one part or nature of Chriſt forſaketh, that is his deitie, the other is forſaken, namely his humanitie; then the ſoule of Chriſt is alſo in this inſtant forſaken, as well as his bodie: for it either forſaketh, or is forſaken: but not the firſt, for it was the Godhead onely that left him, not in eſſence, but in ſenſe; not in being, but in feeling: Ergo, his ſoule was forſaken.

6. Neither did the perſecutors force Chriſts ſoule out of his bodie, that in that behalfe hee ſhould complaine as forſaken: for hee layd downe his life of himſelfe, no man tooke it from him, Ioh. 10. 18. And as Ambroſe writeth vpon theſe words, Emiſit ſpiritum, He gaue vp the ghoſt; Quod emittitur voluntarium; quod amittitur neceſſarium eſt: That which is emitted or ſent forth is voluntarie; that which is amitted is neceſſarie, in Luc. 22.

7. Chriſt was forſaken, but in deeper degree and meaſure of feeling, as his members doe often finde themſelues forſaken: but his members doe feele the terrors of conſcience, and for the time are as forſaken in their feeling: as it appeareth in Dauid, Pſal. 31. 20. I am caſt out of thy ſight: In Iob. 30. 21. Thou art an enemie vnto me, &c. Ergo, ſo was Chriſt forſaken: for as Ambroſe ſaith, Flagellatus eſt ipſe, ne nos flagellaremur: He was ſcourged, that we ſhould not be ſcourged, in Luc. 22. So he was forſaken, that we ſhould not be forſaken.

3 1. Tertullian ſaith, Reliquit dum non parcit: God left his ſonne in not ſparing him, hee left him in deliuering him, lib. ad Praxeam. To this not ſparing belongeth the ſpirituall forſaking: this teſtimonie is not againſt vs.

2. Origen ſaith, Derelictus fuit, comparatione gloriæ, &c. ad confuſionem: He was forſaken, comparing his glorie which he had with his father to this preſent confuſion vpon the croſſe, Hom 35. in Matth. As though the dereliction of his ſoule doth not properly belong vnto this confuſion.

3. Epiphanius ſaith: Non ſeparata deitate, &c. Chriſt did not thus crye out, as though his deitie were ſeparated, contr. hereſ. 69. As though any man ſaith, that Chriſt was forſaken of his Godhead: this ſentence is improperly alleaged.

4. Cyrill: Opus erat ad fidem noſtram, &c. It was neceſſarie to our faith, that Chriſt ſhould ſhew himſelfe a true man in his paſſion: and therefore leſt any man ſhould doubt, as a man hee crieth out, My God, my God: lib. 10. Theſaur. c. 3. This teſtimonie rather maketh againſt the Frier: for if Chriſt by thus crying out would declare himſelfe to be a perfect man, who conſiſteth of bodie and ſoule, it muſt follow, that the whole man Chriſt complaineth, that he was in his whole humanitie forſaken.

5. Hierome ſaith: Chriſtus derelictus pro parte carnis: Chriſt was forſaken on the behalfe of his fleſh,*in Pſal.*21. By fleſh he vnderſtandeth the whole humanitie of Chriſt: as in the ſame place, Humanitas loquitur quomodo derelicta fuerit in Adam: His whole humanitie ſpeaketh how it was forſaken in Adam: which was both in bodie and ſoule.

6. Bernard ſaith: Quædam ibi derelictio fuit,vbi nulla fuit in tanta neceſſitate virtutis exhibitio,nulla oſtenſio maieſtatis: It was a kind of dereliction,when in ſuch neceſſitie there was no vertue exhibited,no maieſtie declared,ſer.5.de verb.Iſaiæ. This may be referred as well to the fayling of inward comfort,as to the aſſayling of outward croſſes: for neither in the one nor the other, did the diuine maieſtie comfort and vertue declare it ſelfe.

4. Now on the contrarie ſide I will produce the Fathers teſtifying for the truth. 1. Origen:Forſitan videns peccata hominum,pro quibus patiebatur,dixit,&c. It may be that Chriſt ſeeing the ſinnes of men,for the which he ſuffered,cryed out,that he was forſaken. And againe, Non exiſtimo humano more iſta dixiſſe propter calamitatem, quæ eum comprehenderat in cruce: I doe not thinke that hee ſaid thus after the manner of men,becauſe of the calamitie,which faſtened vpon him on the croſſe; *Tract.*35.in Matth. Origen then maketh not the outward calamitie of the croſſe, but the inward ſuffring for our ſinnes,the ground and cauſe of Chriſts dereliction. 4

2. Ambroſe: Quoniam delicta aliena ſuſcepi, etiam delictorum alienorum verba ſuſcepi,vt me derelictum à patre dicam: Becauſe I haue taken other mens ſinnes,I haue alſo taken the words of their ſinnes to ſay,I am forſaken of my father,*de incarnat.c.*5. This dereliction then of Chriſt proceeded from the conſideration of our ſins,which lay vpon him. And againe,Dubitatio illa nos firmat,ne & ſi tu deſperare cæperis,deſperes: His dubitation is our confirmation,that in our doubting we fall not into deſperation,*lib.*2.*de fid.c.*4. He calleth the perplexitie and dereliction of Chriſt in his ſoule, *dubitation,*or doubtfulnes: though to ſpeake properly Chriſt doubted not at all.

3. Hierome: Chriſtus ſic orauit in cruce,deus,deus,quid dereliquiſti me? longe à ſalute mea verba delictorum meorum,&c. Chriſt thus prayed vpon the croſſe,My God,my God,why haſt thou forſaken me? far from my health are the words of my ſinnes, *lib.*3.aduerſ.Pelag. Chriſts dereliction then was grounded vpon our ſinnes,which he bare.

4. Auguſtine: Non dedignatus eſt aſſumere nos in ſe, transfigurare nos in ſe, & loqui verbis noſtris, vt nos loqueremur verbis ipſius;hæc enim mira commutatio facta eſt,& diuina peracta ſunt commercia,&c. He vouchſafed to aſſume our nature to himſelfe,to transfigure vs in himſelfe,to ſpeake our words, that we might ſpeake his words: for a wonderfull commutation is made,& a royall or diuine exchaunge effected,&c.*in Pſal.*30. As wee then ſpeake with Chriſts words of ſpirituall comfort, ſo he ſpake our words in his ſpirituall diſtreſſe: and as wee in our trouble of minde complaine of the abſence of Gods comfort,ſo did Chriſt.

5. Hilarie: Chriſtus cruci vniuerſa ea,quibus infirmabamur,affixit; ideo peccata noſtra portat & pro nobis dolet,&c. Chriſt did faſten to his croſſe all thoſe things vniuerſally, whereby wee are weakened and troubled: therefore hee bare our ſinnes, and was grieued for vs, &c.*c.*31.in Matth. If Chriſt faſtened all our infirmities in himſelfe to the croſſe, then alſo the ſenſe and feeling of deſertion and dereliction.

6. Beda: Vt homo loquitur meos circumferens metus,quod in periculis poſiti à deo nos deſeri putamus: He ſpeaketh as a man bearing our feares,becauſe when we are in daunger we thinke wee are forſaken of God,in 15.Marc. If Chriſt then complained of deſertion and forſaking, as his members in their extremitie vſe to doe: then was it the dereliction of his ſoule,which hee felt, as his members in ſome meaſure vſe to feele.

Wherefore ſetting apart all other deuiſes and coniectures of men, I reſolue with Origen: firſt, that neither Chriſt complained in humilitie,that he was forſaken of the deitie:for then he ſhould haue complained vntruly. Secondly,neither that in regard of the preſent darknes hee ſo ſayd, as ſome thinke. Thirdly,nor yet did he ſpeake in the perſon of the Iewes,which were *reiected,*that the Gentiles might be elected. Fourthly, nor yet did hee make this outcrye by reaſon of his outward calamitie vpon the croſſe: all theſe coniectures Origen refuſeth, and concludeth rather, that Chriſt becauſe of our ſinnes which he bare, for the which he felt Gods anger, and himſelfe forſaken,thus cryed out and complayned vpon the croſſe.

THE TENTH PART, THAT CHRIST WAS VErily made a curſe for vs,and did beare both in his bodie and ſoule, that curſe,which by reaſon of the tranſgreſſion of the law was due vnto vs.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

AGainſt this poſition the Frier vſeth no ſpeciall arguments, but ſuch as were before produced againſt Chriſts feeling of the wrath of God. Artic.25.

1. If Chriſt ſtood accurſed for vs in his ſoule before God, then there would follow a diſſolution of his perſon from the vnitie of the Godhead: but Chriſt ſemper ſine rapina ſe æqualem Deo, &c. alwayes without any robberie, or iniurie to God, tooke himſelfe to be equall to him, *Feuardent. pag.*471.*lin.*6.

2. Chriſt was alwayes beloued of God and in his fauour: Ergo, not accurſed, *Feuard.pag.*470. *confut.*4.

3. If he were accurſed, then alſo he deſpayred, and was damned, *Feuardent.p.*446.*confut.*5. *lin.*5.11.

Anſw. Theſe obiections I haue anſwered before, *part.*8.*reſponſ.ad obiect.1.2.3.& part.*9.*reſponſ. ad argum,*5. The ſumme of our anſwere was this: 1. That there is no more feare of the diſſolution of Chriſts perſon, for the ſpirituall curſe lying vpon his ſoule, then for the externall ſhewed in the death of his bodie. 2. Neyther is the eternall loue of God hereby diſcontinued or interrupted: for as I ſhewed, this dereliction or curſe, was not totall but partiall; temporall, not eternall: and Chriſt for his owne innocencie and holineſſe was alwayes beloued of God, but ſtood accurſed for our ſinnes: See our anſwere more at large, *part.*8.*reſponſ.ad obiect.1.2.3.& part.*9.*reſponſ.ad obiect.*1. 3. Neyther vpon the admitting of this curſe, ſhall eyther damnation or deſperation follow in the ſoule of Chriſt: though it were ſpirituall, yet was it not eternall: though there were a dereliction, yet no deſperation: though deſolation for a time, yet no damnation: it was painfull, yet not ſinfull: Chriſts ſoule was perplexed, yet his faith not peruerted: hee was not onely vpon the croſſe, but vnder Gods curſe for vs: damnation and deſperation are the inſeparable companions of eternall and totall malediction: but ſo was not Chriſt accurſed; but in part and for a time. 1. The execration of his ſoule doth no more enforce damnation and deſperation, then the malediction of his bodie, which is graunted. 2. Ieremie felt himſelfe vnder Gods wrath and curſe, when he ſaid, Woe is me, Ierem.15.10. and verſ.17. Thou haſt filled me with indignation, verſ.18. My plague is deſperate, why art thou to me as a lier? Ierem.20.14. Curſed be the day wherein I was borne: yet Ieremie was neyther damned, nor deſpaired. 3. Wee doubt not to aſcribe all our tentations to Chriſt, but without ſinne; therefore he muſt be freed from damnation and deſperation. As Bernard well ſaith, Suſcipiens pœnam, & neſciens culpam: he taſted the ſmart, but tooke not the ſinne, *ad milit.templ.c.*10. But for more full anſwere, I referre the reader to the ninth part, reſponſ.ad obiectionem 5.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THe Apoſtle in moſt direct words proueth the queſtion, when he ſaith, Galath.3.13. Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, when he was made a curſe for vs: as it is written, Curſed is euery one, that hangeth on tree: I ſay then with Ambroſe, Cur erubeſcam fateri, quod Apoſtolus non erubuit alta voce profiteri? Why ſhould I be aſhamed to confeſſe that, which the Apoſtle with a loud voyce hath profeſſed, that Chriſt was truely made a curſe for vs?

Anſw. 1. Chriſt may be ſaid to be a curſe, that is, maledictionis remiſſio, becauſe he remitted or releaſed the curſe, *Feuard.p.*377.*confut.*2.*lin.*18.

2. He was accurſed onely in reſpect of his ignominious death, as Pſal.22.6. Opprobrium hominum, & abiectio plebis: I am a ſhame of men, and the contempt of the people, *Feuard.pag.*470.*confut.*3.*lin.*11.

Contra. 1. The firſt anſwere the Apoſtle remoueth, when he ſaith, Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, when he was made a curſe for vs: to be made a curſe and to redeeme vs from the curſe, are not all one: but the remitting of the curſe, is all one with the redeeming from the curſe: Ergo, the remitting of the curſe is not to be made a curſe. 2. Againe, the Apoſtle proueth Chriſt to be curſed, becauſe he hanged on a tree, as it is written, Curſed is euery one that hangeth on a tree, that is, he is indeed accurſed, not the curſe onely remitted. 3. The receiuing of the curſe is one thing, the remitting another: firſt, Chriſt tooke the curſe vpon himſelfe, and ſo tooke away the curſe: malediction then, and the remiſſion of the malediction are two diuers things.

2. That this curſe, wherewith Chriſt was accurſed for vs cannot be referred to the externall death vpon the croſſe, it appeareth by theſe reaſons.

1. S. Hierome ſaith, Non quicunq; pependerit in ligno, maledictus coram Deo, ſed qui propter ſcelus ſuſpenſus: not euery one that hangeth vpon a tree, is curſed before God, but he that hangeth there for his ſinne: in 3.ad Galat. Like as if Haman had preuailed againſt Mardoche, and hanged him vpon the gallowes which he had made for him; Mardoche in his innocencie, notwithſtanding that ignominious death, ſhould not haue ſtood accurſed: wherefore it was not the death of the croſſe, but our ſinnes hanging vpon the croſſe, that deriued this curſe vpon Chriſt: this alſo is euident out of Moſes, that not the kind of death, but the deſert of death made it ignominious, Deut.21.22. If a man haue committed a treſpaſſe worthie of death, and be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree, &c.

Wee ſee then, that our ſins hanging with Chriſt vpon the croſſe, made the ſame an accurſed death.

2. Chriſt was made that curſe, which he redeemed vs from, otherwiſe the Apoſtle had not reaſoned ſoundly, we are redeemed from the curſe, becauſe Chriſt was made a curſe: he remitteth that curſe to vs, which he receiued in himſelfe. Beda alſo ſaith, Chriſtus ſupplicium noſtrum ſine reatu ſuſcepit, vt ſolueret reatum, & finiret ſupplicium: Chriſt hath taken our puniſhment without guilt, to looſe the guilt, and ende the puniſhment, in 3.ad Galat. What other puniſhment ended he, but that we tooke? but to vs was due for the tranſgreſſion of the law, the curſe both of body and ſoule: Ergo, the ſame curſe Chriſt tooke.

3. The wordes in Moſes are maledictus deo, he is curſed to God, that hangeth on a tree, but no death in it ſelfe is more ignominious then another before God, the ſhame thereof is externall, and concerneth men: Ergo, the curſe was not in the ignominious death: the ordinarie gloſſe thus noteth vpon theſe wordes: Non eſt hoc in contumeliam Domini, quid mirum ſi maledictus dicitur Deo, qui habet in ſe, quod Deus odit, i. peccatum: This redoundeth not to the reproch of God; for what maruaile, if he be ſaid to be accurſed to God, that hath in himſelfe that which God hateth, namely ſinne, in 3.Galat. it is not the maner of the death onely, that made it ignominious, but our ſins, which Chriſt bare.

4. Oecumenius vpon this place thus writeth: we were ſubiect to the curſe becauſe we had tranſgreſſed the law; Chriſt was not ſubiect, becauſe he had fulfilled it: Eam ergo execrationem ſuſcepit, cui obnoxius non erat, quum ſuſpenſus fuit in ligno, vt execrationem ſolueret, quæ aduerſus nos erat: Hee therefore tooke that curſe, to the which hee was not ſubiect, when he hanged vpon the tree, to looſe the curſe which was againſt vs, in 3.ad Gal. From hence I reaſon thus: Chriſt tooke that curſe for vs, which otherwiſe was not due vnto him; but death & mortalitie were incident & appertaining vnto the humane nature of Chriſt, though he had not dyed for vs, which notwithſtanding was impoſſible: Ergo, the curſe was not in Chriſts death onely. That Chriſt was by his owne nature ſubiect to mortalitie, 1. the Scripture teſtifieth; It became him in all things to be like vnto vs, Heb.2.17. Ergo, he was mortall as we are by nature. 2. S. Ambroſe giueth this reaſon: Quis exceptum ſe putet à conditione moriendi, qui non exceptus ſit à conditione naſcendi: Who can thinke himſelfe exempt from the condition of dying, that is not freed from being borne? in obit. Valentinian. Chriſt therefore being borne, had an aptneſſe in his nature to die. 3. Damaſcene, ει ἄφθαρτον τὸ κυρίου σῶμα οὐχ ὁμοούσιον: If the Lordes body had beene immortall, it had not beene of the ſame ſubſtance with ours: then it would follow, ſaith he, that Chriſt was not truely made man, and ſo conſequently we not truely ſaued: *de fid. lib.*3.*c.*28. 4. And Ambroſe againe ſaith: Chriſt was not exempted from death, Vt carnis quam ſuſceperat, legem non recuſaret: That he ſhould not refuſe the lawe of the fleſh, which he tooke: In Luc. 22. Mors Chriſti communis ſecundum naturam corporis, ſpecialis ſecundum virtutem: Chriſts death was common in the nature of his bodie, but ſpeciall in reſpect of the vertue and power thereof: Ambr. ibid.

Yet leaſt I be here miſtaken, as though I did thinke, that Chriſt, if he had not died vpon the croſſe, (if it had been poſſible) ſhould otherwiſe haue died. I am farre from ſo thinking: for Chriſt had neuer taſted death but for vs, Hebr.2.9. I onely ſhew that the lawe of mortalitie was in his fleſh by the nature thereof, which lawe notwithſtanding by his diuine ſpirite, ſhould haue been diſpenſed with, and ouerruled. So that he was not, but in the caſe of our redemption to haue died. And here I willingly embrace Damaſcenes iudgement: The fleſh of Chriſt τῆς κατὰ φύσιν θνητότητος οὐκ ἀπεῖχε, was not by nature free from mortalitie, but yet ζωοποιὸς γέγονεν, it was a quickening and liuing fleſh, and exempted from mortalitie by the hypoſtaticall vnion of the Godhead: *de fid. orthod. lib.*3.*c.*21.

Thus then I conclude with Auguſtine: Credo filium dei mortuum eſſe non ſecundum pœnam iniuſtitiæ quam ex toto non habuit, ſed ſecundum legem naturæ, quam pro humani generis redemptione ſuſcepit: I beleeue that the ſonne of God died, not according to the puniſhment of vnrighteouſnes, which he had not at all, but according to the law of nature, which he tooke for the redemption of mankind. *Act. cum felician. c.*18. If death then and mortalitie were in Chriſts nature, and thereunto appertaining, but the curſe which he tooke, did not belong vnto him, but to vs onely for our ſinne; it followeth, that this curſe was not wholly in his death.

5. That curſe which Chriſt did beare, he hath redeemed vs from: but we are not freed nor redeemed from ſhamefull and ignominious kinds of death: the members of Chriſt haue beene racked, ſtoned, hewen aſunder, &c. Hebr.11.35.37. Ergo, the curſe which was laid vpon Chriſt, was not in his ignominious death.

Obiect. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith: Hebr.12.2. That Ieſus endured the croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, he referreth the ſhame to the manner of death vpon the croſſe.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſhame of the croſſe, but not of the curſe. 2. We confeſſe that it was a ſhameful and curſed death, but therein lay not the whole curſe. 3. To this ſhame belonged not onely the manner of death which Chriſt ſuffered, but in that he was counted among tranſgreſſors, Iſay. 53. 12. and was put to death by the Iewes as a tranſgreſſor of their law: and ſo herein conſiſted the chiefe part of the ſhame and curſe of the croſſe, that he bare our ſinnes, and ſo was counted a tranſgreſſor for vs.

Obiect. 2. But the Apoſtle proueth Chriſt to be made a curſe, onely becauſe he hanged vpon a tree: the ignominie then of his death made the curſe.

Anſw. 1. We grant it was a curſed death, but therein the Apoſtle wholly and onely placeth not the curſe. 2. I ſhewed before out of Moſes and Hierome, that not the hanging of euery one, but onely of malefactors was accurſed: ſo that not the death, but the deſert, not the condition, but the cauſe, not the ſuſpenſion, but the tranſgreſſion made the curſe: and ſo Chriſt in this ignominious death was made a curſe by reaſon of our ſinnes that were laid vpon him: and thus as he was made ſinne for vs, and reputed a ſinner in our ſteed; ſo verely he felt Gods wrath and curſe in his ſoule, which was due to our ſinnes.

I will conclude with Auguſtine: Maledictus omnis, &c. ne Chriſtus excluderetur qui benedictus in ſua iuſticia, maledictus ob delicta noſtra: Curſed is euery one, that Chriſt ſhould not be excluded, who was bleſſed in his own righteouſnes, but accurſed for our ſinnes: And before he thus writeth: rehearſing the Apoſtles words, that Chriſt was ſent in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. Quia caro eius licet ſine peccato, mortalis fuit: Becauſe Chriſts fleſh, though without ſinne, yet was mortall: And againe the Apoſtle ſaith, God made him ſinne for vs. 2. Cor. 5. 20. Maledictum comes peccati: But malediction is the companion of ſin or tranſgreſſion. cont. Fauſt. Manich. lib. 14. c. 12. If Chriſt then were accurſed for our ſinnes, if he by nature of his fleſh were ſubiect to mortalitie, if malediction were adherent to our ſinnes which he bare, then did not the curſe onely conſiſt in his outward death: We confeſſe, that it alſo was part of the curſe, as Auguſtine in the ſame place: Mors maledicta, quia pœna peccati: Death is accurſed, becauſe it is the puniſhment of ſinne, but it was not the whole nor the greateſt part of that curſe, which Chriſt was made for vs.

Againe vpon thoſe words of the Apoſtle. Galat. 3. 13. Curſed is euery one, &c. Loquitur Paulus de Chriſto, qui in cruce pependit ex parte mortali; nam in eo maledicta mors & maledictum peccatum, quæ in cruce pependerunt; ſic Moſes exaltauit ſerpentem: nam ſerpente mors & peccatum intelliguntur, ſuper quæ Chriſtus in cruce triumphauit; ſic de maledicto vicit maledictum, de morte mortem, de peccato peccatum, de ſerpente ſerpentem: Paul ſpeaketh of Chriſt, who did hang vpon the croſſe in his mortall part; for in him death was accurſed, and ſinne accurſed, which did hang on the croſſe, ouer the which Chriſt triumphed vpon the croſſe: ſo Moſes lift vp the ſerpent, for by the ſerpent death and ſinne are vnderſtood: for Chriſt ouercame curſe with curſe, death with death, ſinne by ſinne, the ſerpent by a ſerpent: in 3. ad Galat. From this ſentence of Auguſtine I inferre, 1. That he nameth the curſe of ſinne before the curſe of death, 2. That Chriſt did beare that curſe vpon the croſſe, ouer the which he triumphed, but he triumphed ouer the whole curſe both of bodie and ſoule. 3. That as he ſubdued our death by his death, ſo our ſinne by his ſinne, now imputed to him, and our curſe by his curſe: ſo that, ſuch curſe as he redeemed vs from, he bare himſelfe. 4. Neither doth he ſay, that Chriſt was accurſed onely in his mortall part, but did hang vpon the croſſe in his mortall part, which we denie not, but there hanged alſo the curſe of death and ſinne.

Thus I truſt it is euident that Chriſt did ſuſtaine in his ſoule, and not in his bodie onely, the wrath and curſe of God, which was due vnto our ſinnes: and ſo by bearing our ſinnes, hath acquited vs thereof, and by enduring the curſe hath alſo freed vs therefrom: and ſo I ende with that ſaying of Hierome: Iniuria domini noſtra gloria: The Lords iniurie is our glorie: in 3. ad Galat. The more we aſcribe to Chriſts ſufferings the leſſe remaineth of ours: the more painfully that he ſuffered, the more fully are we redeemed: the greater his ſorrow was, the greater our ſolace, his deſolation is our conſolation, his croſſe our comfort, his annoy our endleſſe ioy; his diſtreſſe in ſoule, our releaſe; his calamitie our comfort; his miſery our mercie, his aduerſitie our felicitie, and to conclude, his hell our heauen: and ſo our bleſſed Sauiour as Chryſoſtome ſaith; Pluribus in morte doloribus vexatus, quam omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expirauit: Being vexed in his death, with more ſorrowes then all tragicall writers in the world can expreſſe, gaue vp his ſpirite. hom. 31. in Matth. For this ſo infinite and vnſpeakeable loue of our Sauiour, we can neuer be ſufficiently thankfull, who vouchſafed not onely to die, but to enter into hell for vs; not onely to offer his bodie to paine, but his ſoule to ſorrow for vs; wounds to receiue in his ſenſe, and terrors in conſcience; a croſſe in his bodie, and a curſe in his ſoule: the greater debt he paid, the greater our dutie: the more painfull his croſſe, the more fruitfull his death, the more thankefull his loue: the deeper his wound, the more infinitely are we bound: the more excellent his patience, the more willing ought to be our obedience: and as Chryſoſtome well ſaith: Si per ſingulos dies pro eo moreremur, qui nos dilexit, non ſic meritum exolueremus: If we ſhould die euery day for him, which hath ſo loued vs, we could not be anſwerable to his merite. hom. 19. in Matth.

1 The concluſion of all is this, that ſeeing the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt in reſpect of Gods iu-
2 ſtice were not ſufficient, part. 1. that Chriſts agony in the garden was not cauſed by the feare of his bodily death, but proceeded from the feare and feeling of Gods wrath, part.2. and ſeeing our 2

Sauiour ſuffered properly and immediately in ſoule, and not by compaſſion only or conſent with 3 his bodie. part.3. if Chriſt did ſuſtaine the very torments of hel in his ſoule, as is proued, part.4. and 4 did appeare before God as guiltie of our ſinnes, part. 5. and was perplexed in his ſoule and con- 5 ſcience for the ſame, part.6. if our Sauiour by the iuſtice of God was to die for our ſinnes, and by 6 his death did ſatisfie his iuſtice, and appeaſe his wrath, part.7. if in his ſoule he verily felt the wrath 7 of God kindled againſt our ſinnes, part.8. and truely complained that he was in that inſtant for- 8 ſaken of God, part.9. and laſtly if he were made a curſe for vs in his bodie and ſoule, part. 10. It 9 remaineth that Chriſt did not onely ſuffer in bodie for our ſinnes, but ſuſtayned alſo in his 10
ſoule ſuch puniſhment, vexation and ſorrow, as was due vnto vs, and which we ſhould haue endured, if he had not as our ſuretie in his owne perſon vndertaken for vs: ſo I conclude with Saint Ambroſe: Paſſionem in Chriſto plus veneror quam creationem, quia creati ad laborem ſumus, redempti ad quietem: I doe more honour Chriſts paſſion, then the creation; for we were created to labour, we are redeemed to reſt. ſerm.14. in pſal. 19. And this queſtion haue I of purpoſe trauailed in, though not as I would, my leaſure not ſeruing thereunto, and being ſo ſtraited, the Printer haſtening this worke, that I ſcarcely had a moneth to diſpatch this treatiſe: yet I haue laboured to my power to ſet forth Chriſts holy ſufferings for vs, that nothing be detracted therefrom: and ſo I ende with that ſaying of Origen: Non ſic mihi videtur inutilis, qui natiuitatem Chriſti, ſtellam &c. ſalutationem angelorum tacet, quam qui crucifixum eum abſcondit: He ſeemeth not to me to be ſo vnprofitable, which doth conceale Chriſts natiuitie, the Starre and ſalutation of the Angels, as he that doth hide Chriſt crucified. hom.1. in Matth.

Laſtly for the confirmation of this truth, that Chriſt ſuffered the wath of God in his ſoule for vs, I will produce. 1. The teſtimonie of our aduerſaries themſelues. 2. The witneſſe of the holy martyrs that died in this faith. 3. The conſent of the famous writers and confeſſors of the Church of England.

Firſt for our aduerſaries: 1. Nicholaus Cuſanus a man of great account among them thus writeth: Illam pœnam ſenſus conformem damnatis in inferno pati voluit in gloriam dei patris ſui: That paine of ſenſe conformable or like vnto the damned in hell he would ſuffer to the glory of God his father: Ex citation. lib.10. ex ſerm. qui per ſpiritum ſanctum ſeipſum obtulit.

2. Ferus: Illa Chriſti derelictio pauor eſt conſcientiæ noſtræ ob admiſſa peccata, quæ iudicium Dei & iram æternam experitur, & ſic afficitur, quaſi in perpetuum derelicta, & reiecta à facie Dei eſſet: That dereliction of Chriſt is the trembling of our conſcience for ſinne committed, which feeleth by experience Gods iudgement and eternall wrath, and is ſo affected, as if it were for euer forſaken, and reiected from the preſence of God. lib.4. in Matth. c,27. in illa verba: deus meus, &c.

3. Durand. Præcipua cauſa fuit anima, &c. The chiefeſt cauſe of the effects of Chriſts croſſe was his ſoule. in 3. diſt.22. qu.3. Bellarmine ſaith, not ſo: Sed præcipua cauſa fuit totum compoſitum. i. totus ille homo qui patiebatur: præterea eſto, fuiſſet anima præcipua cauſa, tamen etiam caro & ſanguis fuit cauſa; alioqui non vere diceretur, ſanguis eius emundat nos: The chiefe cauſe is the whole compound, that is, the whole man which ſuffered: beſide, be it, that his ſoule was the chiefe cauſe, yet his fleſh and bloud was a cauſe, otherwiſe it ſhould not be truely ſaid, his bloud doth cleanſe vs. 1. Iohn.1.7. Here by Bellarmines owne teſtimonie the ſoule of Chriſt (which muſt be by the ſuffering thereof) is the chiefeſt cauſe of our redemption. Bellarm. lib.4. de Chriſt. anim. ca.15.

Secondly, the holy martyrs haue thus beleeued of Chriſts ſoule ſufferings: Maſter Latimer Biſhop and martyr: I beleeue verely for my part, that Chriſt ſuffered the paines of hell proportionablie, as it correſpondeth and anſwereth to the whole ſinne of the world: And againe, I ſee no inconuenience to ſay that Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule in hell, I ſingularly commend the exceeding great charity of Chriſt, that for our ſakes would ſuffer in hell in his ſoule: It ſetteth out the vnſpeakable hatred, that God hath to ſinne. &c. ſerm.7. coram reg. Eduard. Here though Maſter Latimer ſeeme to thinke that Chriſt might ſuffer in the place of hell in ſoule, for the which we alleage him not: yet he giueth three effectuall reaſons, that it was neceſſarie for Chriſt to ſuffer the paines of hell in his ſoule. 1. That his paines may be proportionable to the ſinne of the world. 2. To ſet forth Chriſts charitie. 3. And the great wrath of God againſt ſinne.

Iohn Warne holy martyr hath alſo ſealed this truth: Chriſt ſuffering for our ſinnes did beare our deſerued condemnation, the paines of death, the taſt of abiection, the verie terrors of hell, yeelding his ſpirit to his father, his bodie to be buried in the earth. Fox. p.1580. col.2.

Thirdly for the confeſſors, and the confeſſion of our Church, this euidence we haue.

1. The annotation in the great Bible called the Biſhops Bible, allowed publikely to be red in our Church: vpon the 22. chapter of Saint Luke. verſ.44. thus teſtifieth: He felt the horror of Gods wrath and iudgement againſt ſinne.

2. And in the booke of homilies allowed publikely to be recited to the people. ſerm.1. of the paſſion, it thus ſtandeth: Chriſt did put himſelfe betweene Gods deſerued wrath and our ſinne, and rent the obligation,wherein we were in daunger to God,and payd our debt. Our debt was a great deale too great for vs to haue payd; and without payment God the father could neuer be at one with vs: it pleaſed him to be the payer thereof,and to diſcharge vs quite. And againe afterward, He beſtowed himſelfe wholy for the raunſoming of vs. If Chriſt then gaue himſelfe wholy for vs, and payed all our debt, whereof the chiefe part was the griefe and anguiſh of ſoule and ſenſe of Gods wrath,it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould haue ſuffered all theſe things for vs.

3. In the Catechiſme authorized publikely to be taught,in the expoſition of the Creede vpon the article of Chriſts paſſion, it is thus confeſſed: Chriſt ſuffered moſt painfull and ſhamefull death, ſuſtaining withall torments of minde more cruell than any bodily death. And againe, Chriſt became our ſuretie and pledge vnto his father, to anſwere, pay and ſuffer, whatſoeuer wee did owe, and had deſerued.

4. Beſide this publike teſtimonie of our Church, the common defenders of the faith of the Goſpell,both by writing and preaching haue thus taught; as D.Fulke,that worthie learned man, thus witneſſeth: It was the burthen of ſinne and the curſe of God due vnto ſinne,which Chriſt tooke vpon him,to deliuer vs from ſinne and the puniſhment thereof,and not onely the bodily paine of death, that enforced him,that was God, to complaine,that he was forſaken of God. Annot.in Matth.27.ſect.3.

Againe,What is more to the honor of Chriſt,than that he vouchſafed to deſcend into hell for vs,and to abide that paine,which we had deſerued to ſuffer eternally: and what may be rather called hell, than the anguiſh of ſoule, which hee ſuffered, when hee being God complained,that he was forſaken of God? Fulk.in 2.Act ſect.11.

5. Maſter Fox that reuerend godly writer,and faithfull preacher of the Goſpell, conſenteth with the reſt,and thus deliuereth his iudgement: The torments which Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule and ſpirit,were the greateſt of all,when as he not only in bodie decaying for weakenes and bleeding,but in ſoule fainting with anguiſh and diſcomfort,began to crye with a lowd voyce, My God,my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? ſerm de Chriſto Crucifixo.

6. A zealous preacher of our Church,who had while he liued great experience of the caſes of conſcience,and an excellent grace from God to comfort ſuch as were afflicted, doubteth not to ſay,that Chriſt muſt ſuffer the very pangs and paines of hell for the leaſt ſin that euery man committed,ſeeing that euen our leaſt ſinnes cauſed him to be accurſed,and in the extremitie of griefe to crye, My God,my God,why haſt thou forſaken me? in his Meditations,pag.215.ſet forth ſince his death.

Thus (I truſt) this poynt is thoroughly cleared, that Chriſt ſuffered the very anguiſh and hell ſorrowes of ſoule for vs, and taſted of the bitter cup of Gods wrath due vnto our ſinnes, which otherwiſe wee ſhould haue moſt deeply drunke of. And here I will end this queſtion, in the handling whereof,if I haue either in manner failed,or in matter ſwarued from the doctrine of our Church,I heartily deſire pardon,moſt willingly ſubmitting my ſelfe to the iudgement of the learned: and this I ſimply and vnfainedly proteſt,that the loue of ſeeking and ſearching out the trueth hath drawne me into this queſtion, not the deſire of contention with any in our Church,much leſſe to oppoſe my ſelfe to the iudgement of any reuerend perſon,whom for their authoritie I honour, for their perſon I reuerence, for their learned trauailes in the Church we are much bound vnto: from whom I am as vnwilling to diſſent, ſo deſirous to learne. And ſo I conclude, moſt humbly crauing in the bowels of Chriſt, that where I haue ſaid the truth, I may be receiued; where I doubt,I may be reſolued; where I haue well ſayd, I be not condemned; where I haue ignorantly ſlipped, I may be pardoned. For I doe moſt willingly embrace that ſentence of Auguſtine: Aliquid aliter ſapere, quam res habet,humana tentatio eſt; in nullo aliter ſapere,quam res habet,angelica perfectio eſt: Otherwiſe ſometime to thinke,then the matter is,is an humane tentation; but in nothing to be deceiued,is angelicall perfection: De baptiſ.2.5. If in this queſtion of ſoule ſufferings,there be any difference of opinion in our Church, let not any man take offence thereat,for we all doe conſent,that Chriſts death is alone ſufficient,neither doe we varie in any fundamentall poynt: they which doe free Chriſt from his ſpirituall ſufferings, doe it vnto his honor, leaſt by this means any deſperation,or doubting might be faſtened vpon Chriſts ſoule; they which affirme the ſenſe of Gods wrath in Chriſts ſoule,do therein alſo ſeek Chriſts honor,leaſt any thing ſhould be diminiſhed of his holy ſufferings. Seeing therefore we all hold the ſame foundation,and tend to the ſame end, let vs not either by writing or ſpeaking nouriſh domeſticall contention, but be willing one to yeeld vnto another in the truth,and euery one readie to ſay with S.Hierome, Non ſolum te viciſſe exiſtimes vicimus vterque,palmam refer tu mei,& ego tui erroris; vtinam mihi ſemper ſic diſputare contingat,vt ad meliora proficiens,deſeram, quod male tenebam: Thinke not, that thou onely haſt ouercome,we are conquerors both, you beare the palme and praiſe of my error, I of yours: I wiſh that I may alwaies diſpute with ſuch ſucceſſe, that proceeding to the better, I may forſake that, which before I did not well holde: aduerſ. Luciferian. But I haue tarried too long in this queſtion: the next followeth.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, WHETHER CHRIST deſcended in ſoule into hell, to deliuer the Patriarches.

The Papiſts.

26.Error. THey doe beleeue that Chriſt according to his ſoule went downe to hell, to deliuer the Patriarches and all iuſt men there holden in bondage till his death, Rhemiſt. Act.2 ſect.12.

*Argum.*1. Hee that aſcended, is he that deſcended firſt into the loweſt parts of the earth, Epheſ.4.9. that is, into hell, the which is the loweſt place in the earth, Bellarm.cap.12.

Anſw. 1. The earth it ſelfe, in reſpect of the world, is the loweſt part, ſo that here one part of the earth is not to be compared with another: but the whole earth, in reſpect of the high heauens, hath the name of the lower parts: ſo is it taken, Pſal.139.15. Thou haſt faſhioned me beneath, or in the lower parts of the earth: but Dauid (I truſt) they will not ſay, was borne in hell, becauſe he ſpeaketh of the lower parts of the earth, conſul. Bez. in hũc locum. So that by the deſcending of Chriſt into the loweſt parts of the earth, is meant nothing elſe, but the loweſt and extreameſt degree of his abaſing and humiliation, Fulk. annot. in hunc locum: as Saint Paul ſaith, that he made himſelfe of no reputation, and tooke vpon him the forme of a ſeruant, Philip.2.7. 2. Againe. Pſal.63.9. the Prophet Dauid ſaith, they that ſeeke his ſoule to deſtroy it, ſhall goe downe into the loweſt parts of the earth: which the Septuagint tranſlate, κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, infima terræ, the loweſt parts: and Saint Paul ſaith, in the comparatiue κατώτερα, the lower parts: As in the Pſalme therefore by the loweſt parts the Pſalmiſt vnderſtandeth the graue and deſtruction, as it may appeare, verſ.10. They ſhall be a portion for Foxes; ſo the Apoſtle by deſcending into the lower parts, doth ſet forth the loweſt degree of Chriſts humiliation, in death, and the graue.

1 Contra. Bellarmine thus obiecteth: 1. The inferiour part of the earth, ſignifieth not the whole earth, ſed vnam partem, but one part of the earth, and that lower than the reſt: it doth not then betoken the ſuperficies, or vpper part of the earth.

2 2. He deſcended (ſaith the Apoſtle) that he might fill all things, Epheſ.4.10. and therefore it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould truly deſcend to hell to deliuer the Patriarches, as he deſcended into the earth, to viſite all parts of his kingdome: that euen the things alſo vnder the earth, that is, the infernall ſpirits ſhould bow the knee vnto him, Bellarm.c.12. Luc.6.

1 Anſw. 1. The inferiour part of the earth being compared with it ſelfe, cannot ſignifie the whole earth: but being vnderſtood to be the inferiour part of the world, the whole earth may very well be comprehended. 2. Where the Apoſtle ſaith in the plurall, inferiores partes, the inferiour parts, it is too great ignorance to ſay, that hee meaneth, vnam partem, but one part. 3. Origen thus expoundeth Saint Paul to ſpeake of Chriſt: Quaſi de ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Comming from the ſuperiour to the inferiour or lower parts, Hom.2. in Geneſ. And againe, Deſcendere deus dicitur, quando curam humanæ fragilitatis habere dignatur, &c. God is ſaid to deſcend, when hee vouchſafeth to haue care of humane frailtie, which more ſpecially is to be vnderſtood of Chriſt, qui deſcendit non ſolum curare, ſed portare, quæ noſtra ſunt, who deſcended not onely to cure, but to beare, that which is ours, Hom.4. in Geneſ. Thus alſo Auguſtine teſtifieth: Cæleſtis illa habitatio angelorum illa pars rerũ ſuperna eſt; hæc terrena vita, ſi illi comparatur, inferna eſt: cum enim & hic ſunt mortui, ne mireris, ſi infernum dicitur: That celeſtiall habitation of the Angels is the ſuperiour part, this terrene life in reſpect of that, the infernall: for ſeeing here are alſo vpon the earth, they which are dead, no marueile if it be infernall, in Pſal.85.

2 1. How Chriſt filleth all things Auguſtine well ſheweth: Nec tamen localem dei fingimus præſentiam, non mundum dimittens ad cœlos aſcendit, nec cœlum deſerens ad terram venit, ſed vno eodemq; tempore totus totum impleuit: Neither doe we imagine a locall preſence of God, for hee went not to heauen leauing the world, neither forſaking heauen came to the earth; but in one and the ſame time, he all and whole filled the whole, Act. cum Felician.c.17. Chriſt then not by his locall preſence, but by his diuine power filled all things.

2. Neither is that place Philip.2.10. to be vnderſtood of Chriſts deſcenſion: 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh directly of Chriſts exaltation: verſ.9. Therefore God hath exalted him: but the deſcenſion belongeth not to Chriſts exaltation, as Origen ſaith: Si diligenter conſyderemus, inueniemus, quia nunquam quis in ſanctum fere locum deſcendiſſe dicitur, neqne ad vituperabilem conſcendiſſe: If we well conſider, we ſhall finde, that one is not ſaid to deſcend to an honourable place, nor to aſcend to a diſhonourable, Hom.15. in Geneſ. He thinketh then, that to deſcend belongeth not to honor, or exaltation. 2. Saint Paul ſheweth, that this bowing of the knee vnto Chriſt of all creatures ſhall chiefly be accompliſhed in the day of iudgement, Rom.14.11.12. where hauing made mention of bowing of the knee, he inferreth, verſ.12. ſo then euery one of vs ſhall giue accounts of himſelfe vnto God. 3. It is too great curioſitie to applie this place to the infernall ſpirits properly: for they are not yet vnder the earth as tyed to a certaine place, being by the Apoſtle called the princes of the ayre, Epheſ.2.2. the Apoſtle rather by this diſtribution, of things in heauen, things in the earth, and things vnder the earth, comprehendeth generally all creatures in the world whatſoeuer: as in the ſecond commaundement wee are forbidden to make the likenes of any thing to worſhip it, either in heauen aboue, in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. 4. To cauſe the infernall ſpirits to bow the knee to Chriſt, that is, to acknowledge his power, Auguſtine aſcribeth not to the preſence of Chriſts humanitie, but to the power of his diuinitie: Neque aliter eum video ſuſcitare potuiſſe carnem ſuam, ſi apud inferos prædicem velut abſentis dei non fuiſſe potentiam: Neither doe I ſee how otherwiſe Chriſt could haue raiſed his fleſh, if we doe thinke the power of his Godhead was abſent in hell: Act. cum Felician. c. 17.

3 3. All this being yeelded, that Chriſt by his deſcent into hell ſhaked the infernall powers, and triumphed ouer them, which is by ſome of our reuerend fathers, and learned brethren, vpon great perſwaſion of many forcible reaſons and arguments affirmed, neither is by me impugned, yet hath not Bellarmine obtained that he would, that Chriſt by his locall deſcent did deliuer the ſoules of the Patriarches out of hell.

Argum. 2. Act.2.27. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption: this cannot be vnderſtood of the graue; for the graue is no place for the ſoule: and here the ſoule is oppoſed to the fleſh, that as his fleſh ſhould ſee no corruption, ſo his ſoule ſhould not remaine in hell: Chriſt therefore went downe in ſoule to hell, which was to no other end but to deliuer the fathers from thence, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. This place is alleaged by Saint Peter, out of the ſixteenth Pſalme; from thence then the ſenſe of this place muſt be deriued: firſt therefore we ſhall ſhew, that neither the word (נפש nepheſh) here tranſlated ſoule, can properly ſignifie the ſoule of Chriſt; nor the other worde (שאול ſheol) can be tranſlated hell.

Firſt, this word nephes, is taken in Scripture for the life, Geneſ.37.21. Let vs not ſmite his ſoule, that is, take away his life: and conſequently it ſignifieth ſometime the very bodie of the dead, wherein there was life, Leuit.21. verſ.1.11. And that in this place, nephes ſignifieth the life, it ſhall appeare by the like place, Pſal.88.3. My life ( חי chai) draweth neere to the graue or hell, (ſheol) this place may very well interpret the other.

Secondly, the other word (ſheol) is not here vnderſtood hell. There are foure words commonly vſed in the Pſalmes, expreſſing the ſame thing in effect which (ſheol) doth: yet none of them all are applied to ſignifie hell: the firſt is (שחת ſhacath) fouea, the pit, Pſal.30.9. What profit is there in my blood, when I goe downe to the pit? the ſecond (בור bhor) the lake: the third (קבר cheber) the graue: both theſe words are indifferently vſed for the ſame thing, Pſal.88.3. the word is (ſheol) ver.4.5. the other two words are alſo vſed, as expreſſing the former: And all theſe three doe containe a deſcription of death, and of the graue: the fourth is, (תהומות tehomoth) abyſſus terræ, thou wilt take me from the deepe of the earth, Pſal.71.20. In all theſe places there is no mention made at all of hell, but onely of the graue.

Now that this place can haue no ſuch meaning, as Bellarmine enforceth, thus wee ſhew it: firſt, this place is ſo applied to Chriſt, as it muſt firſt be true in Dauid: well then, firſt Dauids ſoule is in hell, then muſt it be in the loweſt hell, Pſal.86.13. Thou haſt deliuered my ſoule from the neathermoſt hell (ſheol) But Limbus patrum is not the neathermoſt hell, but (as they ſay) only in the brim of hell. Againe, Saint Peter onely applieth this text to the reſurrection of Chriſt, verſ.31. he knowing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt: But the reſurrection was onely of the bodie of Chriſt, not of his ſoule: wherefore this place cannot be vnderſtood of the deſcending of Chriſts ſoule into hell, to deliuer the Patriarches.

Contra. Bellarmine replieth: 1. That anima, the ſoule, cannot be here taken for the life of the bodie or fleſh: for that the Apoſtle expreſſeth afterward, that his fleſh did ſee no corruption, verſ.31. Wherefore vnleſſe we admit a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing, it was one thing for Chriſts ſoule not to be left in hell, another for his fleſh not to ſee corruption.

2. The Greeke word ᾅδης, alwaies ſignifieth hell, the graue neuer: Bellar. c. 12 loc.4.

1 1. Anſ. 1. Where the Prophet ſaith, Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thy holie one to ſee corruption: though the ſame thing be here expreſſed, it is no needleſſe repetition, when as, after the manner of the Scripture, the latter part expoundeth the former: for hee ſheweth how his ſoule, that is, his life or perſon, ſhall not be left in hell, becauſe his fleſh ſhould be deliuered from corruption. 2. And that by ſoule Chriſts perſon is to be vnderſtood it may appeare, as in the like ſenſe it is ſaid, Geneſ.46.26. the ſoules that went with Iacob into Egypt: Chriſts ſoule, that is, perſon, may be as well ſaid to be in the graue, as their ſoules to goe downe to Egypt. And againe, S. Peter by the holy one, expoundeth Chriſts fleſh: what is the holy one, but Chriſts ſoule or perſon? for holines properly is not an adiunct of his fleſh onely, but of his perſon: as well then may ſoule be taken for the life, as the holy one for his fleſh. 3. Saint Peter ſaith, that the Prophet ſpake of Chriſts reſurrection which is of the bodie, not of the ſoule: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith; Primogenitus Chriſtus vo- catur ex mortuis, quod primum illum ex inferni tenebris, in lucem reſurrectionis partus ediderit : Chriſt is called the firſt borne of the dead, becauſe the birth of the reſurrection did firſt bring him into the light out of the darknes of hell, de tempor. ſerm. 161. But Chriſt is ſaid to be the firſt fruits of the dead onely in reſpect of his bodie, not of his ſoule : Ergo, his ſoule deſcended not to deliuer the Patriarches out of hell.

2 2. That ᾅδης, onely ſignifieth hell, the graue neuer, is an vntrue and vnlearned poſition : Geneſis 42.38. You ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to hell, ᾅδης. Did Iacob carrie his gray haires to hell? I thinke he left them in his graue.

2. The marginall note of your owne vulgar Latine text thus obſerueth, Geneſ. 37.35. vpon theſe words, I ſhall goe mourning to my ſonne into hell, ᾅδης, Non hic ſignificat locum pœnarum, ſed foſſam, vel ſepulchrũ : It ſignifieth not here the place of puniſhment, which is hell, but the pit or the graue, &c. Who ſeeth not now this fellowes boldnes, that denieth hell to be taken for the graue?

3 3. If hell be here taken properly, then it will follow that Chriſts ſoule was in the ſorrowes of hell : as the vulgar Latine readeth, Act. 2. verſ. 24. Hauing looſed the ſorrowes of hell, becauſe it was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of it : and ſo Origen ſeemeth to thinke, when he ſaith : Data eſt diabolo anima Chriſti redemptio pro nobis, decepto & non videnti. quod non poterat ſuſtinere in tenendo eam tormentis, &c. The ſoule of Chriſt was giuen (to the diuell) to be a redemption for vs, he being deceiued and not perceiuing, that he could not long hold it in torment, &c. and therefore it is ſaid, Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell, &c. Tract. 12. in Matth. If Chriſts ſoule were tormented in hell, it muſt be referred to his hell ſufferings vpon the croſſe, for after death he ſuffered not.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith: Rom. 10.7. Say not who ſhall deſcend into the deepe, that is to fetch Chriſt againe from the dead : Here the deepe muſt be taken for hell, as the moſt oppoſite place to heauen: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle taketh this place from Moſes, Deuter. 30.14. Say not who ſhall goe vp to heauen for vs, or goe ouer the ſea, &c. That which the Apoſtle tranſlateth the deepe, Moſes calleth the ſea, as Exod. 15.5. The depths of the ſea couered them : the Apoſtle is not contrarie to Moſes, nor yet diuers from him in ſenſe, though they differ in words: if then you will finde hell here, you muſt ſeeke for it in the bottome alſo of the ſea.

2. We neede not ſound the center of the earth to make an oppoſition to heauen : for heauen ſo high, and the earth ſo lowe, are places oppoſite enough, as Pſalm. 103.13. As high as the heauens are aboue the earth.

3. The Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe : That is to bring Chriſt againe from the dead : the deepe then, whereof he ſpeaketh, is the place of the dead: but bodies onely die, ſoules die not: and therefore this deepe is not hell, where ſoules liue in endleſſe torment.

4. Origene thus expoundeth this place : Paulus quoniam deſcenſionis Chriſti myſterium prædicat profundum nominauit, quaſi de ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis : Paul becauſe he doth ſet forth the myſterie of Chriſts deſcenſion, he nameth the deepe, as of one deſcending from the ſuperior parts to the lower, Hom. 2. in Geneſ. this deepe which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, he referreth to the earth, which is the deepe and lower part of the world, in reſpect of heauen.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine vrgeth other places to proue Chriſts deſcent to deliuer the Patriarches : as that of Ionas, Matth. 12.40. to the which ſee our anſwere in the appendix to this queſtion, error 27. argum. Papiſt. 2.

Likewiſe he diſcourſeth at large of that place of S. Peter, 1. Pet. 3.19.20. By the which he went and preached to the ſpirits in priſon, which were in times paſt diſobedient : ſee alſo our anſwere at large to this place before, p. 350. in the 9. controuerſ. 1. queſt. argum. Papiſt. 3. Vnto which our anſwere, I will here adde thus much further: that they can haue no ſhew at all from this place, for the deliuerance of the Patriarches out of Limbus : becauſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch as were diſobedient, and in their diſobedience died : for if they had repented of their diſobedience, they ſhould not be named after the ſinnes which they had committed, but ſhould liue in their righteouſnes, which they had done, Ezech. 18.22. to ſay then that Chriſt went downe to hell to deliuer the damned ſoules, doth contradict the Scripture, Luk. 16.26. They cannot come from thence to vs : and Saint Auguſtine doth number them among other heretikes : Qui Chriſto deſcendente ad inferos crediдiſſe incredulos, &c. Which did affirme that by Chriſts deſcending into hell, the incredulous and vnbeleeuers beleeued.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt our Sauiour, by the vertue of his death, did ouercome hell and the diuell, we doe verilie beleeue, which may be called a deſcent into hell : that he alſo ſuffered the torments of hell vpon the croſſe, and ſo deſcended into hell for vs, to abide that bitter paine which we had deſerued to ſuffer eternally, we doe alſo hold and teach : for what rather may be called hell, then the anguiſh of ſoule which he ſuffered, when he being God, yet complained that he was forſaken of God? Furthermore, if deſcending into hell, be taken according to the Hebrue Phraſe, For entring into the ſtate of the dead : ſo we alſo graunt, that Chriſt deſcended into hell, Fulk. Act.2. ſect.11. But for the deſcending of Chriſt into hell, after your ſenſe, to deliuer the Patriarches from thence, when you can proue it out of Scripture, we will yeeld vnto you.

*Argum.*1. The ſoule of Chriſt which he committed into his fathers hands, was in Paradiſe, where he promiſed the theefe ſhould be with him, Luk.22.43. How then could his ſoule be three dayes in hell, as you affirme, from the time of his death to his reſurrection? Fulk.Luk.11.ſect.4. Bellarmine anſwereth, that it was not impoſſible, that the ſoule of Chriſt ſhould be in two places at once, cap.15. which is an anſwere not worthie to be anſwered: for who hath taught them ſo boldly to build their phantaſies vpon Gods power, hauing no warrant nor aſſurance of his will? May not the Vbiquitaries by the ſame reaſon proue the omnipreſence of Chriſts humanitie, becauſe he is able to make his ſoule and bodie to be in many places at once, as well as in two : and ſo conſequently by his power, which is infinite, as well in all places, as in many?

Againe, it may be anſwered, that Chriſt was with the theefe in paradiſe as he was God.

*Contra.*1. The anſwere made by our Sauiour to the theefe, muſt be agreeable to his demaund : now he made requeſt to Chriſt as man : Remember me, when thou ſhalt come into thy kingdome : the Godhead neither commeth nor goeth ; and as he was God, he was neuer out of his kingdome : ſo then as Chriſt was to enter into his kingdome, ſo was he with the theefe, and the theefe with him : but he entred into his kingdome in his humanitie: Ergo, in his humane ſoule he was that day with the theefe in paradiſe, and the theefe with him.

2. Chriſt ſaith not, This day I will be with thee, but thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe: Chriſt is with vs as God euery where, as he ſaith, Matth.28.20. I am with you to the end of the world: when he ſpeaketh as God, he is ſaid to be with vs: but when we are ſaid to be with him, his whole perſon is deſcribed : as S. Paul ſaith, I deſire to be diſſolued and to be with Chriſt, Philip.1.23. But as Chriſt was God, euen then he was with Paul: this difference is well noted by Bernard: Chriſtus nobiſcum eſt, &c. Chriſt is with vs at all times to the end of the world ; but when ſhall we be with him? when we ſhall be taken vp and meete Chriſt in the ayre, Serm.16. in Pſalm.91.

3. And that Chriſts humane preſence in Paradiſe is to be vnderſtood, Bernard againe ſheweth thus writing : Factum eſt vtique, quod promiſſum eſt, ipſo die quo compaſſus & corregnauit : That, which was promiſed, was fulfilled; for the ſame day that he ſuffered together, he raigned alſo together with Chriſt: In ſolemnitate ſanctior. ſerm.5. but the theefe did not raigne together with him as God, for ſo the kingdome of God is not communicable to any.

*Argum.*2. I will preſſe them with Durands argument, one of their owne champions: the ſoules of the Saints were deliuered in the very inſtant of Chriſts death : Ergo, Chriſt needed not to deſcend in ſoule to hell to deliuer them.

Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt, though the price of redemption were paied in Chriſts death, yet the Patriarches were to expect Chriſts comming thither not of neceſſitie, but of congruitie. Secondly, Chriſt deſcended for other cauſes, and not onely to deliuer the ſoules of the Patriarches, Bellar. c.15. reſp. ad obiect.2. Durand.

*Contra.*1. As touching other cauſes of Chriſts deſcenſion, we are not now to deale : the queſtion is, whether he deſcended to ſet the ſoules of the Patriarches at large, which if you cannot iuſtifie, we haue that we would.

2. It is well yet that you hold the article of Chriſts locall deſcenſion to deliuer the Patriarches to be of congruitie, not of neceſſitie : but I pray you how can you make it an article of our faith, if it be not neceſſarie?

3. You ſay the Patriarches were yet to expect Chriſts comming : and ſo your opinion is, that Chriſts ſoule ſtaied in hell til the third day, & then riſing againe, he brought with him al the ſoules of the fathers. *Contr.*1. Had the theefe then greater priuiledge then any of the Patriarches and Prophets? for he went to Paradiſe the ſame day Chriſt died: was heauen open for a theefe & murtherer, though now a conuert, and was it not open for Abraham the father of the faithfull, for Moſes, for Dauid? 2. If the Patriarches ſoules were looſed at Chriſts death, were they not to accompanie Chriſts ſoule into heauen, and to aſcend with it? for Chriſt ſaith, where I am, there ſhall be my miniſter alſo : Iohn. 12.26. but Chriſts ſoule was in Paradiſe the ſame day he ſuffered, as he ſaid to the theefe, this day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe: and Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth the ſame: Paradiſus non dixit, non eſt in me, quem regnare in ſe abſoluto latrone cognouerat : Paradiſe did not ſay he is not in me, whom it did know to raigne there by the abſolution of the theefe : Exhortat. ad virgin. If then Chriſt as man and in his ſoule was in Paradiſe; ſurely all the Patriarches ſoules went vp with him; then Chriſt needed not to haue deſcended to hell to deliuer them : this I ſay, in their ſenſe, that hold the Patriarches then onely to be deliuered, whom we affirme alreadie to haue been in ioy by faith in Chriſt to come : as now followeth in this next argument to be ſhewed.

Argum. 3. We beleeue that the Patriarches and godly Fathers were in Heauen or Paradiſe, as well before the reſurrection of Chriſt as after : for in as much as they were iuſtified by faith in his bloud, they receiued the ſame crown and reward of righteouſnes that we do, being iuſtified by the ſame meanes. This we haue proued more at large, controu.9.queſt.1. Wherefore ſeeing there were none of the Fathers in hell, which they call Limbus Patrum, to be deliuered, there was no ſuch cauſe why Chriſt ſhould deſcend into hell. Therefore he deſcended not to deliuer the Patriarches that remayned in darknes. And here I would aske them a queſtion, from whence they thinke Moſes and Elias came, when they appeared talking with Chriſt in the mount, Math.17.3. will they ſay they came from hell a place of darknes, appearing in ſuch light and great glorie? But for Elias I know their anſwere alreadie, that he came from the terreſtriall Paradiſe, where they imagine him to be kept, which I haue ſhewed before to be a meere fable.p.745.cont 17.qu.3.part. What will they ſay for Moſes: if he were not in Limbus, no more were the reſt of the Prophets: and to ſay that Moſes was fetcht from hell, and out of darknes to talke with the ſonne of God in light, I thinke they are not ſo abſurd to affirme. Chryſoſtome vpon this place thus writeth: Voluit Petrus tria tabernacula facere, &c. Peter would haue made three tabernacles for Moſes, Elias, Chriſt; and ſo haue ſeparated the law, the Prophets, and the goſpell: Ergo apparuit lucida nubes vnum tabernaculum, quod tres ſimul texit: Therefore there appeared a bright cloude as one tabernacle, which couered all three. &c. If a cloud of brightnes were Moſes tabernacle, then your Limbus a dungeon of darknes was not at this time his tabernacle: and if he were not in Limbus, neither Abraham the father of the faithfull, nor the reſt of the Prophets.

*Argum.*4. They agree not among themſelues about this article of Chriſts deſcenſion, to deliuer the Patriarches: Andradius ſaith, it cannot be proued out of Scripture: but Bellarm. and our Rhemiſts doe bring their beſt arguments for it out of Scripture: they alleage alſo diuers cauſes of his deſcenſion: the Romane Catechiſme rendreth two reaſons; one, to ſet the Patriarches at libertie; the other to manifeſt the power and vertue of his death in hell: but that, Saint Paul ſaith, was ſufficiently manifeſted and made knowne vpon the croſſe, Coloſ.2.15. Thomas Aquinas beſide theſe, addeth a third, that as Chriſt died for vs to free vs from death, ſo it was conuenient that he ſhould deſcend into hell, to deliuer vs from the deſcenſion into hell: as though Chriſt by his death did not fully deliuer vs from eternall damnation. Some other holde, that Chriſt went thither to ſuffer the torments of hell, that he might fully pay our ranſome by ſuffering the whole puniſhment due vnto mankind. But this is a verie groſſe and erronious opinion: for Chriſt ſuffered fully in bodie and ſoule vpon the croſſe, when hee cryed, Conſummatum eſt, It is finiſhed: that is, he had fully appeaſed the wrath of God by his ſufferings.

Durand a popiſh writer of great account, thinketh that Chriſts ſoule did not deſcend into hell, Secundum ſubſtantiam, ſed per effectus quoſdam; in his ſubſtance, but by certaine effects: not ſubſtantially but effectually.

1. This opinion of Durand, is thus impugned by Bellarm. 1. It would follow that Chriſts bodie deſcended into hell, as well as his ſoule, for the effects of Chriſts death, which wrought in hell, were performed by Chriſts fleſh, as well as his ſoule. 1

2. If Chriſts ſoule deſcended but by the effectes, ſo it was in Paradiſe, and thus Chriſts ſoule ſhould be in many places at once. 2

3. Chriſts ſoule was three daies in the heart of the earth, but the effects of the ſoule might be ſhewed in hell in a moment, *Bellarm.c.*15. 3

Contra. 1. To them which hold the effectuall deſcent of Chriſt, it is no abſurditie to grant that the effects both of his bodie and ſoule wrought in hell. 2. yea, the graue being taken for hel, Chriſts fleſh properly deſcended thither: as the marginall note of the vulgar Latine expoundeth theſe words of Iacob: I will deſcend to hell mourning to my ſonne, Genel. 37.35. of his going to the graue. 1

1. What letteth but that the efficacie and vertue of Chriſts ſoule, and the fruites of his death may be in many places at once. 2. You moſt abſurdly hold, that the ſubſtance of Chriſts ſoule may be preſent in diuers places in one inſtant. 2.

1. That Chriſts ſoule remained three daies in hell, is contrarie to the Scriptures: for his ſoule was in paradiſe in the day of his paſſion. 2. The effects of Chriſts death doe remaine ſtill: and Ambroſe doubteth not to ſay, Abyſſum opinione ſi penetres, illic quoq; videbis Ieſum operari: If you pearce hell in thought, you ſhall ſee Ieſus working there ſtill. lib.2.in 1.Luc. 3.

Auguſtine ſaith plainely, that he knew not what good Chriſt wrought for the iuſt ſoules that were in the boſome of Abraham, when hee deſcended into hell: à quibus eum ſecundum beatificam præſentiam diuinitatis, nunquam video receſſiſſe: From whom I finde he was neuer abſent or withdrew himſelfe by the bleſſed preſence of his diuine power: Ergo, in his iudgement Chriſt deſcended not to deliuer the Patriarches. And concerning the ſoule of Chriſt, he writeth flatly: Si mortuo corpore anima latronis ad Paradiſum mox vocatur, quempiam adhuc tam impium credimus, qui dicere audeat, quoniam anima Saluatoris noſtri triduo illo corporea mortis apud inferos cuſtodia mancipetur? If the ſoule Epiſt.99.

of the theefe ſtraightway being gone from the bodie, was called vp to heauen: is there any man ſo wicked, to ſay that the ſoule of our ſauiour was kept three daies in the priſon of hel? By his ſentẽce then, the ſoule of Chriſt paſſed ſtraight to heauen, and deſcended not to hell. And Auguſtines reaſon ſeemeth to be this: Chriſts ſoule went the ſame way after death, which our ſoules muſt go, that are his members: but the ſoules of the faithfull goe preſently to heauen, as the ſoule of the theefe did, conuerted vpon the croſſe; and as Saint Paule ſaith of his ſoule, I deſire to be diſſolued, and to be with Chriſt, Philip. 1.23. for what aſſurance haue we that our ſoules ſhall paſſe immediately to heauen, if Chriſts ſoule, who is the way, Iohn.14.6. did not make a way for our ſoules? Ergo, Chriſts ſoule went ſtraight to heauen, and therefore was not, triduo in corde terræ, three daies in the heart of the earth, as Bellarmine ſaith, *c.*15. argum.4.cont. Durand.

Concerning the teſtimonies of the fathers alleaged by Bellarmine for Chriſts deſcenſion in ſoule to deliuer the Patriarches, I denie not, but that many of them do ſo affirme, yet it was no generall receiued opinion amongſt them, but diuers of them did otherwiſe both ſpeake and write.

Cyprian in the ſymbole or Creed, which goeth vnder his name, thus writeth: Sciendum eſt, quod in eccleſiæ Romanæ ſymbolo non habetur additum, deſcendit ad inferna: ſed neque in Orientis eccleſijs habetur hic ſermo; vis tamen verbi eadem videtur eſſe in eo, quod ſepultus dicitur: It muſt be knowen, that in the Creed of the Romane Church, it is not added, he deſcended into hell, neither yet is this ſpeech vſed in the Eaſt Churches: yet the ſame ſenſe and force ſeemeth to be in that he is ſaid to be buried.

We may finde tenne ſeuerall Creeds rehearſed in the Councels, and in them this article of Chriſts deſcenſion omitted.

1. In epiſt. 1. Clement. 2. In confeſſion of Conſtantines faith: in Donation. Conſtantin. 3. In the Nicene ſymbole. 4. In the Sirmian Councell. 5. In the confeſſion of *Liberius. Act. Liber. c.*1. 6. In the ſymbole of Conſtantinople. 7. In the ſymbole of Carthage. *Concil.*4.*can.*1. 8. Likewiſe, *concil. Toletan.*1.*can.*21. 9. In the ſymbole confirmed, *Epheſin.*1. 10. *Bracarenſ.*3.in præfation. In all theſe places it is omitted.

Likewiſe in diuers of Auguſtines ſermons: as *ſerm. de tempor.*123.125.129. In the expoſition of the Creed no mention is made of Chriſts locall deſcenſion to hell, to deliuer the Patriarches: and *ſerm.*119. he ſaith; Cum confeſſi fuerimus eius paſſionem, confitemur & reſurrectionem: When we haue confeſſed his paſſion, we confeſſe his reſurrection: If the Church had helde it ſo neceſſarie to beleeue the deſcent of Chriſts ſoule, for the releaſe of the Patriarches; eſpeciall remembrance ſhould haue beene made thereof in ſo many rehearſals and expoſitions of the Creed.

Yet was not the article of Chriſts deſcenſion euer denied in the Church, but not receiued in any ſuch ſenſe.

1. Some of them apply the deſcenſion to the ſuffring of Chriſts ſoule, as *Origen. tract.*12. in Matth. data anima Chriſti in redemptionem pro multis, non manſit apud eum cui data eſt, propter hoc dicit Propheta, non derelinques, &c: The ſoule of Chriſt being giuen in redemption for many, tarried not with him, to whome it was giuen; as the Prophet ſaith, thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell.

2. Sometime the ſame Origen doth interprete the deſcenſion of Chriſt: De ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Comming from the higher parts of heauen to the lower parts of the earth. *hom.*2. in Geneſ.

3. Some other, by the deſcent into hell: vnderſtand the lying of Chriſt in the graue, as Hierom: Saluator in tantum ipſum corpus habuit poſt inferos in quo & crucifixus, vt manus perforatas oſtenderet: Our Sauiour had ſo verely after hell, the bodie wherein he was crucified, that he ſhewed his pierced hands. *lib.*1.aduerſ. Iouinian. But Chriſts bodie went not downe to hell, but onely to the graue.

So Origen: Chriſtus deſcendit ad inferos ad mortuos, tanquam inter mortuos liber: Chriſt deſcended to hell to the dead, as free among the dead. *in Matth.*16. But the graue not hell is the place of the dead. Likewiſe Auguſtine: Ab inferis primogenitus eſt ex defunctis: He was the firſt borne of the dead from hell. *ſerm. de temp.*161.

4. Some referre Chriſts being in hell to his diuinitie: as Ambroſe vpon theſe words, Pſal. 139. 15. Subſtantia mea in inferioribus terræ, &c. My ſubſtance was beneath in the earth: Quid obſtat quo minus illam diuinam intelligas ſubſtantiam cum deus vbique ſit. What letteth but we may vnderſtand his diuine ſubſtance, ſeeing God is euerywhere, as it is ſaid before, If I aſcend into heauen thou art there, if I lie downe in hell thou art there. Pſal. 139.8. So alſo Auguſtine expoundeth Chriſts deſcenſion of the preſence of his maieſtie: *Act. cum Felician. c.*17. as I haue ſhewed before.

5. Some applie Chriſts deſcenſion to the fruits and effects of his croſſe: Auguſtine. ſerm. 107. de tempor. Quid eſt portas inferni tollere niſi mortis imperium remouere? What is it elſe to take away the gates of hell, but to remoue the power of death.

6. Some doe metaphorically referre the deſcent into hell, to a troubled conſcience: as Bernard vpon theſe words, Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell, Pſalm. 16.10. Infernus quidem, & carcer animæ rea conſcientia eſt: A guiltie conſcience is the hell and priſon of the ſoule, in aſſumpt. ſer.4. Againe he thus writeth: Sunt gradus in aſcendendo & deſcendendo: in deſcendendo primus gradus à cælo vſque ad carnem, ſecundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quouſque deſcendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat iam recte rex noſter dicere, quid vltra debui facere, & non feci? There are degrees in aſcending, and deſcending: in deſcending the firſt degree is to the fleſh, the ſecond to the croſſe, the third to death: behold how far he deſcended, could he deſcend any further? might not our King now trulie ſay, what ought I to haue done more, which I did not? ſer. par. 18.

Some of them I grant doe affirme Chriſts deſcenſion in ſoule to hell, to bring the Fathers ſoules from thence: but this was no generall opinion, nor expreſſe ſentence of the Church: as may appeare by this teſtimonie of Origen, vpon theſe words of Iob: Naked I came forth, naked ſhall I returne, Iob. 1. 21. Nudus ibo illuc (inquit) quo illuc? illuc quo Adam abijt, quo ierunt priores mei: vbi tabernacula ſunt iuſtorum, &c. vbi eſt lux & vita, vbi eſt lætitia & exultatio, vbi Abraham ſinus, &c. angelorum chori, Chriſti regnum, æterni dei patris gloria & conſpectus: I ſhall returne thither? whither? euen whither Adam went and all my forefathers: where are the tabernacles of the righteous, where is light and life, where is Abrahams boſome, the queere of Angels, the kingdome of Chriſt, the glorie and ſight of the eternall father: in 1. cap. Iob. Now then, if in your Limbus there be light and life, the companie of Angels, the preſence of God, the kingdome of Chriſt; then will I graunt, that the Fathers were there: but then they ſhould not haue needed to be fetched from thence. And thus much of Chriſts locall deſcenſion into hell to ſet free the ſoules of the Patriarches.

AN APPENDIX, CONCERNING the place of Hell.

The Papiſts.

THe place where damned ſpirits are tormented, they ſay, is about the center of the earth, the lowest of all places, and nothing lower than it, Bellarm. de Chriſti anima. lib.4. cap. 10. 27. Error.

Their Limbus Patrum, the place of darknes, where the Fathers were before Chriſt, is, ſay they, in the higheſt part, and as it were the brimme of hell, Rhemiſt. Luk. 16. 22. Betweene theſe two places there is a great gulfe or ſpace, and there is Purgatorie, Rhemiſt. Luk. 16. ſect. 8. Wherefore they conclude, Veros inferos eſſe loca ſubterranea: That the ſubterreſtriall and infernall places doe properly make hell, Bellarm. cap. 8. And ſo hell ſhould be properly a place of puniſhment: becauſe of the farre diſtance from heauen: whereas not ſo much the diſtance of place, as the abſence of Gods ſpirit, and loſſe of his fauour, maketh it a place of horror and miſerie.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine proueth by the Greeke word ᾅδης, and the Hebrue (ſheol) that hell is a ſubterreſtriall place, becauſe thoſe words are taken for hell in the earth, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. 1. This argument concludeth not, vnleſſe he could proue, that thoſe words are alwaies taken for hell: the contrarie whereof is euident, as Geneſ. 42. 38. You ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to (ſheol, ᾅδης,) the graue: for his gray haires went not downe to hell, but reſted in the graue. Likewiſe this annotation is giuen in the margent of the vulgar Latine, Geneſ. 37. 35. In infernum, id eſt, foſſam, vel ſepulchrum, non hic ſignificat locum pœnarum, ſicut nec in alijs locis: Into hell, that is, the pit or the graue, it ſignifieth not here the place of puniſhment, nor yet in other places.

2. We graunt that theſe words ſometimes are taken for hell, and then they onely ſhew that there is an hell, but they enforce not the place.

3. Thirdly, neither doe we denie, but that hell is an infernall place: but herein wee differ from them, 1. that neither doe we affirme, that the place cauſeth hell, but the abſence of Gods fauour and preſence. 2. neither dare we circumſcribe the place certainly, as they doe, making it to be about the center of the earth. 3. nor yet preſume we to make ſo many regions of hell, as they doe without warrant of the word.

Argum. 2. Matth. 12. 40. As Ionas was three dayes and three nights in the belly of the Whale; ſo the ſonne of man muſt be in the heart of the earth: but the graue is not in the heart, but the brimme of the earth: Ergo, we muſt needes vnderſtand that to be hell, which is in the middeſt of the earth, Bellarm. cap. 12.

Anſ. 1. This place cannot otherwiſe be applied, than to ſignifie the buriall of Chriſt, and his abode in the graue, and his riſing againe the third day: of his ſoule it cannot properly be meant: for Chriſt ſaith, he will giue them the ſigne of Ionas in himſelfe; but a ſigne is conſpicuous, viſible and apparant: how could then the deſcending of his ſoule be a ſigne vnto them, which they knew not, neither could ſee? But the laying of his bodie into the graue, and the remaining there to the third day, they were all eye witneſſes of. Alſo there is great affinitie betweene the two Greeke words, σημεῖον, a ſigne, which is there vſed, Matth. 12. 40. and σῆμα, which ſignifieth ſepulchrum, a graue, the one word being fitly deriued of the other, what better, σημεῖον, then could hee giue them, then, σῆμα, his owne graue or ſepulchre? Secondly, to be in the heart of the earth, is nothing thing elſe but to be within the earth,according to the Hebrue phraſe,as Exod.15.8.The heart of the Sea,that is,within the Sea: ſo Chriſts bodie was in the earth, it lay hid as it were in the bowels of the earth. And thus Saint Hierome applieth this figure of Ionas to the death and buriall of Chriſt: Ionam cetus excepit immerſum, non contigit deuoratum,&c.ſic ſæua mors licet Chriſtum ſorbuerat crucifixum,tamen quem non inuenerat reum,non potuit tenere damnatum: The Whale receiued Ionas drowned, but it touched him not once deuoured: ſo cruell death, although it ſwallowed Chriſt crucified,yet, whom it found not guiltie, it could not hold as condemned: Epitaph. Nepotian.

3. This expoſition is againſt themſelues: for if Chriſt went downe to the very hart and middeſt of the earth,which is the center,then hee deſcended to the place of the damned: for neither Limbus Patrum, nor Purgatorie, are in the center or loweſt part of the earth by their opinion: but they themſelues hold the contrarie: for they ſay, that Chriſt by deſcending deliuered ſoules out of the two vppermoſt hels,Limbus,and Purgatorie,but not out of the nethermoſt hell,which is the place of the damned, Rhemiſt.Luk.16.ſect.8. Alſo it ſhould follow of this their interpretation,that the ſoule of Chriſt was as long in hell,as his bodie in the graue,which is againſt the opinion of many Papiſts, and of ſome of the Fathers. Origen ſaith, Prima dies nobis paſſio ſaluatoris,ſecunda,qua deſcendit ad infernum: The firſt day we haue the paſſion of our Sauiour,the ſecond day he deſcended to hell,Hom.5.in Exod.

Argum.2. Luk.8.31.The diuels deſired Chriſt that he would not ſend them into the deepe: what is that elſe but the loweſt region of the earth,where hell is,which S. Paul calleth the loweſt parts of the earth? Bellarm.

Anſw. 1. We denie not,but that God hath prepared, and that there is a place of vnſpeakable torments ordained for the diuell and his Angels, and all damned ſoules: but that this place ſhould be in the center of the earth,the places alleaged proue not. 2. The word abyſſus tranſlated, the deepe,is ſometime taken figuratiuely in a metaphore,as Rom.11.33. O the deepenes of the wiſedome of God! the word is,βάθος, not much varying in ſignification from abyſſus: ſo the place of their puniſhment is ſaid to be a great depth,that is, a place of vnſearchable and vnſpeakeable miſerie and horror. 3. Neither muſt this word abyſſus, of neceſſitie be referred to the earth, for there are abyſſi maris,the depths of the Sea,Exod.15.8.as well as of the earth.

The lower places which S.Paul ſpeaketh of,Epheſ.4.9.may be either vnderſtood generally of the whole earth,which is pars mundi infima, the loweſt part of the world, or elſe of the great abaſing of Chriſt,from heauen to earth, being God,to become a ſeruant: as alſo the graue of Chriſt was that lower part of the earth: for the Apoſtle ſaith in the comparatiue, κατώτερα, not κατώτατα, the lower,not the loweſt: and ſo your vulgar Latine tranſlateth,inferiora, not infima terra: but hell is the loweſt part,the graue is ſaid to be the lower.

The Proteſtants.

THat there is a locall place of torment prepared for the diuell and his angels, we doubt not, being ſo taught in the Scripture, Matth.25.41. A place of darkneſſe, 2.Pet.2.4. Farre diſtant from the heauenly manſions of the bleſſed,Luk.16.26. Neither doe wee denie but that it may be in the earth, or whereſoeuer elſe it pleaſeth God: but whereſoeuer hell is, there is but one: that diuiſion of hell into three or foure regions,we vtterly condemne, as a meere deuice of man without Scripture: and this wee ſay, that the place of hell cauſeth not the torment,but the wrath and curſe of God: for euen out of hell God may make a man to feele the torments of hell,as we doubt not but our Sauiour Chriſt did for vs and our redemption vpon the croſſe.

Argum.1. It is poſſible to feele the paine of hell in the ſoule, although not in the proper and appointed place of hell:as Iob complaineth,The arrowes of the almightie are in me,the venime thereof doth drinke vp my ſpirit,and the terrors of God fight againſt me. And therefore he ſaith,his griefe was heauier than the ſand of the Sea,Iob.6.4.14. Iob felt euen the hell of conſcience in himſelfe for the time: yea our Sauiour bare the burthen of his Fathers wrath vpon the croſſe,as wee haue ſhewed before: Ergo,it is not the place that maketh hell. So Bernard ſaith: Infernus animæ rea conſcientia: The hell of the ſoule is a guiltie conſcience,in aſſumpt.ſer.4.

Argum.2. Hell,as the Scripture defineth,is this,to be caſt into vtter darknes,there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth,Matth.25.30.22.13.The darknes cauſeth weeping and horrible gnaſhing of teeth, the vnſpeakable puniſhment both of bodie and ſoule: This darknes is not the abſence of the light of the Sunne: for neither ſhall the Saints in heauen haue that light, becauſe they neede it not,Apocal.22.5. and it ſhall be a place of darknes to the damned angels, which haue no vſe of the Sun light: they alſo are reſerued in chaynes of darknes,Iude 6. as they are no materiall chaines,ſo neither is it an outward darknes only,but the abſence of Gods fauour & the light of his countenance: as the people are ſaid to haue ſit in darknes before the light of the Goſpel, by the preaching of Ieſus Chriſt,did ſhine vnto them,Matth.4.16. But they much more ſhall be and are kept in darknes,that are condemned to hell,where they feele nothing but the horror of Gods wrath, his eternall and endleſſe curſe, with vnſpeakable torments now in ſoule, and afterward both in bodie and ſoule, without all comfort or hope of refreſhing, vtterly excluded from the preſence of God: Wherefore it is not the place, but the wrath of God, and abſence of his ſpirit, that cauſeth ſuch endleſſe and vnſpeakable puniſhment.

Argum. 3. As for your diſtinction of hell, the brimme whereof you ſay is Limbus Patrum, the middle part, Purgatorie, the loweſt and neathermoſt hell it ſelfe, the place of the damned, in Auguſtines time it was not knowne: for firſt, that the boſome of Abraham was part of hell, he vtterly denieth: Apparet non eſſe membrum inferorum, tantæ illius fœlicitatis ſinum: That boſome of ſo great bliſſe can be no member or part of hell, Epiſt.99. Againe, Purgatorie he vtterly refuſeth, acknowledging but two places: Heauen for the faithfull, Hell for the damned and vnbeleeuers. Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in ſcripturis ſanctis inuenimus: A third place wee are vtterly ignorant of, yea we finde in holy Scripture, that it is not, Auguſt. Hypognoſt.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERſie, of matters which are in queſtion concerning the diuine nature of Chriſt.

THis part of the controuerſie containeth three queſtions. Firſt, whether Chriſt be αὐτόθεος, God of him. Secondly, whether hee be mediatour as God, or man, or as both. Thirdly, whether he haue by his deſerts purchaſed any thing for himſelfe.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER CHRIST be αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe.

The Papiſts.

THey denie that Chriſt is αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe; and affirme, that he had not onely his perſon, but his ſubſtance of his father: whereupon they are bolde to charge Caluine with blaſphemie, for ſaying, that Chriſt is God of himſelfe as well as the Father, Rhemiſt. Ioh.1. ſect.3. 28. Error.

Argum. The word was with God, to wit, the ſonne is with and of the father, and not the father of the ſonne: Ergo, the ſonne is God, with and of his father, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. This place proueth, that the ſonne of God, as he is the ſonne, is of God: for to bee the ſonne of God, the word, the wiſedome of God, 1. Cor. 1. 30. his image, Heb. 1. 3. doe belong vnto his perſon. So then, as he is the ſonne, the wiſedome of God, or the word, ſo hee is of God, namely in reſpect of his perſon: but as the ſonne is God, he is of himſelfe, neither taketh he his eſſence but perſon onely of his Father.

The Proteſtants.

THat we may fully know the ſtate of this queſtion, wee muſt firſt ſet downe certaine propoſitions: 1. We doe worſhip one eternall, omnipotent, and onely wiſe God, one and the ſame in power, eſſence, eternitie: but three in perſon, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt: there is the ſame nature, eſſence, and deitie of them all, though they be diſtinguiſhed in perſon: As there is one nature of the light, the heate thereof and the ſhining brightnes, Lucis, ſplendoris, caloris, as Auguſtine putteth the example: which three differ among themſelues in propertie and qualitie, yet haue one and the ſelfeſame nature and ſubſtance: God the father is as the light, Iam. 1. 17. God the ſonne is as the brightnes of his glorie, Hebr. 1. 3. God the holy Ghoſt is as the heate or fire, Heb. 12. 29. Thus theſe three are one in nature and eſſence, but three in perſon.

2. There is ſomewhat communicable to them all, as the Godhead and diuine power and nature: Somewhat incommunicable, as the ſeuerall proprieties of the perſons: for it is proper onely to the Father to beget, proper to the Sonne onely to be begotten, proper onely to the holie Ghoſt to proceede from them both. There is no eſſentiall difference in the Trinitie: for there is one eſſence and diuine nature common to them all. But there is both a reall and rationall difference: The perſons differ one from another really, though not eſſentially. But the perſons differ only rationally or in reſpect from the eſſence of the Godhead: as the father and the ſonne amongſt men differ not eſſentially, for they are both men. But they are really, verily, and indeede diſtinguiſhed: for it is one thing to be the father, another to be the ſonne: yet from their owne eſſence their perſons only differ in reſpect and relation, not verily, non re, ſed ratione: for as amongſt vs the father is a man, the ſonne alſo is a man: but in one reſpect he is a father, and in another he is man; ſo likewiſe of the ſonne, yet one and the ſame, is both father and man; one and the ſame is both ſonne & man: ſo is it in the Trinitie. Now to the point of the queſtion, which we haue in hand. The Son therfore in the bleſſed Trinitie is begotten of his fathers eſſence, and hath the whole eſſence of his father, not by propagation, partition, profluence, but only by communication. The Son is not αὐτόυἱος, ſon of himſelfe, becauſe he is ſon of the father: but he is αὐτόθεος, that is, very God of himſelf:

The eſſence or Godhead of the Sonne is of himſelfe, not of the father : for it is one and the ſelfe-ſame eſſence, which the father hath. He is indeed, Deus de Deo, Lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: but not as he is God, is he of God, but as he is the Sonne. It is one thing for the perſon of the Sonne to be begotten of the eſſence of the father, which we graunt : another thing, for the eſſence of the ſonne to be begotten, which we muſt not yeeld to. So we conclude, that Chriſt as hee is the ſonne, is of God the father, as he is God, he is of himſelfe.

*Argum.*1. The eſſence of the father is of himſelfe, not begotten of any : but the eſſence and deitie of the ſonne is the ſame and all one with his fathers : Ergo, it is not begotten of any other. Againe, he is not God whoſe eſſence is not of himſelfe : therefore if Chriſts eſſence be not of himſelfe, he ſhould not be God.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, As the father hath life in himſelfe, ſo he hath giuen to the ſonne alſo to haue life in himſelfe, Ioh.5.26. The ſonne then hath life in himſelfe: Ergo, he is God of himſelfe. Auguſtine vpon theſe words writeth : Non quaſi mutuatur vitam, nec quaſi particeps vitæ, ſed ipſe vitam in ſe habet, vt ipſa vita ſibi ſit ipſe : Hee did not as it were borrow life of his father, neither is made partaker of life, but he hath life in himſelfe, hee is life vnto himſelfe. But leſt any man ſhould thus miſtake the words of the text, that becauſe the father gaue to the ſonne to haue life in himſelfe, therefore he gaue him to be God : (for to haue life in himſelfe is to be God) Auguſtine thus expoundeth them : Dedit filio vitam habere in ſe, breuiter dixerim, genuit filium: Hee gaue to his ſonne to haue life in himſelfe, in few words, He begat his ſonne. As if we ſhould ſay, the father which hath life in himſelfe, that is, is God, gaue to his ſonne to haue life in himſelfe, that is, begat God the ſonne : he begat him not as hee was God, or in reſpect of his diuine eſſence, but as he was his ſonne, in regard of his perſon : yet becauſe of the neere vniting and coniunction of the perſon with the Godhead and diuine power to haue life in himſelfe, which really cannot be diſtinguiſhed, but onely in reſpect, as we haue ſhewed : the father is ſaid alſo to giue vnto the ſonne to bee God, and to haue life in himſelfe, not directly or properly, but obliquely and by a conſequent, becauſe his ſonne, whom he begat from all eternitie, muſt alſo neceſſarily be God.

In Iohan. tract.19.

And that it cannot be the proper meaning, that God the Father gaue to the ſonne power to haue life in himſelfe, as he is God, or in reſpect of his diuine nature, &c. it appeareth by the words themſelues : for as the father hath life in himſelf, euen ſo hath he giuen to the ſonne: but the father hath life in himſelfe, without beginning from any other : Ergo, ſo hath the ſonne.

There ſhould elſe be a contrarietie and repugnancie in the ſpeech : for if Chriſt receiued life from his father, he could not haue it in himſelfe. It muſt therefore of neceſſitie be vnderſtood of the perſon in the Trinitie, not of the diuine eſſence. And ſo wee determine that it is true in the concrete, in concreto, if wee ſay, Deus Pater genuit Deum Filium: God the Father begat God the Sonne, but not in abſtracto, Deitas Patris genuit Deitatem Filij, that the Godhead of the Father begat the Godhead of the Sonne. But in reſpect of his perſon onely as hee is the Sonne the ſecond perſon in Trinitie, ſo is hee begotten and hath his beginning of God : but in reſpect of his diuine nature as he is God, he is begotten of none, but of himſelfe, as God the Father is.

Concil. Conſtantinop. 6. action. 6. ex epiſtol. Sophronij Hieroſolym. Perfectus deus eſt pater, perfectus deus filius, perfectus deus ſpiritus ſanctus, vnam eandemque ſingula quaque perſona inſeparabilem, indiminutam, & perfectam habet deitatem: The Father is perfect God, the Sonne perfect God, the holy Ghoſt perfect God : euery perſon hath one and the ſame vnſeparable, vndeuided and perfect deitie. If Chriſt then be perfect God, is hee God of himſelfe : for he is not perfect, that hath his being from another : and if he haue one and the ſame deitie with his father, then his deitie hath no beginning from any other, for ſuch is his fathers deitie.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Qui ſolus habet immortalitatem, 1.Tim.6. verſ.16. Which onely hath immortalitie : Non ſepares patrem non ſepares filium, quia diuinitas patris, & filij vna eademque eſt: Doe not ſeparate the father, nor the ſonne, becauſe there is one and the ſame diuinitie of them both, de fid. lib.3.c.2. If there be one and the ſame diuinitie of both, then the ſonne is God of himſelfe as the father is.

Origen. ex apolog. Pamphil. doth count them in the number of heretikes, which doe affirme, that Chriſtus homo natus patris ſolum in ſe habuit deitatem: That Chriſt being borne man had onely his fathers deitie, &c. How farre then are the Papiſts from this hereſie, that affirme, that Chriſt is not God of himſelfe, and ſo conſequently, that he hath onely his fathers deitie?

Decr. part.2. cauſ.24. qu.3. c.29. Among other heretikes are rehearſed Aetiani, the Aetians, diſſimilem patri aſſerentes filium, which affirmed, that the ſonne was vnlike the father : what doe they elſe affirme and teach, but that the ſonne is not God of himſelfe as the father is?

Peter Lombard is an euident witneſſe with vs, that God the father begat not the diuine eſſence, but the perſon onely of his ſonne. This poſition he hath, Diuina eſſentia non genuit diuinam eſſentiam: That the diuine eſſence begat not the diuine eſſence : which he prooueth by theſe three reaſons : Firſt, if the father begot the diuine eſſence, it would follow, that the Godhead or diuine eſſence ſence ſhould be a relatiue, not a ſubſtance: for that which is begotten, is a relatiue to that which begetteth. And as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod relatiuè dicitur, non indicat ſubſtantiam: That which is relatiuely ſpoken, doth not ſhew the ſubſtance.

Secondly, then alſo the father ſhould beget himſelfe, if hee beget the diuine eſſence, which is himſelfe.

Thirdly, ſeeing the father is God and a diuine eſſence, if he ſhould beget the Godhead and diuine eſſence, then by begetting he ſhould be God, and ſo that which is begotten ſhould bee the cauſe of that which begetteth, whereas he that begetteth is the cauſe of that which is begotten.

Vpon theſe reaſons he concludeth, that diuina eſſentia nec genuit, nec genita eſt: that the diuine eſſence neither begetteth, nor is begotten, lib. 1. diſtinct. 5. a. b. c. And this ſentence is confirmed by Innocent. 3. decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 2. Diuina natura nec eſt generans, nec genita: The diuine nature neither begetteth, nor is begotten.

And whereas wee ſay, Deus de Deo, lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: the meaning is this, not that the Godhead is begotten, but that the ſonne, which is God and light, is begotten of the father God and light, not begotten as he is God, but as he is the ſonne, Magiſt. ibid. liter. f. So then not the ſubſtance or Godhead of the ſonne, but his perſon onely is begotten.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER CHRIST be our Mediatour, as he is man onely, or as he is both God and man.

The Papiſts.

THey doe teach that Chriſt onely exerciſed his prieſthood and the office of the Mediatour, as he was man, not as hee was both God and man, Rhem. Heb. 5. ſect. 4. His obedience, ſacrifice, prayer, ſatisfaction, entring into the heauens, was all performed by and in his manhood onely, ſecundum formam ſerui, as he was in the forme of a ſeruant, not ſecundum formam dei, as hee was in the forme of God, Bellarm. de Chriſto, lib. 5. cap. 1. 29. Error.

Argum. 1. If he were prieſt as he is God, he ſhould be inferiour and not equall to God, and ſo be Gods prieſt, and not his ſonne: for he to whom ſacrifice is offered, is greater than he that offereth it, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. It followeth not, that becauſe Chriſt is our Prieſt and Mediatour as God and man, that therefore he ſhould performe all the duties of the Prieſthood as he was God: all the parts of his prieſthood that required obedience, ſeruice, homage, ſubiection, as were his ſuffrings and ſacrifice, he exerciſed as man: but the authoritie of reconciling vs to God, he wrought both as God and man.

Argum. 2. There is one God, and one Mediatour of God and men, the man Ieſus Chriſt, 1. Timoth. 2. 5. Why ſaith the Apoſtle, The man Ieſus Chriſt, but to ſignifie, that according to his manhood onely he is our Mediatour? Bellarm. cap. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, you may as well conclude out of this place, that the Mediatour is onely man and not God, as that he is Mediatour onely as man and not as God: but if out of theſe words it may be proued, that the Mediatour is both God and man, as it neceſſarily followeth, (for how elſe can he be a Mediatour of God and men?) it doth as well follow that hee is Mediatour both as God and as man. Indeede the Apoſtle ſaith, The man Ieſus Chriſt, not God and man, for the one hee had ſaid before, There is one God; in that ſpeech including our Sauiour Chriſt, who is one God with his father. Secondly, what Saint Pauls meaning is, it appeareth in the next verſe, who gaue himſelfe a raunſome, verſ. 6. As Chriſt therefore gaue himſelfe a raunſome, ſo is hee Prieſt and Mediatour: but he gaue himſelfe as he was God; as he was man, he was giuen: Ergo, as God he is Mediatour. Thirdly, I will adioyne the anſwere of Eſpencæus a learned Papiſt: 1. That the Fathers by this very place doe prooue that Chriſt is God, not man onely, which could not be concluded from hence, if Chriſt were Mediatour as man onely, and not as God and man. 2. The Apoſtle addeth, The man Chriſt Ieſus: Quorum illud nomen eſt hominis, non puri puti, ſed à deo uncti: Whereof the firſt is a name not of a very pure man, but anoynted of God: Poſterius nomen dei hominis eſt: The latter is a name, of one that is God and man, ſuch an one as ſhould ſaue the people from their ſinnes: Eſpenc. lib. de Chriſt. mediat. c. 5.

The Proteſtants.

IN the office of the Prieſthood two things muſt be conſidered, a miniſterie, and an authoritie: In reſpect of the miniſteriall part Chriſt performed the office of his Prieſthood as man: but in reſpect of authoritie of entring into the holieſt place, and reconciling vs to God, which was the principall part of his Prieſthood, he did performe it as the ſonne of God, as the Lord and maker of the houſe, and not as a ſeruant. And ſo we hold that Chriſt neither according to his humanitie alone, nor his Godhead alone, but that whole Chriſt is a Prieſt, both as God and man.

Argum. 1. Saint Paule ſaith, God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelfe, 2. Corinth. 5. 19. Ergo, Chriſt, as God, is our reconciler and Mediator. Againe, Chriſt as he is without father and mother, hath no beginning of his daies, nor ende of his life; ſo is he a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, Heb. 7. 3. but Chriſt as he is God & man hath neither father nor mother: as he is God hath no beginning of daies, and in his whole perſon no ende of his life: therefore as God and man he is a Prieſt of Melchiſedechs order.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt, 1. Euery one that reconcileth is not a mediator, though euerie mediator be a reconciler. 2. It is one thing to be a mediator, an other to reconcile by a mediator; God by the man Chriſt the mediator did reconcile vs to himſelfe, but it followeth not, that therfore he is our mediator as God.

Secondly, the place alleaged out of the Hebrues, prooueth that the perſon of our high Prieſt and mediator is diuine, but not that hee is our Prieſt as hee is God: hee is both God and man, but he executeth his Prieſthoode and Mediatorſhip onely as man. Bellarm. c. 6. ad 2. & 3. Loc.

Contra. Firſt, 1. Though ſometime among men one may reconcile himſelfe without a mediator, yet there is no reconciliation with God without a mediator: wherefore it is not farre from blaſphemie to denie this argument, Chriſt reconcileth vs as God and man, Ergo, he is our mediator as God and man: Againe the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein this reconciliation conſiſteth, in the not imputing of our ſinnes. 1. Cor. 5. 19. But the not imputation of our ſinnes, is a worke of the mediator. 2. Chriſt is both the reconciler as God and man, and the partie to whom we are reconciled, as he is God: to be a mediator and to reconcile by a mediator, doe both agree vnto Chriſt: it followeth not then, we are reconciled to him as God, Ergo, not by him as God: for the Apoſtle ſheweth, that he reconcileth vs to himſelfe; and God doth beſeech you through vs, And I pray you in Chriſtes ſteade: Chriſt then as God is our mediator, and doth as it were entreate vs to be reconciled.

Secondly, Melchiſedech was a type of the eternall Prieſthood of Chriſt: He is likened to the ſonne of God, and continueth a Prieſt for euer: Hebr. 7. 3. Chriſt cannot be a Prieſt for euer, but as he is God: and verſ. 25. He is able perfectly to ſaue them that come vnto God by him: but he cannot perfectly ſaue, but as God: Ergo, he is mediator as God. verſ. 28. The word of the oth, &c. maketh the ſonne prieſt that is conſecrated for euer: Chriſt is a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order as he is the ſonne, but as the ſonne he is God; Ergo, as God he is our Mediator.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, The law was giuen by Angels in the hand of a Mediator, Galat. 3. 19. But then Chriſt was God onely: Ergo, hee is Mediator alſo as God. Bellarmine ſaith, that he is called Mediator, becauſe that perſon was appointed afterward to be Mediator. But the text is plaine, that he then actually performed the office of a Mediator, ſo much as pertained to his Godhead: for the Law was giuen in the hand of a Mediator, which kind of ſpeech ſheweth a preſent execution of the Mediatorſhip.

Bellarmine replieth: if Chriſt were the Mediator before he was man, being then onely God, it would follow, that as God he was inferiour to God; for as he is a Mediator he is inferiour. c. 8.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt in reſpect of euerie part of his Mediatorſhip is not inferior to God; but equall as he executeth his Mediatorſhip as God: He is inferiour onely as the man Mediator, not as God Mediator: as Theophylact expoundeth theſe words, Iohn. 1. 3. All things were made by it: ſaying: Patrem mediatore filio ad rerum creationem vſum non minore, ſed æquali: That the father vſed his ſonne as a Mediator for the creation, yet not leſſe then the father but equall.

Homil. de onibus cap. 12.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non mediator homo præter diuinitatem, diuina humanitas, & humana diuinitas mediatrix: The man Chriſt is not mediator beſide his diuine nature; the diuine humanitie, and the humane diuinitie, is the Mediatrix. Ergo, Chriſt Mediator both as God and man.

Cyrillus lib. Apologetic. anathatiſ. 10. Quando dicis indignum eſſe deo, vt ſacrificet, aſtipulor & ego, ſcilicet, ſi ſolum ſit, & abſq; carne verbum: Itaque vidi ipſum ſacrificantem ſecundum humanitatem, conſidentem vt deum: ſic beatus Paulus, Heb. 8. 1. Where thou ſayeſt, that it is no meete thing for God to ſacrifice, I grant it, if the word ſhould be by it ſelfe without fleſh: therefore I conſider Chriſt ſacrificing as man, but ſitting in the heauens as God, as bleſſed Paule ſaith: Hebr. 8. 1. We haue ſuch an high Prieſt, that ſitteth at the right hand of the throne of the Maieſtie in heauen: Chriſt is our Prieſt, as he ſitteth at the right hand, &c. but ſo is he God, as this father ſaith, the firſt is heere affirmed by Saint Paul: Ergo, as he is God, he is our Prieſt.

Bernard alſo writeth well of this point: Sicut mediator noſter duas naturas, humanitatem & diuinitatem coniunxit in vna perſona: ita ſingula eius opera, ad hanc ſiue illam neceſſe eſt pertinere naturam; ad hanc ſcilicet miſeria, and illam pertinet potentia: As our Mediator ioyned two natures, the diuine and humane in one perſon; ſo all his workes belong to one of theſe natures: whatſoeuer he ſuffered was of man, his powerfull works were of his diuine nature: ſerm. de verbis ſapientiæ. Chriſt therefore wrought ſome workes of his mediatorſhip as man, ſome as God: but the whole office he executed as both.

*Leo epiſt.*81.Qua ratione veritatē mediatoris impleret, niſi qua in forma dei æqualis eſt patri, & in forma ſerui particeps eſſet & noſtri: How ſhould he fulfill the veritie of a Mediator, vnleſſe he were in the forme of God equall to his father, and in the forme of a ſeruant partaker with vs: Both theſe natures then belong not onely to the being but to the fulfilling of the Mediators office, not to the conſtitution onely, but to the execution alſo.

Eſpencæus a learned diuine of Paris of their owne ſide hath written a whole treatiſe of this matter, wherein he maintaineth this poſition, that Chriſt is not Mediator onely : Qua homo, ſed qua deus: As he is man, but as he is God. *lib.de Chriſt.mediat.c.*5. And to this purpoſe he alleageth diuers fathers : as Cyrill: Non propter carnis ſolum diſpenſationem mediator vocatur, He is not called a Mediator onely becauſe of the diſpenſation of his fleſh: *Theſaur.lib.*4.*c.*2.

To the ſame end he alleageth, *Theophylact.c.*2. Theophylactus adeo de ratione mediatoris ſentit eſſe diuinam naturam, vt hinc Chriſti diuinitatem colligat ita : quod deus ſit, inde liquet, quod mediator ſit, &c. Theophylact doth thinke that the diuine nature belongeth to the manner of the mediation, in ſuch ſort that hee thereby proueth Chriſt to be God : That he is God, it is euident, becauſe he is the Mediator.

To this purpoſe alleaging many fathers both Greeke and Latine, c. 2.3.4. he concludeth with Auguſtine : Mediatorem inter nos & deum & mortalitatem habere oportuit tranſeuntem, & beatitatem permanentem: &c. It was neceſſarie that the mediator ſhould haue, both tranſitorie mortalitie, and permanent felicitie, &c. *lib.*9.*de ciuit.dei.c.*15. And whereas in the ſame place it followeth : Non ob hoc mediator quia verbum ſed per quod homo : He is not a mediator, becauſe he is the word, but whereby he is man : he anſwereth, that Auguſtines meaning is, that Chriſt was not our mediator as the word onely and ſimply, without our fleſh.*c.*5. Thus this graue writer one of their owne ſide is a plentifull witnes with vs againſt them.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST merited for himſelfe.

The Papiſtes.

CHriſt, they ſay, by his paſſion and ſufferings, hath not onely merited eternall life for vs, but euen by his owne merite obtained his owne glorification, Rhemiſt.annot. Heb.2.1. 30.Error

*Argum.*1. Philip.2.9. He humbled himſelfe vnto the death of the croſſe, wherefore God hath alſo highly exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue all names : Ergo, Chriſt merited his exaltation, Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

Anſw. Firſt, this place ſheweth a ſequele of the exaltation of Chriſt after his humiliation, it maketh not one the cauſe of another, as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Luc.24.26. Chriſt ought to haue ſuffered, and ſo enter into his glory. Secondly, the exaltation which the Apoſtle heere ſpeaketh of, is the ſame, which God chalengeth to himſelfe, Iſai.45.22. Euery knee ſhall bow vnto me, and euerie tongue ſhall ſweare by me. But it were moſt groſſe to affirme, that the diuine power and glorie can be merited : Chriſt hath his diuinitie by nature, and not by merite. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe expoundeth this place not of the purchaſe, but the manifeſtation onely of Chriſts glory : Chriſtus hoc natus accepit, vt poſt crucem manifeſtaretur, quid à patre, dum generaretur, acceperit; non enim tunc accepit à patre, quando à creatura capit ſciri: Chriſt receiued this in his birth, that it ſhould be manifeſt after his croſſe, what he receiued of his father in his generation; for he then did not receiue it of his father when it began to be knowen of the creature. in 2.Philipp.

The Proteſtants.

IT is not in any wiſe to be thought, that Chriſt merited his glorie, which is due to him in reſpect of his diuinitie : but that by the glorious worke of our redemption, he hath declared himſelfe, to be a perſon worthie of all honour and glory, Apoc.5.9. Thou art worthie to take the booke, &c. the place is ſo to be vnderſtood.

*Argum.*1. If Chriſt had reſpect vnto himſelfe in his ſufferings, to gaine or merite any thing for himſelfe, his loue ſhould greatly be obſcured and darkened, which Saint Paule ſo greatly commendeth, in that he died for his enemies, Rom.5.10. For now ſhould not his loue be whole and entyre towards vs, as though for our cauſe he onely had died: But it is now a deuided and halfe loue : for he died, as they ſay, partly to merit for himſelfe, partly to merite for vs. But the ſcripture ſpeaketh cleane contrarie, Iohn 17.9. For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe: he ſaith not, partly for their ſakes, partly for mine owne.

Saint Ambroſe ſheweth, how that whatſoeuer Chriſt did, he did wholly for vs, not thereby to gaine any thing to himſelfe : 1. Concerning his faſting he ſaith : Chriſtus non emerendæ gratiæ ſuæ cauſa, ſed noſtræ eruditionis gratia ieiunauit : Chriſt faſted not to merite fauour or grace to himſelfe, but for our erudition or inſtruction. *lib.*3.*de fid.c.*2.

2. Nec ſibi ſua natiuitas profuit, ſed nobis : Neither did his birth profit himſelfe but vs. in 1.Coloſſ.

3. Chriſtus noſtri non ſui cauſa pauper factus: Chriſt became poore for vs, not for himſelfe. in 2.Cor.8.

4. Chriſtus eſt mortuus pro nobis, ſed ille, vt prodeſſet nobis; noſtra autem mors non illi proficit, ſed nobis: Chriſt died for vs, he died to profit vs, but our death doth not profit him, but our ſelues. in 8. ad Roman.

Thus we ſee that the 1. birth, 2. faſting, 3. pouertie, 4. death of Chriſt did not any waies aduantage himſelfe: but all was done for vs.

Argum. 2. All glorie that Chriſt hath, was from euerlaſting due to his perſon, becauſe he is the eternall Sonne of God: as he himſelfe ſaith, Iohn. 17.5. And now glorifie me with thine owne ſelfe, with the glorie which I had with thee, before the world was: And this glory was due vnto Chriſt ſo ſoone as he was incarnate by the right of his Godhead. Heb.1.6. When he bringeth in his firſt begotten Sonne into the world, he ſaith, Let all the Angels of God worſhip him. And the Rhemiſts themſelues confeſſe, in their Annotat. vpon theſe words, that ſtraight vpon Chriſts deſcending from heauen, it was the duetie of Angels to worſhip him. Ergo, he merited not his glorification by his death, which was due vnto him euen at his firſt incarnation.

Argum. 3. If Chriſt merited his owne glorification, then he alſo merited the hypoſtaticall vnion, that his manhoode ſhould bee ioyned to his Godhead in vnitie of perſon; for his glory, maieſtie, and power giuen to his manhoode, doth iſſue and ariſe from the vniting of his Godhead therewith in one perſon: but his humanitie deſerued not to be vnited to the Godhead: De corrept.& grat.ca.11. Nemo tam cæcus eſt, ſaith Auguſtine, No man is ſo blinde, that he dare ſay, that Chriſt by his well liuing merited to be called the ſonne of God. And he prooueth it out of the firſt of Luke, verſ.35. Therefore ſhall that holy thing bee called the Sonne of God: not for any workes going before, but becauſe the holy Ghoſt came vpon her. Wherefore the diuine glory which Chriſt hath, was not merited, but his owne it was from the beginning, which glorie the humane nature in Chriſt is made partaker of, not for any merite, but becauſe it is vnited to the Godhead in the ſame perſon, through the abundant and vnſpeakable grace and loue of God vnto mankinde, which of his free grace rather tooke vnto himſelfe the nature of men, then of Angels. Wherefore Chriſt by his perfect obedience and bleſſed ſacrifice, hath merited abundantly for vs, remiſſion of ſinnes, and eternall life: but by his merites hee hath gayned nothing for himſelfe: neyther had he any reſpect to the bettering of his owne eſtate in his ſufferings, but onely to pay a ranſome for vs.

Saint Ambroſe further ſaith: Videtur donum patris, hoc eſt, eſſe filium, & nomen ſuper omne nomen, hoc eſt, eſſe Deum, &c. This ſeemeth to be the gift of the father, that is, to be his ſonne: and this is the name aboue all names, to be God. in 2. ad Philipp. but the Godhead cannot be merited.

Againe he ſaith: Licet ſecundum carnem Chriſto ſedes ad dextram Dei à patre, generationis tamen ſuperna & æqualitatis potentia defertur: Although Chriſt according to his fleſh ſitteth at the right hand of his father, yet it is due vnto him in reſpect of his ſupernall generation, and equall power. *lib.*5.*de fid.c.*7.

Further he thus teſtifieth: Ad hoc natus eſt Chriſtus, vt faceret creaturam; nec enim ſibi natiuitas ſua proficit, ſed nobis, quia non eguit naſci; erat enim in Deo qui proceſſit de Deo: ſi ergo natiuitas prima ipſi non profuit, multo minus ſecunda: Chriſt was borne or begotten of God to this ende, to make the creature: for his natiuitie or begetting, did not profite himſelfe, but vs; becauſe he needed not to be borne, for he was in God, that proceeded from God: and if the firſt and eternall birth did not profite him, much leſſe the ſecond. in 1. ad Coloſſ.

Thus Saint Ambroſe is verie conſtant and reſolute in this point, that Chriſt gained nothing properly to himſelfe by his life or death: but all was done for vs.

Yet Chriſt may be ſaid in two reſpects to haue obtained ſomewhat to himſelfe, 1. becauſe the preeminence of the members doth redound to the honour of the head: and in this ſenſe Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Nos redemit, ſed ſibi acquiſiuit, &c. in his omnibus detrimentum nullum video diuinitatis, profectum operationis agnoſco, &c. Chriſt hath redeemed vs, but he hath alſo gotten to himſelfe: in all this I ſee no detriment of the diuinitie, but a profiting in the worke of our redemption. *ſerm.*20. *in Pſal.*119. His meaning is, that Chriſt gained, in that he finiſhed the redemption for vs: he purchaſed nothing properly to himſelfe, but by way of communication, becauſe his members by his merit were redeemed.

2. Chriſt by way of declaration or manifeſtation is ſaid to haue obtained his great name: not in that he merited his glory by his paſſion, which was due to his perſon: but by his obedience he declared himſelfe worthy of ſo great glory: thus Peter Lombard expoundeth that place of the Apoſtle, Philip.2.9. God hath giuen him a name aboue euerie name, &c. Secundum tropum in ſcriptura creberrimum res dicitur fieri, quando innoteſcit, &c. manifeſtationem ergo illius nominis donauit illi Deus poſt reſurrectionem. ſed illam meruit per obedientiam paſſionis: According to a certaine figure of ſpeech often vſed in the Scripture, a thing is ſaid to be done, when it appeareth onely; ſo God gaue vnto

Chriſt after his reſurrection, the manifeſtation of his name; but he merited it by the obedience of his paſſion: lib.3.diſt.18.lit.c. By his ſentence Chriſt merited not his glorie, but the manifeſtation onely thereof, that is, was declared by the obedience of his death worthy all honour, which is that we affirme: for otherwiſe to ſpeake properly, as Peter Lombard in the ſame place ſaith: Habuit hoc nomen Dei filius, in quantum Deus ab æterno per naturam; in quantum homo factus eſt, habuit ex tempore per gratiam: The Sonne of God had this name, as he was God eternally by nature; as he was made man, he had it temporally by grace, &c. If then he had it of grace, he properly did not merite it.

I will alleage another graue teſtimonie, of one of their owne ſide, Clichthouæus: ad Damaſcen. numerum.83. Quæ in Chriſto eſt diuinitas omnium princeps & dominatrix ſua idem contulit humanitati, vt ratione vnionis ſit omnium etiam domina, &c. The diuinitie, that is in Chriſt Prince and ruler of all things, gaue the ſame vnto his humanity, by reaſon of the vnion, to be Lord of all things, &c. which rule and domination is ſaid to be giuen, when for and after his humilitie vpon the croſſe it was manifeſted vnto men, &c. We cannot haue a clearer euidence for this matter, as we haue heard, then from themſelues.

Concil. Epheſin.1.can.9. Si quis dicit quod Chriſtus pro ſe ipſe obtulerit oblationem, & non magis pro ſolis nobis, anathema ſit: If any man ſay, that Chriſt offered vp himſelfe for himſelfe, and not rather onely for vs, let him be accurſed. But if Chriſt merited heauen by his ſufferings, not onely for vs, but for himſelfe alſo, then had he part himſelfe in his owne oblation.

Maſter Tindal holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: Chriſt with all his workes did not deſerue heauen for himſelfe (for that was his alreadie) but did vs ſeruice therewith, and neither looked for, nor ſought his owne profite, but ours, and the honour of God his Father only: Fox pag.1247. col.2. articul.7. Againe, he explaineth himſelfe thus: Ieſus Chriſt poſſeſſeth the kingdome of heauen by double right: firſt, becauſe hee is the ſonne of God, and very inheritour of his kingdome: ſecondly, becauſe hee hath gotten it by his paſſions and death: of his ſecond right hee hath no neede, and therefore hee giueth it all to them, that beleeue and truſt in him, pag.1256. col.2. articul.30.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CONTROVERSIE, concerning the comming of Chriſt to iudgement: which appertaineth to his whole perſon, as he is both God and man.

THis part of this controuerſie hath two parts: Firſt, concerning the ſignes which muſt come to paſſe before his appearing. Secondly, of the time and manner of his appearing. The firſt part containeth three queſtions: Firſt, whether the Goſpell bee alreadie preached to the whole world. Secondly, whether Henoch and Elias ſhall come in the fleſh, before the day of iudgement. Thirdly, of the great perſecutions toward the end of the world.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER THE Goſpell be alreadie preached thoroughout the world.

The Papiſts.

THey denie that the Goſpell hath been alreadie publiſhed to all nations of the world: for there are many great countries, which neuer heard of the Goſpell, as they affirme: but before the comming of Chriſt to iudgement, they ſay, it ſhall be preached to the whole world, Bellarmin. de Roman. pontif. lib.3. cap.4. 31. Error.

*Argum.*1. Matth.24.14. Chriſt ſaith, This Goſpell of the kingdome ſhall be preached thorough the whole world, for a witnes vnto all nations, and then ſhall the end come. The end of the world ſhall immediately follow the generall preaching of the Goſpell: which if it hath been performed, it is moſt like to haue been done in the Apoſtles time, then the world ſhould haue ended long agoe, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. This word, Then, doth not alwaies in the Scripture ſignifie a certaine and definite time preſently to follow, as Matth.9.1. Then he entered into a ſhip, &c. Luke alſo ſetteth forth the ſame ſtorie, chap.5. verſ.18. Then brought they a man lying in a bed: But in ſaying Then, they haue not relation to the ſame time; for they keepe not the ſame order, in rehearſing the ſtorie: Matthew ſetteth downe one thing, that was immediatly done by our Sauiour Chriſt before, and Luke another. And ſo is the word Then, vſed in other places, not to deſcribe a conſequence of time, with relation to that which went before, but abſolutely without any ſuch reſpect to name the time preſent only, wherein any thing is done. So, tunc, then, ſignifieth as much as in illo tempore, in that time, not which ſhall immediatly follow vpon the generall publiſhing of the Goſpell, but which God hath appoynted. We muſt alſo conſider who it is, that ſaith, Then, namely, God himſelfe, with whom a thouſand thouſand yeares is as one day, and one day as a thouſand yeares, 2.Pet.3.8. Chriſt then may come many hundred yeares after, and yet it ſhall be true, that then ſhall the end be.

So Origene well ſaith: Chriſtus in parabola totum hoc ſeculum præſens vnum diem vocat, licèt enim magnum quantum ad nos, modicum tamen quantum ad vitam patris, filij & ſpiritus ſancti: Chriſt in the parable, doth call all this preſent world, but one day: for though it be great in reſpect of vs, yet it is but little in reſpect of the life of the Father, the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, &c. So Iohn ſaith, It is the laſt houre, 1.Iohn 2.18. Orig. tract. 10. in Matth. 20. This word (then) may as well be applied to any part of this laſt houre.

But we rather take the firſt ſenſe, that (then) is here taken indefinitely: as it is alſo, verſ.23. Then if any man ſhall ſay vnto you, loe here is Chriſt, &c. Here our Sauiour ſpeaketh of his latter comming: yet immediatly before he deſcribed the troubleſome times of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: if (then) ſhould be taken ſtrictly, the ſecond comming of Chriſt ſhould haue fallen out at the ſame time, when Ieruſalem was deſtroyed. And as this word (τότε) tunc. (then) is taken, ſo is εὐθέως, verſ.29. Immediately or preſently after the tribulation of thoſe dayes, the ſunne ſhall be darkened: yet S. Marke ſaith, 13.24. In thoſe daies after the tribulation, the ſunne ſhall waxe darke: ſo that there ſhalbe dayes & times after thoſe tribulations, before the end come: then the end ſhal not be immediatly, taken ſtrictlie. In like manner our Sauiour ſaith, Matth.26.64. ἀπ᾽ ἄρτι, from this time, amodo, from hence forth ye ſhall ſee the ſonne of man ſitting at the right hand of the power of God: yet this, from henceforth, is not yet come: Hereof Origene thus writeth, Deo à conſtitutione mundi ad conſummationem eius velut vna dies: nil mirum ergo, quod hic dicit ſaluator, amodo, ſpacium eſſe breuiſſimum: Vnto God from the conſtitution of the world, to the end and conſummation thereof, it is but as one day: no maruaile then, if our Sauiour ſay, from henceforth, counting it a ſhort ſpace: Tract. 35. in Matth.

*Argum.*2. We ſee the Goſpell hath been preached in great countries of late, which neuer heard the Goſpell afore, as it is thought, Rhemiſt. Matth. 24. ſect. 4.

Anſw. 1. They ſpeake doubtfully, they cannot tell: as it is thought, ſay they. 2. They meane the preaching of their Friers, in thoſe new found countries, which was not the preaching of the Goſpell, but of vile ſuperſtition, not to conuert the people to God, but to robbe and ſpoyle them, and make a pray of them, killing and ſlaying them without all mercie: reade Benzo in hiſtoria noui orbis. 3. We denie not but that the Goſpell may be reuiued and renued in many countries, where notwithſtanding it was planted many yeeres afore: as this countrie of ours in ancient time called Britanie, was firſt inſtructed in the faith by the preaching of Ioſeph of Arimathea, as
Fox. pag. 106. Gildas ſaith: or as Nicephorus ſaith, by Simon Zelotes: yet after that, the foundation of the faith thus begun, it was confirmed afterward in King Lucius daies, by the preaching of Fagane and Damiane, which at Lucius requeſt were ſent into the land from Eleutherius B. of Rome: and ſo may it come to paſſe in other countries: a ſecond preaching therefore taketh not away the former, but confirmeth and reuiueth it.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Goſpell was in the Apoſtles time preached to all the knowne and inhabited nations of the world, ſo that once alreadie the world hath been generally called by the preaching of the word, it is euident by the Scriptures.

*Argum.*1. Our Sauiour ſaith to his Apoſtles, Ye ſhall be my witneſſes to the vttermoſt parts of the earth, Act.1.8. which is ſpoken to the perſons of the Apoſtles, not in them to all paſtors and preachers, as ſome expound it: for in the ſame verſe, there is mention made of the comming of the holie Ghoſt, and how firſt they ſhould begin to witneſſe at Ieruſalem: which things were indeede ſo accompliſhed in the Apoſtles.

S. Paul alſo Rom.10.18. expoundeth that place of the Pſalme, Their ſound is gone forth into all the world, of the Apoſtles. And Coloſſ.1.6. The word of truth is come to you, as it is to all the world, and is fruitfull as it is among you: and verſ.23. The Goſpell hath been preached to euery creature which is vnder heauen. Theſe places doe euidently proue, that the Goſpell was preached to all the world, euen in the Apoſtles time: neither can it be ſo vnderſtoode, as Bellarmine imagineth: that the Goſpell was preached not in act, but in vertue, becauſe the Apoſtles did ſowe the ſeed, which ſhould afterward fructifie in all the world: or becauſe the fame of the Goſpell onely was ſpread ouer all the world. Bellarm. lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. c. 4.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, It is come vnto the world, as it is alſo vnto you: but it was come actually to the Coloſſians, therefore it was ſo come alſo to the world. 2. He ſaith alſo, and is fruitfull, &c. but the fame or rumor only of the Goſpell could not be fruitfull: and the Apoſtle calleth it a preaching: but the carrying or ſpreading of a report, is not a preaching, which is e[illegible]ctual and begetteth faith. 3. If by the fame of the Goſpell, he vnderſtand the preaching thereof at the ſecond hand, by ſuch as were the Apoſtles ſchollers, and ſo ſent forth by them: it is the ſame thing that we affirme, that in the Apoſtles time, though not by the Apoſtles perſons onely, all the knowne parts of the world heard the Goſpell.

Againe, ſeeing the Apoſtolicall calling and gifts is now ceaſed, neither are wee to looke that men ſhould be immediatly called from heauen, and the preaching of the Goſpell to all nations is an Apoſtolicall worke, for the which the Apoſtles alſo receiued the gifts of tongues: ſeeing now we haue neither Apoſtolike men, nor Apoſtolike gifts, we are not to doubt, but that this promiſe and propheſie of the vniuerſall preaching of the Goſpell, is performed alreadie.

*Argum.*2. It appeareth in Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories, that the Apoſtles diſperſed themſelues into all parts of the world, euery where preaching the Goſpell. Thomas preached to the Parthians, Medes, Perſians, alſo to the Germanes: Simon Zelotes, in Mauritania, Africa, and in Britannia: Iudas, called Thaddæus, in Meſopotamia: Marke, in Ægypt: Bartholomæus to the Indians: Andrew preached to the Scythians, Sogdians, Æthiopians: Hieron.catolog.ſcriptor. So that there were few or no knowne countries in the world, which heard not of the fame of the Goſpell.

But here we muſt put in certaine cautions: Firſt, that the Goſpell was to be preached in the habitable or known world: the word is οἰκουμένη, which Hierome ſaith anſwereth to the Hebrue תבל teebel, Quam nos habitatum transferre poſſumus, Which wee may tranſlate the inhabited world, tom.4. epiſtol.ad Cyprian. Many countries are inhabited now that were not habitable then, or at the leaſt not inhabited: wherefore it was ſufficient, that the people of the world heard of the Goſpell, howſoeuer afterward they were propagated into other vnknowne places. Secondly, as Auguſtine ſaith, Omnes gentes promiſſæ ſunt, non omnes homines omnium gentium: All nations were promiſed to heare of the Goſpell, not all the men and inhabitants of euery nation. And ſo we doubt not but the Apoſtles did lay the foundation of faith through the whole world, & were firſt planters of the churches in the moſt knowne nations. Thirdly, though it might be, that there were many barbarous nations in the Apoſtles time, to whom they themſelues preached not perſonally, yet the Goſpell might be brought vnto them by thoſe, whom the Apoſtles ſent: as there were many diſciples and Euangeliſts beſide the Apoſtles, which preached the Goſpell: at the leaſt the fame of the Goſpell might eaſily be brought to the more obſcure, barbarous, and vnknowne nations, from thoſe famous, large, and populous countries, where the Apoſtles had laboured. Thus S. Ambroſe ſaith in 10.ad Roman. Vbique audita, & peruenit in omnem locum prædicatio nominis Chriſti, vbi enim præſentia hominis prædicantis defuit, ſonus tamen & fama peruenit, &c. Euery where is heard, and to euerie place is come the preaching of the name of Chriſt: for where the preſence of the preacher ceaſed, yet the ſound of the reporter encreaſed: as the report of the wonders done in Ægypt came vnto all nations, by the witneſſe of Rahab the harlot, &c. Thus then not by a generall fame onely of the Apoſtles preaching, but a particular report and relation of their doctrine, the name of Chriſt was publiſhed to all nations. Fourthly, the Goſpell in many countries was planted by the Apoſtles, which in ſhort time notwithſtanding might decay, and begin to bee extinguiſhed: and afterward their plantings might be renewed, watered, and reuiued by others; and yet may the Apoſtles be the firſt planters. Wherefore according to our meaning wee nothing doubt, but that the Apoſtles ſowed the firſt ſeedes of faith throughout the worlde: and therefore it is not to be expected, that the Lord ſhould ſend another generall commiſſion to publiſh the Goſpell to the whole world.

That the Goſpell hath been alreadie preached to the whole earth, a notable experiment hereof we haue in the firſt Nicen Councell: where were aſſembled 318. Biſhops out of the chiefe prouinces of the world: for Africa, there were preſent the Biſhops of Ægypt, Thebais, Lybia: for Aſia, there came ſome out of Perſia, Arabia, Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia: and ſome from all the prouinces of Aſia minor: likewiſe out of the Iles of Rhodes, Chius, Lemnos, Corcyra: for Europa, Hoſius of Spaine, others out of Fraunce, Gotland, Myſia, Dacia, Achaia, Pannonia, Calabria, and from the prouince of Boſphorus: And as Socrates ſaith, Sed etiam Perſa venit ad concilium Epiſcopus, verum nec Scytha defuit ex eorum choro: There came to the Councell a Perſian Biſhop, and there wanted not one out of Scythia. Thus then by the view of this ancient Councell it may appeare, that the whole world was in thoſe times lightened with the Goſpell.

Ex ſubſcriptione concil. Nicen. 1.

Hereof alſo Gennadius thus reporteth, Catolog.ſcriptorum: Iacobus preſbyter Niſibenæ nobilis Perſarum ciuitatis Epiſcopus vnus eorum fuit, qui in Nicena ſynodo Arrianam peruerſitatem damnarunt: Iacob, or Iames a presbyter Biſhop of Niſibene a noble citie of Perſia, was one of them which in the Nicen Synode condemned the Arrian hereſie.

Further, Saint Hierome thus teſtifieth: Catolog.ſcriptor. Creſcens in Gallijs prædicauit, &c. Creſcens preached in Fraunce, Queene Candaces Eunuch in Arabia Felix, and the Iſle Taprobane: Pantenus was ſent by Demetrius Biſhop of Alexandria into India, being entreated thereunto by the Ambaſſadors of that nation, where he found, that Bartholomew had preached the Goſpell after Matthew, the which written in Hebrue letters he brought to Alexandria.

Againe he thus writeth: Iam & Ægyptius Serapis Chriſtianus factus eſt, &c. Now the Ægyptian God Serapis is become a Chriſtian: from India, Perſia, Æthiopia we daily receiue great troupes of Monkes: the Armenians haue layd aſide their quiuers, the Hunnes doe learne the Pſalter: Scytha

*thouſand yeares is as one day, and one day as a thouſand yeares,*2.Pet.3.8. Chriſt then may come many hundred yeares after, and yet it ſhall be true, that then ſhall the end be.

So Origene well ſaith: Chriſtus in parabola totum hoc ſeculum præſens vnum diem vocat, licet enim magnum quantum ad nos, modicum tamen quantum ad vitam patris, filij & ſpiritus ſancti: Chriſt in the parable, doth call all this preſent world, but one day: for though it be great in reſpect of vs, yet it is but little in reſpect of the life of the Father, the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, &c. So Iohn ſaith, It is the laſt houre, 1.Iohn 2.18. *Orig. tract.*10. *in Matth.*20. This word (then) may as well be applied to any part of this laſt houre.

But we rather take the firſt ſenſe, that (then) is here taken indefinitely: as it is alſo, verſ.23. Then if any man ſhall ſay vnto you, loe here is Chriſt, &c. Here our Sauiour ſpeaketh of his latter comming: yet immediatly before he deſcribed the troubleſome times of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: if (then) ſhould be taken ſtrictly, the ſecond comming of Chriſt ſhould haue fallen out at the ſame time, when Ieruſalem was deſtroyed. And as this word (τότε) tunc. (then) is taken, ſo is εὐθέως, verſ.29. Immediately or preſently after the tribulation of thoſe dayes, the ſunne ſhall be darkened: yet S. Marke ſaith, 13.24. In thoſe daies after the tribulation, the ſunne ſhall waxe darke: ſo that there ſhalbe dayes & times after thoſe tribulations, before the end come: then the end ſhal not be immediatly, taken ſtrictlie. In like manner our Sauiour ſaith, Matth.26.64. ἀπ' ἄρτι, from this time, amodo, from hence forth ye ſhall ſee the ſonne of man ſitting at the right hand of the power of God: yet this, from henceforth, is not yet come: Hereof Origene thus writeth, Deo à conſtitutione mundi ad conſummationem eius velut vna dies: nil mirum ergo, quod hic dicit ſaluator, amodo, ſpacium eſſe breuiſſimum: Vnto God from the conſtitution of the world, to the end and conſummation thereof, it is but as one day: no maruaile then, if our Sauiour ſay, from henceforth, counting it a ſhort ſpace: *Tract.*35. in Matth.

*Argum.*2. We ſee the Goſpell hath been preached in great countries of late, which neuer heard the Goſpell afore, as it is thought, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*24. *ſect.*4.

Anſw. 1. They ſpeake doubtfully, they cannot tell: as it is thought, ſay they. 2. They meane the preaching of their Friers, in thoſe new found countries, which was not the preaching of the Goſpell, but of vile ſuperſtition, not to conuert the people to God, but to robbe and ſpoyle them, and make a pray of them, killing and ſlaying them without all mercie: reade Benzo in hiſtoria noui orbis. 3. We denie not but that the Goſpell may be reuiued and renued in many countries, where notwithſtanding it was planted many yeeres afore: as this countrie of ours in ancient time called Britanie, was firſt inſtructed in the faith by the preaching of Ioſeph of Arimathea, as Gildas ſaith: or as Nicephorus ſaith, by Simon Zelotes: yet after that, the foundation of the faith thus begun, it was confirmed afterward in King Lucius daies, by the preaching of Fagane and Damiane, which at Lucius requeſt were ſent into the land from Eleutherius B. of Rome: and ſo may it come to paſſe in other countries: a ſecond preaching therefore taketh not away the former, but confirmeth and reuiueth it. Fox.pag.106.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Goſpell was in the Apoſtles time preached to all the knowne and inhabited nations of the world, ſo that once alreadie the world hath been generally called by the preaching of the word, it is euident by the Scriptures.

*Argum.*1. Our Sauiour ſaith to his Apoſtles, Ye ſhall be my witneſſes to the vttermoſt parts of the earth, Act.1.8. which is ſpoken to the perſons of the Apoſtles, not in them to all paſtors and preachers, as ſome expound it: for in the ſame verſe, there is mention made of the comming of the holie Ghoſt, and how firſt they ſhould begin to witneſſe at Ieruſalem: which things were indeede ſo accompliſhed in the Apoſtles.

S. Paul alſo Rom.10.18. expoundeth that place of the Pſalme, Their ſound is gone forth into all the world, of the Apoſtles. And Coloſſ.1.6. The word of truth is come to you, as it is to all the world, and is fruitfull as it is among you: and verſ.23. The Goſpell hath been preached to euery creature which is vnder heauen. Theſe places doe euidently proue, that the Goſpell was preached to all the world, euen in the Apoſtles time: neither can it be ſo vnderſtoode, as Bellarmine imagineth: that the Goſpell was preached not in act, but in vertue, becauſe the Apoſtles did ſowe the ſeed, which ſhould afterward fructifie in all the world: or becauſe the fame of the Goſpell onely was ſpread ouer all the world. *Bellarm. lib.*3. *de Roman. pontif. c.*4.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, It is come vnto the world, as it is alſo vnto you: but it was come actually to the Coloſſians, therefore it was ſo come alſo to the world. 2. He ſaith alſo, and is fruitfull, &c. but the fame or rumor only of the Goſpell could not be fruitfull: and the Apoſtle calleth it a preaching: but the carrying or ſpreading of a report, is not a preaching, which is effectual and begetteth faith. 3. If by the fame of the Goſpell, he vnderſtand the preaching thereof at the ſecond hand, by ſuch as were the Apoſtles ſchollers, and ſo ſent forth by them: it is the ſame thing that we affirme, that in the Apoſtles time, though not by the Apoſtles perſons onely, all the knowne parts of the world heard the Goſpell.

Againe, ſeeing the Apoſtolicall calling and gifts is now ceaſed, neither are wee to looke that men ſhould be immediatly called from heauen, and the preaching of the Goſpell to all nations is an Apoſtolicall worke, for the which the Apoſtles alſo receiued the gifts of tongues: ſeeing now we haue neither Apoſtolike men, nor Apoſtolike gifts, we are not to doubt, but that this promiſe and propheſie of the vniuerſall preaching of the Goſpell, is performed alreadie.

*Argum.*2. It appeareth in Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories, that the Apoſtles diſperſed themſelues into all parts of the world, euery where preaching the Goſpell. Thomas preached to the Parthians, Medes, Perſians, alſo to the Germanes: Simon Zelotes, in Mauritania, Africa, and in Britannia: Iudas, called Thaddæus, in Meſopotamia: Marke, in Ægypt: Bartholomæus to the Indians: Andrew preached to the Scythians, Sogdians, Æthiopians: Hieron.catolog.ſcriptor. So that there were few or no knowne countries in the world, which heard not of the fame of the Goſpell.

Thus S. Ambroſe ſaith in 10.ad Roman. Vbique audita, & peruenit in omnem locum prædicatio nominis Chriſti, vbi enim præſentia hominis prædicantis defuit, ſonus tamen & fama peruenit, &c. Euery where is heard, and to euerie place is come the preaching of the name of Chriſt: for where the preſence of the preacher ceaſed, yet the ſound of the reporter encreaſed: as the report of the wonders done in Ægypt came vnto all nations, by the witneſſe of Rahab the harlot, &c. Thus then by the view of this ancient Councell it may appeare, that the whole world was in thoſe times lightened with the Goſpell.

Ex ſubſcriptione concil. Nicen. 1.

Hereof alſo Gennadius thus reporteth, Catolog.ſcriptorum: Iacobus presbyter Niſibenæ nobilis Perſarum ciuitatis Epiſcopus vnus eorum fuit, qui in Nicena ſynodo Arrianam peruerſitatem damnarunt: Iacob, or Iames a presbyter Biſhop of Niſibene a noble citie of Perſia, was one of them which in the Nicen Synode condemned the Arrian hereſie.

Further, Saint Hierome thus teſtifieth: Catolog.ſcriptor. Creſcens in Gallijs prædicauit, &c. Creſcens preached in Fraunce, Queene Candaces Eunuch in Arabia Felix, and the Iſle Taprobane: Pantenus was ſent by Demetrius Biſhop of Alexandria into India, being entreated thereunto by the Ambaſſadors of that nation, where he found, that Bartholomew had preached the Goſpell after Matthew, the which written in Hebrue letters he brought to Alexandria.

Againe he thus writeth: Iam & Ægyptius Serapis Chriſtianus factus eſt, &c. Now the Ægyptian God Serapis is become a Chriſtian: from India, Perſia, Æthiopia we daily receiue great troupes of Monkes: the Armenians haue layd aſide their quiuers, the Hunnes doe learne the Pſalter: Scytha frigora feruent calore fidei: The Scythian froſts doe glow with the heate of faith: the Getes bloody armies are become the tents of the Church.

Hieron.ad Latam. and in his epiſtle ad Euſtochium, he maketh mention of the Britaines, of the Armenians,Indians,Æthiopians, of Cappadocia, Pontus, Syria, Meſopotamia,conuerted to the faith,*cunctaque Orientis examina,*and all the ſwarmes of the Eaſt.

Origen ſaith,ex apolog.Pamphil.Prædicatur ſermo iſte in omni orbe terrarum,&c. This worde is preached in all the world, Greekes, Barbarians, the wiſe and vnwiſe doe receiue the religion of Chriſt.

Saint Ambroſe: Nulla pars mundi ab Euangelio vacat Chriſti: & licet illa generalis vocatio non quieſcat,tamen iam iſta ſpecialis omnibus facta eſt communis: No part of the worlde wanteth the Goſpell of Chriſt : and although that generall calling (of the creatures) ceaſeth not; yet this ſpeciall is made common to all,*lib.2.de vocat.Gent.c.*10. It is euident then by theſe teſtimonies, that the world hath alreadie generally been lightened with the preaching of the word, ſo that a generall ſecond preaching is not to be expected.

Wherefore,ſeeing the world hath once already been generally lightened with the truth,we are not to looke any more for a ſolemne legacie and ambaſſage to be ſent from the Lord vnto all nations : But thoſe countries rather,which ſometime had the truth,and now haue loſt it,ought now to ſeeke vnto thoſe places that haue it,as the Queene of Saba went a long iourney to heare Salomons wiſedome.They therefore that yet doe expect an vniuerſall preaching,may ſooner ſee Chriſt comming in the clowdes,than haue their expectation ſatisfied.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE COMMING of Henoch and Elias before the day of iudgement.

The Papiſts.

32.Error. THeir common and receiued opinion is,that Henoch and Elias doe yet liue in their bodies in Paradiſe, and ſhall come in perſon to oppoſe themſelues againſt Antichriſt, and by their preaching to conuert the Iewes,*Rhemiſt.Apocal.*11.*ſect.*4.

Argum. Malach.4.5. I will ſend you Eliah the Prophet,before the great and fearefull day of the Lord. Theſe are alſo the two witneſſes ſpoken of, Apocal.11.3. which ſhall be ſlaine and riſe vp againe the third day : Ergo,Eliah and Henoch ſhall come before the day of the Lord, *Bellarm. de Roman. pontif.*3.6.

Anſw. Firſt,the prophecie of Malachie was fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt, who came in the ſpirit of *Eliah,*as it is thrice in the Goſpell applied : once by the Angell, Luk.1.16. twice by our Sauiour Chriſt,Matth.11.14.and 17.13.

1 Bellarmine ſaith,it is not properly vnderſtood of *Iohn Baptiſt,*but onely in an allegorie. Firſt,the Prophet ſpeaketh of the great and fearefull day of the Lord : but the comming of Chriſt was the 2 acceptable time. Secondly,Matth.17.11.Chriſt ſaith, after Iohn had finiſhed his courſe, Elias cer-
3 tainly ſhall come. Thirdly, hee ſpeaketh there of the perſon of Helias that appeared with Chriſt in 4 the mountaine. Fourthly,Iohn Baptiſt did not reſtore all things, that is,by conuerting of all Iewes and heretikes,but Elias ſhall : Iohn therefore was not that Elias.

1 Anſ. 1. Here Bellarmine bewrayeth great ignorance : As though the comming of Chriſt in the fleſh,as it brought comfort to the elect,and to as many as were ordained to ſaluation,was not alſo an haſtening of the iudgement of God againſt the wicked : and therefore Iohn ſaith,The axe was layd to the roote of the tree, Matth.3.10. and that Chriſt came with his fanne in his hand, verſ.12.
The Apoſtle,Hebr.12.26. applieth that ſaying of the Prophet ; Once againe will I ſhake not onely
*the heauens,but the earth,*to the preaching of the Goſpell. Wee ſee then in what ſenſe the firſt com-
2 ming of Chriſt is called a fearefull and terrible day. 2. Our Sauiour maketh anſwere to the Apoſtles queſtion : Why ſay the Scribes that Elias muſt firſt come? firſt deliuering their ſenſe,Elias muſt
*firſt come,*but then he ſheweth his owne iudgement, correcting the erronious ſenſe of the Scribes, 3 verſ.12.But I ſay vnto you,that Elias is come alreadie. 3. Neither is it neceſſarie, becauſe Elias appeared a little before in perſon,that this ſhould be ſpoken of his perſon:and yet it was true alſo in 4 that ſenſe,that Elias was come alreadie,appearing vnto Chriſt in the mount. 4. And Iohn alſo reſtored all,that is,many,as the Scripture vſeth to ſpeake, Luk.1.16. Many of the children of Iſrael ſhall be turne to the Lord their God. So Saint Paul hauing ſaid, Through the iuſtifying of one the benefit *abounded toward all men to iuſtification,*Rom.5.18.in the next verſe,in ſtead of *all,*he ſaith,by the obe- dience of one many ſhall be made righteous.

Anſw. Secondly,by the two witneſſes,is vnderſtood the ſmall,yet ſufficient number of the true ſeruants of God,which ſhall witneſſe the truth euen in the hotteſt perſecution of Antichriſt:there is no mention made of Henoch or Elias. And if you will needes vnderſtand that literally, of their riſing againe,why not the reſt alſo, how fire ſhall proceede out of their mouthes to conſume the wicked,and they ſhall turne water into blood? The meaning is nothing elſe, but that God will alwaies haue faithfull witneſſes in his Church,which ſhall alwaies ſtand vp, in the ſtead of the Prophets and holy men gone before.

Saint Hierome writeth well of this matter: De Henoch & Elia, quos venturos Apocalypſis refert & eſſe morituros,non eſt iſtius temporis diſputatio,cum omnis ille liber,aut ſpiritualiter intelligendus ſit,vt nos exiſtimamus, aut ſi carnalem interpretationem ſequimur, Iudaicis fabulis acquieſcendum ſit,vt rurſus ædificetur Ieruſalem,& hoſtia offerantur in templo: Of Henoch and Elias, whom the Apocalypſe maketh mention ſhall come,and afterward dye,it belongeth not to this time to diſpute, ſeeing that whole booke muſt either ſpiritually be vnderſtood,as we thinke,or if we follow the carnall (or literall) interpretation,we muſt reſt in Iewiſh fables,that Ieruſalem muſt be built againe,and ſacrifices offered in the temple, *Marcel.tom.*4.

The Proteſtants.

LIke as the Phariſies deceiued the Iewes with vaine expectation of Elias, and ſo hindred their beleefe in Chriſt: ſo the Papiſts would not haue men to acknowledge the manifeſtation of Antichriſt,vnder this falſe pretence, that Henoch and Elias muſt firſt come before Antichriſt bee reuealed,which we doe hold as a Iewiſh fable and popiſh dreame.

*Argum.*1. The prophecie of Elias comming is properly fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt, and therefore we are not to looke for any other accompliſhment thereof: neither now is there any Paradiſe remaining but heauen, 2.Corin.12.4. And to affirme that Henoch and Elias went vp to heauen in their bodies,before the aſcenſion of Chriſt,out of Scripture it cannot bee prooued: it is euident that they were taken vp aliue into heauen,but not that they continued aliue.

That there is no paradiſe now but heauen, Ambroſe ſpeaketh euidently: Hîc non vera,non magna ſalus eſt; tum ſaluus ero,cum fuero in paradiſo, cum viuere cæpero inter electos angelos: Here is no great nor true health;then I ſhall be ſafe,when I ſhall be in paradiſe, when I ſhall liue among the elect Angels, *ſerm.*15.*in Pſal.*119. Againe, In paradiſum cæleſtem raptus eſt Apoſtolus, in quo latroni dixit dominus,&c. illic vbi & eſſe dicitur auita Ieruſalem mater noſtra: The Apoſtle was taken vp into the celeſtiall paradiſe,where the Lord ſayd to the theefe,&c. where Ieruſalem is ſayd to bee the mother of vs all, in 2.*Cor.*12.

But in this celeſtiall paradiſe of heauen Henoch and Elias are not with their bodies: Chriſt was the firſt,that in his fleſh pierced the heauens. Origen herein is moſt reſolute: Offendatur, qui vult ex ſermone noſtro,ego cum omni fiducia aſſeuero, quia ſicut ex mortuis primogenitus Chriſtus,ita primus carnem euexit in cœlum: Let him bee offended that will with my ſpeech, I ſpeake it boldly, that as Chriſt was the firſt begotten of the dead,ſo he firſt caried his fleſh vp into heauen: ex Pamphil.

*Argum.*2. The varietie of opinions concerning the perſonall appearance of Henoch and Elias, declare that it is an vncertaine thing,and but deuiſed of men. Hilarie ſaith, they ſhall be Moſes and Elias: Chryſoſtome graunteth that Elias ſhall come, but not Henoch. Iuſtine thinketh that not onely Henoch and Elias are aliue,but all thoſe,whoſe bodies roſe at the reſurrection of Chriſt. Hippolytus is of opinion, that Iohn the Diuine ſhall come with them, and ſome ſay Ieremie alſo, whoſe death is not read of, *Fulk. Apocal.*11.*ſect.*4. And thus it is no marueile, if men runne mad as it were in their fooliſh conceits,hauing no warrant for their opinions out of ſcriptures.

The nation of the Iewes we graunt,according to the manifeſt prophecie of Saint Paul, ſhall in the end be conuerted: but not in ſuch ſort, by the perſonall preaching of Moſes and Elias: for the Apoſtle ſetting downe at large the myſterie of their calling,would not haue left out ſo neceſſarie a thing.

Rom.11.

Auguſtine by the two witneſſes,vnderſtandeth the two Teſtaments,the Old and the New. But he denieth vtterly, that any ſhall riſe before the comming of Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Corinth.15.23. The firſt fruits is Chriſt. Then they that are Chriſts at his comming,but not before. Vnde (ſaith he) excluditur omnis ſuſpicio quorundam, qui putant hos duos teſtes duos viros eſſe,& ante aduentum Chriſti cœlum in nubibus aſcendiſſe: Their ſuſpition therefore, or opinion is vtterly excluded, which thinke theſe two witneſſes to be two men, which ſhould aſcend into heauen before the comming of Chriſt. Auguſtine we ſee is flat againſt them.

In Apocal. homil.8.

Saint Cyprian alſo ſaith: Nobis in ſpiritu & virtute Eliæ non alium quam Ioannem ſolum angelus & dominus Chriſtus inſinuat: The Angell and our Lord Chriſt inſinuate,that wee ſhall haue no other in the ſpirit and power of Elias, but Iohn: de ſingular.Clericor. Therefore no other Elias was to come but Iohn.

Ianſenius a popiſh Biſhop thus expoundeth that place. Eccleſiaſtic.48.10.of Helias, That he is appointed to reprooue in his time,&c. That Eccleſiaſticus did write according to the opinion receiued in his time,that Elias ſhould come in his owne perſon before the Meſſiah,which was to be fulfilled,not in his proper perſon, but in him that ſhould come in the perſon and power of Elias,&c. This popiſh writer is a very good witneſſe againſt them.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE MOST grieuous perſecutions that euer were, ſhall be toward the end of the world.

The Papiſts.

33. Error. THe moſt grieuous perſecution (ſay they) that euer was, ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, who is not yet come, but ſhall be reuealed toward the end of the world, and ſhall raigne vpon the earth three yeeres and an halfe, making great hauocke of the Church of God, Bellarmine de Roman. pontific. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Argum. Matth. 24. 21. There ſhall bee then ſuch great tribulation in the world, as was not ſince the beginning of the world, neither ſhall be: Ergo, the greateſt perſecution toward the ende of the world.

Anſw. Firſt, it is plaine by the text, that this great tribulation is prophecied to come vpon the Iewes: for in the next verſe before he ſaith, pray that your flight be not in the winter: And then it followeth, there ſhall be then, or as Marke ſaith, In thoſe daies, there ſhall be ſuch tribulation, 13. 19. and in the 17. verſe: Wo ſhal be to them that giue ſuck in thoſe daies: which muſt needs be vnderſtood of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: for at the comming of Chriſt, there ſhall be one and the ſame caſe of all, whether of thoſe that giue ſucke, or of thoſe that giue none.

Secondly, it cannot be meant of the laſt tribulation in the world, becauſe the words are, that as there was none ſuch ſince the beginning of the world; ſo there ſhall be none ſuch after: Ergo, there ſhall be tribulation after, though none ſuch.

The Proteſtants.

OVr hope and truſt is, that the greateſt perſecution of the Church of God is ouerpaſt; becauſe the kingdome or rather tyrannie of Antichriſt beginneth to decay, and we truſt, ſhall more and more be ſhaken, till it come to vtter ruine.

Argum. 1. The Scripture telleth vs, that hard vpon the end of the world there ſhall be great ſecuritie, men ſhall ſay, Peace peace vnto themſelues, 1. Theſſal. 5. 4. They ſhall eate and drinke, marry and be married, as it was in the daies of Noah, Matth. 24. 38. And therefore Luke ſaith, 21. 34. Take heed you be not ouercome of ſurfeiting and drunkennes, leaſt this day come vpon you vnawares. For as a ſnare ſhall it come, &c. All this proueth, that there ſhall bee rather generall ſecuritie, as in the daies of Noah, then generall tribulation. And there is greater daunger of ſurfeiting and wantonnes in time of proſperitie and abundance, then in the daies of perſecution.

And the text is plaine ſpeaking of warres, troubles and perſecutions, but the end ſhall not be yet, Mark. 13. 7. Wherefore it appeareth, that the troubles and perſecutions of the Church, ſhall be well ſlaked toward the ende of the world.

Argum. 2. Antichriſt, though he ſhall not vtterly be extinguiſhed before the comming of Chriſt, yet ſhall be deadly wounded: and he ſhall beginne to be iudged euen in this world, Apoc. 16. 6. God ſhall giue them blood to drinke, Apoc. 17. 16. The tenne hornes, that is the kings of the earth, ſhall hate the whore and eate her fleſh. The Church of God ſhall reward her, as ſhe hath rewarded vs, and giue her double according to her workes, Apoc. 18. 6. By theſe places it is gathered, that Antichriſt ſhall haue a great ouerthrow before the comming of Chriſt, who ſhall vtterly aboliſh him with the brightnes of his comming. 2. Theſ. 2. 8.

Antichriſt is alreadie come, and hath raged a long time againſt the Church: The perſecutions of the heathen did neither continue ſo long, neither were in exquiſite crueltie and bitternes to be compared to the outragious practiſes of the Antichriſt of Rome, and his adherents againſt the Church of God: which would fill a whole volume by themſelues, nay not one, but many and infinite volumes to be declared at large.

1 But Bellarmine heere telleth vs. 1. That the perſecution which we ſay the Biſhop of Rome hath raiſed againſt the Proteſtants, is nothing like to the perſecution of the heathen Romane Emperors againſt the Chriſtians, neyther for number of martyrs, nor for diuerſitie of moſt exquiſite torments.

2 2. He is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Proteſtants haue put more Papiſts to death in fewe yeers, then they haue killed Proteſtants.

3 3. The perſecution of Antichriſt ſhall be notorious and maniſeſt to all the world: as the perſecution of Nero, and Domitian were, we can tell when thoſe perſecutions began, and when they ended: but they cannot tell when the Pope began to perſecute, &c. Therefore his perſecution is not that, which Antichriſt ſhall raiſe.

4 4. Antichriſt ſhall aboliſh the daily ſacrifice, and all worſhip of God, in the time of his perſecution: but ſo doth not the Pope. Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 3. c. 7.

Anſw. 1. If the number of martyrs ſlaine by the tyrannie of the Pope is no whit inferior to the number of the ancient martyrs if the time & place be conſidered: the heathen Emperors tyrannized for the ſpace of three hundred yeers, and ouer the moſt part of the world which was vnder the Romane Empyre: the Romiſh Popes haue not practiſed their cruelty ſo long, neither I truſt euer ſhall, neither is his popiſh iuriſdiction any thing ſo large, as the Romane Empyre was: theſe two things conſidered, our late bleſſed martyrs, may compare in number, with thoſe of former time, if they goe not beyond them.

For proofe hereof, I will produce three examples: the firſt of the perſecution of Calabria vnder Pope Pius 4. ann. 1560. where in one towne 88. men had their throats cut, like calues and ſheepe, and an 100. women were determined to be put to death: and 1600. more were apprehended and condemned: this Maſter Fox reporteth out of a certaine letter written by a Romaniſt to a friend he had in Rome. p.942.

The ſecond example is of the perſecution of Merindol and Cabriers in France vnder King Francis: where eight townes in the countrie of Prouence with the inhabitants thereof were vtterly deſtroyed by mercileſſe Minerius: 500. women of Merindol were ſome rauiſhed, ſome whipped and ſcourged, ſome ſold like cattell, ſome murthered: and at the ſame time a 1000. perſons of men, women and children were put to death in *Cabriers, Fox.p.*953. ex Henrico.Pantal.

My third example is of the late maſſacre in France, ann. 1572. when and where in Paris in three daies, were ten thouſand Proteſtants cruelly murthered: in Lyons, Orleance, Tholouſe, Roane in the ſpace of one moneth thirtie thouſand moſt butcherly ſlaine. *Fox.p.*2153. Can any man now finde any difference in number of holy martyrs betweene theſe and the firſt perſecution? I thinke verily that the horrible outrages of cruell Popes and Papiſts, haue exceeded the crueltie of the perſecuting Emperors.

Concerning the diuers and exquiſite torments, whether the Papiſts haue beene behinde, I report me to the foreſaid recited ſtories: as in Calabria, where 88. had their throates cut by one executioner in one day: a Romaniſt deteſting the crueltie of the fact, thus writeth thereof: *I tremble & ſhake to remember how the executioner held his bloodie knife betweene his teeth, with the bloudy muffler in his hand, and his armes all in goare bloud vp to the elbowes, going to the fold, and taking euery one of them, one after another by the hand, and ſo diſpatching them all, none otherwiſe then doth a butcher kill his calues and ſheepe. Fox.p.*942. What greater crueltie could Nero or Domitian haue ſhewed?

In the ſacking of the towne of Calabria: they forced diuers women to go into a barne full of ſtrawe, and ſo ſet fire vpon the houſe: the women that aſſayed to eſcape by the doore, which a ſouldier opened in compaſſion toward them, the tyrant Minerius commaunded to be hewen in peeces, opening the bellies of the women great with child, that the infants fell out, p.952. O crueltie and horrible butcherie vnſpeakeable! Lord, thou haſt ſeene this wickednes in the earth, and wilt iudge it in thy time.

At Lyons in the time of the Maſſacre all the priſons being filled full of Proteſtants, when the ſouldiers and butchers refuſed to be inſtrumentes of ſo great villanie, the cruell gouernour procured the beaſtly kennell rakers and ſweepers of the ſtreets to goe into the priſons and hewe in peeces the ſilly innocent ſoules, that the ſtreets from the priſons ſtreamed with bloud. ex hiſtor. maſſac.

I thinke more fearefull preſidents of beaſtly and inhumane crueltie cannot be ſhewed vnder thoſe barbarous tyrants of Rome.

2 Secondly, it is a moſt ſhameleſſe lie, that the Proteſtants haue put more to death, &c. I will giue an inſtance of this realme of England, where in the ſpace of three yeeres, in the late daies of perſecution one bloudie butcher ſlaughtered twiſe ſo many innocent Proteſtants for the truth, as there haue beene executed Papiſts now theſe 42. yeeres for treaſon: the Papiſtes which haue died by the ſworde of Proteſtantes, were either ouercome in iuſt battell, or elſe condemned by iuſt lawes, not for their religion, but their rebellion, not for their profeſſion, but their practiſing againſt Princes.

Boner in three yeeres ſpace put 200. martyrs to death. Fox.p.2043.

3 Thirdly, it is no hard matter for vs to aſſigne the time when the Pope beganne is cruell rage, and Antichriſtian perſecution againſt the Church of Chriſt: for ann. 1400. vnder the raigne of Henrie the fourth we finde William Sawtre to haue beene the firſt that was burned heere in England for the faith of the Goſpell: and at that time Boniface the ſecond was Pope. Fox. pag. 518. and ann. 1414. followed the condemnation of Iohn Hus in the Councell of Conſtance, pag. 624. So that it is now 200. yeere ſince the Antichriſt of Rome beganne his open perſecution: his malice againſt the ſeruants of Chriſt did ſhew it ſelfe long before; but about that time his tyrannie was manifeſted to the world, and euer ſince hath encreaſed.

4 Fourthly, Antichriſt ſhall not prohibite all diuine worſhippe, but all true ſeruice and worſhip of God: that like as Antiochus in his time, and afterward the Romanes cauſed the daily ſacrifice to ceaſe, and brought into the Temple, the abomination of deſolation, Matth. 24.15. that is their prophane and idolatrous ſacrifices: ſo hath the Antichriſt of Rome expelled the true ſpirituall ſeruice of God, and erected a new kind of idolatrie, ſetting vp the abomination of deſolation, the blaſphemous Idoll of the Maſſe.

Thus then notwithſtanding Bellarmines ſillie ſhiftes, where with as with figge leaues he would hide the filthie nakedneſſe of his holy Father, it is euident, that the greateſt perſecutions againſt Chriſtes Church haue beene raiſed by that Antichriſt of Rome, which wee truſt are well neere at an ende, and that the Lord will giue a breathing time to his Church after the reuelation of Antichriſt: This is the iudgement of ſome of their owne writers: as Lyra vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, 2.Tim.4.9. They ſhall preuaile no longer, for their madnes ſhall bee euident to all men: Potiſſimum implendum eſt Antichriſti tempore, cum retecta eius fallacia finaliter ad Chriſtum conuertentur: This ſhall be chiefly fulfilled in the time of Antichriſt, when as his falſehood being detected, all ſhall be conuerted to Chriſt.

And Eſpenſcæus ſpeaking of thoſe times after the reuelation of Antichriſt ſayth: O tempora tunc ad ſalutem facilia, fœlices quos tum naſci contigerit: O times eaſie to obtaine ſaluation in, and O happie men, that ſhall be then borne, in 2. ad Timoth. p.79. liter.c.

In Pſal.9. Auguſtine ſaith, Prima perſecutio violenta fuit cum tormentis, altera fraudulenta eſt per hæreticos, tertia ſupereſt per Antichriſtũ ventura, qua nihil eſt periculoſius, quia & violenta & fraudulenta erit: The firſt perſecution of the Church was violent with tormentes: the ſecond was by fraudulent heretikes: the third ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, the worſt of all, it ſhall be both violent, and fraudulent. This perſecution vnder the Popes of Rome, the Church of God endured a great while: who both dealt fraudulently, in poyſoning them with corrupt doctrine; and cruelly alſo, in puniſhing with ſword and fire the innocent members of Chriſt: wherefore ſeeing it is a plaine caſe, that Antichriſt is, and hath beene many a day reuealed to the world, and that the Church of God beginneth to haue ſome reſpit and libertie from his thraldome; we doubt not, but that the greateſt ſtormes of perſecution are ouerpaſt, if by our ſinnes we bring not backe againe the thicke and miſtie cloud vpon vs.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROuerſie, about the manner of Chriſts comming to iudgement.

The Papiſts.

34.Error. 1. THe faithfull ſhall iudge and giue ſentence with Chriſt (ſay they) at the latter day, Rhemiſt. 1.Corinth.6.verſ.2. They ſhall ſit in thrones with Chriſt, Matth.19. verſ.28. Ergo, iudge together with him, Rhemiſt. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. 1. TRue it is, that the Saints ſhall iudge the world, 1.Corinth.6.2. But onely Chriſt ſhall giue ſentence, Matth.25. and is properly and onely the iudge of the world: for the father hath committed all iudgement to the Sonne, Iohn.5.22. If all, then there is no part left for any other. The Apoſtles therefore and Saints are ſaid to iudge, as Chriſt ſaith of his word, that he will not iudge the vnbeleeuers, but his word ſhall iudge them in the laſt day, Iohn.12.48. That is, ſhall be a witneſſe againſt them, accuſe them, lay in matter of iudgement againſt them. So the word preached by the Saints vpon earth, and practiſed in their liues, ſhall be the condemnation of the world. And not onely ſo, but they ſhall be aduanced to greater honour: They ſhall ſit in thrones and ſeates: that is, they ſhall not ſtand amongſt the wicked to receiue ſentence, but ſhall meete Chriſt in the ayre, and be caught vp in the cloudes, 1.Theſſ.4.17. Yea, they ſhall in the ſight and beholding of the vngodly enter into the kingdome of God, Luk.13.28. But in any other ſence they cannot be iudges of the world: for ſhall we thinke, that Chriſt in that day ſhall neede vnder-officers and iudges, as Moſes did? Exod.18. Auguſtine ſaith, Sancti ſedebunt cum domino attendere, qui fecerunt miſericordiam: The Saintes ſhall ſit with the Lord, not to iudge, but to marke and attende, and to witneſſe, who haue followed the workes of mercie. In Pſal.121.

Saint Ambroſe thus teſtifieth: Stantibus angelis ad dextram, vel ſiniſtram domini quomodo ſedebunt homines ad dextram, vel ſiniſtram, &c. erunt ſicut angeli non plus quam angeli: Seeing the Angels ſtand at the right hand and left of the Lord, how ſhall men ſit at the right hand or left? they ſhall be as the Angels, not more than the Angels, &c. And againe, our Sauiour ſaith, Ioh.17.24. Pater, quos dediſti mihi, volo vt vbi ego ſum, & illi ſint mecum; vt ſint mecum, non vt ſedeant mecum; vbi ego, non quomodo ego, vt videant claritatem, non vt habeant, ſed videant; ſeruus enim videt, dominus poſſidet: Father, I will that they, whom thou haſt giuen me, be with me where I am: that they may be with me, not ſit with me; where I am, not as I am; to ſee my glorie, not to haue it: for the ſeruant ſeeth, the Lord or maſter poſſeſſeth, lib.5. de fid. c.3. Here Ambroſe euidently teſtifieth, that the Saints ſhall not ſit with Chriſt to giue ſentence and to iudge the world: But he further ſheweth in what ſenſe the Apoſtles are ſaid to ſit in ſeates: firſt, vpon theſe words, Epheſ.2.6. He hath made vs to ſit together in heauenly places with Chriſt: Agnoſco ſcriptum, ſed non vt homines ſedere ad dextram ſibi patiatur deus, ſed vt in Chriſto ſedere quia ipſe eſt eorum fundamentum, caput eccleſiæ, in quo communis ſecundum carnem natura, prærogatiuam ſedis cæleſtis emeruit, &c. I acknowledge it is ſo written, not that God doth ſuffer men to ſit by him at his right hand, but to ſit as in Chriſt, becauſe he is the foundation of all, and the head of his Church, in whom the common nature of man hath deſerued the prerogatiue of the heauenly ſeate, lib.5.de fid.c.7. Thus one way the Saints are ſaid to ſit in ſeates, that is, not in their owne perſon, but in Chriſt their head.

Secondly, vpon theſe words, Matth.19.28. Ye ſhall ſit vpon twelue thrones: Non ſedis ſuæ dixit Apoſtolis dari poſſe conſortium, ſed alias illas eſſe ſedes duodecim, quas tamen non pro corporali conſeſſu, ſed pro ſucceſſu ſpiritualis gratiæ æſtimare debemus: He ſaid not he would giue to his Apoſtles the fellowſhip of his ſeate, but other twelue ſeates, which wee muſt eſtimate not according to the corporall ſitting, but after the ſpirituall profiting in grace, lib.5.de fid.c.3. By the twelue ſeates he vnderſtandeth an higher degree of glorie, which ſhould be giuen to the Apoſtles.

Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe thus writeth vpon that place, 1.Cor.6.2. The Saints ſhall iudge the world: Iudicabunt ſancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi damnabitur, &c. The Saints ſhall iudge the world, becauſe by example of their faith, the faithleſſe world ſhall be iudged, and ſo he ſaith afterward that the Angels ſhall be iudged. So likewiſe Origen: Omnis vita iuſtorum iudicabit tribus Iſrael, quæ non crediderunt: The whole life of the righteous ſhall iudge the tribes of Iſrael, that beleeued not, tract.8.in Matth. In any of theſe ſenſes the Saints may be ſaid to iudge the world, but not as iudges to giue ſentence with Chriſt, as we haue ſeene.

The Papiſts.

2. THey are ſo bold as to appoint the place, where Chriſt ſhall appeare, namely in the Eaſt: for his comming ſhall be as the lightening that ſhineth from Eaſt to Weſt, Matth.24.27. Bellarm.de cultu ſanctor.lib.3.cap.3. 35.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, by that ſimilitude Chriſt onely ſheweth the ſuddennes of his comming: therefore it muſt be preſt no further, than to that purpoſe for the which it ſerueth. Secondly, our Sauiour ſaith plainly, that the kingdome of God commeth not with obſeruation, Luk.17.20. either of time, or place. And therefore, when men ſay vnto vs, Behold here, or behold there, wee ought not to beleeue them, verſ.23. As though they would point out Chriſts comming with the finger, either in the Eaſt or Weſt. Whereas Matthew therefore nameth the Eaſt and Weſt, in the ſimilitude of the lightening, Luke leaueth them out, ſaying, As the lightening ſhineth from one part of the heauen to the other, chap.17.24. leſt we ſhould thinke any great matter to be in the nomination of thoſe parts.

Auguſtine ſaith notably: Non ab Oriente veniet, nec Occidente: quare? quia Deus iudex eſt: ſi in aliquo loco eſſet, non eſſet Deus: quia verò Deus iudex eſt, non homo, noli illum expectare de locis: Hee will not come, either from the Eaſt, or from the Weſt: why ſo? becauſe God is iudge: if he were tyed to any place, he were not God: but becauſe God is iudge, and not a meere man, we muſt not look for him from any place. In Pſal.74.

Origen alſo of this matter thus writeth: Non in aliquo quidem loco apparebit filius dei, cum venerit in gloria ſua, in altero non apparebit, &c. The ſonne of God ſhall not appeare in one place when he commeth in his glorie, and not in another: but as the lightning comming forth of the Eaſt, becauſe it filleth all places, appeareth in the Weſt; ſo when Chriſt commeth in his glorie, hee ſhall appeare euery where, he ſhall be euery where in all mens ſight, and they euery where in his ſight: tract.35. in Matth.

The Papiſts.

3. THe Sonne of man ſhall appeare in the day of iudgement, with the ſigne of the Croſſe borne before him. Then ſhall the ſigne of the Sonne of man appeare in heauen, Matth. 24.verſ.3. that is (ſay they) the ſigne of the Croſſe, Bellarm.de ſanct.lib.2.cap.28. Rhemiſt.in hunc locum. 36.Error.

The Proteſtants,

Anſ. FIrſt, the ſigne of the ſonne of man in the heauens, is nothing elſe, but his conſpicuous and glorious appearing, who ſhall come in great glorie, as a ſigne in the heauens to be ſeene of all the world. It cannot ſignifie any ſuch viſible ſigne as they imagine: for Mar.13.26. Luk.21. ver.27. we reade thus: Then ſhall they ſee the Sonne of man. So then, the ſigne of the Sonne of man, is the Sonne himſelfe in his glorious appearing. And ſo Origen expoundeth: Sicut in diſpenſatione crucis ſole deficiente tenebræ factæ ſunt ſuper omnem terram, ſic & ſigno filij hominis apparente in cœlo deficiet ſolis lumen: Like as in the diſpenſation of the croſſe, the Sunne being eclipſed, darknes was ouer the face of all the earth: ſo the ſigne of the Sonne of man appearing, the Sunnes light ſhall faile, Tract.30.in Matth. It is the glorie of the Sonne himſelfe, and not of any other ſigne, which true ſpirituall ſeruice of God, and erected a new kind of idolatrie, ſetting vp the abomination of deſolation, the blaſphemous Idoll of the Maſſe.

Thus then notwithſtanding Bellarmines ſillie ſhiftes, where with as with figge leaues he would hide the filthie nakedneſſe of his holy Father, it is euident, that the greateſt perſecutions againſt Chriſtes Church haue beene raiſed by that Antichriſt of Rome, which wee truſt are well neere at an ende, and that the Lord will giue a breathing time to his Church after the reuelation of Antichriſt: This is the iudgement of ſome of their owne writers: as Lyra vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, 2.Tim.4.9. They ſhall preuaile no longer, for their madnes ſhall bee euident to all men: Potiſſimum implendum eſt Antichriſti tempore, cum retecta eius fallacia finaliter ad Chriſtum conuertentur: This ſhall be chiefly fulfilled in the time of Antichriſt, when as his falſehood being detected, all ſhall be conuerted to Chriſt.

And Eſpenſcæus ſpeaking of thoſe times after the reuelation of Antichriſt ſayth: O tempora tunc ad ſalutem facilia, fœlices quos tum naſci contigerit: O times eaſie to obtaine ſaluation in, and O happie men, that ſhall be then borne, in 2. ad Timoth. p.79. liter.c.

In Pſal.9. Auguſtine ſaith, Prima perſecutio violenta fuit cum tormentis, altera fraudulenta eſt per hæreticos, tertia ſupereſt per Antichriſtū ventura, qua nihil eſt periculoſius, quia & violenta & fraudulenta erit: The firſt perſecution of the Church was violent with tormentes: the ſecond was by fraudulent heretikes: the third ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, the worſt of all, it ſhall be both violent, and fraudulent. Secondly, vpon theſe words, Matth.19.28. Ye ſhall ſit vpon twelue thrones: Non ſedis ſuæ dixit Apoſtolis dari poſſe conſortium, ſed alias illàs eſſe ſedes duodecim, quas tamen non pro corporali conſeſſu, ſed pro ſucceſſu ſpiritualis gratiæ æſtimare debemus: He ſaid not he would giue to his Apoſtles the fellowſhip of his ſeate, but other twelue ſeates, which wee muſt eſtimate not according to the corporall ſitting, but after the ſpirituall profiting in grace, lib.5.de fid.c.3. By the twelue ſeates he vnderſtandeth an higher degree of glorie, which ſhould be giuen to the Apoſtles.

Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe thus writeth vpon that place, 1.Cor.6.2. The Saints ſhall iudge the world: Iudicabunt ſancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi damnabitur, &c. The Saints ſhall iudge the world, becauſe by example of their faith, the faithleſſe world ſhall be iudged, and ſo he ſaith afterward that the Angels ſhall be iudged. So likewiſe Origen: Omnis vita iuſtorum iudicabit tribus Iſrael, quæ non crediderunt: The whole life of the righteous ſhall iudge the tribes of Iſrael, that beleeued not, tract.8.in Matth. In any of theſe ſenſes the Saints may be ſaid to iudge the world, but not as iudges to giue ſentence with Chriſt, as we haue ſeene.

The Papiſts.

2. THey are ſo bold as to appoint the place, where Chriſt ſhall appeare, namely in the Eaſt: 35.Error.
for his comming ſhall be as the lightening that ſhineth from Eaſt to Weſt, Matth.24.27. Bellarm.de cultu ſanctor.lib.3.cap.3.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, by that ſimilitude Chriſt onely ſheweth the ſuddennes of his comming: therefore it muſt be preſt no further, than to that purpoſe for the which it ſerueth. Secondly, our Sauiour ſaith plainly, that the kingdome of God commeth not with obſeruation, Luk.17.20. either of time, or place. And therefore, when men ſay vnto vs, Behold here, or behold there, wee ought not to beleeue them, verſ.23. As though they would point out Chriſts comming with the finger, either in the Eaſt or Weſt. Whereas Matthew therefore nameth the Eaſt and Weſt, in the ſimilitude of the lightening, Luke leaueth them out, ſaying, As the lightening ſhineth from one part of the heauen to the other, chap.17.24. leſt we ſhould thinke any great matter to be in the nomination of thoſe parts.

Auguſtine ſaith notably: Non ab Oriente veniet, nec Occidente: quare? quia Deus iudex eſt: ſi in In Pſal.74.
aliquo loco eſſet, non eſſet Deus: quia verò Deus iudex eſt, non homo, noli illum expectare de locis: Hee will not come, either from the Eaſt, or from the Weſt: why ſo? becauſe God is iudge: if he were tyed to any place, he were not God: but becauſe God is iudge, and not a meere man, we muſt not look for him from any place.

Origen alſo of this matter thus writeth: Non in aliquo quidem loco apparebit filius dei, cum venerit in gloria ſua, in altero non apparebit, &c. The ſonne of God ſhall not appeare in one place when he commeth in his glorie, and not in another: but as the lightning comming forth of the Eaſt, becauſe it filleth all places, appeareth in the Weſt; ſo when Chriſt commeth in his glorie, hee ſhall appeare euery where, he ſhall be euery where in all mens ſight, and they euery where in his ſight: tract.35. in Matth.

The Papiſts.

3. THe Sonne of man ſhall appeare in the day of iudgement, with the ſigne of the Croſſe 36.Error.
borne before him. Then ſhall the ſigne of the Sonne of man appeare in heauen, Matth.24.verſ.3. that is (ſay they) the ſigne of the Croſſe, Bellarm.de ſanct.lib.2.cap.28. Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

The Proteſtants,

Anſ. FIrſt, the ſigne of the ſonne of man in the heauens, is nothing elſe, but his conſpicuous and glorious appearing, who ſhall come in great glorie, as a ſigne in the heauens to be ſeene of all the world. It cannot ſignifie any ſuch viſible ſigne as they imagine: for Mar.13.26. Luk.21. ver.27. we reade thus: Then ſhall they ſee the Sonne of man. So then, the ſigne of the Sonne of man, is the Sonne himſelfe in his glorious appearing. And ſo Origen expoundeth: Sicut in diſpenſatione crucis ſole deficiente tenebræ factæ ſunt ſuper omnem terram, ſic & ſigno filij hominis apparente in cœlo deficiet ſolis lumen: Like as in the diſpenſation of the croſſe, the Sunne being eclipſed, darknes was ouer the face of all the earth: ſo the ſigne of the Sonne of man appearing, the Sunnes light ſhall faile, Tract.30.in Matth. It is the glorie of the Sonne himſelfe, and not of any other ſigne, which ſhall obſcure the Sunne light. Secondly, it is great preſumption, ſo boldly to affirme, that it ſhall be the ſigne of the croſſe, hauing no ſcripture for it. Other ſignes we finde, that Chriſt hath appeared with, as the ſigne of the rayne-bow, Apocal. 10. 1. with a two edged ſword, Apocal. 1. 16. with a booke in his hand, Apocal. 10. 2. Wee haue better reaſon, that Chriſt may appeare with thoſe ſignes, by the which he hath ſometime ſhewed himſelfe, than they haue for the ſigne of the croſſe.

3. It is more like, that Chriſt at his comming ſhould ſhew the markes and prints of the nayles and ſpeare in his bodie, than the ſigne of the croſſe: for thoſe were felt and ſeene in his bodie after his reſurrection, ſo was not the other. But it is a looſe coniecture, and a vaine ſurmiſe, without any ground of ſcripture, that the wounds are either now in heauen to be ſeene in the glorious bodie of Chriſt, or that they ſhall be beheld and looked vpon in the day of iudgement. The wicked in deede ſhall behold him, whom they pierced: but it followeth not thereupon that hee ſhould appeare as pierced. How is it poſſible, that either the bodie of Chriſt being perfectly glorified, ſhould ſtill retaine any ſpots or blemiſhes, or that they could be eſpied in ſo glorious a bodie, which with the brightnes thereof ſhall obſcure the Sunne?

Eſpencæus (a writer of their owne) ſaith, that whereas ſome aſcribe this ſong to Bernard: Mater oſtendit filio pectus & vbera; filius patri latus & vulnera: That in heauen Chriſts mother doth ſhew her ſonne her breaſt and pappes; Chriſt ſheweth his father his ſide and wounds, &c. that it is, contemplatio non tam ex ſcripturis, quam picturis deprompta, a contemplation taken not out of ſcripture, but out of ſome picture, de Chriſt. Mediator. c. 8.

Homil. de tempore 147. Auguſtine giueth this iudgement: Sic voluit reſurgere Chriſtus, ſic voluit quibuſdam dubitantibus exhibere in illa carne cicatrices vulneris vt ſanaret vulnus incredulitatis: So it pleaſed Chriſt to ariſe, and to ſhew in his fleſh vnto ſome that doubted, the ſkarres of his wounds, to heale and take away the wound of their incredulitie or vnbeleefe. This then being the onely cauſe, why Chriſt would at that time haue the prints and markes in his fleſh to bee ſeene, namely to confirme the faith of them which doubted; the cauſe being now ceaſed: for is it to be thought that there are any doubtfull perſons in heauen, which may be confirmed by beholding Chriſts wounds? or ſhall vnbeleeuers finde any reliefe in the day of iudgement? the cauſe (I ſay) being remoued, wee haue no warrant to thinke, that there are any ſuch ſkarres, either now to be ſeene in the glorious bodie of Chriſt, or which ſhall appeare in the day of iudgement. And ſeeing there is no ground for this opinion, the ſhewing forth alſo of the ſigne of the croſſe in that day, is alſo but a wandring and a fooliſh conceit.

The Papiſts.

37. Error. 4. SVch is their boldnes, that they dare aſſigne the very yeere, moneth, and day of Chriſts comming to iudgement: for they ſay, that Antichriſt ſhall raigne three yeeres and an halfe, and one moneth, 1290. dayes, and counting 45. dayes after that, they ſhall ſee Chriſt comming in the clowdes: Bleſſed is hee, ſaith Daniel, that waiteth and commeth to the 1335. dayes, Dan. 12. 12. Bellarm. de pontif. Rom. lib. 3. cap. 8.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. 1. THe prophecie of Daniel we haue alreadie ſhewed, Controuerſie 4. queſt. 9. to haue bin fulfilled before the firſt comming of Chriſt, in Antiochus that cruell tyrant & perſecutor of the people of God: how he ſhould cauſe the daily ſacrifice to ceaſe 1290. dayes, that is, three yeeres and ſeuen moneths, 2. Macchab. 11. 33. and that 45. dayes after, Antiochus being dead, the Church ſhould finde eaſe, 1. Macchab. 6. 16. Wherefore, ſeeing this prophecie hath once alreadie had his effect, it is not neceſſarie to looke for any other: as Auguſtine ſaith of another prophecie of Daniel: Quæ prophetia ſi tempore primi aduentus impleta eſt, non cogit intelligi, quod etiam de fine ſeculi implebitur: Which prophecie if it hath been fulfilled in or before the firſt comming of Chriſt, it neede not be vnderſtood of the latter. Epiſtol. 80.

2. This preſumption of theirs is flat oppoſite and contrarie to Scripture, which ſaith, That the houre and day of Chriſts comming is not knowne to the Angels, nor to the Sonne of man, but to the Father onely, Mark. 13. 33. How then dare they preſume beyond the knowledge of Angels?

I finde beſide, that two writers haue aduentured very farre in this matter to ſet downe the time and yeeres of Chriſts comming: one is Cuſanus among the Papiſts: the other is Iohn Napeir that learned gentleman of Scotland for the Proteſtants: the firſt thinketh, that the world ſhall end betweene the yeere 1700. and 1734. the other, that the finall conſummation is like to be accompliſhed betweene the yeere 1688. and anno 1700.

1 Cuſanus coniectures are theſe: 1. As Chriſt roſe again in the yeere 34. of his age: ſo the Church of God ſhall riſe at the latter day in the 34. Iubile, which make 1700. yeeres.

2 2. As after the firſt Adam, in the 34. Iubile there came a conſumption of ſinne by water: for the flood was anno 1656. after the creation of the world: ſo in the 34. Iubile after the ſecond Adam, ſhall there be a finall conſumption of ſinne by fire.

3 3. Dan. 12. 12. There ſhall be 1300. dayes, that is yeeres, from the going forth of the word, which was the firſt yeere of Cyrus, who was 559.yeeres before Chriſt: now ioyne both theſe together, and wee come to the yeere after Chriſt 741. and ſo the world ſhall end at the yeere 1700.or before 1700.

4. He taketh another coniecture out of Philo, that it was reuealed to Moſes, that at his death two times of the world were paſſed, from Adam to Noah the firſt, and from Noah to Moſes the ſecond; and two more were behinde, the firſt from Moſes to Chriſt, which contained 1700.yeeres, the ſecond from Chriſt to the end of the world of the like continuance: vid.Eſſ. in 2. *ad Timoth. pag.*80. 4

Contra. Some of theſe coniectures are vncertaine and conclude not, ſome are improper, ſome of them falſe: of the firſt ſort are the two firſt reaſons: 1. They are grounded onely vpon humane collections, not diuine conſtitutions; as to eſtimate the age of the world and continuance thereof by Iubilees: by Sabboths and Iubilees we may make reckoning and account of times, but preciſely thereby to calculate how long the world ſhall endure, is an humane preſumption without any diuine preſcription. 2. Hereby it would follow, that the world ſhould end before anno 1700. in the middeſt of the laſt Iubile, which is contrarie to his owne opinion: for Chriſt dyed at 33. yeere and an halfe: and the deluge came anno 1656. in the middeſt of the laſt Iubile.

Secondly, the third coniecture is improper, and hath beſide many vncertainties: 1. The Prophet ſpeaketh of 1335.dayes, not of 1300.onely. 2. The computation of theſe dayes muſt begin from the ſetting vp of the abomination of deſolation, Dan.12.12. which was in Antiochus Epiphanes raigne, who was ſome hundred yeeres after Cyrus. 3. I ſee not though all the yeeres be put together, how we come to anno 1700. but onely to the yeere 741. vnleſſe hee adde 1000.yeeres more, which cannot be concluded from that place of Daniel. 4. I haue ſhewed before that this prophecie of Daniel was once alreadie fulfilled in Antiochus raigne, and therefore a ſecond propheticall effect thereof is not to be expected.

Thirdly, the laſt coniecture is altogether vncertaine and falſe: for neither are there 1700.yeeres betweene Noah and Moſes death, nor yet 1000.yeere: and from Moſes to Chriſt, are not aboue yeeres 1400.

That learned and religious gentleman of Scotland doth ground his opinion vpon better coniectures, yet vncertaine: as firſt, hee alleageth the prophecie fathered vpon Elias, that the world ſhould continue 6000. yeeres: 2000. before the Law, 2000. vnder the Law, 2000. vnder the Meſſiah, which dayes for the elect ſake ſhall be ſhortened.

Secondly, he buildeth vpon that place of Daniel of 1335.dayes, taking ſo many yeeres, and beginning the account from Iulian the Apoſtata, who would haue made an vtter deſolation of Chriſtian religion, anno 365. which two numbers compounded make iuſt 1700.

Thirdly, he vrgeth that place, Apocal.14.20. how the blood ranne out of the wine preſſe 1600. furlongs: whereby muſt be vnderſtood ſo many yeeres: and the account to begin from anno 99. when this booke was written: ſo that this number will bring vs to anno 1699. Theſe with other moe coniectures, that learned gentleman hath, *propoſ.*14. in his booke vpon the Reuelation: which he vrgeth not as certaine demonſtrations, but as probable ſuppoſitions for his opinion: which I thinke hee propoundeth not, as neceſſarie to be followed, or certaine to be beleeued, but as probable to be receiued, and as coniecturall further to be weighed and conſidered.

For otherwiſe the Scripture teacheth, that the very Angels knowe not the houre or day, that is, the time of Chriſts comming, Mark.13.32. how then are we able to ſearch it out? And if Daniel confeſſeth his ignorance concerning the ſecret of times, Dan.12.8. I heard it, but I vnderſtood it not: it were great preſumption for vs to ſeeke to comprehend that, which ſo great a Prophet apprehended not.

This we may know and remember, that many attempting to calculate the time of Chriſts comming, haue been greatly deceiued, and ouertaken in their owne conceites.

*Lactantius lib.7.cap.*14. is of opinion, that the world ſhould laſt ſo many thouſand yeeres, as it was dayes in making: according to the blind tradition fathered vpon Elias. In the ſame error are Methodius, Euſebius, Beda.

Gregorie the great, *Homil.*1.in Euangel. thought that in his time the day of iudgement was at hand: and that the ſignes of Chriſts comming were accompliſhed.

In Iuſtinian the Emperours time, there was a generall rumour, Mundum cum prole periturum: That the world ſhould preſently periſh with her children. And while all men were in expectation hereof, a certaine Captaine of the Emperours called Mundus, which is the Latine worde for the world, being ſent into Italie againſt the Gothes, was ſlaine with his children, and ſo that blind prediction tooke effect: *ex Procop. & Leonard. Aretin. de bell. Gothor. lib.*1.

Bullinger reporteth, that certaine Anabaptiſts were ſo ſure that the end of the world was at hand, that they wilfully waſted their goods, thinking they had enough for the time the world ſhould laſt, and ſo fell into extreame pouertie: *cont. Anabap. lib.*2.*c.*6.

And of late ſome confidently had written of the yeere 88. as though the world ſhould then haue ended. But all theſe haue proued themſelues falſe prophets.

Wherefore in ſo great vncertainties, I thinke Auguſtines reſolution beſt, who thus writeth, epiſt. 78. De Saluatoris reditu, qui expectatur in fine, tempora dinumerare non audeo, nec aliquem prophetarum hac de re numerum annorum exiſtimo præſciuiſſe, &c. Of our Sauiours returne, which is expected in the end, I dare not number the times, neither do I thinke that any of the Prophets knew the number of the yeeres, but rather that to ſtand, which the Lord ſaith: It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the father hath kept in his owne power, Act. 1. 7.

In Pſalm. 36. concion. 1. Againe, Auguſtine ſaith, Vtiliter latere voluit Deus illum diem, vt ſemper ſit paratum cor ad expectandum, quòd eſſe venturum ſcit, & quando venturum ſit, neſcit: The Lord to great purpoſe would haue that day kept ſecret, that our heart ſhould bee in continuall expectation of that, which it is ſure, ſhall come, but knoweth not when it ſhall come. Quid ad te (ſaith he) quando veniet, ſic viue, quaſi hodie venturus ſit, & non timebis cum venerit? What is it to thee when he commeth? ſo liue as though he ſhould come to day, and thou ſhalt not be afraide when he commeth, ſerm. 6. & 17.

Thus haue I through the Lords gracious aſſiſtance, now at the length finiſhed and brought to an end this long and tedious worke, which I truſt ſhall not be ſo yrkſome to the Chriſtian reader, as it was weariſome and painfull to the fleſh, in the collecting and compiling thereof: and yet not ſo painfull, but that God hath made me able and willing to endure this, and greater paines, and that with comfort, for the good of his Church. As Auguſtine ſaith: Nullo modo oneroſi eſſe debent labores amantium, nam in eo quod amatur, aut non laboratur, aut ipſe labor amatur: The labours of louers are not grieuous, for in that which a man loueth and deſireth, either there is no labour at al, or elſe he loueth the very labour: de patient. cap. 22.

I excuſe not, whatſoeuer hath fallen out of my pen in this worke, if I haue failed any where in the manner of handling: But as for the matter handled therein, I truſt I haue throughout maintained the truth: in the proſecuting whereof, if ſometime I chaunce to miſſe, I ſay with Auguſtine: Nunquam errari tutius exiſtimo quàm cum in amore nimio veritatis, & reiectione nimia falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man can neuer more ſafely erre, than when he erreth in the too much loue of the truth, and the reiecting of falſehood.

I haue laboured in this worke, to ſet downe not onely the chiefe and principall, but euen the moſt, and in a maner all the controuerſies of religion, betweene vs and the Papiſts, maintained De fide & operibus cap. 27. this day: If any thing be miſſing, I ſay againe with Auguſtine, Tale eſſe arbitratus ſum cui mea reſponſio neceſſaria non fuiſſet, ſiue, quia ad rem de qua agitur, non pertinet, ſiue quod tam leue eſſet, vt à quolibet redargui facillimè poſſet: I thought it to be ſuch, as vnto the which mine anſwere was not needfull, either becauſe it was not pertinent to the matter in hand, or elſe of ſo ſmall moment, that euery man might eaſilie anſwere vnto it.

I haue no more to ſay but this: If thou findeſt thy ſelfe any thing profited or helped (good Chriſtian Reader) by theſe ſimple labours of mine, giue God the praiſe, and I will praiſe him with thee: but one thing let me pray thee: Quiſquis legis nihil reprehendas, niſi cum totum perlegeris, atque Auguſt. ita forte minus reprehendes: Whoſoeuer readeſt in this booke, reprehend nothing, before thou haſt read the whole, and ſo perhaps thou wilt be more ſparing in reprehending.

The Lord giue vs all grace to loue the trueth, that they which knowe it, may continue and goe forward therein, as he ſaith, Perſeuerate in eo, quod eſtis, proficite ad id, quod eritis: Perſeuere in that you are, and proceede to that, you ſhall be: And they which as yet know it not, may ſeeke for it: and we all may embrace the Counſell of the wiſe man, to buie the truth, but in no wiſe to ſell it: that is, by all poſſible meanes to labour for it: and hauing attained thereunto, for no earthly reſpect, for feare or fauour to depart from it. The Lord God, Ieſus Chriſt, Iehouah, Emmanuel, our bleſſed Sauiour and redeemer, who is the way, the truth, and the life, giue vs of his heauenly grace, that we may walke obediently in his wayes, and conſtantly profeſſe his truth, that in the end he may bring vs to eternall life. Amen.

Soli Deo immortali patri, Filio cum Spiritu ſancto,
ſit omnis honor & gloria.

AN ADDITION, OR SECOND PART OF THIS FIFT AND LAST CENTVRIE, CONSISTING OF TWO SEVERALL CONTROVERSIES: THE FIRST OF the Papal Iubile ſolemnized at Rome this preſent yeare, 1600. The ſecond of the Popes Indulgences and Iubile Pardons.

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIE OF THE Romane Iubile.

THis controuerſie is deuided into foure parts. Firſt, of the name and inſtitution of the Papall Iubile. Secondly, of the errors of time, in the Popes Iubile. Thirdly, of the end and purpoſe thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies and manner vſed in ſolemnizing this Iubile.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME AND INSTItution of the Popes Iubile.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, concerning the deriuation of the name, Bellarmine telleth vs, that this word Iubile is not deriued of the Hebrue יבל Iobel, which ſignifieth a trumpet: but of the word יבול Iebul, which ſignifieth the fruite of the earth, becauſe in this yeare of Iubile, the earth brought forth fruite of it owne accord without labour: lib.1.de Indulg.c.1. 1. Error.

The Proteſtants.

Contra.1. THe Hebrue word, that ſignifieth a horne or trumpet, hath the very ſame points or prickes, and the ſame and iuſt ſo many letters, as the word Iobel, that ſignifieth the Iubile: as may appeare by comparing, Leuit.25.10,11,12. with Ioſua 6.5. But the other word from whence he deriueth his Iubile, hath both more letters, and other pointes; ſo that the Iubile is more like to take denomination from (Iobell) that ſignifieth a trumpet.

Secondly, becauſe the yeare of Iubile was proclaimed with the ſound of a trumpet, Leuit.25.8. and therefore by the blowing of the ſeuen trumpets by the ſeuen Angels, Reuelat.8.8. ſome learned doe expound certaine great Iubilees of yeeres: euery blowing of the trumpet containing fiue Iubilees, that is 245. yeares: which make in all from Chriſt 1786. yeares: not that the world ſhall laſt ſo long; for thoſe dayes ſhall be ſhortened: ſo Iohn Napeire vpon the Reuelation, prop.5.10. Therefore it is moſt like that the Iubile being deſcribed, and proclaimed by the ſound of a Trumpet, hath his name from thence: and though in this place, not the word Iobell, but the Hebrue teruha be expreſſed to ſignifie a trumpet, Leuit.25.8. yet elſe where, we haue that word vſed for a trumpet, as I haue ſhewed before, Ioſua 6.5.

Thirdly, the common phraſe of ſpeech in Latine, which vſeth the words, iubilare, iubilatio, for reioycing, doth ſhew that the Iubile is deriued from (Iobel) which ſignifieth a trumpet, wherewith they vſed to reioyce: So Auguſtine vpon theſe words, Pſalm.98.4. Iubilate Deo, Sing vnto the Lord: Gaudium veſtrum exprimat iubilatio, ſi non poteſt locutio: Let your iubilation or reioycing, expreſſe your ioye, if your ſpeech or locution cannot.

Fourthly, S. Hierome alſo approoueth this interpretation, that the word Iubile ſignifieth a trumpet, or cornet: de interpretat. nominum.

The Papiſts.

SEcondly, the Pope borroweth the Iubile of the Iewes: as Clement.6. thus alleageth in his Bull: Quia annus quinquageſimus, in lege Moſaica, quam non venit dominus ſoluere, ſed ſpiritualiter adim- 2. Error.

plere; Iubilæus,&c. Becauſe the fiftith yeare in the law of Moſes, which the Lord came not to looſe but to fulfill was appointed for the Iubile: and becauſe the number of fiftie in the olde teſtament was honoured by the giuing of the law, in the new teſtament, by the ſending of the holy Ghoſt. extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.Clem.6.

The Proteſtants.

*Contra.*1. WHo taught them to burthen the Church of God with Iewiſh ceremonies: as beſides this of the Iubile, they take from them the ſprinkling of holy-water. decr par.3.diſt.4. c. 127. the conſecrating or hallowing of Churches, diſtinct. 1. ca. 11. Their annointing they haue from Moſes, decret, Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 15. c. 1. gloſſ. and many ſuch other rites and ceremonies they doe begge from the Iewes: contrarie to the Apoſtle who calleth ſuch, beggerly and impotent rudiments, Galat. 1 .9. Whereupon the Ebionite heretikes had their name, à paupertate, of their beggerlines, as their owne canons witneſſe, adding further: Hi ſemi Iudæi ſunt, qui ita Euangelium tenent, vt legem carnaliter ſeruent: Theſe are halfe Iewes, which ſo hold the goſpell, as that they carnally alſo obſerue the law: *cauſ.24.qu.3.can.*39. How much vnlike are the Papiſts, who in reſpect of the multitude of beggerly ceremonies, which they retayne may very well be called halfe Iewes, or halfe Ebionites.

2. Saint Paule ſaith, That Chriſt hath cancelled the handwriting of ordinances,&c.and faſtened them to the croſſe, Coloſſ.2.14. And ſpeaking of holy daies, new moones, and ſabboths, hee ſaith, they were but ſhadowes of things to come, but the bodie is in Chriſt. The Iubile then, which was the Sabboth of ſeuen yeeres, ſeuen times ſeuen yeeres being counted to a Iubile, was but a ſhadow: Chriſt then came to fulfill the law, the moral by reuiuing and eſtabliſhing it, the ceremoniall by accompliſhing and aboliſhing it: your owne law ſaith, Poſtquam vmbra legis euanuit, illuxit veritas Euangelij: After the ſhadow of the law had vaniſhed, the veritie of the Goſpell hath ſhined forth; *decret.Greg. tit.47.lib.3.c.*1. Innocent 3. And that the Iubile was but a ſhadow, Bellarmine confeſſeth: Iubilæus Hebræorum typus & figura Euangelij: The Iubile of the Hebrues was a type and figure of the goſpell: *de indulgent. lib.*1.*p.*5. then it followeth that the Iubile being a ſhadow is vaniſhed, and ought not to be reuiued.

3. As for the conſecration of the number of fiftie by the giuing of the law, and the comming of the holy Ghoſt, it maketh ſomewhat for the obſeruation of Pentecoſt, which is ſolemnized fiftie daies after Eaſter; but nothing at all for the Iubile which is vpon the fiftith yeare, no more then it ſerueth for the keeping of the fiftith weeke, or fiftith moneth.

4. If they will haue a Iubile, which is the Sabboth of ſeuen times ſeuen yeeres, they muſt alſo obſerue the yeeres of reſt euery ſeuenth yeere, according to the preſcript of Moſes law. Leuit. 25.4. And in the Iubile, the Land reſted, they did reape that which did grow of it ſelfe. Leuit.25.11. If the like bleſſing they can ſhew vpon the earth in their yeere of Iubile, they ſhould haue ſome warrant to keepe it: So then according to Saint Paules reaſon; He that is circumciſed (or keepeth any one part of the law) is bound to keepe the whole law, Galat.5.3. If they then tie themſelues to celebrate the yeere of Iubile, they are bound alſo to other points of the law: as Hierome well ſaith: Si carnalem interpretationem ſequamur, Iudaicis fabulis acquieſcendum ſit, vt rurſum ædificetur Ieruſalē, & hoſtiæ offerantur in templo: If we muſt follow a carnal interpretation, we muſt reſt in Iewiſh fables, Ieruſalem muſt be built againe, and ſacrifices offered in the temple. Hieron.tom.4.Marcella.

The Proteſtants.

Contra. BY this it appeareth that the Popes Iubile is but a late inuention: for if the firſt conſtitution of the Iubile made by Boniface had taken effect, they ſhould haue had but foure Iubilees in all: and according to the Bull of Clement the ſixt, there haue yet runne but onely eight Iubilees, ſo that this pontificall deuiſe is not yet aboue 300. yeere olde: 1. If then the Church of God was gouerned 1300. yeere without a Iubile, we muſt thinke it is not neceſſary now to be obſerued: for it is not like that Chriſt would ſo long a time haue kept from his Church, ſuch a neceſſarie inuention. 2. If neither the Apoſtles, nor holy martyrs, nor Doctors of the Church were inſpired, to finde out ſo neceſſary and profitable obſeruation, it was great preſumption in Boniface and Clement to ſeeme to ſee more into the vtilitie and profit of the Church, then ſo many apoſtolike and propheticall men, that went before them? 3. Wherfore as Ieremie ſaith, We ought rather to aske for the olde way, which is the good way, and walke therein: Ierem.6.16. This is too new an inuention, hauing no ground in Scripture, and being but lately taken vp, to winne any credit with the people of God. 4. Auguſtine therefore well ſaith, as he is alleaged alſo, *Diſtinct.*12.*c.*1. Omnia talia, quæ neque ſanctarum ſcripturarum authoritatibus continentur, nec in concilijs epiſcoporum ſtatuta inueniuntur, nec conſuetudine vniuerſalis eccleſiæ roborata ſunt, &c. ſine vlla dubitatione reſecanda exiſtimo; ſtimo: All ſuch things, which neither are contained in the authoritie of Scripture, nor eſtabliſhed in the councels of Biſhops, nor confirmed by the cuſtome of the vniuerſall Church, I iudge to be cut off, &c. But ſuch is this inuention of the Iubile, neither warranted by Scripture, nor concluded in any ancient councell, nor yet practiſed of the vniuerſall Church in time and place: for the former ages of the Church, knew it not, and many Churches to this day receiue it not, and therefore by Auguſtines ſentence, it ought to be abrogated.

*Contra.*1. WE may now truly ſay of thoſe patrons of ſuperſtition, and their councels, as the Prophet ſaith of Pharaoh his counſellers: Errant in opere, vt ebrius in vomitu: They do erre in euery worke, as a drunken man in his vomite: Iſay. 19.14. Their reſtleſſe and brainſicke inuentions are neuer ſetled: and as Origen well ſaith: Vt errantium à via multa differentia ſunt,&c. As when men erre from the high way, they goe into many by-paths. tract. 27. in Matth. So falleth it out heere, that theſe ſwaruing from the truth, doe euery one follow his owne way, and cannot agree together. 2. It is pretie ſport to ſee how the Popes doe curſe one another for altering their predeceſſors decrees: firſt Boniface the eight, hauing erected a Iubile euery 100. yeere, doth ſhut vp his Bull thus: Nulli hominum liceat hanc paginam noſtræ conſtitutionis &c. infringere, ſiquis attentare præſumpſerit indignationem omnipotentis Dei,&c. nouerit ſe incurſurum: Let no man dare to infringe this Bull of our conſtitution, which if he preſume to attempt, let him know he ſhall incurre the indignation of Almightie God, and of Peter and Paul, &c. *extrau. commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.*1. Then commeth Clemens the ſixt, and infringeth this Conſtitution, and ſo ſtandeth vnder the Pope his predeceſſors curſe: and he reduceth the Iubile to 50. yeeres, impoſing the very ſame curſe and in the ſame words vpon the violators of his decree. *ibid.c.*2. After him followeth Sixtus the fourth, who bringeth the Iubile to 25. yeeres, and ſo incurreth the former curſe annexed to Clemens the ſixt his conſtitution. *ibid.c.*4.

Thus theſe fellowes, that would terrifie all the world with their curſes, yet take them to be but ſcarebugges themſelues. Or if they thinke the Popes curſe to be any thing worth, how can they bleſſe others, that ſtand accurſed themſelues?

THE SECOND PART, OF THE ERRORS of time in the Popes Iubile.

The Papiſts.

1. THey begin their account of the Iubile à feſto natiuitatis, from the feaſt of the Natiuitie, *Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.1.Bonif.*8. 6.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. TO reckon the yeares of Lord, from the natiuitie of Chriſt, and not from his conception. 1. is contrarie to their owne doctrine: for the Rhemiſts confeſſe, That ſtraight vpon Chriſts deſcending from heauen, it was the dutie of Angels to worſhip him: annot. in 2. Hebr. ſect.2. Bellarm. ſuper Chriſtum hominem nondum natum, ſed conceptum, ſpiritus ſanctus deſcendit: Vpon the man Chriſt, not yet borne but conceiued, the holy Ghoſt did deſcend: de Chriſt. anima. lib. 4. *c.*2. If Chriſt then deſcended from heauen in his conception, was then made man, and adored of Angels, what reaſon is there, why the yeers of the Lord ſhould not be accounted from that inſtant? 2. It is contrarie to their owne practiſe: for the Popes vſe to date their Buls: Anno incarnationis, &c. the yeere of the incarnation of our Lord, *Paul.*2.*extrau.commun.lib.*5.*tit.*9.*c.*3. Sixtus. 4. ibid. But Chriſtes incarnation began not onely in his natiuitie, but from his firſt conception. 3. It is contrarie to the Scriptures, Heb. 1. 6. When he bringeth in his firſt begotten ſonne into the world, hee ſaith, let all the Angels worſhippe him: If Chriſt muſt be worſhipped from his firſt comming into the world, which was in his conception, then frō thence the account of time muſt begin, which is a part of external honor & worſhip due vnto him. 4. Iohn Baptiſt being in his mothers wombe three moneths before he was borne, Luk.1.56. ſprang at the ſalutation of Mary, and ſo adored Chriſt, being but then conceaued in his mothers wombe by the holie Ghoſt: in like manner ought we to adore the conception of Chriſt, and not to exclude it out of the reckoning. 5. Iob curſeth the night, wherein he was conceaued, that it be not ioyned to the dayes of the yeere, nor come into the count of the moneths, Iob.3.6. but the time of Chriſts conception is bleſſed, and therefore it ought to come into the account of the moneths. Wherfore the yeere of the Lord is rather to begin from his conception, than from his natiuitie.

7.Error. Secondly, it is another of their errors in their account of time, that whereas the conception of Chriſt was three quarters of a yeere preceding his birth: yet they accounting from the Natiuitie, doe write the ſame yeere of the Lord, a whole quarter before vs: as this preſent yeere they write 1600. at the natiuity laſt, & we begin the ſame yeere at the Annuntiation laſt: ſo that they account ſooner by a yeere than they ſhould: for it being but 1600. from the conception of Chriſt the 25. of March laſt, according to the iuſt computation of the Church of England: it can be but from his natiuitie 1600. at the feaſt of the birth of Chriſt next enſuing. This is a groſſe & an apparant error.

8.Error. Thirdly, the natiuitie of Chriſt did fall neither in a Sabbaticall yeere, nor yet in the yeere of Iubile: for it was the third yeere of the Sabboth of yeeres, and almoſt 20. yeeres from the yeere of Iubile, which was in the yeere of the world 3910. and Chriſt was borne about the yeere 3930. Seeing then Chriſt was not borne in a yeere of Iubile, from thence reckoning by euen fifties, this preſent 1600. cannot be a yeere of Iubile: See Maſter Broughtons Concent of Scripture of this matter, whoſe labours in this kinde haue been moſt painfull, learned and profitable.

9.Error. Fourthly, though it ſhould be granted, that the natiuitie of Chriſt was incident into a yeere of Iubile: yet they miſſe againe, in the obſeruing the time of the yeere for Chriſts birth, and in taking the beginning of their Iubile: for Moſes Iubile, which they take vpon them to imitate, began in the tenth day of the ſeauenth moneth, Leuitic.25.9. If they anſwere, that they began their Iubile from the time that Chriſt was borne in: the learned doe thinke, that hee was borne in the moneth anſwering to our September: and that for theſe reaſons:

1 Firſt, it is euident, that betweene the conception of Iohn, and the conception of Chriſt, there were ſixe moneths, Luk.1.26. In the ſixt moneth the Angel Gabriel was ſent, &c. But Iohn was conceaued in the fourth moneth, which anſwereth to our Iune: for in that moneth Zacharie ſerued, being of the courſe of Abia, which was the eight courſe, 1.Chron.24.10. (two of thoſe courſes ſeruing euery moneth) which courſes began at the firſt moneth, Niſan anſwering to our March, the beginning of moneths, Exod.12.2. Iohn then being conceaued in Iune, his birth muſt fall out 9. moneths after about March: & ſo conſequently our Sauiour being conceaued 6. moneths after Iohn, muſt be borne about September following.

2 2. Againe, Chriſt preached three yeeres and an halfe: for hee dyed, according to Daniels prophecie, in the middeſt of a propheticall weeke of yeeres, Dan.9.27. which is three yeeres and an halfe: and when hee began to preach, hee was iuſt 30. yeere old, Luk.3.23. from the time then of Chriſts birth, to the time of his death, there muſt bee halfe a yeere: So it doth neceſſarily follow, that Chriſt dying in the ſpring, muſt be borne in the Autumne.

3 3. They ſeeing their error, haue of late ſomewhat reformed their Calendar, bringing backe the feaſt of the Natiuitie tenne dayes from the 25. of December to the 15. day: but yet they haue miſſed the marke: for whereas it is found that the courſe of yeeres is altered from the ancient Iulian Calendar, by reaſon that for euery 130. yeeres a day is loſt, in reſpect of certaine minutes and ſeconds encreaſing euery yeere, beſide the 6. od houres, which are recompenſed euery leape yeere; one *Aloyſius Lilius, ann.*82. in Gregorie the 13. his time, was authorized to reforme the Calendar: but being limited by the Papiſticall Clergie not to goe beyond the Nicen Synode, he was forced there to begin, which was from anno 328. and from thence counting a day for 130. yeeres, hee brought backe the Calendar onely tenne dayes, whereas it was ſlipt thirteene dayes from the time of Iulius Caſar, who liued about 45. yeeres before Chriſt. Thus yet are they in error concerning the iuſt computation of time.

4. It will be here obiected, that though the Church of Rome hath not yet perfectly reformed their Calendar, yet they come neerer to the ancient Iulian computation, than the Church of England, that hath admitted yet no reformation of the Calendar. I anſwere: firſt, concerning the celebration of the natiuitie of Chriſt, to vs it is no great matter, though wee hit not the very ſame ſeaſon wherein hee was borne: for his birth day may bee as thankfully celebrated, as it is now kept, as if the very point of time were exactly calculated: wee doe not ſo much reſpect the time, as the myſterie remembred therein: But to them it is very materiall to obſerue the very preciſe time, becauſe they begin their Iubile from thence; wherein, as I haue ſhewed they doe greatly miſſe. Secondly, yet we are not againſt a reformation of the Calendar, if it ſo ſeemed good to Chriſtian Princes, which may much better be performed, than they haue done it: who by altering and chaunging the ancient Feſtiuals, and Faire and Market dayes, making them to come tenne dayes ſooner, haue brought a great confuſion and diſturbance into many common-weales More peaceable and ſafe way is found out, that if for the ſpace of 56. yeeres following, there ſhould be no leape yeere at all, wherein a day is added more, by this meanes foureteene dayes being cut off, for euery leape yeere one: by this meanes the computation would be reſtored to the ancient reckoning of the Iulian Calendar: Robert. Pont. propoſ.5.

5. It will be further obiected concerning the ſeaſon of Chriſts birth, that the fathers held, that he was borne when the dayes began to encreaſe, and therefore not in the Autumne, when they are ſtill in decreaſing: as Auguſtine ſeemeth ſo to allude in theſe words of Iohn Baptiſt: Illum oportet creſcere, &c. He muſt encreaſe, but I muſt decreaſe, Ioh. 3.30. Ille natus, cum dies minuerentur, iſte, cum creſcere inciperent, &c. He was borne, when the daies were leſſoned, Chriſt, when they were encreaſing, lib. 83. queſtion. qu. 58.

Anſ. 1. Any man may ſee that this collection is rather wittie than waightie, pretie rather, than pithie: as in the ſame place the author alleaged (whoſoeuer it was) alludeth further thus: Iohn decreaſed, quia capite minuitur, becauſe he was cut ſhorter by the head: Chriſt encreaſed, quia in crucem tollitur, becauſe he was lift vp to the croſſe, and ſo made higher.

2. We may well thinke, that in Auguſtines time, which was about 400. yeere after Chriſt, they might well be ignorant of the time of Chriſts birth, ſeeing almoſt 100. yeere before in the Nicen Synode, and long before that, there was ſuch ſtrife about the celebration of the Paſch, ſome affirming that the Apoſtles kept it one way, ſome another: the Eaſt Church pretending a tradition from Saint Iohn, to hold the Paſch the 14. day of the firſt moneth: the Weſt following a direction from Saint Peter, to ſolemnize it the firſt Lordes day after the firſt Moone following the Equinoctium.

3. Neither are all the fathers of this minde, that Chriſt was borne in the dayes encreaſing by the ordinarie courſe of the Sunne: Saint Ambroſe hath this ſuppoſition: Ex eo factum puto, vt nox decreſceret, &c. quia ſol præter conſuetudinem in hac feſtiuitate matutinus illuxit: Hence it was that the night was leſſened, becauſe the Sunne, beſide his vſuall courſe and cuſtome, did ſhine in the morning, becauſe of this feſtiuall: for if at Ioſua his prayer the Sunne ſtood ſtill in the day, cur non ad Ieſus natiuitatem feſtiuus promoueret à nocte: much more becauſe of Chriſts natiuitie, did he ſooner goe forward from the night, ſerm. 16. That the day then encreaſed, and the night decreaſed, when Chriſt was borne, Ambroſe thinketh it was extraordinarie, beſide the vſuall courſe of the yeere at that time.

Fiftly, ſeeing it is euident, that Chriſt dyed in a yeere of Iubile, it being the 28. Iubile in number, 10. Error.
as is well obſerued in that learned Concent of Scripture. And the Prophet Daniel ſheweth, that all the Sabbaticall yeeres determined at the death of Chriſt, Dan. 9.27. in whom the true Iubile was accompliſhed, well called by the Septuagint, ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, the yeere of remiſſion, Leuitic. 25.8. This appeareth then to be another great error in the Romane Iubile, becauſe they doe count from the yeere of Chriſts natiuitie, which was no yeere of Iubile, and not from the yeere of his death, which was the true Iubile indeede, and concurring with Moſes Iubile: So the Prophet Eſay ſaith, prophecying of Chriſt, Eſai. 49.8. In an acceptable time haue I heard thee, and in the day of ſaluation I haue helped thee: This ἡμέρα σωτηρίας, day of ſaluation, is the ſame which the Septuagint tranſlate ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, the yeere of remiſſion, Leuitic. 25.8. which was the yeere of Iubile.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE END AND purpoſe of the Papall Iubile.

Concerning the intent, ſcope and end of this Popiſh deuiſe, we finde it to be firſt blaſphemous; ſecondly, ſacrilegious: thirdly, ſuperfluous: fourthly, iniurious: fiftly, couetous.

The Papiſts.

First, their blaſphemie appeareth in this, that the Pope taketh vpon him to giue full remiſſion 11. Error.
of all ſins to them, that viſite Rome in the yeere of Iubile perſonally: for theſe are the words of Clement. 6. his Bull: Qui baſilicas Apoſtolorum, &c. perſonaliter viſitarent, ſi verè pœnitentes & confeſſi fuerint, ſuorum omnium pleniſſimam obtinerent veniam peccatorum: They which perſonally viſite the Apoſtles Churches Peter and Paul at Rome, if they be truly penitent, and confeſſed, ſhould obtaine moſt full remiſſion of all their ſinnes : Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.6.

The Proteſtants.

*Contr.*1. THus they blaſphemouſly aſcribe full remiſſion of ſins to the viſiting of Rome, which is but a ſuperſtitious deuice of their owne, whereas the ſcripture ſaith, 1.Ioh.1.7. The blood of Ieſus Chriſt purgeth vs from all ſinne : But the blood or bodie of Paul or Peter, are not the blood of Chriſt, neither to viſite Rome in perſon, is not the blood of Chriſt : therefore it is blaſphemie contrarie to the Scripture to attribute remiſſion of ſinnes, to any other thing, than to the blood of Chriſt.

2. But they imagine, that this helpeth the matter, becauſe this clauſe is inſerted, if they be truly penitent,&c.

Anſw. 1. If then it be repentance that giueth remiſſion of ſinnes, what neede they perſonally viſite Rome? a man may repent as well at home, as at Rome, nay much better : for their licentious life there and euill example will hinder repentance rather, than prouoke vnto it. 2. True repentance they require not, but popiſh penance, which they make a ſatisfaction for ſinne, which ſhall neuer finde remiſſion of ſinne. 3. But if they had, or preſcribed true repentance indeede, yet is it not a cauſe of forgiuenes of ſinne, but a conſequence onely thereof, and aſſurance of it to our owne ſoules, and a manifeſtation that wee are cleere before God : As Saint Paul ſaith, hauing deſcribed their true repentance and godly ſorrow, their care, feare, deſire, puniſhment,&c. In omnibus vos exhibuiſtis puros,&c. In all things ye haue ſhewed your ſelues pure in this matter. Their outward repentance did ſhew the inward cleering of their conſcience by faith before God.

3. Laſtly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Rom.3.24. Ye are iuſtified freelie : Quia nihil operantes, neque vicem reddentes, ſola fide iuſtificati ſunt dono dei: Becauſe they working nothing, nor rendring the like, are iuſtified by onely faith through the gift of God, in 3.cap.ad Roman. If by neither working nor rendring any thing,&c. then not by viſiting Rome, or going to celebrate the yeere of Iubile ſhall a man finde remiſſion of ſinnes, but by faith onely.

The Papiſts.

12. Error. SEcondly, the popiſh Iubile is inſtituted to the honour of Peter and Paul : as it is extant in the Bull of Boniface 8. Vt beatiſſimi Petrus & Paulus amplius honorentur : That the bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul be more honoured, Extrau.tit.9.c.1. And in the Bull of Clemens.6.ibid.c.2. Pro ipſorum memoria crebrius recolenda, & reuerentia à cunctis Chriſti fidelibus eis deuotius adhibenda: For the more often celebrating of their memorie, and the more deuotion of all the faithfull of Chriſt to be giuen vnto them.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, this is great ſacrilege, to giue that honour to the Apoſtles, who are but Chriſts ſeruants, which is due vnto the Lord and maſter himſelfe : Iſai.42.8. The Lord ſaith, My glorie will I not giue to another : The ſame is the deſire alſo of the Saints, not vnto vs, not vnto vs Lord, but vnto thy name giue the praiſe, Pſal.115.1.

2. The Iubile was at the firſt inſtitution conſecrated onely as holy vnto God: for as the ſeuenth Sabbaticall yeere was holy vnto God, and is called the Lords Sabboth, Leuit.25.4. ſo ſeauen times ſeauen yeere, which was the yeere of Iubile, was holy to God, Leuit.25.12. it ſhall be holy to you: that is, in reſpect of your vſe, but holy to the honour of God. It is ſacrilege then to robbe God of his honour, and to conſecrate a Iubile vnto men.

3. Saint Hierome ſaith : Nos non dico martyrum reliquias ſed ne ſolem quidem aut lunam, non angelos, archangelos, non Seraphim, Cherubim, & omne nomen, quod nominatur in præſenti ſæculo & futuro, colimus, & adoramus, ne ſeruiamus creaturæ potius, quam creatori, qui eſt benedictus in ſecula : We doe not onely not worſhip and adore the reliques of Martyrs, but not the Sunne or Moone, not Angels, Archangels, Seraphim, Cherubim, or any name named in this world or the world to come, leſt we ſhould ſerue the creature, rather than the creator. And againe, Quis ô inſanum caput aliquando martyres adorauit, quis hominem putauit deum ? Who, ô mad braine, euer adored the Martyrs, or tooke man to be God ? ad Riparium aduerſ. Vigilantium. Wherefore by Hieromes ſentence all reuerence and diuine adoration is to be giuen onely to the creator, the creature hath no part therein.

4. But what kinde of honour is due vnto Saints, is very well expreſſed, Synod. Moguntin.c.45. Sancti qui vitæ huius curſum beato fine clauſerunt,&c. non eo qui vero deo debetur, ſed eo ſocietatis & dilectionis cultu quo in hac vita ſancti homines, à nobis coli poſſunt: The Saints, which haue happily ended this life, may be worſhipped of vs, not with that worſhip which is only due vnto God, but by that worſhip of fellowſhip and loue, by the which holy men may be worſhipped of vs in this life,&c. But Saint Peter and Saint Paul, while they liued, would haue been aſhamed to haue had Temples, dayes, Iubile yeeres to be conſecrate to their name and memorie : Ergo, this honour is not due vnto them, now they are dead.

13.Error. Thirdly,theſe are the words of the Bull of Sixtus 4.Verum quia poſtmodum, tam nos, quam idem Paulus prædeceſſor noſter,animarum ſaluti fidelium intenti,&c. deuotarum perſonarum pulſati precibus diuerſas indulgentias & peccatorum remiſſiones plenarias nonnullis eccleſijs, monaſterijs & pijs locis duximus concedēdas : Becauſe as well we,as our predeceſſor Paulus,being intent vpon the ſaluation of mens ſoules,moued thereunto by the prayers of deuoute perſons,haue thought good to graunt indulgences,and plenarie remiſſions of ſinnes to certaine Churches, Monaſteries, and godly places: Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.4.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. First,hence I inferre,that the Papall inſtitution of Iubile is ſuperfluous,becauſe the Pope can giue plenarie remiſſion and full indulgence without a yeer of Iubile,& to other places than Rome.Secondly,if he can do it,& wil not,he is an enemie to the ſaluation of mens ſoules: for as it is in the Bull alleaged before : hauing an intent to the ſaluation of mens ſoules, hee graunted plenarie indulgences to diuers places : then to denie to giue ſuch indulgences is to neglect and hinder the ſaluation of mens ſoules. Thirdly, it was appointed by the law of Moſes, that land, which was ſold and could not be redeemed, ſhould come out in the yeere of Iubile, Leuit.25.28. that bond ſeruants ſhould be ſet free in the yeere of Iubile,*ibid.verſ.*40. If this plenarie freedome and full reſtitution could haue been obtained before,then the yeere of Iubile had been needleſſe: by the ſame reaſon the Popes Iubile is ſuperfluous,ſeeing without it,plenarie indulgence,if he liſt, may be had. Fourthly,therefore Saint Hierome ſaith well:Non audeo dei omnipotentiam anguſto fine concludere & coarctare paruo terræ loco,quem non capit cœlum;ſinguli quique credentium non locorum diuerſitatibus,ſed merito fidei ponderantur: I dare not ſhut vp Gods omnipotencie in a ſmall roome,or include him in a little place, whom heauen cannot receiue : euery beleeuer,not by diuerſitie of place,but excellencie of faith is to bee meaſured, epiſt.ad Paulinum. It is not then neceſſarie to viſite Rome in the yeere of Iubile, if Chriſt be preſent euery where by faith to true beleeuers.

The Papiſts.

14. Error. Fourthly,this Papall indiction and promulgation of the Iubile is iniurious : for in the Bull of indulgence,the libertie of the Iubile is graunted to thoſe onely, which doe either perſonally viſite the Apoſtles Churches in Rome,or are impediti in itinere, hindred in their iourney,or qui in via vel in vrbe deceſſerint,which are dead in the way,or in the citie : Clemens 6.Extrau.vbi ſupra.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. First,if none be prouided for in the Bull of Iubile but they that came thither, or would come,and are hindred,or dye in their iourney ; what ſhall become of thoſe that neither come thither,nor yet purpoſe it, will ye make them caſtawayes? Alacke then for vs poore ſoules of England,what ſhall we doe? Is the holie father ſo mercileſſe, that hee will ſend vs all to Purgatorie, becauſe we will not come to Rome to haue purſes picked,I would ſay purged? Secondly,if plenarie indulgence be onely had in the yeere of Iubile,in what caſe are they that dye before the Iubile commeth? doe they dye in their ſinnes? how is not then this conſtitution moſt iniurious to many poore ſoules, that neuer offended the Pope holy father? Thirdly, but Saint Peter (the Popes maſter,though he be an vntoward ſcholler, that will follow his maſter neuer a whit) doth put vs in better comfort, that in euery nation,he that feareth God and worketh righteouſnes, is accepted with God, Act.10.35.whether he were at Rome,or not,whether he liue to the yeere of Iubile or not. Fourthly, Saint Hierome alſo ſaith : Nequicquam fidei tuæ deeſſe putes quia Hieroſolymam non vidiſti;nec nos idcirco meliores exiſtimes,quòd huius loci habitaculo fruimur : Thinke not that any thing is wanting to your faith,that you haue not ſeene Ieruſalem,or that we are any thing better, becauſe we are there,epiſt.ad Paulin. I think Rome is no more priuiledged than Ieruſalem: a mans faith may be ſufficient to ſaue him,though he haue ſeene neither,nor yet deſired to ſee or viſite them.

The Papiſts.

15.Error. Fiftly,it is alſo euident, that the popiſh inſtitution of the Iubile was rather for lucre of ſiluer, than of ſoules ; that the end thereof is rather couetous,than religious ; of greedines more than godlines.

The Proteſtants.

First, 1. To what end elſe was their Iubile brought from 100.yeeres to 50.from 50.to 25. from 25.to 10. as I haue before ſhewed, but onely becauſe they found the Iubile profitable, and ſought their owne gaine? 2. What elſe moued Sixtus 4. to reuerſe diuers graunts of plenarie indulgence,but as it is expreſſed in the Bull, Ne populorum concurſus ad eccleſias ante dictas retardari aut ipſius anni Iubilæi celebritas minui, vel intermitti poſſet,&c. Leaſt the concourſe of people to the ſaid Churches might be hindred, or the celebritie of the Iubile yeere empayred or intermitted, &c. and by this meanes their gaine ſhould decreaſe,and their aduantage be diminiſhed : for that is the cauſe indeede,if they would ſpeake out,and not diſſemble the matter. 3. When as Clemens the 6. firſt reduced the Iubile to fiftie yeeres, anno 1350. there were numbred euery day of ſtraungers going and comming to Rome fiue thouſand, and a thouſand poore people wayting daily at the Popes pallace for their pardons: Can it be thought otherwiſe but this was very beneficiall to the Pope? Calixtus the 3. is found to haue left an hundred and fifteene thouſand ducates to his ſucceſſor, that hee had ſcraped together by Pardons and Indulgences, ex Balao, &c. Let all men now iudge, what maketh the Pope ſo earneſt in maintaining his Iubile. 4. I conclude then with Hierome, whoſe ſaying may very fitly be applied to the Romane Clergie: Nunc ſub religionis titulo exercentur iniuſta compendia, & honor nominis Chriſtiani fraudem magis facit, quam patitur: plenis ſacculis morimur diuites qui quaſi pauperes viximus: Now vnder pretence of religion vniuſt gaine is exacted, and the honor of Chriſts name doth offer deceit rather, than ſuffer it, and many dye with full coffers, that while they liued made profeſſion of pouertie, Hier. ad Ruſticum.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE MANNER of ſolemnizing the Popiſh Iubile.

IN this laſt and fourth part I doe obſerue theſe particular errors: that the manner it ſelfe obſerued in the Romane Iubile, is firſt ſuperſtitious: ſecondly, idolatrous: thirdly, ambitious: fourthly, ſcandalous: fiftly, ridiculous.

The Papiſts.

16. Error. FIrſt, their ſuperſtition herein appeareth, in that they enioyne men in the yeere of Iubile to come onely to Rome to viſite the Churches of Peter and Paul, and of Saint Mary the greater, and the Laterane Church, which Conſtantine did erect to the honor of our Sauiour, being baptized by Silueſter, and ſo healed of his leproſie: which Silueſter alſo did conſecrate with a new kinde of Chriſme: Clemens 6. Extrau. vbi ſupra.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, Pope Clement by his leaue coucheth here three great vntruths together: firſt, that Conſtantine was baptized by Silueſter: ſecondly, at Rome: thirdly, in the beginning of his Empire, while Silueſter was yet liuing: whereas hee was baptized firſt by Euſebius: ſecondly, at Nicomedia: thirdly, in the 31. yeere of his raigne, Silueſter being dead long before: Euſeb. lib. 4. de vit. Conſtant. Ruffin. lib. 2. c. 11.

Secondly, that Silueſter did nouo Chriſmationis genere, &c. with a new kinde of Chriſme dedicate the Laterane Church, it alſo ſauoureth. 1. It could not be a new kind of Chriſme, ſeeing your forged Fabian, epiſt. 2. before this maketh mention of Chriſme, and telleth vs, (if wee will credit him vpon his word) that Ieſus poſtquam cænauit, &c. diſcipulos docuit chriſma conficere, That Chriſt after he had ſupped, taught his Apoſtles to make Chriſme. 2. There was no ſuch Chriſme knowne in Silueſters time, nor long after: for Ambroſe vpon theſe words, 2. Cor. 1. 19. God hath annoynted vs, doth thus interprete: Vnxit nos deus, id eſt, dedit regiam honorificentiam, ſicut dicit Petrus: God hath annoynted vs, that is, giuen vs a kingly honor, as Peter ſaith, &c. He vnderſtandeth a ſpirituall annoynting: if he had knowne any other kinde of Chriſme or annoynting, he had occaſion here offered to ſpeake of it.

Thirdly, Rome is no more priuiledged than Ieruſalem, nor Italy than Iudea: but of theſe Chriſt ſaith, Ioh. 4. 21. that the true worſhippers of God ſhall neither worſhip him at Ieruſalem, nor in that mountaine, &c. If it be not neceſſarie to goe to Ieruſalem to worſhip, neither is it to viſite Rome. And Moſes ſaith, Deut. 30. 13. Neither is it beyond the ſea, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, who ſhall goe ouer the ſea for vs to bring it to vs? We neede not then goe ouer the ſea to Rome to ſeeke Chriſt.

Fourthly, Hierome well ſaith: Illa expetenda eſt ciuitas, non quæ occidit prophetas, & Chriſti ſanguinem fudit, ſed quam matrem ſanctorum Apoſtolus clamitat: That citie is to bee deſired, not which killed the Prophets, and ſhed Chriſts blood, but which the Apoſtle calleth the mother of the faithfull: epiſt. ad Paulin. But Rome as well as Ieruſalem hath killed the Prophets and Apoſtles. And againe, Hierome in the ſame place to the ſame purpoſe alleageth theſe Scriptures: The ſpirit bloweth where it liſteth, Ioh. 3. 8. The earth is the Lords, and the fulnes thereof, Pſal. 24. 1. Deſijt tantum notus eſſe in Iudæa deus, in omnem terram exiuit ſonus Apoſtolorum: God hath ceaſed onely to be knowne in Iudea, the ſound of the Apoſtles is gone forth into all lands. Laſtly, concerning the citie of Rome, Hierome doubteth not in his time to call it Babylon: Gaudeo cum in Babylone inuenitur Daniel, &c. I am glad that in Babylon is found Daniel, Ananias, Azarias, Miſael. tom. 4. epiſt. ad Principiam. Wherefore ſeeing the Lord biddeth vs come forth of Babylon, Reuelat. 18. 4. what reaſon haue Chriſtians to aſcend to worſhip in Babylon?

The Papiſts.

17. Error. SEcondly, their idolatrie is manifeſt, where the Bull maketh mention of the image of Chriſt in the Church of Laterane, quæ toti populo deuotius veneranda, which is deuoutly of all the people to be worſhipped: Clemens 6. Extrau. as before.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, it is not ſafe nor lawfull to haue the image of Chriſt, as may appeare by theſe reaſons, firſt the ſeuenth councell of Conſtantinople thus reaſoned vpon theſe words of Chriſt, this doe in remembrance of me: Ecce viuificantis illius corporis imaginem totam, panis ſubſtantiam: Behold the whole image of that quickening bodie, the ſubſtance of bread. *ex ſynod. Nicen.2. action.6.tom.*3.

2. Epiphanius comming into a Church at Anablatha, and ſeeing the picture of Chriſt hanging in a cloth thus reporteth: Cum hoc vidiſſem in eccleſia Chriſti contra authoritatem ſcripturarum, hominis pendere imaginem, ſcidi illud: When I ſaw in the Church of Chriſt againſt the authoritie of ſcriptures a mans picture hanging, I cut it in peeces, and aduiſed rather to wrap a dead corſe in it: epiſt.ad Ioann. Hieroſolym. And he addeth further: Præcipias in eccleſia Chriſti huiuſmodi vela, quæ contra religionē noſtram veniunt, non appendi: Command that ſuch painted clothes, which are againſt our religion, be not hanged vp.

3. Saint Ambroſe ſaith: In eccleſia vnam imaginem noui, hoc eſt, imaginem Dei inuiſibilis, &c. In the Church I know one onely image, that is, the image of God inuiſible, of the which the Lord ſaid, Let vs make man according to our image. Gen.1.26. that image whereof it is written: Chriſt is the ingrauen image of his perſon: Hebr. 1.3. orat.in Auxent. Then no viſible image of God or Chriſt is to be retained.

Secondly, if it be not lawfull to haue the image of Chriſt, much more vnlawfull is it to worſhip or adore it: 1. it is contrarie to the ſecond commaundement to make the likenes or image of any thing to fall downe and worſhip it. 2. The Angell, who is to be preferred before a dead image, would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him, but bid him worſhip God. Reuel.22.9. 3. We haue the decree of a generall councell againſt the adoration of images, Conſtantinop.7.ex Nicen.2.action.6. tom.6. Qui imaginem ab hoc die ſibi auſus fuerit parare, vel adorare in eccleſia, &c. He that from henceforth dare prepare to himſelfe or adore an image in the Church, if a Cleargie man, let him be depoſed; if a lay man, let him be accurſed. See more of both theſe queſtions. *contro.9.qu.5. artic.*2.3.

The Papiſts

3. THis deuiſe of the Popes Iubile ſauoureth of ambition, in that he arrogateth this power in proclaiming the Iubile, and diſpenſing indulgences as proper to himſelfe: for this is their ſtile: Statuentes de fratrum conſilio & apoſtolicæ plenitudine poteſtatis, &c. Ordaining by the aduiſe of our brethren (the Cardinals) and the fulnes of our Apoſtolike power: And againe: Quem quidem theſaurum per Petrum cœli clauigerum eiuſque ſucceſſores in terris vicarios commiſit, &c. Which treaſure of the Church, Chriſt hath committed to be diſpenſed by Peter the key-bearer of heauen, and his ſucceſſors his vicars in earth: Clemens 6.extrau.vbi ſuprà. 18.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. 1. THe Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt onely hath the key of Dauid, which openeth, and no man ſhutteth, Apoc.3.7. The adminiſtration & diſpenſation of the keyes is no more committed to Peter, then to the reſt: for Saint Paul ſaith, that the Church is built vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles, Epheſ.2.20. None are excepted: whereupon Saint Hierome ſaith, Eccleſia ex æquo fundatur ſuper omnes Apoſtolos: The Church is equally founded vpon all the Apoſtles. *aduerſ. Iouinian.lib.*1.

2. Neither Saint Peter, nor yet the Pope need to be Chriſts vicar, for he hath promiſed himſelfe to be with vs to the ende of the world, Matth.28.22. And therefore by Saint Paul, our Sauiour is compared to the head, by whom all the body is coupled together. Epheſ.4.16. That as the head needeth no vicariall ſubſtitute in the bodie, no more doth Chriſt in his Church.

3. Neither can the Pope chalenge to be Saint Peters ſucceſſor, vnleſſe he ſucceeded him in life and doctrine: as Saint Ambroſe: Non habent Petri hæreditatem, qui fidem Petri non habent: They haue not Peters inheritance, that haue not Peters faith.

4. Howſoeuer it is, the Biſhop of Rome hath no more authoritie then other Biſhops haue, as Saint Hierome ſaith: Vbicunque fuerit epiſcopus, ſiue Eugubij, ſiue Conſtantinopoli, ſiue Alexandriæ, eiuſdem meriti, eiuſdem eſt ſacerdotij, &c. potentia diuitiarum & paupertatis humilitas vel inferiorē, vel ſublimiorem epiſcopū non facit: Cæterum omnes Apoſtolorū ſucceſſores ſunt, &c. quid mihi profers vnius vrbis conſuetudinem, &c. Whereſoeuer a Biſhop is, whether at Eugubium, at Conſtanſtinople, or Alexandria, he is of the ſame worthines, of the ſame prieſthood: the power of riches, and baſenes of pouertie make not an higher or inferior Biſhop: but they are all the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, &c. what doe you alleage the cuſtome of one Citie? ad Euagr. If then a Iubile were to be celebrated among Chriſtians, the Biſhop of Rome hath no more power to preſcribe the ſame, then other Biſhops haue in their dioceſſe: it is but a tricke of his ambitious humor, thus to perke aboue other his fellow Biſhops.

The Papiſts.

19.Error. 4. The popiſh inſtitution of the Iubile is alſo ſcandalous to the Iewes, and is a cauſe to harden and confirme them in their blindnes: 1. for when will they learne to know Chriſt, and acknowledge the Meſſias to be come, when they ſee their owne ceremonious obſeruations yet to be in force, and the Iubile, which was a type of the true Iubile and yeare of remiſſion in Chriſt, to be ſo ceremoniouſly obſerued?

2. Saint Ambroſe writeth a vehement Epiſtle to Theodoſius, diſſwading him from repayring a Iewiſh ſynagogue, which was burnt, and amongſt other excellent perſwaſions he thus ſaith, Quomodo poterit nos Chriſtus iuuare, qui pro Iudæis aduerſus Chriſtum militamus? How can we thinke, that Chriſt ſhould helpe vs, which doe warre with the Iewes againſt Chriſt? epiſtol.29. And what is this elſe, but to fight for the Iewes againſt Chriſt, in ſeeking to nouriſh their obſtinacie by retayning and reuiuing of their ceremonies?

3. Saint Paul ſaith, 1.Cor.10.32. See that you giue no offence to the Iewes: Origen alſo ſaith; Qui ſcandali conſcius eſt animam dabit pro anima eius, quem ſcandalizauit: He that is guiltie of offence, ſhall giue his ſoule for his, whom he offended. Hom.10. in Exod. Looke to it then ye Romaniſts, that by your ſuperſtitious rites doe not onely offend the people of God, but doe obdurate the hard hearted Iewes, how ye will make anſwere for this your doing before the tribunall of Chriſt.

The Papiſts.

20.Error. Laſtly the manner of their Iubile pompe, and oſtentation is ridiculous: as may appeare by theſe particulars.

1. The Pope going vpon the Natiuitie eeuen, to the Chappell of the Apoſtolicall pallace, falleth downe vpon his knees before the ſacrament, powring incenſe vpon it.

2. Certaine waxe candels, are lighted, and giuen to the Pope and Cardinals weighing each three pound a peece, with the which they go in proceſſion.

3. Then the Pope from thence is caried in his chaire vpon mens ſhoulders to Saint Peters gate, where he goeth vp into a higher ſeat.

4. The Pope ſtriketh three blowes vpon the gate with a golden hammer.

5. Then he pronounceth theſe verſes: Open vnto me the gates of iuſtice, &c. Lord I will goe into thy houſe, &c.

6. The Church gate being walled vp, then the maſons with tooles breake it downe, and ſpeedily all the people as in the twinkling of an eie, moued with deuotion do carry away all the rubbiſh and morter.

7. Then the Pope ſaith this verſicle: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it, &c.

8. Then the Pope prayeth thus: Lord, who by thy ſeruant Moſes didſt appoint for thy people of Iſraell the yeare of Iubile and remiſſion of ſinnes, grant to vs thy grace, &c. happily to begin this yeare of Iubile, &c.

9. Then the Pope entring by the gate of the Church, is borne in his chaire by the officers to the high altar in Saint Peters Church.

10. Then he deſcendeth, and prayeth before the altar; then he aſcendeth into an other ſeate higher and more eleuated: ex libr. ceremoniar. ann. Iubilæi, &c.

1. Confutat. 1. Where hath the Pope learned to worſhip a wafer cake or a peece of bakers bread? for if he thinke it is the bodie of Chriſt, he maketh Saint Peter a lyar, who ſaith, Whom the heauens muſt containe, vntill the time that all things be reſtored. Act.3.21. 2. Chriſt, whereſoeuer, is in his humanitie to be worſhipped of Angels, Hebr.1.6. Let all the Angels of God worſhip him: If you can ſhew vs, that euer Angels worſhipped the bread in the ſacrament, we are ſatisfied. 3. As Chriſt ſaith. Mark.14.9. Me you ſhall not haue alwaies, that is thus to anoint with oyle, as this woman now doth: no more haue we now the bodie of Chriſt to powre incenſe vpon it.

2. 1. Candles are made to giue light in the darknes of the night, not to be ſet vp in the day. Prou.31.18. Her candle is not put out by night. 2. As the ciuile vſe of candles and lights in houſes, ſo was the religious vſe in the tabernacle: the lamps ſerued for the night. 1.Sam.3.3. yet the light of God went out, that is toward the morning.

3. 3. The Prophet Dauid ſaith. Pſal.5.7. I will come into thine houſe in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy feare worſhip toward thy holy temple: How much vnlike is the Pope to this kingly prophet: he commeth to Gods houſe in feare and humilitie, the Pope is caried vpon mens ſhoulders: Dauid daunceth before the Arke going on foote, 2.Sam.6.16. the Pope diſdaineth to goe on foote, or to ride on horſe, but maketh men his vaſſailes, to take him vpon their backes.

4. 4. What meaneth this knocking thrice vpon the gate? 1. if it be but the gate of Saint Peters Church, the Clarke or Sextin hath the keyes, which are at the Popes commaundement, he need not knocke ſo often. Secondly, if it repreſent the gate of Paradiſe, he hath the keyes himſelfe, and may enter without knocking. 3. Or if the Angels keepe Paradiſe gate, as they did the terreſtriall Paradiſe with a fiery ſword; the Pope need not knocke as a ſuter, ſeeing he taketh vpon him to be a commaunder of Angels: as Clement the ſixt in his Bull, ſaith thus: mandamus Angelis, &c. we commaund the Angels, &c.

5. Firſt, if they be the gates of iuſtice, which you would haue opened, they are for the iuſt and 5 righteous to enter into: I doubt then that the Pope with his Cardinals, and many of his retinue muſt ſtand by, that ſuffer ſuch iniuſtice and vncleannes to be committed vnder their noſes, being acceſſarie vnto it themſelues, in ſpilling the bloud of many innocent ſoules, robbing of mens purſes with their Iubile illuſions, and ſuffering the Citie to abound with adulterie and ſodomitrie. 2. How can he ſay, I will come into thy houſe, when it is Saint Peters Church, and conſecrated to his honour: but God will haue no partner in his houſe. 3. And doe ye thinke that the gates of Gods houſe are open onely at Rome, and is the ſcala cœli there onely pitched, to climbe vp to heauen by?

6. If Paradiſe gate be but mured vp with a maſons wall, what need the Pope be ſent for 6 to make a way with his Iubile hammer: a maſon with his tooles may ſuffice to enter.

7. And it is falſe that the Lord made that day or yeare of Iubile, it was Boniface the eight, not 7
God, nor yet a good man, who firſt conſtituted the Iubile euery hundred yeere after the example of the Romane heatheniſh plaies, that were celebrated euery hundred yeare: of this Pope it is ſaid, he entred like a fox, raigned like a lion, died like a dog.

8. Moſes indeed by Gods commaundement erected a Iubile for the Iewes: if the Pope will alſo be a Iubile maker for Chriſtians, let him ſhew his warrant, as Moſes could: and if you imi- 8
tate Moſes Iubile of fiftie yeeres, why doth Pope Clement the eight, in his late Bull commend the hundred yeere of Iubile, which was no conſtitution of Moſes?

9. And muſt the Pope be borne on mens ſhoulders in the Church, doth he enter in pride by the gate of humilitie: and vniuſtly making mens ſhoulders as aſſes backes, who are his brethren, 9 to come in by the gate of iuſtice?

10. And can he not be contented to be higher then men, riding vpon their ſhoulders, but hee 10
muſt alſo be higher then God ſitting aboue his altar: what intollerable pride is this? the Angels, that would ſit in Gods throne were caſt down; and this prince of pride, that will ſit higher then his maker aboue the altar, muſt looke for a downe fall.

It is well noted by Gregorie vpon theſe words of the Lord ſpoken to Ezech. 2. 1. Stand vpon thy feete: Stans propheta viſionem ſpiritualem vidit: The prophet ſtanding doth ſee the ſpirituall viſion. hom. 9. in Ezech. And the prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſal. 25. 9. The humble will be teach his way: therefore it is not like that God will reueale his ſecrets to the Pope ſitting in the chaire of pride.

Thus we ſee, with what ridiculous toyes and ſuperſtitious ceremonies the Pope beginneth, and endeth his yeere of Iubile; ſo that as Auguſtine well ſaith, as he is alſo cited in their owne decrees, diſt. 12. c. 12. Tolerabilior eſt conditio Iudaeorum, qui licet tempus libertatis non agnouerint, legalib. tamen ſacramentis, non humanis præſumptionibus ſubijciuntur: So that the condition of the Iewes is more tolerable, who although they knew not the time of libertie, yet are ſubiect to legall ſacraments, not humane preſumptions.

And thus much of the firſt controuerſie of the Romane Iubile, and the ſeuerall partes thereof.

THE SECOND CONTROVERSIE OF INDVLGENCES AND IVBILE PARDONS.

THis controuerſie is deuided into eyght ſeuerall parts. Firſt, of the name of Indulgence. Secondly, whether there bee any Indulgences, and of the Spirituall treaſure of the Church. Thirdly, what Indulgence is. Fourthly, of the diuerſe kindes of Indulgences. Fiftly, of the fruite and vtilitie of Indulgences. Sixtly, to whom the power of graunting Indulgences belongeth. Seuenthly, of the diſpoſition of them that muſt receiue Indulgences. Eightly, whether Indulgences doe any way profite the dead.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME OF Indulgence.

The Papiſts.

21.Error. BEllarmine taketh this word Indulgence to ſignifie remiſſionem pœnarum,quæ remanent luendæ poſt remiſſionem culparum : The remiſſion of the puniſhments,which remaine to be ſatisfied for,after the remiſſion of the faults, *lib.*1.*de Indulg.c.*1. And whereas he produceth two ſignifications of this word : that firſt it betokeneth remiſſion, Iſay 6.61. 1. Prædicare captiuis indulgentiam: To preach indulgence to the Captiues. Secondly,it ſignifieth facilitie, 1.Cor.7.6. This I ſpeake by way of Indulgence or conceſſion,&c. Of theſe two ſignifications, they make one,compounding them together : and ſo take Indulgence for a remiſſion of the puniſhment onely of fauour, Bellarmin. ibidem.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt the place alleaged out of Eſay is directly againſt them,for S. Luke interpreting that place, Luk.4.18. readeth for Indulgence, ἄφεσιν,remiſſion of ſinnes,not of the puniſhment onely;ſo then Indulgence properlie ſignifieth remiſſion of ſinnes.

Secondly,the place alleaged out of S. Paul is impertinent : for there Indulgence is taken for conceſſion: as Peter Lombard very well ſheweth that Indulgence is taken three waies,for *remiſſion, permiſſion,conceſſion,lib.*4.*diſt.*26.liter.d. and he vnderſtandeth S. Paul to ſpeake here of conceſſion: but it is very improper to take Indulgence for conceſſion,licence or a graunt,when we ſpeake of ſinnes and the paine due vnto them,which both are pardoned,not by conceſſion,but by remiſſion.

Thirdly,the Fathers ſo vnderſtand Indulgence for the remiſſion of the ſinne it ſelfe, as Auguſtine: Securus dicis,quando me correxero,dat Deus Indulgentiam,&c. Thou ſaieſt well, if I doe amend my ſelfe,God will giue me Indulgence, *Serm.*16.in Matth. And againe, Vt ad peccatorum mereamur Indulgentiam peruenire,&c. That we may be meete to come or attaine to the Indulgence of our ſinnes: *Serm.de tempor.*210.

Fourthly,ſometime Indulgence is otherwiſe taken, but then it ſignifieth a conceſſion of reward, not a remiſſion of puniſhment,as Ambroſe taketh it : Hora vndecima intromiſſos in vineam totius diei operarijs diuina indulgentia exæquauit : The diuine Indulgence did make them,which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre,equall to them,which laboured all day.

Fiftly,the Ciuill lawe,which he wreſteth to the contrarie, ſo taketh this word Indulgence; for a whole remiſſion of puniſhment and fault committed againſt the lawe : the lawe maketh two kindes of Indulgences : there is Indulgentia generalis vel ſimplex, a generall or ſimple Indulgence; and indulgentia ſpecialis, a ſpeciall indulgence : the ſimple or generall indulgence did not remit all the puniſhment: as *Cod. lib.*9.*tit.*51.*leg.*2.Antonin. Non ideo quod indulgentia mea pœna metalli liberatus eſſet, etiam bonorum reſtitutionem impetrauit : Becauſe by my Indulgence he is freed from the mettall mines,he hath not therefore obtained reſtitution to his goods. But the ſpeciall indulgence remitted both the penaltie and the infamie, ibid. leg. 10. Dioclet. And leg. 4. Alexander. Ex indulgentia reuerſus non tenetur creditoribus: He that is returned from exile by indulgence, is not bound to his creditors: And *Leg.*1. Antonin. This ſpeciall indulgence was in integrum reſtitutio: a reſtitution to the whole : Vt ſcias quid ſit in integrum reſtituere : honoribus & ordini tuo & omnibus cæteris te reſtituo: That you may know,what it is to reſtore wholy: I reſtore thee to thy order,to thy honour,and all the reſt: this then is the ſentence of the lawe : Sententiæ ſeueritas cum cæteris damnis tranſigere videtur : The ſeueritie of the ſentence doth paſſe together with all other dammages and inconueniences,*Cod lib.*2.*tit.*12.*leg.*4.Seuer. That is,where the penalty of the ſentence was remitted,there all other inconueniences as the infamie, diſhonour, tranſgreſſion,offence,were releaſed,which were ſequeles of the ſentence : ex quo pœna remiſſa, & ſequela pœnæ,quæ eſt infamia: The penaltie being remitted, the ſequele thereof, which is the infamie, is pardoned : ſo ſaith the lawe, *Cod.lib.*2.*tit.*12.*leg.*3.in gloſſ.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THERE BE any Indulgence in the Church.

THis part hath two queſtions. Firſt,of the ſpirituall treaſure of the Church. Secondly, of the power in diſtributing the ſame.

THE

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE SPIRITVALL treaſure of the Church: which is diuided into foure propoſitions.

THE FIRST PROPOSITION, WHETHER GOOD workes be meritorious and ſatisfactorie.

The Papiſts.

THis propoſition is affirmed by Bellarmine,that there is a double price in good workes,namely 22. Error. of merite and ſatisfaction, the firſt procureth the reward, the ſecond redeemeth the puniſhment.

First,good workes are ſatisfactorie. 1. Almes, Tobie 4.10. Almes deliuer from death. Eccleſia- 1 ſticus 3.33. As water quencheth fire,ſo almes take away ſinnes. 2. Faſting is ſatisfactorie,as appeareth 2 by the example of the Niniuites. 3. Prayer doth ſatisfie for ſinne,as Matth.6.12. We pray for for- 3 giuenes of ſinnes: and by this petition ſatisfie for our veniall ſinnes.

Secondly, the ſame good workes likewiſe are meritorious. 1. Almes, Matth.25.34. Inherite 1 the kingdome prepared for you, for when I was hungrie, ye gaue me meate. 2. Faſting doth merite, 2
Matth.6.verſ.8. Your father,which ſeeth in ſecret will rewarde you openly. 3. So likewiſe God is ſaid, 3 verſ.6. To reward prayer openly.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt,the places alleaged proue no ſatisfaction in our workes. 1. You muſt bring bet- 1
ter Scripture then Tobie or Eccleſiaſticus (which are not Canonicall) to confirme a poynt of faith: and yet we denie not but almes may be ſaid to deliuer, not as cauſes of our deli-uerance, but as liuely ſignes of our faith,whereby we are deliuered,as Pſalm.41. Bleſſed is he that iudgeth wiſely of the poore,the Lord ſhall deliuer him: a man is firſt made bleſſed by the not imputation of his ſinnes by faith, Pſalm.32.1. This bleſſednes is teſtified by his charitie, and rewarded of God in mercie by deliuerance.

2. The Niniuites faſting ſatisfied not for their ſinne, but onely teſtified their repentance, 2
Ionas 3.10. God ſaw their workes,that they turned from their euill waies: which repentance God accepted in mercie: otherwiſe how could the Niniuites being idolaters and ignorant of God, me-rite or ſatisfie.

3. The Lords prayer ouerthroweth ſatisfaction: for we conclude, for thine is the glorie: we take 3 not the glorie to our ſelues,but aſcribe all to God: forgiuenes of the debt is of mercie: where then there is remiſſion of grace,there can be no ſatisfaction of worthines.

Secondly, prayer, almes, faſting, are rewarded we graunt, but not for the worthines of the worke,but thorough the gracious acceptance of God. Firſt, the kingdome is prepared from the foundations of the world,Matth.25.34. How then can it be merited? Secondly, When we haue done all that we are commaunded,we muſt ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruants, Luke 17.10. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Nulla poſſe tam præclara opera exiſtere,quibus hoc,quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis iudicium retribuatur: There can be no ſuch excellent workes,to the which,that which is freely giuen,is rendred by the right of retribution.But of this queſtion of the merite and ſatisfaction of good works, we haue treated before in the controuerſie of good works, that it were needleſſe and ſuperfluous now to handle the ſame matter againe.

THE SECOND PROPOSITION, WHETHER GOOD workes,as they are ſatisfactorie,may be applied vnto others.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine alleageth Scripture to proue that good workes as they are meritorious, cannot be 23. Error.
communicated to others, which we willingly graunt, for a man cannot merite for himſelfe, much leſſe for others: but to confirme this propoſition,that one may ſatisfie for another,he alleageth no Scripture at all, lib.1.de Indulgen.c.2.propoſ.2.

The Proteſtants.

THe contrarie is moſt euident out of Scripture, that all which a man can doe is little enough, yea and too little for himſelfe, much leſſe can he ſatisfie for another.

Matth.25.9. The wiſe Virgins make this anſwere to the fooliſh, We feare there will not be enough for vs and you: whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth: Unuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſtimonio quicquam adiuuatur apud Deum,cui ſecreta cordis apparent,& vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, cui teſtimonium perhibeat conſcientia ſua: Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe: neither is a man helped by anothers teſtimonie before God, to whom the ſecrets of the heart are euident: euery man ſcarce ſufficeth for himſelfe, to whom his owne conſcience doth beare witneſſe : ſerm.22.in Matth.

But if the other words,that follow,be obiected : Go to them rather that ſell, and buy for your ſelues, Matth.25.9. Origen ſhall make anſwere, who vnderſtandeth by thoſe that ſell, the Doctors and teachers of the Church: Non omnium habentium oleum,eſt etiam dare ex eo alijs,&c. It is not the part of all that haue oyle to giue to others,but it belongeth onely to them,which are appointed to ſell it : Congregauit aliquis doctrinam, quæ ei ſufficit ad bene viuendum,non tamen,vt doctor fieri poſſit : One hath gathered doctrine,which may be ſufficient for himſelfe to liue well, but not to be a doctor or teacher to others : Tract.32.in Matth.

THE THIRD PROPOSITION, OF THE SPIrituall treaſure of the Church.

The Papiſts.

1 IT is affirmed that there is an infinite treaſure of the ſatisfactions purchaſed by the paſſion of Chriſt extant in the Church, as it is written Act.20.28. which hee hath purchaſed with his owne
2 blood. Secondly, whereas Chriſt dyed for all, as Saint Iohn ſaith, 1.Ioh.2.5. Hee is the reconciliation
24.Error. for the ſinnes of the whole world : and yet the price of Chriſts blood hath not been applied to all, the 3 moſt part of men being ſubiect to condemnation : there remaineth then a great deale of the price of Chriſts death yet to be applied, Bellarm.c.2.prop.3.

The Proteſtants.

1 FIrſt,we acknowledge that the price or vertue of Chriſts blood is infinite, and remaineth in his Church,as a rich treaſure,that can neuer be ſpent; as a fountaine,that can neuer be dried vp; as precious balme,that healeth alwaies effectually : and therefore the Apoſtle calleth it, the riches of his glorious inheritance ; and the exceeding greatnes of his power toward vs, which beleeue, Epheſ.1.18. And as one ſaith : Effuſio iuſti ſanguinis Chriſti tam diues fuit ad precium,vt ſi vniuerſitas captiuorum in redemptorem ſuum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent : The effuſion of Chriſts righteous blood is ſo rich in price, that if all the captiues did beleeue in their redeemer, the diuels bands could hold none: ex epiſt.Gaij.

2 Secondly,but it is vntrue that Chriſt dyed vniuerſally for the whole world, in his ſenſe, that is, for all men whatſoeuer : for Chriſt vouchſafeth not to pray for the world, Ioh.17.9. I pray not for the world,but for thoſe which thou haſt giuen me : much leſſe then dyed hee for the world. The Apoſtle then by the world vnderſtandeth the whole companie of the people of God,for whom Chriſt dyed: As Saint Ambroſe well noteth : Habet populus dei plenitudinem ſuam,&c.& in electis,&c.ſpecialis quadam cenſetur vniuerſitas, vt de toto mundo totus mundus liberatus,&c. The people of God then hath a certaine fulnes,and there is a ſpeciall kinde of vniuerſalitie in the elect, ſo that the whole world ſeemeth to be deliuered out of the whole world : lib.1.de vocat.Gent.c.3.

3 Thirdly,it is alſo vntrue that any,for whom Chriſt dyed,are ſubiect to condemnation, or that the price of his blood can be applied to any,that are not ordained vnto life : Chriſt prayeth thus, Ioh.17.24. I will that they whom thou haſt giuen me, be with me where I am : Chriſt prayeth, that all, which are giuen him,for whom hee dyed, ſhould come to euerlaſting glorie : but Chriſts prayer was alwaies effectuall : as he himſelfe ſaith,Ioh.11.42. Thou heareſt me alwaies. Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Chriſtus mortem vincens omnibus,qui ſunt ex eius corpore,vitam acquiſiuit: Chriſt ouercomming death,hath purchaſed or obtained life to all,that are of his bodie, in 1.*Cor.*15. All then,that are of his bodie,haue ſurely life,and cannot periſh,nor be condemned.

THE FOVRTH PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE paſſions and ſatisfactions of the Saints belong to this treaſure of the Church.

The Papiſts,

25.Error. TO this treaſure of the Church belong the paſſions of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and of all other Saints,who ſuffered more than their ſinnes required, Bellarm.lib.1.de indulgent.cap.2.propoſ.4. And in the Bull of Clement.6. it thus ſtandeth : Ad cuius theſauri cumulum beatæ dei genitricis, & omnium iuſtorum merita adminiculum præſtare noſcuntur : To the heape of which treaſure doe adde helpe,the merits of the mother of our Lord and of all Saints: Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.2.

1 Argum. 1. Mary had neither actuall nor originall ſin to ſuffer for, and therefore her ſuffrings are communicable to others.

2 2. Iohn alſo was of a moſt innocent life,and was ſubiect ſcarce to the leaſt ſinnes,and therfore he had no neede of his faſting,auſtere life,impriſonment,death,to ſatisfie for himſelfe.

3 3. Likewiſe the Prophets ſuffrings were beyond their ſinnes : as Iob complaineth chap.6.1.

I would that my ſinnes,whereby I haue deſerued wrath, and the calamitie which I ſuffer, were laid in a balance ; as the ſand of the ſea this would appeare more heauie.

4. Saint Pauls ſuffrings were many and great : as he doth reckon them vp, 2.Cor.11.26. yet he had no neede of them himſelfe : for he ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, 1.Cor.4.4.

5. The martyrdome of the Saints is able to redeeme great offences : as Chriſt ſaith, Matt.10. verſ.32. Whoſoeuer confeſſeth me before men, him will I confeſſe before my father in heauen: But many of the Martyrs had ſmall offences at the time of their martyrdome,and therefore there remaineth abundance of ſatisfaction for others ; Bellarm.lib.1.de indulg.c.2.prop.4.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. It is blaſphemie to ſay,that any man doth or hath ſuffered more,than his ſinnes require : for this were to accuſe God of iniuſtice,to lay vpon any man that which he hath not deſerued. But the Prophet ſaith otherwiſe, Pſalm.130.3. Lord if thou ſtreightly markeſt iniquities,who ſhall abide it? God layeth vpon no man ſo much as hee hath deſerued : much leſſe doth any ſuffer more. 2. As for the Virgin Mary,ſhe acknowledgeth Chriſt her Sauiour, Luk.1.47. My ſpirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour,and ſo conſequently confeſſeth her ſelfe a ſinner ; for he is therefore called Ieſus,a Sauiour,becauſe he ſhall ſaue the people from their ſinnes, Matth.1.21. 3. Saint Ambroſe accordingly ſaith ; Non mirum ſi dominus redempturus mundum diuinam operationem ſuam inchoauit à matre,vt per quam ſalus omnibus parabatur,eadem prima fructum ſalutis hauriret ex pignore: No marueile, if the Lord being to redeeme the world,did begin his diuine worke in his mother, that ſhe, through whom ſaluation was in preparing for al,ſhould firſt receiue the benefit of ſaluation from her pledge or birth, lib.2.in 1.Luc. If ſhe receiued the benefit of ſaluation, what elſe was ſhe ſaued from,than her ſinnes? 1

Secondly,concerning Iohn Baptiſt, 1. wee confeſſe he was an holie man,and endued with great grace,yet not without his ſinnes and corruptions : and therefore confeſſeth,that he had need to be baptized of Chriſt, Matth.3.14. which was to remiſſion of ſinnes. 2. His afflictions were not laid vpon him as puniſhments for ſinne,but as Gods louing corrections to exerciſe his faith, and prepare him for his kingdome : As the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſal.119.67. Before I was afflicted I went aſtray. Afflictions then to the righteous are not inflictions for their ſinne, but admonitions to encreaſe their vertue. 3. Of Iohn and of all other it is truly ſaid, as Hierome reciteth the Apoſtles words ; Deus concluſit omnes ſub peccato,&c. God hath ſhut all vnder vnbeleefe, to haue mercie of all, abſque hoc qui peccatum non fecit: he onely excepted,that did no ſinne. 2

Thirdly, 1. Iob doth confeſſe himſelfe a great ſinner, that he could not anſwere God one thing of a thouſand, Iob.9.3. and he confeſſeth with Dauid, that God had afflicted him iuſtly, Pſal.119.75. for thus he ſaith, Iob.13.26. Thou makeſt me to poſſeſſe the iniquities of my youth. 3

2. Concerning that place, Iob.6.2,3. The Latine text doth tranſlate moſt corruptly. 1. There is no mention at all made of ſinnes, but the Hebrue word there vſed, ſignifieth wrath and indignation, which the 70. well expreſſe (ὀργὴν). 2. Where the Latine readeth, hæc grauior eſſet, this would be heauier, as though it were referred onely to his calamitie waighed againſt ſinne, the Septuagint well expreſſe the ſenſe of the Hebrue (though the ſingular number be vſed) βαρυτέρα, grauiora ſunt, are heauier, in the plurall. 3. The Latine ſaith, quaſi arena, as the ſand : ſo is not the Hebrue, מחול meecol : which ſignifieth præ arena, in reſpect of the ſand, or then the ſand : as the ſeptuagint readeth ; ſo that this is the meaning, if his griefe and vexation were put into a balance, and weighed with the ſand,they would be found heauier then it : for who can endure this ſenſe, that his afflictions in reſpect of his ſinne were as a light thing to the ſand?

Fourthly, 1. Saint Paul doth frankely confeſſe of himſelfe, 1.Tim.1.15. Chriſt came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of whom I am chiefe: If he acknowledge himſelfe a ſinner ; what reaſon hath any man to extenuate it : 2. He knew nothing by himſelfe, that is in reſpect of the faithfull diſcharging of his calling, whereof he ſpake before : his conſcience therein did not accuſe him, yet he ſaith, he was not thereby iuſtified, 1.Cor.4.3. Much leſſe then is Saint Paul able to iuſtifie an other. 3. He ſaith, Philipp.3.9. That I may be found in him not hauing mine owne righteouſnes : If Saint Paul diſclaimeth his owne righteouſnes, how can it be a ſatisfaction for vs. 4

Fiftly, 1. The martyrdome of the Saints was profitable to themſelues,God crowning their patience with immortalitie, through Chriſt : but they are not auaileable to vs,but onely for example: ſo Saint Paul ſaith, 1.Cor.1.13. was Paul crucified for you? Saint Ambroſe ſaith well ; Pendebat in cruce filius,&c. While her ſonne hanged vpon the croſſe, Mary offered her ſelfe to the perſecutors, Si fortè ſua morte publico muneri aliquid adderetur,ſed Chriſti paſſio adiutore non eguit : If ſo ſhe by her death might adde any thing to the publike benefit ; but Chriſts paſſion needed no helper: inſtitut. virg.c.5. If the ſufferings of Mary could adde nothing to Chriſts paſſion, much leſſe the affliction of others. 5

The Proteſtants.

THat the ſufferings of the Saints muſt be added to Chriſts ſatisfactions to make vp the treaſure of the Church : we iudge it a moſt horrible blaſphemie, which hath diſliked ſome of the Papiſts themſelues: as Durand. in 4. Diſt. 20. *qu.*3. whoſe argumentes I will propound.

1. Argum. 1 The ſatisfaction of Chriſt is of infinite vertue, and therefore there is no need, that the ſatisfactions of the Saints ſhould be ioyned vnto them.

2. 2. The Saints are alreadie abundantly rewarded, and farre aboue their deſert, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.8.18. I count that the afflictions of this preſent time are not worthie of the glorie, which ſhall be reuealed: wherefore the Saints ſufferings being ſo fully alreadie recompenced, cannot helpe toward the expiation of the ſinnes of others.

3. 3. The Saints neither did, nor ſuffered any thing, which they were not bound in duty to do and ſuffer: as appeareth, Luc.17.10. We are vnprofitable ſeruants, we did that which was our dutie to doe: and Matth.25.9. the wiſe virgins ſay: Leaſt there will not be enough for you and vs: Ergo, the Saints haue nothing to communicate to others.

4 4. If by the Saints ſufferings our ſins could be expiated or redeemed, then might they be counted our redeemers; but the Scripture onely acknowledgeth Chriſt our redeemer, 1.Cor.1.30. Chriſt is made our righteouſnes, ſanctification, redemption.

1 Anſw. 1. The Saints paſſions are ioyned vnto Chriſts ſufferings, not becauſe theſe are not ſufficient, but for that it is glorious vnto Chriſt, that the Saints ſuffrings ſhould not be in vaine, ſeeing they receiue all their efficacy from Chriſt.

2 2. The Saints ſufferings as they are meritorious, are alreadie abundantly rewarded; but as they are ſatisfactorie, they ſhould be in vaine, vnleſſe they were imployed, in the expiation of other mens ſinnes, ſeeing the Saintes needed not ſo great laboures and ſufferings for themſelues.

3 3. Euen the obedience of the law, to the which the Saints are bound, is meritorious and ſatisfactorie: the virgins ſpeake not of ſatisfaction, but of the oyle of grace and charity, which euery one keepeth to himſelfe, and cannot powre forth vpon another.

4 4. Properly & ſimply Chriſt is our redeemer, becauſe he redeemeth vs from our captiuitie, but as a redeemer is largely taken for one that redeemeth from a ſmal debt, ſo the ſaints may be ſaid to be our redeemers: if Nabuchadnezzer be aduiſed by Daniel to redeeme his ſinnes by righteouſnes, much more the Saints may be ſaid to redeeme our ſins by their paſſions: and Saint Paule ſaith, 1.Cor.9.22. I am made all things to all men, to ſaue ſome: why might he not be as well ſaid to redeeme them, as to ſaue them? ſeeing the name of Sauiour is as proper to Chriſt, as the name of Redeemer. *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de indulgent c.*4.

1 Contra. 1. The paſſions of the Saints are not in vaine, though they be not ioyned to Chriſts, as ſatisfactorie: as Saint Paul ſheweth, 1.Cor.15.58. Foraſmuch as ye know, that your labour is not in vaine in the Lord: that is, in reſpect of the reſurrection of the iuſt, when all their labours and trauailes ſhall be recompenſed. 2. It is inglorious for Chriſt to haue any ioyned vnto him as a helper: as the Prophet ſheweth, Iſay.63.5. I looked, and there was none to helpe, therefore mine owne arme helped me. 3. Though the Saints receiue all their power and grace from Chriſt, yet they receiue no ſuch power, whereby to ſatisfie for others: for the Lord by the Prophet ſaith, Iſay.48.11. I will not giue my glory to another.

2 1. If the Saints ſufferings are rewarded, as they are meritorious; much more as they are ſatiſfactorie: for it is more to deſerue a reward, then to ſatisfie for a puniſhment: but the truth is, that the ſufferings of the Saints, do neither merit nor yet ſatisfie the wrath of God, but yet their labors through Chriſt are abundantly recompenſed: Iacob confeſſeth, He was not worthie of the leaſt of Gods(temporall)mercies. Gen.32.10. how much leſſe are the Saints worthy of eternall. 2. Their labours are not in vaine, though thereby they neither ſatisfie for themſelues nor others: for thereby their faith is exerciſed, and they learne obedience, Pſal.119.71. It is good for me, that I haue beene afflicted, that I may learne thy ſtatutes. 3. And whereas he ſaith the Saints need not ſo many ſuffrings for themſelues, it is blaſphemy: for Iob for all his vnſpeakable affliction confeſſeth, he did not anſwere God one thing of a thouſand: Iob.9.3. Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium ieiunamus, nimium vigilamus, cum nec milleſimæ, imo nec minimæ parti debitorum ſuorum valeat reſpondere: Who dare complaine from henceforth, and ſay, we labour too much, faſt too much, watch too much, when he cannot anſwere the thouſandth, nay not the leaſt part of his debt. ſer. de quadrupl. debit. Bernard.

3 Firſt, it is contrarie to reaſon and Scripture, that a man ſhould merite by doing his dutie: our Sauiour ſaith, Luke 17.9. Doth he thanke that ſeruant, becauſe he did that, which was commanded him? I trow not: if it be not thanke-worthie, how is it meritorious or ſatisfactorie? Secondly, if the oyle of charitie cannot be communicated, then not the price of good workes, which proceede from charitie, being the fruits thereof: for no workes are good without charitie, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1.Cor.13.3. then cannot a man lend the price of his workes, but he muſt alſo lend his charitie, which maketh them precious. Thirdly, the virgins ſpeake of their iuſtice or righteouſneſſe, which they holde to be little enough for themſelues; and ſo Bernard expoundeth, vpon theſe words, Matth.25.8. Giue vs of your oyle: Stulta petitio; vix iuſtus ſaluabitur, vix ſanctis iuſticia ſua oleum ſufficit ad ſalutem, quanto minus & ſibi & proximis: A fooliſh petition, the righteous ſhall ſcarce be ſaued, the oyle of their owne righteouſneſſe hardly ſufficeth the Saints to ſaluation, how much leſſe themſelues and their neighbours: Noe, Daniel, Iob, ſhall not deliuer a ſonne or daughter, Ezech. 14.18. but like as the ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall die, Ezech.18.20. Sic anima quæ iuſticiam fecerit, ſola ſaluabitur: So that ſoule that doth righteouſneſſe, onely ſhall bee ſaued, Bernard. ſerm. de virgin.

First, Chriſt hath left neither great nor ſmall debt vnanſwered or vnpayed for, 1.Iohn 1.7. The blood of Ieſus cleanſeth vs from all ſinne: and therefore the Saints cannot be ſaid to redeeme vs, no not from the leaſt debt. Secondly, you tranſlate corruptly, Daniel biddeth him, not redeeme, but breake off his ſinnes by righteouſnes: And ſo man when he beginneth to doe well, leaueth to doe euill, and by well doing breaketh off, or ſtoppeth the courſe of the ſinne. Thirdly, Paul ſaueth, not as Chriſt ſaueth: he as the author, Paul as the miniſter of reconciliation, 1.Cor.5.18. but there can be no redemption without paying of a raunſome, 1.Cor.6.20. Ye are bought for a price: This price becauſe no man could pay but Chriſt, no man can be ſaid to redeeme but Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Chriſt is made vnto vs our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption, 1.Cor.1.30. as no man elſe can be ſaid to be our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, ſo neither our redemption. 4

Peter Lombard alſo ſheweth, how Chriſt propriè dicitur redemptor: is properly called the redeemer, in reſpect of the Father and Sonne, who are called alſo Redeemers, but not ſo properly, lib.3. diſt.19. liter.e. Whereby he inſinuateth, that no creature either properly, or improperly can be called a Redeemer.

Here ſhould haue followed other arguments, of Maſter Luther and Maſter Caluine, with others vſed by them, and obiected in their time againſt the Popes Indulgences, with a confutation of Bellarmines anſwere vnto the ſaid arguments: But ſo it was, that the Printer calling earneſtly for an ende of this worke, and fearing leaſt it might growe to a further charge, then he expected, and hauing my ſelfe no great leaſure, not aboue the ſpace of ſeuen dayes, to runne ouer Bellarmines firſt booke of Indulgences, I was conſtrained altogether to leaue the ſecond booke vnanſwered: truſting, that ſome other better able, may ſupplie my want herein, or that I may hereafter, if it pleaſe God, and it ſhall be thought neceſſarie, finiſh that, which now is omitted.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE POWER OF diſtributing the ſpirituall treaſure and Indulgence of the Church.

THE FIRST PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE ſatisfactions of the Saints may be communicated to others.

The Papiſts.

THat the ſuffrings and ſatisfactions of the Saints may be applied to others, thus they labour to proue it: 26. Error.

First, by that article of the Creede, I beleeue the communion of Saints: therefore their ſatisfactions are communicable. 1

Secondly, Saint Paul ſaith, 1.Corinth.12.15. I will moſt gladly beſtow and be beſtowed for your ſoules. 2

Thirdly, Coloſſ.1.24. Now reioyce in my ſuffrings for you, and fulfill the reſt of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh for his bodie ſake, which is the Church: Saint Paul did communicate his ſuffrings and ſatisfactions to the faithfull: Bellarm.lib.1.de indulg.c.3.propoſ.1.Rhemiſt.annot.in hunc locum. 3

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, 1. the argument followeth not, there is a communion of Saints: Ergo, ſatisfactions are communicable: the communion is in things communicable, but ſatisfactions they cannot communicate, becauſe they haue them not. 2. If they had ſatisfactions and merits, yet they could no more applie them vnto others, than they doe their faith, which is proper to euery man: Rom.1.17. The iuſt ſhall liue by faith. 3. This communion conſiſteth in the mutuall helpe and aſſiſtance of one another, as by prayer, Rom.1.9. Without ceaſing I make mention of you: By mutuall comfort, 1.Theſſ.4.18. Comfort one another: By exhortation, 1.Theſſ.5.11. Exhort one another: By teaching, 2.Pet.1.13. I thinke it meete to ſtirre you vp by putting you in remembrance. 4. So Origen ſaith: Cæteri precibus peccata, hic ſolus poteſtate dimiſit: Others (namely the Apoſtles, of whom he ſpeaketh) remit ſins by their prayers, Chriſt by his power, Hom.24.in Numer. Chriſt onely then hath power to ſatisfie.

Secondly, how Saint Paul would be beſtowed, he ſheweth Philip.2.17. he would be offered vp for the ſeruice, λειτουργία, of their faith: His death then ſerued not for ſatisfaction, but for confirmation of their faith. As Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Chriſti paſſio nobis ſufficit ad ſalutem; Petri, Pauli contulit ad exemplum: Chriſts paſſion ſufficeth to ſaluation: Peter and Pauls paſſion ſerue for example and confirmation, ſerm.66.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Paul expoundeth himſelfe in the next verſe, how he ſuffereth for the Churches ſake, Coloſſ. 1.25. Whereof I am a miniſter according to the diſpenſation of God, which is giuen me to yonward, to fulfill the word of God: He did not then ſatisfie for others by his ſuffrings, but thereby miniſter to their faith: that by his patience and example of ſuffring, the worde of God might be fulfilled, that is, generally receiued, and freely confeſſed of the brethren: as he himſelfe again ſaith, Philip. 1.13. My bands in Chriſt are famous throughout all the iudgement hall, and in all other places; inſomuch that many of the brethren in the Lorde are boldened through my bands, and dare more frankly ſpeake the word.

2. Saint Auguſtine thus interpreteth: Non dixit preſſurarum mearum, ſed Chriſti, quia membrum erat Chriſti, & in perſecutionibus ſuis, quales Chriſtum in toto ſuo corpore pati oportebat, etiam ipſe preſſuras eius pro ſua portione adimplebat: He ſaith not my afflictions, but Chriſts, becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, and in his perſecutions, which Chriſt was to ſuffer in his whole bodie, he alſo fulfilled his afflictions for his part: Tract.in Ioann. 108. Saint Paul then did but for his part ſuffer as a member of Chriſt, as all other his members muſt for their parts.

3. So Auguſtine againe ſaith elſewhere, writing vpon this text: Si in membris Chriſti es, quicquid pateris ab eis, qui non ſunt in membris Chriſti, deerat paſſionibus Chriſti: ideo additur, quia deerant, menſuram implens, non ſuperfundens: tantum ergo pateris, quantum inferendum erat vniuerſæ paſſioni Chriſti, qui paſſus eſt in capite, & patitur in membris, &c. If thou art a member of Chriſt, whatſoeuer thou ſufferest of thoſe that are not his members, was wanting to the ſuffrings of Chriſt: therefore it is added (which are wanting) filling the meaſure, not ouerflowing: therefore thou ſuffreſt ſo much, as was to be laid vpon the whole paſſion of Chriſt; who then ſuffered in the head, and now in the members, in Pſal.60. Saint Paul then did ſuffer for his part, as all other members muſt for their parts: and the meaſure of affliction is but filled vp, it ouerfloweth not by their ſuffrings: Ergo, no mans ſuffrings doe abound or ouerflow to ſatisfie for another.

THE SECOND PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE paſtors of the Church haue power to diſpenſe the ſatisfactions and ſuffrings of the Saints, and to graunt indulgences.

The Papiſts.

26.Error. THat this power is committed to the paſtors of the Church, to diſpenſe this ſpirituall treaſure, and thereby to abſolue from all ſinnes, and the puniſhment of ſinnes, to diſpenſe with othes, vowes, lawes, if there be reaſonable cauſe: thus they would proue it.

1 Firſt, Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, whoſe ſins ye remit, they are remitted, Ioh.20.
2 verſ.23. and to Peter, Feede my ſheepe, Ioh.21.15. Here the ſupreame throne of Eccleſiaſticall power
3 is giuen to Peter. Likewiſe, Matth.18.18. What ſoeuer ye binde in earth, ſhall be bound in heauen.

Secondly, Saint Paul executeth this power, 2.Cor.2.10. To whom ye forgiue any thing, I forgiue alſo: for verily if I forgaue any thing, to whom I forgaue it, for your ſakes forgaue I it in the ſight of Chriſt. Here Saint Paul forgiueth vnto the inceſtuous perſon, that, which remained of his penance.

This hath been the continuall practiſe of the Church to remit the puniſhment to offenders: and to this purpoſe Tertullian and Cyprian are alleaged, with diuers Councels, and conſtitutions of the Biſhops of Rome: Bellarm.lib.1.de indulg.c.3.prop.2.

The Proteſtants.

1 Confutat. FIrſt, 1. our Sauiour ſpeaketh of remiſſion of ſinnes, what is this to their indulgences, which ſerue to releaſe the puniſhment onely, as they ſay? and the Apoſtles did remit ſinnes not by their owne power, but as miniſters and diſpenſers in Chriſts name: Act.3.12. S.Peter denieth, that by his owne power he had made the lame man goe: much leſſe by his owne power could he heale the ſoule.

2. Firſt, feeding the flocke, is not diſpenſing with them, or exerciſing iudiciall power ouer them, but preaching the worde: ſo doth Saint Paul expound it, Act.20.28. and Saint Peter, 1.Pet.5.3. Feede the flocke of God: but the Pope vſeth not to preach, therefore he feedeth not. Againe, this feeding is not proper onely to Peter, but common to all other paſtors, as he himſelfe ſheweth writing to his fellow paſtors, 1.Pet.5.3.

3. Firſt, our Sauiour ſaying, Whatſoeuer you binde, ſpeaketh of binding and looſing of ſinnes, and not the puniſhment onely: as this place is expounded by that, Ioh.20.23. Whoſe ſinnes ye retaine. Againe, he ſpeaketh to all the Apoſtles: wherefore they all, and their ſucceſſors, and not Peter onely haue this power. Further, this power muſt be executed in Chriſts name, verſ.20. Indulgences then in the name of Saints haue no place here.

Secondly, 1. Saint Paul did not enioyne the inceſtuous perſon penance to ſatisfie God for his ſinne,but he was deliuered to Sathan, that his ſpirit might be ſaued,&c. 1.Cor.5.5. that hee might be brought to effectuall ſorrow for his offence: which was accordingly effected. 2. Another end of his ſeparation,was for the example of others,and that the Church might be ſatisfied,whom he had offended: and therefore the Apoſtle writeth to the whole Church, that they would forgiue him, 2.Cor.2.7.and hold themſelues ſatisfied with his ſufficient ſorrow. 3. The Apoſtle then remitteth not any puniſhment to the young man due vnto Gods iuſtice, but releaſeth him of the cenſure of excommunication,after he did ſee him ſufficiently to haue ſorrowed. And this power wee denie not but the Church hath, to reconcile thoſe againe to the congregation, and to remit the cenſure of the Church,when the partie hath teſtified his effectuall ſorrow, and ſatisfied the congregation. Thus Auguſtine ſaith: Recte conſtituuntur ab his qui eccleſiæ præſunt tempora pœnitentiæ, vt ſatisfiat etiam eccleſiæ: Certaine times of penance are appointed by the gouernours of the Church, that the Church may be ſatisfied, *diſt.*1 *de pœnitent.c.*84. Satisfaction then is made not to God,but to the Church,and the releaſing thereof,as a remitting not of the puniſhment of ſin before God, but of the cenſure impoſed by the Church.

Thirdly,after this manner we denie not but the Church vſed in Tertullian and Cyprians time to reconcile offenders to the peace of the Church, and many times at the inſtance and requeſt of Martyrs,to remit vnto them ſome part of eccleſiaſticall cenſure: but this maketh nothing for the applying or communicating of other mens ſatisfactions. Auguſtine ſaith,as he is cited, *diſt.*1.*de pœnitent.c.*84. In actione pœnitentiæ,vbi tale crimen commiſſum eſt, vt qui commiſit à Chriſti corpore ſeparetur,non tam conſyderanda eſt menſura temporis,quam doloris: In the action of penance, where ſuch a ſinne is committed,that hee which committed it, muſt be ſeparated from the bodie of Chriſt, the meaſure of time muſt not be ſo much conſidered,as of griefe, &c. So then the ancient indulgence of Chriſt was this,when the Church ſeeing the vnfained ſorrow of the penitent perſons,in Chriſtian compaſſion,leſt they ſhould be ſwallowed vp of too much griefe,as the Apoſtle ſaith,2.Cor.2.7. did mitigate the rigor of the ſentence of the Church, and releaſe them of their penance. This diſcreete and Chriſtian lenitie ought ſtill to be retained in the Church,as Ambroſe well ſaith: Quemadmodum ſe tibi curandum præberet, qui ſe contemptui, non compaſſioni medico ſuo putet futurum: non ſunt pro Chriſti diſcipulis habendi,qui cum ipſi quærunt domini miſericordiam, alijs eam denegant: How ſhould a man commit himſelfe to be cured,when he ſeeth contempt rather than compaſſion to be in the Phiſition? they are not to be counted for the diſciples of Chriſt, that ſeeking mercie themſelues,denie it vnto others: *de pœnitent.lib.*1.1.

THE THIRD PROPOSITION, OF THE ANTIquitie and originall of Iubile pardons and indulgences.

The Papiſts.

IT is affirmed by them, that whereas the beginning, authors, time and place of other hereſies may be aſſigned, yet it cannot be ſhewed when Indulgences and Pardons were brought in: and therefore it is moſt like, that they tooke beginning from the Apoſtles time, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de indulg.c.*3. 27. Error.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt,the propoſition is not true, that all hereſies may be aſſigned to their ſeuerall authors: as Bernard thus witneſſeth of the Heretikes called Apoſtolici: Quære ab illis ſectæ authorem neminem dabunt: Aske of them the author of their ſect,they can ſhew none,&c. the Manichees had Manes, the Sabellians Sabellius, the Arrians Arrius, beginners of their ſect, &c. but theſe can ſhew none: *Cantic ſer.*66.

Secondly,it followeth not, the author of generall and plenarie Indulgences, grounded vpon the ouerflowing ſatisfactions of the Church cannot bee produced: Ergo, they came from Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Bernard ſheweth that this is no good conſequent: ſpeaking of the foreſaid heretikes, Apoſtolici, and in the ſame place: Non eſt ab homine illorum hæreſis abſit tamen vt per reuelationem Ieſu Chriſti, ſed magis per immiſſionem & fraudem dæmoniorum: Their hereſie is not from man,yet God forbid it ſhould be by reuelation of Ieſus Chriſt, but rather by the deceit and illuſion of the diuell.

Thirdly,we can produce and demonſtrate the author of their Iubile pardons,which was Boniface the 8.anno 1300.the firſt inſtitutor of the popiſh Iubile: Wee denie not, but that before this time in the declining ages of the Church,Indulgences were abuſed,and that anno 1170.or thereabout,exception was taken againſt them by the Waldenſes: but at the time aforeſaid, *ann.*1300. when Antichriſt came to his height,the moſt blaſphemous Indulgences, and Iubile pardons came in together with the Iubile,which then was reuiued by Boniface 8.

THE FOVRTH PROPOSITION.

The Papiſts.

28.Error. 1 B*Ellarmine* here telleth vs,that the Prelates of the Church may diſpenſe Chriſts ſuffrings both by the Sacraments,and by their Indulgences; yet the ſatisfactions and ſuffrings of the Saints
29.Error. 2 cannot be applied,but by indulgences: The reaſon is, becauſe their ſatisfactions ſerue onely for 30.Error. 3 the releaſe of the puniſhment, not for the remitting of the ſinne: but in the Sacraments,the puniſhment is not remitted without the ſinne,Bellarm.lib.1.c.3.propoſ.3.

The Proteſtants.

1 Confut. FIrſt, it is vntrue that the Sacraments doe giue and applie the grace of remiſſion by Chriſts ſuffrings: they are ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith,Rom.4.11.it is the propertie onely of faith to apprehend Chriſt,and to applie his merits: which faith is confirmed and encreaſed by the Sacraments. Wee doe in the Sacraments ſhew forth the death of Chriſt,1.Cor.11.26. as Ambroſe ſaith,Euchariſtia myſterium memoria redemptionis eſt: The myſterie of the Euchariſt is the memorie of the redemption, in 1.Cor.11. Faith by this memorie being renewed and reuiued, applieth Chriſt: without faith the Sacraments profit not: the Apoſtle biddeth to examine themſelues,and ſo eate of the bread, 1.Corinth.11.28. which examination is to trie their faith,1.Corinth.13.5. Ambroſe ſaith,Quid proficiunt Iudæi,quod ſanguine agni domos & poſtes illiniunt? quoniam ligna,aut ſaxa prodeſſe non poſſunt: What doth it profit the Iewes,that they annoynt their houſes and poſts with the blood of the Lambe? what can wood or ſtones profit them? ſerm.12.Pſal.119. No more doth water,bread or wine profit without faith.

2 Secondly,if in the Sacraments,as namely in Baptiſme,remittitur omnis pœna ſiue temporalis, ſiue aterna,all puniſhment of ſinne is remitted, both temporall and eternall, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, the application of the ſatisfactions of Saints is ſuperfluous to releaſe the temporall puniſhment, ſeeing it is done alreadie: And that the efficacie of Baptiſme extendeth to the waſhing away of all ſinnes both preceding and following; Saint Paul ſheweth, ſaying, that wee are ſaued by the waſhing of the new birth,and the renewing of the holie Ghoſt,Tit.3.5. If wee haue then perfect ſaluation in Baptiſme, what can bee added more? So Saint Hierome: Si baptiſmus nouum hominem facit,& ex toto nouum creat,nihilque in eo veteris hominis reſeruatur, non poteſt nouo imputari, quod in veteri quondam fuit: If Baptiſme make a man wholy new,that nothing of the old man remaine, that cannot be imputed to the new man,which was ſometime in the old:Hieron.Ocean.tom.3.

3 Thirdly,neither doth there remaine any puniſhment before God to be ſatisfied for, the ſinne being once remitted: but we being releaſed of our ſins,are alſo exempted from the puniſhment: as Chriſt ſaid to the man ſicke of the palſie, Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee,Mark.2.5. ſignifying, that together with his ſinne, his ſicknes, as it was a puniſhment thereof, was alſo looſed. The ſorrowes and griefes that ſtill hang vpon vs doe remaine,as Auguſtine ſaith, Vel ad demonſtrationem debita miſeria,vel ad emendationem labilis vita, vel ad exercitationem neceſſaria patientia: Either for a demonſtration of our deſerued miſerie,the emendation of our fraile life, or the exercitation of our neceſſarie patience: Tract.124.in Ioann. Wherefore the ſatisfactions of the Saints applicable by Indulgences,are ſuperfluous,ſeeing there remaineth after remiſſion of ſinnes obtained,no puniſhment before God to be ſatisfied for.

THE THIRD PART, WHAT Indulgence is.

THis part is diuided into foure queſtions: Firſt, whether the Indulgence of the Church be a ſpirituall ſolution,or a iudiciarie abſolution. Secondly,whether it be a releaſe, de pœnitentijs iniunctis vel iniungendis,of penance alreadie enioyned or to be enioyned. Thirdly, whether it be a remiſſion of the fault,or of the puniſhment onely. Fourthly,whether by indulgence the puniſhment due vnto ſinne be remitted before God.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER THE Indulgence of the Church be a ſpirituall ſolution onely, or a iudiciarie abſolution.

The Papiſts.

THis queſtion though it be chiefly controuerted among the popiſh writers thēſelues,yet I will briefly ſhew which part commeth neereſt the truth. Some of them thinke, that the Indulgence of the Church is onely an application of the treaſure of the Church,without any iudiciarie authoritie, and ſo a ſolution only: ſic Durand.in 4.diſtinct.20. qu.3. Paludan.ibid.qu.4.cum alijs.

Others thinke Indulgence to be nothing elſe, but iudiciariam abſolutionem, a iudiciarie abſolution, Franciſcus Maironis 4.ſent.diſt.19.qu.2. which ſeemeth to be the truer opinion, as I will ſhew afterward. Bellarmine he confoundeth both theſe opinions, and maketh Indulgence not onely a iudiciarie abſolution, but a ſpirituall ſolution. 31.Error.

Argum. His beſt argument is, becauſe Indulgence may be graunted to the dead, ouer whom no iudiciarie power can be exerciſed.

Anſw. 1. It is well that theſe popiſh Diuines, ſomewhat better aduiſed than their forefathers, doe exempt the dead from their iudiciarie Conſiſtories: yet the elder Papiſts haue not bin aſhamed to proceed iudicially againſt the dead: to cite them by proceſſe, call them by name in court, and for not appearing to proceede againſt them as contumacious, to produce witneſſes againſt them, and to condemne and burne them being dead. Thus was Richard Hun ſerued being dead, condemned and burnt in Smithfield: ſee his ſtorie Fox pag.808. And in like manner were Bucer and Paulus Phagius proceeded againſt in Cambridge before the Cardinals viſitors there: ſee likewiſe the ſtorie Fox pag.1961.

2. Bellarmine hath vſed a very ſillie argument: for the dead can neither be abſolued nor condemned by the ſentence of the liuing: God hath diſpoſed of them; and euery one receiueth his finall ſentence at his death: as a man dieth, ſo he lieth, and ſo he riſeth: As Auguſtine well ſaith: Vnuſquiſque cum cauſa ſua dormit, cum cauſa ſua ſurgit: Euery man ſleepeth or dieth with his cauſe, and with the ſame riſeth againe. So that in this caſe wee may applie the Apoſtles ſpeech, Rom.14. verſ.4. Who art thou that condemneſt another mans ſeruant? he ſtandeth, or falleth to his owne maſter. The dead are at Gods diſpoſition, and are no more ſeruants or at the commaund of the liuing. This place of the Apoſtle is ſo applied by Anaſtaſ.decret.2.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge a ſpirituall ſolution of ſinne in the Church of God, which is diſpenſed by the miniſterie of the word, and applicable to all them, which by faith are capable of it: but the Indulgence of the Church, which they make a releaſe onely of temporall puniſhment, is onely a iudiciarie abſolution in the outward face of the Church.

Argum. Such was that indulgence, pardon and forgiuenes graunted by Saint Paul to the penitent young man, 2.Cor.2.10. To whom you forgaue any thing, I forgiue alſo: This was nothing elſe but a releaſing of the offender from the ſentence of excommunication, after hee had ſufficiently ſorrowed. The ſpirituall ſolution, and forgiuenes of ſinnes, which followed his repentance, he receiued at Chriſts hands: but the outward cenſure was releaſed by the iudiciarie power of the Church.

Franciſcus Mairon. one of their owne Doctors, cited before, is of this opinion, that the Indulgence of the Church is but a Iudiciarie abſolution.

*Argum.*2. It further appeareth thus: no eccleſiaſticall Iudge, no not the Pope, can be partaker of that Indulgence, which he graunteth to another. Of this opinion are ſome of the Papiſts, Archidiacon.in cap.de indulg.in c.6. and the reaſon is, becauſe no man can abſolue himſelfe: wherefore the Indulgence is onely an abſolution: for as concerning the ſpirituall ſolution of ſinnes, he is as well partaker of it, that miniſtreth it, as he to whom it is miniſtred. And Bellarmine here greatly beſtirring himſelfe to ſhew how the Pope may receiue abſolution, reſolueth thus: that he vſeth abſolution to another, but himſelfe is benefited onely by the ſpirituall ſolution. But the Pope can applie no Indulgence to himſelfe: Ergo, it is an abſolution iudiciarie, Bellarm.cap.6. reſponſ.ad obiect.7.

The ſame is proued out of their owne law: Decret.Gregor.lib.5.tit.38.c.4.Alexand.3. A non ſuo iudice ligari nullus valeat, vel abſolui: No man can bee looſed or abſolued but of his owne iudge: Ergo, Indulgence onely reſpecteth the eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction, and iudiciarie power of the Church: for otherwiſe the ſpirituall ſolution of ſinne may be miniſtred by another, than the proper paſtor, in the preaching of the word, and applying of other ſpirituall comforts.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER INDVLgence be for penance enioyned, or to be enioyned.

The Papiſts.

WHen Indulgence is graunted, it muſt be vnderſtood that all kinde of penance is pardoned, both that which is alreadie enioyned or inflicted, or may be enioyned afterward: arguments he hath none of account, nor yet good reaſon for this aſſertion, lib.1.de Indulg.cap.7. concluſ.6. 32.Error.

The Proteſtants.

IT is a moſt abſurd and groſſe thing, that Indulgence ſhould not onely diſpenſe, with the penance alreadie inflicted by the ſentence of the Church, but to giue licence for that which may afterward be incurred: for what is this elſe but to giue men libertie from ſinne, beeing now exempted from the cenſure of the Church?

Argum. Saint Paul doth not ſo, but onely forgiueth the young man and releaſeth that cenſure which he was then vnder for his ſinne paſt, 2.Cor.2.6. It was ſufficient for the ſame man, that he was rebuked of many: he ſpeaketh of the rebuke and cenſure already paſt, he deliuereth him not from any ſentence of the Church, which he might incurre afterward.

Gelaſius to this purpoſe ſaith notably: Auditum ſub cœlo non legitur, quod eorum voce depromitur, date nobis veniam, dum tamen nos in errore duremus: neſcio inter quæ mundi prodigia hoc poſſit admitti: remitti culpa de præterito poteſt, correctione ſine dubio ſubſequente: nam ſi deinceps ſinitur manſura peruerſitas, non eſt benignitas remittentis, ſed conſentientis aſſentio: It was neuer heard vnder heauen, as they ſay; giue vs pardon, while we notwithſtanding continue in error: I cannot tell among what monſters this may be accounted: the fault may be remitted for the time paſt, correction or amendment following: but if by this meanes their peruerſitie doe remaine, it is not a benignitie in the remitter, but a conſpiracie in the conſenter: Gelaſ. epiſt. ad Fauſtum: Thus then the remiſſion of puniſhment to come, is a further inſtigation vnto ſinne.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER AN Indulgence be a remiſſion of the fault, or puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine alleageth to this purpoſe certaine diſtinctions, there is a double guilt, eyther of the ſinne, or puniſhment: the puniſhment is either naturall, as death, ſicknes; or perſonall, as was the plague ſent vpõ the people in Dauids time: and it is either in the internal court of the conſciẽce; or the external court of the Church: the internal is of two ſorts, either to ſatisfie God, or the Church.

33.Error. Then he ſetteth downe this poſition, that by the Indulgence of the Church we are not deliuered from the guilt of any ſinne, veniall or mortall, but of the puniſhment onely.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, I note certaine abſurdities and contradictions in the foreſaid diſtinctions, 1. Whereas he maketh the plague in Dauids time to be a perſonall puniſhment, and he thinketh that Indulgences may take away perſonall puniſhments, I aske whether the Popes Iubile-Pardons and indulgences can preuent, or turne aſide the peſtilence: If they were of ſuch force, I thinke the Pope would not ſuffer the plague ſo often to viſite Rome. 2. He maketh the ſatisfaction of the Church to belong to the internall court, whereas the court of the Church is externall.

Secondly, we ſay that the ſpirituall indulgence of Chriſt in the Church, being applied and apprehended by faith doth deliuer vs both from the ſinne and paine: but the eccleſiaſticall indulgence doth onely releaſe the externall puniſhment not before God, but before men.

Thirdly, this poſition of Bellarmine is contrarie to the Popes Iubile-pardons, which go vnder this tenure: Boniface. 8. *Non ſolum plenam & largiorem, ſed pleniſſimam concedimus veniam omnium peccatorum: extrau.commun.lib.*5.*tit.*9.*c.*1. We grant not onely full, and larger, but moſt full remiſſion of all their ſins: ſo likewiſe Clemens 6. in his Bull: Suorum omnium obtinerent pleniſſimam veniam peccatorum: That they ſhould obtaine moſt full pardon of all their ſins: Sixtus the fourth alſo doth call them, indulgentias & remiſſiones peccatorum, indulgences and remiſſions of ſinnes.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. That whereas ſometime mention is made in the letters of abſolution, à pœna & culpa, from the puniſhment and the fault, it is ſo ſaid, becauſe ordinarily abſolution is ioyned with confeſſion, whereby the fault is pardoned: 2. By pardon or remiſſion of ſinnes we muſt vnderſtand the puniſhment.*c.*7.*propoſ.*1.

Contra 1. But your indulgences are properly granted, you ſay, without a Sacrament: as Bellarmine defineth it, Indulgentia eſt abſolutio, &c. extra ſacramentum data: Indulgence is abſolution giuen without a Sacrament. *c.*8. in fine: Then cannot an indulgence take away the fault, which is onely releaſed in the Sacraments: that clauſe therefore, à pœna & culpa, in their indulgences is contrarie to their owne doctrine.

2. Neither by plenarie remiſſion of ſins can the puniſhment in any ſenſe be vnderſtood, 1. It is called pleniſſima, a moſt full pardon, omnium peccatorum, of all ſinnes: if moſt full, and of all, how are the ſins themſelues excluded? 2. I pray you how doe you vnderſtand your beliefe: credo remiſſionem peccatorum, I beleeue the remiſſion of ſinnes: doe ye beleeue the puniſhment only remitted, and not the ſinne? vnleſſe your Bull beleeueth otherwiſe then the Creed, as it doth indeed, and bringeth in a new faith. 3. Boniface in his Bull maketh this preface: Quia iuxta officij noſtri debitum, ſalutem appetimus ſingulorũ: Becauſe according to our bounden dutie, we ſeek the ſaluation of all: but to ſaluation, not the releaſing only of the paine, but the remitting of the debt belongeth.

Fourthly, that the ſatisfactions of Chriſt applied (for ſatisfactions of Saints applicable, we acknowledge none) doe deliuer à pœna & culpa, both from the ſinne and the puniſhment, it is euident uident out of Scripture, Iohn.13.10. He that is waſhed by Chriſt, eſt mundus totus, is cleane euerie whit: there remaineth then nothing to be waſhed away: And they themſelues confeſſe, that baptiſme doth waſh away both the ſinne and puniſhment: likewiſe the Apoſtle, Hebr.7.25. He is able perfectly to ſaue them, that come vnto God. If Chriſt then do ſaue vs perfectly, then both from ſinne and the penaltie.

Peter Lombard confeſſeth as much: Per ipſius pœnam, quam in cruce tulit, omnis pœna temporalis, quæ pro peccato conuerſis debetur in baptiſmo penitus relaxatur, vt nulla à baptizato exigatur, &c. By Chriſts paine, which he ſuffered vpon the croſſe, all temporall paine, which is due for ſin to them, which are conuerted, is altogether releaſed in baptiſme, that none at all is exacted of him that is baptized. *lib.*3.*diſt.*19.liter.d. If then there remaine no puniſhment after baptiſme, your indulgences are nothing worth.

I will conclude with Saint Ambroſe: who ſpeaking of the gathering of Manna, Exod. 16.18. He that had gathered much, had nothing ouer, and he that had gathered little, had no lacke: Hoc plenius de ſanguine Chriſti intelligitur, &c. Etſi parum ſumas, etſi plurimum haurias eadem perfecta eſt omnibus menſura redemptionis: This is more fully vnderſtoode of the blood of Chriſt, though you take little or draw much, there is the ſame perfect meaſure of redemption to all, *Epiſt.*1. Wherefore if by Indulgences, neuer ſo little of Chriſts blood be applied, the redemption is perfect, both from the ſinne and penaltie, for otherwiſe it ſhould not be perfect.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, WHETHER THE INDVLgences of the Church, deliuer from the puniſhment of ſinne, not onely before the Church, but before God.

The Papiſts.

IT is ſo affirmed by Bellarmine, that by the cenſure of the Church impoſed vpon offenders, they doe not onely ſatisfie the Church, but God alſo, and ſo conſequently the Indulgence of the Church doth ſet them free from the guilt of the puniſhment of ſinne, both before God and men. 34 Error

*Argum.*1. Matth.18.18. Whatſoeuer ye looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in Heauen: if it be looſed in heauen, then before God. 1

2. Penance voluntarilie aſſumed, or priuatly enioyned, cannot be for example ſake to ſatisfie men, therefore thereby God is ſatisfied: as Pſalm.6.6. I water my couch euery night with teares. 2

3. Tertullian ſaith: Qui per delictorum pœnitentiam inſtituerat domino ſatisfacere: Which had purpoſed to ſatisfie God by the penance of his ſinnes: lib. de pœnitent. Cyprian alſo is alleaged: Dominus noſtra ſatisfactione placendus: God is to be pleaſed with our ſatisfaction. Likewiſe Auguſtine: De ijs, quæ facta ſunt, ſatisfiat Deo per pœnitentiæ dolorem: God muſt be ſatisfied for the things that are done by the ſorrowe of repentance: Ergo, God is ſatisfied by penitentiarie workes: *Bellarm.c.*7.*prop.*4. 3

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, we graunt that the ſpirituall diſpenſation of the Church doth truely looſe the penitent perſons by faith in Chriſt, both from the ſinne and puniſhment: but that Indulgence which onely releaſeth the puniſhment, is but a relaxation before the Church, therefore this place, which is vnderſtoode of looſing and binding of ſinnes, is vnproperly alleaged for the releaſe of the puniſhment onely. 1

Secondly, 1. Voluntarie and priuate repentance, though it be not to the eye of the world, to ſatisfie men: yet it is profitable more effectually to humble their owne ſoule: as Auguſtine ſaith ſpeaking of prayer, which may be applied alſo to outward ſorrowe for ſinne: Geſtu corporis, vt flexione genuum, extenſione manuum ſeipſum magis homo excitat ad orandum, illiſque rurſus viſibiliter factis, inuiſibilis animi affectus augetur: By the geſture of the bodie, as the bowing of the knees, the ſpreading of the hands, a man doth ſtirre vp himſelfe to prayer: and theſe things being viſiblie done, the inuiſible affection of the ſoule is encreaſed: *de cur. mortuor. lib.*5. 2. It followeth not then in priuate repentance, man is not ſatisfied: Ergo, God is ſatisfied: for there is another ſatiſfaction beſide, when a man by ſufficient ſorrowe and puniſhment, as it were taken of himſelfe, doth ſatisfie his owne ſoule: and beſide priuate repentance, though it preuaile not to ſatisfaction, yet it is auailable to effectuall contrition, and vnfained conuerſion. 2

Thirdly, concerning the teſtimonie of the Fathers. Firſt, we deny not but ſome of them doe vſe that phraſe of ſpeech, to ſatisfie God by repentance: but not in the popiſh ſenſe, to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, for Tertullian ſpeaketh of ſatisfying for ſinne: yet the Papiſts themſelues holde no ſatiſfaction in penance for ſinne, but for the puniſhment onely. Secondly, God then is ſaid to be ſatiſfied, that is pleaſed with the worke of repentance: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.13.17. With ſuch ſa- 3 crifice, God is pleaſed or delighted: his iuſtice is not ſatisfied, but his will pleaſed in Chriſt, when he ſeeth his pleaſure obeyed by our repentance: So Bernard vnderſtandeth ſatisfaction. Condigna ſatisfactio eſt malefacta corrigere, & correcta non reiterare : It is condigne ſatisfaction, to correct euill deeds, and not to iterate or do them againe, proœm. de inter. dom. But this is no ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice for a man to turne from his euill wayes, otherwiſe then as God through Chriſt is well pleaſed therewith. Thirdly, there are then foure kinds of ſatisfactions: the firſt is to God: the ſecond to the Church publikely: the third to men whom we haue offended priuately: the fourth to a mans owne ſoule : the firſt by vs can be no way perfourmed : for as Iob ſaith, 9.3. Wee cannot anſwere God one thing of a thouſand : Vix milleſima parti debitorum quis valeat reſpondere : a man can ſcarce anſwere the thouſandth part of his debt to God: Bernard. de quadrupl. debit. This ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice we muſt wholly remit vnto Chriſt. The other three ſatisfactions are in mans power : firſt, to ſatiſfie the Church, 2.Cor.2.6. It is ſufficient for the ſame man, that he was rebuked of many : Arauſican. concil. 1. decret. ex Gratian. The ancient forme of excommunication was this: Authoritate Dei & iudicio ſancti ſpiritus è gremio ſanctæ matris Eccleſiæ eliminamus, quouſque reſipiſcant & Eccleſiæ ſatiſfaciant, &c. By the authoritie of God and his holy ſpirite, we caſt them out of the boſome of the Church, vntill they repent, and ſatisfie the Church. Secondly, our brother whome we haue offended, muſt be ſatisfied; as Zacheus reſtoreth foure foulde, that which he had wrongfully gotten, Luke 19.8. Auguſtine alſo ſaith : Peccaſti in fratrem, fac ſatis & ſanatus es: Haſt thou offended againſt thy brother, ſatisfie him, and thou art healed : Serm. 16. in Matth. Thirdly, by godly repentance a man doth ſatisfie his owne ſoule, and cleare his conſcience by puniſhing of himſelfe: as 2.Cor.7.11. this godly ſorrow, what great care hath it wrought in you, &c. what puniſhment, &c. you haue ſhewed your ſelues in all things that you are pure in this matter. To this purpoſe S. Auguſtine, Quid aliud eſt ieiunium, quam debita membrorum ſatisfactio? membra enim ſatisfacere debent propter peccata, quæ commiſerunt; vnde ſi quis in gula peccauerit, ſatisfaciat ieiunio, ſi in oculo claudatur : What elſe is faſting, but a due ſatisfaction of the members? for the members muſt ſatisfie for the ſinne they haue committed : if a man haue ſinned in gluttonie, let him make ſatisfaction by faſting; if in his eye, let him keepe it ſhut : Ad fratres in erem. ſerm. 24. All theſe kinds of ſatisfactions we admit, but Gods iuſtice cannot be ſatisfied by vs: Chriſt onely hath ſo ſatisfied God for vs, both for ſinne and puniſhment, and appeaſed his wrath, and ſlaine hatred by his croſſe, and reconciled vs to God, Epheſ.2.16. Auguſtine well ſaith (to conclude this poynt) Fateor, quia peccaui & conſcientia mea meretur damnationem, & pœnitentia mea non ſufficit ad ſatisfactionem; ſed certum eſt, quod miſericordia tua ſuperat omnem offenſionem : I confeſſe I haue ſinned, and my conſcience deſerueth damnation, but my repentance ſufficeth not for ſatisfaction; but it is certaine, that thy mercie exceedeth all tranſgreſſion: Tom. 9. meditat. c. 39.

Laſtly, we haue one of their owne ſide againſt them : Petrus Paludanus, who affirmeth, that veniall ſinnes and not the puniſhment onely are releaſed by Indulgences: In 4. diſt. 20. qu. 4.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DIVERS kinds of Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

35.Error. BEllarmine rehearſeth fiue kindes of Indulgences, and he iuſtifieth them all : 1. There is an Indulgence of fortie dayes, which is a releaſe of the penance which was to be done fortie dayes.

36.Error. 2. There is an Indulgence of the third or fourth part of their ſinnes, that is, of the puniſhment due for ſo much of their ſinnes.

37.Error. 3. An Indulgence plenarie was from the whole puniſhment : and ſometime Indulgences are graunted for ten or twentie thouſand yeares : for euery mortall ſinne deſerueth a penance of three or ſeuen yeares : then ſo many blaſphemies and other ſinnes, as are by ſome committed euery moment, deſerue many thouſand yeares penance : which notwithſtanding by the ſharpnes of Purgatorie paine, may be ſatisfied for in three or foure hundred yeares.

38.Error. 4. Indulgences are graunted to ſome in their life time, to ſome in the poynt of death.

39.Error. 5. Some are temporarie, for a time, as limited to dayes or yeares, ſome are perpetuall, which are tied to places, Churches, altars, or to things moueable, as to roſaries, holy graines, &c. All theſe kindes of Indulgences Bellarmine holdeth to be good and godly : but for this we muſt take his word, for Scriptures or good reaſons he hath none.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, 1. if your Indulgences doe releaſe the puniſhment due to Gods iuſtice, what great preſumption is it for you, to limite God to fortie dayes, that the puniſhment of the offender ſhould for that time be ſuſpended : this was the ſinne of Iſrael, Pſalm. 88.41. Circumſcripſerunt Deum Iſrael: They limited the God of Iſrael. 2. Likewiſe Bellarmine hath this poſition, that Indulgences doe not take away the paines, that are inioyned in courts eccleſiaſticall : cap.7.prop.3. and yet here he ſaith, that indulgentia quadragena, this indulgence of fortie daies is a releaſe of penance, which was to be done fortie daies : which penance is inflicted by the Church. Thus he is found contrarie to himſelfe. 3. I haue ſhewed before that the releaſe of puniſhment to be inflicted, is contrarie to the Scriptures and the ancient practiſe of the Church : ſee before.*err.*32.

Secondly, if your indulgences doe releaſe from puniſhment before God, then they ſhould not releaſe from the third or fourth part onely, but from the whole puniſhment : for where God pardoneth, he forgiueth al: he worketh perfectly, Pſal.68.28. Finiſh, O Lord, that which thou haſt wrought in vs: and the wiſe man ſaith : Eccleſ.3.14. I know, that whatſoeuer God doth, it ſhall be for euer, to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminiſh. 2. Neither when the Church forgiueth, doth it pardon onely in part, but wholly; as 2.Cor.2.8. Confirme or ratifie your loue toward him; verſ.10. I forgaue in the ſight of Chriſt, that is freely from the heart : thus was the young man fully reſtored to the Church, and not in part only : likewiſe Philem.15. Saint Paule writeth vnto him to receiue his ſeruant Oneſimus, Who had offended him, for euer; verſ.17. receiue him as my ſelfe : that is, freely, frankely, wholly, fully. 3. But this releaſiug of the third or fourth part of penance is but a popiſh tricke for their further aduantage : that looke how many parts men would be releaſed of, they ſhould pay ſo many pounds more. 2

Thirdly, 1. Plenarie indulgence from the whole puniſhment of ſinne, is but an encouragement to ſinners, and a meanes to make them more ſecure : for though they ſinne, yet they are free from puniſhment : Chriſt ſaith otherwiſe to the lame man, Iohn.5.14. Sinne no more, leaſt a worſe thing happen vnto thee : Chriſt releaſeth him for that preſent of the puniſhment of his ſinne, the lamenes of his bodie, but he giueth him no generall warrant. To this purpoſe Gelaſius as I cited him before, and as he is alleaged, cauſ.24.qu.2.c.2. Date veniam dummodo nos in errore duremus: pardon vs, that we may continue in error ſtill. Secondly, they are blaſphemous indulgences, that are made for twentie thouſands of yeeres: for thus they take vpon them to releaſe eternall puniſhment, which is contrarie to their owne doctrine : for that puniſhment which is extended beyond the time of purgatorie, which ſhall end with the world, muſt needes be the euerlaſting puniſhment of hell. 2. If then they can giue indulgence for hell puniſhment, they can deliuer damned ſoules, which is an horrible blaſphemie, and contrarie to the Scripture, Luk.26.16. They cannot come from thence to vs : and how farre are they then from that hereſie, that diuels and all in the end ſhould be ſaued, which is confuted by Saint *Auguſtine.lib.21.de ciuitat.c.*17.23. 3. It is true, that a mans ſinnes may be ſo great and ſo many, as that he may be worthie not onely of twentie thouſand yeeres but euerlaſting puniſhment : as he giueth inſtance of ſuch as blaſpheme euery moment : but doe ye thinke ſuch obſtinate and incorrigible ſinners capable of your indulgences? you are verie lauiſh of the treaſure of the Church, to grant it to ſuch. 4. And ſeeing your purgatorie paine is imagined to be ſo great, that one day of puniſhment there is anſwerable to many yeeres of penance in this life, how can three or foure hundred yeeres paines in purgatorie ſatisfie for twentie thouſand? and miſerable comforters are ye, to appoint men ſo many hundred yeeres puniſhment in purgatorie: it is nothing elſe but to feare them, that they may giue the more money not to come there. 5. But though Bellarmine be not aſhamed of theſe blaſphemous indulgences for twentie thouſand yeeres, who taketh vpon him euerywhere to defend the moſt groſſeſt points in poperie : yet ſome of the learned Papiſts are more modeſt, who thinke that ſuch indulgences are neuer granted by the Pope, but deuiſed of the pardoners for their gaine : Gerſon in tract. de abſolut. ſacrament. Dominic. à Soto in 4. diſtinct. 21.qu. 2.artic. 1. and ſo Bellarmine himſelfe alleageth. 3

Fourthly, 1. I pray you from what puniſhment doe you releaſe men at the point of death? ſeeing there remaineth none but in hel, frō the which (ſay you) you releaſe not: for your purgatory fire is but a popiſh ſcarbugge to feare thoſe with, that beleeue your lies : ſeeing the theefe, that had ſo many ſinnes to be purged of, and made no ſatisfaction for them, went ſtraight from the croſſe to Paradiſe, which I thinke you will not ſay was in purgatorie. 2. A man vpon his deathbed being truly contrite, may be comforted with the declaration of the forgiuenes of his ſinne in Chriſt, as it is in Iob.33.23. His ſoule draweth neere to the graue, and his life to the buriers : if there be a meſſenger with him, to declare vnto man his righteouſnes : but puniſhment there remaineth none to be releaſed to him, that dieth in the faith of Chriſt : 3. Vnleſſe we count it a puniſhment for the bodie to lie in the graue : but from this not your indulgence, but Chriſts omnipotence ſhall free vs at the latter day; as your maſter ſaith: A temporali pœna nos penitus liberabit in futuro, cum nouiſſima mors inimica deſtruetur, adhuc enim expectamus redemptionem corporis : From temporall paine he ſhall fully free vs hereafter, when as the laſt enemie death ſhall be deſtroyed, for we yet looke for the redemption of our bodies, lib.3.diſtinct.19.lit.c. 4

Fiftly, it is moſt groſſe and abſurd, to limit the power of indulgences to altars, Churches, or any other thing without life and ſenſe. 1. The Phariſes were not ſo blinde, for they held this as a 5 principle, that none can forgiue ſinnes but God, Mark.2.7. What then doe ye elſe, but make ſtones and walles as Gods to forgiue ſinnes? 2. The Prophet Haggie ſheweth that a mans garment touching holy fleſh is not holy, Hag.2.23. your altar ſtones haue no greater vertue, then the holy fleſh of the ſacrifices, nor yet ſo much, becauſe that was of Gods inſtitution, the other is of your owne inuention; how can they then make holy thoſe that touch them? 3. We may ſay then as Ambroſe of the poſtes and ſtones of the Iewes houſes, which they ſtriked with the bloud of the Lambe: Quid ligna & ſaxa prodeſſe poſſunt? What can wood or ſtones profit. ſerm.12.in Pſal.119.

6 Sixtly, to conclude then: we may finde that in the ancient former times, there were diuers kindes of penance enioyned for yeeres more or leſſe according to the qualitie of the offence: As players at dice had one yeeres penance appointed. Eliberin.79. They which were preſent at the pagans feaſtes, two yeeres. ibid. can. 55. They which, though conſtrained, did eate in idoll temples, foure yeeres. Ancyran.c.5. They which obſerued diuinations, fiue yeeres. concil. Ancyran. can.23. They which were threatened and ſo ſacrificed, did penance ſix yeeres. ibid.c.6. They which did twice ſacrifice to idols, ſeuen yeeres. Ancyran. can. 8. They which perſwaded others to ſacrifice, tenne yeeres. ibid. can. 9. They which lay with brute beaſtes, twentie yeeres. Ancyran. can.16.

We alſo confeſſe that this power was left to the gouernors of the Church, to ſhorten theſe times of penance according to the contrition of the offender: as it was thus decreed. Nicen.1.can.11. Quicunque cum omni timore & lachrimis conuerſationem ſuam non verbis ſolum, ſed opere demonſtrant, licebit epiſcopo humanius circa eos aliquid ſtatuere: Whoſoeuer with feare and teares doe not onely in word, but in deed ſhew their conuerſation, it ſhal be lawfull for the Biſhop to ſhew them fauour, &c. But theſe were relaxations of penance inflicted by the Church, no indulgences of puniſhment not enioyned by the Church before God.

THE FIFT PART, TO WHOM INDVLGENces are profitable

The Papiſts.

40. Error. They hold that indulgentes are profitable to all whoſoeuer, not onely to notorious and publike offenders, but euen to thoſe that are tending to perfection: his reaſon is this; becauſe it is profitable to all to be deliuered from thoſe things, which hinder them from eternall life; but ſuch is the temperall paine of purgatorie, which keepeth them backe a while, that they cannot go to heauen. Bellarm.cap.10.

Anſw. 1. We grant that all men though neuer ſo perfect haue need of Chriſts indulgence in the remiſſion of their ſinnes, for there is none that ſinneth not: as Saint Iohn ſaith. 1.1,10. He that ſaith he ſinneth not, is a lyar. 2. But as for the externall indulgences of the Church (for other indulgence from the puniſhment onely we acknowledge none) they belong not to the innocent and vertuous liuers, but to offenders that muſt be reſtrained by the cenſures of the Church: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, lex non eſt poſita iuſtis: the law is not giuen to a righteous man, 1.Tim.1.10. 3. Doth your purgatorie paine then hinder mens going to heauen? it is a ſhame for you then to driue ſo many ſoules thither, if you can keepe them from thence by your plenarie indulgences. 4. If purgatorie were ſuch a place as you imagine it, where men are purged from their ſinnes, and ſo made fitter to go to heauen, it is no hindrance but a furtherance to them: like as the fire doth no hurt to the gold that is purified by it: as Iob ſaith, exibo vt aurum, I ſhall come forth like golde. Iob.23.10. 5. And they which are perfect, in your owne doctrine ſhall not goe to purgatorie, but ſtraight to heauen: as Paul preſently vpon his diſſolution knew he ſhould be with Chriſt, Phil. 1.23. And it is an approued ſaying among you: Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth iniurie to a martyr that prayeth for him, that is, ſuppoſing him to be in purgatorie, for they only of the dead are to be praied for in your ſenſe: if all then need not feare purgatory, then indulgences are not profitable to all.

The Proteſtants.

That indulgences of the Church are not profitable to the iuſt and righteous, it is thus proued.

Argum. 1. It profiteth not to be deliuered from that which worketh vnto a mans ſaluation: but the afflictions and puniſhment of this life are ſuch, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſal.119.71. It is good for me that I haue beene afflicted, and the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Pet.1.23. Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps: Ergo, from ſuch temporall afflictions, indulgences are not to be ſought.

2. It is better for a man to liue by himſelfe and his owne faith, then to ſeeke ſatisfaction by an other: but the iuſt liueth by his faith, Rom.1.17. Ergo, he needeth not another mans ſatisfaction.

Anſw. Firſt,ſuch afflictions as further their ſaluation,are not to be ſhunned: but ſuch as withhold from entring into heauen,as is the temporall paine of Purgatorie. 1

Secondly, as it is better for a man to goe vpon both legges, than one: ſo to relie vpon other mens ſatisfactions as well as his owne, is a ſafer and more ſure way: *Bellarm.cap.*10.reſponſ.ad 1. & 3.obiect. 2

Contra. Firſt,if you graunt all temporall paines profitable,but onely the ſuppoſed torments of Purgatorie,then are no paines or puniſhments at all left,to be releaſed by your Indulgences: for your purgatorie fire hath been long agoe quenched by the water of life flowing from the Scriptures: 1. Chriſt hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes, Hebr.1.3. wee doe not purge them our ſelues. 2. The Scripture acknowledgeth but two places after this life, heauen or hell: Rom.2.9. Tribulation and anguiſh ſhall be vpon the ſoule of euery one that doth euill: but to euery one that doth good, glorie and honour. So ſaith Saint Ambroſe: Qui non intrat regnum,neceſſario remanet in inferno: He that entreth not into the kingdome,remaineth in hell, *ſerm.*22. 3. That ſtate wherein a man dyeth can not be altered, 2.Cor.5.10. Euery man ſhall receiue according to the things done in the bodie. Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Mors deteriorem ſtatum non efficit, ſed qualem in ſingulis inuenerit,talem iudicio futuro reſeruat: Death maketh not a mans ſtate worſe,but as it findeth euery one; ſo it reſerueth them to the iudgement to come,&c. But concerning the vanitie of this deuice of Purgatorie,I haue treated before at large, *Contr.*9.*qu.*1.*part.*2. 2. If Purgatorie be ſuch a place, as they imagine, which ſerueth to purge away the reliques of ſinne,it is no hindrance but a furtherance: like as the rodde of correction is profitable to the childe,and doth deliuer his ſoule from hell, Prou.23.14. 3. If Purgatorie be a let becauſe it ſtayeth the ſoule a while from heauen: by the ſame reaſon alſo all the afflictions of this life are lets: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, While we are at home in the bodie, we are abſent from the Lord, 2.Cor.5.6. 1

Secondly, 1. the ſimilitude which he vſeth is not fitly or properly applied,which rather may be turned thus: that as it is better for a man to go vpon his owne legs, than to leane vpon anothers ſtaffe; and if he can goe vpright of himſelfe,to lay hold of another is but an hindrance: ſo in the matter of ſaluation it is better to truſt to a mans owne faith. 2. So the Scripture ſaith, Rom.1.17. The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, that is,euery one by his owne faith: As, The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye, Ezech.18.20. No man ſhall beare anothers puniſhment: ſo no mans faith can profit another: Qui per vos peccaſtis,per vos erubeſcatis: They that ſin by themſelues,muſt repent by themſelues: *Cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*1.*c.*88. 2

THE SIXT PART, TO WHOM THE POWER to graunt Indulgences belongeth.

The Papiſts.

First,the power of graunting Indulgences doth reſt onely in the Pope as the ſucceſſor of Peter, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Whatſoeuer you looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen, Matth.16.19. 1 41.Error.

Secondly, plenarie Indulgences can onely bee graunted by the Pope, neither by Cardinals, whoſe indulgences exceede not an hundred dayes, neither by Biſhops or Metropolitanes,who can graunt indulgences but for one yeere in the dedication of Churches, and for fortie dayes at other times: nor yet by generall Councels. 2 42.Error.

Thirdly,Biſhops receiue this power to giue indulgences not immediatly from God, but from the Pope,from whom alſo they receiue their iuriſdiction: and this is an argument thereof,becauſe the Pope may make voyde indulgences graunted by Biſhops: but ſo can he not Orders or Sacraments miniſtred by them. 3 43.Error.

Fourthly,Pariſh paſtors haue no power to giue indulgences,but by commiſſion from the Pope, or their Biſhop; becauſe they are the princes of the people of God, to whom it belongeth to diſtribute the common goods of the Church. 4 44.Error.

Fiftly, the power of order is not neceſſarie to giue indulgences,but the power of iuriſdiction onely, and therefore the Pope or Biſhop may graunt indulgences, though they bee not in Orders. 5 45.Error.

Sixtly,neither is this power of indulgences loſt by any deadly ſin: *ſic Bellar.lib.de Indulg.c.*11. 6 46.Error.

The Proteſtants.

First,the keyes of the Church to binde or looſe, open or ſhut, were no more committed to *Peter,*than vnto the reſt of the Apoſtles: as Saint Hierome well noteth: Cuncti claues regni cœlorum accipiunt, & ex æquo ſuper eos eccleſiæ fortitudo ſolidatur: All the Apoſtles receiue the keyes of the kingdome,and the ſtrength of the Church equally is founded vpon them all, lib. 1.aduerſ. Iouinian. For as in this place the words ſeeme to be ſpoken to Peter, though for, and in the name of the reſt: ſo elſewhere the commiſſion is graunted generally to all, Matth.28.18. Whatſoeuer you binde in earth,&c. And Ioh.20.23. Whoſe ſinnes you remit,they are remitted. 1

2 Secondly, 1. plenarie Indulgences neither Pope, Cardinall, nor Biſhop haue power to graunt, but they are reſerued onely to Chriſt: 1. Iohn. 1. 7. The blood of Chriſt (onely purgeth) from all ſin. 2. In the adminiſtration of the Church-keyes, the Pope hath no preeminence before other Biſhops, but they haue the ſame power in their dioceſſe, which he hath in his: as Saint Peter diſdaineth not to call the reſt of the paſtors Elders, and himſelfe συμπρεσβύτερον, a fellow Elder, 1. Pet. 5. 1. and he exhorteth them to feede the flocke: not taking this office of feeding wholy to himſelfe. 3. Yet though Peter bee prooued to haue had a ſuperioritie, it is not ſtraight deriued to the Pope, who is not his true ſucceſſor. Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Oues Chriſti non ſolum tum ſuſcepit beatus Petrus, ſed & nobiſcum eas ſuſcepit, & cum illo eas ſuſcepimus omnes: The ſheepe of Chriſt bleſſed Peter did not then onely receiue, but he tooke them together with vs, and wee with him: de dignit. ſacerdot. c. 2. 4. As for that diſtinction of plenarie Indulgences for fortie, an hundred dayes, for a yeere, it is but a Romiſh deuice, and of no antiquitie, for the Popes aduauntage, and as a ſteppe to lift vp the Pope into his chaire of pride, that in euery caſe ſtill a prerogatiue may be reſerued to him. 5. The office and calling of Cardinals is one of the Popes creatures, and what priuiledge they haue, wee do not greatly force: it is grounded rather vpon cuſtome, than any law, as Bellarmine confeſſeth cap. 11. we hold both the calling of them, with all their immunities to be Antichriſtian, as I haue ſhewed before, Contr. 5. qu. 3. part. 3. 6. Concerning generall Councels, that they haue authoritie aboue the Pope, I haue likewiſe prooued before, Contr. 3 qu. 7. whither I referre the reader: And that Councels may alſo giue plenarie Indulgences as well as the Pope, it appeareth both by their practiſe: for ſo did the Councell of Baſill, wherein Panormitane alloweth the act of the Councell, a great popiſh Doctor, though Bellarmine call it a ſchiſmaticall Councell: And beſide of this iudgement are Felinus ſer. de indulg. num. 28. Dominic. à Soto, Nauarrus, with others cited by Bellar. cap. 11.

3 Thirdly, Biſhops and paſtors receiue their calling from God, and not from the Pope: Act. 20. verſ. 28. Spiritus ſanctus conſtituit vos Epiſcopos, &c. The holie Spirit hath made you Biſhops. Cyprian: Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, ac per hoc ad omnes præpoſitos, qui Apoſtolis vicaria ordinatione ſuccedunt: Chriſt ſaith to the Apoſtles, and to all gouernours of the Church, which ſucceede the Apoſtles as their Vicars, lib. 4. epiſt. 9. Hierom. Omnes epiſcopi Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores: All Biſhops are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, Euagrio. Their authoritie then is not deriued to them from the Pope: 2. neither can the Pope infringe or make voide the acts of other Biſhops by right, but therein he is an vſurper: As Cyprian ſaith: Nec quiſquam epiſcopum ſe eſſe epiſcoporum conſtituit, aut tyrannidis terrore ad obſequendi neceſſitatem collegas ſuos adigit, &c. None of vs muſt make himſelfe a Biſhop of Biſhops, or with tyrannicall feare compell his colleagues to obey, &c. in concil. Carthag.

4 Fourthly, 1. that Biſhops are princes of the Lords people, is contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1. Peter 5. 3. Not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods heritage. Saint Hierome ſaith: Patres ſe ſciant eſſe, non dominos: Let them know themſelues to be fathers, not Lords, Hieron. ad Theophil. 2. All paſtors, to whom the preaching of the word is committed, by the ſame word haue authoritie to bind and looſe: that which our Sauiour ſpake to his Apoſtles, Ioh. 20. 23. Whoſe ſinnes you remit &c. is vnderſtood of all paſtors: and the Rhemiſts confeſſe in their annotations vpon this place, that this ſpeciall facultie of the Prieſthood conſiſting in remitting of ſinne, is here beſtowed vpon them. Saint Paul ſheweth, that all paſtors and teachers are giuen, for the gathering together of the Saints, the worke of the miniſtrie, the edification of the bodie of Chriſt, Epheſ. 4. 12. But theſe duties cannot be performed without the power of binding and looſing. Hierome ſaith, Quid facit excepta ordinatione epiſcopus, quod non facit preſbyter? What doth a Biſhop, beſide ordination, which a presbyter doth not? Hierom. Euag. Origen ſaith: Epiſcopis & preſbyteris credita ſunt cathedræ: The chaire of the Church is committed to Biſhops and Prieſts, tract. 15. in Matth. Your owne decrees witneſſe: Qui vult confiteri quærat ſacerdotem ſcientem ligare, & ſoluere: Hee that will confeſſe, let him ſeeke a prieſt, that knoweth how to binde and looſe, Cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 88. Laſtly, ſome of your owne Doctors doe affirme, that euery prieſt that heareth confeſſions, hath authoritie to abſolue and graunt Indulgences: Angelus in ſumma verb. indulgent. num. 5. Bartholom. Fumus. in ſumma verb. indulgent. num. 2. And thus much Bellarmine acknowledgeth.

5 Fiftly, 1. that the power of Indulgence may be diſpenſed by any which are not entred into the Orders of the Church, nor admitted to the miniſtrie of the word, it is contrarie to the Scriptures: for Chriſt ſpeaketh to his Apoſtles, whom hee had choſen and appointed to that office before, Matth. 10. 1. Whatſoeuer you binde in earth, &c. And Iohn. 20. 22. hee firſt doth breath vpon them the holie Ghoſt, and ſaith, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Verbum dei dimittit peccata, &c. The word of God forgiueth ſinnes, qui ſoluendi ius non habet ligandi non habet, &c. ius hoc ſolis permiſſum eſt ſacerdotibus: They that haue not power to looſe, haue not power to binde, &c. this power is onely permitted to prieſts, lib. 2. de Cain & Abel. cap. 4. Therefore he muſt be a prieſt, and a miniſter of the word, which hath power to binde or looſe. Yea, the Rhemiſts confeſſe, that to remit ſinnes is a ſpeciall facultie of the prieſthood, as I alleaged before : wherefore none can execute this power that is not in orders.

Sixtly, 1. this laſt aſſertion is contrarie to the Scripture, for he that hath a beame in his owne eye cannot ſee clearely to caſt out the moat out of his brothers eye: Matt.7.5.for how can a man iudge rightly of another mans ſinne, that doth not iudge it in himſelfe? 2.Origen ſaith : Qui funibus ſuorum peccatorum conſtringitur, fruſtra vel ligit, vel ſoluat : He that is tyed with the cordes of his owne ſinnes, bindeth or looſeth in vaine : *tract.in Matth.*1. 3.Nicholaus 1.one of their Popes, Epiſt. ad Michaelem, thus ſaith : Qui ligati ſunt ligare, & qui ipſi mortui ſunt alios mortificare non poſſunt : They that are bound themſelues cannot binde others, and they which are dead themſelues, cannot mortifie or giue ouer others to death,&c. And to the ſame purpoſe he alleageth his predeceſſor Celeſtinus : Non indicamus eum remotum, quia non poterat quenquam eius remouere ſententia, qui ſe iam præbuerat ipſe remouendum : We doe not iudge him as remooued, becauſe his ſentence coulde not remooue any, who did ſhew himſelfe worthie to be remooued, &c. He then that is in any damnable ſinne, and is worthie to be caſt out himſelfe, hath no power to caſt out others.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, WHETHER Indulgences may be graunted without great and waightie cauſe.

The Papiſts.

WHere as the popiſh diuines are diuided about this queſtion, ſome affirming that ſo the cauſe be lawfull and honeſt, not euill, vaine or worldly, but belonging to Gods glory, though it be not otherwiſe a matter of great waight, indulgēces may be granted: as when the Pope vpon Eaſter day giueth plenarie indulgence to the people that ſtand about the gate of Saint Peters Church; which ſeemeth to be but a ſmall matter*: ſic Thom.in.4d.20.qu.1.ar.3.qu.2. Durand. Antoninus,* and others by Bellarmine produced : others do thinke, that the cauſe muſt not onely be honeſt and godly, but proportionable in greatnes to the indulgence graunted : ſic Bonauentur. Richard. Ioan. Gerſon. Adrianus Papa, with others rehearſed by Bellarmine : to the latter opinion he ſeemeth to encline, giuing notwithſtanding ſuch cauteles, as that he alloweth indulgēces granted for the ſmalleſt matters : as firſt the cauſe, which is light in it ſelfe may tend to a great ende, as the ſtanding of the people before Saint Peters Church gate, is a meane to teſtifie their faith of the head of the Church, to the honour of the Apoſtolike Sea: ſecondly, it is not for the ſubiect to iudge which are great and waightie cauſes : they may be great, which ſeeme but ſmall to them: *Bellarm.de indulgent.lib.*1.*c.*12.

47. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, who ſeeth not how this captious and quaint diſtinguiſher by his quirkes and ſubtilties goeth about to maintaine all the ridiculous & raſh indulgences, which are granted by the Popes: for if ſtanding at Saint Peters Church doore, and looking vpon it, be a matter of ſo great waight, to deſerue a plenarie indulgence, you ſhall neuer want waightie cauſes for your pardons : and to barre the people (whom you call the Popes ſubiects) from eſtimating or valuing the greatneſſe or ſmalneſſe of cauſes, you doe but make a waye, to doe what you liſte with your pardons.

Secondly, whereas then you require theſe conditions in giuing of pardons, they muſt not be granted, firſt, for euill works: ſecondly, for worldly matters: thirdly, but ſuch as tend to the honour of God : fourthly, and are not light or vaine , but of ſome waight and importance. It is euident that the Popes pardons haue offended againſt all theſe rules : firſt, fortie daies pardon was proclaimed vnder Longland Biſhoppe of Lincolne to as many as brought a fagot to burne the poore ſeruants of Chriſt, which was an euill and vncharitable worke. *Fox.p.*983.

2. Full remiſſion of ſinnes was granted to as many as did aſſiſt Spencer Biſhop of Norwich to fight for Poope Vrbane the ſixt, againſt the Antipope Clement : p. 446. which was but a meere worldly and temporall matter.

3. Sixtus the fourth granted great indulgences to thoſe that did celebrate the feaſt of the conception of the virgin Mary, adding this clauſe to the Aue Marie : Haile Mary full of grace,&c. and bleſſed is Anna thy mother, *of whom thy virgins fleſh hath proceeded without ſpot of originall ſinne.Fox p.*800. this cauſe was not to the honour, but to the diſhonour of Chriſt ; whoſe onely conception was without ſinne : as is before ſhewed, *contr.9.qu.9.part.*1.

4. When as the Friar Tecellius went about with the Popes pardons, offering for ten ſhillings, that who ſo would, ſhould deliuer one ſoule out of purgatorie. *ex Chriſtian. Maſ. lib.*20. This was no waightie or great cauſe, being but a matter of ten ſhillings.

Thirdly, the Popes friends then ſhould giue him counſell to be more ſparing and not ſo lauiſh of the Church treaſure: Eugenius the fourth being requeſted to ioyne with the councel of Baſil to graunt generall Indulgences for the reducing of the Greeke Church, anſwered, Ne claues eccleſiæ contemnerentur,velle ſe maturius incedere: That hee would take pauſe in the matter,leaſt the keyes of the Church ſhould be contemned,*epiſt.ſynodal.*8. If the Pope would be aduiſed in ſo great a matter,it is intolerable raſhnes to laſh out with his Indulgences,where no ſuch cauſe is.

Fourthly,Saint Paul would not graunt pardon or indulgence lightly to the young man, but after he perceiued his ſorrow and heauines to be ſo great,that *he was like to be ſwallowed vp of it,if he were not comforted,*2.Cor.2.7.

Saint Cyprian ſaith,as he is cited in the Decrees,*diſt.*50.*c.*27. Satis eſt temerarius, qui remiſſionem peccatorum cunctis ſe dare poſſe confidit: He is very raſh,that thinketh he can giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all, &c. as the Pope doth, when hee giueth plenarie Indulgence to whole multitudes together.

THE SEVENTH PART, OF THE DISPOſition required to be in them that receiue Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

48.Error. 1 First,Indulgences may be graunted to a ſinner,and for ſuch workes as are done while hee is in the ſtate of ſinne,as if a ſinfull man doe contribute toward the recouering of Ieruſalem: *Bellarm.cap.*13.

49.Error. 2 Secondly,yet a man cannot perceiue the fruite of ſuch indulgences,vnleſſe hee be in the ſtate of grace,*Bellarm.lib.*1.*c.*13.*quæſt.*1.

50.Error. 3 Thirdly,if the good worke enioyned to be done be accompanied or ioyned with veniall ſinne, it hindreth the fruite of indulgence,Bellarm.ibid.

51. Error. 4 Fourthly, hee that will receiue benefite by theſe indulgences, muſt confeſſe and be truly penitent.

52. Error. 5 Fiftly,he cannot enioy the indulgence,that doth not performe all the workes that are enioyned,*ibid.qu.*4.

53.Error. 6 Sixtly,Indulgences may be profitable to thoſe that will not,though they can,ſatisfie for themſelues,but doe reſt in the ſatisfaction of others,*ibid.qu.*5.

The Proteſtants.

1 First, 1. the Apoſtle ſaith, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb.11.6. how dare ye then graunt indulgence or remiſſion to them which are yet in their ſinnes, and not reconciled to God? 2. This is alſo contrarie to their owne doctrine: for they ſay, an indulgence is a releaſe of the puniſhment of ſinne, which remaineth after the fault it ſelfe is remitted: but now it is affirmed,that indulgence may be graunted to them which are yet in their ſinnes. 3. It is contrarie to their owne law: Peccati venia non datur niſi correcto: The pardon of ſinnes muſt be graunted to none,but to them that are amended, *ſext.decretal.regul.iuris.*5.

2 Secondly,as we willingly graunt,that a man being not in the ſtate of grace, cannot be partaker of the true indulgence and remiſſion of ſinnes: for as the Apoſtle ſaith,Epheſ.2.8.By grace are ye ſaued through faith: ſo this poſition is flatly oppoſite to the popiſh error of indulgences: for if a man be in the ſtate of grace before the indulgence be graunted, which they ſay is but a releaſe of the puniſhment,then is their indulgence altogether ſuperfluous: for to a man being in the ſtate of grace, there remaineth neither ſinne nor puniſhment of ſin: Rom.5.1.Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with God: verſ.9.Being iuſtified by his blood,we ſhall be ſaued from wrath through him. If wee are then preſently vpon our iuſtification at peace with God, and deliuered from his wrath, then there remaineth no puniſhment of ſinne: for God doth not puniſh for ſinne but in wrath. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Qui fidem habet,habet regnum cœlorum: He that hath faith,hath the kingdome of heauen,*in Luc.*13. And he that is in the ſtate of grace hath faith,he hath then alreadie the kingdome of heauen,and ſo your Indulgences come too late.

3 Thirdly, 1. If euery veniall,that is ſmall offence, ſhould hinder the true indulgence and remiſſion of ſinnes,then it were impoſſible for any man to attaine vnto it: for our beſt workes are blemiſhed; as the Prophet ſaith,Iſai.64.6. All our righteouſnes is as a ſtayned cloath. And Origen verie well noteth vpon theſe words of our Sauiour,Luk.17.10.When you haue done all, ſay, you are vnprofitable ſeruants: Nec enim ſi verè bona eſſent, quæ facimus, ſcriptum eſſet, vt facientes ea dicamus nos inutiles ſeruos,&c. For if they were truly good things which wee doe,it ſhould not be written, that doing ſuch things, wee ſhould ſay wee are vnprofitable ſeruants: in compariſon of other mens workes they are called good, ſed quantum ad veritatem bonum noſtrum non eſt bonum: But in reſpect of the veritie it ſelfe, our good workes are not good,*Tract.*8.in Matth. 2. And concerning your owne indulgences,think you,that when vnder Clemens 6. in the Iubile celebrated *ann.*1350. there were numbred 500. euery day going and comming to Rome, and an hundred thouſand wayting at the Popes gates for pardons, that none of theſe had any veniall faults? 3. And are your Iubile pardons of ſo ſmall force, that whereas they can releaſe Purgatorie paines for many thouſand yeeres, they cannot remoue one poore veniall ſinne? If this doctrine were generally knowne to your friends and welwillers, I think your Iubile pardons would not finde many chapmen to buy them

4 Fourthly, 1. If your Indulgences profit not, vnleſſe they bee truly penitent and confeſſe their ſinnes which doe receiue them, what neede the poore people take ſo long iourneyes to come to Rome for pardons? for if they be truly contrite, they ſhall finde forgiuenes at home: yea, if they examine their heart vpon their beds, and tremble, Pſal.4.4. it ſhall be a good ſacrifice to God: A broken and a contrite heart God will not deſpiſe, Pſal.51.17. To whom will I looke, ſaith the Lord? to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit, Iſai.66.2. Whereſoeuer a man repenteth, and whenſoeuer, hee ſhall finde remiſſion. Ambroſe ſaith: Iob in ſtercore ſedens, omnia, quæ amiſerat, recuperauit: Iob ſitting vpon the dunghill, recouered al he loſt, *de pœnit. lib.*1.*c.*1. No place can be ſo meane, or baſe, where true repentance is not accepted of God.

2. But how ſtandeth this with your doctrine of Indulgences, to require repentance and confeſſion, whereby we obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, and not of the puniſhment onely? and you ſay indulgence releaſeth onely the puniſhment remayning after remiſſion: but now your Indulgences are proclaimed, before remiſſion of ſinnes by repentance and confeſſion: for in the Bull of Indulgences this clauſe is inſerted: Pœnitentibus & verè confeſſis, vel qui verè pœnitebunt & confitebuntur: The Indulgence is graunted to them that are truly penitent and confeſſed, or which ſhall be truly penitent, and confeſſe, *Bonif.*8.*extrau. lib.*5.*tit.*9.*c.*1. And thus they are promiſed, a releaſe of the puniſhment, before they haue repented of the ſinne.

3. It is an hard matter, for your poore ſuppliants, by this meanes to finde repentance: for your yeere of Iubile maketh them ſecure, and many doe ſin willingly in hope of forgiuenes then. But this is no true repentance, to ſinne that grace may more abound, and to doe euill, that good may come of it, Rom.3.8. Of ſuch Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Alij propoſita ſpe agendæ pœnitentiæ, licentiam ſibi peccandi propagatam putant: Some vpon hope of penance propounded or publiſhed, doe thinke their libertie of ſinning enlarged, *lib.*2.*de pœnitent.c.*9. And it is Bellarmines owne poſition, that if a man in hope of the yeere of Iubile doe willingly fall into ſinne, he may notwithſtanding be abſolued, *lib.*1.*de Indulg.c.*10.*p.*60.

5 Fiftly, it is an hard condition, that a man cannot enioy a Popes pardon, vnleſſe he performe all workes that are inioyned: Firſt, pardon with God is more eaſily obtained: for he requireth of vs no ſuch painfull workes, but onely to ceaſe to doe euill, and to learne to doe well, Iſai.1.16. Secondly, he requireth not of vs to goe ouer the ſea in pilgrimage, to Ieruſalem, to Rome, or to any other place: Deuter.30.13. Neither is it beyond the ſeas, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, who ſhall goe ouer the ſea for vs, to bring it vs? Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith of Dauids repentance: Dauid exclamauit, peccaui, & mox audiuit, Deus abſtulit peccatum; quantum valent tres ſyllabæ: tres enim ſyllabæ ſunt, peccaui, ſed in iſtis tribus ſyllabis flamma ſacrificij cordis eius ad cœlum aſcendit: Dauid cried out, I haue ſinned, and ſtraight he heard, God hath taken away thy ſinne: ſee how much three ſyllables auaile: I haue ſinned, are but three ſyllables, yet in theſe three ſyllables the flaming ſacrifice of his heart aſcended: exhortat. ad pœnitent. Here are all the workes required of Dauid, with a ſorrowfull heart to pronounce three ſyllables. Fourthly, Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Nunquam ſpernit pœnitentiam, ſi ei ſyncerè & ſimpliciter offeratur, etiamſi quis explere non poterit omnem ſatisfaciendi ordinem: He neuer deſpiſeth repentance, if it be ſyncerely and ſimply offered him, although a man doe not fulfill all the order of ſatisfaction, *de tempor. ſerm.*181.*c.*16. God then forgiueth, though a man cannot fulfill all that is enioyned: but the Pope will not pardon, vnleſſe the whole ſatisfaction enioyned bee performed.

6 Sixtly, againſt the laſt propoſition Cardinall Caietane reaſoneth thus: That Indulgences can not profit them, that haue not a purpoſe to ſatisfie for themſelues:

1. Becauſe ſuch are vnworthie of indulgence, but the Church intendeth not to beſtow Indulgences vpon the vnworthie.

2. It is not fit for a man to aske of his friend to ſatisfie for him, if hee be able himſelfe to doe it.

3. In a well conſtituted common-wealth, the common treaſure muſt not be employed to pay their debts, that are able themſelues, &c.

4. Indulgences are graunted to ſuch as are truly penitent; but they are not that refuſe to bring forth fruits of repentance: *ſic Caietan. tract.*10.*de ſuſcipientib. indulg. c.*1.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſuch bee not vnworthie, but non digni, not worthie onely.

2. A man may craue his friends ſatisfaction in ſuch a caſe of fauour, becauſe his friend hath no neede himſelfe.

3. There may be cauſe,when it is fit their debts ſhould be payd of the common treaſurie, that are able to diſcharge them of their owne.

4. They are truly penitent,that haue a purpoſe to ſatisfie themſelues, if others did not ſatisfie for them,*Bellarm c.*13.

1 Contra. 1. This is a very nice diſtinction,to make a difference betweene indignum,vnworthie, and non dignum,not worthie: the Scripture vſeth them both indifferently: as Heb.11.36.Of whom the world was not worthie: was not the world vnworthie of them alſo? So Matth.22.8.They which were bidden,were not worthie: were they not alſo vnworthie? And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, Act.13.46. You iudge your ſelues vnworthie of euerlaſting life: ſo to bee vnworthie, and not worthie, are all one. 2. The ſpirituall treaſure of the Church is not beſtowed vpon any, but ſuch as are thought worthie,2.Theſſ.1.11.That our God may make you worthie of his calling: therefore it is not to be giuen to thoſe that are not worthie.

2 Secondly, 1. If it bee no fault for a man to borrow of his neighbour when hee hath enough himſelfe,why did David iudge him worthie of death,that hauing many ſheepe of his owne,fetcht his poore neighbours ſheepe to entertaine his friend with? 2.Sam.12.4,5. 2. One friend vſeth not to lend to another,but when he needeth,as it is in the Parable,Luk.11.6. One commeth to his friend at midnight,and ſaith, Lend me three loaues, for a friend of mine is come out of the way vnto me, and I haue nothing to ſet before him: verſ.8. Though he would not ariſe and giue him, becauſe he is his friend, yet becauſe of his importunitie,he would riſe and giue him as many as he needed. Here we ſee that one friend is not to trouble another,but when he hath neede. 3. In ſpirituall things a man hath neede of all himſelfe,Matth.25.9.Leſt there be not enough for vs and you.

3 Thirdly,Saint Paul commaundeth the contrarie, that where there is ſufficient beſide, none ſhould be at the common charge,1.Tim.5.16. If any faithfull man or woman haue widowes,let them miniſter vnto them,and let not the Church be charged: and this reaſon is giuen,that there may be ſufficient for widowes indeede: that is,for them which haue no maintenance of their owne. So then, if the commonwealth ſhould ſpend their treaſure vpon them that are able of themſelues,the poore ſhould want it.

4 Fourthly, 1. the Scripture ſaith,Haue ſalt in your ſelues,Mark.9.50. Euery man muſt be ſeaſoned in himſelfe,and not looke to be ſeaſoned by another. 2. And Iohn Baptiſt ſheweth who they are that bring forth fruits worthie of repentance by the example of a tree,Matth.3.10.Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit,is hewen downe and caſt into the fire. It excuſeth not a barren tree,to haue another tree that is fruitfull to grow by it: ſo neither can one man be ſaued by anothers workes. 3. Ambroſe therefore ſaith: Ablue igitur te lachrymis tuis, ſi tu ipſe te fleueris,alius te non flebit: nam ſi Saul defleſſet peccata ſua, Samuél eum non fleuiſſet: Therfore waſh thy ſelfe with thine owne teares,if thou weepe for thy ſelfe, another ſhall not neede to weepe for thee: for if Saul had wept for his ſinne, Samuel would not haue wept for him: lib.5.in Luc. Like as then Samuels teares did not profit Saul, becauſe he lamented not for himſelfe, ſo neither can other mens workes helpe them that doe not worke for themſelues. Wherefore Caietane doth here come ſomewhat neere the marke,and Bellarmine hath miſt the cuſhin.

THE EIGHT PART, WHETHER INDVLGENCES doe profit the dead: This part is diuided into fiue queſtions.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER THE dead haue any benefit by the Indulgences of the Church.

The Papiſts.

54.Error. BEllarmine prooueth the queſtion thus:

Argum. 1. The prayers of the liuing and other workes by way of impetration profit the dead: Ergo,the ſame workes,as prayer,faſting, being alſo ſatisfactorie, doe alſo benefit them by way of ſatisfaction.

2. The faithfull departed make one bodie,and one Church with the faithfull liuing: therefore the ſatisfactions of the liuing may be applied to the dead.

3. And if priuate men may applie their ſatisfactions to the reſt of the members being dead, much more may they applie vnto them the ſatisfactions of Chriſt, and of the Saints: Bellarm. cap.14.qu.1.

The Proteſtants.

1 *Confut.*1. FIrſt,the argument followeth not,we may pray for the dead: Ergo,we may alſo ſatisfie for them: for we grant that we may one pray for another while we liue,but wee can not ſatisfie one for another, becauſe ſupplication is of mercie: but ſatisfaction is of deſert. Secondly, condly, neither is it true that the prayers of the liuing doe profit the dead: requeſt or interceſſion auaileth not after ſentence giuen, and iudgement paſt, which is in the finall end and departure in this life: for after the gate is ſhut, there is no entring, Matth.25.10. and your Canons ſay, Mortuorum cauſa Deo reſeruanda eſt: The cauſe of the dead muſt be reſerued to God. cauſ.24. qu.2.c.1.Leo.

Secondly, Firſt the Apoſtle ſaith, Of whom is named the whole family in heauen and in earth: we acknowledge a glorious part of the family of the Church to be in heauen; but of any part thereof to be in purgatorie we reade not: 2. If this be a good reaſon, the ſoules in purgatorie are our fellow members; Ergo, wee may ſatisfie for them, it will follow as well, that they may ſatisfie for vs, becauſe we are their members alſo; and much rather, becauſe the torments of purgatorie being ſo exceeding painefull, they are ſo much the more able to ſatisfie. 3. It is not a ſufficient warrant to pray for the dead, becauſe they are members; for then we ſhould pray alſo for the ſpirits of the iuſt that are in heauen: but our prayer muſt be in faith, Iam.5.15. the prayer of faith: We muſt haue a particular knowledge of their ſtate, for whom we pray, and an aſſurance that our prayers ſhall be heard; but concerning prayer for the dead, we can haue neither knowledge of their ſtate, neyther haue we any ſuch warrant out of the word that our prayers are heard. 2

Thirdly, 1. It followeth not, a man may diſpenſe his own goods, Ergo, another may doe it for him: the Saints ſatisfactions are (as the Rhemiſts ſay. *annot. in Coloſſ.*1. verſ. 24.) applicable by the ſufferers ſpeciall intention: Ergo, a man hath more right to diſpoſe of his owne, then the Pope hath, 2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelf at all, & we denie abſolutely that there are any ſuch ſatisfactiōs applicable, priuately or publikly to the liuing, or to the dead: ſome of our reaſons are theſe. 3

Argum. 1. The Prophet ſaith, Pſal.49. A man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, hee cannot giue his ranſome to God: but to deliuer ſoules out of purgatorie, and to ſatisfie for them, is to redeeme them: Ergo, by ſatisfactions ſoules cannot be helped out of purgatorie, if there were any.

2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelfe, much leſſe for any other; for when a man hath done all, he is but an vnprofitable ſeruant, Luk.17.10. if he be an vnprofitable ſeruant for himſelfe, he cannot be profitable for another.

3. Dauid ceaſeth to pray for his childe, when it was dead: though he were out of hope of life for it in this world, yet he might haue prayed, and faſted, and ſatisfied for the ſoule of his childe being departed, if ſo be any ſuch courſe to be taken for the dead, were acceptable to God: But ſo Dauid doth not, but reaſoneth thus: 2.Sam.12.23. Now being dead, wherefore ſhould I now faſt? Hee ſeeth no reaſon why he ſhould faſt or vſe any other ſatisfaction for the dead.

4. Saint Ambroſe ſaith directly: Nihil proſunt flagella poſt mortem, & ideo Dauid, dum eſſet in iſtius corporis vita, in flagella ſe preparauit, vt eum Dominus reciperet caſtigatum: Stripes profite not after death, and therefore Dauid, while he was in the life of this bodie, prepared himſelfe for ſtripes, that the Lord might receiue him now alreadie chaſticed and corrected.

5. Gelaſius ſaith, as he is cited. cauſ.24. qu.3.c.4. de eo qui in diuino eſt iudicio conſtitutus, nobis fas non eſt aliud decernere præter id, in quo eum dies ſupremus inuenit: Of him that is now appointed to the diuine iudgement, it is not lawfull for vs otherwiſe to diſcerne and iudge, then as his laſt day found him, &c. How then can any man thinke to alter the ſtate of the dead, by ſatisfactions, or indulgences whatſoeuer?

6. The wordes of the Popes Bull of indulgences are theſe: Verè pœnitentibus & confeſſis pleniſſimam concedimus veniam peccatorum: Wee grant plenarie forgiuenes of ſinnes to them that are truely penitent and confeſſed: but in purgatorie there is no repentaunce, which muſt be done in the bodie, when they may bring forth fruites of repentance; neyther is there any Prieſt there to bee confeſſed vnto: Ergo, the benefite of indulgences cannot extend to them.

7 Wee haue teſtimonie heere of ſome of our aduerſaries: theſe are of opinion, that indulgences doe not profite the dead: Oſtienſis in ſumma. lib.5. tit. de remiſſionib. Num.9. Gabriel lect. 57. in canon. miſſ. Ioan. Maior. in.4. diſt.20. qu.2.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE MANner how Indulgences are applied to the dead.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, ſome of them affirme, that the Pope may iudicially abſolue the ſoules in purgatorie, and 1 that they doe belong vnto his iuriſdiction, and ſo he may extend his indulgences vnto them, 55. Error.
as vnto the liuing: Michael Medina diſput.7. de indulgent.c.34. Bellarmine with other Papiſts miſliketh this opinion, who denie not, but that the Pope may apply indulgences to the dead, but not iudicially, or as exerciſing any iuriſdiction ouer them. Bellarm.c.14.qu.2.

2 56.Error. Secondly, Bellarmine aſſirmeth, that indulgences are profitable to the dead, per modum ſuffragij, after the manner of the ſuffrage of the Church, that as the ſuffrage or prayer of the Church doe helpe by way of merite, impetration, ſatisfaction; ſo indulgences are granted to the dead, as they are ſatisfactorie, and ſo per modum ſuffragij ſatsfactorij : after the manner of a ſuffrage as it is ſatisfactorie. *Ibid.qu.*3.

3 57.Error. Thirdly, ſome of them thinke, that indulgences doe profit the dead, ex condigno, of condignitie and worthines: Dominicus à Soto in 4. diſt.22.qu.2. art.3. Nauarr.de Iubilæo.notab. 22. num.20. Other of them rather thinke, that indulgences are not auaileable for the dead, otherwiſe then by the mercie of God, and ſo of congruitie, rather then of condignitie; ſo Caietanus, Petrus à Soto, Cordubenſ. to whom Bellarmine ſubſcribeth: their reaſon is, becauſe one liuing cannot ſatisfie for another of condignitie, much leſſe for the dead. Bellarm.c.14.qu.4.

4 58.Error. Fourthly, to apply indulgences to the dead, there is required a ſupreame and high authoritie, and therefore Biſhops and other inferior prelates cannot apply indulgences to the dead, but onely the Pope. *ibid.qu.*5.

5 59.Error. Fiftly, the Pope cannot deliuer at his pleaſure ſoules out of purgatorie, but there muſt be ſome particular iuſt cauſe belonging to the glorie of God, and the profit of the Church, &c. a generall cauſe is not ſufficient, for then Chriſt himſelfe ſhould haue deliuered all the ſoules alreadie out of purgatorie. *Bellarm.ibid.qu.*5.

6 60.Error. Sixtly, indulgences directly belong to the liuing, indirectly to the dead, no otherwiſe, then as the liuing doe performe the workes enioyned for the dead. Bellarm.ibid.

7 61.Error. Seuenthly, indulgences doe not profite the dead in common, otherwiſe then as they reioyce one for anothers good, but onely thoſe ſoules are deliuered therby, to whom they are particularly intended. Bellarm.c.14.qu.6.

8 62.Error. Eightly, the Pope may releaſe vnto a man liuing by indulgence, the paine of purgatorie, which otherwiſe he were ſubiect vnto. c.6.reſp.ad obiect.1.

9 63.Error. Ninthly, concerning the greatnes of the paine of purgatorie, Bellarmine thinketh, that though it be greater then all the paines of this life, yet the voluntarie puniſhment of this life is more effectuall for the expiation of ſinne, then the more grieuous paine of purgatorie: becauſe this is a time of mercy, that of iuſtice: others doe thinke contrarie, that one day of paine in purgatorie is more auaileable then many yeeres of moſt ſeuere penance in this life. Dominicus à Soto in 4.diſt.21. qu.2.artic.1.Bellarm.c.9.

The Proteſtants.

1 First, 1. the Pope hath no power to extend his indulgences anie way at all to the dead, eyther iudicially by way of abſolution, or indulgently by way of diſpenſation: for the Scripture is euident, whatſoeuer you binde in earth ſhall be bound in heauen, Matth. 18.18. Gelaſius vrgeth theſe words, ſuper terram, vpon the earth: in hac ligatione defunctum nuſquam dixit abſolui, he no where ſaith, that a man dying being bound, can afterward be abſolued. cauſ. 24 qu.3.c.2. And whereas Bellarmine telleth vs, that this is ſpoken onely of iudiciall abſolution: the words are generall of all binding and looſing, that it muſt be done vpon earth, and therefore cannot be extended to them, which are dead.

2. Yet contrarie to this doctrine of Bellarmine, the Pope taketh vpon him as a iudge to abſolue and condemne the dead. 1. Becauſe he doth excommunicate the dead; which although Bellarmine ſaith is nothing elſe but a declaration of that ſentence, which ſhould haue beene pronounced, while they liued: yet it is euident by their owne law, that indulgentiæ non proſunt non ſubditis, that indulgences, abſolutions (and ſo conſequenly, ligations, excommunications) doe not profite (and ſo likewiſe diſprofit or preiudice) them that are no ſubiects. decr. Greg. lib.5.tit. 38. c.4. Wherfore if the dead be not ſubiect to the Popes iuriſdictiō, the ſentence of exeommunication or abſolution doth not bind or looſe them. 2. It is Bellarmines owne poſition, vt indulgentiæ dentur, requiritur iuriſdictio: that indulgences may be granted, there is required a iuriſdiction. lib.1 de indulg.c.14.qu.3. if the Pope then haue no iuriſdiction ouer the dead, he can grant no indulgences vnto them. 3. One of their owne Doctors ſaith: Animæ exiſtentes in purgatorio, ſunt de iuriſdictione papæ: Soules being in purgatorie are of the Popes iuriſdiction, Iohan. Angelus. 4. And though they will not be bound to the opinion of one Doctor, yet they cannot refuſe the iudgement of the Pope: Clemens 6. thus ſaith in his Bull, Mandamus Angelis paradiſi: We commaund the Angels of Paradiſe, to carry the ſoules deliuered out of purgatorie to the glorie of Paradiſe, &c. If the Pope then doe commaund Angels, and ſo doe exerciſe iuriſdiction ouer them, much more ouer purgatorie ſoules: the Pope then cannot giue indulgence, but where he hath iuriſdiction: but their new Doctors aſhamed of the groſſenes of the elder Papiſts, allow the Pope no iuriſdictiō ouer the dead, then conſequently he cannot grant them any indulgence.

2 Secondly. 1. We deny ỳ the ſuffrages & the praiers of the liuing, are ſatisfactory for one another, but only deprecatorie & impetratorie: for praier receiueth all the force thereof from faith: Ia.5.15.

the prayer of faith : and faith is grounded vpon grace and fauour : as the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.2.8. By grace are ye ſaued through faith. It is one thing to pray and intreate, another to ſatisfie : as Origen ſheweth the difference. Cæteri precibus, peccata Chriſtus ſolus poteſtate dimiſit : Others by prayers, Chriſt by his power onely remitteth ſinnes : hom.24. in Numer. If then we cannot ſatisfie by our praiers for the liuing, much leſſe for the dead.

2. Some of the Papiſts do thinke, that indulgences do not profit the dead, but ſola vi ſuffragiorum, onely by the force of ſuffrages or prayers : Oſtienſ. If indulgences then are not auailable but by prayer, indulgences are ſuperfluous and needleſſe. But I haue ſhewed before, that neither prayers profit for the dead.

3 Thirdly. 1. If an indulgence be an application of Chriſts merits, it muſt needs be auaileable ex condigno, of condignitie; for Chriſt, I truſt, hath worthily ſatisfied, and done all neceſſarie things to our redemption, Reuel.5.9. thou art worthie. 2. A ſatisfaction muſt be ex condigno, of condignitie, or worthines: for how can a man facere ſatis, ſatisfie, that is fully content, if he do it not ſufficiently? An acceptation is not properly a ſatisfaction, the one is of fauour, the other of debt, Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt ; but ſatisfaction is a worke, therefore what is due vnto it, is by debt, and ſo of condignitie; congruitie is of fauour. 3. But we affirme that neither indulgences, nor any other workes of the liuing doe benefit the dead at all; and ſo neither of congruitie, nor condignitie, Reuel.14.13. They that die in the Lord, their workes follow them : their owne workes, and not any bodies elſe. Leo Epiſt.89. Multum vtile & neceſſarium eſt vt peccatorum reatus ante vltimum diem ſacerdotali ſupplicatione ſoluatur : It is verie profitable and neceſſarie, that the guilt of ſinnes ſhould be looſed by the ſupplication of the Prieſt before the laſt day, that is the day of death, &c. if it be neceſſarie before, then it commeth too late afterward.

4 Fourthly, 1. That the Pope hath no more iuriſdiction in the Church then other Biſhops in their dioces, I haue ſhewed before in the confutation of the 41. error: ſo that I need not to repeat the ſame here. 2. If the Pope haue no iuriſdiction at all ouer the ſoules in purgatorie, & ſo no more then any other prelate hath ; he hath no more authoritie to conferre indulgences vpon them, then others. 3. All the authoritie that Saint Peter had, was to feed his ſheepe, when Chriſt ſaid, paſce oues, feed my ſheepe, Iohn.21. but the ſoules in purgatorie are not his ſheepe, becauſe they cannot be fed, as Bellarmine confeſſeth. c.14. qu.2. therefore neither Peter, nor the Pope from Peter can chalenge any prerogatiue more then other ouer the dead. 4. That prerogatiue which Peter had ouer hell, when Chriſt ſaid; Hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it, Matth.16.18. was giuen to his faith and confeſſion, and ſo is common to all faithfull : as Ambroſe well expoundeth : Non de carne Petri, ſed de fide dictum eſt, quia portæ mortis non præualebunt, ſed confeſſio vicit infernum : Not of the fleſh of Peter, but of his faith it was ſaid, the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile, &c. his confeſſion ouercame hell.

5 Fiftly, firſt if the Pope cannot deliuer all ſoules out of purgatorie, then is one of your great Doctors proued a lyar and a falſe prophet : Papa ſi vellet poſſet totum purgatorium euacuare : the Pope if he would, could euacuate and emptie all purgatorie. Iohan. Angel. 2. But what particular cauſe I pray you doth moue the Pope to deliuer ſome ſoules, more then other? hath he ſome ſpeciall reuelation, to know the particular needs of the purgatorie ſoules ? or is not the generall cauſe of Chriſts glorie in ſending ſo many ſoules to be Angels fellowes, to be preferred before the Popes particular cauſe, in bringing ſo many Angels to his purſe ? for if they would ſpeake plainely, this is the particular cauſe, that moueth the Pope, when he or his are particularly waged and feed to deliuer ſome particular ſoules. 3. Wherefore this old obiection againſt the Popes purgatorie is not yet anſwered : that if the Pope can deliuer all ſoules at once, and will not, hee is vncharitable ; if he would and cannot, then Saint Peters keyes doe fayle and are not auaileable. 4. But concerning your reſpect of particular cauſe, Clemens the ſixt derideth it : for hee in his Bull giueth authoritie cruce ſignatis, to thoſe, that tooke vpon them the croſſe, vt tres vel quatuor animas, quas vellet, to deliuer out of purgatory three or foure ſoules, which they would, &c. this power was left to the libertie of their will, not tyed to the neceſſitie of the cauſe : 5. And doe you doubt, whether Chriſt hath cleered purgatorie? you ſay, that by his deſcent he harrowed hell, and deliuered all the Patriarches : hath he done leſſe for beleeuers ſince his death, then for thoſe which before by faith, expected his death ? the Apoſtle ſaith, the bloude of Chriſt doth cleanſe vs from all ſin, 1.Ioh.1.7. what remaineth then to be cleanſed in purgatorie? Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Qui hic non acceperit remiſſionem peccatorum, illic non erit, quia vita æterna remiſſio peccatorum eſt : He that hath not receiued here the remiſſion of ſinnes, ſhall not be there, that is in heauen, for eternall life is the remiſſion of ſinnes : de bon. mort. c.2. He then that hath here receiued remiſſion of ſinnes, is preſently in heauen, and ſo not in purgatorie; he that hath not, ſhal neuer come to heauen, and ſo is in hell.

6 Sixtly, 1. It is ſtraunge doctrine, that ſatisfactorie workes may be enioyned the liuing in behalfe of the dead : Bellarmine himſelfe reporteth this to haue been an erronious practiſe of the Montaniſts and Marcionites, to baptize the liuing in the name of the dead; to the which cuſtome ſome thinke Saint Paul had relation, where he ſaith, 1.Cor.15.29. *Why are they baptized for the dead? Bellar.lib.1.p.*1800. But if a man may pray, and faſt, and giue almes for the dead, why not alſo be baptized for them? 2. The Diſciples, when Dorcas was dead, did not vndertake any works for her of theirs, but onely ſhewed her owne workes, the coates and garments which ſhe had made, Act.8.39. whereof Saint Cyprian ſaith, Non pro defuncta ſuis vocibus, ſed ipſius operibus deprecantes: Not making requeſt for the dead with their voyces, but with her workes, ſerm.de eleemoſ. And againe: Confiteantur fratres vos ſinguli delictum ſuum, dum adhuc, qui deliquit, in ſeculo eſt, dum admitti confeſſio eius poteſt, dum ſatisfactio & remiſſio per ſacerdotem facta apud dominum grata eſt: Confeſſe (brethren) euery one his fault, while hee that ſinned is yet in the world, while his confeſſion may be admitted, while ſatisfaction and remiſſion giuen by the Prieſt are accepted with God, ſer. de lapſ. Ergo, ſatisfaction done afterward, is not accepted.

7 Seuenthly, 1. what reaſon haue you to thinke, that your Limbus was emptied all at once at Chriſts comming, and that Purgatorie ſhall be but ſucceſſiuely cleered, and one after another deliuered? If ſome are freed, while other frie in Purgatorie, becauſe of ſome particular prayers, the ſame reaſon may be alleaged for the Fathers that were in Limbus, that they alſo might haue been holpen by particular prayers. If you ſay Chriſt was not then come, and therefore hell could not be harrowed; ſo neither is Chriſt yet come to iudgement, before which time you ſay all Purgatorie ſhall not be cleanſed. 2. To ſee others exempted from paine, and themſelues ſtill in bondage, it can bee no great ioy: the Scripture ſaith, Luk.13.28. there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when they ſee all the Prophets in the kingdome of God, and your ſelues thruſt out at the doores. The beholding then of other mens felicitie doth not miniſter ioy, but encreaſe torment to them that are ſtill in miſerie. 3. And why are not the common prayers of the whole Church for all ſoules as effectuall to deliuer all, as particular prayers are of ſome to deliuer their friends? what letteth then but all ſoules ſhould bee let looſe by common prayers? vnleſſe it bee this, as the truth is, then the Pope ſhould want vtterance for his Iubile pardons, and ſoule-prieſts for their Maſſes for the dead. 4. That all the ſoules of the faithfull and iuſt men (for as for vnbeleeuers, they haue their part in the lake, Apocal.21.8.) are altogether in heauen, the Apoſtle witneſſeth, Heb.12.22. We are come to celeſtiall Ieruſalem, to the congregation of the firſt borne, &c. to the ſpirits of iuſt and perfect men. I aske where theſe iuſt men are, if not in celeſtiall Ieruſalem? they are then all out of Purgatorie. Saint Cyprian ſaith: Ad refrigerium iuſti vocantur, ad ſupplicium rapiuntur iniuſti, datur velocius tutela fidentibus, perfidis pœna: The iuſt are called to reſt and refreſhing, the vniuſt are haled to paine, pardon is quickly giuen to the beleeuing, to the perfidious paine: ſerm.de immortal. All men then are either iuſt, or vniuſt: the iuſt are ſpeedily carried to heauen, the vniuſt to puniſhment: no iuſt men then are out of heauen, nor none vniuſt ſhall come thither. 5. If the Pope know how to deliuer ſome, and not all out of Purgatorie, hee hath not Saint Peters ſpirit: of whom S. Ambroſe thus ſaith: Hic eſt Petrus, qui reſpondit pro cæteris Apoſtolis, &c. quia nouit non ſolum proprium ſed commune ſeruare, &c. This is Peter, which anſwered for the reſt of the Apoſtles, and therefore is called a foundation, (or a rocke or ſtone) becauſe he knew how to ſaue not himſelfe onely, but in common: *de incarnat.c.*4.

8 Eightly, 1. no thankes to the Pope to deliuer a man from that, which hee ſhall neuer taſte of: for, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, Rom.8.1. ſuch neede neither feare hell, nor Purgatorie. 2. And is it in the Popes power to deliuer a man that he ſhall neuer goe to Purgatorie? how commeth it then to paſſe, that he cannot deliuer his owne ſoule from thence? for, you doe not thinke otherwiſe, but that ſome of your Popes are in Purgatorie: it were in vaine elſe to ſay ſo many Maſſes for the Pope when he is dead. The Scripture thus reaſoneth, Ezech.14. verſ.20. Noe, Iob, Daniel, though they were in the middeſt of it, ſhall neither deliuer ſonne nor daughter, but onely their owne ſoules. A man may ſaue himſelfe, though he ſaue not another: but if he ſaue others, not inſtrumentally, as one that giueth counſaile, but efficiently, as one hauing power, as they imagine of the Pope, he muſt needes alſo ſaue himſelfe: he therefore that ſeeth the Popes ſoule broyling in Purgatorie, will neuer thinke he can pull others out of the fire. 3. It is not the Popes pardon, but a mans owne faith that preſerueth him from condemnation: Ioh.5.24. He that beleeueth ſhall not come into condemnation, but is paſſed from death to life. Saint Ambroſe well ſaith: Aliæ cruces nihil mihi proſunt, ſola crux Chriſti mihi vtilis eſt, per quam mihi mundus crucifixus eſt, &c. Other croſſes profit me little, onely the croſſe of Chriſt is profitable to me, whereby I am crucified to the world, and the world to me, &c. lib.6.in Luc. Wherefore no croſſes of penance, of any ſatisfactorie or painfull workes, but onely faith in Chriſts croſſe doth deliuer vs.

9 Ninthly, 1. Bellarmine ſaith truly, that repentance in this life is more effectuall to doe away ſin, than penance or puniſhment afterward: for Auguſtine well ſaith, Ibi erit pœnitentia dolorem habens, ſed medicinam non habens: There ſhall be repentance hauing griefe, but no reliefe: tom.9.de rectitud. cathol.conuerſ.

2. For it is euident that after this life there is no place at all for repentance, but for iudgement: Where there remayneth no more ſacrifice for ſinnes, but a horrible looking for of iudgement, Hebr. 10, 26. But after this life, there is no ſacrifice for ſinnes: Ergo, an horrible expectation of iudgement. Auguſtine againe ſaith, Corrigant ſe, qui tales ſunt, dum viuunt, ne poſtea velint & non poſſint, quia ſubito venit mors, & non eſt qui corrigatur, ſed vt in ignem mittatur: Let them that are ſuch, correct themſelues while they liue, leſt afterward they would and cannot; becauſe death commeth ſodainely, that they can bee no more corrected, but committed to the fire. ſerm.164.

3. When they are ſo deuided themſelues about purgatorie: ſome holding, that a man cannot, though he be a notable ſinner, be aboue twentie yeeres in purgatorie, Dominic. à Soto in 4. diſt. 21. qu. 2. art. 1. others, that purgatorie paynes may continue an hundred, yea, a thouſand yeeres, Bellarm. lib. 1. de indulg. c. 9. ſome that purgatorie paine exceedeth all paine in this life, Dominic. à Soto ibid. other that the penance of this life is more effectuall: doe they not now by this their vncertaintie make all the world beleeue that purgatorie fire is but a drowſie dreame of their owne?

4 For if there were any ſuch purgatorie paine, it ſhould farre exceede all the griefe of this life, and ſo conſequently more effectually purge ſinne: As Origen ſaith, Vt vehementius corpus cruciant verbera nudum, quam veſtitum; ſic anima carnis indumento depoſito, ſubtilius ſentiet tormenta: Like as the bodie naked feeleth ſtripes more, then clothed; ſo the ſoule being vnclothed of the fleſh hath a more liuelie ſenſe of torment. Origen. ex Pamphil.

5. Bellarmines reaſon is verie good vtterly to ouerthrow Purgatorie penance, becauſe that is a time of iuſtice, this of mercy: this ſheweth well, not that repentance onely is more effectuall in this life, but that it is onely here to be found: as S. Auguſtine well applieth theſe wordes of the Apoſtle, 2. Cor. 6. 2. Behold now the accepted time, behold the day of ſaluation: Ecce nunc tempus ſalutis, tempus eſt nunc remiſſionis pœnitentibus, ſed tempus erit poſt mortem vindicationis negligentibus confiteri peccata: Behold now the time of ſaluation, the time of remiſſion to the penitent, but after death it is a time of vengeance to all them that neglected here to confeſſe their ſinnes. ſerm. 66.

6. Laſtly, becauſe Bellarmine ſeemeth to extenuate the paines of purgatorie, preferring the ſuffrings of this life before the torments thereof: I will to the ſame purpoſe adioyne the notable teſtimonie, and moſt godly ſentence of the bleſſed ſeruant of God Maſter Latimer, a reuerend Biſhop and holy Martyr: who doubteth not to ſay, that he had rather be in purgatorie, then in Lollards Tower the Biſhoppe of Londons priſon, for diuers reaſons, whereof ſome I will ſet downe.

1. I might in the one die for lacke of meate and drinke, but not in the other.
2. In this I might lacke charitie.
3. Looſe my patience.
4. I might be in perill of death.
5. I might be without ſuretie of ſaluation.
6. In this I might murmur againſt God.
7. I might diſpleaſe God.
8. I might be iudged to perpetuall priſon.
9. I might be brought to beare a fagot.
10. I might be ſeparated from Chriſt.
11. I might be a member of the diuell.
12. An inheritour of hell.

In that I could not.

13. In this my Lord & his chaplẽs might manacle me by night,
14. They might ſtrangle me and ſay I hanged my ſelfe.
15. They might haue me to their conſiſtorie and iudge me after their faſhion.

In that they could not.

Ergo, I had leuer be there then here, for though the fire be called neuer ſo hot, yet and if the Biſhops two fingers can ſhake away a peece, a friars coule, an other part, and ſcala cœli altogether, I will neuer found Abbey, Colledge, nor Chantrey for that matter: thus much Maſter Latimer. Fox. p. 1742.

Thus this godly Martyr derided long ſince, this popiſh ſcare-bug of purgatorie fire, making it inferior to the Biſhops priſon. And Bellarmine much diſſenteth not, making the penance which a man may ſuffer in this life of greater efficacie and vertue, then purgatorie paines: This being ſo, men may learne to be wiſer, and ſeeke to be reconciled to God in this life, & not much care for Popes pardons, which are not ſo much worth, as to be ſet free out of their Biſhops priſons, and Inquiſitors purgatorie.

Thus haue I briefly diſcouered the errors of the Popes Iubile, and Indulgences; whereby I truſt it is euident, how they delude the world with their fooleries, and ſeeke to ſnare men with their toyiſh ceremonies, and to blinde them with their phantaſticall deuices. They that haue not viſited Rome this Iubile yeere, neede not repent them, that they went not ſo farre to ſee nothing: they that are gone, at their returne (I truſt) will remember what they haue ſeene, and regard ſuch toyes but as a ſtage play, and think, that they may finde a much better Iubilee at home in their countrie by the faith of the Goſpell, than they could ſee at Rome in the Popiſh pompous vanitie.

I haue now ſpun out (by Gods aſſiſtance) this wearie taske, and found out an end of this long twined thread: the cauſe which I haue handled, is of God; the ſtrength wherewith I haue trauailed in it, was from God; the end wherefore I haue laboured in it, is to God his glorie. And as to his honour I referre all theſe my labours, as the principall end; ſo to the iudgement of the true Church of God I ſubmit my ſelfe and my penne, as the meane, whereby I may attaine that chiefe end. I ſay no more, but with Auguſtine: Si quid in ſcriptis meis veri comprehenderis, exiſtendo enim eſt meum; at intelligendo & amando & tuum ſit & meum: ſiquid falſi conuiceris, errando fuerit meum, ſed iam cauendo, nec tuum fuerit, nec meum: If you finde that is true in my writings, it is mine in being, but in vnderſtanding, and louing the ſame, let it be both mine and thine: if thou conuince any thing that is falſe, it was mine in erring, but let it be neither mine nor thine in heede taking: lib. 3. de Trinitat. præfat. But as I am not guiltie to my ſelfe of any error eſcaped, but am perſwaded that I haue throughout the truth defended; ſo I would deſire the Chriſtian reader to be aduiſed in iudging, that which was not without aduiſement written. And here againe I remember Auguſtines words in the ſame place: Sicut lectorem meum nolo mihi eſſe deditum; ita correctorem nolo ſibi: ille me non amet amplius, quam catholicam fidem; iſte ſe non amet amplius, quam catholicam veritatem: As I would not haue the reader addicted to me, ſo neither the corrector wedded to himſelfe: let not him be more affected to me, than to the veritie; nor the other loue himſelfe more than the truth, &c. And ſo I conclude: Videor mihi debitum huius ingentis operis reddidiſſe adiuuante Deo, quibus parum, vel nimium eſt mihi ignoſcant; quibus autem ſatis eſt, non mihi ſed domino mecum gratias congratulantes agant: I haue now by Gods aſſiſtance rendred the debt of this great worke, to whom it is ſhort or ouer, let them forgiue me; to whom it ſeemeth ſufficient, let vs to God giue thankes together, &c. who enableth vs to euerie good worke, to whom be praiſe through Ieſus Chriſt in his Church for euer. Amen.

Soli Deo immortali, Patri, Filio cum Spiritu ſancto,
ſit omnis honor & gloria.

HERE FOLLOW TWO SEVERAL TABLES, THE FIRST OF THE PLACES OF THE SCRIPTURE handled and expounded in this treatiſe: the ſecond of the particular matter and queſtions which are contained therein.

BRITISH MUSEUM

In the firſt Table the firſt figures note the chapter, the ſecond the verſe, the third the page.

BVt here I muſt aduertiſe the Chriſtian Reader of two things concerning this preſent Table: firſt, that I haue not ſet downe the words of the texts, whereunto this Table directeth, but the chapter onely and verſe: for that had been too long and tedious, and the other way I truſt is as ſufficient to finde out any ſcripture, though it bee more compendious. Secondly, I muſt deſire the reader, that whereas the verſes of the ſeuerall chapters are not digeſted in order, for want of time, and that for the ſame cauſe one verſe is quoted in diuers places, that it would pleaſe the reader, when he ſearcheth for any ſcripture, to runne ouer with his eye all the verſes expreſſed vnder any chapter. Howſoeuer, I truſt that the carefull reader ſhall finde himſelfe much helped by this direction to finde out the places of ſcripture in controuerſie, in the true vnderſtanding whereof conſiſteth the deciding of all queſtions in religion.

Certaine additions and explanations of ſome doubts.

Page.91.Line.33. Let this be added, that we make not the Scripture in ſuch ſort iudge in matters of faith, as though we excluded the Church: but like as the ciuil Iudge determineth controuerſies according to the lawe; for the Iudge is the mouth of the lawe, and the lawe is a rule and direction to the Iudge: ſo in matters of faith the Church iudgeth according to the word. It hath authoritie to explaine and interpret and iudge according to Scripture, but not againſt it: So Maſter Philpot ſaith, *I will be tried by the word, and ſuch as will iudge according to the word, Fox.*pag.1808.

Page.189.Line.17. Our further anſwere is this: Firſt, the ſaying of our Sauiour is indefinite and conditionall: If another come, &c. but prophecies are vttered definitely, as Deuter.18.18. The Lord thy God will raiſe vp vnto thee a prophet like to me, &c. Chriſt then doth not here prophecie of any particular man. Secondly, this word another ὁ ἄλλος, doth not neceſſarily ſignifie a particular man: as 1.Cor.3.10. I haue laid the foundation, another hath builded thereon, but let euery man take heede, &c. Here ὁ ἄλλος, another, is expounded, ἕκαστος, euery one. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſpeaketh directly to that preſent generation of the Iewes, when as Antichriſt was not to be reuealed. Fourthly, whereas Bellarmine obiecteth, that this place cannot be vnderſtoode of other falſe prophets, becauſe they came not in their owne name, as the others ſhall, but they vſe the name of God: our anſwere is, that although the falſe prophets pretend the name of God, yet they come in their owne name: Ierem.28.21. I haue not ſent theſe prophets, yet they ran; I haue not ſpoken to them, yet they prophecied: and if falſe prophets came not in their owne name, and Antichriſt doth, then it would followe by his argument, that Antichriſt is no falſe prophet, contrarie to the Scripture. Fiftly, ſee a further anſwere to this place, pag.200.lin.50.

Page.978.lin.37. Of Chriſts ſoule no ſuch death can be affirmed, by the feare, doubt, horror or daunger of damnation, as it may be of ours, but onely by the feeling and fearing of Gods wrath and indignation, as is expreſſed. lin.21.ibid: And ſtill we affirme that very improperlie in any ſenſe Chriſts ſoule is ſaid to die, which phraſe I wiſh rather to be forborne.

Page.996.lin.46. You muſt either graunt no agonie or aſtoniſhment at all, or continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Euangeliſts doe: theſe ſpeeches may ſeeme in ſhew to be contrarie: but they are eaſily reconciled: for the agonie of Chriſt continued all the while of his prayer in the garden, as it may appeare by the thrice rehearſall of the ſame requeſt for the paſſing of the cup, but yet there was ſome intermiſſion of the agonie fittes, and the infirmitie, as Ambroſe calleth it, as tentation of his fleſh (as Damaſcene) had their entercourſe: ſo it continued, but not alwayes in the ſame meaſure or degree of working, as is expounded pag.*989.reſp.2.4.ad argum.*3.

Page.1003.lin.27. The meaning is this, that there is the ſame ſpiritual efficacie of Chriſts body and bloud, yet a diuers ſacramentall vſe and application.

Page.1006.lin.17. We meane not, that the heart hath any power of it ſelfe to allay the ordinarie paſſions thereof, but onely comparatiuely in reſpect of the extraordinarie, which it hath leſſe power of: like as the wiſe man ſaith, Pro.16.1. The preparations of the heart are in man, but the anſwere of the tounge is from the Lord, not that a man hath power to prepare his heart ſimplie, but this is rather in his hand and power then the other.

If in any other place ſome doubts may occurre, as I denie not, but ſome things may eſcape me, as Ambroſe ſaith, Neſcio quomodo præter imprudentiæ caliginem quæ me circumfundit vnumquemque fallunt ſua ſcripta, & aurem prætereunt, atque vt filij deformes delectant, &c. I cannot tell how beſide the cloud of darknes, which compaſſeth me, euery man is deceiued in his owne writings, as children though deformed pleaſe the parents: I deſire the godly and charitable reader, to examine euery thing according to the rule of charitie, not to wreſt any thing to a diuers ſenſe, then wherein it was ſpoken, but to interpret the words to the beſt meaning: for as Saint Paul ſaith, Loue thinketh not euil, and againe, loue beleeueth all things, it hopeth all things. 1.Cor.13.7. and ſo I conclude with that ſaying of Ambroſe to the Chriſtian reader: Malo tuo caſtigatus iudicio ſi quid mouet, quam laudari à te, quod ab alijs reprehendatur: I had rather, if any thing moue thee, in thy iudgement to amend it, then to winke at it, that others ſhould reprehend it: *Epiſtol.*40.
